Diana went on finally, and Eileen went out front to get the full effect. She took one look at Diana sitting at the gaping grand piano, and her heart sank. The poor kid would definitely not last out the act. She looked cadaverous. She looked disinterred. Dear Lord, Eileen thought, I promised her mother I'd take care of her, and I forgot the vitamin pills this morning, and she hasn't worn boots in all this snow, and now she's just plain going to conk out on me. Diana played her numbers perfectly, spoke her lines in a good strong voice, and the whole thing tore Eileen apart. Who was it that got through his performance and then keeled over? Enrico Caruso or someone. Well, shades of him. The show must go on and all that. Poor, poor kid. When the act was over Eileen was waiting for her in the dressing room.

"How was it?" Diana bubbled. "Did you hear them clap? Was I okay?"

"You were perfectly fine," Eileen murmured, bewildered by the healthy face before her. "Only you looked like—darling, excuse me, but for a while there you did look so frightful."

Diana looked stricken. "The dark make-up!" she said. "They told me to put it on, but old smarty pants here—I thought I knew better. Well, if I must, I must . . ." Eileen sank onto the couch and took three vitamin pills.

They had more fun over that dark make-up. The first time Eileen saw her in it she didn't recognize her. Literally. She passed her in the hall backstage and didn't even nod. Another time, Diana had a date for lunch at the Hotel Stevens. She went right over from the theater complete with terrifically theatrical-looking puss. Her date was a little late, and she stood in the lobby—fur coat, dark glasses and dark makeup—suddenly aware of the stir she was causing. Gangs of men, apparently at a convention, ogled her. A few did those clucking noises and one whistled. No one got around to asking her for a date, but she's convinced that if she'd had another couple of minutes in which to operate she'd have been booked solid for the weekend. However, when her date appeared and whisked her off, she could hear two of the would-be mashers sourgrapes-ing it to each other. "Hard as nails," one of them muttered. "And he's such a nice respectable-looking youngster, too." "Glamor," intoned the other. "The college boys can't resist it." Diana shrieked inside.

She and Eileen got to know the other people who were appearing on the same bill, and they had a wonderful two weeks together. The two Lanes were a constant source of entertainment in a nerve-racking Marx Brotherish way. One was always whipping out some leather work, and the other was constantly poring over a bit of sewing. Diana was practically positive it was a gag, but they were so dead-pan about it, she couldn't be really sure.

Bob Evans, the ventriloquist, was appearing at the theater at the same time with a superbly smart-alecky red-haired dummy named Jerry O'Leary. One Saturday evening, with four shows down and two to go, Diana stumbled wearily into her dressing room to find Jerry O'Leary sitting on her couch. "I simply cannot go on one more time today," he said.

Diana nodded her head. "I simply can't either," she told him. Then she gave him one good look and screamed for Bob. Who was just outside the door, naturally.

Evenings, after the 8:30 show, they'd sometimes all go out together; Bob Evans, Bill Johnson—who was also on the bill—Lou Breese, the really superb musical director, and the Lanes, all with their wives and girls; Eileen and Diana with any of their host of swains. One night they went to a place where dozens of high school kids were apparently celebrating a mid-term graduation. The girls were in long white dresses, the boys all looked as if they'd been to the barber at the most ten minutes before. A few of them came over to the table and asked Diana to dance. She'd have loved to, but she couldn't, of course. There were so many of them, and if she'd danced with one she would have had to dance with them all, and her escort would have had two strokes. The youngsters were so cute when she told them she was sorry, but she just couldn't. They said, "That's okay, Miss Lynn," and grinned at her, and weren't in the least fresh or disgruntled. She's pretty sold on Chicago kids. They were all so nice. There wasn't one, not even one, that misbehaved.

When she did her stint for the March of Dimes, selling autographs at ten cents apiece, the youngsters walked by her desk in orderly fashion, some of them too shy to speak, some managing a breathless, "I've seen your show eight times!" Two girls from the MODERN SCREEN Fan Club Association came backstage to see her one day, and Diana was impressed by how grown-up and intelligent they were. Another day a Chinese girls' club came to her hotel room. They were sweet and soft-voiced, and they gave her a silk scarf and handkerchief that she adores.

a ring for diana . . .

The youngsters were always doing nice things for her. They sent her red roses and candy and little notes that said, "You looked beautiful on the stage tonight," and "Please play 'The Man I Love' again tomorrow." One boy from Oak Park sent her his high school ring and asked her, by mail, for a date. She'd have liked to have gone—his note was so sweet—but she was afraid that perhaps his mother wouldn't approve, and the weather was so hideous for him to contemplate driving in. She sent back the ring with the gentlest no-thank-you letter she'd ever written.

The Daily News arranged a junior press conference one day, and dozens of high school kids were there, representing their school papers. Diana was prepared for the usual run-of-the-mill queries, and there were some of these. (Q. Which of the dresses that you brought on this tour do you like best? A. My off-the-shoulder ice blue satin. Q. Is Lynn your real name? A. No, it's Loehr. Etc., etc.) But she was surprised at the depth of some of the questions, and one of them was particularly thought-provoking. What do you think about actors in politics? She replied that she approved of actors campaigning for broad issues like tolerance, as Frank Sinatra has done, but that she did not think actors should go out and stump for individual candidates. One of the questions put to her wasn't exactly profound, but she couldn't seem to put it out of her mind. It was the query, "Why don't you smile when you play that classical music?" Diana answered, "I'll try next time." And she did, too, but Eileen said it was awful. "A Cheshire cat grin does not go with 'Clair de Lune.'"

Between five shows a day (six on Saturdays) and meeting the press and sleeping a little, there wasn't much time to see the town, but Diana did manage a bit of gadding. She went over to Marshall Field's one day and loved it. She had a memory-making dinner at Henrici's, the oldest restaurant in Chicago, where dining is positively an art. She went to the Chez Paris and heard Tony Martin, and to the Riocabana to roll in the aisles over Jerry Lester. But maybe she had the most fun of all at a place called Gibby's. Bob Evans or someone had told her about it and had told her about a short cut for reaching it.

Diana and Eileen set off one night on foot. They came to a cobblestone alleyway and Diana said, "This is the short-cut." It was pitch dark, and the going was not good, especially for Eileen who teeters on perfectly smooth sidewalks. The wind set their hats askew, and as they paused for breath in an eerie patch of light from a street lamp, Diana guesses they did look like something out of a Hitchcock movie. Anyway, a policeman—swinging his club in a doorway—said, "Move along, girls," and sent them scurrying and giggling on their way again. Gibby's, when they finally found it, was a one-flight-up place, sort of dim and smoky and definitely no glitterspot. But the food was gorgeous, and Sam the piano player was red hot, and for Diana and Eileen everything was on the house.

"I'm going to miss this place," Diana said, their last night there. She turned and faced Eileen. "You know—don't laugh—I'm really going to miss Chicago."

"Me, too," Eileen said. "Gee, what a beautiful, big-hearted town."

among our souvenirs . . .

Looking out of her taxicab window as they drove out to the airport next day, Diana felt a funny nostalgia wash over her. It was ridiculous. You didn't get sentimental over a town you'd only known for sixteen days. Yet there it was. She thought about Bill, one of the doormen at the theater, who'd brought her in her bacon and tomato sandwiches and regaled her with tales of when Frankie Sinatra and Danny Kaye and other lights were appearing at the theater. And George, the other doorman, who'd been a song and dance man back in 1902, and who still had all the gestures and dash of a George M. Cohan. She remembered the gin rummy games backstage, and the silly birthday party they'd given for Lou Breese, and Miss Truesdale, the angel of a hairdresser, who did her hair so perfectly and so quickly to the accompaniment of a running patter about other stars she'd met. She thought about how courteous everyone was at her hotel, the Ambassador East, how jolly the cab drivers were, how incredibly polite the fans had been.

"Gee, what a town," she thought for the dozenth time, and settling back in the taxi she put the nice warm feeling into words. "Chicago," she murmured softly, "I love you."

HOW TO REMOVE DANDRUFF COMPLETELY

Fitch's HAIR CARE SPECIAL

All Three ONLY 99c

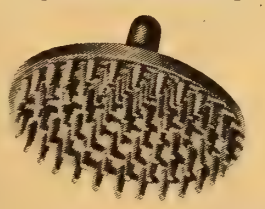
Available at your drug or toilet goods counter

Fitch's DANDRUFF REMOVER SHAMPOO

Fitch is the only shampoo made whose guarantee to remove dandruff is backed by one of the world's largest insurance firms. It penetrates and cleanses the thousands of tiny hair openings on the scalp. Gets hair immaculately clean . . . completely dandruff-free.

Fitch's SCALP MASSAGE BRUSH

Available again! Fitch's all-rubber shampoo and scalp massage brush with 86 specially designed "fingers." Stimulates scalp



. . . makes shampooing easier, more thorough. Brush has handy, non-slip grip. Use before and during shampoo. A 50c value.

Fitch's QUINOIL HAIR TONIC

The perfect tonic to complete your hair grooming. A blend of five essential oils, it helps your hair retain that "just-combed" look. Clear and colorless, Quinoil won't stain pillows or upholstery. Not too thin, not too oily—"just-right" for most people.

THE F. W. FITCH COMPANY, Des Moines 6, Iowa • Jackson, Miss. • Bayonne, N. J. • Los Angeles 21, Calif. • Toronto 2, Can.

Features and data on 100 stars—32 autographed portraits

new summer issue SCREEN ALBUM now on sale

Beautiful autographed portraits—with biographical sketches—of

DANA ANDREWS • LINDA DARNELL
HUMPHREY BOGART • GENE AUTRY
JOAN CAULFIELD • CARY GRANT
JUDY GARLAND • JOSEPH COTTEN
RITA HAYWORTH • BOB HOPE
VAN JOHNSON • JENNIFER JONES
GENE KELLY • ROBERT MITCHUM
JOHN LUND • GREGORY PECK
RONALD REAGAN • LIZABETH SCOTT
SHIRLEY TEMPLE • JANE WYMAN and many others

Special 2-page features on

JEANNE CRAIN • JAMES MASON
DEANNA DURBIN • ALAN LADD
GUY MADISON • GAIL RUSSELL

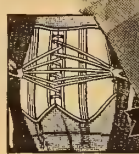
HOLLYWOOD POSTURE VIVACIOUS CURVES
GLAMOUR for A ROMANTIC SUMMER

GLAMOUR Belt... Debutante BRA
For Posture For Health

Instantly you'll look charmingly crisp and slender . . . feel fresh . . . free from "summer sag"! Even your clothes will look more glamourous when you wear your new cool, light-weight DEBUTANTE BRA and GLAMOUR BELT . . . so refreshingly sturdy in support.

DEBUTANTE BRA . $1.75 ea. 3 for $5

DEBUTANTE BRA means Hollywood Beauty and cool comfort! It's the last word in scientific design . . . lastex front insert . . . adjustable straps . . . double elastic back with 4-way adjustable fastener. Choice of nude or white in gleaming rayon satin or fine cotton . . . with quilted cups for permanent uplift and smart separation . . . trimmed with matching net. Glamour-perfect with the sheerest of blouses, dresses and sportswear.



GLAMOUR BELT $2.50 ea.

GLAMOUR BELT is made of soft, easily laundered, flesh-colored cotton material, scientifically designed to support YOUR back and abdomen to improve YOUR posture without discomfort . . . to help relieve tiredness . . . to help reduce waist, hips and abdomen.

This summer . . . don't blame the heat . . . there's cool comfort . . . a more glamourous figure for you with DEBUTANTE BRA and GLAMOUR BELT . . . easily laundered . . . easily worn. Money-back guarantee if you're not satisfied.

MAIL THIS NOW!

USE THIS HANDY COUPON

INTERSTATE STORES CO., Inc., Dept. 17-D
Owensboro, Ky.

Please send me _____ Debutante Bra at $1.75 each (3 for $5).

	32	34	36	38	40
Nude						Cotton ☐
White						Rayon Satin ☐

Please send me _____ Glamour Belt at $2.50 each.
My waist measure is _____ My hip measure is _____ (check one) Cash ☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____
We pay postage if remittance is enclosed
Sorry, no C.O.D.'s outside U.S.A.

GOOD NEWS—By Louella Parsons

(Continued from page 10)

romance because they felt it might hurt their careers. Guy, particularly, was being built as a bobby-soxers' delight and the Selznick studio wasn't at all happy about his becoming a benedick. The kids listened to enough "good advice" to fill a tome.

When Gail's mother became desperately ill, Gail became nervous and upset and she and Guy had frequent misunderstandings. They decided that if they quarrelled that much before marriage, they should call the whole thing off.

So, for a little while, Guy stepped out with other charmers and now and then Gail was seen with someone else. But the "cure" didn't work. They were unhappy kids.

Several weeks ago, Mrs. Russell had an operation that was a complete success. For the first time in months and months the strain of worry was off Gail's shoulders. But she hesitated to call Guy. She hadn't heard from him in a long time. Maybe he had become interested in someone else. After all, a girl has her pride.

One evening, her telephone rang and it was one of her best girl friends on the other end of the wire. "Do you feel like a double date tonight?" the g.f. asked.

"No, I don't," replied Gail, "particularly not with someone I haven't met."

But the friend insisted that getting out would be good for her.

Well, I guess you've guessed it by now. The "blind date" was Guy—and since then they've been constantly together.

I've lost my gift for guessing if that gleam in their eyes doesn't mean matrimony. Studios and troubles—be hanged.

* * *

If there's anything around these parts any swankier than the Santa Anita Turf Club, I've missed it. Only the creme de creme of the social and movie worlds are permitted to be members and in case anyone "lends" tickets to pals or outsiders, the ducats are promptly picked up by guards at the doors.

I've frequently been amused at the way some of the staid Eastern visitors and blue-bloods have forgotten all about the horses in being absorbed in the movie stars.

Betty Grable knocked the conservatives for a loop with her long red cigarette holder that is exactly the color of a fireman's hat. Betty is expecting a baby soon, and shows it, so the combination of the red holder is really a "race" stopper—no pun!

Mickey Rooney is another who never fails to get his share of attention, usually because he is accompanied by a tall blonde at least a foot taller than he. Mickey also has a little trick of giving out wrong information about the lady's name. She's a different Miss Somebody every week.

Franchot Tone, very serious and dignified behind glasses, is seldom recognized.

Rosalind Russell always appears looking like a fashion plate.

No movie set was ever decorated as elaborately as the Turf Club lounge. Each week the floral decorations are changed into an entirely different color scheme. Sometimes the place is ablaze with red roses. Again it's peach or cherry blossoms. And the day of the $100,000 Handicap, the enormous room was a mass of white orchids—even strung in garlands over the mirror of the bar.

* * *

Hollywood's biggest parties this month were inspired by two of the biggest social families in this country—the Astors and the Fords.

Mrs. Vincent Astor, one of the three lovely Cushing sisters, hostessed a wonderful affair at the home of Annabella.

"Minnie" Astor certainly proved that an Eastern hostess knows how to give a good Hollywood party in Hollywood. Of course, she had the expert assistance of Annabella, who is still living in the warm, spacious and colorful Ty Power home. It was a real Who's Who in Hollywood with every important star in our town dancing to the wonderful music and staying way past movie stars' bed time.

Mrs. Astor and Annabella didn't make the mistake of turning the charming house into a miniature night club. It still looked like a lovely home even though a flower strung tent was added to the dining room. When they were married, Ty and Annabella collected some really beautiful paintings, and believe me, they were much admired.

I was very amused at Ronald Colman, who is always very reserved, even with his closest friends.

"We've got a beauty on our hands, Louella," he told me. "You should see Juliet. She's lovely." Mrs. Colman told me that the young deb of the family had been told she could give her father anything she, herself, selected for his birthday—so what does she pick out but a whistle? Said Ronnie, "I haven't had a chance to use it—but I will, most assuredly."

The Charles Boyers were celebrating their thirteenth wedding anniversary. "Not everybody in Hollywood is getting divorced," said Charles.

Not everybody, indeed. Maria Montez was flashing a bracelet given her by Jean Pierre Aumont for their daughter's birthday, which is the same as the Boyers' wedding anniversary. "Charles is her godfather," Maria said.

I've never seen Margaret Sullavan looking so perfectly beautiful. Her husband, Leland Hayward, is still ill, so Marggie came with their good friend, Jimmy Stewart. She was wearing a green sequined dress and, while never in your wildest moments do you think of her as a clothes horse, she was a dream.

Lilli Palmer and Rex Harrison were enjoying themselves because it was Saturday night and neither had to get up early the next morning. Rex always reminds me of the King of England—and I always tell him so.

Joan Bennett was stunning in a black brocaded dress with gold birds. I told her I had a dress of the same material. But doggone if I look like Joanie in it.

Gregory Ratoff's fiancée, who had just that day arrived from Paris, came with him. She's a stunning-looking blonde by the name of Maria Costes. Her husband was a noted French flyer, often called "the Lindbergh of France." I've never in my life seen such jewels as hers—even in Hollywood.

* * *

This month's letter Postscript: Each month I invite you readers of MODERN SCREEN to write me about your favorites in stars and movies and newcomers.

Last month, I had a letter that interested me very much and I can't help but feel that the writer expresses the opinions of many others. He said, in effect, that too much emphasis is put on newcomers and that thousands of fans are just as interested in the more mature stars such as Spencer Tracy, Walter Pidgeon, Clark Gable, and even players long missing from the movies, including Jean Arthur and Greta Garbo. Bingo for the gent! I think he's right.

If you feel the same way—here's the very latest on some of the above-mentioned stars.

I've never seen Spencer Tracy look so handsome as he does with his almost completely white thatch of hair. On the screen it photographs blonde—but Spence is not a guy to fool with the color of his hair in private life. Instead of making him look older, he looks like a million dollars in one-dollar bills. I saw him dining at La Rue cafe the other night, sitting at a table next to Veronica Lake's. It was hard to decide which was the most "platinum blonde"—Ronnie or Spence, and I think they were a bit amused themselves although they did not speak. Most people away from Hollywood think all actors know one another. That's not true.

Greta Garbo was much in the news after she "inherited" a $20,000 farm from a man in the East she had never met. There was something unbearably sad and lonely about this man's will. Obviously, he had been secretly in love with Garbo for years. He even made a trip to Hollywood in the hope of meeting her and marrying her.

Instead of disappointing him or making him turn against her, it seemed merely to make him more of a recluse to his neighbors and friends. When he died and left everything to Greta—it made front page news.

Those close to her said she was very bewildered about what to do with the strange inheritance. At first, she was going to flatly refuse to accept it. But her good friend, Gaylord Hauser, advised her that a great deal of good might be done by taking the money and turning it over to the Sister Kenny foundation.

As for Jean Arthur, she's back on the screen—or will be soon—making Foreign Affair for Billy Wilder at Paramount. Contrary to the opinion of a lot of people in Hollywood, Jean was not being temperamental when she didn't make Voice of The Turtle at Warners. She had been all dressed and ready to go out to the studio to huddle about that picture when she was notified that the deal was off. When Jean starts her new movie at Para, I want to be one of the first to visit on the set and talk to her, so I'll have more Arthur news next month.

That's all for now. See you then.

Are you in the know?

If you drop your fork, should you —

- ☐ Pick it up
- ☐ Have your date pick it up
- ☐ Ask for another

Ah-ah—mustn't touch. Let slipping silver lie! When your fork or any tableware falls, ignore it. Ask for another. By meeting trying moments serenely, no one will be the wiser. Cherish that thought for trying days, too. You'll meet the eye without a qualm by choosing Kotex . . . because Kotex has flat pressed ends that prevent telltale outlines. And you can keep your daintiness beyond doubt—thanks to the deodorant locked in every Kotex napkin.

If your hands are clammy, what helps?

- ☐ Hold a hanky
- ☐ Wear gloves
- ☐ Use an anti-perspirant

Smoothness and drippy hands don't mix! To keep them un-clammy, cross your palms with an anti-perspirant before you go dancing. And to keep confident at certain times, choose those partners-in-comfort—Kotex and Kotex belts. That heavenly softness of Kotex stands by you, for Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. And, because your Kotex Wonderform Belt is elastic, fits divinely, you'll feel so carefree—so s-m-o-o-t-h!

Should you remember your beau's Mom?

- ☐ If you want to
- ☐ By all means
- ☐ No; you'll seem forward

Send a gift to your best beau's Mom? On Mother's Day or her birthday, why not—if you want to? Maybe a hanky or a little cologne. (It needn't cost a month's lunch-money.) If etiquette puzzles you, bone up. And to outsmart "problem day" uncertainty—learn for yourself how Kotex protects you in an extra-special way. Yes, that exclusive safety center of Kotex gives you extra security. You're sky-high in confidence!

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

A DEODORANT IN EVERY KOTEX NAPKIN AT NO EXTRA COST

Amazing Values in WINDOW BEAUTY!

CLOPAY DRAPES 98c pair

Expensive-looking charm and elegance for less than a dollar a window! CLOPAY Lintoned Drapes of plasticized cellulose are a full 2⅔ yards long—matching tie-backs—automatic pleater. In glamorous florals, stripes and plaids.

CLOPAY COTTAGE SETS 59c set

So bright, so gay, so dazzling fresh! Made of plasticized cellulose in gingham, polka dot and strawberry patterns. Red—blue—green. 7 pieces 59c. (5-piece Hollywood style, without sash panels, only 39c)

• FREE BOOKLET: "Beautiful Windows At Low Cost." Write to Clopay Corp., 1240 Clopay Square, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

CLOPAY

At 5c and 10c Stores, Variety Stores, Department and Other Stores

(Continued from page 36)

watered every time it rains.

The Russells, mother and daughter, love rain. They're old walking-in-the-soup people. Gail's got a beautiful red raincoat, too, which has nothing to do with the case.

Because she can be out in that coat when the sun's shining brightly, and if she sees a little grey cloud, she dashes for the house. "Where are you going?" her companion of the hour will demand in some surprise.

"To change my coat," she hollers back. "You think I want to get it wet?"

She's the practical sort. She's practical about eating, too. She costs almost nothing to feed, because she only eats one meal a day. At night. Plus coffee in the morning.

slug-a-bed gail . . .

Gail's coffee in the morning is essential. For one thing, she hates to get up. When she isn't working, her bed and she are inseparable until noon.

Then she staggers out and into some slacks, and gropes her way outside. If the sun is shining, she has coffee in the yard. She figures she can't see anyway, for the first couple of hours after she's risen, so she might as well have the sun in her eyes besides.

The miracle is that she'll touch food at all. She has an idea she's a pack horse, and if she gains half an ounce, she chases over to Jim Davis, the athletic director at Paramount, with a wild look in her eye.

"Take it off, Jimmy, please," she begs.

He sometimes has to ask her, "Where is it?"

She's not too fussy about the clothes she drapes on her bulging shape. She likes black for evening, with gold jewelry. She doesn't care what the Duchess of Windsor says about gold being wrong for evening.

Gail doesn't go out much, nights, actually. Her idea of a hell of a time is slinking off to a sad movie all by herself. She sits and sobs to her heart's content, and when she comes out, she feels older and mellow and, somehow, very wise.

On other nights, there's a date with Guy, who's been number one man for a long time, and, once in a while, a date with Billy De Wolfe. There's nothing the matter with Billy De Wolfe, except he's crazy. In a delightful way, you understand, but there it is.

When Gail goes out with him, she usually ends up in a mild state of hysterics, holding her head in shame.

He'll call the waiter over at one of the big places—Ciro's, for instance—and start lisping at him. "Pleathe, may we have the check?" Or elthe—or else, that is—he starts using words mostly with s's in them, and he whistles the s's, sort of like a baby air raid siren.

You try to look quietly sophisticated, with a guy like that holding forth.

He does some fine, cruel imitations of Gail and Diana (Diana Lynn, Gail's best friend), too.

Diana's in New York, now, and Gail's miffed because she hasn't written. "I don't think she can write," she's been heard to mutter.

She brought Diana an elaborate farewell gift. She'd got a little stuffed skunk, and she packed it in a shoe-box, and made air-holes in the shoe-box, and presented it just before the train pulled out.

"Here," she said brightly. "This'll keep those New York wolves away."

Diana dimpled. "Who wants to keep 'em away?"

Diana's got a whole series of small stuffed creatures that Gail has thought she needed.

There was a little doll at the Bublichki—

"Isn't it cute?" Diana'd whisper, like a two-year-old, seeing a red lolly-pop, every time they went there.

Gail would act bored. "Well, ask for it, silly."

But Diana never did.

Then, one time when she had a big radio broadcast coming up—she was terrifically nervous about it—Gail decided to get the Bublichki doll, and have it delivered right after the show.

Gail got the doll, all right, but the guy who was delivering it didn't quite make connections. Diana'd left the studio before he arrived, and he ended up chasing her in a cab. When he caught up with her car, he just stuck his arm through the window and handed her the doll. For a few short minutes, she thought she'd lost her mind.

Diana's so near-sighted, she's been accused of snooting people, simply because she didn't see them when they were two feet away. Because of this adverse publicity, she now goes to the other extreme.

She and Gail will be walking along, and suddenly Diana's face will light up. "Hellooooo Gertrude!" she will howl, in a tone to break your ear drum.

After the racket dies down, Gail says sadly, "That wasn't Gertrude," and Diana shrugs.

Occasionally, Gail saves the situation by murmuring softly, "Smile, dear, here comes Mr. So and So." Thus preserving some of Diana's social standing.

talks sixty miles a minute . . .

When she's in a car with Diana, however, she tries to encourage all her anti-social instincts. Diana's the chatty driver. She'll be going sixty miles an hour, and looking at Gail in the seat beside her, and talking a blue streak.

Gail just sits there saying, "Uh huh, uh huh, uh huh," in dumb anguish.

Lately, she's taken a pitiful tack with Diana. "And to think I'll never live to wear that new dress," she says dolefully, "on account of your reckless driving."

At that, she's only recently begun to care about new dresses. For a long time, she had no particular interest in what she wore, and her mother would buy her a dress, and she'd put it on and wear it till it fell apart.

Then she reached the stage where she was interested enough so that she didn't like what her mother bought, but still not interested enough to buy 'em herself. She'd just look at the things that came into the house and say, "Hmm," in a blasé way.

When she had a date, she used to peer through her closet, and if she didn't find anything she liked, she'd go rifle her mother's closet. (Her mother's a big, unshapely creature, too, at least a size 12.) After a while, Mrs. Russell hit upon a brilliant idea.

She still bought clothes for Gail, but she hung them in her own closet.

Came a date night. Gail, pathetically: "Mother, I have nothing to wear. May I look over your things?"

Mother, craftily: "Yes, dear."

Gail, snooping around the closet: "This blue one is sort of cute."

And for a wonder, the blue one would just fit.

Gail would go off in the blue one, and

Mrs. Russell would sit in the living room and smile to herself.

The Russells also have a son, George—he's "Russ" to most people—who's been out of the army for about a year. He's a musician, part of a trio. He and Gail hardly ever see each other, because he starts for work at about five p.m., and she's just going home then. They meet so rarely, they almost need a formal introduction.

corny puts on the dog . . .

The Russells also have a Maltese terrier, and a honey-colored spaniel. The Maltese is named Corny (for Cornelia Otis Skinner) and she's a very rare dog, white with black spots. Right now, she's sporting a French poodle haircut.

This makes her feel very superior to Kelly, the spaniel, who's a darling dog, but not nearly so fashionable as Corny.

Corny and Kelly and Russ and Gail and Mr. and Mrs. Russell all live in a seven room bungalow in Westwood—you already know about the leaky den—which they bought a year and a half ago.

It's a nice place, with a camellia bush out front, and a general air of charm.

The best thing inside, as far as Gail's concerned, is a special Thorens radio-phonograph combination. It'll play records, radio transcriptions, anything at all. And if the housing shortage got bad enough, she could sleep two people in it.

Everybody else in her family is musically gifted. Owning the Thorens is as close as she comes to it, and she admits it isn't awfully close. Her gifts lie in other directions. She never uses a makeup man, for instance. She applies her own paint.

And she can't be dragged into a beauty parlor. Every once in a while, somebody tries. "Come on, Gail. Maybe we'll fix your hair another way. Maybe we'll have it trimmed a little. Maybe—"

She looks at the character out of those strange, bruised eyes, and she says in that tired, husky voice, "Maybe we won't."

And we don't. She washes and sets her own hair, and she keeps discovering silver hairs among the black.

These cause her to go running to her mother, stark tragedy in the eyes. "Mother, look—" Pause fraught with meaning. "Another one!"

Her mother figures it's a good time to get some licks in. "Well, maybe if you didn't read until two o'clock in the morning—"

This is the wrong approach. "Don't you want me to know anything?"

"Maybe you could learn enough by midnight?" meekly, from Mrs. Russell.

Miss Russell, by this time, is deep in a crossword puzzle, and has forgotten the whole conversation. She has even forgotten her gray hair.

a tonic for the nerves . . .

Crossword puzzles are a drug with her. It started when she was nervous, and somebody suggested knitting. "Knitting'll calm you down."

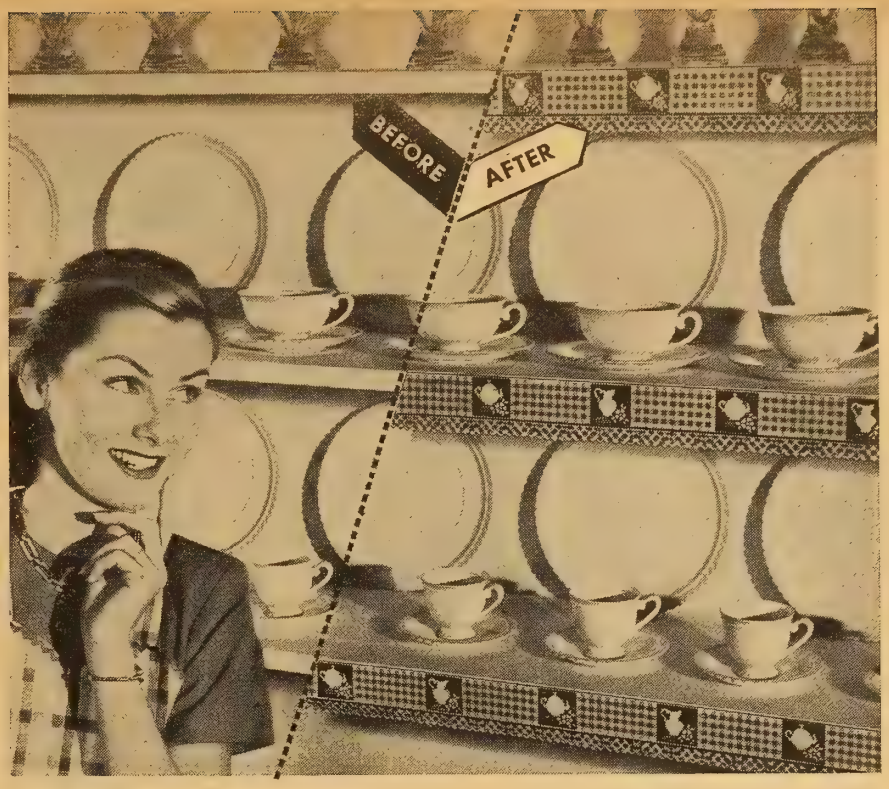
"Knitting'll put me in the booby-hatch," said Miss Russell sharply. "Purl one, drop three—no thanks!"

And then she discovered crossword puzzles. Crossword puzzles soothe her. The only trouble with crossword puzzles is that they often demand a background which she hasn't got. She knows from nothing about Latin cases.

"Except they're dark," she says cheerfully, making bad jokes.

And all she knows about perfumes is Lanvin's Arpege, and all she knows about slacks is that she likes them, and all she knows about her personal plans is that she hasn't any. As of today.

Tomorrow, we are not qualified to speak for.



Kitchen transformed in 5 minutes!

Royledge SHELVING

9 FT.-7¢

That drab, bare-shelf look vanishes, you put a colorful "smile" on your kitchen instantly—with Royledge. It is edging and paper shelving all-in-one—simply fold down edge. Only Royledge has durable double-edge; such wide choice of colors, patterns. Less than a penny a day to change pattern monthly! Ask for Royledge at 5-and-10, naborhood, hardware, dept. stores.

A NEW AND NOVEL WAY TO MAKE MONEY

SELL INDIVIDUAL 5¢ AND 10¢ GREETING CARDS

COST YOU 2½¢ EACH UP

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONAL STATIONERY

Extra money quick. Up to 100% profit. Extra bonus. Send at once for FREE catalog of wonderful year 'round money-making line super value greeting card assortments and FREE samples name imprinted stationery. Request special feature $1.00 All Occasion Assortment on approval. Special Offers.

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, BOX A, North Abington, Mass.

FRECKLES

Write for FREE BEAUTY SUGGESTIONS

We will send you a delightful story about Stillman's Freckle Cream. It is not only a freckle bleach, but also a beautifying cream. It makes skin look lighter—feel softer, smoother. Over 30 million jars have been purchased by enthusiastic users! Only 50c at all drug and cosmetic counters. A postal card brings this amazing story of beauty to you!

Use according to directions

THE STILLMAN CO.
Box 2 Aurora, Ill.

Stillman's FRECKLE CREAM 50¢

TEETHING PAINS RELIEVED QUICKLY

WHEN your baby suffers from teething pains, just rub a few drops of Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion on the sore, tender, little gums and the pain will be relieved promptly.

Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion is the prescription of a famous baby specialist and has been used by mothers for over fifty years. One bottle is usually enough for one baby for the entire teething period.

Buy it from your druggist today

DR. HAND'S TEETHING LOTION

Just rub it on the gums

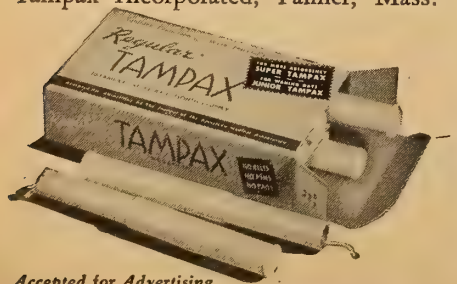
I WILL NEVER GO BACK TO THE OTHER

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

Neither will you ever "go back" to those pins and belts and external pads once you have adopted Tampax for monthly sanitary protection. The use of Tampax will be a revelation to you, as it already has been to millions of women. Invented by a physician to be worn internally, Tampax may be called a truly wonderful product, as it relieves a woman's mind of at least five different worries!

No longer need you worry about clothing-wrinkles and bulges caused by belts and external pads. No worry about odor, for Tampax causes none. The same goes for chafing. Also, a month's supply of Tampax slips into your purse so you needn't be conspicuous carrying a box home from the store. And when disposal time comes, Tampax is only one-fifteenth the bulk of older types!

Made of pure surgical cotton, Tampax comes in dainty disposable applicators; you can't even feel it when in place. Sold at drug and notion counters in 3 different absorbencies—Regular, Super, Junior. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.



Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

MADAM QUEEN

(Continued from page 44)

". . . and her greatest, latest picture given its world premiere to coincide with the opening of the Kentucky Derby! With the stars—and the producer, of course—in attendance."

"Now listen—"

"I don't know why you never told me about this before. It's a perfect promotion stunt. I'll have to get permission from New York, but that shouldn't be—"

"Leo, it's just because you want to see the Derby!"

"Of course, I want to see the Derby. Have you ever heard of a better excuse for me to be in Louisville Saturday? Now run along and let me get on the phone."

"But there's something I ought—"

"I don't mean to be rude, Irene, but there's a lot of work to do on this thing." He took her by the arm and propelled her gently to the door, and through it. "Be packed by tomorrow night."

"Some men will not listen to anybody," said Irene, but she said it to a closed door. And, knowing Leo, she was packed and ready the following evening.

Thursday morning they were in the air, in a chartered plane approved by New York, headed for festivities approved by the Mayor of Louisville. Leo had arranged the entire thing in a series of rapid-fire conversations Tuesday, during which long distance wires alternately sizzled with his commands and hummed with his charming blandishments.

He had even remembered to get, as a last minute thought, a Louisville theater in which to show his picture, My Favorite Wife.

There were ten guests with Leo, including Irene and Randy Scott and Maggie Ettinger and Gene Fowler; Cary Grant, the other star of the picture, had had a previous engagement but had begged off on the excuse that he was afraid of his last name in the deep South . . .

And everyone, with the apparent exception of Irene, had a wonderful time.

Leo, happily watching a horse named Gallahadean romp across the finish line first, discovered that he had the only $100 ticket on that horse that had been purchased at the track, and in consequence, upon presenting it to the cashier, received in return the tidy sum of $3800.

local girl makes good . . .

The premiere itself was an unbounded success, and, what with the speeches, the dinners, the parties, the headlines in the papers and the general whoop-de-do, there was no mistaking the fact that a local girl had come home, and was furthermore indubitably a success.

Why, then, had local girl conducted herself with such unsmiling seriousness in private, offering only a wan, uncertain smile when, in public, she was acclaimed by her own? Even on the plane the next day, while everyone sang to pass the hours and Leo from time to time elatedly patted his bulging billfold, Irene was pensive.

Finally, Leo made his way down the aisle to her seat, sat on his heels beside her, and said, "Irene, what's the matter?" Then suddenly, in alarm, "For heaven's sake don't cry! Just tell me—there's nothing we can't fix."

"Fix this, then," Irene said. "Remember the busloads of children who met me at the train, waving banners and shouting? Remember that the banners read, 'Hail to Irene Dunne, Louisville School Alumnus'? Remember that because of this little junket of ours the Louisville public school system declared an official holiday, in my honor?"

"Why not?"

"Why not indeed! Because I never went to school in Louisville. I left there when I was practically a baby. I learned whatever I know—and that isn't much, I'm beginning to think—in Madison."

"Wisconsin? With that accent?"

"Indiana, darling. It's just across the state line. But I just couldn't tell those kids, when they were so full of beans and the holiday had been declared, and all—"

Leo's mouth hung open, rather unattractively. "You mean . . ."

"I mean I feel like a cheat. That's all. But you wanted so much to see a Kentucky Derby."

laughter after the storm . . .

She stopped, her voice drowned out by Leo's monumental laughter. The others in the plane turned, and some of them hurried back, to find out what was so funny; and Leo told them with mingled relief and delight.

It is a not unwelcome, but certainly an uneasy, task to translate into words on paper the human being who is Irene Dunne—at least the Irene Dunne, the Mrs. Francis Griffin, of 1947. This is not because, in her way of life, she is an anomaly in Hollywood: there are any number of other beautiful, talented, financially—shall we say "comfortable"?—wives and mothers in that town who do their work well, find time to run their large, superbly designed and furnished houses in an orderly fashion, and who make a success of their marriages and their other personal responsibilities.

It is just that, to be truthful, there is an indefinable, surely enviable barrier between the woman and her personal life, and the rest of the world. Like all Hollywood actresses, particularly great ones, she lives in the traditional goldfish bowl—but she has curtains fitted to hers, and she holds the strings that make them open or close. This is so important a part of her personality portrait that I put it in here deliberately, not as an apology but as a brush-stroke designed to enhance the picture you must have of her.

Of course, the other Hollywood wives and mothers mentioned above do not necessarily fit into her category on many counts. They did not play Anna in Anna and the King of Siam, for instance, nor did they appear where Irene Dunne appeared on the recent treasury department list of top U. S. incomes. And I don't mean that she is unapproachable.

On the contrary . . .

If you want to see her, you make an appointment and two minutes before the designated hour (since she, of course, will not herself be more than five minutes late, if that) you drive up the short road to her motor court, enter the white Georgian house, and like as not are met by Mary Frances Griffin, aged 12, a slim, attractive, self-possessed young lady who likes to meet people.

(Often enough during the war, indeed, when Mary Frances came home from exclusive Marymount and found her mother entertaining crowds of soldiers and sailors and marines, Mary Frances unobtrusively took over the job. In the end, Irene found that she could bow out of these gatherings if something important came up, without worrying about being missed, if Mary Frances was there.)

In any case, Mary Frances will escort you into the long, high-ceilinged drawing room with its appointments that are a mixture of comfort and formality, and its magnificent concert grand imported from Vienna; she will explain that her mother will be along in just a moment, that the harsh light in the room is because the new draperies have not yet arrived.

During the three minutes yet remaining she will chat pleasantly and intelligently with you on any one of a number of subjects, from books to sailboat racing; then, when her mother appears, she finishes whatever remark she is making and somehow manages to dissolve gracefully into thin air, leaving behind her the impression that you dreamed her.

It would be well for you to observe closely the manner of Irene's entrance. In the first place, she has just driven up in her town car, a glimpse of which you catch through the open door. A maid has opened the door, and takes a pile of bundles handed her by the chauffeur.

Then all but Irene fade away noiselessly; she has not missed a step in her progress from car to hall.

She takes you into the small office-library, because it is comfortable and also informal, and because the draperies are up in there. She asks if you will have a drink, and you say you will, and she opens the nearest door, steps inside, and promptly emerges with a scotch and soda for you and a cola drink for herself.

In the course of the next hour, if what you want to know about is Irene herself, she talks about Irene Dunne with candor and a kind of amusement. You learn that she adores good parties but likes to leave them about 12 o'clock, is fond of entertaining small groups, and likes to trim Christmas trees.

the gay deception . . .

You hear about the last Christmas tree she bought. She had decided that it should be a silver tree this time, very glamorous, and had driven up in her car and priced one. Appalled at the price, certain it was marked up merely because she was a movie star, and determined not to be taken advantage of, she left her coat and hat in the car, tied a scarf around her head, put on a pair of glasses, and walked to the next lot.

"I'll take that one," she said, pointing. "Put a tag on it and I'll send my husband around in his truck to get it tomorrow. How much?"

The man told her. It was, if anything, slightly higher than the one she had just refused to buy. Resignedly, she dug into her purse. "Awful high this year, aren't they?" she said.

"Everything's higher this year, Miss Dunne," the man said.

You hear, and like, the story of her visit to Arrowhead, when she visited the chapel for early mass and, in the midst of her prayers, felt a tap on her shoulder. A girl of about fifteen grinned at her when she turned around, and whispered, "That's Dottie Lamour down there. You know her, don't you? Would you get her autograph for me?"

So, when she'd finished her prayers, Irene slipped down to Dottie and got her autograph—

But these little flashes, and the story of the Kentucky Derby are the entertaining, the superficial colors in her portrait. What you must finally sense, and it becomes more and more apparent as you talk to her, is that here is a woman of stature, of innate dignity, of tremendous personal strength, who has self-discipline as well as a sense of humor. Without her wit and her weaknesses she would be a little formidable.

As it is, I guess you know by now, she is a pretty nice gal.

Lovely hair deserves fine care
...use Du Pont Combs
You'll be the prettiest girl . . . if you keep your hair shining-neat with colorful plastic Du Pont Combs.
Curl-careful, scalp-gentle—yet strong, strong, strong!
Buy a complete comb wardrobe . . . Du Pont quality . . .
10-50¢ . . . at good stores everywhere.
DU PONT COMBS
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY
DU PONT

Add enticing, bewitching color to your lips with new, non-drying Hot Lips Lipstick. It is frankly glamorous—even dangerous! Comes in four sultry, seductive shades in a beautiful metal, swivel case. At your favorite cosmetic counter.

Jumbo Size 25¢ Plus Tax

MAR-O-MIST INC. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS when your kiss is a miss . . .

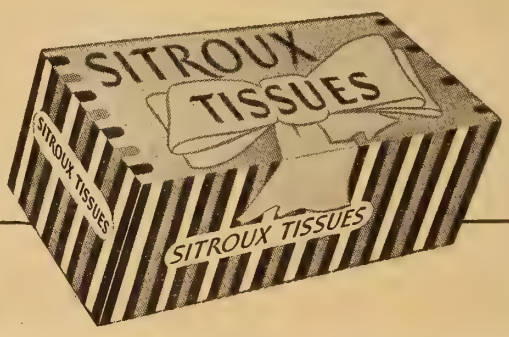
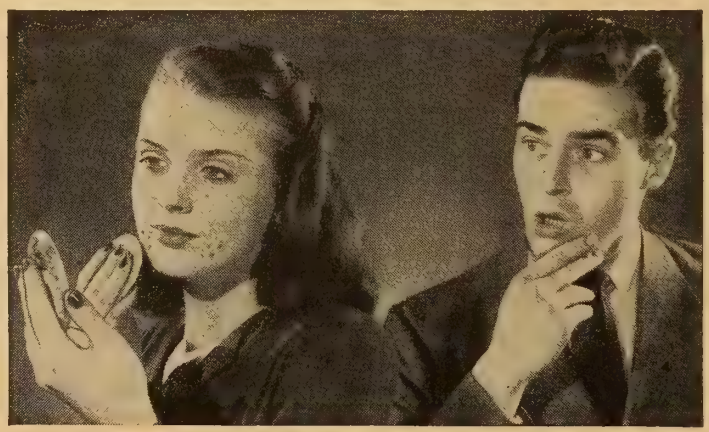
to the rescue with SITROUX!

. . . say SIT-TRUE

THE BOX WITH THE BOW ON TOP



DON'T COVER UP A POOR COMPLEXION



Let this famous medicated cream help improve your complexion

Don't go around just "covering up" a skin that's marred by externally-caused blemishes! You may make those very flaws you wish to hide worse!

Do as millions of beauty-wise women do—let Noxzema, the snow-white Medicated Cream, help improve your skin.

Works 24 hours a day!

Here's a greaseless cream that's not only an effective night cream, but a grand powder base, too! 24 hours a day, Noxzema can help smooth and soften rough, dry skin . . . soothe irritated skin, help heal externally-caused blemishes.

Nurses first discovered how Noxzema Skin Cream helped soften and whiten red, rough hands. Now thousands of women rely on it for their hands and their complexions! Over 20,000,000 jars used yearly! See what it can do for your skin.

Get your jar today! At all drug counters—35¢ and 50¢ plus tax

THE FANS

(Continued from page 106)

TROPHY CUP CONTEST

Here's the picture at the half-way mark: League 1: Nelson Eddy Music, 750; Dennis Morgan, 650; Temple, 600; Crosby (Vendetti), 500; Autry, 450; Guy Madison, 400; Haymes (Haywood), 350. League 2: Charles Korvin, 700; G. Kelly, L. Douglas, 600; J. MacDonald (Farrington), 550; Jack Carson, 450; Scott McKay, Ginger Rogers, Bob Crosby, J. MacDonald (Riley), 350. League 3: Bill Williams (Demers), 750; Dick Jaeckel, 650; Carole Landis, New Stars, Sinatra (Beattie), Basil Rathbone, 600; Curley Bradley, Ilene Woods, Rand Brooks, 450; A. Ladd (Pearl), K. Wynn, Sinatra (Pianconi), Jan Clayton, V. Price, 350.

THIS IS MY BEST, 100 pts. (Prize: Combination gift of FABERGE'S saucy Straw Hat Perfume and Cologne) Jean Crocker, Filmland Fan C.; Ellen Coughlin, Louise Erickson C.; Marie Sojka, David Brooks C.; Mrs. W. C. Foutz, Ilene Woods C.; Adele Reenan, Helen Walker C.; Jeanne Morgan, Jack Carson C. CANDID CAMERA CONTEST. (First prize, 100 pts.; Beautiful Assortment of POND'S lovely cosmetics) Lita Lipstein, Gene Krupa C., (Others, 50 pts., package of 4 different Dell Mystery Books) Tex Kroboth, Gene Autry F. C.; Louella Correia, Jack Owens C.; Muriel Scott, Joe Cotten C.; Eileen McCarthy, Glenn Vernon C.; Ev Beasley, Evelyn MacGregor C. BEST EDITORS, 250 pts. (Prize: POND'S exquisite assortment of cosmetics) Virginia Haywood, Dick Haymes C.; Marie Waddy, J. MacDonald C. (Prize: year's subscription to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE and SCREEN ALBUM, four Dell Mysteries) Lee Dyer, Rand Brooks C. BEST ART WORK, 150 pts. (Prize: Glamorous, handsome TANGEE Trip Kit for traveling) Doris Dietrich, Bill Williams C. (Demers). COVERS, 250 pts.; Bingang (Vendetti), Carson's Collections, Joe's (Dosh) Journal. WORTHWHILE ACTIVITIES, 250 pts.; Crosby C. (Vendetti), $105 to Sister Kenny Fund; J. MacDonald C. (Riley); Margaret Whiting C., collected $145 for March of Dimes. BEST JOURNALS, 500 pts.: Shirley's Scoops (Temple); (Gene) Kelly Club News; (4 ties) (Dick) Jaeckel Times, The Caroler (Landis), Talent Scout (New Stars), Bill's Pals (Williams, Demers). PERCENTAGE INCREASES, 100 pts.: G. Madison, Baritony, Blaine Boosters. CORRESPONDENTS, 50 pts.; Maym Sagert, Jane Withers C.; Vic Watson, British Sinatra C.; Bernice Harbaugh, Ken Curtis C.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Last summer, while I was visiting in Petersburg, Virginia, my boyfriend and I went into a photographer's studio. While waiting for our pictures, we noticed a tall, red-headed soldier enter. It was Red Skelton, who at that time was stationed at Camp Lee. We asked him how he had gotten into the Army and he replied, with typical Skelton humor, "Oh, I had some pull with the draft board."

Elaine Knapp
Meadville, Pa.

MY DONNA

(Continued from page 48)

"Tippy," she said, "where are you?"

I'd been "Tippy" to the whole family ever since I learned to walk. Dad had started it because he said I looked as if I was about to tip over any minute.

"I'm here," I said, but I didn't move. I knew Jack was right behind her, and every time I looked at him I went all custard soft inside. Gosh, he was so tall and so dark and so handsome!

"Come on in, honey," Donna said softly. "I think it's time you learned to dance, and Jack's going to teach you."

The star I'd wished on seemed to come down out of the sky and catch in my throat. Because that was the wish I'd made, and Donna must have guessed.

Jack came out on the porch then, and stood there grinning at me. "Come on, Tippy. I'll bet you're a natural-born dancer. Let's give it a whirl."

I almost died of fright and embarrassment right then, before I even tried taking a step. But I looked over at Donna and she winked at me. I remembered then what she had told me about the first time she ever danced. She'd been about as old as I was now, and she'd gone to a party. They had music and people were dancing. A boy started across the room to where Donna sat, and she knew, she just knew, he was going to ask her to dance. And she would have to say, "I'm so sorry, but I don't know how." And maybe people would laugh and tell each other, "That Mullenger girl lives on a farm. No wonder she doesn't know how to dance."

As the boy came closer, she made up her mind, the way Donna has always made up her mind about things. She stuck out that firm little chin of hers, and when the boy said, "May I have this dance?" she got right up and danced, as if she'd been doing it for years.

out in i-o-way . . .

Maybe, to help explain Donna and me, I should tell you that our home town, Dennison, Iowa, has only four thousand inhabitants. And we didn't even live in town—but on a farm seven miles out in the back country.

Dad and mother and my brother Billy, and little sister, Karen, still live on the farm. That Karen! She's the cutest four year old you ever saw. Brown hair that comes clear to her waist, and brown eyes, and a turned-up nose. When I'm married and have children, I won't know whether I want them to look like Karen, or like Donna's adorable adopted baby, Penny Jane.

I don't think anyone knew how much I longed to be like Donna, who always did well in her studies and took all the prizes in oratory and had the lead in the school plays. The first big thrill of my life was when I was made Queen of the May in high school, and the reason I was so excited was because Donna had been Queen three years before, so for the first time I was following in her footsteps.

I was only fourteen when our Aunt Milly asked Donna to come and stay with her and go to UCLA, right in Los Angeles. Donna wasn't sure about it at first. California was an awfully long way from Iowa. Then with the calm practicality which always characterizes her decisions, she concluded it was the thing to do. It was an Opportunity. How much of a one, she couldn't possibly know at that point.

Gosh, how I hated to have her go! I followed her around for days before she left, like a silent little ghost, not wanting

"We were out of tune . . ."

Tirades . . . bickering . . . like jangled notes ruining the harmony of our marriage—and I never dreaming it was my fault! Oh, I understood about feminine hygiene—I thought. But, carelessly, I'd depended on just occasional care. "That's why many marriages fail," my doctor said, putting me wise. "Never trust to inadequate feminine hygiene," he told me —then advised using "Lysol" brand disinfectant for douching—always.

"But . . . it's sweet harmony now"

The song is back in my heart! I feel myself loved and cherished again . . . happy! Yes, our discord has vanished since I took my doctor's advice about feminine hygiene . . . always use "Lysol" for douching. "Lysol" is far more effective than salt, soda or other homemade solutions. "A proved germ-killer," my doctor said "—that cleanses thoroughly, yet so gently!" "Lysol" is so easy to use and so economical!

More women use "LYSOL" for Feminine Hygiene than any other germicide . . . for 6 reasons

Reason No. 6: HIGHLY ECONOMICAL . . . "Lysol" is wonderfully economical in solution because it's so highly concentrated. Follow simple, easy directions for using this powerful yet gentle germicide.

Note: Douche thoroughly with correct "Lysol" solution . . . always!

For Feminine Hygiene use "Lysol" always!

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

The Ideal Way to Reduce

LOSE FAT

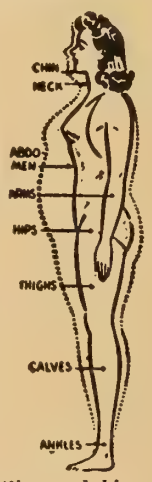
Lose Pounds
Lose Inches

REDUCE

In the Privacy of Your Home

WONDER BATH

Helps you to relax while reducing. LOSE WEIGHT with this new, easy, pleasant, harmless method. No more tiring exercises, no more laxatives or drugs. No starvation diets. You just take a warm, soothing, comforting WONDER BATH, just rest and relax for 15 minutes this healthful, pleasant way. By following the WONDER BATH method, you will be amazed and delighted at the way your fat and bulges just seem to melt away. If you are normally overweight you can easily lose pounds and inches. The more you use the WONDER BATH method, the more weight you lose. This is the easy, pleasant, harmless way used by the most expensive and exclusive Reducing Salons. This is the way many New York and Hollywood stage, screen and radio people help to keep their figures slim, lovely and glamorous. You may now say goodbye to your heavy waistline and hips and those unnecessary, unsightly bulges at a trifling cost.



The WONDER BATH method is an amazing new way to reduce superfluous fatty tissues on most all parts of the body.

FREE A large size jar of Special Formula WONDER Body Cream and "FIGURE BEAUTY" will be included absolutely FREE with your order for WONDER BATH. To achieve best results, this Special Formula Body Cream should be used after each WONDER BATH.

10-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Use the WONDER BATH method for 10 days at our expense. If you are not truly delighted with your loss of weight, if you don't look and feel better—return the remaining contents and your money will be refunded in full.

ACADEMY VITA PRODUCTS CO., Dept. DM-5
Academy Building, Newark 2, N. J.

Please send me postpaid, 60-day supply of WONDER BATH and Free Special Formula WONDER Body Cream with "FIGURE BEAUTY." I enclose $5.00 cash, check or money order. If I am not 100% delighted, I may return the remaining contents within 10 days and my money will be promptly refunded.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

C.O.D. Orders: Send $1.00 deposit. Pay postman balance of $4.00 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. Same Money-Back Guarantee.

to let my feelings show. As usual, though, Donna knew. She cried a little when she kissed me goodbye.

"Be good, Tippy, and write me all the news, won't you?"

I didn't cry. I never can. But I was crying inside. After she left, the big house seemed awfully quiet.

Donna used to write to us regularly. I remember when the letter came that said she had been chosen Campus Queen. She enclosed a picture that had appeared in the Los Angeles paper.

"Doesn't surprise me a bit," Dad said comfortably. "I'd bet on Donna to beat those California girls any day."

Apparently, the Hollywood talent scouts thought so, too. Because Donna was approached by every major studio but one, that week the picture appeared.

To each of them, Donna just smiled sweetly and said, "I'm going to finish this semester at school before I do anything."

"Don't you want to be in pictures?" one of the scouts demanded incredulously.

"Oh, yes. I think I'd like it. But I want to finish this semester first."

This particular talent scout pointed out acidly that Campus Queens were not unique, that there would be a whole new crop of them along by the time the semester was over, that she'd better grab a contract while she had the chance.

Donna, as usual, was practical. "I won't look any different, or act any different, in another five months. If I'm any good for pictures now, I'll be good then."

As it turned out, the one studio—Metro—which had done nothing about her up to that time was the one which signed her at the end of the semester.

I can't tell you how happy I was when she asked me to come out to Hollywood. We had a wonderful reunion, Donna and I. Sat up until four in the morning, catching up on the news. Right away Donna introduced me to all her friends. Then pretty soon I started modeling which I lo-o-ved.

Donna was living out at Santa Monica then, and Sunday mornings sometimes Van Johnson and Peter Lawford would drive down and we'd cook breakfast for them. We're both good cooks—Mother taught us when we were kids—but Donna's better than I am. I was always telling Van and Pete what luscious apple pies she could make.

just a light snack . . .

"How about producing one next Sunday instead of just talking about it?" Van asked one time.

"For breakfast?" Donna asked.

"Certainly, for breakfast. Pie for breakfast is a good old New England custom, and I'm still a New Englander at heart," Van insisted.

So the next Sunday the menu was orange juice, ham and eggs, coffee—and enormous pieces of the best apple pie you ever ate. The boys stuffed themselves and then went swimming. Why they didn't die of cramps I'll never know.

Then all of a sudden Donna fell in love. The man was Tony Owen, and she had met him first about three years before. He was connected with the agency which handled her. He and Donna hadn't made any particular impression on each other then, but Tony went into the Navy and was away for almost three years. When he came back, things were different.

The first date they had, he took Donna to an ice cream parlor. They ate sundaes, and told each other the story of their lives, and the evening went by as if jet propelled.

After that they saw each other several times a week. Donna went around looking like a five year old who has just seen Santa Claus for the first time. She glowed! There's absolutely no other way to describe it.

So the first thing I knew they were being married the next week in the Presbyterian Church in Beverly Hills. I was to be bridesmaid. Mother and Dad couldn't leave the farm at that time, so I was to represent the family.

Donna and I drove into Beverly Hills one afternoon to buy our clothes for the wedding. It was to be very informal, so Donna chose a chic navy suit, and a devastating navy and white hat that couldn't have been more becoming. I found a powder blue gabardine suit that seemed to be the one I'd been looking for all my life. We started the drive home, very pleased with ourselves.

Well, you know Los Angeles traffic. We were driving along, minding our own business, with Donna at the wheel, when a car zoomed out of a side lane and hit us. Our car went up and over on one side. Somehow the door came open and I fell out on my head.

tears and laughter . . .

I suppose it looked awful. But it really didn't hurt me at all. I sat up and shook my head to see if it was all there, which it seemed to be, and began to laugh. But Donna ran over and put her arms around me and cried and cried.

I said, "Donna, are you hurt?"

"Me! Of course not! But Heidi, you fell on your head. You'll have concussion or something, and it will be all my fault."

I didn't have concussion or anything else, except a bump the size of a turkey egg on my head. The wedding went through as scheduled, and it was perfectly lovely.

Donna was very calm and very quiet. When she turned to Tony at the altar, as the minister said, "I now pronounce you man and wife," her eyes were as big as pansies and her mouth lifted to his in a kiss that seemed to express all the love and trust and happiness in the whole wide world.

Then they started off on a New York honeymoon. Donna had never been there before and she reacted like an excited child!

"Just a hick tourist from Iowa, that's my wife," Tony sighed in mock derision.

"Never mind, darling. We're going to a very lush cocktail party this afternoon. I'll be sophisticated and bored and New Yorkerish."

"You couldn't, and I wouldn't love you if you could."

Donna came back to Hollywood and painted bright pictures of the Big Town for me.

"It's funny, Heidi, but I have a feeling New York is the right place for you. And if that's so you'll land there sooner or later. Just the way I did in Hollywood."

Maybe it was just talk, or maybe my sister is psychic. But when Harry Conover came out to the Coast, he met me and offered me a contract modeling in New York. Before I knew it, I was living in Manhattan, walking up Park Avenue with my official hat-box in my hand.

When Donna and Tony came on for a visit in February, I felt as if everything in my whole life had somehow led up to this. I was a successful model, and Donna was proud of me, and that counted more than anything.

Donna's last day in town, I had to go out on a job, and she was straightening my scarf for me. As she stood there beside me, all the love and affection I've always felt for her swept over me. But as usual, all I could say at a time like that was, "Thanks, Donna."

Thanks, Donna—for everything.

HOW VAN GOT MARRIED

(Continued from page 12)

Keenan knew that eventually Evie and his own best friend would marry. In fact, they'd been expected to marry at Sun Valley, Idaho, just after New Year's, since Evie had announced that for the sake of the children there would be no rush about divorce before the holidays were over.

But this Friday afternoon was the first that Keenan knew of their actual decision. Van and Keenan shook hands. The look on Van's boyish face was quite serious when he broke the news, briefly and to the point.

"It's tomorrow," he said, and Keenan didn't have to ask what he meant. He knew. He smiled. "I'm glad for you," he said. "Both of you.

Evie did not go to a hotel when she arrived in El Paso, but stayed at the home of her attorney there. One thing both she and Van did everything to insure—no publicity! Probably they felt that there might be some adverse criticism.

Van invited his friend at the studio to accompany him the next morning on a chartered plane, and the friend agreed. Keenan smiled again and wished them "happy landings."

"Not a soul must know," Van cautioned him.

"I know how it is," Keenan assured him. "I'm a clam."

the bachelor's last breakfast . . .

Van went home to his suite at the Bel Air Hotel for his last night as a bachelor. He was up bright and early and at this point one can record that the "condemned man" did not eat a hearty breakfast, in fact, scarcely any breakfast at all because he had to hurry to keep a very important date. The studio friend drove up to the hotel and transferred to Van's new Cadillac, and with Van at the wheel they took off for the Burbank airport.

There, Paul Mantz, the man who knows many inside Hollywood secrets, had a C-47 warming up. The C-47 is a two-motored job capable of carrying twenty-four passengers. Mantz said: "Had your breakfast?" Van said no, he'd been too preoccupied to think about eating. "A fellow going to get married is that way, I guess," Van said.

"Well, that's the way I figured it," said Mantz, "so you'll find plenty of sandwiches and hot coffee in the plane."

Fortunately for their hopes for secrecy, they didn't have to go through the regular airport channels to board the plane. Mantz gave her the gun, and they were in the air in another jiffy, pilot, co-pilot and two passengers rattling around in that huge ship.

In a few minutes they were speeding inland and soon were over the vast reaches of the Arizona desert. What did Van talk about? Well, I wondered what a young man flying to his bride might find to talk about, too, but the answer is pretty vague. "Just nothing at all," the friend said. "We ate and drank coffee and stared at the ground. Van acted like he wanted to be quiet, so I didn't bother him."

Back in El Paso, Evie, too, had risen early because she also had a busy morning ahead. The first thing after breakfast, she and her lawyer hurried across the International Bridge from El Paso to Juarez. In the space of a few minutes she fulfilled all the requirements of Mexican law that made her a free matrimonial agent and entitled her to take another husband. This idea of a Mexican divorce and mar-

GOODBYE "Leg Feathers"!

HELLO ROMANCE!

Here's the arithmetic of charm: boy plus girl minus "leg-feathers" equals romance. So, erase all that unsightly, mannish leg-hair—the E-Z way. Feel how velvety soft—see how nylon-lovely—your legs can be.

E-Z does it! — smoothly — quickly — safely! Buy this dainty hair-eraser today. In 10¢ and 39¢ packets at chain store cosmetic counters.

E-Z whisks away hair on arms, underarms, face and back of neck, too.

Largest Selling Depilatory

HAIR REMOVING

E-Z GLOVE

BY HELEN NEUSHAEFER

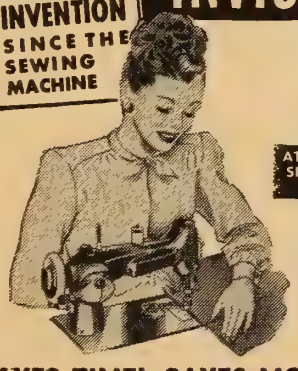
Copyright 1947

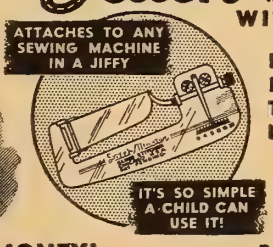
A. Sartorius & Co., Inc., 5th Ave., N.Y. 11, N.Y.

GREATEST INVENTION SINCE THE SEWING MACHINE

INVISIBLE HEMMING AS FAST AS YOUR MACHINE CAN SEW!

The Miracle Stitch Master WITH THE MAGIC FINGER





EASILY PAYS FOR ITSELF AT THIS AMAZING LOW PRICE! $6.95 POST PAID

Actually Makes Your Sewing Machine Twice as Valuable

SAVES TIME! SAVES MONEY!

Gives Home Sewing a Professional Look!

Say goodbye to costly alterations . . . and forget the nuisance of trying to keep blind stitches from showing. It's easy with Miracle STITCH MASTER, the amazing invention that doubles the value of your sewing machine. Enables it, at last, to do the entire sewing job—from blind collar seams to blind skirt hems, as well as any invisible sewing job that calls for hidden or invisible stitching. Comes to you completely assembled, all ready to attach. As easy as plugging in a toaster. Miracle STITCH MASTER gives you trim, tailored hems, professional-looking cuffs and edges in speedy minutes. Don't delay! Order yours today!

Reduces blind stitch hemming time from tedious hand hours to speedy machine minutes! Actually makes it possible for you to

HEM DRESSES—HEM LINENS
HEM CURTAINS—HEM DRAPES
HEM TROUSER CUFFS!

On YOUR OWN sewing machine with an INVISIBLE STITCH IN A MATTER OF SECONDS

GUARANTEED Lasting Satisfaction

Stitch Master, one of the truly great new inventions, is precision engineered to last a life-time.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

You Get to Keep This Valuable Book "HOW TO SEW SO EASY"

Free

IF NOT SATISFIED

Yes, if you are not simply delighted with Stitch Master, you may return it for a full refund, and keep the book absolutely free as a reward for your interest.

SEND NO MONEY—MAIL TODAY

Franklin Wells — Dept. S-23
218 W. Chicago Ave. — Chicago 10, Ill.

Rush Miracle STITCH MASTER and Sewing Book. If not delighted I may keep book as a gift and return STITCH MASTER in 5 days for refund.

NAME YOUR SEWING MACHINE

Specify if ☐ Rotary — or ☐ Long Shuttle
Check whether Presser Foot screw is at ☐ Side ☐ Back ☐ Top

☐ I am enclosing $6.95 Send mine POST PAID
☐ Send C.O.D I will pay postman $6.95 plus postage

Price in Canada add 50c
No C.O.D.'s.

Name

Address

Please Print
City Zone State

AMAZING THING! By Cooper

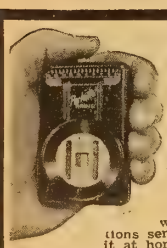
AN AMAZING NEW SCIENTIFICALLY COMPOUNDED TREATMENT FOR PIMPLES CALLED TING... WORKS WHILE IT HELPS HIDE THEM!

WITH PIMPLES ALL GONE LOVE FLIES IN THE WINDOW

APPLY TING TO PIMPLES, LET IT DRY— AND WHISK OFF EXCESS POWDER. TING IS BOTH FUNGICIDAL AND GERMICIDAL— REALLY WORKS WONDERS FOR EXTERNALLY CAUSED PIMPLES!

IN LAB TESTS TING HAS PROVEN EFFECTIVE IN KILLING ON 60 SECOND CONTACT SPECIFIC TYPES OF FUNGI THAT SOMETIMES CAUSE SKIN BLOTCHES

EVEN IF OTHER PRODUCTS HAVE FAILED, TRY AMAZING TING TODAY! ALL DRUGGISTS ONLY 50¢



AMAZING NEW Pocket or Purse Size RADIO!

SMALL AS A PACK OF CIGARETTES!

Weighs only a few ounces—Beautiful black chrome plastic case. Uses new war born crystal diode. Hi-Q-slide dial. No tubes, batteries or electric "plug-ins." Usually receives local broadcasts without outside aerial wires.

GUARANTEED TO PLAY when used according to instructions sent with each radio! You can use it at home, in offices, hotels, cabins, in bed, etc.—lots of fun—real entertainment!

SEND ONLY $1.00 (cash, money order, check) and pay postman $2.99 plus delivery fees on arrival or send $3.99 for postpaid delivery. Complete as shown Ready to Play with self contained personal phone. For Gifts—children will love it—grownups too! An exceptional value—order yours and enjoy the many good radio programs coming. Don't be without your Pakette Radio another day! (All foreign orders $5.00 U. S. cash.)

Pakette Electric Company, Dept. MM-5, Kearney, Nebr.

Here's One Of The Greatest BLOOD-IRON TONICS YOU CAN BUY If you have SIMPLE ANEMIA!

You girls and women who suffer so from simple anemia that you're pale, weak, "dragged out"—this may be due to lack of blood-iron. So try Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS—one of the best home ways to build up red blood to get more strength—in such cases. Pinkham's Tablets are one of the greatest blood-iron tonics you can buy!

Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS

ASTHMADOR

THE LARGEST SELLING INHALANT

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

POWDER CIGARETTE OR PIPE MIX

AT ALL DRUG STORES

Springtime brings treacherous days for asthmatics... so your friend the druggist gets busy and orders more of Dr. R. Schiffmann's ASTHMADOR. He knows more sufferers buy ASTHMADOR than any other inhalant treatment. He can tell you why, too—ASTHMADOR is easy to use, dependably uniform, produced under strict laboratory control. That's why you can rely on ASTHMADOR'S easy-breathing fumes to penetrate congestion, reduce the severity of wheezing and coughing attacks. No costly sprays to buy, nothing to take internally. Just light up and BREATHE! Your money back if you can't!

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN

Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

riage wasn't a new one. Evie and Van had pigeonholed it as definitely among their possibilities. So all the groundwork had been prepared in advance.

As soon as the divorce formalities were over, Evie hurried back to her car and sped out to the El Paso airport. And right on the dot, three hours after leaving Burbank, Paul Mantz nosed his ship down to earth again. The first leg of the flight of the bumblebee was done.

From that moment on Van and Evie kept themselves to a hairtrigger schedule. In the back of the minds of both was the dread that they might be recognized, and that was the one thing they did not want. How they escaped recognition must remain one of the minor wonders. Luck was just with them.

big investment . . .

Entering the lawyer's automobile, they hurried back to El Paso and parked close by the International Bridge. Van's pal from home forked over an American dime and got back two cents change. It costs eight cents to enter Mexico from the United States, and considering what Van and Evie got when they went over the border, that journey must go down as one of their gilt-edged investments.

In the middle of the bridge their hearts stood still for a moment.

A woman crossing in the opposite direction with a man passed and stared. The man with her pulled at her elbow. "What are you waiting for?" he demanded. "Why, I'm sure that young man with the pretty girl is Van Johnson, the movie star," she replied. "Nonsense," said the man, "what would Van Johnson be doing here?"

Van leaned over to Evie and whispered: "Gee, honey, I forgot my vanishing cream. I'd sure like to vanish right now."

The ceremony was brief and very dignified, presided over by a Mexican civil judge, Raul Orozco, a man of size and immense judicial poise. He asked the customary formal questions. Van wasn't a bit nervous, and neither was Evie. He had the ring ready, a plain gold band purchased for him in a Beverly Hills jewelry shop a few days previously. Van wanted to buy the ring himself but knew he didn't dare. The risk that the story would be all over town in no time was too great.

The bride wore blue, a plain blue tailored suit with a becoming blue hat and a small veil. The bridegroom, too, was in blue, a pinstripe suit, white shirt, blue tie, and black shoes. As soon as Judge Orozco had pronounced them man and wife, Van gave his bride a hug and kiss. Nothing overly demonstrative. Witnesses to the marriage were Evie's lawyer and the studio friend of Van's.

When the party got back to the airport, Paul Mantz had the plane ready. Again they had to run the gauntlet of people at the airport, but again they escaped without being recognized. Not one word went out over the wires, not a single intimation that these two glamorous people had been united in matrimony went to the outside world until they were good and ready. A message was rushed to M-G-M studio at Van's bidding just before they took off, and that was all.

It was enough. Three hours more in the air, winging into the gathering sunset, brought them back home again. Less than twelve hours elapsed between the time when Van hopped aboard the plane to meet his bride-to-be and when he landed safely home again with his bachelorhood behind him. Photographers from the downtown Los Angeles newspapers, the photo services, and the studios were on hand to greet them as they stepped from the plane. The business of posing was quickly over with. Van was quiet, dignified, and firm. He turned aside all inquiries about what had happened that day and about their honeymoon and future plans, and did it very deftly. Nevertheless, intimations began to appear in print that they had taken off for a secret destination.

Their destination was secret enough, all right, but hardly mysterious. Less than an hour after settling down in Burbank, Van was carrying his bride over the threshold of their lovely, secluded honeymoon home in Brentwood. And there they remained, stepping not a foot out of town, while Hollywood wondered where they were.

It's a wonderful honeymoon home, too. And it's nothing new for those luxurious quarters to welcome honeymooners, since it was to that marvelous place that Cedric Gibbons, the famous art director, brought Dolores De Rio as his bride.

A few of their close friends came to see the newlyweds in the first days and weeks after their marriage and among them, of course, was Keenan Wynn. Evie delights in showing the place off and telling of her plans for it. The downstairs has a huge drawing room and dining room spacious enough for a large party. There is a lovely big fireplace and a marble stairway leading to the second floor, where the Johnsons will really live. Off one end is a bedroom suite for Van and Evie and off the other the sleeping apartment for the two youngsters, Edmund, five, and Tracy, three.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer made it possible for him to acquire the honeymoon house. It was something he never would have attempted to swing on his own because Van isn't the sort to throw his money away on ostentatious living. The cost of the house was $125,000, and of that sum the studio guaranteed $100,000. It wasn't exactly an outright gift, but a bonus in recognition of the fact that Van has been a consistently potent box-office draw.

Truly, there is a young man who has everything! His dreams have all come true, and at thirty, when a man's young enough to enjoy the fruition of dreams.

"I guess," he said to me in deep contentment, as he sprawled on a huge divan. "I guess I'm really what you call a happy man. Yep, Florabel, that's me. Happy. And it's great!"

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I was en route from California to Texas by train, accompanied by my two small children. It was no easy job getting them settled for the night, and while I was undressing my little girl, my 3-year-old son, Butch, went adventuring. After a frantic search through the made-up Pullmans, I reached the compartment end, and there, through an open door, I saw my offspring happily eating raisins, perched on the knee of the one and only Jimmy Durante, who was on his way to Fort Worth to put on a show. For the rest of the trip, Butch spent most of his time with Mr. Durante, whom he called "my friend who has gum," and both of them appeared to enjoy the association very much. I found Mr. Durante as charming and delightful a person as he is a comedian, and I would like to thank him again for the nurse-maid service.

Mrs. Dorothy Weaver
Fort Worth, Texas

What a puzzled young wife asked her doctor...

This pitiful young wife was puzzled. Her husband was growing so indifferent—almost as if he didn't care any more.

Fortunately, her Doctor explained to her how important douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and marriage happiness—how important douching is to combat one of woman's most serious deodorant problems.

And wives should certainly know about this newer, scientific method of douching with—ZONITE! No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide for the douche of all those tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues as ZONITE.

Zonite Principle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Chemist

What a comfort it is for women to know about ZONITE. Wise women no longer use weak, homemade or dangerous products for the douche. These DO NOT and CAN NOT give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

The ZONITE principle is truly a miracle! The first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world that was SO POWERFUL yet positively non-burning, non-irritating, non-poisonous. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as necessary without risk of injury.

What Zonite Does...

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that ZONITE will not kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

Buy ZONITE today. All drugstores.

Zonite
FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

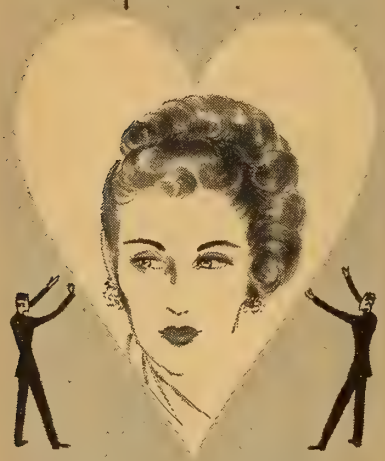
FREE! NEW!

For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published — mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MSC-57, 370 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

HAIR
that captures hearts...



Beautiful hair makes you lastingly lovely. Ogilvie Sisters' hair beauty aids leave your hair soft, lustrous, magnificent . . . and more glamorous than ever!

Creme Shampoo, with lanolin • Creme Set • Preparations for Dry, Oily Hair • Special Preparation • Hair Pencil • Curl Brush

Ogilvie Sisters
HAIR PREPARATIONS
at better department and drug stores

NEW creamy, white odorless lotion
SAFELY REMOVES HAIR

Leaves legs smooth, alluring

1. A pleasant white lotion without bad clinging depilatory odor.
2. Not messy, quick to use. As simple to remove as cold cream.
3. No razor stubble. Keeps legs hair-free longer. Economical!
4. Does not irritate healthy, normal skin.
5. Removes hair close to skin, leaving skin soft, smooth, and alluring.

NAIR Cosmetic lotion to remove hair

At Drug, Department and 10¢ Stores

TWO ON A STRAW

(Continued from page 54)

I wrote her a cutting reply, but I was chuckling as I did it. I was pleased.

Janie came home, finally, only to win a Hollywood Showcase contest, and then she was gone again. But this time for good. She was gone to Hollywood, and an M-G-M contract, and a picture called Song Of The Open Road. She was set.

By this time, I'd moved to New York, myself, but Jane and I kept in touch.

I saw her once in New York. After Song Of The Open Road, she was taken on a personal appearance tour, and she covered twenty-one cities in forty-six states—luncheons, dinners, hospital wards. She got pretty worn, that trip. She was a slight girl—still is—and while she's not as frail as she looks, she's no lady wrestling champ either. It got to the point where the mayors would take her out to give her the keys to their cities, and they'd have to wake her up to accept them. The mayors were all lovely, but she was tired.

She was glad to get back to Hollywood. We still corresponded, Janie and I, and I knew when she'd made Delightfully Dangerous, and I knew when she'd finished Holiday in Mexico.

We'd gone on burning up typewriter ribbons asking each other questions. From me, it was always, "When are you coming to New York?" From her, it was always "When are you coming to Hollywood?"

So here I am, in California.

two straws, please . . .

Janie met me at the airport, and we stopped at her father's malt shop on the way out to the house, and almost choked to death over our sandwiches and one-malted-between-us-please, we were talking so hard and so fast. The Burces' new house is in the San Fernando Valley (they had six months to get out of the one they were renting before) and Mr. Burce is going to sell this shop he has now, on Sunset Avenue, and buy one closer to home.

And oh, that home. It's a long, white bungalow—the most charming place yet. It's got a pool out in back, and a guest house—the guest house is going to have a soda fountain some day—and a place where Janie wants to build a badminton court.

The outside isn't fixed up yet, but the inside is heavenly. All Early American, with coral ceilings and painted beams, and the living room is going to have a maple fireplace, and Janie's room is all soft and pink and it looks as though it ought to smell of sweetpeas. I don't even know if sweetpeas have any smell, but it's just a feeling you get from that room.

The funniest thing is that the Burces weren't crazy about the place when they bought it. The man who owned it before had it full of big, dark furniture, and turquoise walls, and it was dirty, and the lawn looked seedy. No pun. But Janie didn't see anything except the pool.

"We've got to have it, Mom," she said rapturously.

And Mrs. Burce guessed they had. Jane had stars in her eyes so big they made you nervous.

After that, they started trotting around to auctions, looking for copper and brass. They got staggering bargains, too. Life just isn't fair. You take two people like Jane and her mother—they seem so tiny and innocent and unable to take care of themselves that an auctioneer turns proprietary.

Mrs. Burce was scared to bid, in the beginning, and she'd just sit there, quietly, while the stuff was sold off, and finally, Janie couldn't stand it any longer, and she

Make This Easy 7-DAY TEST
DO YOU WANT LONGER HAIR
BRUNETTES • BLONDES • TITIANS
Just try this SYSTEM on your hair 7 days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of Attractive Hair that can so often capture Love and Romance.
MARVELOUS HELP FOR DRY, BRITTLE, BREAKING-OFF HAIR. When Scalp and Hair conditions are normal and dry, brittle, breaking-off hair can be retarded, it has a chance to get longer, much more attractive.
Send No Money • Fully Guaranteed
Just try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. Then let your mirror prove the thrilling results. SEND FOR IT NOW! C. O. D. $1.00 plus Government charges. It is fully guaranteed. Money back if you are not delighted. Write today!
JUEL CO., 4727 N. Damen, Dept. E-603, Chicago 25, Ill.

For a skin that looks and feels radiantly clean

AMBROSIA
The Liquid Facial Cleanser—at Leading Drug and Department Stores—35¢, 75¢, 1.25

Relieve Misery of ITCH
Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, pimples—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Quiets itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D.D.D. Prescription.

Exclusive Offer 4 ENLARGEMENTS!
ONLY 10¢
Four beautiful deckled enlargements for 10¢! Send 4 negatives same size (up to 2½" x 4¼"). We will send you 4 valuable enlargements, dated on Velox. Negatives returned. Send ad, 4 negatives, and 10¢ coin today! This ad must accompany order.
MAIL-N-SAVE, BOX 310-10 QUINCY, MASS.

SPOT REDUCE
The new, ingenious HOLLYWOOD WAY with
"PAT-A-PUFF"
EASY • EFFECTIVE • ECONOMICAL $2.60
Mail your order direct to NORDQUIST SYSTEM
6331 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.

MORNING COUGHS

Why start the day with hawking, "morning coughs" due to nose and throat congestion caused by colds, sinus, and catarrh? Try this "old stand-by method" that thousands for 69 years have used . . .
HALL'S TWO METHOD TREATMENT.
Loosens and helps clear up phlegm-filled throat and nasal congestion or money back. Ask your druggist. Write for FREE Vitamin and Health Chart today!
F. J. Cheney & Co., Dept. 95, Toledo, Ohio.

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS
Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.
NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan, Dept. 2365, Chicago 5

LEARN MILLINERY AT HOME
Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profitable business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.
LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 185, Chicago 1, Ill.
Please send me your FREE illustrated catalog.
Print
Name
Address

Stop CORNS!

Instant Relief

CORNS, SORE TOES

NEVER wait! At first sign of sore toes from tight shoes, protect them with Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. You'll have instant relief and stop corns before they can develop. But —if you have corns, callouses or bunions—Zino-pads will relieve pain almost like magic.

CALLOUSES

Remove Corns, Callouses

You'll marvel, too, how the separate Medications included speedily remove corns, callouses. Get a box today. Cost but a trifle.

BUNIONS

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

TO THOSE WHO WRITE

WORDS FOR SONGS, BUT CAN'T WRITE MUSIC: We may be able to help you. Our organization of trained composers and songwriters is at your service. Collaborate with professional songwriters; make the most of your song-writing ability. Send us your words for free examination and details.

FIVE STAR MUSIC MASTERS, 475 Beacon Bldg., Boston, Mass.

Blondes!

HOW TO WASH HAIR SHADES LIGHTER SAFELY

With New Home Shampoo Made Especially for Blondes

This special shampoo helps keep light hair from darkening—brightens faded blonde hair. Called BLONDEX, it quickly makes a rich cleansing lather. Instantly removes the dingy, dust-laden film that makes hair dark, old-looking. Takes only 11 minutes at home. Gives hair attractive luster and highlights. Safe for children's hair. Get BLONDEX at 10c, drug and department stores.

New SAFE "Touch-up" Rinse Washes Off Like Make-up

When you finish with your BLONDEX shampoo, use BLONDEX GOLDEN RINSE to add the lustrous touch of golden color so often needed. Not permanent—washes off as easily as make-up. Costs little Sold everywhere.

raised her voice. When she got a picture frame that had been made in Germany in 1800 for four dollars and fifty cents, she realized the auctioneer was being prejudiced.

From this, Mrs. Burce took heart. There was a darling copper pitcher up, and the bidding had started. "Five dollars!" cried Mrs. Burce bravely.

She got it for five dollars. They also picked up an antique hall tree—it's a job with a mirror, and hooks for coats—since there isn't any closet in the living room. The hall tree cost them ten bucks, and Mr. Burce finished it himself.

Anyhow, the bungalow is fast becoming a paradise. It already is, to Cinderella. Cinderella is a collie, and if she likes you, she comes over and knocks you down, all in good clean fun. She liked me, right away.

The day I got there, she was feeling pleasantly frivolous. She and Janie and I went into the house together. Janie'd just finished making The Birds and The Bees, and she was free as air for a while.

Except for school. "You like it any better?" I asked.

She grinned. "I love music appreciation." And that was that. Who's she to go hurting teachers' feelings? She also loves recess.

I asked her about boys, and stuff, and she said she'd been dating Roddy McDowall. "And Gary."

"Gary?"

"Gary." She grabbed my arm, and pulled me toward the pink bedroom. There was a picture on her bureau. The boy wasn't handsome, and he wasn't homely, but he looked nice.

Janie grinned again. "He's Sonja Henie's skating partner," she said blandly. And then, with that perfect innocence: "I'm—uh—learning to skate."

Gary, who's going to be more than a skater, leaves for Dartmouth next year, to get himself some higher education.

Jane's kind of wistful about that, too. You wouldn't think that a movie star might sometimes envy other kids their normal lives, but you'd be surprised.

You see, most of us go to public schools and meet other kids, and have parties and go on dates and grow up with a crowd.

poor little rich girl . . .

A girl like Janie doesn't get a chance to meet people her own age. She's in a studio school with everyone from Butch Jenkins up, and her Saturday nights aren't as busy as yours!

"You know how it is," she said. "When I'm working in a picture, my friends are free, and when they're free, I'm working."

Mrs. Burce was sitting there, listening to us babble, and drinking coffee. She doesn't look old enough to drink coffee.

"Let's go out and eat," she smiled. "Give you a look at Hollywood."

We went to the Tropics, and I gaped at the movie stars—I think I saw Lana Turner, but I may be wrong—and then we drove around and I gaped at the city, and then we went on back to the house.

Janie and I still hadn't stopped talking. We slowed down a little bit, that evening, at any rate. Jane was knitting on some blue socks (she's too lazy to start a whole sweater).

We both started yawning, but sat up an hour longer, anyway, then called it a day.

While we were setting our hair, she looked so serious, I asked her what she was thinking about.

"Vincent Price," she said. "He's so masterful."

I gave up, and went to bed.

The next morning, that little dynamo, that nervous system with a head on it, bustled into my peaceful guest house headquarters and shook my bed practically out into the yard.

KEEP ADORABLE!

Yodora checks perspiration odor

the SOOTHINGEST way

It's New! Made with a face cream base.

It's Gentler! Yodora is actually soothing to normal skins.

It's Effective! Gives lasting protection.

Won't Rot or Fade Fabrics. Better Fabrics Testing Bureau says so.

No Irritating Salts. Can use right after under-arm shaving.

Stays Soft and Creamy. Never gets grainy in jar.

Economical. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢

You'll adore Yodora! Try it today!

McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

4-WAY LUCITE MAKE-UP MIRROR

The perfect mirror for make-up and hair-dressing. Hangs around neck leaving hands free; use as hand mirror; hangs on wall; stands at any angle. Both plain and magnifiying 5" glass. Great for traveling. Postpaid $3.95. No COD's

Mastercraft Products
27 Haymarket Sq.
Boston, Mass.

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo

FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 272, Hollywood, Calif.

I decided to be friendly, anyway. "Yes?" I said.

"Get up." She was ever so cheerful. "We're going skating."

Now skates and I don't mix. I'm the lazy type. I like to read light verse under big shade trees. No mental or physical strain for me.

So we went skating.

Jane announced to the family that she was taking the car, and they said, "Yes, dear, go ahead, only don't wear out all the tires going around the curves. It's the only car we've got."

Which was even more ominous-sounding than the skating deal. I figure Jane must have been a reckless driver in her youth, but now she's an old hag of sixteen, she's improved. I didn't have to get out and push once.

The skating, I'd rather not talk about, if you don't mind.

a little peace and quiet, please . . .

We went, and we came home. I was ready for something quiet by then. I spent a couple of hours looking over some pastels Janie'd done, and decided they were pretty good. I wasn't going to tell her that, though. Not after what she'd put me through.

Still, I got fond of her again very soon. She makes the best darn cream puffs. They're sort of small and flaky, and they have chocolate on them, and she piles them high with sweet whipped cream. After you've eaten a couple, you begin to think about what a dear, cunning place the world is.

I was thinking exactly that when Jane's voice interrupted me. "—that squash?" she was saying. I looked up, and she was pointing to the biggest squash in the whole world. "We had a Christmas party," she went on. "Christmas Eve. And the next day, we found that squash on the porch with a Christmas card attached to it, and no other name. We don't know where it came from."

It was her turn to look dreamy. "Parties are fun." She got up quickly. "That gives me an idea!"

My heart sank. Not another idea; oh, please not another idea. But this one was gay, as a matter of fact. This one had to do with giving a little party, and before Jane got through turning it over in her mind, she had her sweater on. The Burces have no phone, and she was on her way to the nearest booth, with a pocket full of shiny nickels.

spaghetti party . . .

She worked up quite a party, too. Roddy, and Elizabeth Taylor, and some other cronies who weren't in the movies, all said okay, they'd come on out, and they did. We had spaghetti, and pizza—Powell specialties—and a big tossed salad and a lot of fun.

Janie played records (she has a good collection) and some of the kids danced, afterward. I could hardly walk, let alone dance. That spaghetti!

A few of us just sat and talked. We talked about Janie, I guess. I remember the subject of the Sinatra broadcasts coming up. You probably know how, when Frankie (who was so exhausted he was on the ragged edge of a breakdown) took off for a little vacation, Janie was given the job of carrying on with his show. And you can figure what a spot that was to fill. Jane came through with her usual competence and grace.

And she was deprecating about it. "They miss Frank so much," she'd murmur in a dreamy voice.

Listen, I don't care how that old saying goes. There never was a button as cute as Janie Powell. I know.

NO DULL DRAB HAIR

When You Use This Amazing

4 Purpose Rinse

LOVALON, simple and quick to use after a shampoo, does these 4 things to give YOUR hair glamour and beauty:

1. Brings out lustrous highlights.
2. Adds a rich, natural tint to hair.
3. Rinses away shampoo or soap film.
4. Leaves hair soft, easy to manage.

LOVALON does not permanently dye or bleach — merely tints the hair as it rinses. Comes in 12 flattering shades. Try Lovalon.

At stores which sell toilet goods

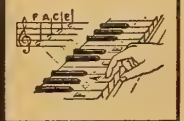
25¢ and 10¢ sizes

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREON

QUICK RELIEF FROM MUSCULAR ACHES

★RUB IN ABSORBINE Jr.

Easy as A-B-C



If You Can Read English

You can learn to play your favorite instrument

Yes, if you follow our clear home study instructions for only a half hour each day, you should soon be playing simple melodies. Easy as A-B-C! No tedious scales. You learn to play real tunes by note right from the start! Study any instrument you like for only a few cents a day! If interested send for Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. See how easy it is to learn music at home without a teacher. Mention your favorite instrument.

U. S. School of Music, 1445 Brunswick Bldg., N. Y. 10, N. Y. (49th Year)

FREE BOOKLET

U. S. School of Music, 1445 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y. 10, N.Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).
Instrument..... Have you Instrument?.....
Name.....
Address..... (Please Print)

Exquisite
JEWELRY BARGAINS

SEND NO MONEY!

Just pay Postman C.O.D. on delivery amount plus 20% Government Tax and postage. Write Name and Address and Order Number. On ring orders, state finger size or send string or strip of paper. Money Back Guarantee. Send all orders to:

WORLD WIDE DIAMOND CO., Dept. H-945
2451 So. MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO 16, ILL.

7 JEWEL SWISS WATCH
Guaranteed Water Proof, Shock Proof Movement. Luminous Dial. Stainless Steel Case. Expansion Band.
No. W-910. . . . . Only $15.95

SWISS WRIST WATCH
Classy Dependable Watch with Sweep Second Hand and Luminous Dial. Stainless Steel Case.
No. W-901 Price Only $8.45

IDENTIFICATION BRACELET
Name Elegantly Engraved FREE on simulated SILVER plate. Give name.
No. 2N-504 ... BARGAIN 98c

10 KT. GOLD BRIDAL SET
Alluring! 10 Dazzling chip DIAMONDS. Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c per ring extra.
No. D-38 Each $6.95 Both $11.95

SIMULATED DIAMOND RING
12 simulated DIAMONDS with Brilliant on STERLING SILVER. Adorable!
No. 2R-417 Only $1.98

DIAMOND BRIDAL PAIR
4 chip DIAMONDS. 10 KT. GOLD. Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c per ring extra.
No. D-11 Each $4.95 Both $8.95

BIRTH-MONTH RING
Dazzling Individual simulated Birthstone in STERLING SILVER. Send Month.
No. R-425 . . Only 98c

LOVE BRIDAL PAIR
25 Exquisite Brilliants in STERLING SILVER Filigree Pattern.
No. R-405 Each $2.95 Both $3.95

SILVER SADDLE RING
Genuine STERLING SILVER Saddle Type Ring with Unusual Design.
No. R-456 Only $4.95

10 KT. GOLD RING
5 Lovely chip DIAMONDS. Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c extra.
No. D-29 . . Only $9.95

SILVER SIGNET RING
Brilliantly flanked Initial on Onyx-like Base in STERLING SILVER.
No. R-448 Price $2.98

MAN'S CAMEO RING
Shiny STERLING SILVER Ring with 2 Simulated DIAMONDS.
No. R-450 Only $2.98

HONORABLE DISCHARGE RING
STERLING SILVER. GOLD colored Insignia.
No. R-453 Only $3.95

AVOID BEING GRAY!!
USE GRA-NO-COL

It is safe! Easy to apply!
Neither a rinse, nor a dye.
Just use a few drops a few times and bring your hair to the natural shade you desire. GRA-NO-COL is sold on a money back guarantee. Price: $2.00. Check, money order, cash or C.O.D. for this remarkable hair coloring to:

THE JOSEPH TALL COMPANY
32 Station St., Brookline, Massachusetts

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS
(SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Use DERMOIL

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgren Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547 Northwestern Station, Dept. 9109, Detroit 4, Mich.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1955 LAKE LAB

REDUCE
UP TO 7 lbs. A WEEK
...OR DOUBLE MONEY BACK

EAT WHAT YOU WANT

Thousands have used amazing MYLO method to banish ugly fat, and gain gloriously beautiful figure. Easy! Safe! No Starving. You get all daily required vitamins and minerals—delicious concentrated food energy to keep up pep. Just eat sensibly and take healthful, wonderful MYLO as directed—and it is possible for you to lose up to 7 lbs. in a week.

NO STARVING
NO DRUGS
NO MASSAGE
NO LAXATIVES
NO EXERCISE

MYLO 7-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Either you are more than delighted with the results MYLO brings you in loss of weight or you get double your money back. SEND NO MONEY! Just mail us your name and address and on delivery of MYLO pay the postman $2.00, plus C. O. D. charges or send $2.00 with your order and we will pay the postage. Follow direction for 7 days. Then, if you are not truly amazed at the loss of weight, if you don't notice remarkable improvement in your figure, if you don't look better, feel better, you will get double your money back. Don't let ugly fat distort your shape. Send for delicious, nutritious MYLO today.

INTERNATIONAL LABORATORIES
329 S. Wood St. • Dept. 15-EE • Chicago 12, Ill.

QUALITY SUN GLASSES IN GLAMOROUS STYLES

• GENUINE "EAGLE" SUN GLASSES created in latest styles of modern eye wear, including 12 Karat Gold-filled Ful-Vue Arc-Way. Easy on the eyes while enjoying the sun. Reasonably priced.

WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG and FREE EYE GLASS CLOTH

ALSO LARGE STOCK OF JEWELRY AND WATCHES

EAGLE JEWELERS-OPTICIANS
1447 MILWAUKEE AVE.
DEPT. D-5 CHICAGO 22, ILL.

LASHES LOOK LONGER

Eyelashes seem lovelier, longer—Eyes seem lovelier, brighter, gayer when you beautify your eyelashes! Gain glamour and charm this easy way, with Lechler's famous EYELASH GLAMOUR KIT. Use according to simple directions and watch yourself grow more stunning. Enclose only $2.40 (tax incl.) with this "ad." Also C.O.D.

HOUSE OF LECHLER, Dept. 335
560 B'way, N. Y. 12, N. Y.

PULVEX DDT FLEA POWDER

now also contains

Kills the fleas QUICKLY!
Keeps others off for days!
Still 25¢ and 50¢

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

IT'S A BOY!

(Continued from page 42)

at least we can use it for something now."

"You won't put our baby in that thing," she said.

Sue tracked down the bassinette that held Alana during her first weeks. It had become a tradition in her circle of friends to move the bassinette wherever a new baby was expected. The Crosbys' first boy and last boy had used it, Kay Kyser and Georgia Carroll had it for a while and Rosemary Lane had trimmed it with new ribbons for her baby. Now it was trimmed in pink.

"Don't you think we ought to fix it up in blue?" Alan said.

Sue smiled to herself. Alan wanted a boy so badly. She remembered when Alana'd been born. The first time she'd seen Alan afterward, he had come into her hospital room, his eyes strangely glazed.

"Are you happy that it's a girl?" Sue had asked.

"Oh—" said Alan, looking out the window, "it's all right."

never lost a father, yet . . .

Then Sue had discovered that he was ill, and when the nurse had taken his temperature at Sue's suggestion, the thermometer had shown 104 degrees. So his indifference, while partly disappointment, had been due mostly to being "out" on his feet. Just the same, this time it was obvious that he wanted a boy!

Alan bought hundreds of cigars and stowed them away in his studio dressing room. The baby was expected any time between December 15th and January 15th, but Christmas went by, and so did New Year's Day, and nothing happened.

Sue's doctor had bet her three pairs of nylons the baby would arrive by January 3rd. Sue had won that bet easily. The waiting was getting them down. It's sort of a Ladd jinx. Alana had been born several weeks late, now this one was overdue, and to add another thorn to the strain on their patience, Alan's favorite mare at the Alsulana Ranch was negotiating with Father Time regarding her own addition. The situation extended even to the pair of rabbits at the ranch. There were two of them and for a year they had maintained a childless marriage—a record in rabbit annals.

"It's a curse on us," muttered Alan.

Then at eight o'clock at night, on February 4th, the doctor called the ambulance. They told Alana they were going to the hospital to get her a baby, and left the house in a rush.

At the hospital Alan retired to the waiting room, a bleak affair with four walls and not much else. Through the night he sat nursing his anxiety with half smoked cigarettes.

Around noon of the next day, Alan learned that complications had set in and that there might be serious trouble. Knowing he was in a frenzy of worry, Sue suggested that he phone Chet Root, his best friend, to keep him company. Chet said sure, he'd be right down.

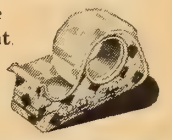
When it came time for Sue to go to the operating room, Alan followed dejectedly as they wheeled her down the corridor. Sue watched his drawn face and tried to keep courage written on her own. Just before they wheeled her away from him, Alan pressed a small picture of Alana into her hand.

"For luck," he said.

It broke Sue's reserve, and by the time she had passed through the door she was

SLICK TRICK with "SCOTCH" TAPE

DRESS UP your cupboard with fancy-edged shelf paper held tightly in place with transparent "SCOTCH" TAPE



REG U S PAT OFF
SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

25c at your favorite store

Scads of "Scotch" Tape ideas in the new free "Slick Tricks" booklet. Send for yours today . . . and if you have some clever hunches on how you use "Scotch" Tape, let us hear from you! Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 927 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.

© 1947 3M CO.

VETO Colgate's Amazing New Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant . . . Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness and to check perspiration, stop underarm odor safely.

OFFICIAL TESTED BY BUREAU LABORATORIES

DOUBLY PREFERRED! Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

CAT'S PAW

Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

64 ACTUAL PHOTOS OF THE FAVORITE MOVIE STARS

INCLUDING INGRID BERGMAN, CORNEL WILDE, VAN JOHNSON, ESTHER WILLIAMS, GUY MADISON, JUNE ALLYSON AND MANY OTHERS.

50c

for complete set of 64

Catalogue of the complete list of pictures available with first order.

STEWART-CROXTON STUDIOS
1408 Westwood Blvd, Dept. OB
West Los Angeles 24, California

WHY SUFFER
FROM MISERY OF SIMPLE PILES?

• Think of it! A single soothing ointment that speeds relief from those tortures of simple piles. It's amazing Pazo Ointment—acts instantly to relieve pain and itching—soothes inflamed tissues—lubricates dry, hardened parts—helps prevent cracking and soreness—acts to reduce swelling and check minor bleeding. It's wonderful!

So, to speed this relief from itching and pain of simple piles, get Pazo Ointment. Your doctor can tell you about it. At all druggists' in tubes complete with perforated pile pipe that makes application simple and thorough—also tins and handy suppositories.

SORORITY and FRATERNITY PINS

Also Club Pins and Emblems. Artistic designs. Finest quality. Reasonable prices from 30c up. Write for illustrated catalog.

Dept. Z, Metal Arts Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Brush Away GRAY HAIR ...AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or dissolved in a flow of silent tears.

Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE

Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 295, COVINGTON, KY.

Outside, Alan and Chet waited, staring at each other helplessly. Two hours later, Sue's nurse walked into the waiting room.

"You have a son," she said. "Eight pounds, eleven and a half ounces."

The word "son" had no effect on Alan. He looked at the nurse, his eyes haggard. He sank into a chair.

"I don't care what it is," he said. "How's Susie?"

"She's—all right," said the nurse.

Chet had made two phone calls when the doctor entered the room and spoke briefly to Alan. Watching Alan's face, Chet saw the muscles contract and then quiver slightly. He hung up the phone.

"What's the matter, Alan?"

"There are—" Alan gulped. "Complications. More of them. She's having a transfusion."

"My God," said Chet.

They brought the baby to Alan for his inspection. He looked down at the small bundle and said a silent prayer. It was three hours until he finally saw Sue. She was very sick, but she managed a smile.

"That was an awful trick, Laddie—showing me Alana's picture. It made me bawl."

Alan went out again, and waited. Chet finally went to his own home, worn out. He couldn't get over it, and kept his wife awake all night talking about the ordeal. Alan, meanwhile, was going through the worst of it. Sue was dangerously ill. There was transfusion after transfusion, and he learned that twice, while she'd been on the operating table, she had registered no pulse or blood pressure.

welcome sue and david . . .

Twelve days went by before Sue could leave the hospital. Alan spent the preceding night decorating the house for her homecoming. He followed the ambulance from the hospital and joined Sue at the front door, beaming at her reactions. The door was hung with a big sign that read "WELCOME SUE AND DAVID." The living room was blotted out by a huge placard that said "GOOD BOY, DOC." The bedroom was festooned with twisted crepe paper hung from the ceiling, and a sign over Sue's bed read "GOSH! IT'S GOOD TO HAVE YOU HOME."

They'd named the baby David Alan, and soon after Sue came home, a trade paper carried an item to the effect that Mr. Ladd must be mighty fond of his own name, what with a daughter named Alana, his son David Alan, his ranch Alsulana, his racing horse Alsuladd. Sue froze when she read it, and immediately phoned the paper.

"Listen," she said. 'If there's anything in the Ladd family named after Alan, it's my own doing. I happen to be in love with the guy—and if I had six more children I'd like to name them all Alan. He has nothing to do with it. I put up his pictures all over the house, and he comes home at night and takes them down. You really shouldn't—"

"All right, Mrs. Ladd," said the editor. "All right, we're sorry. You win."

And the next edition printed her statement. Sue showed it to Alan.

"There," she said. "I guess I fixed that."

He patted her head. "You don't care who knows it, do you, honey?"

"I certainly don't. I'm proud of it."

Small Alana was dumbstruck with happiness over the new baby. She had been moved into the guest room to make space for a nursery and considered the whole thing a great honor. Glued to the nursery for days after the baby's installation, she was in attendance during feedings, baths and diapering, always holding David's tiny hand as a signal of her devotion.

One night she sat on the bed, solemnly

REDUCE Fatty "Spots" — LOSE TO 15 POUNDS in less than 30 DAYS

Without Drugs Laxatives

Here is a "PLAN" that is designed for YOU, the normal healthy, Busy Woman who has no time for Strenuous Exercise . . . Severe Diets. YET . . . Rolls and Bulges mar Beauty and Happiness. Slender Loveliness may be Yours again if you use the HOLLYWOOD TWO-WAY PLAN, an External, Scientifically proven method that includes Internal-External Correction, Caloric Guidance, and the Hollywood Body Toner for effective Self-Massage and "SPOT" TONING.

"SPOT" TONE $2.25

ANY PART OF THE BODY

Self-Massage and "SPOT" TONE Any Part of the Body with the Hollywood Body Toner. This external applicator works like a Good Firm Hand Massage. Passive and Soothing, its action Stimulates Active Blood Circulation in Fatty Tissues. It takes a few minutes a day to Tone and Tighten Flabby Flesh and Sagging Muscles to Normal, Desirable Firmness. FEEL YOUR BODY GLOW FROM "TOP TO TOE."

REDUCE or MONEY REFUNDED

ORDER TODAY . . . At No Risk To You . . . Either REDUCE NOTICEABLY within 10 days or your money will be refunded immediately. You are "Sole Judge." Just mail Coupon TODAY . . . NOW . . . for the "HOLLYWOOD TWO-WAY PLAN" including the self-massage "Hollywood Body Toner" and a liberal supply of Body Cream. Not a monthly purchase but complete at $2.25. SEND NO MONEY.

On delivery simply pay $2.25 plus postage. If you prefer, mail check or money order for $2.25 and save postage! Address:

Hollywood Beauty Consultants
6808 Sunset Blvd. Dept. 3-DM. Hollywood 28, California

I GOT RID OF BLACKHEADS

NADINOLA'S 4-WAY ACTION HELPS AMAZINGLY TO COMBAT UGLY BLACKHEADS, EXTERNALLY-CAUSED PIMPLES, DARK DULL SKIN

One glance may kill romance—if your skin is dark, dull or needlessly blemished! That's why thousands of girls and women trust to Nadinola Cream, the clinically-proved 4-way treatment cream. Quickly, gently, Nadinola helps to loosen and remove ugly blackheads—to clear up externally caused pimples—to fade freckles—to lighten, brighten and freshen your skin to creamier loveliness. See for yourself what Nadinola can do in days—what wonders it works in weeks! Full treatment-size jar of Nadinola Cream just 60c, with money-back guarantee; trial jar, 10c.

SEND FOR FREE ILLUSTRATED BEAUTY BOOKLET—richly printed in full color, with photographs and sworn proof of wonderful results from just one jar of Nadinola. Write NADINOLA, Dept. 30, Paris, Tenn.

Sell GREETING CARDS 100 MONEY MAKERS

FAST SALES, BIG PROFITS. Show exquisite Everyday, Birthday, Easter, Humorous Boxes, Gift Wraps, Stationery, Correspondence Notes, Special Offers, Bonus. Request $1 Everyday Box on approval.

HEDENKAMP & COMPANY
343 Broadway, Dpt. R-9, New York 13, N. Y.

STAMMER? GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 2295, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

LEARN AT HOME TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates.

HIGH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED

48th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women, 18 to 60. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 235, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

Name_____
City_____ State_____ Age_____

FOR THE FINEST
Lady Ruth Cosmetics
POPULARLY PRICED
AT YOUR FAVORITE 5 & 10

watching her father struggle with his tie.

"You like David?" said Alan.

"Oh yes, Daddy."

"What are you going to call him? A nickname, I mean."

"His name is David Alan," she said gravely.

"But he ought to have a nickname. Your name is Alana but we call you Lonnie. What'll it be for David?"

"Butch," said Alana promptly.

So Butch it is, and his chubby highness rules the household. They treasured the gifts sent Butch by friends, perhaps most of all the tiny set of dentures, less than one inch square, sent by their dentist. The card read, "He's got to have teeth."

Three nights after Sue's return to the fold, she and Alan were playing gin rummy in the bedroom when the phone rang. It was the caretaker at the Alsulana Ranch, his voice high with excitement.

"Alan!" he said. "You're a father!"

"No kidding," said Alan drily.

"No—I mean the mare. She's thrown a filly—a beautiful chestnut filly!"

"Well, that's that," said Alan. "Now only the rabbits remain stubborn."

The man laughed. "You're wrong there. The doe is expecting a litter next Thursday. I guess they finally got the idea."

Alan hung up and grinned at Sue. "We're certainly a busy family." He touched the old cradle with the toe of his shoe. "What do you say we store this thing away at the ranch? We've all had enough for a while."

A WOMAN'S PREROGATIVE

(Continued from page 38)

that a chat with me was better than champagne and caviar for breakfast."

Then Linda gave me the straight of it, to explain why she had given her marriage another try while all around her Hollywood married couples were calling it quits for good.

"First," she said, "let me explain about Pev going to Honolulu just ten days after our reconciliation. He had planned this vacation trip for a long time. He had just finished photographing Night Unto Night, the new Viveca Lindfors picture at Warners, and really needed a rest. He took the trip with a friend of his, Don Siegel, the director of the picture, and I would have gone along except that there wasn't a chance because of the Forever Amber schedule."

Linda makes no bones about it. Her marriage to Pev Marley, which was of three years' and three months' duration, and interrupted by a six months' separation, may not continue. She sincerely hopes it will.

"I think," Linda continued, "that my particular marriage problem is a little different from most of those you have been called upon to report. In the first place, I didn't file for divorce. We talked about the community property problem, but that was as far as it went. Shortly after Christmas, Pev and I began seeing each other casually, and we made the gradual decision to go back together. Then I moved out of my Hollywood apartment, and back into our home at Pacific Palisades."

Back of all this is a romantic story of duration seldom known in Hollywood. Linda met Pev Marley for the first time when she was fourteen years old. He had photographed her second test. That was in April, 1939, after she had gone back to Dallas, Texas, her first try at pictures a failure because she was too young for older roles and too old for children's work.

"I was in love with Pev for four years

High School Course at Home
Many Finish in 2 Years
Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.
American School, Dept. H-514, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

A NEW FACE
—A NEW FUTURE!
How Plastic Surgery easily takes years off the prematurely aged face, quickly reshapes an ugly nose and corrects other facial blemishes is told and illustrated with 88 before-and-after pictures in fascinating book, YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, written by famous Plastic Surgeon. Yours, postpaid in plain wrapper—only 25c

FRANKLIN HOUSE Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg. Philadelphia, Pa. Dept. 11-R

WE PAY YOU $25
FOR SELLING FIFTY $1 ASSORTMENTS of Birthday, All-Occasion cards. Tremendous demand. Sell for $1.00—your profit 50c. It costs nothing to try. Write today CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-3, White Plains, N.Y.
WRITE FOR SAMPLES

BE PREPARED FOR
SICKNESS or ACCIDENT
. . . THIS HOSPITALIZATION PLAN
PROTECTS YOU AND YOUR FAMILY
Costs only 3c
A DAY • EACH ADULT
1½c A DAY • EACH CHILD
Benefits begin the day you enter a hospital
FOR SICKNESS OR ACCIDENT
Hospital Expenses paid, up to . . . $540.00
FOR ACCIDENT
Doctor Expense paid, up to . . . $135.00
Loss of Wages reimbursed, up to . . . $300.00
Loss of Life by Accident $1000.00
WAR COVERAGE AND EXTRA BENEFITS
Childbirth Expense paid, up to . . . $75.00
It's easy to run into debt when sickness or accident hit. Under the Family Mutual Plan, you'll be able to pay your hospital bills. And in case of accident, you'll be reimbursed for your doctor expenses, for loss of time from work. You can enter any hospital in the United States. Your family doctor may attend you. Benefits applying to children are 50% of those paid adults.
MAIL COUPON TODAY—No Agent Will Bother You
FAMILY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., WILMINGTON 99, DEL.

Family Mutual Life Insurance Co. MS-21
601 Shipley St., Wilmington 99, Del.
Please send me, without obligation, complete information on your Economical Hospitalization Plan.
NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ STATE _____

GIRLS! Want quick curls?
WHAT girl doesn't want quick curls these days! Especially when that favorite fella gives you a call at the last minute. With New Wildroot Hair Set you can set that favorite hair-do in less time. It's absolutely tops for quick good grooming that's so important these days. New Wildroot Hair Set contains processed Lanolin. Leaves any texture of hair soft, natural-looking, and at its lovely best. Replaces old-fashioned thick gummy wave sets. Light bodied. Faster drying. Lets you style your favorite hair-do at home quickly, without fuss or disappointment.

NEW WILDROOT HAIR SET

MARY ANDERSON
Star of Quebec Productions Corporation's "The Whispering City."

How to Make Your Hair Lovelier
GOLDEN GLINT will bring out the true color beauty of your hair without changing the shade by adding a "tiny tint" of contrasting color which overcomes dullness and yet doesn't show. It brings out the full, rich beauty of your natural shade just as a touch of bluing makes dingy linen snowy white.
Your choice of 12 shades, one of which should be just right to emphasize the sparkling highlights and colorful undertones in your individual shade.
Golden Glint makes your hair silky, easier to comb—easier to keep in place and frees it of soap film. It has shown millions of women a quick, harmless way to new hair beauty. (Over 50 million rinses sold.) Get a 25c or 10c package today at drug or dime store.
GOLDEN GLINT

This great romantic novel by Faith Baldwin brought to you by

DELL BOOKS for only 25¢ No. 163

"A self-made woman is a freak," said dynamic Bill Burke—and lovely, successful Cathleen McElroy was furious. The clash of will power and personalities builds up to a thrilling climax in one of Faith Baldwin's most powerful novels. Don't miss it.

SELF-MADE WOMAN by Faith Baldwin

For Mystery Fans—

Exciting New DELL MYSTERIES

Famous Authors! Best-Selling Titles!

. . . only 25c each

156 BLOW-DOWN.....Lawrence G. Blochman
157 FIRE WILL FREEZE.....Margaret Millar
158 THE DEVIL IN THE BUSH.....Matthew Head
159 IF A BODY.....George Worthing Yates
160 DOUBLE OR QUITS.....A. A. Fair
161 THE MAN NEXT DOOR.....M. G. Eberhart
162 ODOR OF VIOLETS.....Baynard Kendrick

If you cannot obtain the titles listed, mail this coupon. Send 25c for each book ordered. This offer good in the U. S. A. only.

DELL PUBLISHING CO., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

Please send me the Dell Books checked below. I enclose $.....

☐ No. 156 ☐ No. 157 ☐ No. 158 ☐ No. 159
☐ No. 160 ☐ No. 161 ☐ No. 162 ☐ No. 163

Name .....

Address .....

City, Zone & State.....MS-57

before he began to take me seriously. After we'd known each other for a couple of years, during which he treated me like an older brother does his kid sister, I couldn't hide my feelings.

"Pev didn't convince himself that I was sure in my own mind until just a few weeks before we eloped to Las Vegas. Ten months before that I was so certain that he would propose at last that I bought a white wedding suit and asked Ann Miller to be my bridesmaid.

"Finally, Pev broke down and admitted that for a long time he had been putting on the four-wheel brakes to keep from asking me, and that he would admit at last that I was not just a little nitwit who imagined that being married was simply the most exciting thing ever."

The marriage plans were kept a secret. They had to be. There was a solid wall of opposition from studio and family.

"Ann and I finally took our wedding costumes out of their respective closets," Linda declared, "and there was more than a slight aroma of moth balls. We had planned to leave early on Saturday morning, and drive to Las Vegas, but the studio called Ann in to dub some tap sounds.

"In the meantime, I was still frantically calling hotels in Las Vegas. There wasn't a room to be had in the whole town, and we needed two. One for Ann and me, and another for Pev and his best man.

"I decided to use 'movie influence.' I said that Ann and I were coming up, as we did frequently, to entertain the men at a nearby air field . . . and we were bringing our mothers."

That should have turned the trick, but the little scheme backfired. One of the hotels called Linda back and reported that they were only able to secure one room, but inasmuch as the party consisted only of females would they mind?

Pev and Linda talked the situation over and decided that it was now or never.

"When we got there, Ann and I unpacked while Pev and Bill went looking for a room. We were too excited to do much sleeping, but when I finally closed my

I SAW IT HAPPEN

One Sunday morning at 6 a.m., Gene Autry arrived in our town—and there wasn't one restaurant open. He came into our bakery shop, which is one of the few places open at that time, and asked my mother if there were any place he could get a cup of coffee. My mother, who is no movie fan, thought he was a poor cowhand who had come to Chicago on the cattle train, and promptly offered him some coffee in the tin cups we use in the shop. He sat on the counter, talking quietly about everything under the sun—until the town came to life. He even went out and rolled down the awning in front of our bakery. That evening, as Gene was walking from the hotel to the theater, followed by hundreds of his fans, he passed our shop, which caused my mother to remark, "Everyone's acting so silly. Didn't they ever see a cowboy before?" When I told my mother the cowboy was Gene Autry, the famous movie star, she got quite a pleasant surprise.

Frances Mrnjec
South Holland, Ill.

Glamour-Eyes with LASH-KOTE

For bewitching, sparkling eyes...enhance their beauty with Lash-Kote. Water-proof . . . tear-proof . . . smudge-proof . . . harmless!

Applies easily, dries quickly. Lasts for days. In black or brown

25¢

AT ALL 5 & 10¢ STORE COSMETIC COUNTERS

CORNS

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

removed by MOSCO

Marvel

WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women

At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Free Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

GRAY HAIR?

Correct it with PATRICIAN 'TINT-BEST. Leaves hair soft, lustrous and natural looking. Easy to use, no experience required. Unaffected by washing or permanent waving. Send for FREE sample. State color of hair.

PATRICIAN LABORATORIES, LTD.
Dept. MS, 849 E. 226 St., New York

51 GAUGE NYLON HOSIERY

Full fashioned, first quality—Fine quality lingerie, available at low sensible prices. Write for Dame Fashion "Style Notes" and Price List.

DAME FASHION CO., 366 Fifth Ave., Dept. G-5, New York 1, N. Y.

PROTECTION IN CASE OF SICKNESS OR ACCIDENT

3¢ A DAY HOSPITAL PLAN

PAYS HOSPITAL & DOCTOR BILLS

In case of sickness or accident, you may go to any Hospital in the U. S. or Canada under any Doctor's care. WE PAY YOUR EXPENSES in full accordance with Policy Provisions.

INDIVIDUAL or FAMILY

You are eligible for this low cost Protection from birth to age 70 . . . without medical examination. The famous North American Plan is sold direct at a saving to you. The Company is under the supervision of the Insurance Department. BE PREPARED! Sickness and accident strike suddenly. Insure now! Send for free details at once. No Agent will call.

POLICY PAYS

Hospital Room and Board for Sickness or Accident Per Day Up to $6.00

Doctor Visits In Case of Accident Per Visit $3.00

Surgical Operations Up to $150.00

Time Lost from Work In Case of Accident Per Week $25.00

Accidental Death Up to $2000.00

Physical Dismemberment Up to $2000.00

Identification Service Up to $100.00

Ambulance Service $10.00

FREE! MAIL COUPON

NORTH AMERICAN MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY
Dept. MM7-5, Wilmington, Del.

Please send me, without obligation, details about your "3c A Day Hospitalization Insurance Plan".

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

eyes there was a loud knock on the door. I opened it to find a bell hop with a telegram from Pev. After turning the town upside down he and Bill had a room in the same hotel, two floors above us!"

Linda and Pev were married on Palm Sunday in the office of Judge O'Malley. Church bells rang. Everything was beautiful. Linda and Ann wept a little, and the happy event was over.

The trip back was wonderful, until they turned on the car radio. They heard Winchell announce the news of the elopement. Then followed Louella Parsons and Jimmie Fidler. And they couldn't miss the blunt truth that few people, if any outside themselves, were in a congratulatory mood.

Linda gave a wedding reception. Quite a group of her friends attended, but she couldn't miss the obvious attitude of those who should have been there but weren't.

During their honeymoon, Pev and Linda avoided everyone. But gradually the opposition turned to enthusiasm. Linda and Pev bought their home in Pacific Palisades, a few blocks from the ocean, and began to furnish it. The task took almost three years because Pev was still in the army. Although stationed nearby for most of the time, during which he was photographing training films and the re-created landscapes in miniature which were used for pin-point bombing over Germany, he had little free time. Linda and the studio made up, and the pressure of her career became stronger.

Linda views her marriage problems with a direct attitude. "Our adjustment probably wasn't nearly as difficult as many marriages at the same time," she pointed out, "but an actress has a specialized situation to face. It is more than a problem of whether or not two careers in the same family will work.

"Pev and I married for companionship, but frequently we missed out on it. And not through any fault of Pev's. He is one of those vital, energetic men who is interested in many things. It may seem small and ridiculous, but I frequently didn't want to talk about my experiences during the day—whom I saw, whether the scenes went right, and so on.

"Pev, on the other hand, is deeply interested in his work, and in mine. Whereas, the way I am, when a day is over, I seldom feel like rehashing any of it.

alone in a crowd . . .

"The reason for my craving for silence may be as simple as the fact that I was raised with a large family. There were five of us, not to mention the pets we were forever collecting. Our home was always a happy madhouse. I could walk in at any time, find a horse in the living room, which I didn't, of course, and never bat an eyelash.

"As a result I found privacy by just being quiet. The habit of long standing still prevails to such an extent that Pev sometimes has asked me what I am unhappy about when I am simply sitting around and relaxing, enjoying the luxury of not saying anything."

This seemed a good point to pop up with a question about the future. Linda grinned. "I have just bought a small ranch near Taos," she said. "It is a five-and-a-half acre hideaway built of adobe, with four bedrooms and an art studio. Mr. Zanuck has promised me three months off after Forever Amber is finished, and you don't have to guess where I'm going."

"Alone?" I asked.

"Oh, I forgot to tell you one thing about the ranch," she answered quickly. "There's a small stream running through it. If you happen to be passing by—as you won't—you'll probably see Pev out fishing for trout."

CLEAN HAIR in 10 minutes WITHOUT WATER

★ No soap • No rinsing • No drying
★ Removes oil, dirt, hair odors
★ Retains wave; restores sheen
★ Grand between water shampoos
★ Ideal during colds and illness

30 SHAMPOOS WITH MITT 1.00 Plus tax, At all good drug and department stores.

MINIPOO DRY SHAMPOO

Cosmetic Distributors, Inc., Jersey City 6, N. J.

Does the laxative you take go to extremes?

THAT last laxative dose . . . what did it do to you? Practically knock you out? Or just sort of stir you up inside without giving the relief you needed?

You avoid both these extremes when you take Ex-Lax! It gets results in such an easy, pleasant way. Ex-Lax is thorough and effective, yet so nice and gentle! Not too strong, not too mild . . . Ex-Lax is the "Happy Medium" laxative!

What's more, Ex-Lax tastes good —just like fine chocolate! It's a real pleasure to take—not a punishment!

So, take Ex-Lax next time you need a laxative. Discover for yourself why it's America's most widely used laxative. Over 40 million boxes sold last year! As a precaution, use only as directed. 10¢ and 25¢.

When Nature forgets . . . remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

ACTS WELL . . . TASTES SWELL

CRACK-UP

(Continued from page 62)

home of Ginger Rogers, and while he was living there in a great deal of secrecy, Harrison Carroll, the columnist, got wind that something was wrong. He called Greer, who shot back a fast denial.

"Oh, no," she told him. "We're just having the house redecorated, and Richard went away so he wouldn't be bothered while he's working so hard on Ivy."

Carroll used the story that way on a Friday, but the following Sunday, Louella Parsons had their separation on her radio program, having got hold of Richard, who admitted it. He himself had only learned that morning from Greer that she considered their break final.

That's when Greer fled posthaste to Pebble Beach with her mother, and she was really in a terrible state of nerves. Richard said to me afterwards, "Pressure from correspondents and columnists became so terrific that she was completely beside herself."

After talking to Richard I am quite sure that he was not let in on Greer's plans and that the announcement from her came as a great shock to him. Nevertheless, outwardly he betrayed nothing. In fact, he seemed to me to be making a point of nonchalance—not that I was fooled by it. I suspected all the time that he was just laughing on the outside, crying on the inside. I knew he was hard hit.

For more than a year before the rift, the gossip about the Garson-Ney menage had been hot. People seemed to have a feeling that everything was not quite as it ought to be in that three-cornered household. (Greer's mother lived with them, you know.) The rumors increased about the time he left M-G-M. In order to quell those rumors, Greer and Richard announced that they planned to buy a trailer and tour the country all by themselves. Greer told me glowingly of their plans.

"Richard is so handy with the pot and skillet," she said. "Really a fine cook, you know. We shall have the most wonderful time." The trip never came off. It was just sort of forgotten.

Then the gossip took a really ridiculous turn, showing how little people honestly know about the inner lives of our stars who are so constantly on parade. The next rumor was that they were victims of mother-in-law trouble. Nina Garson and Richard have been the best of pals, and gin rummy antagonists from way back. I am betting she misses him almost as much as Greer does.

Furthermore, Richard's own mother visited him and Greer for months last winter, and the two mothers-in-law went everywhere with the glamorous pair—to night clubs, premieres and private parties. I met Greer's mama and Richard's on the Sunday when Smiley Burnette gave a birthday party for his favorite horse and they were certainly the closest of pals. No, the mother-in-law angle will have to be ruled out. This difficulty goes deeper.

Richard told me he thought Greer never had entirely got over her accident and near-drowning at Monterey while making A Woman of My Own. (That was the time she was romantically rescued by a handsome fisherman and much was made of it.) The after-effects of that mishap left her morose and depressed. Yet in her public appearances, she was so gay that no one could have suspected a thing wrong. Outwardly they appeared ecstatically happy, completely wrapped up in each other—but what went on when it was no longer necessary to wear a mask, when they faced one another in the privacy of their own home, those things nobody knows.

Richard has discussed his marriage and its at least temporary failure with nobody. He consented to see me only because of our old and strong friendship, and because he knows that I am as ardent a Garson fan as he is. I am sure he has given me confidences that no one else has received, and for that reason this story as it relates to their break-up is exclusive.

But by skirting judiciously around what Richard told me, and what with my knowledge of Greer and her history in Hollywood, I think I have a pretty clear conception of what happened.

off with the queen's head . . .

Metro built Greer up to queenly stature. She stayed on top, reaping new harvests of adulation as each new picture came along, until the inevitable law of averages caught up with her.

Not every film can be a Mr. Chips, a Mrs. Miniver, a Random Harvest. Every top star must face the fact at some time in her career that she's going to have not-so-good pictures, but Greer wants every picture to be her best. She is a very highly organized girl, thin-skinned, ready to break into tears if she thinks people don't love her every minute. And she can be plunged into depths of misery by little things. Love doesn't thrive in that sort of climate.

Greer and Richard met in the wardrobe department at Metro. Richard had just come to Hollywood for the first time.

Let no one question that Greer did a great deal for Richard's career when he came back from the service. Let no one deny, either, that in a time that might have been difficult for a man of less finely-tempered character, Richard proved himself to be all man.

There are those who said that he couldn't help succeeding as an actor because, after all, wasn't he married to "Miss M-G-M?" A pretty catty aspersion! Richard got away from Metro as fast as he could. In The Late George Apley at Twentieth Century-Fox, he manifested a fine and trained talent. Sam Wood and Bill Dozier, two excellent judges of ability, paged him at Universal-International for a top featured role in Ivy. Again he acquitted himself with great credit. Gradually, the back-biting dwindled and finally ceased altogether. Today Richard is accepted on his own ability as one of the most skilled young players in pictures, with a bright future.

In the midst of all this success—the blow, tempered only by the knowledge that his friends are true and wholeheartedly interested in his happiness.

Richard said a strange thing to me that day at LaRue. "I am one of those men," he told me with that earnest look in his eyes, "who believe that the woman should have the right to decide whether she wants to marry—and also if she wants to call it a day. I believe that's a woman's privilege." But the torch Richard is carrying burns high and hot. Perhaps one day it may rekindle the love that Greer once had for him. Richard hopes so.

He told me he thought it was a woman's privilege to decide when she should marry and when she should end her marriage. But I discovered he has a way of making decisions for women. For instance, when I had lunch with him he had it all ordered for me before I arrived. He told me he thought women liked to have men make decisions for them. I don't. I like to order my own lunch. Maybe Greer does, too.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Notice something different about the Questionnaire (below) this month? We've changed it a bit—but the prizes are still the same! To the first 500 of you who fill out and return this Questionnaire, we will send ABSOLUTELY FREE a three months' subscription to MODERN SCREEN (June, July, August issues). Okay, on your mark . . . set . . . go! (And watch out for that last question—it's tricky.)

QUESTIONNAIRE

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

If any of the stars below is UNPOPULAR with you, please check the box opposite his or her name. If you like them all, please check the box opposite "No dislikes." CHECK ONLY ONE BOX!

☐ Van Johnson
☐ Rita Hayworth
☐ Glenn Ford
☐ Judy Garland
☐ Gregory Peck
☐ Betty Grable
☐ Cornel Wilde
☐ June Allyson
☐ Guy Madison
☐ Lana Turner
☐ No dislikes

My name is.....

My address is.....

City..... Zone..... State..... I am .....years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

I simply adore Maybelline mascara –
it's the most important part of my daily
make-up –
Joan Leslie
Natural Color Photograph
by Paul Hesse – Hollywood

East and West Agree on A·B·C
"Chesterfield is by far our Largest Selling Cigarette"
Sherman Billingsley's STORK CLUB IN NEW YORK
Robert H. Cobb HOLLYWOOD'S BROWN DERBY
ESTERFIELD CHEST
A ALWAYS MILDER
B BETTER TASTING
C COOLER SMOKING
Always Buy CHESTERFIELD
RIGHT COMBINATION ☆ WORLD'S BEST TOBACCOS · PROPERLY AGED

Copyright 1947, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

©CLB 76798

june 15c

modern screen

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
MAY 21 1947
RECEIVED PER.

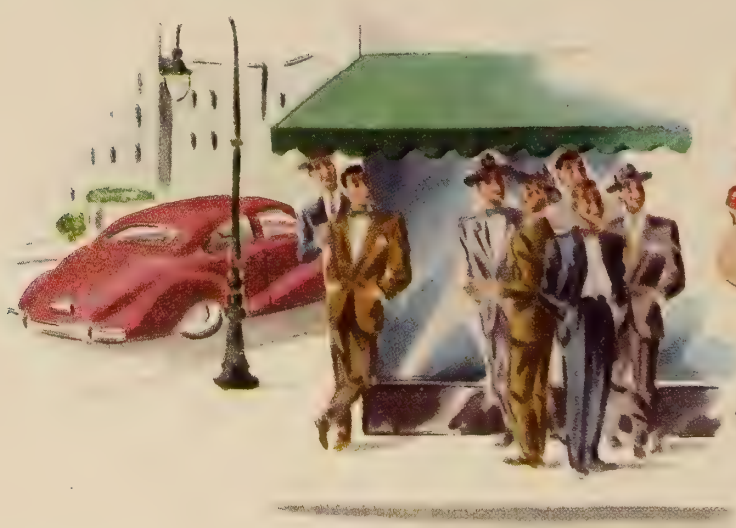
A DELL MAGAZINE
DELL
A DELL MAGAZINE

JUNE HAVER

She's Twenty... And Terrific!



OBJECT OF THE WOLF-WHISTLE . . . the little lady to whom most men bend the frankly appraising eye ...she knows that to surround herself with personal enchantment is to surround herself with personal admiration! Of course, she uses Lander's talc, whether the come-hither allure of Lilac and Roses, or the soft fragrance of Gardenia and Sweet Pea. Its constant use keeps her confident and carefree . . . its charming caress completes her careful toilette. In brief, she's learned that loveliness lingers when she uses Lander's Talcs!

These high-powered packages of personal pulchritude are available at all variety stores in four tantalizing fragrances: Lilac and Roses, Gardenia and Sweet Pea, Spicy Apple Blossom and Sweet Pea. You'll be more caressable, too, with Lander's colognes in Lilac and Roses and Spicy Apple Blossom!

10¢ EACH

ASK FOR OTHER LANDER'S TOILETRIES AT ALL 10¢ TOILET GOODS COUNTERS

LANDER'S

FIFTH AVENUE BLDG., N. Y.

For the Talc that Tempts

Hold on, hon... your bath's not done until you Mum!

...you just washed away past perspiration—now guard your future freshness

True, glamour does begin in the tub. But, while your bath gives you a fresh lease on loveliness, it can't safeguard your future charm.

So, after you wash away past perspiration, complete your bath with Mum. That's the safe, sure way to prevent risk of underarm odor to come. With Mum, you stay sweet, nice to be near, all day or evening.

Mum

MUM

Product of Bristol-Myers

checks perspiration odor

1. Safe for charm. Mum checks underarm odor, gives sure protection all day or all evening.
2. Safe for skin. Snow-white Mum is gentle, harmless to skin . . . forms no irritating crystals.
3. Safe for clothes. No harsh ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical, Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

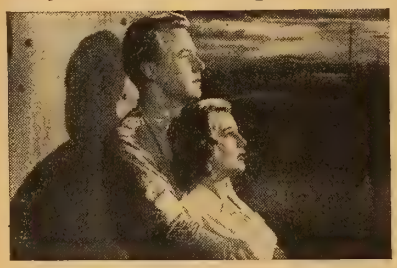
"High Barbaree" hits a new high in adventure. "High Barbaree" hits a new high in romance.

★ ★ ★ ★

Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, who wrote the famous "Mutiny on the Bounty", have penned a new modern story with equal fascination.

★ ★ ★ ★

As a Cosmopolitan magazine story, as a popular novel, it won millions of readers for its tale both taut and tense, its love story tender and touching.



Van Johnson's role is completely different from anything he's done in the past. Tough and dramatic, suave and civilized, it's a characterization that will absorb you. June Allyson, with stars in her eyes, is the girl he loves. But there's another girl in his life—Marilyn Maxwell.

★ ★ ★ ★

Thomas Mitchell adds the tang of salty humor with his part. Claude Jarman, Jr., flaxen-haired star of "The Yearling", and Henry Hull, one of the stage's finest actors, head a perfect supporting cast.

★ ★ ★ ★

Produced with consummate skill by Everett Riskin, dramatically directed by Jack Conway, from the screenplay by Anne Morrison Chapin, Whitfield Cook and Cyril Hume, "High Barbaree" hits a new high in entertainment.

★ ★ ★ ★

For spring enchantment, come along to the isle of High Barbaree . . . that tropic paradise of which all lovers dream.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll have a high good time at "High Barbaree".

★ ★ ★ ★

Louella Parsons has just given it Cosmopolitan Magazine's Citation as the Picture of the Month.

★ ★ ★ ★

To see is to agree!

—Leo

P.S.—What a Scoop! —"The Hucksters", "B.F.'s Daughter", "East River"—the three top best-sellers —will all become M-G-M hits!

JUNE, 1947

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

PAPA FLYNN (Errol Flynn) ..... by Valerie Sloan 12
RITA EXPLAINS (Rita Hayworth) ..... by Hedda Hopper 27
YOU CAN'T SAY THAT ABOUT BING! (Bing Crosby) ..... by Billy Rose 30
SECRET HEART (June Haver) ..... by Abigail Putnam 32
FAMILY CIRCLE (Dana Andrews) ..... by Cynthia Miller 34
STAR LIGHT, STAR BRIGHT (Guy Madison) ..... by Christopher Kane 36
VAN HEFLIN, THAT IS ..... by Carl Schroeder 40
EVERYTHING WITH TRICK ENDINGS (Peter Lawford) ..... by Kaaren Pieck 42
JOHN LUND'S LIFE STORY (Concluded) ..... by Ida Zeitlin 44
HOLIDAY (Robert Mitchum) ..... by Virginia Wilson 46
CALL ME MAMA (Deanna Durbin) ..... by Nancy Winslow Squire 48
LET THIS BE FOR ALWAYS (Kathryn Grayson-Johnnie Johnston) by Jean Kinkead 50
LIFE CAN BE BEAUTIFUL (William Holden) ..... by Letitia Le Page 52
CARY, CARY, QUITE CONTRARY (Cary Grant) ..... by Florabel Muir 54
BLESSED EVENT (Olivia De Havilland) ..... by George Benjamin 56
GAY BLADE (Cornel Wilde) ..... by Irene Greengard 58
TIME ON MY HANDS (Glenn Ford) ..... by Kirtley Baskette 60
BEST YEAR OF HIS LIFE (Fredric March) ..... by Jack Wade 62

features

GOOD NEWS ..... by Louella Parsons 4
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "Stairway To Heaven" selected by Dorothy Kilgallen 14

departments

REVIEWS ..... by Virginia Wilson 16
FASHION ..... by Constance Bartel 75
BEAUTY: "B-Day For Beauty!" ..... by Carol Carter 86
INFORMATION DESK ..... by Beverly Linet 88
MUSIC: "Sweet And Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 96
FAN CLUBS ..... by Shirley Frohlich 98

COVER PORTRAIT BY NIKOLAS MURAY ● DESIGNED BY LESTER BEALL

ALBERT P. DELACORTE, Executive Editor HENRY P. MALMGREEN, Editor

BERYL STOLLER, associate editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, assistant editor
OTTO STORCH, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
BEVERLY LINET, information desk
CHARLES SAXON, cartoon editor
MAGDA MASKEL, western manager
FRANKLYN PHILLIPS, western editor
GUS GALE, staff photographer
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
CARL SCHROEDER, editorial consultant
LAYNG MARTINE, promotion director
JEAN KINKEAD, contributing editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 35, No. 1, June, 1947.

Copyright, 1947, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York.
Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office, Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

Van Johnson · June Allyson

(In a NEW and DIFFERENT role...with the screen's most lovable girl)

A spectacular adventure-romance by the authors of
"Mutiny On The Bounty"
THRILL to the crash at sea!
THRILL to the tornado!
THRILL to the water-tower rescue!
He wanted to stay in the arms of his first true love—but another woman claimed him!

M-G-M presents

"HIGH BARBAREE"

(Where every lover's fondest dream comes true!)

THOMAS MITCHELL · MARILYN MAXWELL · HENRY HULL · CLAUDE JARMAN, Jr.

Screen Play by ANNE MORRISON CHAPIN, WHITFIELD COOK and CYRIL HUME

Based on the Novel by CHARLES NORDHOFF and JAMES NORMAN HALL

Produced by EVERETT RISKIN · Directed by JACK CONWAY

A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

Oscar-winners Harold Russell (best supporting male role) and Claude Jarman, Jr. (best child actor) share their mutual happiness with Shirley Temple.

■ The attractive suitor who has been courting Rita Hayworth oh-so-quietly but oh-so-persistently since her break with Orson Welles is—and this will surprise those who think immediately of Tony Martin—David Niven.

They were constantly together in Palm Springs where Rita had gone to recuperate from an overdose of "too much genius" in her marriage.

David is the main reason, I believe, that Tony Martin will have his work cut out for him if he tries to rekindle that old flame with Rita.

* * *

Since their flare-up at the Academy Awards when they refused to speak or be photographed together, there's been a lot printed about the feud between Olivia De Havilland and Joan Fontaine. Evidently, there's been a hurt that goes very deep on both sides.

The know-it-alls will tell you that the cause of the rift is that Olivia believes her family is not pleased over her marriage to Marcus Goodrich and that she resents it because she adores him. I don't believe that. Olivia and Joan had had many flare-ups before Goodrich ever came into the picture. It's unfortunate but true that the girls are just not temperamentally compatible.

Perhaps things will eventually ease up. The night of my broadcast with Olivia, I had dinner at a popular cafe with the Goodriches. Joan came in with her husband, William Dozier, and everyone held his or her breath to see what would happen. When Joan passed our table on her way to the ladies room, she stopped and spoke to her sister, and Olivia responded. I can't say there was any great effusion there, but at least the two did speak.

It's unfortunate that two such beautiful, talented sisters should be so bitter. Yet I don't see how anyone on the outside can do anything about it. The girls will have to work out their own problem.

* * *

When June Haver was working on location for Scudda Hoo, Scudda Hay—35 miles from Los Angeles—the only available telephone was a three-party line. Every time Junie put in a call to her bridegroom, Jimmy Zito, the other two "parties" listened in avidly.

One night, June picked up the 'phone, heard voices and would have hung up immediately if she had not heard her name being mentioned. The conversation went as follows:

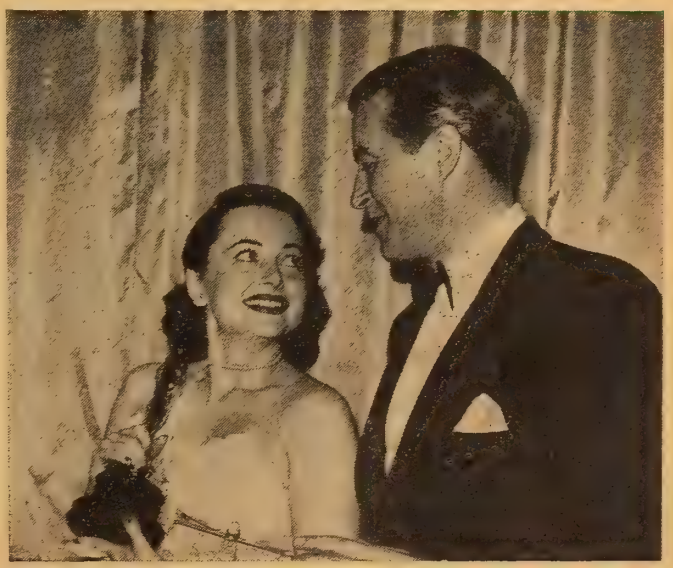
"June Haver's up here making a movie and she sure must be (Continued on page 6)

louella parsons' good news

Cathy O'Donnell (also of Best Years) accepted the statuette for Fredric March, busy acting in a N.Y. play. Joan Fontaine, who won Oscar in 1941, had the privilege of making the best-actor award.

It was Lionel Barrymore who opened the "best supporting actress" envelope and came up with Anne Baxter's name. This called for a kiss from Anne, who wept real tears during her "thank you" speech.

Morris Stoloff, who scored the music for The Jolson Story, enjoyed the double thrill of winning the Oscar and having it presented to him by Lana Turner! Lana, incidentally, came alone—in Ty Power's car.



Ray Milland, who won his golden boy last year, handed Olivia De Havilland the coveted best-actress prize—for To Each His Own, of course. Afterwards, Livvy threw a "weep-or-celebrate" party for close friends.

louella parsons' good news

The Academy shindig brought out Sue and Alan Ladd for their first formal celebration since their son David's birth. Suzie's well as ever now, after her difficult confinement.

A gay foursome at the Academy affair: the Nigel Tangyes (she's actress Ann Todd) and the G. Pecks. Greg wasn't too disappointed when he didn't win Oscar—but Greta was!

Evie and Van Johnson make their first public appearance as man and wife. Placed on a strict allowance by his manager, Van, who earns $5,200 a week, claims he's "flat broke."

The Danny Kayes were there, too. Danny's at the let-me-show-you-pictures-of-my-Dena stage, embarrassing Sylvia by hauling them out everywhere—even at the Academy show.

crazy about that broken-down musician she married. She calls him twice a day."

That was all the bride could take! "He's not a broken-down musician," she yelled with all stops out, "He's a wonderful musician! I ought to know. I'm married to him—and I'M June Haver!"

You could have cut the ensuing silence with a—telephone line!

* * *

The memory of Hollywood's top annual event, the Academy Awards, remains with us months after it is over. This is THE occasion when my home town dons its best bib and tucker to watch the lucky winnahs receive the coveted Oscars.

Usually, there are big parties all over town following the presentations. But this year it was different.

The N. Peter Rathvons (he's the big boss of RKO) took over the whole affair and invited 500 guests to their home atop a hill in Beverly Hills that has a magnificent view of Los Angeles and the valley. It's the old Charles Boyer house and it has been beautifully done over by Mrs. Rathvon.

Parking so many cars was such a problem that the Rathvons had arranged for taxis to convey the guests from the foot to the top of the hill—and believe me, I think I have never seen such a beautiful sight as the roadside up the hill blooming with daffodils, hyacinths and all the Spring flowers that had been specially planted there for the occasion and gave the effect of a giant carpet of real flowers!

I looked immediately for Olivia De Havilland, the 1946 Queen, who had just carried off the Oscar. She was not there—so I telephoned her and found out she had invited a "weep-or-celebrate" gathering of her closest friends to a little party at her home—to weep if she lost and celebrate if she won. Everyone invited had accepted this invitation, so she was unable to appear at the Rathvons', which would have been such a triumphant occasion.

In view of what I've already told you about the feud—it was a little ironic that her sister Joan was at the big party and one of the loveliest girls there. Joan wore a lovely

(Continued on page 8)

Love me... IF YOU DARE!
Hate me... IF YOU CAN!
Kill me... IF YOU MUST!
The story of love that flowered like the Moss Rose... out of the ashes of death and violence!
PEGGY CUMMINS
VICTOR MATURE
ETHEL BARRYMORE
MOSS ROSE
From the best-thriller novel that startled ...and stunned!
with
VINCENT PRICE
MARGO WOODE • GEORGE ZUCCO
PATRICIA MEDINA • RHYS WILLIAMS
20th CENTURY-FOX
Directed by GREGORY RATOFF • Produced by GENE MARKEY

HANDS OFF

Are you the sort of Sad Sal who's always poking and plucking at her hair? It's not a pretty habit—and it's definitely not necessary if you use DeLong Bob Pins. Just slip two or three in strategic spots, and then forget your hair-do in public, concentrate on charm.

DeLong Bob Pins, you see, have a

Stronger Grip

Won't Slip Out

They simply can't slip out because they're made of high carbon steel. That does the trick. Introduce yourself to DeLong Bob Pins for a lifetime lease on poise . . .

Quality Manufacturers for Over 50 Years

BOB PINS HAIR PINS SAFETY PINS
SNAPS PINS
HOOKS & EYES HOOK & EYE TAPES
SANITARY BELTS

All set for the big Fan Club Party-and-Convention in June are: June Allyson and Marshall Reed, honorary committeemen; Gladys Perkins, publicity chief; and Ellen Roufs, director of the affair. Clubbers from all over the country will pour into Hollywood for the week-long activities.

louella parsons' good news

canary yellow gown with a beaded jacket. "No, I'm not concealing my figure," she laughed. "I'll let you know when I'm going to have a baby."

Joan's marriage to Bill Dozier has worked out wonderfully well. "I'm the girl who married her boss," she said. She seemed so gay that I didn't say a word about the scene that had taken place backstage with Olivia earlier in the evening.

Dorothy Lamour, who just that day had received word that she had to have her adenoids out, looked far from a prospective hospital patient in a stunning white dress embroidered in red cherries. Dorothy has always been considered one of Hollywood's best dressed women. She certainly has never rated the crack that she was one of our "ten worst dressed!"

I must say for Rosalind Russell and Jane Wyman that they were wonderful sports about losing the Oscar to Olivia. They were looking around everywhere trying to find the missing Olivia and congratulate her. Said Jane, "If I couldn't win it, I'm glad she did."

If Rosalind Russell was disappointed, she certainly didn't show it. But Freddie Brisson, her husband, said to me, "She'll probably win it for something less serious. I, personally, think Sister Kenny was the finest thing she's done on the screen."

I noticed that Jane Wyman, who's expecting a baby, spent a quiet evening with her husband and the Gregory Pecks. Jane was very cute saying how disappointed she was that Gregory had not won for the best male performance. Everyone likes him so much and he's such a wonderful actor. But Hollywood voted the way it saw it—and that's the way it should be no matter what personal preferences are.

When I patted Jimmy Stewart on the back and said, "Jimmy, I'm sorry you didn't win," he grinned and said, like the good sport he is, "Oh, I have time. I'll get it someday."

"Someday again," I corrected, because Jimmy won Oscar in 1937 for Philadelphia Story.

A huge tent had been erected for the party and the decorating motif was enormous Oscars all over the place. In all the years I've been covering Hollywood parties there has never been a more elaborate affair nor more people present. Sprinkled among the stars were such illustrious guests as Eric Johnston and Earl Warren, the popular Governor of California. Yep—it was a beeg night. We won't have a bigger one until Academy Award time rolls around next year.

* * *

This may be a little tip for romance, girls! Alfred Hitchcock, one of our best directors, refuses to film a love scene on a big, gaudy set. Hitchy says that close quarters is the correct way to convey the feeling that two people are set apart from the rest of the world. For this reason, he's filming the love scenes between Gregory Peck and Valli (that's all there is to her name and she's the new Selznick discovery debuting in The Paradine Case) on a set that measures six-feet-by-eight. That should be chummy enough!

Seems kinda silly—but experts do say that many proposals take place in automobiles or

(Continued on page 10)

Thrill after Thrill after Thrill after Thrill! violent!
violent Love!
HUMPHREY
BOGART
BARBARA STANWYCK
ALEXIS SMITH
"The TWO Mrs. Carrolls"
WARNER BROS.
WITH
NIGEL BRUCE · PETER GODFREY · MARK HELLINGER
DIRECTED BY
PRODUCED BY
Screen Play by Thomas Job · From the Stage Play by MARTIN VALE · Music by Franz Waxman WARNERS made it from the 2-year stage hit that hit Broadway between the eyes!

65 PLEASURE PLANNED TOURS

THRILL TO HAPPY DAYS ENJOYING AMERICA AT "SCENERY LEVEL"

Unlimited Choice of Itineraries Visiting America's Favorite Attractions and Wonders . . . California, Mexico, Pacific Northwest, Florida, Rocky Mountain Playgrounds, National Parks, Gulfcoast, Southwest, New England, Washington, Historic Virginia, Great Smokies, New York

1947's Greatest Travel Values!

5 DAYS from $29
7 DAYS from $42
14 DAYS from $95
20 DAYS or longer from . . $124

TAX NOT INCLUDED

ADVANTAGES . . .

NATIONAL TRAILWAYS BUS SYSTEM

Trailways Pleasure-Planned Tours give you the freedom and satisfaction of independent travel at tour bargains. Go by yourself or in your own group. Start any day. Stopovers and extensions as desired. Price includes Transportation, De Luxe Sight-Seeing, Rooms with Bath at good Hotels and Meals while in National Parks. MAIL THE COUPON TODAY.

TRAILWAYS

NATIONAL TRAILWAYS BUS SYSTEM
Dept. D-6, 185 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

Please send me free folder of tours as checked:
Gulf Coast ☐ California ☐ Great Smokies ☐
National Parks ☐ Southwest ☐ Mexico ☐
Ozarks ☐ Colorado Rockies ☐ Historic East ☐
Northwest ☐ Virginia ☐ Carolinas ☐ Florida ☐

Name.....

Address.....

City & Zone.....State.....

louella parsons' good news

taxicabs—so maybe there's something to it.

* * *

Close Up Of Dana Andrews Off-Screen: He can SEW very well. Mrs. Andrews can't thread a needle—but Dana's a whizz. Not fine embroidery, mind you. But he's right there when buttons come off. One night, just before they left for a preview, the garter came off Mrs. A's girdle. Dana did the honors of stitching it back on again!

He's a camera fiend and is continually taking "candid" shots when he isn't gardening or busy in his workshop. The Andrews home in Toluca Lake is Normandy style architecture, painted a slate gray with a white trim and white fence. All the rooms are carpeted in solid, strong colors from wall to wall and the furniture is equally colorful. Neither Dana nor Mary likes pastels, damask, or antiques.

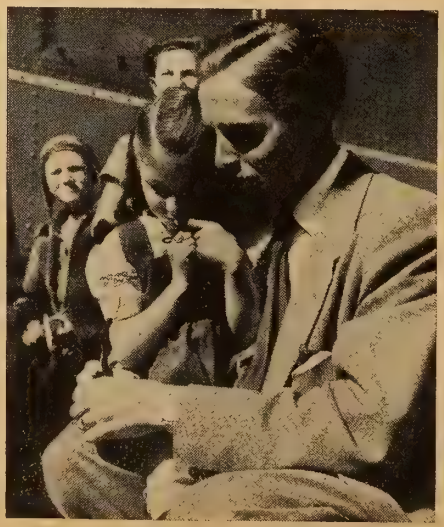
At present, the Andrews living room is crowded by a real piano, a dummy piano, a new super-duper recording and playback machine, and stacks of sheet music. Reason is, Dana's taking music lessons for his role as the blind pianist in Memory of Love—a movie being produced by my famous relative, Miss Harriet Parsons. She will be very pleased to learn that her hero practices three hours daily. The two kids, Cathy and David, are very impressed with pappy's piano playing, which is loud—if not so good.

He goes shopping with his wife because he likes to pick out women's clothes and has wonderful taste. That's okay with Mary because he always picks out more expensive things than she would select for herself.

Dana loves to read, but is particular. So Mary reads a book first and if she thinks he would like it, it goes on his nightstand. He loves to read aloud and frequently reads to his wife who promptly falls asleep. This hasn't stopped him—so far. He's still at it.

* * *

Walter Wanger took over the entire Chanteclair Cafe on the Sunset Strip to celebrate Joan Bennett's birthday, which turned out to also be the natal day of three other guests—David Niven, Reginald Gardiner and Franchot Tone.



Richard Ney delighted the younger set at the Ramrod opening. Dick left for N. Y. afterwards, where he told friends, "I miss that redhead."

Veronica Lake and husband Andre de Toth arrive at Alta, Utah, for the State Centennial Celebration and Ramrod premiere.

I've noticed that hostesses always seem to have twice as much fun when a party is held in a cafe rather than in a home because there are none of the usual worries about everything going off all right, natch.

There were movie stars all over the place, including Joan, who looked like a dream in a lovely white gown. But it was an out-of-town visitor who stole a lot of the thunder.

Brenda Frazier, who was the glamor debutante of all time, and her husband, Shipwreck Kelly, were among those present, and even the Hollywood glamor girls found Brenda very interesting to look at. Her gown definitely had the New York air and it's easy to see how she was the socialite darling for so many years.

Franchot Tone's pretty, blonde wife, Jean Wallace, sat by me and poured out her troubles. No, not with Franchot. But just that day she had been suspended by her studio. Her husband told her not to worry—he didn't think she would starve.

Rosalind Russell is certainly getting to be the fashion plate of our town. She never seems to wear the same evening gown twice—at least I haven't caught her and I see her often. On this occasion she was wearing a filmy rose-colored dress which was very becoming with her dark hair.

Gregory Peck sat at Joan's table. I was there, too, and so was William Powell. Bill was busy passing around a telegram Mousie, his wife, had sent him. It arrived just as he stepped through the door and read, "LET'S GO HOME NOW. LOVE."

"You see," Bill explained, "that girl loves parties better than anything in the world. Just as we started to leave the house tonight I said, 'For heaven's sake, let's go home at a decent hour tonight and not be the last to

(Continued on page 64)

TWO DAMES ARE OUT TO STOP HIM...
ONE WITH HER LIPS...
THE OTHER WITH A GUN!

Bill Bendix battling beside Ladd even more thrillingly than in "Blue Dahlia" and "Two Years Before The Mast"!

This is Ladd's toughest fight . . . up against the hidden riptides of deadly Eastern intrigue . . . and the two women who stand in the way of his revenge against the Orient's underworld!

Paramount presents

ALAN LADD
GAIL RUSSELL · WILLIAM BENDIX

in

"CALCUTTA"

with

JUNE DUPREZ

LOWELL GILMORE · EDITH KING · Directed by JOHN FARROW

papa flynn

Fatherhood's easy after the first time, they say. But don't tell that to Errol, who's just had (with Nora's help!) Miss Rory Flynn.

Errol (whose next is Escape Me Never) relaxes in his study, after passing out the cigars and candy.

by valerie sloan
Special Reporter for Modern Screen

■ Nurses just off night duty at St. Joseph's Hospital in Burbank, California, were crowding into the hospital coffee shop right after dawn on March 13th, when a tall, handsome and very slender man appeared as if from nowhere, sat himself down at the counter and asked for black coffee, please, and hurry it up a bit, if you don't mind.

Instantly, the chatter and clatter among the young nurses was silenced. Expectant papas were no new sight to them, but this one was different. He was hatless, and his wavy brown hair could have done with a bit of combing. His motions were nervous and quick, his manner courtly, his voice edged with a smile.

"That's Errol Flynn!" The whisper ran through the coffee shop like a charge of electricity. What had brought him there at that early hour was no secret, for hospital gossip travels fast. Every girl in the restaurant knew that upstairs in the delivery room, Mrs. Nora Eddington Flynn was in labor. They knew, too, that the pains had started many hours ago, just after noon the previous day. And when they saw the drawn look on Errol's handsome face, they sympathized.

He hadn't finished his second cup of steaming coffee before (Continued on page 97)

AT 12 O'CLOCK . . . A LADY WITH A FUTURE!
AT 12:05 . . . A WOMAN WITH A PAST!
5 MINUTES after the curtain went up sophisticated New Yorkers realized they were witnessing the frankest, most fearlessly outspoken stage play they had ever seen. Now it comes to the screen with all its electrifying impact!
HUNT STROMBERG presents
HEDY LAMARR
Dishonored Lady
co-starring
DENNIS O'KEEFE · JOHN LODER
with
WILLIAM LUNDIGAN · MORRIS CARNOVSKY
PAUL CAVANAGH · NATALIE SCHAFER
Produced by JACK CHERTOK
Directed by ROBERT STEVENSON · Screenplay by EDMUND H. NORTH
A HUNT STROMBERG Production
Released thru UNITED ARTISTS

dorothy kilgallen selects "stairway to heaven"

Is he dreaming, or is he really dead, wonders David Niven. He remembers jumping from his plane without a chute during the war, but who is this person in 18th century finery (Marius Goring), and what's this mysterious Stairway to Heaven he's sitting on?

■ Once in a while you come across a book you can't put down. The clock moves, the sky grows white in the window, the room turns cold—but you hold the book in your hands and you read it through to the end.

Once in a greater while you come across a picture you can't forget. You see it, you sit there in the dark and it lifts you and something in it crosses to you with a leap of recognition, and when you leave the theater it stays with you and you go back over its scenes the way you riffle through the pages of a book for a favorite poem.

Stairway To Heaven is that kind of picture. I loved it on sight. I loved the way it opened, in wonderful Technicolor space, and I loved the gentle note on which it ended. The people in it became friends, alive and warm and full of meaning, and when they faded off the screen I was sorry to see them go. I became a "shill" for the film, went around saying to people, "Have you seen Stairway To Heaven? You simply must!"

(Continued on page 66)

A Picture so gay
It tops 'Going My Way'
Welcome Bing! Welcome Barry!
in "Welcome Stranger"

starring
BING
CROSBY
JOAN CAULFIELD
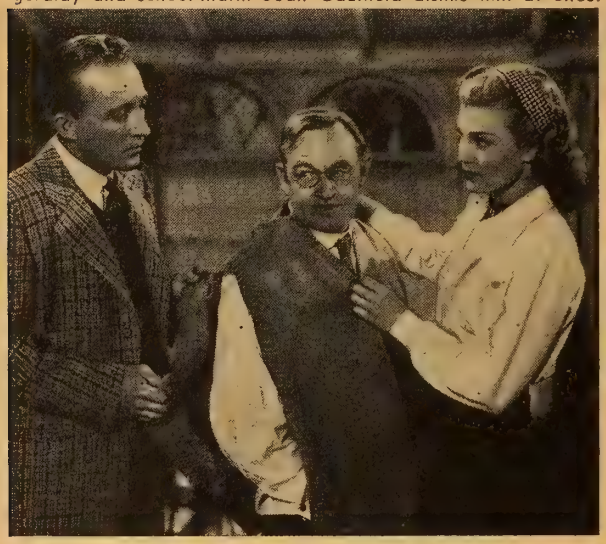
BARRY
FITZGERALD
with WANDA HENDRIX • FRANK FAYLEN
ELIZABETH PATTERSON • ROBERT SHAYNE
LARRY YOUNG • PERCY KILBRIDE
Directed by ELLIOTT NUGENT

Bing Sings!
LOVE SONGS TO HIS "BLUE SKIES" SWEETHEART!
"My Heart Is A Hobo"
"As Long As I'm Dreaming"
"Country Style"
"Smile Right Back At The Sun"

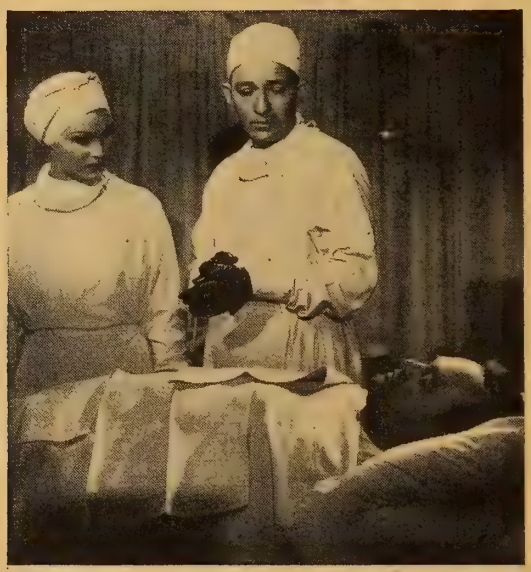
They're back and they're better in the grand reunion the whole world has been waiting for ...a story that's funnier and more heart-warming than their immortal triumph, "Going My Way"!

Screen Play by Arthur Sheekman • Adaptation by Arthur Sheekman and N. Richard Nash • Story by Frank Butler
A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

Flashy clothes and glib talk make substitute-doctor Bing Crosby unpopular with the staid New Englanders. Old Doc. (B. Fitzgerald) and school-marm Joan Caulfield dislike him at once.



Still distrustful of his substitute, but unable to break their contract, Fitzgerald leaves on his first vacation in 30 years. On the way to the station, he is stricken with appendicitis, brought back home.



Reluctantly, the ailing doc agrees to let Crosby operate. But he insists on a local anesthetic, directs his own appendectomy. Joan assists Bing.

MOVIE REVIEWS

by Virginia Wilson

"Welcome Stranger"

■ All the heart-warming sentiment and humor of Going My Way are repeated in this new Bing Crosby—Barry Fitzgerald picture. Joan Caulfield plays the most decorative school-teacher ever seen by mortal man, and Bing sings "My Heart's a Hobo," which is heading straight for the Hit Parade.

When young Doctor Pearson (Bing Crosby) arrives in Fallsbridge, Maine, the phrase he does not hear is "Welcome, stranger!" Maine folks don't care much for strangers, especially ones that are always singing crazy songs and wearing clothes that look like horse blankets. But Pearson's glad to get there, anyway. That crotchety old fellow on the train was beginning to get on his nerves. Kept muttering about "bad mannered young blatherskites" all the while, just because Pearson got the last order of trout and the old boy had to eat oatmeal.

It's quite a surprise to Pearson to find that the "old boy" is the doctor he's come to replace for two months. It's worse for Doctor McRory (Barry Fitzgerald) who had planned on his first vacation in thirty years. Now he flatly refuses to leave the health of Fallsbridge in the hands of an incompetent young idiot who would probably sing while he was amputating your leg.

Pearson is inclined to argue the point, especially after he has seen Trudy Mason (Joan Caulfield). But Trudy's engaged to Roy Chesley (Robert Shayne), and Dr. McRory is too stubborn to admit he's beginning to like Pearson, who shares his interest in fishing. If McRory hadn't suddenly developed acute appendicitis, Pearson would have left. As it is, there is nothing to do but operate.

That's a funny (Continued on page 18)

YOU'LL LOSE YOUR HEART TO THIS WONDERFUL GUY... SHE DID!

The exciting romance of a beautiful gal who loved a special kind of guy. He put her in a million dollar mansion and laid the world at her feet...for love...for laughs...for thrills!

It's one of your most memorable screen experiences!

FRANK BORZAGE'S fast-moving drama of love and excitement

THAT'S MY MAN

Starring

Don AMECHE

with ROSCOE KARNS
JOHN RIDGELY
KITTY IRISH
JOE FRISCO
and JOE HERNANDEZ
Nationally Famous Racing Announcer

Would you take a handsome man in out of the rain on a rainy, rainy night?

Catherine
McLEOD

THE GIRL you loved at first sight in "I'VE ALWAYS LOVED YOU"!

Produced and Directed by FRANK BORZAGE
Associate Producer... Lew Borzage
Written by Steve Fisher and Bradley King

A REPUBLIC PICTURE

"I held the gun..."
"...but fate pulled the trigger!"
Eagle-Lion Films presents
LOUIS HAYWARD
JOAN LESLIE
RICHARD BASEHART
in
"REPEAT PERFORMANCE"
with VIRGINIA FIELD • TOM CONWAY • BENAY VENUTA
NATALIE SCHAFER • Screenplay by WALTER BULLOCK
Based on a novel by William O'Farrell
Produced by Aubrey Schenck • Directed by Alfred Werker
Bryan Foy in charge of Production

(Continued from page 16)

scene. The old doctor insists on a local anaesthetic and a large mirror so he can direct the operation. The patient survives, of course, to admit that Pearson is a good surgeon after all. There are other plot complications, involving Trudy, Roy and a hospital Dr. McRory has been looking forward to for years. The situation is taken care of; believe it or not, by three cigars.—Par.

CARNEGIE HALL

Here is Carnegie Hall—fifty years of it—seen through the eyes of Nora (Marsha Hunt), who comes there first as a child just over from Ireland. When she's five years old, she hears Tschaikowsky and meets Walter Damrosch. When she's twenty, and a charwoman at the hall, she falls in love with Tony Salerno (Hans Yaray), brilliant pianist with the Symphony.

Tony doesn't mind Nora being a charwoman. She adores him and she adores music, which is enough. He marries her, although Donovan (Frank McHugh), the superintendent of the Hall, shakes his head a bit. Donovan's fears are for Nora—he knows Tony is irresponsible and an alcoholic.

For a couple of years Nora is very happy. Then Tony begins drinking again, gives up his job in a fit of temperament, and is killed by a fall downstairs. By then there is the baby Tony to think of. Nora determines that he shall be a great musician like his father, but without his father's temperament.

Tony's growing years are lived almost entirely in Carnegie Hall, listening to Heifetz, Pons, Rubinstein and the rest of the great musical artists. His time outside school is spent practicing the piano, for which he has definite talent. But as he gets to be a young man (William Prince), he rebels against his mother's domination. Sure, he loves music, but it doesn't have to be classical. And when he falls in love with a girl, Ruth (Martha O'Driscoll), she's a singer with Vaughn Monroe's band.

This leads to an open break with his mother, and Tony goes out on his own. But Nora prays that some day he'll come back to the Hall, and unexpectedly her prayer is answered.

Some of the best music and musicians of our day are to be heard in Carnegie Hall. Almost everyone from Heifetz to Harry James! —U.A.

THE GHOST AND MRS. MUIR

Most women wouldn't care to live with a ghost, but Lucy Muir (Gene Tierney) is not an ordinary woman. And certainly Captain Daniel Gregg (Rex Harrison) is no ordinary ghost. Since they both like the same house, and are stubborn types, there they stay.

Maybe I should explain how it happens. Lucy is a young widow who is living with her dead husband's family in London. It's an annoying household. Her mother-in-law, Angelica (Isobel Elsom) weeps easily and often. Her sister-in-law, Eva (Victoria Horne), tries to tell her how to bring up her little girl. So Lucy finally leaves them, and rents a tiny cottage by the sea. It's a charming place and very cheap.

The reason it's cheap soon becomes evident —lights go out, windows fly open, a man's deep laughter is heard. But Lucy refuses to be driven out. "If you weren't such a coward," she tells the ghost severely, "you'd come out of hiding." Captain Gregg, a short-tempered man, I mean ghost, is furious at being called a coward, and promptly materializes. Handsome! He explains to Lucy that he doesn't want strangers messing around the place. When he sees she really loves the house, he agrees to let her stay.

Lucy's in-laws show up to tell her that her income from her husband's money has stopped so she'll have to come back to them. Daniel frightens them out of the house—and half out

The Ghost and Mrs. Muir: Widow Gene Tierney rents a haunted house—cheap—to escape life with her in-laws. She finds the house delightfully haunted by a sardonic ghost—Rex Harrison

"BE LOVELIER TONIGHT!"

A product of Lever Brothers Company

"My Beauty Facials bring quick new Loveliness"— says famous star

Here's the Active-lather facial Esther Williams uses: Smooth Lux Toilet Soap's rich fragrant lather well into your skin. Rinse with warm water, splash with cold. Then, with a soft towel, pat to dry.

A simple, easy care, but beautiful screen stars tell you it works—leaves skin softer, smoother, more appealing. So don't let neglect rob you of Romance. Be lovelier tonight!

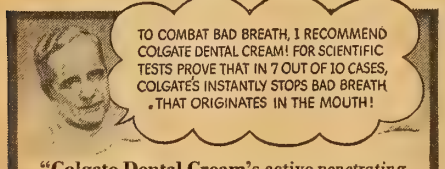
In recent tests of Lux Toilet Soap facials by skin specialists, actually 3 out of 4 complexions improved in a short time.

YOU want the loveliness that makes men whisper "I adore you." Let this beauty care help you to have it!

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use Lux Toilet Soap — Lux Girls are Lovelier!

When a man marries, his troubles begin!

JIM'S CHANGED! WE'VE ONLY BEEN MARRIED 3 MONTHS—BUT HE JUST DOESN'T PAY TOO TERRIBLY MUCH ATTENTION TO ME ANY MORE!
WELL, JIM CAN'T VERY WELL TELL YOU ABOUT BAD BREATH, JUDY! I'M SORRY, HONEY, BUT YOU DO NEED TO SEE YOUR DENTIST!



TO COMBAT BAD BREATH, I RECOMMEND COLGATE DENTAL CREAM! FOR SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE THAT IN 7 OUT OF 10 CASES, COLGATE'S INSTANTLY STOPS BAD BREATH THAT ORIGINATES IN THE MOUTH!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently, safely!"

LATER!
NOTHING LIKE COLGATE DENTAL CREAM TO KEEP A ROMANCE ON THE BEAM!
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!
COLGATE
RIBBON DENTAL CREAM
Use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM twice a day and before every date!

of their wits. Then he tells Lucy that they'll write a book together, the story of his life. That will make her plenty of money.

They do, and it does, but in the process Lucy meets Miles Fairley (George Sanders) who isn't a ghost but a very alive young man. What comes of that I will let you investigate yourself.—20th-Fox.

BLAZE OF NOON

Bill Holden and Sterling Hayden come back to the screen in a story of four brothers who are fliers in the early days of the Air Mail service. Anyone who flew a plane then had to have steel nerves, no imagination, and it helped to be a little bit crazy. The MacDonald brothers are like that.

Roland (Sonny Tufts), the oldest, has taught Colin (William Holden) and Tad (Sterling Hayden) and Keith (Johnny Sands) to fly. They're doing stunt flying for a circus when they get the Air Mail offer.

They get to Newark where they're to live, and something immediately happens which might split them up. Colin falls in love. Oh, he's had plenty of girls before, like Poppy (Jean Wallace), a dancer at the circus. But this is different. The girl is Lucille (Anne Baxter) and she's a nurse.

So the wedding is two weeks later—financed by a fellow pilot, Porky (William Bendix). But it doesn't break up the MacDonalds, for Lucille has agreed that they should all live together. She soon begins to think this wasn't such a good idea. In fact, after a month of it she storms out of the house, announcing that it was like living in a men's club. Colin goes after her and brings her back, but bad luck pursues them. Keith is killed in a plane crash, then Tad has an almost fatal accident. Roland leaves flying to sell cars. Only Colin continues stubbornly to fly the mails, while Lucille waits and worries at home.—Par.

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN

You have a neat selection of singing styles to pick from in It Happened in Brooklyn. If you don't go for Frankie Boy, you can have opera by Katherine Grayson, a comedy song by Jimmy Durante, or a jive number by Peter Lawford, which is, surprisingly, the high spot in the show.

The story starts in England, where little Danny (Frank Sinatra), a soldier from Brooklyn, is waiting to be sent back to the States. According to Danny, there's no place in the world or out of it like Brooklyn. He passes these sentiments on to a nice old gentleman who is worried about his son, Jamie (Peter Lawford). Jamie is strictly a square. He plays Mozart and backs into a corner if he so much as sees a girl. "Send him to Brooklyn and he'll get over that stuff," Danny says, forgetting his own shyness. "Why, in Brooklyn everybody has a girl!" When he finds out that the old gentleman is the Duke of Dunstable, he is slightly embarrassed but sticks by his slogan: "Everything is perfect in Brooklyn."

When Danny gets back there, he finds out that's not quite true. There is, for instance, the little matter of finding a place to live, since he hasn't any family. But he meets an old friend, the janitor of the high school where

It Happened In Brooklyn: War vet Frank Sinatra enjoys a spaghetti dinner whipped up by New Utrecht High custodian Jimmy Durante.

Danny went. Nick (Jimmy Durante) invites him to share his basement quarters.

Danny also meets the music teacher, who is not as friendly as Nick, but a lot prettier. Her name is Anne (Katherine Grayson) and she hates Brooklyn. Nick doesn't think much of it, either, and even Danny soon begins to lose his enthusiasm. Then Jamie comes over from England and expects them to show him what a wonderful place Brooklyn is. In showing Jamie, they show themselves.—M-G-M.

THE TWO MRS. CARROLLS

Humphrey Bogart turns from tough detectives to a smooth murderer for his role in The Two Mrs. Carrolls. As Geoffrey Carroll, he plays an artist who always wants to marry the women with whom he falls in love. Unfortunately, this involves murdering whatever wife he has at the moment.

When he first meets Sally (Barbara Stanwyck) on a fishing trip, he has a wife, as well as a little girl, in London. Sally finds this out and refuses to see him again, so Geoffrey decides to get rid of Mrs. Carroll. He buys poison from a ratty little chemist, Blagden (Barry Bernard) and feeds it to his wife nightly in a glass of milk. He also begins a painting of her as "The Angel Of Death."

Before long the first Mrs. Carroll has been neatly disposed of. A year later Sally is the second Mrs. Carroll, and she and Geoffrey and his little girl, Beatrice (Ann Carter), are living happily in a house in Kent. Geoffrey's picture, "The Angel Of Death," has made him famous. Everything is fine.

Gradually, however, Geoffrey begins to get restless. Sally no longer inspires him. At this psychological moment, the statuesque beauty, Cecily Latham (Alexis Smith) appears and asks him to paint her portrait. Geoffrey at first refuses rudely, but that only intrigues the predatory Miss Latham. Soon he is seeing her constantly and their affair has become neighborhood gossip. And soon, too, Sally is ill, with Geoff, the solicitous husband, preparing her nightly glass of milk. . .

There are some spine-chilling moments in the picture, but there could have been more. —War.

IT HAPPENED ON FIFTH AVENUE

Of course it couldn't have happened on Fifth Avenue, or anywhere else, but it's nice to believe it could. Nice to believe that there are people like McKeever (Victor Moore), the hobo in the silk hat, and the ex-GI, Jim Bullock (Don De Fore), and Trudy (Gale Storm), the millionaire's daughter who doesn't care about the millions.

McKeever, of course, has no right to be on Fifth Avenue at all, let alone living in the luxurious mansion of Michael O'Connor (Charlie Ruggles). But O'Connor is away for the winter, and McKeever found a loose board. So here he is. Being a generous man, he invites Jim, who has been dispossessed, to move in with him. He doesn't bother explaining that he doesn't belong there.

When they find a pretty girl taking a mink coat out of a closet one night, Jim is all for turning her over to the police. McKeever has to tell him that they aren't in a position to talk to policemen, and they end by offering to let the girl live there, too. She accepts demurely, not telling them that she's Trudy O'Connor, Michael's daughter. She has run away from school and her father already has detectives looking for her.

It's her father himself who finds her. By then she is in love with Jim, but he's prejudiced against millionaires. So will her father please pretend to be a starving old tramp and come and live with them and see what a nice guy Jim is? O'Connor reluctantly agrees, and they outfit him at a second hand store.

It's a funny situation and Victor Moore is as amusing as ever. Ann Harding appears as O'Connor's wife.—Mono.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS

Whether you're a Dickens devotee or consider him an outmoded relic, you'll be enchanted by Great Expectations. No story as dramatic as this could ever be dated, and the cast, headed by John Mills and Valerie Hobson, is perfect. You remember how it begins . . . a seven-year-old boy, Pip (Anthony Wager), encounters an escaped convict on the moors. Although he's terrified to the soles of his worn-out boots, Pip brings food to the ugly, threatening giant, and tries to help him escape. The man is caught and Pip gets a hiding for his pains.

A year or so later, Pip is asked to come once a week to the home of an elderly gentlewoman in the neighborhood, Miss Haversham (Martita Hunt). He is to play games with her little niece, Estelle. Estelle (Jean Simmons) calls him a nasty, common little boy and refuses to have anything to do with him, but Pip adores her.

When Pip (now John Mills) is sixteen, he is apprenticed to his brother-in-law, Joe (Bernard Miles), a blacksmith. Later, a lawyer, Jeffers, (Francis L. Sullivan) comes to see him and tells him he has "great expectations." He is, in fact, the heir to a fortune and must be brought up in London like a gentleman. So Pip goes off to London where he shares bachelor quarters with Herbert (Alex Guiness), and soon becomes a thorough young snob. He meets Estelle (Valerie Hobson) again, and this time she warns him not to fall in love with her.

Pip is sure that Miss Haversham is his own

`Mess' call, 1947

Take a robust boy, aged eight or thereabouts, add one inquisitive pooch, stir in a soft Spring day—and what have you got? A job for Fels-Naptha, of course!

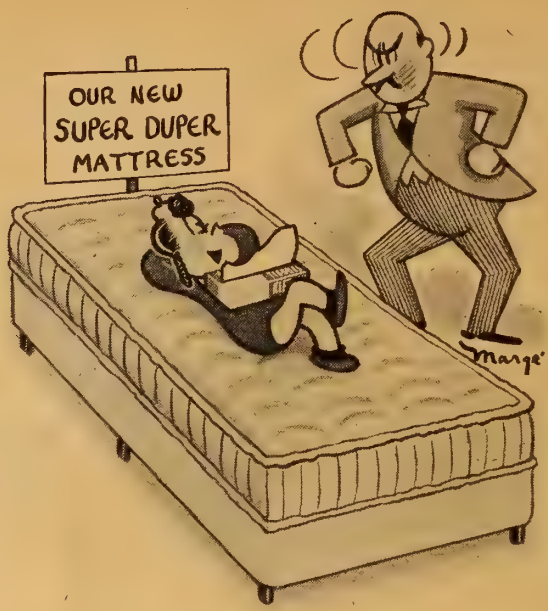
It's a fact—and most mothers know it—there's nothing like Fels-Naptha Soap for washing grimy garments. Clothes that look hopelessly soiled come out of Fels-Naptha suds clean and fresh. And you needn't rub them ragged to do it.

It's the combination of active Fels naptha and good mild soap that dislodges dirt—deep down in the fabric—and gently washes it away. Whether you're doing heavy work clothes or perishable dresses, you can wash them cleaner and quicker with Fels-Naptha Soap.

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

LITTLE LULU



"Kleenex is softer!"

Little Lulu says...Compare tissues—compare boxes—and you'll see why 7 out of 10 tissue users like Kleenex* best! Soft! Strong! Pops Up! It's America's favorite tissue.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

secret benefactor, and that she wishes him to marry Estelle. He has a rude shock when a hideous old man with a black patch over one eye comes to see him, for this is the convict he once befriended, and it is his money that Pip has been living on. The old man has risked capture again—this time just to see the boy who once helped him. Pip's natural kindness conquers his snobbery.—Univ.

NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans is to be recommended solely for its music, which is jazz at its best. Just listen to it, though—don't look, because the plot is weak and the acting doesn't help. But when Louis Armstrong, Billie Holliday and Woody Herman are beating out the blues everything is fine. The story involves Miralee Smith (Dorothy Patrick), who arrives in New Orleans in 1909 after a long period of study to make her debut as a concert singer. Her mother (Irene Rich) has everything planned, but her plans don't include a gambler named Nick Duquesne (Arturo de Cordova).

Basin Street is the section of New Orleans where the music we now know as "jazz" originated. Miralee gets her mother's maid, Endie (Billie Holliday), to take her there one evening. Nick, who owns the club she goes to, won't let her stay. He knows that young ladies just don't belong in that part of town. However, Miralee is completely fascinated by the music she has heard there, and also by Nick. A few nights later she persuades her voice coach, who has a weakness for jazz himself, to take her back. This time Nick drives her around the worst section of Basin Street to disillusion her. Miralee is shocked, but stubborn. She goes right on pursuing Nick.

Mama Smith decides something drastic must be done. She persuades the authorities to close up Basin Street as a "vice area." Nick has to leave town. He's in love with Miralee, but he feels it would be unfair to take her with him, as she wants to do. Instead he lets her think her mother has "bought him off." He goes to Chicago to start a night club. Eventually there is a sentimental reunion of Symphony Hall to the red-hot strains of "New Orleans."—U.A.

HOMESTRETCH

There's nothing that looks prettier in Technicolor than a good horse race—unless it's Maureen O'Hara. You have both in Homestretch. Not to mention Cornel Wilde, Glenn Homestretch: A horse named Abby R. brings Maureen O'Hara and Cornel Wilde together (in Technicolor)—and nearly breaks them up.

Langan, Jimmy Gleason and Helen Walker.

The horse racing starts at Santa Anita, where a filly called Abbey R runs a beautiful race. Both Jock Wallace (Cornel Wilde) and Kitty Brant (Helen Walker) decide immediately to try and buy her. They're old friends and rivals. Jock manages to head off the wire Kitty sends to the horse's owner in Boston, and flies there himself.

He is surprised to find himself dealing with a lovely girl named Leslie Hale (Maureen O'Hara). So surprised, in fact, that when she offers him Abby R for a thousand dollars, he tells her the filly is worth thirty thousand—and pays it. But Leslie sails off to England to marry her fiance, Bill (Glenn Langan).

Then Jock makes a quick decision. He will take the filly to England, enter her in the Gold Cup and maybe talk Leslie out of getting married to anyone but him. Abby R doesn't win the Gold Cup, but Jock wins Leslie and carries her and the horse triumphantly off to South America for the Gran Premo Nationál.

Abby R wins the race this time, but Jock refuses to listen to Leslie's plea that they go home to the old breeding farm he owns in Maryland. So she goes back to Boston alone, unhappy and disillusioned. But all ends well. —20th-Fox.

CALCUTTA

They've transplanted Alan Ladd and Bill Bendix to India and I think the change of climate has done the boys good. They're at top form, dodging Indian knives and catching up with a murderer.

Neale (Alan Ladd) and Pedro (Bill Bendix) and Bill (John Whitney) are all Air Transport pilots. They've been friends for years, with Neale and Pedro pulling Bill out of jams his hot temper gets him into. Now he's in what they regard as the worst jam of all. He's engaged! They haven't met the girl, and only agree reluctantly to do so.

But when their DC-3 lands at the Calcutta airport, Bill isn't there to meet them. Bill is dead—strangled by person or persons unknown. Neale and Pedro don't say much, but they go to work on the murder right away. A singer, Marina (June Duprez) who's in love with Neale, tells them Bill's girl, Virginia (Gail Russell) is still around. Neale goes to see her, and he can understand then the way Bill felt about her. Not that Neale would feel that way—she's the sweet, home-loving type he has always carefully avoided. Furthermore, Calcutta: Air Transport Pilot Alan Ladd follows intrigue, mystery and murder into Calcutta! Gail Russell is involved in the picture, too!

Girls at Arthur Murray's dance studios keep dainty this way

They rely on this deodorant above all others for safe-and-sure protection

GIFTED . . . GLAMOROUS . . . these famous Arthur Murray teachers must have more than dancing ability, social poise . . . they must be sure of personal daintiness that lasts!

TO BE SURE – they rely on Etiquet – the deodorant you can depend upon to guard daintiness through hours of active exercise . . . that gives you safe-and-sure protection . . . stops underarm odor . . . checks perspiration. And – besides working so effectively, so efficiently, Etiquet is delightful to use! Fluffy-light – easy to apply – soothing to the skin.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ETIQUET stays moist in jar – will not harm delicate fabrics. Adopt the Murray girls' formula for "dancing daintiness" – care for your charm at all times with Etiquet! At all cosmetic counters – in 10¢, 25¢, 39¢, and 59¢ sizes.

Etiquet

The safe-and-sure deodorant

PRODUCT OF LEHN AND FINK PRODUCTS CORPORATION

she's wearing a locket that must have cost ten thousand dollars, and has the nerve to tell him Bill gave it to her.

But when Neale checks, he finds that Bill actually did give it to her. And that Bill deposited a check in the bank the day before he died that was for more than ten thousand. Something strange is going on around here and Bill was part of it. Their further investigations bring in a ruby-decked Hindu, a knife thrower—and the murderer.—Par.

ODD MAN OUT

Odd Man Out has much of the artistry and realism which made The Informer such a great picture. It also has James Mason, playing no sadist this time, but a man of infinite courage and infinite weariness. It is the story of eight hours in this man's life. At four in the afternoon he is the brilliant leader of an illegal organization in Belfast. As midnight—but let's start at four o'clock.

The man's name is Johnny (James Mason). You never hear his last name and it doesn't matter. He has been in jail because of his political activities. Now he and four others are going to hold up a linen mill, to get money for the organization. Johnny warns them that there must be no violence. Yet it is he, ironically, who is compelled to shoot a man during the hold-up, and is himself wounded. His companions get him half into the car and drive away, but he falls off. There is no time to go back for him—the police are coming. Johnny will take care of himself, they tell each other, with more confidence than they feel.

Johnny crawls away into an old air-raid shelter, and lies there, half-conscious, feeling the pain but not understanding it. When he at last manages to go on, his steps are uncertain, his head muddled. Yet somehow he staggers through the dark, rain-swept streets. If he can get to Kathleen (Kathleen Ryan) he will be safe. Kathleen loves him. She will help him.

Several people help Johnny, some willingly, others grudgingly. He is too well known. There's a price on his head. Better keep out of it, they tell themselves. Yet Johnny keeps going, long after he has forgotten how, or why.

Every part in the picture is beautifully handled. F. J. McCormick as a wily ne'er-do-well is magnificent, but it is Mason who dominates everything.—Univ.

Odd Man Out: As the leader of an illegal Irish band, James Mason, wounded and haggard, is sought by the police. F. J. McCormick, eager for a reward, tries to turn the desperate patriot in.

RAMROD

To a cattleman, a "ramrod" is a ranch foreman. He has to be good at his job or the hands leave and the ranch falls apart. Dave Nash (Joel McCrea) is good at his job when he's sober, but he's too often drunk.

Connie Dickason (Veronica Lake) hires him in spite of this. Connie isn't in a position to quibble. She has just defied Frank Ivey (Preston Foster) who "runs" all the country around there, and most people are afraid to work for her on that account. Dave isn't afraid, and he hates Ivey. He gets a few friends of his who feel the same way, and they start things rolling on Connie's ranch.

Connie isn't a nice person, but Dave doesn't know that. He admires her beauty and mistakes her greed for natural ambition. She has courage, all right, or she would never have defied Ivey. They are just getting the ranch in order when Ivey's men burn the house down, and beat up one of the hands so severely that he dies of it.

Dave's best friend, Bill (Don DeFore), who is violent and unthinking, wants to start shooting in revenge, but Dave feels they should stick to the law. He has great respect for the county's old sheriff (Donald Crisp). Dave doesn't realize that Connie actually wants the shooting to start, so that she may gain her own ends faster. That she cares nothing for law or decency, or for anything but her own lust for power.

So—the shooting does start, eventually, and once it does, no one can stop it. Not Dave, or Rose (Arleen Whelan) who loves him, or Bill, or Connie herself. One life after another is sacrificed to her ambition until she realizes at last how lonely success can be.—U.A.

High Barbaree: As children, Van Johnson and June Allyson promised they'd meet again on an uncharted island named High Barbaree . . .

HIGH BARBAREE

If you could select your favorite cast, wouldn't it include Van Johnson, June Allyson and young Claude Jarman, who won your heart in The Yearling? Well, they're all here, in a picture that opens with a Navy plane shot down in the pacific. The pilot is Alec Brooke (Van Johnson) and the navigator is Lt. Moore (Cameron Mitchell). Their plane stays afloat, but their chances of survival are slim, and they know it. To keep from thinking about it, they talk.

"How come you named the plane the 'High Barbaree'?" Moore asks idly.

"Oh, that goes back to when I was a kid. Twelve years old, waiting for my Uncle Thad to bring me the canoe he'd promised me for my birthday. . ."

When Brooke was twelve years old (Claude Jarman plays him at that age), his idol was Uncle Thad (Thomas Mitchell), a merchant seaman. Nobody but Brooke believed that Thad would remember a promise he had made two years before, when he set out on a round-the-world voyage. But Brooke believed it as passionately as he believed in an island called High Barbaree which Uncle Thad had told him about. Maybe it wasn't on the maps, but it was there in the Pacific somewhere. Nancy, the kid next door, believed it, too. She took Brooke's word for everything.

Uncle Thad does bring the canoe, which leads to trouble later when, under the influence of a too potent bottle of Scotch, he takes the kids on a trip down the river. Thad lands in jail, and Brooke gets a job as dare-devil bicycle rider in a circus to bail him out. Until papa and mama arrive, with fire in their eyes.

"What became of Nancy?" Moore asks.

"She moved away. When I grew up I thought I was in love with a girl named Diana (Marilyn Maxwell). But when Nancy (June Allyson) came back, I knew she was the one. And I'll tell you something. I still believe that she and I will meet, as we promised long ago on the island of High Barbaree. . ."—M-G-M.

MRS. CRESS W. J. COURTNEY
the former Jacqueline Copeland of Newport News, Va.
Bridal portrait painted by Moore

A lovely skin wins the hearts of all beholders! Yes, and you can see an improvement in your own skin with your first cake of Camay, if you'll give up careless cleansing and go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Twice each day, spread Camay's gentle lather over your face. Rinse warm, with a cold dash for oily skin. Remember—the Camay Mild-Soap Diet calls for Camay, and only Camay, morning and night. It can give you a softer, smoother skin.

Just One Cake of Camay brings you Softer, Smoother Skin!

ABOUT THE COURTNEYS:

Cress Courtney, New York businessman, and his bride honeymooned in New Orleans. The South has seen its share of lovely ladies, but few lovelier than Jacqueline, who cares for her complexion with the Camay Mild-Soap Diet.

Today the Courtneys have a New York apartment. The decorating is modern—planned by themselves. Modern, too, in her skin care, Jacqueline follows the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Camay is so mild—it cleanses without irritation.

"I'm charmed with the new Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake with make-up sponge right in the case!"

—says beautiful Hillary Brooke

CO-STARRING IN "VENDETTA"
A CALIFORNIA PICTURES PRODUCTION
Released by United Artists

Here it is! New as tomorrow and already the rave of Hollywood! The first big improvement in cake make-up! Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake has its own dainty make-up sponge in a moisture-proof compartment. As vivacious Hillary Brooke says—"It's a thrilling convenience. When I open my Beau Cake the sponge is ready." Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake gives your skin a smooth-as-silk finish; hides tiny blemishes, imparts ravishing young color. All this beauty with the convenience of the ever-ready make-up sponge in Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake.

"BEAU CAKE keeps my handbag dainty; no more loose cotton in my purse."

"I find it easier than ever to apply lovely, smooth cake make-up with BEAU CAKE."

Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake $1.50 PLUS TAX

Gay new cake make-up with sponge compartment right in the case

When they left for Mexico last December, Rita looked forward to a second honeymoon, but spent most of it working.

He's fiery, unpredictable, cursed with the mark of genius —yet Rita Hayworth loved and lived with Orson Welles for 3 years . . . before she admitted defeat.

by hedda hopper

■ Rita Hayworth was at the Racquet Club in Palm Springs, and I was in my Hollywood home, but what she said over the telephone was crystal clear.

She said, "Orson and I are through, Hedda. This time it's for keeps. I just can't take it any longer!"

Rita sounded tired; her voice was flat. Not angry, not excited, not tearful, not sad. Just tired—a fugitive from genius, fed up and through. I thought, "So it's over—the second honeymoon of the Man from Mars and the pretty dancing girl—" and I wondered out loud to Rita, "For how long this time?"

"For keeps," she repeated. "Forever." "I'd like to make a bet on that," I said, and we did. I bet that in six months she would return to Orson and she bet that she wouldn't.

Maybe. Only a few days before, I had walked onto Although Orson adores Rita and "Becka," his work interferes with their normal home life. Rita, now finishing Down To Earth, says, "I'm just fed up with genius."

rita explains...

a Columbia Studio set with some questions up my sleeve and I'd got some very different answers about one of the maddest marriages the Fates ever dreamed up for a Hollywood pair. Love was in bloom then for Orson and Rita.

At least Mr. Magic wasn't sawing Rita Hayworth in two, he was just plain killing her with a gun when I walked on the set of The Lady From Shanghai. Rita died a dozen times before my eyes, until Orson stepped out of the scene and panted, "Cut —that's it—that's the picture!"

"What a tender and touching finale to a second honeymoon!" I told Rita.

Because that's what it was—before the love song died in the second chorus—a six-months long love tour for Orson Welles and Rita Hayworth, making The Lady From Shanghai, the picture they teamed in the minute (Continued on page 67)

the decline of bing crosby

by george frazier

■ Sooner or later it happens to everyone. A man's legs go back on him or his eyes begin to fail or the beauty goes out of his voice. He knows then that the moment for him to make for the showers has finally come. Yet as much as we realize this, we never really believed that it could happen to Bing, but it has, and it is not a pleasant task to have to chronicle it. The decline of Bing Crosby as a singer is a deep and abiding bereavement.

Around Broadway they used to say that Bing came on prehistoric, which was the big street's quaint way of stating that he hit you like a caveman when he went to work on a popular song. They don't say this any more. For if they concede his vast popularity and magnificent showmanship, they are also aware that his voice is no longer there. Bing just doesn't sing very well any more. Indeed, in certain recent instances, he has sung badly. His Philco radio show made its debut to a healthy Hooper rating of 24. Two weeks later it had dropped to a dangerously low 12.4.

Some months ago, an orchestra leader who had idolized Bing for years was assigned to accompany him on a recording date. Far from proving the thrill that he had looked forward to, the session turned out to be a deep disillusionment.

"Poor Bing can't sing any more," he said sorrowfully a few days later. "He was like an amateur. He was so bad I'd purposely fluff notes so's he'd have to go back and try again. I'd say, 'Gee, Bing, I'm sorry but I fluffed it,' and I'd hope this time he'd make it." This is not an isolated opinion. (Continued on page 110)

"Crosby's losing his voice . . . on the down-grade . . ." says George Frazier in Salute Magazine (reprinted at left). And those are fighting words to Billy Rose. So, if someone will please hold his coat . . .

■ Will somebody please hold my coat?

In a recent issue of the magazine, Salute, George Frazier has crawled out on a limb and announced the decline of Bing Crosby.

I should like to saw that limb off.

In substance, Mr. Frazier sighs, "Bing doesn't sing very well any more. His record sales, although still sizable, are steadily declining. Two weeks after his radio debut this year, his Hooper rating had dropped to a dangerously low point. His latest movie, Blue Skies, is getting the once-over-lightly."

Mr. Frazier intimates it's time for the champ to make for the showers. He finishes on a melancholy note: "It may be Bing will make a comeback. But history is against it."

you can't say that about bing!

by billy rose

Before we leave the Old Groaner shuffling wistfully down the road into the sunset, let's do a little homework. Let's look at some figures.

I have assembled my facts without the aid of a Ouija board. They come from the file cabinets and ledgers of Decca Records, Paramount Pictures, and the Hooper agency. I think they will prove the reports of Der Bingle's demise have been greatly exaggerated.

In 1946, Decca sold 12,000,000 Bing Crosby records in the United States alone. This not only topped the sale of Crosby records in any previous year, but also exceeded the number of records any one human voice has sold in any one year since Edison invented the talking dingus.

According to Jack Kapp, bossman at Decca, Bing's version of "South America, Take It Away" has sold over 1,000,000 platters. His recent recordings of "Sioux City Sue" and "I Can't Begin to Tell You" are already crowding the seven-figure-mark. "White Christmas," his old piece of vocal mistletoe, sold better in '46 than in any year since it was made. Total now, 3,000,000. His "Blue Skies" album clicked off another million discs. His "St. Patrick's Day" come-all-ye's this Spring rang up another million.

I stopped in at some of the record shops in New York and talked to the boys who sell them.

Milton Gabler, who owns the Commodore Shop on 42nd Street, is generally recognized by the "cats" as the Grand Panjandrum of swing music. He says, "Nobody can do to a song what Crosby can. Vocally, he's as good as ever—maybe better."

Lou Blum, his manager, says, "The rumor that Crosby's through is a lot of malarkey. He's selling better than ever. We sell about 200,000 records a year. Almost 20,000 of these are Crosby's. That's about twice as many as Sinatra and Como, and three times as many as Andy Russell."

The manager of the Arcade Music Shop, quoted in Frazier's article, seems to have changed his mind. He says, "We sell about 3,500 records a week. Bing is still way out in front—about 8% Crosby; (Continued on page 95)

THE OTHER BOYS WERE JUST

FINE, BUT JIMMY SENT JUNE HAVER DOLLS, BLACK OLIVES,

AND A COCKER SPANIEL—SO

WHAT COULD SHE DO BUT MARRY THE GUY?

By Abigail Putnam

That's sister Evelyn at the left, but the young lady in the middle is not a sister; she's June's and Ev's mother! Junie's in I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now?

Although they've only been married since March, Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Zito are already involved in one of those triangles. Only this time the third party is their jealous cocker spaniel, who was a 1945 gift from Jimmy to June.

Secret Heart

■ It was Saturday on an outdoor set of Scudda Hoo, Scudda Hay. All afternoon Robert Karnes had been proposing to little June Haver, all afternoon she'd been saying no, no, no. Now and then Junie couldn't help smiling to herself. In a way, it was so much like real life—in a way, so different—

At the end of the day Mr. Herbert came up. That's F. Hugh Herbert of Corliss Archer fame, who's directing the script he wrote for Scudda Hoo.

"Anything you'd like to do the next four-five days?"

"Lots of things if I didn't have to work."

"You don't. Looks like we won't need you till Thursday."

The blue eyes flew wide. "Oh, wonderful! Maybe I'll go down to Laguna with Evvie, and paint."

. . . Maybe she would, thought Junie, driving home. And again maybe she wouldn't. Maybe, maybe— (Continued on page 92)

Two-year-old Stephen Andrews looks like Daddy's little angel (above), but that cherubic expression is just a cover-up for his sinister underground activities—like smashing lamps and china.

The Andrews boys pl aded for a cocker spaniel, promising to wash and brush him faithfully. "Ah, kids!" sighs Dana.

DANA ANDREWS' KIDS

ARE NO ANGELS, BUT THEY DO

HAVE MANNERS. EVEN

BABY STEVE SAYS "SORRY"

AFTER HE WHACKS

HIS MOM WITH THE FIRE POKER

By Cynthia Miller

family Circle

Mary and Dana returned from the Boomerang location in Conn. with a "dream couple" they found to keep house for them. While waiting for Memory of Love to start, Dana slicked up his boat, the "Vileehi."

Kathy, who's 5, is passing through the hero-worship stage—object, Dana. "Six months ago," he shrugs, "she wouldn't even say hello to me." Next o Dana, Kathy loves sailing on the family's 55-foot cutter, "Katherine."

■ Stephen Andrews, who is two years old, weighs a fast thirty-five pounds, and has the face of a cherub, picked up a fire poker and beat his mother soundly over the head with it.

His mother, who, by some miracle had not been knocked senseless, turned to him. "Stephen," she said, "you hurt Mommy."

Stephen beamed. "I sorry, Mommy."

There are times when the Andrews' wonder what they're rearing. As their very tactful maid put it, "I've never seen a child with so much energy!"

One day, a while ago, when the nurse was off, Dana decided to take Stephen and Kathy out, so Mary could get some sleep.

They went over to Jimmy Kern's. Jimmy's a director at Warners. The Andrews' used to live right next door to him, so they're old friends.

Dana and Jimmy sent Stephen, Kathy, and Jean and Christy Kern upstairs to play, while they talked.

About twenty minutes later, there was a horrible crash. (Continued on page 128)

LOOK WHAT HAPPENED WHEN YOUR MODERN SCREEN REPORTER WISHED ON A STAR! SHE GOT A DATE WITH THAT MAN MADISON—AN EVENING ON THE TOWN—AND ORCHIDS FROM GUY'S GIRL, GAIL RUSSELL!

By Christopher Kane

Cugat waves the violin bow, as Christopher and Guy wave their chassis to rhumba rhythm at Ciro's. (Guy's in Honeymoon.)

Christopher Kane, writer, and Guy Madison, actor, plus two drinks inside 'em from a previous meeting at the swank Beverly Hills Club, tackle lobsters at The King's.

star light, star bright...

Grauman's Chinese Theater attracts all sightseers—and Guy and Christopher stared and gaped just like regular tourists. Only Guy's a native Californian—Bakersfield!

■ Albert Delacorte looked at me speculatively, over the airplane ticket he held in his hand. "Maybe you'd like to go to Hollywood, and interview movie stars?"

I acted disinterested. "Oh, I don't know," I said, casually twisting his arm till he dropped the ticket.

Then I picked it up and said goodbye. And all the way out to the Coast, I painted myself little rainbow-colored dreams.

The minute I got off the plane, I breathed deeply, and set out for the corner of Hollywood and Vine. I was going to wait there for Clark Gable to come by in purple bathing trunks with his name embroidered on them.

He never came, and after a while, my feet began to hurt. I gave up the idea of waiting for Gable, finally, and decided I'd wait for Lana Turner instead. She'd be wearing dark glasses, and a tight white (Continued on next page)

Papa Sankar, proprietor of the Charochka, provides food for the soul as well as the stomach: Russian caviar and gypsy melodies. Guy got along fine, singing with Papa, but he couldn't quite handle that potent vodka!

star light, star bright...

Everything was Hawaiian at the Beverly Tropics: leis around their necks, bamboo background, and chopsticks. If only Guy were as adept at chopsticks as bows and arrows . . .

Selecting lobsters from The King's chef got Guy thinking about nature—so that night they drove to moonlit Sportsman's Lodge, way out in the country.

sweater. They tell me now that she was in Mexico, at the time. Anyhow, she didn't come either.

Nobody passed but a lot of other tourists like me, and when it got dark, I went on over to MODERN SCREEN's Hollywood office.

"If this is Hollywood," I announced coldly to Maggy, the lady-genius who runs the place, "I'll take Times Square. There at least you've got a fighting chance of running into Mrs. Roosevelt."

"What did you expect?" Maggy jeered. "Clark Gable in purple tights?"

I confess my laughter sounded forced.

The next day, I started working, and stopped worrying about glamor. Henceforth Christopher'd keep her eyes on her daily bread.

Then I met Gail Russell. She's not bread; she's cake. Working was a pleasure.

After the interview, we sat around talking.

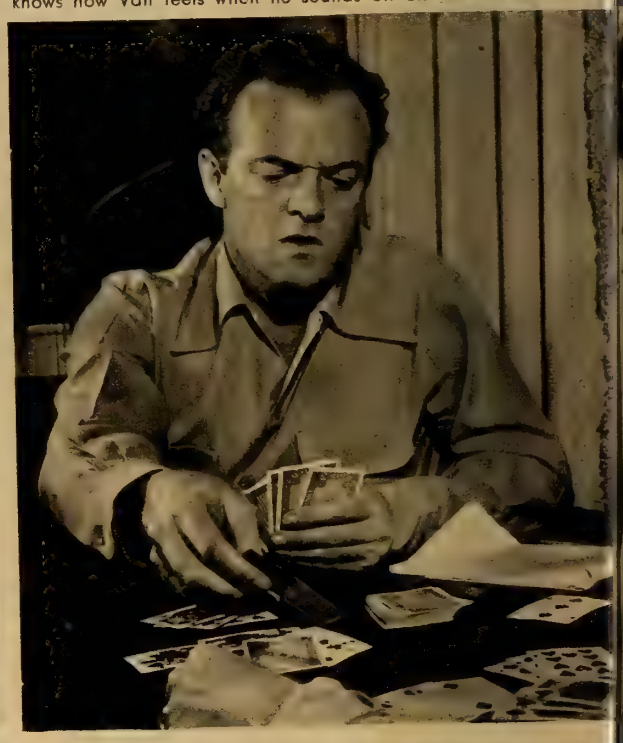
"Do you think Hollywood's exciting?" she said. "Have you been anyplace, or seen anything?"

"My typewriter," I told her sadly. "You know, it's different, with you. Going around with Guy Madison—"

I thought, at the time, that she had a funny look in her eyes. But I didn't know what it (Continued on page 126)

Van Heflin's relaxed on the outside, but tense on the inside—except when he's kibitzing in on daughter Cathleen Carol's phone calls. Then he relaxes completely; her gurgles and coos break him up. Like her mother, Cathy's a redhead.

It's true love, all right, when you still speak to the Mrs. even after she goes gin on you. Frances, a former actress, knows how Van feels when he sounds off on "the theater."



■ The scene was definitely on the passionate side.

Van Heflin had Lana Turner in his arms. He held her close. He said, throatily, "And perhaps that's why you love me, Marianne. You've hated me because I saw too much of your real self."

Lana's eyes looked searchingly into Van's.

"I found," she half-whispered, "that when you were with me, all was well."

"Cut!"

Lana and Van looked at the director.

"We'll do it again," he decided.

A young man from Indiana visiting on the set laughed.

"Isn't that tough? Now that Heflin guy's got to make love to her some more—say, I wonder what those two are saying to each other now."

Too bad he couldn't have heard the dialogue between scenes. It went like this:

Lana: Look, Van, I've got a bone to pick (Continued on page 71)

"An actor," says the star of Green Dolphin Street, "must combat the general belief that he is a little boy who never grew up, or a screwball with a healthy desire not to work for a living." Van toasts (with beer) those who really understand actors' woes.

CALL HIM MISTER (HE'S NO LONGER LIEUTENANT!), CALL HIM HAM (HE'LL NEVER BE CURED!), BUT UNLESS YOU SMILE WHEN YOU SAY IT, DON'T CALL HIM JOHNSON!

By Carl Schroeder

van heflin, that is . . .

No matter how he slices it, life for Pete Lawford always comes out on the bias—sunny-side, funny-side up...

by Kaaren Pieck

everything with trick

endings

With It Happened In Brooklyn making the rounds and Good News completed, Peter is a happy lad. Here, he hedge-hops at new home he got his folks for Christmas.

Maybe it's not a romance, but it's a wonderfully daffy friendship between Peter and Lana Turner. They each think the other's humor is hilarious.

Ava Gardner's one of Pete's favorite dancing partners, but she's not his own true love, either. Who is? Peter isn't talking . . . just yet.

Pete didn't get far with his request for a private phone number. Fans keep calling.

■ With trick endings, everything happens to him.

He goes to a prize-fight. A lot of people go to the fights Friday nights. But he gets a bonus. He's sitting downstairs at the ringside, see, with these two friends—Sid Luft, and Artie Goldstein—and suddenly he feels something slippery on the back of his neck. It gets worse steadily.

He turns around, with his collar swishing, and there's some big, beefy guy in the balcony talking to his date. And casually pouring a bottle of beer across the iron rail.

"What the—!" says Mr. Lawford, with restraint. He shakes Artie's arm. Then he shakes Sid's arm. "Someone," he says, "is pouring beer over me."

Sid yaks. "He's just trying to put a head on you!"

So all night long, he went around smelling like an old brewery, and elderly ladies who passed him in the street wondered what his tragic story was.

He was beginning to wonder himself.

His life is all like that. Once he asked Evelyn Keyes for a date. Evelyn Keyes is beautiful, ravishing, alluring and other good things.

Lawford thoughtfully analyzed the situation. This couldn't be a drive-in, juke-box business. This must be dignified, sophisticated and perfect. A small intimate dinner, with Sid and (Continued on page 115)

john lund life story

HER NAME WAS

MARIE, AND THE MINUTE HE SAW

HER HE KNEW SHE WAS THE ONE AND ONLY.

BUT HE DIDN'T

MAKE ENOUGH MONEY

TO DATE HER—SO

HE MARRIED HER! (Part II)

By Ida Zeitlin

Marie complains he's careless as a small boy about his clothes. "And I'm a lazy correspondent, too," John volunteers proudly. But of Perils Of Pauline, he boasts, "Even Betty Hutton admired my boundless energy."

■ If you were filming the love story of the John Lunds, your background music would come from Up in Central Park.

On their first impromptu date they went to the zoo. John proposed while rowing Marie around the lake. There was, however, an interval between the two occasions, marked on John's part by the struggle not to propose. As announcer for CBS Television, he'd been supplied with a stack of plushy business cards. But for groceries he was getting 25-per-week, and you can't eat business cards.

So he grabbed a chance to go on the road with Phil Baker in Charley's Aunt, which proved a mistake all around. Back to New York and nothing-a-week, marriage seemed more than ever an elusive dream. So, as he plied the oars and Marie trailed her fingers through the waters of Central Park Lake, he said: "Will you marry me? Though I must be out of my mind to ask it."

"You're the love of my life," said Marie, "but no."

"Why not?"

"Because if I said 'yes,' you'd go home and (Continued on page 106)

SIGH

NEW YORK, DALLAS, CHARLESTON—WONDERFUL CITIES, ALL. BUT THE PLACE THAT MADE THE MITCHUMS MISTY-EYED IS AN OLD MILL POND IN DOVER, DELAWARE—WHERE THEY FIRST MET

By Virginia Wilson

Little Chris was badly burned last year when he fell into a gas heater. But he had to heal fast, so as not to lose his touch at marbles. Nickname's "Little Mitch."

When he's not acting, Bob helps Dotty with the housework, usually to the accompaniment of classical music from the phonograph. "Frankly," he says, "I'm a whiz at dishes."

■ The road ahead lay silver and straight in the cold light of a Texas moon. Wind from the prairie breathed ice cubes through the half opened window of their new convertible.

"For heaven's sake, shut it, honey," Dorothy said, snuggling close to her husband's shoulder. "I thought it was supposed to be warm in Texas."

"It isn't warm anywhere on a cold night," Bob observed absently.

Dotty giggled. "I suppose that makes sense." She turned and looked at him suddenly. "Bob, are we really on our way to New York, or is this just something I'm dreaming?"

"It's real. If it isn't, it's sure an expensive dream, the price I shelled out for this car."

It was a 1942 Buick, and they had picked it out together. That was on the day that Bob had come home from the studio at noon.

"Hi, kid," he'd said, running his hand over her smooth dark hair. "Want to go along while I buy a car?"

"Bob, honestly? How come?"

"We're going to New York, honey, the island of Manhattan. We've wanted to take a trip for a long while, and now the studio has given me time off for good behavior. We're leaving tomorrow."

"Tomorrow! But—but . . ."

"Don't talk so much. Gotta buy a car. Something nice and inconspicuous, so nobody'll notice us."

Nice and inconspicuous! So what did they end up with? A fire red convertible.

"Gosh, I like that!" they'd said in one breath, and then they laughed at each other (Continued on page 103)

Little Mitch, Mitch, and Big Mitch—otherwise known as Chris, Josh and Bob Mitchum—admire Chris' art work. Josh prefers weight lifting.

SUNDAY MORNING FOR DEANNA DURBIN MEANS TOSCANINI AT ONE ELBOW, DICK TRACY AT THE OTHER, AND JESSICA ROMPING ALL OVER THE HOUSE.

by Nancy Winslow Squire

call me mama

Since Jessica's birth, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Jackson spend few evenings at Mocambo's. Busy making Something In The Wind, Deanna looks forward to Sundays at home.

■ Jessica Louise Jackson was one year old on Friday, February 7th, 1947, and the week before was a tough one for her mother.

Mrs. Felix Jackson, who is a very cute, curly-red-headed girl, had gone shopping to buy a dress Jessica could wear to her party.

If you've ever shopped for one-year-old's dresses, you know what she went through.

The salesgirl would say, "Gee, Miss Durbin, this blue one's awfully pretty," and Deanna would sigh.

"But the pink one's even sweeter."

And the white one had French knots that would melt a heart of stone.

She ended up buying all three, naturally, and when she got home, she (Continued on page 101)

Love can play funny tricks sometimes. But Kathryn Grayson and Johnnie Johnston are praying that this old black magic feeling will last forever and ever.

BY JEAN KINKEAD

Let this be for Always

▲ Kathryn and Johnnie are so much in love, they can afford to be practical. The money they earned on their record-smashing in-person tour will pay for house furnishings—with a new piano thrown in.

▼ At the Capitol Theater in N.Y., Johnnie's parents dropped into "Grayson's Inn" (her dressing-room) for lunch. Johnnie, who's now making This Time For Keeps, vows that's just how he feels about Kathy.

◀ Rabid who-done-it fans, they spent hours between shows reading Dell Mystery Books together. Impatient Kathy started this one alone, leaving Johnnie several chapters behind. Solution: they tore book in half!

▼ Hit song of their tour was "Time After Time," from her pic, It Happened In Brooklyn. In Chicago, she forgot the words, so Johnnie sang his own lyrics, plus hers—which were very sentimental.

■ "Look, Johnnie, there must be other ways of making money in a hurry—" Kathryn Grayson paused on the hike to her dressing room.

Johnnie grinned. "We could rig up a gadget and print ten-dollar bills in the cellar." Kathryn closed her eyes at him the way she does when she's annoyed, and they plodded on.

Broken-down elevators and four-flight hikes were only half the fun on the Grayson-Johnston personal appearance tour. There were also blizzards (four), laryngitis and acute, hideous homesickness. How come they let themselves in for such a deal? For the oldest and corniest and soundest reason there is. They are in love. They want to get married. They need the dough. They'll buy their piano and living-room sofa with the haul they made in Cincinnati. The good folks in Hartford, Conn., are paying for their dining-room furniture. If you ask them was it worth it, they'll tell you in their best duet style—"well, yes."

The lowest ebb of the trip was in Chicago. They arrived there in a snowstorm on Christmas Eve, feeling like orphans of the storm. They both missed Julie so much it hurt—she's Johnnie's five-year-old—and Kathryn kept thinking of the beautiful, fat, lonely Christmas tree standing in her living-room. M-G-M gave them (Continued on page 120)

Can he help it if he's a walking ad for famil· life, a character out of a corny radio serial? For Bill Holden, life—with Brenda and the kids—is beautiful.

By LETITIA LE PAGE

"The way he plays, it should be called *good*minton, not badminton," grumbles Brenda. Bill's also a hunter, loves to sneak away from Blaze Of Noon set and shoot game. The prize of his gun collection's a Springfield rifle he won from Sterling Hayden.

Poor Westy! His maw pushes his face in, and the family police dog hurts his dignity: the hound bowls him over with kisses when Westy comes home from nursery school.

Could be Bill's discussing his latest picture, Dear Ruth, with ten-months-old Scott, but more likely they're planning a fishing trip for 1957. Playing with Scotty gives Bill a chance to exercise; since his recent N.Y. visit, he's used to an active life.

■ It was raining, but that didn't bother the kids outside the broadcast studio. Moccasined feet made restless jitterbug patterns on the wet pavement.

A little redhead, about thirteen, came pelting up to the group.

"Hi," she said breathlessly. "Who are we waiting for?"

"Bill Holden," they told her.

She looked baffled.

The other girls laughed. "He's been in the Army for three years. Your mother wouldn't let you go to pictures before that, so you don't remember him. But he's terrific!"

The stage door opened then, and the mob went into action, flourishing autograph books. The young man who came out wore a gabardine raincoat. He had blond-brown hair and serious eyes and a quick smile.

"Take it easy, kids," he said. "Who's first?"

Two girls came forward. They were taller than the others, older. They wore high heels instead of moccasins, and nylons instead of bobby socks.

"Do you remember us, Mr. Holden?" they chorused.

Bill stared at them.

"I'm sorry," he said regretfully.

They weren't offended. They laughed. "We've grown up," they told him. "The last time you saw us, we were bobby soxers. Remember, we threw packs of Philip Morris into your taxi because you smoked so much."

He remembered, then. Everything that had happened before he went into the Army Air Force, however, seemed to belong to the far-distant past.

He wished suddenly then that Ardis were with him on this trip to New York. Ardis had gone to dramatic school here, when she was Brenda Marshall. She had friends she wanted to look up, (Continued on page 118)

life can be beautiful

He's at war with himself, wanting sometimes to talk, sometimes to dream.
Will Betty Hensel be the girl to understand these needs—and become Mrs. Cary Grant?

by Florabel Muir

special Hollywood correspondent

Cary, Cary, quite contrary...

With The Bachelor And The Bobbysoxer finished and The Bishop's Wife almost completed, Cary takes his best girl—Betty Hensel—to Santa Anita. While there Cary signed dozens of autographs, although he'd vowed not to after a recent episode.

■ Although Cary Grant had been playing the field while pretty Betty Hensel with the light brown hair was back home in St. Louis for that two months' visit, this handsome couple took up where they left off when she returned to Hollywood late in March. Now their friends keep wondering if wedding bells will be ringing before the harvest moon starts shining.

There, on the very graceful Hensel hand, the big diamond ring Cary gave Betty at Christmas time flashes in the eyes of any girl who might be sending covetous glances in the direction of the actor who has a way of going to the heads of maidens passing by. But Betty continues to deny that the expensive bauble is an engagement ring and Cary is just as noncommittal. In fact, he is the most noncommittal person I have ever met.

I cornered him in his dressing-room at the Samuel Goldwyn studio, where I found him taking lessons on the harp for his picture, The Bishop's Wife. As he ran his strong, graceful fingers over the strings, he dodged my questions with an adroitness I have seldom encountered. We talked for hours and it might as well have been about cabbages and kings for all the lowdown I got out of him on his love life. When I finally asked him the status of his love life, (Continued on page 116)

■ Shooting was over on the set of To Each His Own. The harassed prop boy was packing up his equipment. From the music department came sounds of symphonic inspiration, soon to be cued into the scenes.

In one corner of the huge sound stage, Director Mitch Leisen welcomed his cast and crew for the customary end-of-picture party. Mitch called for attention, and somebody pulled a backstage string so that the curtains spread away from a dais which had been hurriedly erected. Standing there was a life-sized gold Oscar.

"I thought," Mitch said to Olivia De Havilland, "that since you are going to win it anyway I might as well present it to you now."

Olivia gazed at Oscar in pop-eyed astonishment. Oscar gazed at Olivia. Then, fantastic as it seemed, he relaxed from his rigid pose, opened one blue, obviously human eye and winked!

So far as I know, this is the first time that Oscar has ever actually come to life. Of course, there are those, including Olivia De Havilland, who say that this was all just another priceless gag of Mitch Leisen's.

I am not so sure.

The role of Miss Norris in To Each His Own was Olivia De Havilland's strictly personal achievement, from the moment she first read the script until she stood on the stage of the Shrine Auditorium on a certain evening in March, and accepted the award.

"Charley Brackett took me to luncheon one day early in 1944," Olivia remembers, "and told me the story of the picture. Perhaps I might not have been so enthusiastic if I had read it in cold type. But Charley brought the whole thing to life.

"At that time, the picture was called A Love Story. I was enthusiastic about the simple title and the basic story quality. I wanted to do the film at once, but I was tied up in a lawsuit which had to be settled before I could go to Paramount.

"It was not until a year later, that I began To Each His Own. I had done tests with John Lund, who was perfect for his part. (Continued on page 122)

Since winning the Academy Award for her performance in To Each His Own, Olivia De Havilland has read 29 scripts. Next role will be that of a mentally ill girl in Snake Pit. Joan Crawford, whose dressing room is next door, sent Olivia roses.

blessed event

HE'S KIND OF STIFF AND STAND-OFFISH INSTEAD OF BEING CUTE AND CUDDLY, BUT LITTLE "OSCAR" IS OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND'S PET BABY!

by George Benjamin

Taking long walks together is a favorite pastime of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Goodrich. Here, Marc oils Livvy's sunburned back after their three mile trek in the desert.

Olivia and Marc are handholders—even without the cameraman's prompting. They're going to Peru soon, where Marc will do research on that country's lost civilization for a new book. Olivia gets jealous of all his fictional heroines!

gay blade

The star of Forever Amber takes his wife, Pat, to the Academy Award presentations. Cornel will stay in costume for his next pic, too: it's Royal Mail, an 1840 swashbuckling epic.

Like his master's new picture, Punch is on the Home Stretch as he races out of the Wildes' pool. Cornel's entering a couple of local fencing matches in preparation for the 1948 Olympic games; he was on the 1936 fencing team.

HE'S SO RESTFUL ON VACATIONS, THAT WILDE GUY, BOUNCING FROM FENCING TO GARDENING TO SWIMMING TO WRESTLING WITH HIS DOG— NO WONDER PAT'S GLAD WHEN HE GOES BACK TO WORK!

By Irene Greengard

■ When Claire, the cook, first set eyes on Punch, she determined that that was all she was going to set on him.

You couldn't have lured her to pet the beast for fifty thousand dollars. Punch is a French poodle who looks for all the world like a Persian lamb coat with a head on it, and Claire had never even seen a French poodle before, let alone such a big black one.

"You'll love him," Cornel assured her. Claire said nothing. Nobody was going to tell her she'd love a creature like that.

One week later, she loved him.

But the Wildes' problems weren't over by any means, because eventually Pat and Cornel thought Punch needed a playmate.

"How about a nice Great Dane?" Cornel said thoughtfully. "They're wonderful dogs." (Continued on page 109)

The Fords, who like everything western-style, helped launch the Hitching Post Theater, which features hoss-operas only.

■ The headwaiter at the Town Casino in Buffalo, New York, gave the phone receiver a puzzled frown. The long distance operator said Beverly Hills, California, was calling.

"Hello," came an anxious voice. "Is the show on? Is Eleanor Powell dancing now?"

"Yes, sir," replied the table captain. "Just started."

"Then just go away now and leave the receiver off, will you? And when she's through I'd like to talk to her."

The headwaiter shrugged. Some California nut, he thought. But it was his nickel. He laid the receiver on the shelf, propped the booth door ajar, and went back to the supper room.

Three thousand miles away, Glenn Ford slumped happily down on his spine in a big club chair and listened. He could hear the music of "Clair de Lune"—a little far off but that was it, all right. In his mind he could see Ellie doing her dance.

Almost an hour went by before he snapped out of his long-distance reverie. An excited babble of voices first and then the voice—the one that had been away a whole, long, lonesome week.

"Hello—"

"Ellie—how are—I love you—I heard the show—you were wonderful!"

"Honey," broke in Eleanor Powell to her husband, Glenn Ford, "you can pick the darndest times to call! I'm out in the hall in a phone booth, a hundred people are watching and listening. It's 14 below zero here and (Continued on page 123)

time on my hands

WITH ELEANOR AWAY, GLENN FORD HAD LOTS OF TIME ON HIS HANDS. TIME TO WRECK PETE'S DIET, BURN UP THE LONG-DISTANCE WIRES— AND GROW A COLONNA MUSTACHE!

By Kirtley Baskette

Glenn filled in part of the time Ellie was away on her p.a. tour with an appearance on "Suspense." Aboard her train, Eleanor tuned in eagerly—to static. Glenn's now in Man From Colorado.

While Eleanor was in the East with her dancing act, Glenn attended the Academy Award show with the Larry Parks.

It's hard to say who behaved worse, with Mom gone. Peter burned out the radio, but Glenn bought red window blinds!

By Jack Wade

best year of his life

■ It was 2:15 in the morning. Fredric March remembers the time to the minute. A party was going on—tentatively in his honor. A very subdued party. Or at least subdued until 2:15. Irving Berlin and his Ellen. Playwright Robert E. Sherwood. Other notables, all sipping their drinks with the profound preoccupation of people who are waiting.

"It's a cinch I won't get it," Freddie told his wife at about 2:14. "Sam Goldwyn's team can't get everything. They'll have to give the best male performance Oscar to someone else."

At that point, it certainly looked like Freddie had something there. The award for film editing, music scoring, screen writing, directing, the Thalberg Award to Goldwyn, two awards to Harold Russell, the handless veteran, finally the award to Best Years for the best picture of 1946. That made eight. Gone With the Wind, supposed to be the greatest picture Hollywood ever turned out, collected nine. Fred March slumped a little—felt all of his 49 years suddenly. Fifteen long years it had been since he won his first and only Academy Oscar—back in 1932 for Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Those—he reflected in a flash, were his best years. What could he expect now that he was almost out of the Hollywood picture, now that—let him face it—he was really more of a character actor when he made a movie—than a romantic star? Then it came—award number nine—The Best Years again—tieing the GWTW record. "For best male acting performance—Fredric March in The Best Years of Our Lives! (Continued on page 111)

"It's smart to be RIGHT!"
ALEXIS SMITH
Right—completely right—1881 ROGERS silverplate—the "Silver Service of The Stars"—gives you more for your "silver" dollar! More pieces—to entertain in Hollywood style. More beauty—patterns chosen by Hollywood stars. More quality—look at the new Contour Blade with Mirror Finish! More wear—feel the extra weight . . . examine the extra Overlay of pure silver at wear points! Visit your silverware dealer and see complete services that give you . . .
MORE FOR YOUR "SILVER" DOLLAR
ALEXIS SMITH
starring in
THE TWO MRS. CARROLLS
A Warner Bros. Production
1881
ROGERS
by ONEIDA LTD.
SILVERSMITHS
*DEL MAR
*CAPRI *SURF CLUB

(Continued from page 10)

leave. So she fixed me. After this telegram, I won't dare say anything about going home."

Ginger Rogers and Jackie Briggs were on hand and seemed to be having the time of their lives. They love to dance—and together. I never see Ginger on the floor without thinking of those wonderful, gay, dancing movies she used to make with Fred Astaire. We could use more like them today. Ginger and Jackie are still madly in love and don't care if the world knows it.

When the four birthday cakes came in they created quite a stir, what with four people making wishes and blowing out candles. It was a pretty sight when they lowered the lights and just the birthday cake candles illuminated the large room. In sentimental moments like this, I notice that Gregory Peck always goes over and joins his wife and they hold hands. That's pretty nice, if you ask me.

* * *

Tyrone Power is always the gentleman!

The reason he didn't accompany Lana Turner to the Academy Awards is because he thought his appearance would embarrass her. He was sporting a two weeks growth of beard and long hair for his Captain From Castile role.

But he wanted to see how pretty his girl friend looked in her new party dress so he arranged cocktails and hors d'oeuvres at his house and sent her along in his car to present one of the winning Oscars.

* * *

Can't seem to get off the subject of the Awards this month—but then that's natural, isn't it, when that's our biggest event? I'm in the middle of a flying trip back East right now, and I'm very surprised at all the "inside scandal" about the Academy Awards flying around—not counting the already well publicized Fontaine and De Havilland unsisterly act.

Questions hurled at me were: Was it true that Frank Sinatra had refused to sing when he heard he was subbing for Bing Crosby? That I wouldn't know because Frankie doesn't call me up to tell me these things.

I also heard that Judy Garland was miffed and nixed singing one of M-G-M's top hits because she was pouting with the studio. Well, neither Frankie nor Judy are the healthiest people in the world and both are addicted to colds. I prefer to think last minute illness was the cause of their absence and not spur-of-the-moment pique. Judy, I'm sure, is not feuding with Metro. She calls that lot "home" and has just signed a new long term contract.

Another query was: Why was Joan Crawford dining with Greg Bautzer in Palm Springs on the very night she had been asked, as last year's winner, to present the Oscar to the new Queen?

All I can say to this is that Joan says she suffers pangs of agony at the thought of appearing before large crowds. Remember, she was so nervous she made herself ill and couldn't even accept her own Oscar last year? About three days before this year's Awards she conveniently slipped away. A lot of people say they can't understand Joan's shyness when she used to win cup after cup dancing the Charleston and Black Bottom in crowded night clubs. That's one I can't answer. But I must say the East made much more of these "moments" than we, who are so close to the picture, did on the Coast. Apparently, gossip—like far pastures—gets greener and fresher away from home.

Wonder why someone, preferably a style expert, doesn't have a little talk with Anne Baxter about her clothes? She dresses in such a matronly fashion. A woman sixty years old could wear the evening gown I recently saw adorning the very nice chassis of Miss B.

It was dark blue lace, high at the neckline, with long blue lace gloves of the same material. The color and the style certainly were not youthful and Anne is one of our youngest stars—in her early twenties, in case you don't know.

* * *

If Janet Blair doesn't know it now—I hope she reads it here that absolutely NO ONE said anything to hurt her feelings at Cobina Wright's party.

What happened is that she left, dissolved in tears, when she thought she heard Edmund Goulding, the director, and Bill Dozier refer to her as an "upstart." What they really said was "starlet." Neither Eddie nor Bill would think of saying anything uncomplimentary about her. They are both gentlemen—and as a matter of fact they had been admiring Janet. I know. I was sitting with them when she THOUGHT she heard a cutting remark.

Eddie was all for getting her and bringing her and her husband back to the party when he found out the reason for her strange behavior. Bill was for sending flowers and explanations. At least, everyone was very upset, including Cobina, Sr., who prides herself, and rightly, on giving parties where everything goes off well.

With the exception of this incident, Cobina's soiree was a delightful affair.

Among the guests were Charlie Chaplin and his young wife, Oona, who so seldom go anywhere. Of course, everyone was talking about Charlie's picture, Monsieur Verdoux, and begging him to show it.

I was fortunate enough to be numbered among the few who were invited to the projection room, a few nights later, to see the new comedy. I had to swear I wouldn't print a word until the picture is released—but believe you me (and no matter what your opinion is about the private affairs of Chaplin) it's hilariously funny. But shhhh—mustn't say another word.

A perfect dream boat floating around at Cobina's was Diana Lynn. Of all the young stars in Hollywood I think Diana has the most chic and style. Now THERE'S a girl who knows how to wear clothes. Her dress was black and white with a red sash—sophisticated but youthful.

* * *

I think you fans who write me from time to time saying that you like to get word now and then about the old timers as well as the newcomers, would have had a big thrill if you could have seen some of them taking a bow at the Academy Awards.

I'm referring particularly to Richard Dix and Dick Arlen and Buddy Rogers who looked as handsome as any of today's heroes when they came out in the spotlight. And what's more—they looked just as young.

* * *

Next month, I'll have more news and gossip of the big town for you. See you then!

MODERN SCREEN

"Who gets the bone?"

The Lady Iris Mountbatten—beautiful great-granddaughter of Queen Victoria

"Before I go out—always a 1-Minute Mask!"

Smooth on a cool, lavish Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Leave one minute.

"Keratolytic" action dissolves off stubborn dirt and dead skin particles! Tissue off.

Right away, your skin looks brighter and clearer! Feels smoother. Have a 1-Minute Mask every time you want to look your best!

The Lady Iris Mountbatten, great-granddaughter of Queen Victoria, has recently been visiting in New York and Palm Beach. "Almost as soon as I arrived here, I borrowed a delightful beauty trick from my American friends," Lady Iris says. "To refresh and smooth my skin before going out, I now always have a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. I've never known a facial treatment to show results so promptly! My skin looks clearer and finer-textured right away!"

It's a lovely foundation cream, too!

For hair that commands adoration

Jewelite

All the lovely things you are to him are expressed in the shining glory of your hair. Keep it soft and lustrous by frequent use of a Jewelite Brush. Supreme creation of the brushmaker's art, Jewelite Brushes by Pro-phy-lac-tic have bristles of long, resilient Prolon that reach right down to your scalp to provide healthful stimulation, while burnishing each strand of hair to alluring, natural loveliness. Jewelite Brushes, Combs and complete Dresser Sets are available at good brush departments. Look for the name Jewelite on the box. Genuine Jewelite is made only by the makers of the famous Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brush.

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH COMPANY, Florence, Mass.

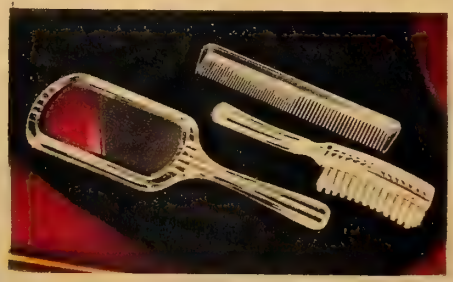
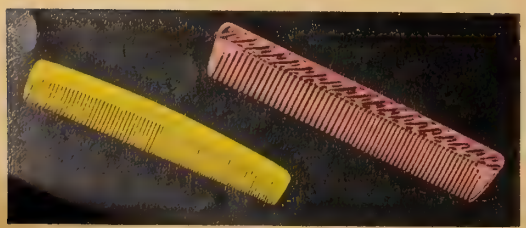
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Jewelite Roll-Wave Brush, Comb and Mirror Set, available in delicate shades of ruby or sapphire, or in diamond-clear crystal. $12.00.





Jewelite Combs and other Pro-phy-lac-tic Plastic Combs for men and women are designed for perfect combing. Wide choice of styles and colors. 15¢ to 50¢.

JEWELITE BY PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC

"STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN"

(Continued from page 14)

I don't do that very often.

Admittedly, heaven is a tricky subject to deal with in a film aimed at millions, because the millions have a million different versions of what heaven must be like. One man's heaven is another man's poison, and a bobby-soxer's notion of the celestial stamping ground—Sinatra, Van Johnson and a juke box—unquestionably would revolt the soul of the housewife who expects the next life to be populated with Fanny Farmers and Mary Margaret McBrides, or the baseball fan who expects to encounter Leo Durocher and Dixie Walker on the first post-mortem cloud.

But no one can quarrel with the hereafter set up by J. Arthur Rank in Stairway To Heaven. It is virtuous yet relaxed, stern but capable of understanding the mortal bemused by living. It even permits humor and debate. Small wonder that such flesh-and-blood beings as David Niven, Kim Hunter and Roger Livesey find that the bridge between the fields of England and the clouds of The Unknown—the Stairway—is not so high or so difficult to cross as they had thought.

Here is a picture that demonstrates what has been demonstrated before and will be again, although perhaps by England and other countries more often than Hollywood: the fact that a fine picture is an assemblage of ingredients, not a "vehicle" for a star. Many in Stairway To Heaven deserve stardom, but here they are just well-cast actors. The writing is excellent, the story is imaginative, the fantasy is clear; the direction is splendid.

David Niven, who manages a complete naturalness seldom achieved by the California brand of glamor boy, plays the hero of the fantasy—an aviator who should have died on a foggy night over the Channel but didn't because his heavenly guide got lost in the beastly English weather. Kim Hunter is the girl who falls in love with him and fights all the powers in the clouds and all the unknown terrors of her love's dream-filled mind to keep him earthbound. She is something to watch, too. She is an excellent actress but she really looks like a girl. Someone you might meet. And both she and Mr. Niven are surrounded by jewel-like performances by Marius Goring, Roger Livesey, Abraham Sofaer, Raymond Massey and indeed every member of the cast.

As I've been saying to my friends, have you seen Stairway To Heaven? You must.

HOW ARE THINGS IN GLOCCA MORRA?

Frankly, we couldn't tell you, because no one, as far as we know, has ever met a movie star in Glocca Morra. (Confidentially, there's no such place.) But whether you live in Portland, Maine, or San Diego, California, surely you've bumped into a film celebrity at least once—and we want to hear all about it. In fact, we'll pay you $5 for each letter we use in our "I Saw It Happen" feature. The rules are simple: Your letter must be short, legible and tell a TRUE, unusual story about the time you met a movie star in person. Read our "I Saw It Happen" boxes to get the right slant, and mail your entries to the "I Saw It Happen" Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

RITA EXPLAINS . . .

(Continued from page 28)

they made up the first time as man and wife. I'd walked in on the very last scene. It was all over. Under her bleached and bobbed platinum curls, Rita Hayworth grinned wearily. "And for a second wedding present," I observed, "he makes you a dramatic actress. Happy?"

Rita nodded. It was a silly question. And Orson was still courting Rita as he never courted anyone before, since they kissed and made up—and went right to work.

There's a rock, El Morro, in Acapulco Bay down in Mexico, that's a spot of forever Hollywood. Orson had all the barnacles that scratched and the sea anemones that stung hacked off until it was smooth and soft as a rock can be. All because Rita had to climb on that rock and lie down for a scene. He hired the Olympic champ swimmer of Mexico to hover just out of camera range in every ocean shot in which she appeared to scare away hungry barracuda. When they plunged into the jungles to shoot, he hired a bodyguard of fierce Pancho Villas complete with mustachios, bull bandilleras and blunderbusses to scare off snakes and alligators with designs on a hunk of Hayworth. Orson followed Rita around in person, bearing oils and unguents every time she had a brief encounter with the tropical sun. He had special rope-soled shoes flown down from Hollywood so she wouldn't slip and smack her sacroiliac on Errol Flynn's yacht deck when it rolled.

get that story . . .

The reason I had tracked Orson and Rita down on the set the day they completed Lady From Shanghai was because I had gotten a phone call from Al Delacorte back in New York.

"Can you pierce the Wall of Steel that surrounds Orson and Rita," Al inquired, "and give an inimitable Hopper sketch of their home life?"

I repeated that to Rita. Her hairdresser said, "Please, Rita, I almost stabbed you. Don't shake so!" Rita was laughing, a little bitterly, it seemed to me.

"Our Wall of Steel," scoffed Rita, "is either a sound stage or a sun reflector—and as for our home life—just look around. It's this set."

"Sometimes," sighed Rita, "we have breakfast together, but it's usually dinner for Orson. He'll work 24 hours straight without eating. Then he comes home and wants three steaks and a couple of pies. Steaks for breakfast—pies—ugh!"

Orson and Rita lived—at odd hours—in a small, ranch type house out in Brentwood. Rita bought the place for herself and baby Rebecca after the last time Orson left his happy home. It wasn't exactly a match for the little love nest they started housekeeping in when they first married. That was something you'd have to see to believe.

A Los Angeles sports promoter owned it. He'd built the Pan-Pacific Auditorium, a showy sports arena in Hollywood, and he must have told the architect, "Now build me a house to match."

It had neon lights—honest—and three or four floors. A swimming pool with a tropical island in the middle. Mirrors and glass and colored lights everywhere and—well—I won't go on. That's where Mr. and Mrs. Orson Welles started housekeeping. Orson used to broadcast his radio thriller-chillers from the first floor. Rita reclined in her bed up on the third and listened in. Where career left off and home life started, I'm sure she never exactly knew.

I was out there once when Orson was

Are you really sure of your present deodorant? Test it against Fresh
See for yourself why more and more women are switching to Fresh—the new cream deodorant they find the most effective and so gentle

Use FRESH and be lovelier to love

Lovely to know . . . that you can really rely on Fresh. Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-stopping ingredient known to science!

Lovely to use . . . creamy Fresh stays smooth . . . never greasy, gritty or sticky . . . doesn't dry out.

And gentle . . . Fresh contains a patented ingredient that makes it gentle to skin, safe for fabrics.

No wonder . . . more and more women are switching to Fresh.

© 1947, The Pharma-Craft Corporation, Inc.

new! So bewitching...it's dangerous!

Woodbury

Fiesta

Here and now . . . new spark, new verve, new color! Your skin glows alive with Woodbury Fiesta Powder. High-spirited shade . . . reckless with beauty. Break your date with the humdrum—today, meet Fiesta!

Lasting cling! Color-freshness! Fiesta was born with both. For your free "try-on" sample, mail coupon below today.

Esther Williams starring in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Fiesta"

That rosy-sparkle on her skin? It's yours . . . with Woodbury Fiesta.

WOODBURY MATCHED MAKE-UP. With Fiesta Film-Finish Powder, you also get Fiesta Lipstick and Rouge . . . all 3 in the dollar Powder box—only $1.00.

Woodbury film-finish Powder

Fiesta and 8 other Star shades come "Purse" size for 25c and 10c
All prices plus tax

Free Sample FIESTA POWDER . . . so *beautifying!

See Fiesta's sparkle on your skin! Send for free Woodbury Powder Sampler (contains Fiesta, eight other flattering shades), plus Hollywood Make-up Chart. Print name, address clearly. Mail* to Box 45, Cincinnati 14, Ohio 337

NAME.....

STREET.....

CITY.....STATE.....

(Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only)
*Paste coupon on penny postcard, if you wish.

broadcasting. Radio people swarmed all over. The only touch of domesticity that crept in that evening was a cocker pup of Rita's, who wandered into Orson's temple of art and darned near busted up the broadcast before they could shoo him out!

It took more than a puppy to break up the marriage of Orson and Rita the first time—and the second time, too. It took the most uniquely exasperating driving temperament that ever hit show business. People who work with Orson often idolize the guy like GIs worshipped Ike Eisenhower. But they can't stand him long. He consumes them. No one can keep up with him—let alone a wife.

I also know, of course, how warm-hearted Orson Welles can be when he wants to. Years ago, before I had a column, before Orson came to Hollywood and set it on its ear with the picture they dared him to make, he charmed me where a mother is always charmed easiest. My son, Bill, had ideas then that he wanted to be an actor. He's reformed now—he's a business man. But then Bill promoted himself a walk-on job in the Katherine Cornell Broadway production of Romeo and Juliet. Orson had a big role. He had no idea who the shy, awkward, hopelessly unactorish kid was. But he took him under his wing; couldn't have been more kind and helpful.

Okay. Orson's charming, appealing, sweet when he wants to be—and also exhausting, temperamental and mad. So what made Orson and Rita separate in the first place? And then, what made them come back together again? I asked Rita all this, rapid fire, sticking my inquisitive nose—leave it to me—directly into the confusing business. Rita answered them all with one shrug and a couple of sentences.

"We're in love, Orson and I," she said. "It's as simple as that."

Begging Rita's pardon, I don't think it's quite an "simple as that." Nothing about O. Welles is simple, not even love. He's as complex as a jig-saw puzzle. Rita Hayworth knew that when Orson first found himself smitten and went a'wooing. He had a tough time getting a date, believe me, because Rita was scared. She didn't want any more domineering mates. Her first husband, Ed Judson, had bossed her around and made her life pretty miserable. Orson's genius made Rita shy as a mouse, when Romance peeped around the corner.

she stood him up . . .

Orson wrote her fan letters at first, from South America. When he got back, he called her up, almost every hour on the hour. She hid out, finally made a date, and stood him up! Did that discourage Welles? Not a bit. He came back for more, and then rashly Rita agreed to go out for dinner and this time kept her word. They went to Chinatown and ate chow mein. When Orson told her good night, she was in love, lost in the spell that Mister Influence wove like a web.

Rita was set to make Cover Girl then, a very swell musical you'll remember. It was a big production for Columbia with Technicolor and tricky dances. They'd borrowed Gene Kelly from M-G-M; rehearsals were starting. Time was a-wasting and big money, too. That's why Harry Cohn shouted "No" when Orson wanted Rita to stooge for his magic act in the tent show he was putting on for GIs in Hollywood. But Orson said that was the thing for Rita to do. So she did it. For a hard-headed show girl like Rita, that was love, or hypnotism or something.

Orson could have used any one of a dozen willing stars in Hollywood in his USO carnival act. Marlene Dietrich stepped in when Rita finally had to go to work, and filled the bill beautifully. But Orson is selfish. Nobody counts but Orson once he takes off on an airy flight of genius. But that's the kind of a daffy divinity Rita Hayworth fell for and married.

Well, at least, she does have a child! Little Rebecca, "Becka" as she's already named herself, looks exactly like Orson, black curls and all. But she's Rita's darling. Every gurgle and gasp and baby memento has been recorded in a huge picture book Rita keeps.

For all Orson loves his little Becka, Rita knows that nothing else in the world really matters to him once he's lost in one of his creative trances. Not a wife or a baby or anything except those ideas buzzing about in his brain. One week-end during shooting, Rita talked Orson into a trip to her beloved Mexico. They went just to Rosa Rita Beach, across the border. But Orson hauled along his typewriter and rewrote the whole finish of the picture!

One of the fuses that set off their second marital blow-up was Orson's refusal to regard Rita as a human being and a wife. She was dog-tired after her exhausting marathon acting ordeal. After that last scene I saw, she begged Orson to go away with her for a rest. "Tomorrow," he answered, day after day, and whisked right in to the cutting room to pore over his precious film. He tomorrowed himself out of a wife at last. "I had to get away or I'd have collapsed," Rita told me. "So I walked out." How else?

Actually, this final split wasn't too different from the first one—when Rita had consoled herself with Vic Mature and Tony Martin, while Orson spent his time back East with the arty Broadway boys and girls—producing a play.

Oddly enough, that play he lost his shirt with on Broadway, Around the World in 80 Days, was what brought Orson back to Hollywood and a big factor, I suspect, in bringing Orson and Rita back together for a second try at love. To help finance it, Orson charmed Harry Cohn, head of Columbia, out of $80,000, advanced against an Orson Welles picture job. When that went down the box-office drain, along with another $300,000 of Orson's (and some other people's), Orson, flat broke, faced making a Hollywood comeback whether he wanted to or not.

a role for rita . . .

Orson brought his pet Mercury Theater actors out from New York (most of them have never made a picture before) and prepared to shoot. If I Die Before I Wake they called it then, and it was a man's picture tailored to Orson and his Mercury pal, Everett Sloane. Then, one night Orson went out to the house to see Rita and daughter, Becka. The next week his production was The Lady From Shanghai and the picture was Rita's. Orson rewrote it in eight days, gave her the co-star part. Then they announced their official reconciliation.

Rita was happy at first, working and learning from her favorite maestro.

They spent most of the time cruising around in Mexico on Errol Flynn's yacht, the "Zaca." And they acted like a pair of newlyweds.

One night, for instance, Rita was ashore while Orson was out in the bay doing some night scenes with Errol (Flynn was skipper—at $750 a day on this job.) But Rita couldn't stand to be apart from her maestro even that long. So she trekked around Acapulco with Errol's wife, Nora, and rounded up a native Mariachi band. They found a fisherman with a boat and slipped out in the bay, circled the yacht in the dark, then had the guitars and swarthy crooners cut loose with a serenade. Then they climbed on board into their loving husbands' arms.

When Rita's birthday came up they were still in Mexico. Orson tossed a banquet for Rita at Las Americas Hotel with all the

WALTER THORNTON, originator of the Pin-Up Girl says: "I recommend Flame-Glo Lipstick to all of my pin-up models for extra beauty, extra glamour . . . no blurry edges!"

JAN CHRISTY, one of the popular Thornton Pin-Up Beauties

Pin-up Girls acclaim Flame-Glo

One pin-up girl tells another . . . and that's how Flame-Glo Lipstick's popularity grew! You've heard it, too . . . the story of its color-vibrant magnetism, its alluring loveliness, its "come hither" attraction for men. Yes, you can count on Flame-Glo as the pin-ups do . . . for day-long beauty that keeps hours longer, thanks to its water-repellency. No blurred edges! In your choice of Raspberry, Royal Wine, Glamour Red, Medium, Ruby Red, Pink Fire, Dynamic Red or Pinwheel Red. Try Flame-Glo today!

KEEP KISSABLE WITH

Flame-Glo LIPSTICK

MATCHING ROUGE, FACE POWDER AND CAKE MAKE-UP AT ALL 10c & 25c COSMETIC COUNTERS

Which Twin has the Toni?

(and which has the beauty shop permanent?)

Lovely Consuelo O'Connor of New York, the Toni twin, says "None of our friends could tell our permanents apart—can you? (See answer below) My Toni wave was soft and natural looking the very first day. That's why Sis is sold on Toni, too, for her next permanent."

Yes, you can give yourself a lovely TONI Home Permanent for your date tonight!

You'll beam with happiness when your mirror reflects your lovely Toni Home Permanent — deep, graceful waves, heavenly soft and so natural looking! No trick to giving yourself a Toni, either. Easy as rolling your hair up on curlers. Takes only 2 to 3 hours, right at home . . . no sitting under a hot dryer. Your Toni is frizz-free and easy to manage from the start . . . lasts as long as a $15 permanent. That's why every hour of the day another 1000 women use Toni. That's why you'll want to get a Toni Home Permanent Kit today. On sale at all leading drug, notion and cosmetic counters. Consuelo, the twin at the right, is the one with the Toni Home Permanent. Did you guess?

De Luxe Kit with re-usable plastic curlers	Regular Kit with fiber curlers	Refill Kit complete except for curlers
$2.00	$1.25	$1.00

All prices plus tax • Prices slightly higher in Canada

TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

Toni HOME PERMANENT

THE CREME COLD WAVE

Mexican big shots there, the really high brass of the land. They all toasted the lovely lady and that night on her pillow she found a diamond pendant from her thoughtful hubby.

Orson might be a lovable, livable husband, if he didn't have that spur of genius eternally prodding him out of all normal social interests. He has absolutely no relaxing interests to sop up his atomic energy.

His daughter, Becka, usually sees him on the gallop. Orson had to fly to Hollywood on business while making a street scene for The Lady From Shanghai, up in San Francisco. He flew down and flew back. "Did you get to see Rebecca?" Rita asked him.

"Oh, yes," said Orson. "Had a nice visit. She rode with me to the airport to catch the plane!"

Opposed to Orson's genius and dynamic qualities, Rita's really a very normal, unspectacular girl with simple tastes and normal yearnings. She's a model mother, both with Becka and Christopher, Orson's nine-year-old daughter by his first wife. Christopher is always welcome at Rita's.

I had hopes that this time the noble experiment of Svengali with Love would work. I hoped it more for Rita's sake than Orson's. After all, he's got his genius to keep him warm.

I hope, above all, now that she's had a taste of the astral spheres of acting, Rita won't be spoiled for her musicals, whether The Lady From Shanghai hits or misses the box-office bus. That would be a shame; Rita has such a wonderful, adoring public for her songs and dances, her pretty face and figure. And it could happen. A friend of mine who knows Orson as well as I do, maybe better, was laying odds that if Orson stuck around long enough, Harry Cohn would lose his musical queen.

I, myself, might place a cautious bet that if Orson sticks around where Rita is very long, or vice versa, he'll have her back in his spell and there'll be kissings and makings up and a third inning of Svengali vs. Love. That guy Orson is Dick Tracy's "Influence" without the glass eyes, and he's still the father of Rita Hayworth's child.

But if Rita and Orson do try it again, I'd like to suggest a good text for that needle-point sampler they may want to hang over their mantelpiece.

It's an old gag we used to plant around Hollywood—only in this case I wouldn't be exactly kidding—and it reads, "Danger —Genius at Work!"

MODERN SCREEN

"You might at least hold the picture!"

VAN HEFLIN, THAT IS . . .

(Continued from page 40)

with you about Vana, that daughter of yours.

Van: What about her?

Lana: This dressing her in overalls has got to stop, that's all. Everytime my Cheryl goes over to your place to play, she comes home demanding that I get her some overalls.

Van: Well, why don't you?

Lana: Because, I want her to wear dresses now. It's all right for you to make a tomboy of Vana if you want to.

Van: Now look here, that Cheryl is pretty much of a rough-neck when she wants to be.

Lana: That's what I'm afraid of . . .

Director: All right, let's do it again. Remember, Lana, this is the supreme moment.

It was, too. They are saying all over Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer that this love scene between Van Heflin and Lana Turner in Green Dolphin Street will start more hand-holding in theater balconies than spring fever.

Some fun!

I talked to Van a little later. "Is making love to Lana Turner such nice work?" I quizzed him.

"Sure," he told me. "It's pleasant, certainly, but Lana is a neighbor of mine, and we are in love with a couple of other people. That visitor from Indiana has got to give us credit for some pretty good acting, as well."

The "other person" in Van Heflin's life is his pert, intelligent, red-haired actress wife, Frances Neal, whose Petty Girl figure belies the fact that she has two strapping youngsters.

Talk about your Hollywood romances, there are none that match the fictional quality of the Van Heflins'!

Back in 1940, Frances Neal was cutting quite a figure as a model and stage actress. She was one of the more beautiful sights to be seen of an April afternoon around 58th Street in Manhattan, as she walked home in the wind from rehearsal to her room at the Barbizon.

boy almost meets girl . . .

Of an identical afternoon, a tall (six foot, one inch) attractive guy likewise put his shoulders to the spring wind, and wound up in the apartment building next to the Barbizon. Van Heflin, then as now, knew a pretty girl when he saw one, and was not too absorbed in his pursuit of acting opposite Katharine Hepburn and other queens of the theater, to miss seeing the red-haired girl.

In fact, although he didn't know her name, Van saw her often, usually at Ruby Foo's and the drug store across from the Barbizon. Before he managed to wangle an introduction, she was gone and so was he—to a wonderful oasis called Hollywood.

Frances worked at RKO and Van at Metro. There are some eight miles between. The tall man no longer saw the red-haired girl and he missed her. The feeling was vice-versa, but they weren't suffering. In fact, they were each interested in a couple of other people when they met two years later at a dinner party.

They talked. They forgot the dinner. Van forgot to ask for her telephone number.

Two days later, Dorothy Pasternak, wife of movie-maker Pasternak, gave Frances Neal a ring. Would she like to come out to the ranch for a weekend? Frances couldn't possibly. She had a couple of dates. That was too bad, Dorothy said,

Now! Expensive looking charm and elegance for less than a dollar a window! New drapes for less than it costs to clean your old ones.

Made of genuine plasticized cellulose—strong yet soft and graceful—CLOPAY Lintoned Drapes are a full 2⅔ yards long. Matching tie backs — automatic pleater—reinforced edges. In a stunning array of florals, stripes and plaids. Only 98c a pair.

Clopay offers you two types of curtains—for kitchen, bath, bedroom—for every window from attic to basement. 7-pc. Cottage Sets (above) only 59c. 5-pc. Hollywood Style (right) only 39c. Plasticized cellulose in gingham, polka dot and strawberry patterns.

Bring dingy windows to life with durable cellulose shades. Lintoned to "look like linen." Won't crack, fray or pinhole.

As low as 19c ready to attach to roller without tacks or tools. With washable oil finish, 39c. (On rollers about 20c more.)

Free Booklet: "Beautiful Windows at Low Cost." Write to: Clopay Corp., 1280 Clopay Sq., Cincinnati 14, O.

CLOPAY

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Beautiful windows at low cost

Now Available at 5 and 10c Stores, Variety Stores, Department and Other Stores.

Every moment...
be delightfully perfumed!

Be irresistibly lovely every moment . . . awake every morning still veiled in dainty fragrance that clings to your body, your pillow, your bed. Just follow this enchanting ritual: First—bathe in water made fragrant and soft as dew by Bathasweet Water Softener; it is far more cleansing than ordinary water . . . helps you to lasting daintiness. Second—use Bathasweet Soap in the same delightful fragrance. Third—accentuate your loveliness with Bathasweet Cologne. Finally—give your body the smoothness of alabaster with Bathasweet Talc, also in the same fragrance. Enjoy this luxurious ritual tonight. For your morning bath, use the same Bathasweet ritual for day-long loveliness.

Bathasweet Ritual

1. Perfumed Water Softener (30 baths—$1.25)
2. Soap (box of 3, $1.50)
3. Cologne ($1.50)
4. Talc (Mitt $1, Canister 50¢)

All Prices Plus Tax, Except Soap

3 fragrances: Spring Morning, Garden Bouquet, Forest Pine
Other Bathasweet luxuries:
Bubbling Bath Oil, Foam Bath, Pine Oil, Shower Mitts

because they had another guest, a nice young actor from New York called Van Heflin.

"Well, look," Frances said quickly, "I wouldn't want you to be stuck with an extra man. I'll just cancel my other dates."

The next evening after a ranch dinner, Frances and Van sat down in front of a roaring fire to make conversation with the other guests. Somehow, the others disappeared. They talked about the things folks do in Oklahoma, where Van came from and Texas, where Frances came from. They discovered that the male parents of both were dentists.

At six o'clock in the morning, the Pasternaks came downstairs for an early morning ride and discovered that neither Frances nor Van had thought about sleeping. Van had to go into town for a radio rehearsal, and he took off again without asking for Frances' phone number.

Two days later Frances received the phone call she had by then convinced herself was not coming!

"This is Van Heflin," the voice said. "I'm taking my mother to dinner tonight. Afterwards, along about nine, I wonder if you'd like to go for a ride."

Frances thought she would.

At ten minutes after nine, Van loomed through the door. He looked at her reflectively for a moment. Then—

"Will you marry me?" he asked.

She didn't exactly say "yes" or "no" for a week. She never did exactly say "yes," and so they were married three weeks later at the little Congregational Church in Westwood. At ten o'clock in the morning. Dorothy and Joe Pasternak were there. Also Frances' mother and father, Van's mother and Cleatus Caldwell.

In the afternoon they drove to Del Monte for their honeymoon, and on the way Van said something funny to Frances.

"You know," he remarked casually, "you remind me a lot of a girl I used to see every now and then up around 58th Street in New York."

Which was natural enough.

Van Heflin still isn't aware of what a superlative actor he is. In spite of that Academy Award for Johnny Eager and consistently knockout performances in The Strange Love of Martha Ivers, Possessed, and Dolphin Street, he is still an actor in search of himself. In his personal life he has obviously found himself at last, but that has been a long pull. It goes back five years. On the morning of November 19th, 1942, the doorbell rang and a Western Union messenger boy said, "I've got a telegram here for Lieutenant E. E. Heflin." (Van's real name is Emmett E.)

Van had mentioned something about holding a reserve commission from way back, but it had skipped Frances' mind.

HOW MANY CAN YOU NAME?

SOS—how many slogans can you name that begin with those same danger-signaling letters? Here's one we'll bet you never heard before: SUPPLIES for OVERSEAS SURVIVORS. And right now this cry for help is the most urgent SOS of all. For there are still 1,500,000 hopeless victims of Hitler's Europe who may die tomorrow or next week or next month—unless we help them live! That's why the Joint Distribution Committee, here in the U.S.A., is collecting food stuffs, clothing, medicines, layettes, household and comfort items, books and even toys for immediate distribution abroad. Please send your contributions to the Joint Distribution Committee, Inc., 270 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Remember: the supplies you give will help them live.

Over his coffee and breakfast roll Van gave her the news.

"I've been reactivated."

"You've been what?"

"Don't worry, honey," Van laughed, "it's no worse than a kick in the head."

There's a place called San Luis Obispo. Also a rough, tough joint called Camp Roberts. Men who have been there don't forget it. And there are some around who will remember a guy who was officer in Field Artillery. A good gent, but sort of nervous, along toward the end of training particularly. He managed to get hold of an undated pass because his wife was having a baby. All he had to do was fill it out and scram.

That's what he did when Vana Heflin was born.

Then he came back to Camp Roberts, got hurt and went to the hospital. They put him in limited service and he was sent to Culver City, which is close to Hollywood. It burned him up, even though he was glad to be near Frances and the tyke. What the hell, people might start calling him a Hollywood Commando, and that was a bad name.

Back in those days Fort Roach was considered a large joke, and not until the war was over did the people find out that some men who never got out of there did great work for the Air Corps. Anyway, in January, 1943, Van took off for Panama with a unit to do a jungle training film. When he came back he still had the itch to really get into it.

He did. Combat camera crews were being organized. He went over, attached to the 9th Bombardment group. He got around in France and Germany, before and after D-Day.

Frances received a letter on the 10th of December, 1945, saying he thought they were going to hang around in Germany for quite awhile; either that or he'd be on his way to China. Later the same day, a telephone call came from New York. He'd been assigned a special courier job, and after going on to Washington he'd be home. He was, on December 13th, his birthday.

The next night he broke out a bottle of Cognac and we all sat down to an extended session of Blackjack.

what's in a name? . . .

I remember slipping and calling him Van Johnson once during the course of the evening.

"You unprintable word," Van said, and grinned.

There was no getting around a certain friction that had to come as the result of a similarity of names. Now it can be talked about without anyone getting sensitive. Van Heflin had been away about three years. Van Johnson had become a smash hit at the box office, and all the power of a great studio had been focused on getting him the right pictures.

Van Heflin had dropped out of sight before the Oscar reputation cashed itself in. There were other actors coming back from the army, and the studios were not set to get them moving all at once.

So Van Heflin got a little sore. Certain little groups of Hollywood jerks who talk more than they think, needled the situation. A prolonged feud might have resulted, except that Hal Wallis came along with The Strange Love of Martha Ivers, a picture filmed at Paramount. Van Heflin and Van Johnson are no longer in painful proximity. When Ivers was previewed, heads and attitudes cleared.

The whole thing was so simple. The two guys didn't look alike or act alike. The conflict fell flat on its face. So flat that when I bumped into the two Vans at a party given by Atwater Kent, the two were talking together without sneering under-

Are you sure of your loveliness—sure the deodorant you now use gives you complete protection 24 hours of every day? Be sure—switch today to safe, new Odorono Cream.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours

Wonderful, new wartime discovery gives more effective protection than any deodorant known.

New Odorono Cream not only protects your daintiness a full 24 hours, with the most effective perspiration-stopper known, but . . .

It gives you the exclusive extra protection of HALGENE . . . The new wonder ingredient that checks perspiration odor.

Just think! One application of new Odorono Cream in the morning keeps you dainty—all day and night.

Does not irritate. So safe and gentle—can be used after shaving.

Stays soft and smooth down to the last dab. Never gritty. (Even if you leave the cap off for weeks.)

Greaseless, stainless, vanishing. Odorono leaves no sticky film. Protects dresses from perspiration stain and odor.

More economical! Odorono gives 21 more applications from a 39¢ jar than other leading brands. Savings on 10¢ and 59¢ sizes, too. (Odorono comes in liquid form, also.)

Full 24 hour protection with Odorono Cream

Lovely hair deserves fine care
...use Du Pont Combs
It's as easy as falling in love . . . to keep your hair satin-smooth with plastic Du Pont Combs! Careful of your curls, thoughtful of your scalp, yet strong, strong, strong! You'll want every gay color—you'll need a complete comb wardrobe. Du Pont quality—10 to 50¢. At all good stores.
DU PONT
Du Pont Combs
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

neath or feeling uncomfortable.

To many people, Van Heflin still is a question mark on the Hollywood scene. This is because, beyond his powerful Ivers role, his work has not yet reached the public. Frankly, I think it's taken a little too long, because there is a stature about Van Heflin, both in his work and private life, that motion pictures have too long lacked.

It's nice to know a guy who is not interested in how sweet are the uses of publicity. An actor who has long range plans for career, home and family, and can't be swayed by eight items in a gossip column.

Van Heflin is a strange one. He has two children, but it's hard for him to assume the role of the acrobatic father who tumbles on the floor with the kids and spouts baby talk. On the contrary, he talks to his newest offspring, Cathleen Carol, age eight months, as though she had just finished a highbrow thesis on The Life and Times of Little Red Riding Hood.

He's moody to the point of forgetting who's in a room; argumentative for the delight of mental conflict. He plots his career like a writer conjuring up an intricate story. He'll sit up all night, as well, helping a friend work the kinks out of dialogue, and the next night spend the same amount of time worrying over whether or not he can draw to an inside straight.

He's a lad who is human to the point of being able to look interested even while not signing an autograph. An honest guy who says, "Fight with Frances? My boy, the arguments we have are incredible, but you'll never hear the neighbors talking about us.. They live out of earshot."

"I can be a problem," Frances offered. "I do the darndest things on the spur of the moment."

"You sure do," Van agreed. "And so do I."

That reminded them of a beauty they'd been through awhile back. Just like a married couple, they've forgotten what set it off. Van didn't talk to Frances for a couple of days. Or maybe it was the other way around. Then they packed up and went to Big Bear in the mountains. They spent five days walking in the woods and sitting by the fire, reading. It was close harmony.

"And do you know what?" Van asked. "We had a great time—until we discovered the simple life was turning out to be a hell of a bore. We got into the car, went to Las Vegas, and I proved how smart I was. I bucked the dice table and dropped $200.

"You can't take that loss off the income tax. Frances suggested I get it back by asking the business manager for a cut in my allowance.

"For once I had to agree."

Jinx Falkenburg . . .

star of NBC's top radio program, "Hi Jinx!" She poses for our "How To Have a Wonderful Vacation" issue in a three piece playsuit designed to have fun in. It's crisp red and white seersucker frosted with eyelet—and that flounce on the skirt is definitely new. Under the skirt there's a cute pair of pert straight-cut shorts. Playsuit comes also in blue checks. Sizes 10-18.

By Korday	$10.95.
Kickerinos Shoes	$6.95.

To find out where to buy these fashions, please turn to page 90.

modern screen
fashions

• Take to the woods in a white ruffled blouse—not a thing on your shoulders but a smitch of eyelet, laced with black ribbon. The skirt is red or blue seersucker, with a flirty ruffle up the back. Jinx Falkenburg demonstrates what this sort of thing does for a girl.
Skirt, 12-18 . . . . . $2.98.
Dotted swiss blouse . . . . . $3.98.
By Boreva Sportswear.

How to have a wonderful vacation

HAVE A PICNIC

in a Mexican blouse and vivid playskirt

• A handsome man will certainly offer to tote your basket if you wear this puff-sleeved dotted swiss blouse—blue butcher rayon skirt with red lacing. Skirt also maize, pink, white, with contrasting lacing.
Blouse, 10-16.....$2.98
Skirt, 10-16.....$3.98.
By Boreva Sportswear.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 90

NEW! Never before anything like the new Flexnit figure flatterers . . . sensational new Flexnit feather-light fabric containing Nylon—runproof, amazingly long-lasting, stretches every way—wonderful streamlining and comfort never possible before! Surprisingly low-priced. Complete range of styles, beautiful new colors —nude pink, blue caress, carnation white. See the new Flexnits before you buy another girdle. (Write for name of store nearest you.) FLEXNIT, 200 Madison Ave., New York 16

Illustrated: Remarkably flattering new Flexnit style of exclusive Nylon-light Flexnit fabric; smart satin panel; zipper. Also pantie-girdle with detachable crotch. Other styles, colors.

FLEXNIT

. . . made for YOUth

How to have a wonderful vacation

MEET YOUR DATE

in a romantic flounced cotton with sweet eyelet embroidery

• Here's the kind of dress they write those June-moon songs about. Meant for dreaming in the starlight—with someone to help with the dreaming, of course. It has a white eyelet yoke, slit puffed sleeves, and tiny pearl buttons in back. Worn by Jinx Falkenburg. Dan River plaid, in blue, brown or pink. Sizes 7-15.
By Susan Shane. $12.95.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 90

How to have a wonderful vacation

Pose for a picture (for your boy friend's wallet) in striped seersucker with eyelet. Rose or green. 32-38. By Lee Knitwear. $5.

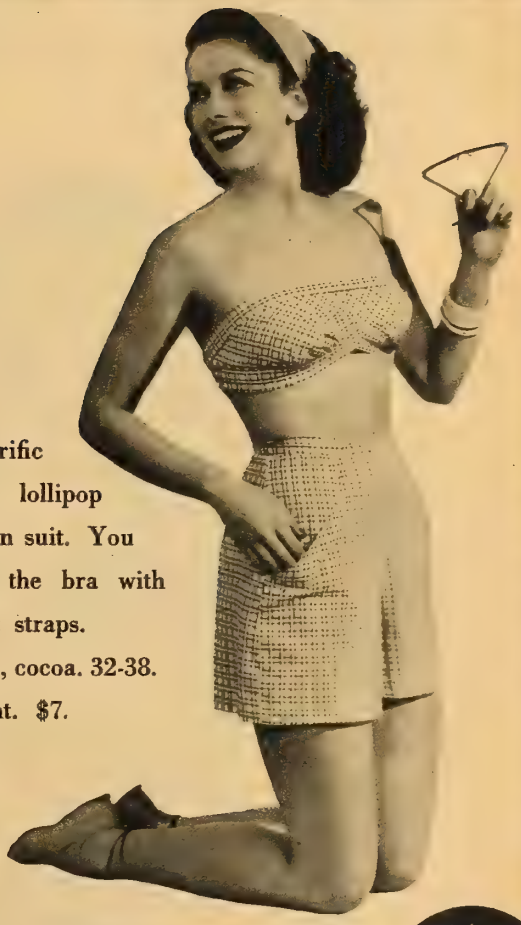
Make your entrance on the beach in the cutest of all beachcoats. It's flared white Sanforized twill with red ric-rac. 12-18. By Boreva Sportswear. About $5.98.

(POSED BY JINX FALKENBURG)

PLAY ON THE BEACH

in a bra-top suit and a flared-back white beach coat

Play beachball in whistle-black satin lastex, siren jersey stripes. Also white, royal, maize, shocking, turquoise. 32-38. By Sea Nymph. $6.



Toast a terrific tan in a lollipop plaid cotton suit. You can wear the bra with or without straps. Gold, coral, cocoa. 32-38. By Brilliant. $7.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 90

GO TO TOWN in a vivid cotton print

• When you jaunt into town for a movie—slip on a bright and dark plaid coat dress, frosted with white pique . . . and dress it up with gloves and bright jewelry. Paramount's Arleen Whelan poses. Dress comes in blue or brown Dan River plaid. Sizes 12-20.

By Peerless Casuals $10.95

WHERE TO BUY
See page 90

How to have a wonderful vacation

Modern Screen shops for you

BY MAXINE FIRESTONE

Need a pair of sunglasses? Here's a pair with specs appeal in the frames. They're made of plastic and slant upward to give you that wonderful Chinese-y look. White is especially nice with a sunburn, but they do come in red, flesh, or natural too. All packed in a clear plastic carrying case to prevent scratching. Made by Grantly. To sell for about $1. Order from Macy's, N. Y.

This bra has been made with great care and precision for the girl with a small bust. Two adjustable buckles gather together the elastic insert under each cup to make it appear fuller. Sizes 30 to 36. The cup size is important—AA for the very small, A for the small, B for the average. It's by Lucille Garden. In nylon it's $2.50, in broadcloth $2. Mandel Bros., Chicago, Ill.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
SERVING THROUGH SCIENCE

Less than the Cost of One Wave-Set—

For a Whole Summer of Hair-Dry Swimming!

THIS WONDERFUL U. S. Howland HAIR DRY SWIM CAP KEEPS YOUR HAIR-DO Really Dry

Fitted in sizes like a hat . . .

Look as attractive on the beach as you do at a party. Your worries are over, now that these wonderful U. S. Howland Hair Dry Swim Caps are back. Ask for your correct head-size at your department or specialty store.

U.S. Howland HAIR DRY SWIM CAP

WITH THE EXCLUSIVE SNUG-FIT FEATURE

Only U. S. Howland has the patented V-shaped reinforcing ribs that turn flaps inward to make a perfect seal.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY • Rockefeller Center • New York 20, N. Y.

HOW SEE-WORTHY
ARE YOU?
Made to enhance the lithe line of your figure. Daringly feminine and so wearable . . . In satin LASTEX* with multi-color striped jersey. At smart shops everywhere.
LASTEX* woven by FAB-TEX
Sea Nymph swim suits by jordan
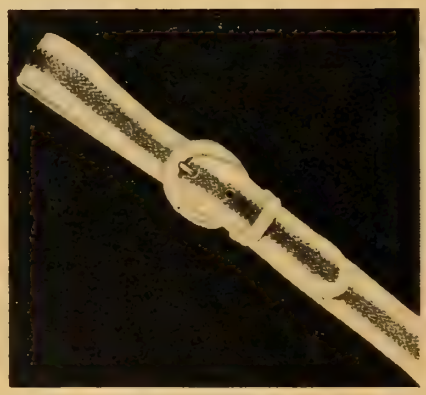
JORDAN MANUFACTURING CORP.
1410 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

BY MAXINE FIRESTONE

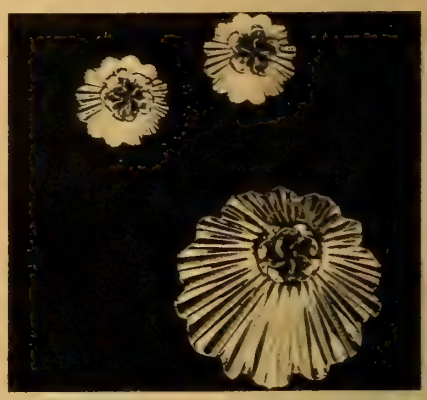
Modern Screen shops for you

A metal case to hold your lipstick and brush—even has a handy mirror. Choice of six luscious shades. By Henry Rosenfeld. $1.50, plus tax, at Arnold Constable, N. Y.

Isn't this the cutest party bag? A shiny white plastic with gold stripes, zipper closing. Washes like a hanky. By Garay. About $3, at Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn, N. Y.



A belt to match our favorite bag. Plastic in white and gold. Wear separately or together—you can't go wrong! By Garay, $1, at Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn, N. Y.



What pretty shells! Matching pin and earring set, gold or silver finish. Tailored, expensive looking. By Ernest Steiner. $2 each, plus tax, at Gerlou, 501 5th Ave., N. Y.

Pottery ash trays with "thank you for a lovely evening," any saying up to seven words, or initials. Blue or beige, $1. Town & Country Gifts, 906 Madison Ave., N. Y.

Stuff your all into this plastic beach bag. You can also use it as a beach pillow (just unscrew the tube and blow). Blue, green or clear. About $4, Saks-34th St., N. Y.

WE TREK ALL AROUND THE TOWN

HUNTING FIENDISHLY FOR FASHION

FINDS YOU CAN ORDER BY

MAIL AT PIN MONEY PRICES

Here's a gadget to hold your scarf in place, and to just look cute on its own hook. Take your scarf, tie it only once and then slide this gadget up to the most comfortable spot. Use your scarf as a belt, neckerchief or bandeau—this looks good anywhere! Called Kno-Knot and styled by Clerici. Comes in all colors. In plastic, 40c. Gold or silver finish, $1. Bloomingdale's, N. Y.

A sweater that's called Campus Cupid—because it's such a love. Sentimental Jaquard designs, hearts, cupids, and cute sayings on pure virgin wool. Comes in wonderful colors: pink, sky-blue, maize, champagne, and pearl. Wear it at the beach—on cool nights—and anytime you're in the mood to have some fun. Sizes 34 to 40. By Glengarry, about $6. Hovey's, Boston, Mass.

*Only Peter Pan makes patented Merry-Go-Round—LOOK FOR THE LABEL!

Merry-Go-Round *

A PETER PAN BRA

Merry-Go-Round encircles your bust with glamour—transforms a small bust into alluring, feminine curves—gives a full bosom youthful, firm contours. Circles of stitching support the bust—patented Circular Bias molds the bust. The secret's in the circle!

For FREE Booklet, "Your New Guide to Bustline Beauty," Write Dept. D-3

PETER PAN 116 EAST 27 ST., NEW YORK 16

"GLAMOUR DATE"

Wear it when you yearn to look your most alluring! Hug-me-tight, longer waistline, wide, patent leather front, double-tab belt. Swirling, full, F-U-L-L skirt, pleated all 'round. Sensational at this price! Sleek, smooth rayon with keyhole neckline outlined in expensive daisy lace. Aqua, rose, gray, powder, maize, lilac, white. 9-11-13-15-17.

Only $5.98

BROADWAY FASHIONS
275 Seventh Ave., New York City

SEND NO MONEY!

BROADWAY FASHIONS, Dept. DM6
275 Seventh Ave., New York 1, N. Y.
Send "GLAMOUR DATE" on approval. I'll pay postman $5.98 plus postage. If not delighted, I may return dress for refund within ten days. If prepaid, we pay postage.

Quantity	Size	First Color Choice	Second Color Choice	C.O.D.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE_____ STATE_____

Sensational!

ZIP
ALL-PURPOSE HAIR REMOVER
• A new and delightfully fragrant cream
• Amazing results. Quick, easy
• Contains no caustics
• Does more than merely remove surface hair
• Leaves your skin satin-smooth
• Eliminates the entire hair—
IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

ZIP
BANISHES HAIR
JÖRDEAU INC. NEW YORK

ALWAYS BE BATH FRESH. THAT'S THE WARM-WEATHER HINT TO KEEP YOU CHARMING AT WORK, HOME OR RESORT!

by Carol Carter, Beauty Editor

-day for beauty!

■ *B*eauty in a bathing suit is a better sign of summer than an overflowing thermometer or a noisy robin. Anne (Trail Street) Jeffreys poses in designer Frances Sider's suit to prove that summer has come to MODERN SCREEN! And Anne gives us good grooming hints for sun-time. "Summer beauty," says she, "begins with the bath!"

*B*ecause heat is intense and activities are more highly geared, your body demands daily cleaning. When a-tubbing, use a pure, rich soap to work up a froth of de luxe suds. A long-handled brush will help you get at the hard-to-reach places on your pink-and-white self. Fragrant oil, crystals or bubble bath soften water, make richer lather.

*B*ent on all-day daintiness? Treat yourself to a generous splash of zesty cologne after toweling. Incidentally, we girls may buy all our bath toiletries to match. Cologne, bath oil, toilet water, sachet and such delights, all are fragrantly in tune! In their pretty packages they also make the ideal gift for a week-end hostess.

*B*ath-time insurance is very important. A deodorant protects against unpleasant odor. An antiperspirant checks the flow of perspiration, keeps underarms cool and dry. And the men in your family will be grateful if you leave the jar or bottle handy for them.

*B*y now your summer bathing regime (plenty of soap, fragrant toiletries, perspiration check) assures you of complete daintiness. Do continue the theme by slipping into only the freshest of undies. Let your clothes avoid all trace of mustiness, soil or stain. Home dry-cleaning helps on this count. One particularly good cleaning fluid and its companion "spot and stain remover" are wonderful wardrobe aids.

*B*each-side clothes reveal more of you than does your usual garb. You will look smooth, I assure you, because daily scrubbing leaves skin firm, scale-free, unblemished. As an extra skin-beautifier try this: about once a week give yourself an all-over massage with a creamy skin lotion. If elbows and heels are sand-papery, slather them with a rich cream.

*B*utterscotch to bisque, whatever the shade of your tan, suntan oil or lotion will keep you scorch-proof in the sun. And remember that basic daily bath to keep you beautiful in the sun!

* * *

Be your own make-up artist. The 12-page booklet. "How to Use Makeup" tells about application methods, "tools," even camouflage of facial defects! Send 10c with your name and address to: Carol Carter, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

La Cross hands you a new idea!

Naylon, the new nail polish miracle!
Genius designed this bottle that won't tip, tilt or topple. And genius made this Steady Stroke Applicator too. It's easy to hold as a pencil, applies polish as simply as you sign your name. Naylon itself is a dream nail polish...dries faster, lasts longer, is flexible as a fingernail. You'll find the colors tantalizing...especially flaming, vibrant Congo Magic. Yes, La Cross puts polish perfection at your fingertips...60¢ plus fed. tax.

and in a word it's naylon by La Cross

SCHNEFEL BROS CORPORATION • 630 FIFTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 20, N.Y.

NAYLON TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Quite a difference here! One of these summer wash dresses costs $17.95 . . . and the other, $45. More than twice as much!

But the interesting thing is that both dresses look equally crisp, fresh and appealing—because they've been starched with LINIT*!

You'll find LINIT Starch gives a fresh, smooth, soil-resisting finish to all your things. Get a package today. Follow the easy directions on the box.

It's the shell pink dress that cost $45.

. . . ADDS THE "finishing touch"

*LINIT IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF CORN PRODUCTS REFINING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N.Y. © C.P.R. CO., 1947

LINIT is the smooth, penetrating starch that makes cotton look and feel luxurious as linen. Use LINIT to restore the charm of a fabric's original finish—for curtains, blouses, accessories, children's clothes, men's shirts. In fact, all your washables.

INFORMATION DESK

by Beverly Linet

LOUIS JOURDAN, who will be the hottest thing in films when his American-made film, The Paradine Case, is released, was born in France 25 years ago, has blue eyes and dark hair, and stands an even 6' in height. He married the lovely Quiqui in France when the war ended. Has no fan club, and can be reached at Selznick Studios, Culver City, Calif.

Welcome back to STERLING HAYDEN, who returns to the screen after war duty, in Blaze Of Noon. He was born in Montclair, N. J., on March 26, 1916. Is 6'5" tall, weighs 212 lbs., and has blond hair and blue eyes. Divorced from Madeleine Carroll. Write him at Paramount Pictures, Hollywood, where he will next be seen in The Sainted Sisters.

You've seen ROBERT ARTHUR as Roz Russell's son in Roughly Speaking, and Kent Smith's boy in Nora Prentiss. He was born in Aberdeen, Wash., June 18, 1925. Is 5'8" tall, weighs 140 lbs. and has blue eyes and brown hair. He's unmarried. Can be reached at 20th-Fox, Beverly Hills, and his next pic is Mother Wore Tights.

Ed S., L. I.: The tune Allyson kept playing in Secret Heart was Chopin's Nocturne, Opus 27, No. 2.

Patsy Taylor, Hollywood: Your favorite comedian, Jan Murray, was born in N. Y. C., 29 years ago. He's 6' 3" tall, weighs 193 lbs., and has blue eyes and black hair. He's married, and has one son. If you'd like a photo, address him c/o The Vanity Fair, B'way and 49th St., N. Y.

Shirley Madans, Bronx: Sandra Swan, 1101 S. 6th Avenue, Ponca City, Okla., has the Barbara Lawrence Club; Stan Jacinski, 9023 Plainview Ave., Detroit, Mich., has Jack Buetel's; Mary Downing, Rte. No. 9, Box 265, Houston, Texas, has Billy Daniel's, and Dorene Granade, P. O. Box 22, Tarzana, Calif., has one for that lovely new starlet Helen Gerald.

I haven't spring fever when it comes to your letters, so send lots of them with your questions and self-addressed, stamped envelope, to Beverly Linet, Information Desk, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

SPECIAL OFFER

SUPER-STAR INFORMATION CHART—1946-'47 (10c)—A new better-than-ever edition of the chart that's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia of exclusive, fascinating data on the private lives, wives, hobbies, used-to-be jobs, latest pics of all your favorite stars. 100 additional names never before listed! Please send 10c in coin to Service Dept., MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

BLONDES
Who Wash Hair This Way
Stay Light SAFELY

New Shampoo Made Specially for Blondes Brightens Dull Hair

To help keep light hair from darkening, wash it with BLONDEX, the new 11-minute blonde shampoo. Its rich, cleansing lather instantly removes the dull film that makes hair dark, dingy. Gives hair lovely lightness and lustre. Safe for children. For sparkling, extra highlights, follow your BLONDEX shampoo with BLONDEX GOLDEN RINSE. Adds the tiny touch of color often needed. Both cost little. Get BLONDEX SHAMPOO and BLONDEX GOLDEN RINSE at 10c, drug and department stores.

Skintees
FOR THE GIRL WHO RATES DATES FITS
LIKE YOUR SKIN
Smooth, sweet and neat—these lovable, rinsable knit panties give you alluring figure magic calculated to snare your best beau. What do SKINTEES have that you can't find in ordinary panties? An original system of sizing based on your own hip measurements - in inches. SKINTEES can't bag, bulge or ride. Next time you buy, don't say 'panties'—say SKINTEES.
REG. TRADE MARK

Skintees, INC. Dept. DM
10 W. 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y.

I, too, crave beautiful contours like the SKINTEES Girl. Send me your FREE booklet on FIGURE CONTROL.

NAME.....

STREET.....

CITY.....STATE.....

LETTER FROM THE FASHION EDITOR

Dear You:

Here it is time for your annual two weeks with pay. Or, if you're in school, two whole months of leisure . . . you lucky thing. So our theme for this issue is "How To Have a Wonderful Time on your Vacation."

Now we'd be the last to deny that good duds have a great deal to do with good fun. After all, that idea is practically our life work. But, nevertheless, we feel that one way to be sure you have a wonderful time on your vacation is not to make too much fuss over your clothes. Planning's one thing—stewing's another.

If you could have seen the girls we've seen . . . knocking themselves out with six weeks' shopping—for a two weeks' trip! Getting into a dither hunting down one precise halter or belt they had to have. Flying into a panic that they wouldn't be able to change their costumes at least three times a day. Rushing out at the very last minute for one more evening gown—just in case. Result? Result—they arrived too exhausted to have any fun. And while they were upstairs trying to decide which of their five pairs of shorts to wear—the girl who only brought one pair was down on the tennis court snagging all the handsome men!

Smart travelers have always known that the thing to do is travel light. Certainly you want clothes to cover every occasion—and certainly you want to look as pretty as possible in them. But you can do that with a mere half dozen costumes . . . as we think we prove in this issue:—

Start off with a three-piece playsuit (the one Jinx wears on page 75). This gets you all set for anything active that calls for shorts—and it gives you a midriff playdress for casual fooling around. When you want to be slightly more covered up—climb into one of our Mexican blouses with a full playskirt. These are rugged enough to take any kind of antics from picnics to hikes—and yet feminine enough to sit around on the hotel porch and look alluring. Add a bathing suit and beach coat, a romantic date dress, and a little street dress for running into town. If you think you'll need it, pack one evening dress which you can vary with jewelry and such—and possibly a light topcoat—just in case it's chilly. That adds up to from six to eight costumes. What more could you possibly want? And that way your heart is as light as your traveling bag. And—the total clothes bill is nice and light too!

Have fun!

Connie Bartel

Now it's Dan River's de luxe woven gingham plaids for your fagoted favorite! Crystal-cool white plaided in pink and green, blue and brown, green and black. Sizes 12 to 20. Under $13

Mail Orders will be filled through nearest Tommie Austin retailer. Give second color choice, or write Dept. M for store's name.

TOMMIE AUSTIN CASUALS
1400 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18, N. Y.

Hedy Lamarr
star of
"DISHONORED LADY"
a Hunt Stromberg Production

Styled for the Stars

BY MARTI OF HOLLYWOOD

Now sunglasses join your glamour gallery... with a whole galaxy of flattering fashions.
Choose several styles and colors, for Hollywood says a sunglass wardrobe's the latest thing!
Beautiful! Safe! And so very inexpensive!

Grantly Sunglasses

WHERE YOU CAN BUY THE

HAVE A PICNIC

Three-piece seersucker playsuit worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 75)

Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's
Chicago, Ill.—Chas. A. Stevens & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th

Red leather playshoes worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 75)

Boise, Idaho—C. C. Anderson Co.
Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
St. Paul, Minn.—The Emporium

Dotted swiss off-shoulder blouse worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 76)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Denver, Colo.—The May Co., Downstairs Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers
St. Louis, Mo.—Stix, Baer & Fuller, Downstairs Store

Striped seersucker skirt worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 76)

Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Cleveland, Ohio—The Higbee Co.
Denver, Colo.—The May Co., Downstairs Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers
St. Louis, Mo.—Stix, Baer & Fuller, Downstairs Store

Dotted swiss blouse with square ruffled neck and sleeves worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 77)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Cleveland, Ohio—The Higbee Co.
Denver, Colo.—The May Co., Downstairs Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers
St. Louis, Mo.—Stix, Baer & Fuller, Downstairs Store

Butcher rayon skirt with lacing down front worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 77)

Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Denver, Colorado—The May Co., Downstairs Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers
St. Louis, Mo.—Stix, Baer & Fuller, Downstairs Store

MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

MEET YOUR DATE

Plaid cotton dress with deep hem flounce worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 79)

Birmingham, Ala.—Pizitz
Columbus, Ohio—F. & R. Lazarus
Detroit, Mich.—Frank & Seder
Memphis, Tenn.—Bry-Block
St. Louis, Mo.—Sonnenfeld's

PLAY ON THE BEACH

Sanforized twill beach coat worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 80)

Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Denver, Colo.—The May Co., Downstairs Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers
St. Louis, Mo.—Stix, Baer & Fuller, Downstairs Store

Two-piece striped seersucker bathing suit worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 80)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th

Two-piece "Lollipop" plaid cotton bathing suit worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 81)

Boston, Mass.—Chandler & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Franklin Simon
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Co.

Two-piece satin lastex and jersey bathing suit worn by Jinx Falkenburg (Page 81)

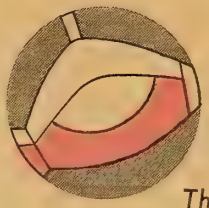
Dubuque, Iowa—Roshek Brothers
Fresno, Calif.—Fresno Dry Goods Co.
Los Angeles, Calif.—Smart Togs Shop
Portsmouth, O.—Bragdon's Dept. Store

GO TO TOWN

Plaid cotton button-down front dress worn by Arleen Whelan (Page 82)

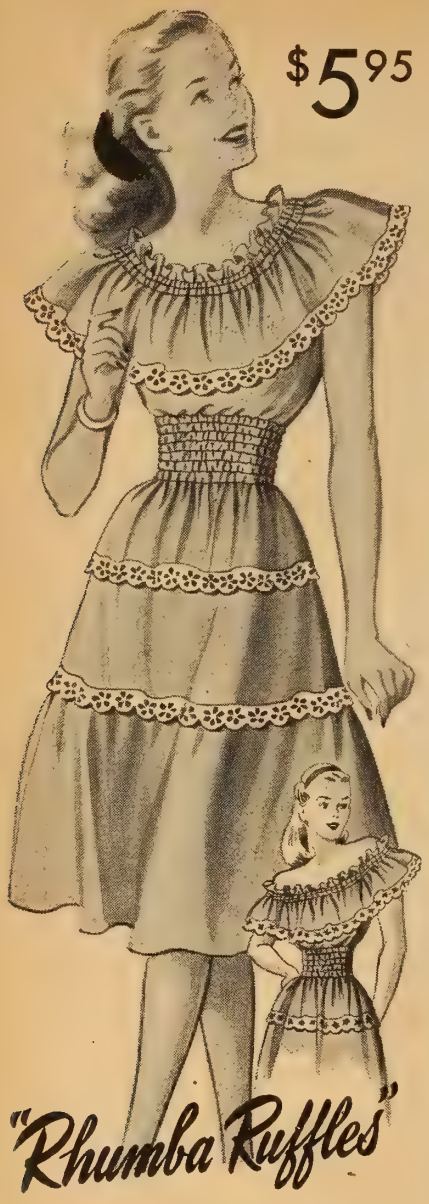
Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh
Cleveland, Ohio—The Higbee Co.
Milwaukee, Wis.—Schuster's
New York, N. Y.—Stern's
Pittsburgh, Pa.—Gimbels

THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN



There's magic in your "Perma·lift" Bra—the magic of comfortable uplift. In a "Perma·lift" Bra, the specially constructed cushion insets at the base of the bra cups gently support your bust from below—never lose that support thru ever so many washings and wearings. Your favorite corsetiere has a "Perma·lift" Bra for you—smartly styled in lovely new fabrics—most styles 1.75 to 3.50. • For a real comfort thrill, you'll also enjoy a new "Perma·lift" Girdle. No Bones About It—Stays Up Without Stays.*

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. STEIN & COMPANY (Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.)



$5.95

"Rhumba Ruffles"

WEAR IT TWO WAYS!

A rhumba number that is out of this world! Ruffled elastic neckline can be worn on or off-the-shoulder, in the South American way. Exquisite Rayon Crepe with white eyelet lingerie trim. Has full swinging skirt and wide elastic shirred midriff. Colors: Powder, Pink, Aqua, Maize. Sizes 9 to 15. $5.95

Dixie Shops

275 Seventh Ave., New York

SEND NO MONEY!

DIXIE SHOPS 275 Seventh Ave. Dept. MS
New York 1, N. Y.

Send me the "Rhumba Ruffles" Dress. On arrival I'll pay the postman $5.95 plus postage.

SIZE—9 ☐ 11 ☐ 13 ☐ 15 ☐

Indicate 1st & 2nd color choice
Powder ☐ Pink ☐ Aqua ☐ Maize ☐

NAME _____
(Print)

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

MONEY REFUNDED IF RETURNED IN 10 DAYS

SECRET HEART

(Continued from page 33)

Between her and Laguna rose a pair of brown eyes that she'd first met in St. Louis six years ago. . .

She'd just been signed to sing with Ted FioRito's band. She was fifteen, and dressed it. When she showed up with her chic, dark-haired mother, the fellows took it for granted that their new vocalist was the pretty brunette.

That's what the boy in the swing thought, as the two walked past toward their cottage on the grounds of the Meadowbrook Country Club. His gaze followed them. Whoever the little blonde was, he didn't like her. Stuck-up, he decided. Jimmy was seventeen. This was his first big-name engagement, too, and his first trip away from home.

At rehearsal he discovered that he'd made two mistakes. The little blonde was the singer, and she wasn't stuck-up. June discovered that the dark slender boy in the swing was Jimmy Zito, that he blew a terrific trumpet, and that the eyes she'd glimpsed in passing were even deeper and softer at close range. They had their first date in Texas. Went to an amusement park and rode The Whip. Pretty soon it was, "Mother, d'you mind if I go with Jimmy and get some ice cream?" or "Mother, Jimmy wants to take me horseback riding—"

The summer ended. Dot and Evvie had closed the Rock Island apartment and joined their mother and sister for the trek to Hollywood, where the band had bookings and Ted had his eye on a movie contract for June. At first it looked hopeful; then it didn't, but by that time Evvie was crazy about Beverly High, and wanted to stay. Before the band left, June was going to Beverly, too, satisfied to let the career simmer for a while. Only thing she hated was saying goodbye to Jimmy.

It was then, as they walked with his arm around her, that Jimmy first asked June to marry him. But, of course, they were much too young. "I'll write every night, though," she promised, and at first she did. And from wherever the band went, came little surprises—funny dolls, woolly animals, and—a big joke between them!—cartons of black olives, because June was mad for them. And on Valentine's Day he always sent an orchid . . .

time to grow . . .

But June was still in the process of growing up—which to every girl means the thrill of romance and attention. And if you're a girl to whom Hollywood has suddenly flung its doors wide open, the glamor's intensified. You work hard but it's exciting work, and you meet all kinds of new and exciting people. One night she had a date with a young man highly placed in movie circles. When she got in, Mother was sound asleep.

"Wake up, Mother! What d'you think happened? Our very first date, and he proposed!"

Mother rolled over. "Are you flattered by that? Go to bed, hon."

Suddenly it made the whole business comical. Giggling, she kissed Mother's ear and went off to bed. . . .

But if she wasn't dazzled, she was certainly interested. There was Vic Mature. Bob Hutton. Bob Stack. John Duzik. And Dave Rose, though Dave was different. Gentle and understanding, you could talk to him about anything in the world. He was like part of the family, the only one of her men friends with whom Mother ever exchanged Christmas gifts.

Yet, through all this, Jimmy was far from forgotten. True, she no longer wrote every night, but she never missed an opening of whatever band he was with, and while he was in town, she'd always concentrate on Jimmy. Mother had the welcome mat out for all their friends, but Jimmy was something special.

"I believe you love him like a son," said Dot.

"Never thought of it that way, but I believe I do."

She wasn't, however, the kind to go around picking husbands, any more than the girls would let their husbands be picked. When Jimmy asked again, the answer was still no, though June's eyes were warm with affection and regret.

"I'm not grown up enough. I'm too busy working. I've got to be sure I'm in love."

It was October, '45, and June was in Chicago for the opening of The Dolly Sisters. Later, they were going to the Pump Room to celebrate. She'd see Jimmy there. He was playing with Les Brown's band.

writer's cramp . . .

Through the nineteen months of his service in the army, she hadn't heard from him once. "I just don't understand it, Mother."

"I do, dear. You know he was never one for the limelight. You're in pictures now. Your name's in the papers. They've got you going out with this one and that. In the army, kids don't make very much. Guess he figures he can't compete."

"What's money got to do with it?"

"Maybe nothing from your point of view. But a lot from his."

In Chicago, she looked for a message at the hotel. Plenty of messages, but none from Jimmy. Well, never mind, he'd have to be at the Pump Room, she'd see him there.

And she did. Across a crowded dance floor, he smiled from behind the trumpet and that was all. No attempt to come down to their table between numbers, no special warmth in the smile, nothing to hint that he'd ever cared two cents about her.

The party over, she and Mother went up to pack. June was abnormally silent.

"What's wrong, honey?"

She burst into tears. "Jimmy, that's what. Not even to call. Not even to come over and say hello or goodbye."

Even Mother couldn't rationalize that one. "If he doesn't care enough to say hello or goodbye, you'll just have to take it." Then, as in a movie, came the rap on the door. "Who is it?"

"Jimmy!" He entered, grinning. "I'll probably lose my job. Just walked off the stand to come up and say goodbye."

June flew at him. "Why didn't you write?" she was demanding, as Mother slipped out and closed the door behind her . . .

In July, Les Brown opened at the Palladium. Dave Rose, who knew all about Jimmy, asked not only June, but Evvie and Mother as his guests. They stood in the doorway, looking for their boy, but all they saw behind the horn was a face with a mustache. It couldn't be Jimmy. Then, from under the mustache, came a thrilling cadenza. It was Jimmy. Who else played cadenzas like that?

"It's got to be a bet," moaned Evvie, "or I'll never forgive him."

As they moved toward their table, the number came to an end. Jimmy stepped down, his eyes on June.

"What're you trying to be, Methuselah?"

"I've got things to tell you."

So Dave said, "Run along," and they sat at a little corner table with a bottle of ginger ale, while Jimmy explained that he had to make himself look older because, come winter, he was organizing an 11-man band of his own. Frank Comstock, Brown's arranger, was all set to do some arrangements for Jimmy, too.

"And we're coming out here to rehearse right after Christmas, because our first bookings'll be on the West Coast."

"Oh, I'm so glad, Jimmy."

Of course, she meant the band. He didn't dare hope that maybe she meant something else, too.

Anyway, they came out in January. Once more June concentrated on Jimmy. But more soberly this time and with clearer vision.

In February she appeared on a Bob Hope broadcast. She'd been tense and on edge and, after all the excitement, she felt let down. People crowded around, lavishing compliments and praise. They were kind and, of course, she was grateful, but what they said just wasn't true. No one could be that good.

Jimmy waited in the hall, cool, matter-of-fact. "You were okay, baby. Let's go get something to eat."

show business . . .

She tucked her hand under his arm and felt wonderful. It was like moving out of a hothouse into fresh air. To Jimmy, the broadcast had been just another job. They talked the same language. Too much of anything embarrassed them both.

"One thing I'm sure of," she told herself that night. "I'll never marry anyone else till he does."

A few evenings later they were all up in her sitting-room, razzing Jimmy about his mustache, for a change. Catching Evvie's eye, June broke into the lingo they keep on tap for exchanging secrets in front of other people. Her sister disappeared, to return with razor, shaving cream and a towel over her arm. "Come on, Mr. Zito, you're having your mustache trimmed."

"Over my dead body—"

"You talk to him, Mother."

"Not me. I remember what my grandmother used to say: kissing a man without a mustache is like eating eggs without salt."

Jimmy eyed her thoughtfully. "Mom, d'you care if I marry June?"

"No, why don't you?"

The small blonde whirled on them both, arms akimbo. "Hey, do I have anything to say about this?"

They discussed it seriously, too, but June couldn't bring herself to say more than maybe. "I don't want to do anything in a hurry."

"In a hurry! I've been asking you for six years. For six years you've been giving me silly reasons why you couldn't."

"They weren't silly, Jimmy. I'm not 21 yet, and you're only 23. Maybe—well, maybe when the picture's finished in June. I want a real honeymoon. I want to walk down the aisle in my bridal satin—I've had it a long time, Jimmy—and the rose-point lace Mother picked up in New Orleans—just think, it's 125 years old."

As they drove home, Jimmy said, "You know, honey, I have a feeling we'll never get married."

"Why, Jimmy?"

"Oh—just a feeling. You'll meet somebody else. I'll meet somebody else—"

That's how matters stood when the director gave her four days off.

At home Evvie was dressing to go out. "I'm having dinner with Jim McNamara and another couple at The Sportsman's

Ansonia famous Debbie
56 99
WITH YOUR OWN INITIALS
(Gold plated)
New York's Favorite Footwear is now available to everyone through our NEW MAIL ORDER SERVICE
Outstanding beauty, grace and perfect fit have made Ansonia Shoes the rage among stage, screen stars and New York's smartly dressed.
Ansonia Fifth Avenue
448 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK • DEPT. 3
5.98
SIZES 4 TO 9
NARROW & MEDIUM
Black Calf, Brown Calf, Red Calf, Green Calf
Blue Calf, Black Patent, Black Suede, White Suede
SEND CHECK OR MONEY ORDER
Stating Size and Color Desired also your initials plus 25c postage how to look like a cool million with a handful of dollars!

we show you how in the july fashion section

Private Addresses of 250 of Hollywood's Top Stars . . .
FREE! —Brochure with over 250 prints absolutely free with each order. . . only 25c
DELUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 65, Box 953
Church St. Annex New York 8, N. Y.

Key to his heart-
*shown ⅓ actual size
Chatelaine* $2.50
Ear-Jewels* $1.25
You'll adore . . . he'll admire this wonderfully wrought, 22 karat gold-plated, rhinestone-ringed chatelaine with matching ear-jewels.
*price incl. tax and postage
Enclosed you will find check — or money order — for $..... Please send Key Chatelaine——— Ear Jewels——— to (please print)
Name.....
Address..... State.....
City.....
THE TREASURE CHEST
545 Fifth Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Keep your Beauty up!

There's new beauty in Bias-Cup, the bra whose patented feature holds your breasts gently but firmly in place... prevents shoulder straps from slipping. In individualized cup depths at better stores.
Write for NEW Beauty Hint Booklet
Made by MODEL BRASSIERES
DEPT. 3D 358 Fifth Ave., New York 1
*U. S. PAT. NO. 2267595
It's the Fit in the Cup that Counts.

Ladies, accept this challenge

Dry Clean all your "Pretties"

LOOK WHAT YOU SAVE!

DRESSES as little as 10¢ each

BLOUSES as little as 5¢ each

NECKTIES as little as 1¢ each

Expert Results or DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK!

The prettiest "pretty," the frilliest frock, all come clean with Renuzit, America's Largest Selling French Dry Cleaner! Dry cleaning at home is the modern way to save! No stretching! No shrinking! No after odor!

Use it according to directions—if not completely satisfied, return the unused portion to Renuzit Home Products Company, Phila. 3, Pa., and receive double the purchase price.

qt. 39¢ 1 gal. 79¢ 2 gal. $1.55

Slightly Higher West of Rocky Mts.

Everything Comes Clean With

RENUZIT

FRENCH DRY CLEANER

For Hard to Remove Spots!

NEW! RENUZIT SPOT AND STAIN REMOVER

Removes Fruit, Chocolate, Lipstick, Grease and almost all other oil and water soluble spots!

Lodge. You and Jimmy care to join us?"

"Well—I'm not sure—maybe we'll meet you there."

It worked out that they were bowling along the highway and talking about nothing remotely related to marriage. Then suddenly two words from Jimmy's companion struck him dumb.

"We'll elope."

He continued driving for another minute or so, then drew carefully over and turned the ignition off. "Now say it again."

"We'll elope."

"I don't believe you."

"All right, you'll see. Let's go to The Sportsman's Lodge and find Evvie."

. . . Scene shifts to the Havers' guest room, occupied for the time by Dorothy, Bill Flynn, her husband, and month-old baby Kathleen. Dot was home with the folks to recuperate from the baby's birth. Mrs. Haver was adoring her granddaughter when the phone rang.

"It's June, Mother."

Something clicked in Mrs. Haver's mind as she picked up the phone. "Where are you, June?"

"Sportsman's Lodge."

"Are you planning to get married?"

"Yes, how did you know?"

"Just a feeling—"

"Get ready, Mother. We're going to Las Vegas."

. . . In the dining-room at Sportsman's Lodge, someone handed Evvie a folded cocktail napkin. The note had been written with eyebrow pencil. "Evvie," it read. "Be home by 11:30. Las Vegas. June."

Ev caught her sister and brother-in-law-elect on the run. "Are you kidding?"

"No, we just talked to Mother, everything's fine. Finish your dinner and be home by 11:30."

Evvie stood still till the car disappeared round a bend. "Dinner, she says!"

Upstairs, the girls were helping June dress.

"Forgive me, Dot, for getting married when you couldn't come?" June said.

"On one condition. Be as happy as I am."

Jimmy paced the hall, assuring himself that pretty soon he'd wake up. Down the stairs came June in her mink coat, smiling.

"Will it scare your mother if the phone rings this late? Then let's call her."

They put the call through to Chicago; they talked to his mother and sister Carmen; they hung up. Jimmy mopped his brow. "Now I believe it," he said.

. . . At 8 they were in Las Vegas. At 8:30 they stood before a justice of the peace. Till then Jimmy had been the shakier one. Now his voice was firm.

"I take you, June—"

Hers was a whisper. "I take you, James—"

Over her finger he slipped the ring his mother'd given him when he first left home. Then his arms went around her. "Hello, Mrs. Zito," he said in her ear.

They went to El Rancho for breakfast, whooped over a magazine Evvie'd picked up. JUNE HAVER—BACHELOR GIRL, read the coverline. June wanted to know, had anyone cried at her wedding?

"Not me," declared Mother. "I was too busy watching my son-in-law steal the scene from you."

"Not me," said Evvie. "I kept looking at my foot. Felt a runner coming."

They phoned the studio, and Grandmother, and Jimmy's folks again. They sent Ted FioRito a wire, signed: "Your two kids." At home they found messages galore, a beautiful telegram from Mr. Zanuck, roses from Jimmy's mother to "my darling daughter and son."

June drew her husband upstairs to the sitting-room.

"Let's turn on the radio. Whatever it plays, will be our song from now on."

"Even if it's corny?"

"It won't be."

She turned the dial. Softly over the air came the notes of The Warsaw Concerto.

"I suppose you know who did the proposing, Mr. Zito? Me. Shall I tell you what I promised myself last month? That I'd never marry anyone else till you did."

"I was way ahead of you, baby. I made myself that promise six years ago."

Trumpeter Jimmy Zito kisses his bride, June Haver, after their marriage in St. Timothy's Catholic Church in West Los Angeles on March 26. They were married in a civil ceremony on March 9.

YOU CAN'T SAY THAT ABOUT BING

(Continued from page 31)

Como and Russell, about 5%, and Frankie, fourth with 3-4%."

Fortune Magazine estimates Crosby's wax royalties netted him over $600,000 for '46. Jack Kapp says Decca's initial sales of Bing's records for '47 indicate he will take home as much, or more.

It all adds up to this: Old Moon Faced and Starry Eyed is still top dog. George Frazier may not be buying Crosby's records, but George Customer is.

Now let's see how the poor old fellow with the receding hairline is doing on the radio.

Ten years ago, he was listed among the First Fifteen programs, with a rating of 19.6. As I punch this out, he is again among the First Fifteen with a rating of 21.7. And remember, we're not hearing Crosby in person. We're getting the transcribed show which the network wisenheimers insisted could not succeed.

Fortune Magazine points out that CBS and NBC, fighting the transcription experiment, "have crammed their Wednesday night shows with flashy programs in an effort to keep listeners from tuning in on Bing."

So far they have found that bucking him has been like trying to holler down a hurricane. When the Great Throat levels on a new song, 50,000 copies still move off the music counters the next day.

Uncle Sam and his missus like Frankie and Perry fine. But, judging by the ratings, the sitting, standing, running, jumping, song-singing champ of the world is still the man with the conservative Technicolor shirts.

Mr. Frazier quotes Frank Coniff as saying Crosby's latest picture is getting the once-over-lightly. I wouldn't know about that, but I figured the auditor up in the Paramount Building would. So I asked him. He ran up some figures for me. Here they are. They show the grosses of the Crosby movies released by Paramount for the past seven years. Birth of the Blues, released in 1941, is figured at 100%, and we take it from there:

1941	Birth of the Blues	100%
1942	Holiday Inn	175%
1942	Road to Morocco	211%
1943	Dixie	218%
1944	Going My Way (Highest grosser in 35-year history of Paramount)
1945	Here Come the Waves	225%
1946	Road to Utopia	298%
1947	Blue Skies (With more play dates to come)	421%

Laying statistics aside for the minute, let's not forget the little gold statue which stands among the paste pots on Mr. Bingo's office shelf. The Oscar signifies that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences thought his performance in Going My Way was the best acting of any man in American movies that year. Not bad for a guy from Gonzaga who broke into show business with the Rhythm Boys, singing, "It's a treat to beat your feet on the Mississippi mud."

Fortune Magazine, as you know, plays them close to the chest and doesn't go in for overstatement. I like its conservative estimate of Old Frog-in-the-Throat in its recent article—"Crosby is head man in every branch of American entertainment but sidewalk magic. First in films, first on the air, and first on the phonographs of his countrymen."

Declining, eh?

So is Mt. Everest! So is kissing!

with this truly luxurious talcum powder

KEEP FRESH! After your bath, shower your body with Cashmere Bouquet Talc. Smooth it into every curve and ripple. Now you're gloriously, fragrantly fresh.

FEEL SMOOTH! Be sure to give chafable places, and trouble spots extra Cashmere Bouquet Talc. Your skin will be grateful for that silken-smooth sheath of protection. And girdles slip on like magic.

STAY DAINTY! Pamper your body often with Cashmere Bouquet Talc. An inexpensive luxury! It points up your feminine allure with the fragrance men love.

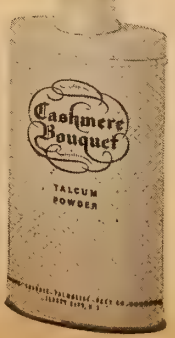
Pamper your person with Cashmere Bouquet Dusting Powder. Smartly packaged with a big velour puff.



Cashmere Bouquet Talc

with the fragrance men love

This Hair "Make-Up" is Blended for You!*

★ ★ ★

Extra Color . . . glorious, natural-looking color for every hair type — redhead, blonde, brunette or brownette! Marchand's color chart shows you which rinse shade to use if you want to add a little color or a lot of color. There are special rinses, too, for blending in little gray strands.

Highlights, of course! Every Marchand rinse makes your hair sparkle with new lustre! After your shampoo, dissolve the rinse shade you select in warm water and brush or pour it through your hair. Soap film vanishes! Highlights appear! Your hair is softer and easier to manage, too.

As safe to use as lemon and vinegar, Marchand's Hair "Make-Up" is not a bleach, not a permanent dye. It washes out in your next shampoo.

Created for BROWNETTES!

Three of Marchand's 12 Rinse shades are for Brownettes! "Dark Brown" makes your natural hair color sparkle. "Warm Chestnut Brown" adds just a touch of copper, while "Auburn" adds a deeper glow.

Marchand's

"Make-Up"
HAIR RINSE

6 RINSES—25c • 2 RINSES—10c
Plus Tax

By the Makers of Marchand's Golden Hair Wash

sweet and hot

By LEONARD FEATHER

Highly recommended
*Recommended
No stars: Average

POPULAR

I CAN'T BELIEVE IT WAS ALL MAKE BELIEVE—*Hal McIntyre (MGM); Eddy Howard (Majestic)
Hal McIntyre's band (featuring Frankie Lester's vocal here) is one of a big bunch of stars' names that have switched to the new M-G-M label.

I TIPPED MY HAT (AND SLOWLY RODE AWAY)—*The Smoothies (Apollo); *Harry James (Columbia); Blue Barron (M-G-M)

I WANT TO THANK YOUR FOLKS—Frank Sinatra (Columbia); King Cole Trio (Capitol); *Perry Como (Victor); *Larry Douglas (Signature); Saxie Dowell (Sonora); Ink Spots (Decca)
Another hit by Benny Banjamin and George Weiss, the Rumors Are Flying team. Larry Douglas is a new name worth watching; I used to hear him on the Gloom Dodgers show.

MOON FACED, STARRY EYED—*Sarah Vaughan-Teddy Wilson (Musicraft); Freddy Martin (Victor); *Benny Goodman-Johnny Mercer (Capitol).
Remember way back when Johnny Mercer was guest vocalist on some old BG Victor records? Johnny has now returned the compliment by signing Benny up with his record company and singing on the first Capitol BG release. Poet Langston Hughes wrote lyrics for this and the other Kurt Weill songs in the new Broadway musical version of Street Scene.

TEA FOR TWO—*Joe Mooney Quartet (Decca)
However tired you are of the tune, here's a version to brighten up sagging parties, with special Mooney lyrics such as "Do you long for Oolong like I long for Oolong?" and "Up to their eyeballs in teaballs." Other side's listed under Movies. (CORPSE CAME C.O.D.)

HOT JAZZ

CHARLIE BARNET—*Cherokee; *The New Redskin Rhumba (Cardinal)
New versions of the Indian twin hits on Charlie's own label. Dig the trumpet work by the great Al Killian!

EDMOND HALL—TEDDY WILSON—*Quartet Album (Commodore)
Six pleasant sides, including Where or When, Night and Day, Sleepy Time Gal, by the Cafe Society partners, reunited for records. Which reminds me: if you get that Jerry Jerome Trio album on Stinson, the pianist labeled as "Fingers MacDigits" is friend Teddy again.

LIONEL HAMPTON—Hamp's Boogie Woogie Album (Decca)

STAN KENTON—Concerto To End All Concertos (Capitol)

LENNIE TRISTANO—I Can't Get Started (Keynote)
A sensational blind pianist from Chicago, with a strictly 1965 style. Warning: most people will feel about this record the way most people felt about Stravinsky in 1913. Which means someday you'll be glad you bought it!

FROM THE MOVIES

CORPSE CAME C.O.D.—Warm Kiss and Cold Heart: *Joe Mooney (Decca)

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN—Time After Time: *Tommy Dorsey (Victor); *Jimmy Dorsey (M-G-M); Sarah Vaughan (Musicraft); *Frank Sinatra (Columbia); Margaret Whiting (Capitol)
Sinatra Songs, Inc., have a flock of good discs of several hits from this film, including Same Old Dream; Time After Time; I Believe and Whose Baby Are You? Looks like another good deal for Frankie.

MY FAVORITE BRUNETTE—Beside You; My Favorite Brunette: Bob Hope & Dorothy Lamour (Capitol)
Did you see the picture? Remember a song called My Favorite Brunette? That's right, I'm wrong—there wasn't one. But it makes a cute idea for a cute record tying in with the picture. Beside You was in the picture, very briefly, but Bob and Dotty make a lot more out of it here.

PERILS OF PAULINE—Poppa, Don't Preach To Me: *Phil Harris (Victor); Marion Hutton (Capitol)

RAZOR'S EDGE—Mam'selle: Art Lund (M-G-M); Dennis Day (Victor); Ray Dorey (Majestic)
Another song from a non-musical picture (more or less); from the French cafe scene. Nice arrangement on the Lund version.

RHAPSODY IN BLUE—Rhapsody In Blue: *Paul Whiteman (Signature). Somebody Loves Me: *Bill Harris (Dial)

P.S.: Thanks for the big bunch of mail on my "Sweet Vs. Hot" controversy. Was pleased to note that with only three exceptions, every single letter received said, "I like both sweet and hot music if played right." (Excerpts from winning letter are on page 108.)

PAPA FLYNN

(Continued from page 12)

a white-robed nun came in. Silently he followed her out, and the stares of the nurses went with him.

"It's a girl," the nun announced with a happy smile.

"And Nora," he asked her quickly, "how is she?"

"Nora is all right. She's just fine. Poor child, she did have a bad time of it for a while, but she's all right now, Mr. Flynn. Thanks be to the good God. And the baby is such a little beauty."

A minute later Errol Flynn was standing beside his wife's bed, holding and stroking her hand as she smiled wanly up at him.

"You're all right? You're sure?" he was saying.

"I'm all right, of course, darling. Oh, Errol dear, she's the very image of you. Just wait till you see." She had hardly said the words when another white-robed sister brought the baby in—Sister Rose, head of the Maternity Ward. She placed the quiet little bundle in Errol's arms, and he looked wonderingly at his new daughter.

"She's not red-haired like Deirdre," he said. "And her nose isn't flat the way Deirdre's was at first. Why, she has a nose like mine!" Slowly a grin widened on the face that has thrilled tens of millions on the screen. He gave the precious thing in his arms back to Sister Rose, and then he leaned down tenderly, and left a kiss on Nora's brow.

Downstairs, the nurses were excited and flustered. They were debating whether Errol was as handsome in the flesh as he is on the screen, and the verdict, not entirely unanimous, was that he was even more so. When he came down again, he didn't pause, but hurried to his car and sped away.

say it with flowers . . .

Not long afterwards a florist's truck drove up to unload armfuls of lovely spring flowers which brought a fresh fragrance to the room where Nora slept. Twice a day, thereafter, the florist's truck arrived, and twice a day Errol Flynn drove up in his roadster, always alone.

He had wanted to take a room in the hospital to be close to his Nora when her time came, but the scarcity of hospital space would not permit that. And it wasn't because Nora was Mrs. Errol Flynn that she got a private room. She was just lucky. Most mothers nowadays have to share a room with another, but Nora happened to arrive on a day when a single room was being vacated. It would have been easier for all concerned if the hospital had been able to put Errol up, for he hung on the phone all night. The doctor, who wasn't getting much rest either, finally advised him to go to bed and let others get their rest, too.

Nora laughed indulgently about Errol's jitters the day we had our long, cozy interview. She was propped up in bed on a rampart of pillows, and Errol's flowers made the room fragrant. She was really a proud and happy girl.

"What's the baby's name?" I inquired.

"Rory," she told me. "I had decided on Rory long in advance, because it fits either a boy or a girl. As a matter of fact, I talked it over with Errol's father when we were on the yacht together, and he loved the name. Errol named our first Deirdre, but I named this one."

"She's really beautiful," I said.

"Do you know what Errol told me the

(Continued on page 99)

A SPARKLING NEW RCA VICTOR ALBUM!

"BLOSSOM TIME"

STARRING

AL GOODMAN

Ten lilting tunes from the famous Broadway show... all brimming with melody!

Al Goodman's newest album brings you the ten hit songs from "Blossom Time"... based on Schubert's loveliest melodies! They include Song of Love, the tender Peace to My Lonely Heart (from Ave Maria) and the famous Serenade.

All-star cast includes Al and his big orchestra, Earl Wrightson, Donald Dame, Mary Martha Briney, Blanka Periç, the Mullen Sisters and The Guild Choristers! Ask for RCA Victor Album P-173, $4.50.

"FLASH! MORE NEW HITS FROM RCA VICTOR!"

FREDDY MARTIN and his Orchestra: I Can't Get Up the Nerve to Kiss You (vocal by Clyde Rogers and The Martin Men) and Piano Portrait (featuring Murray Arnold at the piano). Record 20-2165, 60¢.

VAUGHN MONROE and his Orchestra: You Can't Hide Your Heart Behind a Kiss and Dreams Are a Dime a Dozen. Record 20-2226, 60¢.

THE THREE SUNS: I Never Knew and Unless It Can Happen with You (vocal by Artie Dunn). Record 20-2197, 60¢.

Naturally*...on RCA Victor Records!

Two exclusives—Victor's billion-record skill, plus RCA's electronic wizardry—make music sound so natural on RCA Victor Records! Hear them on a Victrola radio-phonograph. (Victrola—T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Hear Robert Merrill on the RCA Victor Program! Sundays, 2 p.m., EDT, NBC.

Prices are suggested list prices, exclusive of taxes. Radio Corporation of America

THE STARS WHO MAKE THE HITS ARE ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS

RCA "HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

YESTERDAY'S Memories...
Dreams OF TOMORROW
IN Music
THAT SAYS

9 FAVORITE ARTISTS IN ONE great ALBUM

Johnny MERCER and Martha TILTON
"If I Had a Talking Picture of You"

The KING COLE TRIO
"You're the Cream In My Coffee"

ANDY RUSSELL
"Just A Memory"

PEGGY LEE
"Somebody Loves Me"

THE PIED PIPERS
"Avalon"

MARGARET WHITING
"April Showers"

HAL DERWIN
"When Day Is Done"

CLARK DENNIS
"Together"

With PAUL WESTON
And His Orchestra

Here are Buddy DeSylva's thrilling melodies . . . love songs close to your heart, given fresh appeal by leading Capitol stars. It is music you will want to play again and again . . . music that weaves a spell that seems especially for you. Now at your record dealer:

$3.75 plus taxes

Capitol RECORDS

at last... A UNIVERSAL PORTABLE!

New Capitol machine plays electronically anywhere. 2 motors (wind-up or plug-in). At record stores now.

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION • SHIRLEY FROHLICH, DIRECTOR

■ PLAIN TALK: Say, clubbers, have we been giving you the impression it's FUN to run a fan club? Of course, it is! But as our good friend, Maym Sagert, able prexy of Jane Withers' Pals, cautions: "Don't forget to tell 'em it's hard WORK, too!" The plain truth is: not everybody who WANTS to pilot a club is CAPABLE of the job. Some clubs zoom along for a while on the prexy's enthusiasm. Then, bang! One fine day, he or she hits a rough spot, all the enthusiasm vanishes, and the club goes pfft! So, please, DON'T try to start a club unless you're going to be scrupulously honest with your star, your members and yourself. You must have the ability to organize your work, handle money intelligently, delegate tasks to competent helpers, and be diplomatic and courteous to everyone. Club dues must be acknowledged at once; inquiries and letters must all be answered promptly. You must keep a budget—being careful not to spend all the dues on the first journal. Keep a bank account for the club, if possible. Above all, don't demand too much of your honorary star. As Maym says, "Too many prexies act as if they own their star." If it does become necessary to disband your club, notify—in writing—all members, honoraries, exchange prexies, star, and other interested parties. And here's some advice to the stars: don't be indiscriminate about granting permission to everyone who wants to start a club in your honor. Usually, a single exchange of letters will reveal whether the applicant is sincere, intelligent and talented enough to direct the varied activities of a worthwhile fan club. There—we've spoken quite freely, but we know you'll agree that it just had to be said.

CLUB BANTER: Latest news of Hollywood Party (June 23-29) reveals 187 out-of-town prexies plan to be on hand for the convention-party—over 500 will attend, in all. Latest addition to the activities is an afternoon picnic and dance on a private estate. Address inquiries: Suite 707, 427 W. 5 St., L. A. 13, Calif. (see pic, page 8) . . . Just for the records, it's Gerry Kee, 522 Fairbanks Ave., Oakland, Calif., who now has the Alan Ladd Club Pearl Tice almost took over . . . the Sinatra Guild is off—but we hear something else is brewing at 1776 B'way . . . almost 100 mems attended Rise Stevens' tea at the Essex House . . . Louella Correia's Jack Owens Swoonsters snagged a nice hunk of publicity in the New Bedford Standard-Times . . . Bob Crosby's p.a. in Chi brought a slew of backstage visitors, including corro Leane Cook and prexy Isabel Lee . . . Thanks to the Bobby Beers Clubbers, Southern Music Company will put Bobby's pic on the cover of "My Adobe Hacienda" . . . Joyce Bronas, Eddie Ryan mem, is singing with Johnny Winslow's ork . . . the whole Don Richards clan will receive 4-leaf-clover charms from Don, with the name of his smash show, Finian's Rainbow, engraved thereon . . . Jo Rampino fixed it so her honorary, bandleader Al Lombardy, could guest-star on Dolores Craeg's "Between Us Teens" show for WINS . . . Terry Smith's Skippy Homeier bunch is starting a mixed choir . . . Nelson Eddy M. C. has inaugurated a scholarship in his (Continued on page 100)

TROPHY CUP CONTEST (Lap 4) Leading clubs: League 1: Nelson Eddy Music, 750; Dennis Morgan, 650; Shirley Temple, Dick Haymes Assoc., Ernest Tubb, 600. League 2: Chas. Korvin, 750; Gene Kelly, Larry Douglas, Gloria Jean, 600; Rosemary DeCamp, Jeannette MacDonald (Farrington), 550. League 3: Sinatra (Wolfenstein), 850; Bill Williams (Demers), 750; Basil Rathbone, 700; Dick Jaeckel, 650; Carole Landis, New Stars, Sinatra (Beattie), Joe Cotten, 600.

This month's winners: THIS IS MY BEST, 100 pts. (Prize: Gift combo FABERGE's Tigress Perfume and Cologne) Paulette Dohrmann, Errol Flynn C., Betty Hammer, R. DeCamp C.; Jean Kurowski, Milton Berle C.; Dianne Morner, Johnny Desmond (Skoff) C.; Lorraine Wright, Bob Lowery C.; Lois Morton, Sinatra (Wolfenstein) C. CANDID CAMERA CONTEST: (First prize, 100 pts., beautiful TANGEE-Trip-Kit, for traveling) Barbara Finkelstein, Kurt Kreuger (Bobois) C. (Others: 50 pts., 4 Dell Mysteries) Dorothy Dean, John Lund (Cook) C.; John Fasel, Jr., Danny Scholl C.; John Schneider, Sid Caesar C.; Edna Lantz, Gene Autry C. BEST EDITORS, 250 pts. (Prize: Assortment wonderful POND's Cosmetics) 1. None qualified. 2. (tied) Shirley Gordon, DeCampaigner, and Diego Mangawang, Star Notes (Jane Powell). (Diego receives FABERGE Men's Cologne.) 3. Addie Gushin, En-Tyer-ly Yours (John Tyers). BEST ART WORK, 150 pts. (Prize: Year's subs to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE, SCREEN ALBUM, 4 Dell Books) Everett Wolfenstein, Sinatra (Wolfenstein). BEST COVERS, 250 pts.: 1. None qualified. 2. Kaye Kapers (Danny). 3. (tied) Cotton Chronicle (Joe) and Soliloquy (Sinatra, Ling). WORTHWHILE ACTIVITIES, 250 pts.: 1. Haymes Assoc. 2. Johnny Coy (Sachs) C. 3. Lon McCallister C. BEST JOURNALS, 500 pts.: 1. Melody Trails (E. Tubb). 2. Gloria's Gazette (Jean). 3. Swoontime News (Sinatra, Wolfenstein). PERCENTAGE INCREASES, 100 pts.: 1. No reports. 2. Rise Stevens M. C. 3. Barbara Hale (Carnahan) C. CORRESPONDENTS, 50 pts.: 1. Lorraine Ruthowski, Ronald Reagan C. 2. Nelda Clough, Chas. Korvin C. 3. Lauren Chase, Ginny Simms C.

Discussing plans for the Mason Club Federation at James' N.Y. apartment are clubbers Dorothy Hock, Leona Rosenthal and Jean Meyer.

Pierre Aumont hosted members Grace Weiner, Kay McGowan, Marion Daniel (prexy) and Isabel Macias at his Waldorf-Astoria suite.

(Continued from page 97)

second day?" Nora's smile was quietly radiant. "He said, and I quote: 'Oh, she's the most beautiful thing I've ever seen.' And when I told him again that she was the perfect image of him, how he blushed! She has Errol's fine, delicate features already. And she's such a good baby. She doesn't cry or fret. Deirdre, incidentally, gets to look more and more like me. Her hair, which was red at birth, is even redder now. Rory has brown hair, and if it grows just a shade lighter, it's going to be very much like her father's. It even has the suggestion of a curl in it, like his."

While we were chatting, Sister Rose came in, and I couldn't resist asking her what sort of impression the famous movie star had made on her and the other nuns in the hospital. "I'm so stupid about those things." Sister Rose said. "I'll just have to admit that I had never even heard of Errol Flynn before Nora came to the hospital. As far as we were concerned, he was just another visitor." And believe it or not, St. Joseph's Hospital is only a few blocks from the Warner Brothers' Studio where Errol Flynn has been making history these past several years!

It's a different Flynn, however, that Hollywood is seeing these days. Marriage to a smart, sensible girl like Nora has done marvels for him, and she has proved herself to be a very knowing little wife who has most effectively hushed the mouths of those who predicted so freely that her marriage to the rampant Flynn could not possibly last.

She confided some of her philosophy of a successful marriage to me, and what she said showed that she has an uncanny understanding of this adventurous and romantic husband who has earned a reputation for swashbuckling both on and off the screen.

"I am not," she told me, "one of those girls who falls in love with a man because he possesses certain qualities and who promptly wants to do him all over when they're married. I've found a great deal of solid happiness as Errol's wife. I realized that a lot of his pals with whom he used to romp around Hollywood and elsewhere didn't want to see him domesticated. But what they never knew was that I myself would have hated that just as much as they. I wouldn't have him domesticated for all the world. I took him as I found him, because that's the way I love him. And I hope he never changes. When he wants to play, I want to be right there to play, too."

everybody loves a baby . . .

Just about all Errol's old friends have fluttered the white flag in surrender to Nora. They're ready to admit now that she's the one and only girl he really loves, and they're coming around with their hats in their hands. That goes even for doughty John Decker, Errol's artist pal and a very sagacious fellow. He and Nora were feuding before the last voyage of Errol's yacht, the "Zaca," had proceeded very far, but now they've joyfully forgiven each other, and some of the flowers in Nora's hospital room came from him. Most of the other boon companions of those more boisterous days and nights have been sifted out.

The day I saw her, Nora gave me even more eloquent proof of the new Errol that fatherhood has created. "How many babies do you want to have?" I asked curiously.

"Well," she answered, "I'd like to have a couple of boys to go with the girls. We're going to enlarge the nursery at our house on the mountain top and fence in the swimming pool. It does look as though we're getting set for a family, doesn't it?"

Not only that, it looks as though the marriage all Hollywood shook its head over is really set for life.

"THE TASTE-TEST CERTAINLY PROVED IT!" says Ruth. "I tasted leading colas—found R C best!" Try it! Say "R C for me!" That's the quick way to get a quick-up with a frosty bottle of Royal Crown Cola—best by taste-test!

R C is the quick way to say...

ROYAL CROWN COLA

Best by taste-test

KAREN LEWIS, ALLURING COVER GIRL, SAYS:

Beauty's My Business—

So I changed to the Gentle FLOATING LIFT of SWEETHEART SOAP'S Extra Lather!

Discover SweetHeart's 1-2-3 Extra Lather Beauty Care! Night and morning, massage your face for one minute with SweetHeart's extra lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Skin is cleansed . . . stimulated . . . looks more radiant!

• "Until I discovered this amazing SweetHeart Care, I was actually hiding the true beauty of my skin," says Karen Lewis. "Its natural loveliness photographs like a dream!"

You, too, will marvel at this beauty care! For pure, mild SweetHeart Soap gives up to twice as much lather as average beauty soaps. And this soft, billowing lather has an amazing floating lift. Pictures taken through the microscope prove it.

Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off—float away—the dirt and dry skin flakes that hide natural smoothness, natural radiance. Your skin's true loveliness is revealed!

"Now life's exciting!" says Karen. "Days crowded with big-pay posing jobs. Evenings of romance and compliments for my SweetHeart complexion."

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

For tub and shower, you can now also get the new, large bath size. SweetHeart's extra lather with its floating lift is marvelous for bathing.

THE FANS

(Continued from page 98)

name at the Juilliard School . . . Alfred Drake's cup-cakes are busy organizing theater parties to see him in Beggar's Holiday . . . Jordine Skoff's Johnny Desmond Club holds its bull-sessions over milkshakes, after the weekly Niagara Falls High basketball game. Eileen Sinnott's group for Desmo now boasts an active publicity committee . . . Mark Stevens will be the first star honored by Betty Petrie's Club Friendship . . . Edward Ashley-ites have adopted a French war orphan . . . N. Y. contingent of Larry Brooks' Club trekked up to New Haven for the opening of his new Broadway hit, Brigadoon . . . Barbara Ferry, of 814 N. Olive Ave., Alhambra, Calif., has a large collection of scrapbooks, which she's giving away free—just for the postage. Inquire about your favorites.

(Note: Over 160 clubs are now credited in our files with 50 points or more in the current Trophy Cup Contest. Lack of space prohibits printing complete scores. If you wish to know whether your club has any points—and how many—you can find out by writing to your club prexy or to MSFCA headquarters, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16.)

Attention all prospective club prexies: As of June 30, no club will be accepted for membership in the MODERN SCREEN Fan Club Association unless it has a minimum of ten members—regardless of whether a letter of permission has been obtained from the star who is to be the club honorary. This does not apply to clubs already registered in the MSFCA before that date.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

It was in December, 1945, when Alan Ladd and his charming wife, Sue Carol, paid a visit to the Army Regional Hospital at Camp Robinson, Arkansas. They were touring the wards, stopping to chat with each of the wounded and bedridden heroes. Sue remained in the background most of the time, while Alan talked, signed autographs, and spread pleasure wherever he went. They approached one bed occupied by a veteran with his leg in a cast. Alan obligingly autographed the cast. Then the lad whispered shyly to Alan: "There's something . . . er, I mean . . ." Alan smiled. "What is it, fellow?" he asked. "I'll be glad to do whatever I can." The patient said, haltingly, still shyly, "I wish . . . I mean, I've always wanted to kiss a movie star . . ." Alan reached back to where his wife was standing and grasped her hand. She came up beside the bed, smiled at her husband, and with evident pleasure, planted a kiss on the lips of the bedfast soldier—while Alan stood by, nodding approval. I don't think any GI was ever happier than that boy because of a simple and sweet gesture on the part of a movie couple.

Sgt. James Harte
Fort Myer, Va.

CALL ME MAMA

(Continued from page 48)

told her husband that though she'd bought Jessica three dresses, she still had no idea what her daughter would wear to the party.

As it happened she wore the pink one, and she looked a dream. It was a lovely party. There was a birthday candle, pink and blue and white, with Jessica's name at the base of it (it was one of those candles that lasts until the child is sixteen years old; you burn an inch each year, and the years are marked). There was a cake, too, and it was Jessica's first experience with cake.

Jessica's no dope. Her family had all it could do to keep her from jumping in, feet first. "Mama!" she said passionately. "Yes!" "Mama" and "yes" are about the extent of her vocabulary, but she has delightful inflections.

The maid, who was serving, kept gazing and gazing at the pile of presents on the table.

Finally, she shook her head and murmured, "I'm just wondering how you'll get a pony on that table, a few years from now."

Which almost broke up the party. Because Jessica undoubtedly will have a pony some day. There's a corral all ready for one, in the Jacksons' new house.

They bought Virginia Bruce's old home, in Pacific Palisades. It's a beautiful six-acre property over-looking the sea, and it was built before the war, of good materials. There were seven fireplaces, and a stable that the Jacksons have turned into a studio room. They put a fireplace in it and Deanna's already had a singing lesson there.

She's anxious for Jessica to sit in on a lesson, some time, and she spoke to her teacher, Al Prockter about it. "I wonder how she'd react."

"If the child has any ear for music," Prockter said, grinning, "she'll go screaming down the road."

At the moment, the child can't quite make it to the road, because she's just begun to walk.

Since she was five or six months old, she's navigated very efficiently by holding on to things, but a while ago, she actually got up and took a couple of steps toward her nurse, under her own power.

The nurse called Deanna at the studio, and she sounded so agitated, Deanna got frightened. "What, what, what?" she said. "What's the matter? What happened?"

the miracle . . .

"Sure, and Jessica's walkin'," the nurse said breathlessly.

One of Jessica's favorite people is a large Doberman Pinscher, who's very fussy about the company he keeps. He's grown up with Jessica, and he nibbles affectionately on her hand and protects her from all evil, real or imaginary.

His name's Bedouin, but everyone calls him "Beddy." He has a slight tendency toward cannibalism, but nothing the Jacksons feel is dangerous.

Every once in a while, a guest gets the urge to pet him, and Felix says, "All right, but I have to go with you." If the guest is bright, he doesn't argue.

Beddy's birthday was three days before Jessica's, and Deanna was considering a party for him. Next year both birthdays will be celebrated together.

Deanna just gets it all established in her mind that Beddy is the ideal dog for her, and then she goes to work, and meets Mr. Dozier, a big studio executive. Mr. Dozier looks at her gravely. "Just read where a Quilted for comfort!

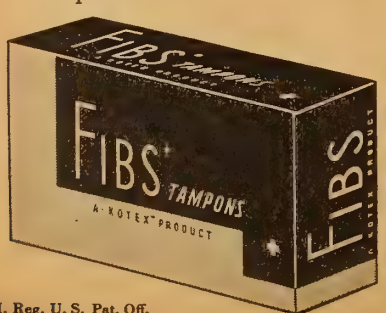
You'll scarcely know you're wearing Fibs—because quilting makes this tampon really comfortable. That's because quilting keeps Fibs from fluffing up too much . . . to an uncomfortable size which could cause pressure, irritation, difficult removal.

Quilted for safety!

Quilting is a safety feature, too, because it helps prevent cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal tissues. See how safe, secure you feel with Fibs.

And FIBS have rounded ends

. . . And that means insertion can be really comfortable — with Fibs. Try Fibs next month, and you'll agree — it's the easy-to-use tampon.



*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Doberman Pinscher ate a five-year-old baby," he says.

Deanna has to dash to the telephone to make sure everything's okay. Mr. Dozier, who keeps a perfectly straight face during the entire proceedings, enjoys himself immensely.

Apart from Mr. Dozier's sad stories, Universal-International is pleasant for Deanna these days.

Sunday morning, Jessica's nurse goes out, and Deanna feeds the baby and plays with her and is generally blissful. There's a fire in the fireplace, the radio playing (Deanna's favorite is Toscanini), Jessica romping across the over-sized, four-poster bed, and Dick Tracy at one's elbow.

During the week, Deanna and Felix don't see much of their child. Deanna gets up at five o'clock, and by the time she's through work, and has driven home (the house is a full hour from the studio) Jessica's ready to go to sleep.

But Deanna's not a complainer. She quotes a line Gene Kelly made famous around Hollywood: "What you go through for a lousy fortune!"

Deanna figures you get what you pay for. She also figures you pay for what you get.

Deanna's mother and father live in Westwood, and she sees them all the time. Jessica went along to visit her grandmother and grandfather recently. It was her first automobile trip, and she loved it. She's the adventurous sort, and if her mother doesn't watch out, her grandfather will be taking her on her first airplane trip pretty soon.

Mr. Durbin, who's sixty-one years old, only discovered flying in the last year or so. It happened overnight. He knew this tailor, and the tailor had a son who flew. The son asked Mr. Durbin if he wanted to come for a ride, and Mr. Durbin said yes.

He liked flying right away. "But I couldn't ever learn."

"Don't be silly," his young friend said. When they landed, he pointed out a legless man who flew his own hand-controlled plane. "If that man can do it—"

Mr. Durbin took some lessons, and the next thing he knew, he'd got his license, and then, at Christmas, his wife gave him a two-motored, four-seater Stinson.

When they came over to tell Deanna and Felix about it, Deanna could hardly believe them. "My mother gave my father an airplane for Christmas," she kept murmuring to herself. "My mother is a most astonishing woman."

She's had further proof of that since Christmas. Mr. Durbin goes off into the wild blue yonder, and Mrs. Durbin waves goodbye gaily, and Deanna watches the whole tableau and hopes that when she's their age, she'll be that young.

One time when she stopped by to say hello, her mother announced, "We won't see you again till next week."

Deanna was curious. "Why?"

"We're flying to Mexico over the weekend," Mrs. Durbin said. "We're going down there to a dinner-dance."

Deanna enjoys flying, herself. She went up with Bob Cummings and his wife in his four-seater, and had a wild voyage.

Bob's a good pilot, and he was doing stunts to prove how safe flying was.

He cut the engine. "We can cruise around for hours, and not worry, even without any power," he explained. Her smile was strained. "It isn't necessary, Bob, really. I'm sure you can—"

He showed her a forced landing, and to her amazement, it consisted of one small bounce. She was enchanted.

She happens, incidentally, to be one of those revolting personalities who never gets airsick in the slightest. She once flew home from Salt Lake City—over miles of desert, through air pockets, and terrible heat—and everybody on the whole plane was ill except her.

She also flew down from San Francisco in a thunder-storm. The stewardess, who was trying to keep passengers from getting too nervous, approached her quietly.

Deanna turned a beaming face upward. "Isn't it exciting?" she said.

On the whole, she finds existence exciting. She looks back on Jessica's first year with pleasure. The first, tiny Christmas tree, the first steps, the first words.

There are Felix, mother and father, and pleasant work (she's making Something In The Wind, now) and no telephones ever ringing (because she can't get one).

There's a real Monet painting (of a water-lily) in the bedroom, and there's Dick Tracy, and a view of the Pacific to take your breath away.

And a funny little girl without much hair who says "yes" and "mama" to everything. But boy, has she got inflection!

"I don't want to wear Daddy's cut-down suits!"

(Continued from page 47)

and hooked little fingers and made a wish. They got the car—and the wish, because here they were driving through Texas.

Ahead of them, something dark moved on the silver strip of roadway.

As they drove closer, they saw that it was a boy and girl, hitchhiking. Neither of them looked much over twenty, Bob thought, as he brought the car to a smooth stop beside them. The boy wore no topcoat and the girl was shivering in a light suit.

They climbed gratefully into the back seat. "My father died," the girl told them, "and we're trying to get to Austin in time for the funeral."

Bob and Dotty like people, and talk easily to them. It wasn't long before they had the whole story. The boy and girl had married before he went overseas. When he came back he had been discharged as a psycho-neurotic, which made it a little tough to get a job.

"Nancy's been swell," he said humbly. She just acted as if everything was all right."

"And now it is," Nancy said, smiling at him, her heart in her eyes.

faith in the future . . .

Bob's gaze met Dotty's. It was good to see faith like Nancy's. Bob knew because Dotty had always had it, too. Faith in his abilities, encouragement when he needed it.

"Let's stop at this joint and have some coffee," he said gruffly, swinging in to a roadside diner.

They had the coffee—and hamburgers, too. Bob reached for the check, but the boy stopped him. "I'd like to pay for this," he said, opening his wallet. There were a few—a very few—one dollar bills in it.

"No, this is on me," Bob protested but the look in the boy's eyes silenced him. He remembered times when he had been as broke as that—and how proud and how stubborn he had been. "Let's divide it," he said. "Then we're each on our own."

The little blonde waitress in the neat blue uniform had been staring at Bob intently. She edged over to him now.

"Look, aren't you Bob Mitchum, the movie star? Could I have your autograph?"

Bob signed it on a paper napkin, conscious of the awed stare of Nancy and the boy.

"Gee," Nancy said, as they got back in the car, "I guess you must think we're dopes not to have recognized you."

"Just as well," Bob told her. "We got better acquainted this way."

It was almost three in the morning before Bob drew up by a tourist camp with a light over the doorway.

"I think Dotty and I will get a room here for the rest of the night," he said. "How about you kids? Can I get you one, too?"

"I guess we'd better keep on the road." Pete glanced at Nancy for confirmation and she nodded.

"But you won't get a ride this time of night," Bob told them. "Come on, I'll fix it up with them inside."

The kids stood by the car, their faces weary and white in the glare of the headlights.

"Come on in and we'll get two bedrooms," Dotty urged them. "Otherwise I'll worry about you all night and won't be able to sleep."

Pete grinned, his tired young face relaxing. "Okay, you win."

They got the two rooms, and Bob paid in advance for both of them. But in the morn-can put ugly, tired lines on your face!

BORDERLINE ANEMIA*

Thousands who are tired and pale may find renewed energy—restore healthy good looks—with Ironized Yeast Tablets

So many young girls watch the fresh color and beauty fade from their faces—wonder why tired, unflattering lines appear. They should know that such effects can come from a blood condition. If you have them, you may have a Borderline Anemia, due to a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency.

Yes, your red blood cells may have shrunk and faded—they may be weakened to the point where they cannot transmit full energy to all your body.

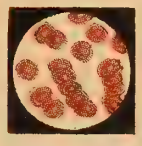
Borderline Anemia steals your energy, endurance! And results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men and children—have it.

How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

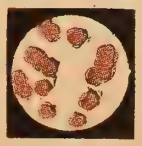
If your color and "pep" are waning—and this common blood condition's to blame, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are formulated to help build up faded red blood cells to healthy color and size. Continuing tiredness and pallor may be due to other conditions—so consult your doctor regularly. But in this Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets to help build up your blood. Take them to start your energy shifting back into "high"—to help restore your natural color. Take them so you can enjoy life again!

Resulting from ferro-nutritional blood deficiency*

BORDERLINE ANEMIA
why it can make you
TIRED • PALE • LISTLESS



Energy-Building Blood. This is a microscopic view of blood rich in energy elements. Here are big, plentiful red cells that release energy to every muscle, limb, tissue.



Borderline Anemia. Many have blood like this; never know it. Cells are puny, faded. Blood like this can't release the energy you need to feel and look your best.

Improved, Concentrated Formula

Ironized Yeast

TABLETS

"LOST" DAYS
CAN BE SAVED DAYS

MIDOL

RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL
PERIODIC PAIN
CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"

MIDOL
RELIEVES CRAMPS
EASES HEADACHE
CHASES "BLUES"

ing when he and Dot got up, a note had been pushed under their door. Inside were two dollar bills, the price of one room. "We're getting an early start," the note said. "Thanks for everything. If everybody was like the Mitchums, the world would be a nicer place. Nancy and Pete."

Bob and Dotty drove on to Dallas—a wonderful place combining big city advantages with small town cordiality.

"I've got to buy some clothes," Dotty announced, the day they arrived. "I didn't have any time to shop before we left home." They decided on Neiman-Marcus.

"Come shopping with me," she begged. "You have such good taste about clothes."

Dotty bought a beautiful brown wool suit, with the new, very long jacket and lines as sleek as a yacht. When she emerged from the dressing room, she found Bob happily sprawled in a big chair while five gorgeous models paraded back and forth in front of him, clad in everything from playsuits to dinner gowns.

just looking, thanks . . .

"Just thought I might see something else you'd like, dear," he said hastily.

Dotty winked gravely at the models. "I'll bet you saw several things you liked. I hate to tear you away, but we'd better hurry. You know you have that personal appearance at the theater tonight. What are you going to do for an act, by the way?"

"Just talk to 'em," Bob said lazily. "Stand there on the stage and talk their ears off."

Dotty worried for the rest of the day. Audiences expected you to do something. Sing or dance or something. Didn't they? She wouldn't be able to bear it if Mitch got out there on the stage and people were bored.

"Take it easy, kid," Bob soothed her. "There's nothing to worry about."

And he was right. The Mitchum manner was irresistible. Dotty, standing in the wings, blinked back tears of pride as she watched Bob's broad-shouldered figure finally stride off to a deafening wave of applause.

"Honey, you were terrific," she whispered.

"I tell you, I like these Texas people. I understand them, and they understand me."

They hated to leave Dallas but New York was a long way off. They drove across country to Miami, then north to Charleston. "I want to look up some relatives of mine there," Bob announced. "A cousin named Alice Mitchum works for the telephone company, and her mother and father live just outside town. We'll take Alice to dinner."

Charleston was a lovely, sprawling old town of balconied houses, liveoaks and Southern charm, but the telephone company was shiny and modern and efficient. Dot waited in the car while Bob went inside to inquire for Alice.

She waited. And waited. And waited.

Meanwhile, Bob was having difficulties. When he went into the office, a sleek redhead looked up from the desk. Her gaze started at the cowboy boots he was wearing (they're his most cherished possession), went on to the tired GI pants tucked into them, and the old Indian blanket coat he always wears to drive in.

"I'm looking for an Alice Mitchum who works here. Relative of mine."

She fluttered long lashes, and smiled. "I don't know any Alice Mitchum here, but I'll look her up in the records if you'll just have a seat." She rose and undulated across the room to an inner office. The Mitchum eyebrow rose in its well-known manner, and Bob whistled quietly to himself. Not a tune, just a whistle.

She came back presently. "We don't seem to have any record of an Alice Mitchum. According to this, we never did have an Alice Mitchum. You say she's a relative of yours. Is your name Mitchum?"

"That's right."

The redhead came closer. "Would your first name be Robert?" she asked in a longing whisper.

"As a matter of fact, it is."

From behind him came a collection of happy little shrieks. He whirled and found himself surrounded by the entire staff of the Charleston telephone company.

For the next half hour the city of Charleston had no telephone service. Dorothy appeared finally, and Bob grinned at her from the midst of his bevy of Southern beauties.

"Hi, Dotty. Girls, this is my wife."

"Pretty gals, weren't they?" Bob remarked when they got back in the car.

"Very. Which one was Alice Mitchum? The redhead that was clinging to your arm as if it was a life-preserver?"

"Funny thing. There wasn't any Alice Mitchum there. No record of her. Let's go up to the farm where her father and mother live, and ask them."

When the scarlet convertible turned into the country lane by the old white farmhouse, a flock of turkeys scattered, squawking loudly.

A small cheerful-faced woman came out of the barn carrying a pail. She stared uncertainly at Bob and Dorothy. "Good evenin'," she said politely.

"I guess you don't remember me," Bob told her. "I haven't seen you for fifteen years. I'm Bob Mitchum."

Amazement grew to delight in her faded blue eyes. "Ah do declare!" she said. "Young Bob. Ah do declare!"

Nothing would do then, of course, but they must stay to "supper." It was quite a meal—turkey and beaten biscuits and greens and cherry pie. As they sat down, Bob asked, "Where's Alice these days? I tried to find her at the telephone company but she wasn't there."

Mr. Mitchum stared. "Why, Alice don't work for the telephone company, son. She works for General Electric. Always did."

Dotty giggled wildly. "One big corporation sounds just like another to Bob. Never mind, dear—think of what a break

I SAW IT HAPPEN

My fiance (now my husband) and I wanted very much to see the show at the Chicago Theater here. He was in the Marine Corps at the time, though, stationed at Navy Pier, and had to be back promptly at midnight. When we arrived at the theater, we saw a long line of people waiting to get in. I tried to explain our predicament to the head usher, explaining that if we could possibly get in to see the picture right away, we would get out on time. But the usher was unsympathetic. Ditto the theater manager. Suddenly, a young man, standing in front of a poster, spoke to the manager on our behalf, and asked that we be let in the side door. We were immediately taken care of. When I raised my eyes to say thank you to the man who did us this kindness, imagine my surprise to find myself gazing into the eyes of Gene Kelly!

Lucille Winston
Chicago, Illinois

the girls at the telephone company got!"

It was only one long day's drive from Charleston to Dover, Delaware, where they were to visit Dot's aunt and uncle. Dover comes as near to being a home town as Bob and Dot can claim.

"I want to be as sentimental as a valentine all the while we're there, honey," Dotty said, as they approached the city. "Let's go visit the old mill pond where we first met, shall we? Funny, I didn't like you a bit that first day."

Bob grinned. "You were just mad because I was rowing two other babes around. Next time, when I rowed you around the pond, it was okay."

Dotty changed the subject. "One of the first people we want to look up is that friend of yours who loaned you the two dollars for our marriage license."

"Yeah. I might even pay him back."

"Bob Mitchum, you mean you've never paid. . ." Dotty stopped then, seeing the laughter in Bob's eye. He is never happier than when getting a rise out of her with something silly like that.

Anyway, getting back to Dover was wonderful. Dotty's aunt and uncle gave a party for them at the Mapledale Country Club.

It was a fine party, but Mitchum got restless as he always does at anything but the most informal gatherings. He wandered over and got into a deep conversation with the bartender. Pretty soon he came back and cut in on Dotty, who was dancing with a local bank president.

"Let's get some air," he said. The next thing Dotty knew they were in the car headed for a little joint in Dover's Negro section. The music went through you like a blood transfusion when you opened the door. In half an hour, Bob was playing drums with the band, hotter than a stolen car. And Dotty was jitterbugging.

When they got back, eventually, to their own party, they found that their little expedition was frowned on.

"You've been away so long that you've forgotten white people just don't go into the colored section," a pompous businessman informed Bob.

an american's creed . . .

"I didn't forget," he said quietly. "It's just that I've always judged people as individuals, not as groups."

What you're supposed to do or say has never had much influence on Mitchum. He makes his own rules. When the manager of the local theater asked him to make a personal appearance, Bob said, "How much are you going to pay me?"

The manager stammered. It developed that he hadn't expected to pay anything.

"Okay. I'll tell you what I'll do. You know the club here for those kids who have been in trouble with the law?"

The manager knew about it, of course. He said it was a very worthy cause.

"Damned right it is. Those kids need help. They need money for their clubhouse, too. I'll appear at your theater for nothing, if you'll promise to give all the profits which are over your average take, to that club. Is it a deal?"

It was a deal. The kind of deal that's typical of Mitchum, who hates stuffed shirts, but would give you the shirt off his back. Who is frequently rude to important people, but is never rude to anyone *un*important. Who whistles at pretty girls but thinks that Dotty is prettier than any of them. Who likes to believe he's tough, but is a pushover for his small sons. Who drives three thousand miles across the continent to get to New York, and spends his first weekend there driving back to Dover, where it's more fun.

Mad? As a hatter! But what a wonderful guy!

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Yes, even finest soaps and soap shampoos hide the natural lustre of your hair with dulling soap film

- Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave dulling soap film!
- Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights.
- Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely!
- Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant!
- Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic!
- Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl!

HALO REVEALS THE HIDDEN BEAUTY OF YOUR HAIR!

"NEXT TIME"... NEW COMFORT!

I'll send it to you now! A trial package of the new Slender Meds—an extra-easy-to-insert size with the REGULAR absorbency most mature women need! And so comfortable, so convenient!

See what Meds give you:

- "SAFETY-WELL" designed for your extra protection
- COTTON of high-test absorbency, soft and fine
- EXPANSION—mostly sidewise—to avoid pressure
- APPLICATORS—dainty, firm, easy to use

Be ready for "next time"—mail the coupon today for your trial package of Slender Meds!

Slender MEDS with REGULAR absorbency and extra ease-of-use (in light blue box)

De Luxe MEDS with SUPER absorbency for greater need (in dark blue box)

29¢ for 10 in applicators

Martha Steele MS-6
Personal Products Corporation
Milltown, New Jersey

Dear Martha Steele: I want to try the new Slender Meds. Please send me, in plain wrapper, the trial package of 3 for which I enclose 10¢ in coin to cover mailing cost.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Meds are made by Personal Products Corporation.

JOHN LUND LIFE STORY

(Continued from page 45)

worry—and I don't want you to do that."

Being moderns, they didn't call themselves engaged. But by any other name, it felt as sweet. John had found his girl. All he needed now was the wherewithal for marriage.

It looked as if this might be provided by an agency called Air Features—the one outfit in radio that opened its doors to newcomers. Frances von Bernhardi, the director, gave him an audition and seemed pleased with the results. "We'll call you," she promised.

The first week John was hopeful, the second week fearful, the third week cynical. "Same old runaround. Way she said it, I was fool enough to believe she meant it."

"I wonder," said Marie, "if it could be your landlady."

John's landlady viewed the phone as a personal foe. She'd pick it up when it rang, wait till you got through talking, say "Yes, I'll tell him," and consider her duty done. Having heard nothing, naturally she had nothing to tell. A wire now —that was different. All you had to do was slip it under the door . . .

Half-way through the fourth week John found one there. It bore a request from Miss von Bernhardi to call. He called.

"Where've you been? We've left nineteen messages."

life can be beautiful . . .

Through Air Features, Miss von B., and Martha Atwell, producer, he made his way to a comfortable niche in soap opera. Even succumbed to a fresh attack of the writing itch and sold a couple of comedy sketches. Wedding bells were about to peal for John and Marie, when the bombs fell on Pearl Harbor, disrupting their plans along with those of half the world . . .

Uncle Sam sent his Greetings. Eventually, a chest weakness kept John out of the service. Meantime he'd been shipped to Camp Grant, on an hour's notice.

"Look," they said, "you're by way of being a writer. There's this big army show—Cheers from the Camps. Needs a little touching up. Get out there and see what you can do with it."

Arriving at Camp Grant, he found that the show indeed needed touching up, since no single word had yet been written. It became a case of sink or swim. After a little floundering, John swam. Cheers from the Camps earned a citation as the best war program of 1942.

That was also the year of the wedding. It was obvious that they couldn't be together. John had to travel with the show. Marie had a special job with Irving Berlin's This is the Army.

"But we can get married," John pointed out.

His schedule took him to Baltimore for twenty-four hours. In Baltimore you didn't have to wait for a license. Marie got twenty-four hours' leave from the show, went down by the morning train and arrived at noon.

Their first stop was at a jeweler's, where they bought twin wedding rings. From the phone book they picked a minister, whose name appealed to them. He happened to be out. They climbed back into the cab, feeling a little flat.

"You kids want to get married?" inquired the driver.

He took them to a minister, witnessed the wedding, drove them to the station, and, being all of 22, left them with a fatherly blessing. After dinner at the station, John said, "We ought to celebrate. Let's go to Washington." They sat for an hour in some terrible night club and rode back. Next day John put his wife on the train for New York, before catching the plane that flew him to St. Louis. Not till three months later did they meet again, when their respective shows landed them back in Washington. John overstayed his time, and was late for his next broadcast.

But Cheers from the Camps finally came to an end, and married life began in earnest. They found an apartment, Marie started sewing slip-covers and, as the star to top their Christmas tree, Leonard Sillman offered them both jobs in New Faces. After the second or third rehearsal, John allowed that he thought the material stank . . .

"You try and do better," challenged Sillman.

"I will," said John, and did, doubling once more as writer and actor.

Though the revue didn't run very long, it bore fruit for the Lunds. John was hired to play the heavy in Early to Bed. Marie was offered movie tests if she'd go to Hollywood. She said she'd rather stay with her husband and finish her slip-covers. They were finished and she'd started on the drapes when the phone rang one day.

Jane Broder was her agent. "She wants me to come up and meet a man from Hollywood," she told John. "I think it's silly. What do you think?"

"Oh—you and Jane are good friends. Why don't you go, just as a matter of courtesy?"

Two hours later a dazed girl walked through the doorway with an RKO contract. "Charlie Koerner signed me without a test. Wanted me to leave Friday."

"You're not—"

"No-o-o," she wailed. "I said I had to spend Christmas with my husband."

"Look, honey, this play can't run much longer. The minute it folds, I'll come out and join you."

long-distance marriage . . .

So, of course, the play ran and ran. And while it was running, John took on another job. The advertising firm of Batton, Barton, Durstine and Osborne offered him so much money to get in on the writing end of Fashions in Rations, the Billie Burke show, that he couldn't afford to turn it down. Again, they were stuck on opposite coasts—again they had to make do with letters, wires and phone calls. At the end of seven months, Marie had nothing to show for their separation but a couple of bit parts. The studio wanted to pick up her option, but without a raise. So she called John, whose play had closed.

"I want you here," he said. "But it's your career and I think you should decide."

"Then I'm coming home."

It was wartime. Reservations were tough to get, and she had to wait. But, at last, the precious ticket was in her bag, and the luggage packed. She was leaving next day. That night the phone rang. John. "Hang on to your hat, baby, here we go again. I'm bound for Hollywood with Fashions in Rations."

Having absorbed the initial shock, Marie decided to use her ticket anyway because heaven alone knew when she could get another. They'd have three days before he left, and he'd be back in five weeks. Meantime she could finish her drapes . . .

Edith Van Cleve of the MCA Agency had been sufficently impressed with John's work in Early to Bed to ask him to sign a contract. He declined. Once and for all, he'd stick to writing. Acting was too insecure.

When she heard of his pending trip to Hollywood, she called. "Drop in on Taft Schreiber, will you, John?" Schreiber's the head of MCA in Hollywood. "He saw you in Early to Bed and liked you, too."

MCA's Hollywood office has an Old English atmosphere, which made a pretty solid impression on John. So did Mr. Schreiber.

Not knowing just how it happened, he emerged from the Old English atmosphere, leaving MCA behind as his authorized agents—to handle him as writer, director or actor.

When they sent him to Paramount a few days later to test for Miss Susie Slagle, he said weakly, "But I've got a job." When the whole thing fell through, he drew a breath of relief and shook the stardust of Hollywood from his feet.

Radio writers work under the intolerable pressure of a weekly deadline. They drink too much coffee, get too little sleep, smoke too many cigarettes. John was no exception. The routine began telling on him. When his contract came up for renewal, Marie begged him to quit for a while.

"I can't. They've been too decent to me."

"Then sign on a week-to-week basis. Give yourself a chance to let go if you can't hang on."

He was on that basis when Miss Van Cleve sent him to see Lindsay and Crouse, who were producing The Hasty Heart.

John was embarrassed by the poverty of his theatrical background, so he made it sound even sketchier, just to show them. "Well—call me if you want me," he concluded, and breezed out.

Next day Miss Van Cleve phoned the producers' office. "How did you like John Lund?"

"We liked him fine," said the affable Mr. Crouse. "I think we've got a part for him."

opening night jitters . . .

It was the part of Yank—which set critics whooping and brought movie offers from every major studio. But John couldn't know that yet. Between flu and the jitters, opening night found him in a fine fever. Marie was trying to get dressed.

"Where's my cough medicine?"

It was in his pocket. She gave her hair another brush.

"I can't find the aspirin."

She found it and tucked it into the other pocket. "Can I get dressed now?"

This condition, aggravated in John's case by the temperature he was running, is familiar to all theatrical people, and lasts till after the morning papers come out. John refused to read them. So Marie dove in, and lifted shining eyes from the first review she read. "Oh John, it's out of this world."

"That's only one. Read 'em all and tell me the worst."

There wasn't any worst. In the chorus of acclaim, young Richard Basehart and John were singled out. The Rochester kid, shoved into an amateur production of Waiting for Lefty because he could talk loud, had made the bright lights. He was hailed as the best young actor of the season.

Paramount was almost immediately hot on his trail for To Each His Own. He yielded to a combination of advice from his agent, excellent contract terms, and the lure of such names as De Havilland, Brackett and Wilder. Brackett and Wild-

"My husband became a grim stranger . . ."

Could this grim-faced man be my once gay, loving husband? What had I done to change him so? . . . Well, it seems I'd been careless in trusting to now-and-then care in my feminine hygiene. "A sad mistake made by all too many wives," my doctor told me. Then he recommended using "Lysol" brand disinfectant for douching—always.

"He's my own man again now"

My own devoted husband is back again, now I'm faithful to my doctor's advice. No more careless feminine hygiene, with "Lysol" so easy and economical to use. It's far more effective than salt, soda or other homemade solutions—a proved germ-killer, cleansing thoroughly yet gently. I always use "Lysol" for douching...and it works beautifully!

Many Doctors Recommend "LYSOL" for Feminine Hygiene . . . for 6 Reasons

Reason No. 1: POWERFUL, PROVED GERM-KILLER . . . "Lysol" is a true germicide of great germ-killing power. This power is not reduced by age or exposure to air.

Note: Douche thoroughly with correct "Lysol" solution . . . always!

For Feminine Hygiene use "Lysol" always!

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant
REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

The Ideal Way to Reduce

LOSE FAT

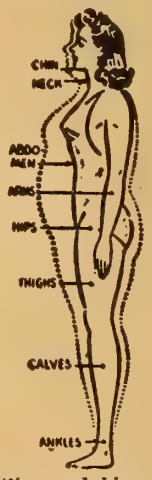
Lose Pounds
Lose Inches

REDUCE

In the Privacy of Your Home

WONDER BATH

Helps you to relax while reducing. LOSE WEIGHT with this new, easy, pleasant, harmless method. No more tiring exercises, no more laxatives or drugs. No starvation diets. You just take a warm, soothing, comforting WONDER BATH, just rest and relax for 15 minutes this healthful, pleasant way. By following the WONDER BATH method, you will be amazed and delighted at the way your fat and bulges just seem to melt away. If you are normally overweight you can easily lose pounds and inches. The more you use the WONDER BATH method, the more weight you lose. This is the easy, pleasant, harmless way used by the most expensive and exclusive Reducing Salons. This is the way many New York and Hollywood stage, screen and radio people help to keep their figures slim, lovely and glamorous. You may now say goodbye to your heavy waistline and hips and those unnecessary, unsightly bulges at a trifling cost.



The WONDER BATH method is an amazing new way to reduce superfluous fatty tissues on most all parts of the body.

FREE A large size jar of Special Formula WONDER Body Cream and "FIGURE BEAUTY" will be included absolutely FREE with your order for WONDER BATH. To achieve best results, this Special Formula Body Cream should be used after each WONDER BATH.

10-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Use the WONDER BATH method for 10 days at our expense. If you are not truly delighted with your loss of weight, if you don't look and feel better—return the remaining contents and your money will be refunded in full.

ACADEMY VITA PRODUCTS CO., Dept. DM-6
Academy Building, Newark 2, N. J.

Please send me postpaid, 60-day supply of WONDER BATH and Free Special Formula WONDER Body Cream with "FIGURE BEAUTY." I enclose $5.00 cash, check or money order. If I am not 100% delighted, I may return the remaining contents within 10 days and my money will be promptly refunded.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

C.O.D. Orders. Send $1.00 deposit. Pay postman balance of $4.00 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. Same Money-Back Guarantee.

er are to Hollywood what Lindsay and Crouse are to Broadway. As for Livvy, he'd always admired her work, and when he finished the picture, he admired her even more.

"I don't want to say nice things about her—sounds like I'm writing a feature story. But here are the facts. It was my first picture. Naturally I said 'yes, sir' and 'no, sir' and gave no trouble. But she gave less than I did. Everything happened to her: she got sick, she was evicted, the role was a toughie, she appeared in every inch of film—but never a peep out of her, and what a performance! If they hadn't given her the Oscar, I was preparing to put a hex on 'em."

John's now making The Sainted Sisters with Betty Hutton—his partner in Perils of Pauline—Diana Lynn and Sterling Hayden, and unless every sign lies, he'll be around town for a long time. Something of a pessimist, John was slow to be persuaded of that probability. Though he and Marie were being thrown from pillar to post, he was anti-house.

"I'm an actor now. Every two-three months an actor loses his job."

"You've got a contract."

"With options. Which are made to be dropped. Fred Allen had the right idea. He wouldn't buy anything you couldn't put on the Chief."

Marie heard of a little house in the hills off Cahuenga.

John said: "I don't want a house."

"Let's just look at it, darling. We can always leave it there, it's not going to chase us."

They went through it. "Not a bad layout," said John.

"Not a bad backyard to get sunburned in," said Marie.

He pulled out his checkbook. "Better go down and give them a deposit."

They're furnishing little by little, using gay colors, with Gauguin prints on the walls, because all their lives they've lived with boarding-house browns. Marie has a gift for decoration, for home-making in general.

take it or leave it . . .

She doesn't thirst after a career. If somebody offered her a decent part, she'd take it. But to go hat in hand, and ask—she doesn't care that much. John says it's up to her, but can be brought to admit that he's glad she enjoys domesticity. Apart from suits, she makes her own clothes, and they're honeys. Her husband has a way of eyeing a garment half done. "Is that how it's going to look? Because if it is, I'm not going to like it."

If he had his way, all her dresses would be either black or shocking pink. "It's the Goldwyn in me." California's also brought out the Beau Brummel in him. It used to be, "John, please buy another suit." "John, don't wear those old pants." Now his wardrobe's stacked with sportswear, and the Crosby influence is beginning to take hold. The other day he came home with a red-and-green plaid shirt.

Till their marriage, Marie never cooked anything but fudge. Since then, she's become an artist at the range, and takes a child's fresh delight in this discovery of her latent talent. "Isn't this a delicious roast?" she bubbles.

John can't generate enthusiasm, when prompted. "It's all right."

Marie giggles. "No gusher, he."

John limits her artistry by his distaste for onions and garlic. One day she fooled him—haven't we all?—and rubbed a touch of garlic into the leg of lamb. He ate it and came back for more. She knew she should have kept her mouth shut, but the impulse was too strong. "Notice anything different?"

"Uh-uh."

"I rubbed it with garlic—just a smidge."

"Oh, that was the thing about it I didn't like."

It's John's persistent contention that he's lazy. His body may be indolent; his intelligence isn't. In the Paramount commissary, the livelier spirits beat a pathway to his table. He reads omnivorously, talks with the tongue of angels and has the kind of mind that acts like a spark-plug on others. He feels strongly about justice, which seems to him the element most lacking in human relations.

When John's not working, the Lunds revert to their stage hours—stay up half the night and sleep late next day. There's nothing set about their social habits. They'll go out four nights running or stay home every night for three weeks. John's the kind who doesn't like parties till he gets there, then he couldn't like them better. The people they see most of are Zan and James Larrimore, Charlie Brackett's daughter and son-in-law, and the Carrol Carrolls—he's the radio writer. They go to movies a lot.

They're putting off entertaining till the house is finished, but they do have one regular visitor, who sticks his head through the window at midnight, meeows and goes in search of John. One rainy night he tracked mud across the new carpets. Understandably, this irked Marie.

"Oh, Puss with your dirty feet, go away.

"How can you talk to him like that?" John reproached her, and more than half meant it.

Puss stays till they're ready for bed, and has a snack before leaving. Once the milk happened to be low.

"Feed him that," warned Marie, "and there won't be any for breakfast."

"So we'll drink champagne." Stooping to pour the milk, John felt a kiss on the back of his neck. "What's that for?"

"You're a smart guy," said his wife. "You figure it out."

THE WINNER!

(The following excerpts are from the prize-winning letter in Leonard Feather's Sweet vs. Swing Contest. See page 96.)

Dear Mr. Feather:—

I personally like both swing and sweet music if they are played right. I don't believe that any musician can confine himself to one alone and positively ignore the other.

Just look at the record. Ellington is essentially a swing master, yet he continues to cop awards in the "sweet" department. Kenton—another jazz musician—has played sweet music, even if it was only used as a backing for Gene Howard's songs. Vaughn Monroe and Charlie Spivak are gaining a lot of fans—as are Boyd Raeburn and Buddy Rich.

Because Woody Herman broke up his band is no reason to say that swing is on its way out. If this were true, the money that Kenton is making now must all be counterfeit! It's true—the days when kids danced in the aisles to Benny's music are over—but today we have kids who listen and discuss swing, and—believe me—from what I've heard, most of them know what they are discussing.

As long as there are guys like Como and Monroe, sweet music will live. And as long as there are guys and gals like Mel Torme and Sara Vaughn and Kenton, swing will be right up there!

Lee Garber
Brooklyn, N. Y.

GAY BLADE

(Continued from page 58)

Pat didn't know any reason why a Great Dane wouldn't be lovely, until Claire stepped in again.

"I wouldn't cook for any Great Dane," she said flatly, clearly, and finally.

"Okay," said Cornel, "we'll mate Punch." Which they did. Now they have Punch's son, named Pogo, and they're going to get a brown French poodle besides.

Apparently, Claire doesn't care how many poodles they have.

Punch, being equally good-natured, wouldn't care how many cooks they had, either. His time is all taken up with serious chores such as swimming in the pool with Wendy, who is four years old, and whose hair is also black and curly.

Punch never uses a life-belt, so he's entitled to sneer at Wendy, who does, but he usually refrains. She's brighter than he is. And quick? Ask her father.

Her father was out tending his strawberries (the man is crazy on the subject) one afternoon, when he heard Wendy's voice. "Pottsy!" she was calling. "Pottsy, you come in here this instant! Do you hear me?"

Pottsy is Miss Potts, Wendy's governess, and Cornel, frowning, went in search of his daughter.

Having found her, he proceeded to read her a lecture. "Wendy," he said, "Miss Potts is a grown-up lady, and you're a little girl, and furthermore, you shouldn't speak that way to anybody!"

"Oh, I was just pretending," Wendy said. "I was pretending Pottsy was a baby, and I was her mother."

"It wasn't true," Cornel told Pat later. "But it certainly was fast!"

He's not too slow himself. Take, for instance, the deal he slipped over on 20th Century-Fox. Namely that if Forever Amber wasn't completed by such-and-such a time, he was to have a three-weeks vacation.

Such-and-such a time arrived, and Amber was still shooting, but Cornel got three solid weeks off.

He pulled out of the long black wig, and washed the Technicolor makeup from his face, and drove home beaming. Even the air seemed lighter than air should seem.

Pat grinned, when she saw him coming. "Darling, you look so happy."

"Happy?" he said. "Why should I look happy? Just because I'm going to beautiful Nassau with a gorgeous blonde?"

Nassau turned out to be heaven. The tropical sun, the sand, the bright, warm water—the restful type . . .

Pat would lie on the beach and soak up the sun for hours. Cornel would lie still for a while, and then get up and move around restlessly, until she said, "All right, all right, go get your goggles."

He'd put on his water goggles, and dive into the sea to look the situation over. Or under.

He practically lived down there; he never got tired of watching the fish, they were so gaily colored. He'd come back and swear to Pat, "Those fish have been interior decorated."

By this time, Pat would be asleep, and he'd sigh. "Good-for-nothing woman." He'd nudge her. "I'm going to get some coral."

She'd open one eye. "That's nice, dear. Bring me back a necklace."

More sighs from Mr. Wilde. "No audience participation," he'd complain, going off to pull coral. In a week, his skin had peeled

What you must tell your daughter before she marries...

Be Sure She Knows The Real Truth About These INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS!

Your daughter—and every girl entering marriage should be carefully instructed on how important douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and marriage happiness—how important it is to combat one of woman's most serious deodorant problems.

Often your daughter may know only 'half-the-truth' or old-fashioned advice whispered by her girl friends.

So what a comfort for you, mother, to be able to tell your daughter about this newer, really scientific method of douching with ZONITE—to assure her NO OTHER TYPE LIQUID ANTISEPTIC-GERMICIDE FOR THE DOUCHE OF ALL THOSE TESTED IS SO POWERFUL YET SO SAFE TO TISSUES.

Truly A Modern Miracle—

Wise women no longer use weak, homemade or dangerous products for the douche. They know these DO NOT and CAN NOT give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

The ZONITE principle is truly a miracle! The first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world that was so powerful yet positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-burning. Women can use ZONITE as directed as often as necessary without risk of injury.

Zonite Principle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Chemist

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective it immediately kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE that ZONITE kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

Buy ZONITE today. Complete directions come with every bottle.

Zonite
FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

FREE! NEW!

For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published — mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MSC-67, 370 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Tampax saves women from 5 worries

When "those miserable days" arrive each month, you can really experience a new lease of life by using Tampax for sanitary protection. This doctor-invented product is very small and dainty—meant for wearing internally. This may seem like a strange and novel idea at first, but it certainly saves a woman from some of her monthly worries—at least five of them, as follows:

You need not worry about odor, for Tampax causes none. You need not worry about bulges and wrinkles caused by belts and external pads. The same applies to chafing. Also, you needn't worry about carrying a conspicuous box home from the store, because a month's supply of Tampax goes neatly into your purse! And when disposal time arrives, Tampax has only 1/15 the bulk of "the other kind."

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

Wear Tampax in tub or shower—or while swimming. Pure surgical cotton. Slim disposable applicators. Three absorbency-sizes sold at drug and notion counters. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout U.S. . . . Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association off right up to the wrists. It seems that certain varieties of coral sting, and he'd latched on to one of that kind.

"Now maybe you'll lie on the beach like a civilized human being," his wife said hopefully.

"What do you think this is?" Cornel demanded. "A vacation?"

All too soon, it was over.

Cornel came back to Amber and discovered he'd been given a brand-new dressing room as a surprise. It was one of those curve-topped trailers (quonset hut shape) and he thanked the authorities responsible, and tried to look delighted.

After a few days, somebody caught him moping around, and said, "What's the matter—don't you like the place?"

"Sure," Cornel said. "But, well, the thing is—I can't stand up straight in it!"

The guy laughed, and said, "Who asked you to be eight feet tall?" and went away to arrange for Cornel's little old flat-topped dressing room to be brought out.

He finished the picture using that. "Flicka gets it next," he'd tell interviewers. "They're building in a trough."

Cornel enjoyed the duel, in Amber. He fences magnificently, and during rehearsals, he had a chance to work with Fred Cavens, fencing master.

Say something to Cornel about how great he is with a sword, and he'll decry it. "Look at the job Glenn Langan did," he'll point out. "And he's left-handed, and had to fence with his right!"

Cornel's adept at accents, too. He had George Sanders' down so pat that when George wasn't around, Cornel would say his lines, and unless the sound-man was watching, he couldn't tell the difference.

It startled Sanders a couple of times. He'd be sitting in a corner somewhere, and he'd hear his own intonations coming at him, and he'd jump four feet in the air.

"Bit of a shock, old man," he'd admit to Cornel later. "They'll be billing you as the new George Sanders."

On the rare days that Cornel isn't working at the studio, he's working at home.

He gets up early, and if he isn't writing, he's likely to be gardening furiously. He has a strawberry patch and seven window-boxes full of strawberries, and where he picked up all the strawberry husbandry, nobody knows.

He tears ads out of the garden section of the paper until Pat gets desperate. "Darling, you know you'll never do anything about them, and they just litter up the place."

"I might do something," he says stoutly.

And he reads her a glowing description of a peach tree that will grow luscious golden fruit all summer.

"But do they mention which summer?" Pat says, and Cornel shakes his head.

"So young, so pretty, so cynical."

To date, he's still tearing out ads, and he's still doing nothing about them.

The Wilde place is really isolated. It's up in the hills, and as you turn in at the drive, there's a small sign that says simply, "Country House."

Further along, there's another sign that says: "Drive slowly. Child at play."

The child, of course, is that energetic specimen Wendy, a sharp operator.

She goes to nursery school every afternoon, and recently she came home to Pottsy with a sad story. "The teacher punished me today," she said.

"Oh?" said Pottsy. "Why?"

"I was running and yelling," Wendy said cheerfully. "And the teacher told me to stop, and I didn't."

Pottsy looked grave. "Will Mommy and Daddy like that?"

"Oh," said Wendy, horrified. "I'm not going to tell them!"

Wendy plays Pottsy and Claire against each other. When Pottsy's off, Claire takes care of her, and Wendy'll be having her egg, and she'll look up innocently. "Pottsy gives me pepper on my egg," she'll say.

She does the same thing with Pottsy, and since neither Claire nor Pottsy wants to be lesser in her affections, she gets pepper on her egg. She's not supposed to have pepper on her egg, and she knows it.

Her favorite pastime is serving the crackers when her mother and father have friends in for cocktails.

She points out the cracker each guest is to take, and beside her Emily Post is a wild-eyed radical.

Wendy's so strict on points of behavior that she reprimanded her father in ringing tones the afternoon he filched a cracker.

"You're not supposed to take one till last," she said.

He hung his head in shame.

Some day, when Wendy's old enough, Cornel's going to tell her his own foolish version of how he was discovered. "I was sitting at a soda fountain in Hollywood," he'll say, "and I was wearing white tights. And this man came up to me and said, 'Can you fence?' "

He'll keep a straight face telling it, too.

And when Wendy's even older, somebody's going to tell her a different story. "There once was a girl named Wendy," it'll go, "who had a terrific old man—"

THE DECLINE OF BING CROSBY

(Continued from page 30)

The owner of a record shop in Bloomington, Indiana, put it this way. "Honest to God," he said, "people just ain't buying his records any more. But what the hell, he made me a lot of money when he was good, so I can go right on taking as many Crosbys as I can get and keep hopin' he'll come back."

Bing became a big man years ago, and, as with Duse and Garbo and Bernhardt and Tonto, you never had to use his full name to establish his identity. Inevitably, the movies beckoned. It is no more than honest reporting to say that he was terrible in his first few pictures. Only the tunes he sang—"Please," "Down the Old Ox Road," "Learn to Croon," and others—lent him any validity at all. His acting was godawful. He persisted, however, and now, lo and behold, he has an Oscar on his mantel. Sinatra and Como and Haymes and all the other johnny-come-latelies have Bing to thank for their picture contracts.

The years galloped by and, as they did, the Kraft Music Hall took on the aspects of a divine ritual in American homes on Thursday nights. Everything considered, that is as it should have been. It was a swell program—one of the best ever—and pervading it was the warmth of the Crosby personality. He had developed into one of the most relaxed entertainers in the world, with a unique talent for infecting his listeners with his own carefree attitude. He knew how to laugh at himself.

In 1943 a frail young singer named Frank Sinatra opened at a New York cabaret called the Riobamba and, almost immediately, it became apparent that Bing was going to have some competition in the vocal department. It is a mark of his greatness as a person that he encouraged Sinatra from the very beginning. This is a rare thing in show business. What gossipers had predicted would become a feud grew, instead, into friendship. It is regrettable that the best records Bing Crosby ever made have not been released for sale to the general public. These are the transcriptions of a show which he and Sinatra put on for the armed forces' Command Performance. (Command Performance shows were recorded and then distributed to servicemen overseas.) Aside from the fact that these records are as delightful as any ever made, they are impressive testimony to Crosby's bigness. As a top-ranking star, he could not have been censured too harshly for refusing to appear on the same stage with a singer who was threatening his position as the number one male vocalist. Instead, he not only appeared, but went to extraordinary lengths to see that Sinatra was presented favorably.

It is difficult to say when the deterioration in Bing's singing began to set in. For my own part, I became acutely conscious of it in his Decca recording of I Love You (from Mexican Hayride). That, to my ears, was the first of a succession of progressively more inadequate Crosby records. His recent "Pretending" and "Getting Nowhere" are downright embarrassing. This is not an isolated opinion. It has, for example, been shared in print by John S. Wilson, PM's competent record reviewer, and Frank Conniff, the New York Journal-American's rising young columnist. A few weeks ago, Conniff, whose pieces are frequently sparked by some knowledgeable jazz criticisms, wrote: "In the wry tone of this-hurts-me-more-than-it-hurts-you, some of the charter members of the Crosby Chowder and Picketing Club have been hinting that the master has lost his touch. His current records, his latest picture, and his radio show are getting the once-over-lightly from all sides."

Jack Kapp, the head of Decca Records and Bing's mentor, is sensitive to any criticism of his biggest moneymaker and peevishly insists that Crosby records continue to sell in great volume. What he fails to mention, however, is that their sales, although still sizeable, are steadily declining. The Arcade Music Shop in New York City, which is a beehive because of its location near a subway entrance on West 42nd Street, reports that it has been selling fewer and fewer Crosby records. Bing's most devoted fans are gravely concerned about his indifferent performances these days. Fred Robbins, who runs "The 1280 Club," a recorded program over New York's WOV, says "I get very few requests for Crosby these days. Mostly they come from couples who are celebrating an anniversary and want to hear him sing 'The Anniversary Waltz.' The guy flats too much. His last twenty-or-so records have been terrible."

To spot the cause of Bing Crosby's decline as a singer is a ticklish job. Neither he nor the people near him have made any adequate explanation as this is written. But the fact that opera singers and less strenuous vocalists go into their fifties with their voices unimpaired makes people wonder why Bing should have started slipping while still in his forties. The obvious answer is that opera singers take extremely good care of their voices. Bing never has. The ease with which he scaled the heights led him into careless ways. There would seem to be a good deal of significance in a recent dispatch from Hollywood which stated that he had given up pipe smoking. If this is true, it means that Bing, for the first time in his career, is worried.

It may be that Bing will make a comeback. But history is against it. So this then would seem to be the end of an era—an era that began back in the '20's—and no one should be blamed for feeling bad about it. In his time, Bing was a very special man and we are all richer for having had him sing to us.

BEST YEARS OF HIS LIFE

(Continued from page 62)

Freddie let out a boyish whoop and the 15 years melted away like snow in June. He grabbed Florence, his wife, and kissed her. Next he called his brother, an executive of the Carrier Corporation. He was about to send a wire to Sam Goldwyn. But midway, he stopped. "Wait a minute," he said to Florence. "What's Harold Russell's wife's address—up in Cambridge?"

He dialed the operator and said "long distance."

In a few minutes Fred March, in the midst of his own triumph—which meant a very great deal to him—was making someone else happy. He was calling Harold Russell's wife, who, he knew, was alone in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and congratulated her on her hero-husband's honors in Hollywood.

The next morning, a Friday, March had laryngitis. The telegrams began coming in—at the Marchs' apartment on East End Avenue and at the Mansfield Theater. One wire, safely delivered by an intelligent Western Union runner, was addressed merely "Frederic March, Stage Hit, New York." It said, "CONGRATULATIONS. I KNEW YOU COULD DO IT. JUST A FAN."

There were more than 100 messages, and only one of them wanted anything from Freddie. This was a cable from Gabriel Pascal, a London producer, who asked if March and his wife would act for him in a new picture. The well-wishers ranged from "just fans" to Claudette Colbert, Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman. The telegram March prizes most was from the Winslow School, Racine, Wisconsin. This is the public school where Freddie went when he was Frederick McIntyre Bickel, 35 or 40 years ago.

But the telegram which summed everything up in one simple, neat statement was from Helen Hayes. It said, "IT COULD NOT HAVE HAPPENED TO A NICER GUY."

Being the kind of nice guy he is, Freddie is an old hand at passing the buck when it comes to accepting honors. In this particular instance, he's already sold himself on the idea that he "owes it all to Sam Goldwyn." Goldwyn, in turn, claims that Freddie owes it all to Fred MacMurray. And that's a story you can't top.

When Sam Goldwyn, the old fox of the studios, first read "Glory For Me," the novel by MacKinlay Kantor which became the story of Hollywood's prize picture for 1946, he immediately went into a huddle with himself about Al Stevenson and said "March." When Sam thinks something he does something. He phoned Fred in the East and told him the story, asked him to do the part.

"I don't think so, Sam," Freddie replied. He had good reasons—some stage commitments that would press him, and he really wasn't working hard at being a Hollywood star, anyway. Besides, the way Sam outlined the part, it didn't look like anything extra special. Five other Hollywood actors had equally large roles. It was

Debutante BRA
$1.75 each
3 for $5
Hollywood beauty . . . cool comfort! Modern — scientific — quilted cup for permanent uplift and smart separation . . . Lastex front insert . . . adjustable straps . . . elastic back . . . 4-way adjustable fastener. Nude or white rayon satin or fine cotton. Glamour-perfect for sheerest frocks. For new beauty . . . order DEBUTANTE BRA now! Satisfaction or your money back.
MAIL THIS NOW!
USE THIS HANDY COUPON

INTERSTATE STORES CO., Inc., Dept. 17-D
Owensboro, Ky.
Please send me _____ Debutante Bra at $1.75 each (3 for $5).

	32	34	36	38	40
Nude						Cotton ☐
White						Rayon Satin ☐

(check one) Cash ☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
We pay postage if remittance is enclosed, no C.O.D.'s outside U.S.A.

HOLLYWOOD POSTURE VIVACIOUS CURVES
GLAMOUR Belt
For Posture . . . For Health
$2.50 ea.
Enjoy cool figure loveliness with GLAMOUR BELT! It slenderizes immediately, actually helps reduce waist, hips and abdomen. Scientifically designed . . . supports back . . . corrects posture. Makes clothes fit better, look better. Comfortable, easy to wear! Cool cotton coutil . . . easy to launder . . . weighs less than 8 ounces. Order your GLAMOUR BELT now for an instantly new, improved figure! Satisfaction or your money back.
BEFORE
AFTER
MAIL THIS NOW!
USE THIS HANDY COUPON

INTERSTATE STORES CO., Inc., Dept. 17-D
Owensboro, Ky.
Please send me_____Glamour Belt at $2.50 each.
My waist measure is_____My hip measure is_____ (check one) Cash ☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
We pay postage if remittance is enclosed, no C.O.D.'s outside U.S.A.

no prize package or special opportunity.

Sam is foxy and he's known Frederic March a good many years. He said, "Read the book, and I'll call you again."

"Whatever you say, Sam," agreed Freddie. "But I'm afraid it's still 'no'."

Sam still couldn't see anyone but Fredric March as Al Stevenson because he knew Freddie was Al at heart. But he had to cast his picture. He called Fred MacMurray and offered it to him. Fred listened briefly, took a look at the book. He shook his head. "No," he refused flatly. "I don't like it. Not enough of a part." The way Mac looked at it, it was a definite step down.

Meanwhile, Robert E. Sherwood, the playwright, was tussling with the novel, trying to dramatize it into the movie screen story he knew it should be. That depended on the characters—and the character of Al Stevenson was giving him frustrated fits. Sherwood is a clever and talented dramatic craftsman; but there was good reason for his puzzlement about Al Stevenson. The character was a strange anomaly. He was a sergeant who had completed a terrific, tough war record. He was vital and young in heart, romantic, young enough to be a hearty pal to Dana Andrews and Harold Russell—but still middle-aged, old enough to have a twenty-year-old daughter.

Sam Goldwyn couldn't answer him, then—about who'd play Al—but in a few days he could. He called his first persistent hunch, Fredric March, again, and Sam Goldwyn is a hard man to refuse. "Look, Freddie," he suggested, "why don't you come along with me? I tell you this is for you."

The answer he got was, "I've read the book and I like it. I see possibilities to make that guy Stevenson live, Sam. Most of all, I think America could use a picture like this right now. I'll go along."

When Robert Sherwood heard that, he went to work. He knew Fredric March, too, the kind of man he was. Next morning he could tell Sam Goldwyn, "That did it. I know who Al's like now and what he does. He's Fred March."

Any actor who can have that positive an effect on a scenario and on a film, is no mere mime or face maker, no puppet or painted doll. Whenever Fred was around, he was acting himself, acting natural, ad libbing, improving the dialogue, adding natural actions and reactions every time the camera buzzed. A good quarter of all the dialogue in every scene Fred March poked his face in was right out of Fred's own impromptu response to the scene situation—and almost always Director Wyler snapped the result into the movie.

It was Freddie's spur-of-the-moment inspiration to dance with the waiter when he got ossified at Butch's. To grab his daughter's date's martinis and toss them off when he got nervous. To mix a bromo-seltzer and, in his jitters, start to drink the empty glass.

Fred March's honesty is the key to his character and the secret of his Academy Award. Because he projected every bit of his real self into that part without stint.

For years Freddie March has worried—as millions of males, particularly actors, worry—about his retreating hairline. It's a petty thing, but absolutely human—and what have I been saying about March? At any rate, Freddie swore softly whenever he looked in a mirror and saw his temples deepening. He was touchy about it.

But when he had to do a morning-after scene in The Best Years, he searched himself for something intimate and characteristic that a guy with the hangover glooms would do in the bathroom. Fred knew what he'd do. He'd lift back his thinning locks and gaze dismally at the hair that wasn't there. So when the scene came up—that's what he did, although it pained his normal male ego to have to do that before millions of people.

It was the hundreds of prosaic, honest, human touches like that—practically all injected by Fred March himself, that added up to his second Oscar and helped make The Best Years an Academy sweepstakes winner.

He brings that same understanding human touch to his work on the stage. And with equal results. Broadway has always been jealous of the movies' Academy Award system, and many attempts have been made to establish the equivalent of an Oscar to honor stage players, writers and producers. The newest prize, a piece of jewelry dubbed "Tony," was set up this Spring by the great wartime entertainment organization, the American Theater Wing, in memory of the late Antoinette (Tony) Perry, mainspring of the Theater Wing and director of many hits.

March got a Tony on Easter Sunday "for distinguished service to the American stage"—the service being his masterful portrait of Clint Jones in Ruth Gordon's play, Years Ago.

If the designation "genius" belongs to any of our current crop of actors, certainly it belongs to Fredric March. But the exacting role of Al Stevenson in Best Years Of Our Lives called for qualities over and above mere histrionic genius.

Al Stevenson was a fine man. No acting in the world can produce the illusion of fineness! Understanding people, helping them in a way that never embarrassed them, was Al's forte. The story of March's sympathetic yet gracious relations with Harold Russell gives you a rough idea of the extent to which the characters of Al Stevenson and Fredric March overlap.

All through the filming of Best Years, Fred March used the understanding of GI psychology he sopped up in his camp shows all over the world to keep Harold Russell relaxed, easy and confident. He knew how much Harold's part meant to the picture. But it wasn't only that. It was a natural impulse to treat a guy who'd lost his hands for his country like he wanted to be treated, like Homer wanted to be treated in the picture—like anybody else. No pity, no curiosity, no avoiding the issue or pussy-footing around. March learned this in hospital tours during the war.

just be natural . . .

It's one of the hardest things in the world to do—as everyone around Goldwyn's realized, when Harold Russell arrived on the lot with his "hooks"—not to be too nice, not to give out with any sympathy for his handicap. Most everyone was a little guilty of that—they couldn't help it—except Fred. He walked right up to Harold, examined and marvelled at his artificial hands, tried to work them—brought the handicap right out in the open—even kidded Harold about them and got a grateful grin always in return.

In fact, Fred eased Harold into one of the funniest—but toughest—scenes to play in the whole picture by a wisecrack about his handles. That was the bar scene in Butch's—the one, incidentally, the Academy Award committee picked to show when they handed out the prizes.

In that scene, all the principal actors of Best Years came together for the first time at Butch's, so it was pretty important. Harold had some understandable nerves: it was early in the shooting. He was self-conscious, particularly, because when he picked up his bottle and glass of beer, his artificial grips made a clicking noise on the glass. The noise got his goat several times in the middle of a scene and then he forgot everything, and there had to be a "Cut."

I don't know whether Freddie March decided deliberately to do it, or whether it was just an instinct. That's what it sounded like—because right in the middle of the next take, when Harold's hooks clinked again, Fred cracked,

"Got 'em in high gear now, Homer?"

And right back came Harold with a natural GI guy's retort that certainly wasn't in the dialogue—"Naw—they're in overdrive."

Fredric March is still one of those plain Americans—despite his acting eminence and Hollywood-Broadway success. That's why he could play one and prove that such unimportant items as a retreating hairline, a few furrows in his face, and a fiftieth birthday coming up next August, really mean nothing whatever to an actor whose heart is young and whose mind is still growing. That's why Freddie March could prove to himself and to the world that—not fifteen years ago—but right now are the best years of his life.

"That kid is gonna steal the picture!"

FREE!

A NEW BOOK

. . . tells you how to get wonderful canned or frozen fruit . . . new directions . . . simple as 1-2-3. With KARO* Syrup you make blended syrups for canning and freezing. Use them for any fruit! Easy recipes tell you exactly how. And results are wonderful! Fruits fairly sparkle! Their color is bright. Their texture is firm. And they have that delicious natural flavor you've always longed for.

SEND FOR YOUR COPY NOW!
TELLS ALL ABOUT JELLIES, PICKLES AND PRESERVES, TOO!

KARO SYRUP
Madison Square Station, P. O. Box 381
New York 10, N. Y.

Send my new, free, 32 page copy of "Finer Canned & Frozen Fruits" (Please print or write very plainly.)

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

WHETHER you've had years of experience or never put up fruit in your life, this is your book. KARO, blended with sugar and water, should give you canned or frozen fruit to thrill your family.

Clip this coupon or use a post card. But do it now!

Then plan your canning or freezing with the help of this book. Tells how to choose and prepare fruit . . . talks about jars and containers . . . gives proportion for large and small quantities.

*KARO is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Co., New York, N. Y.

© C. P. R. Co., 1947

Claudette Colbert

Co-starring in "THE EGG AND I"
A Universal-International Picture

PHOTO BY RAY JONES

Create that smooth, young look

...in just a few seconds with

Pan-Cake* Make-Up

Here's a simple, easy guide to a thrilling, more glamorous beauty for you. Just consult the chart shown here. Select and try your shade of Pan-Cake Make-Up to harmonize with your own individual colorings. See how it gives your skin that lovely, smooth, young look. Note how it helps hide tiny complexion faults. And you will be amazed at the way it stays on for hours without retouching. Yes, and "Pan-Cake" safeguards your skin against sun and wind which often bring drying, aging signs. Try "Pan-Cake" today for that smooth, young look.

Which shade of Pan-Cake for You

IF YOU ARE A BLONDE with medium skin, Cream No. 2 Pan-Cake; if skin lacks color, Cream-Rose Pan-Cake.

IF YOU ARE A BRUNETTE with olive skin, Natural No. 2 Pan-Cake; if skin lacks color, Natural-Rose.

IF YOU ARE A BROWNETTE with medium skin, Cream No. 2 Pan-Cake; if skin lacks color, Natural-Rose.

IF YOU ARE A REDHEAD with fair, creamy skin, dramatize the beauty of your coloring with Cream No. 1 Pan-Cake; if skin is freckled, Cream No. 2.

(For a Sun-tanned effect, Tan No. 1, Tan-Rose or Tan No. 2 Pan-Cake)

Color Harmony Make-Up
"PAN-CAKE" • POWDER • ROUGE • LIPSTICK

*Pan-Cake...Trade Mark Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Max Factor • Hollywood

EVERYTHING WITH TRICK ENDINGS

(Continued from page 43)

his wife, Lynn Bari. Later, a preview—

Lucius Beebe couldn't have carried it off with more savoir faire. Until the foursome came out of the theater, after the preview, and stood waiting for the Lufts' car to be brought around front.

The attendant looked at them blankly. "No car like that in the lot."

Sid is a mild young man, but his car is a Cadillac. "What do you mean, anyway?" he barked.

"Your car ain't there, Mister, is what I mean," the attendant told him. "Who took it to park?"

Peter spoke up. "Some kid—he just jumped in and yelled, 'I've got it,' the way they always do."

"Well, he wasn't one of our kids," the attendant said. He said it with finality.

The chagrinned Mr. Lawford turned to the beautiful Miss Keyes. She wasn't exactly tapping her foot on the ground with impatience, but Peter imagined that was the next step.

By the time they tracked down the car, they'd been in every police station in Los Angeles. Even then, they had to go bail the bus out, because the law had impounded it. Cops had seen this kid driving this big, sleek black job, and they'd picked him up because it didn't look quite right, and—

Mr. Lawford finally got Miss Keyes home.

"It was a lovely evening," she said charmingly, being the well-mannered girl she is.

A week afterward, somebody asked Peter how the date had gone.

"Oh, I made some impression," he said. "She turned around and eloped with John Huston, two days later."

Trick endings, all the time.

When he slips his feet out of his moccasins, in the M-G-M commissary, and slips them on again, a little later, he finds some happy-hearted little friend has filled them with soda-crackers. Everything with a crunch.

Or a ring, in the case of the telephone. His phone used to ring one hundred and fifty times a day, and Lady Lawford, who's never learned how to be rude to people, found herself spending three-quarters of her time explaining to some young fan how many teeth Peter had when he was seven and a half months old.

private number . . .

Moving into their new home, recently, the Lawfords breathed a sigh of satisfaction. New house, new phone number. Private number, too, by agreement with the telephone company. Nobody could get it.

Their first day in, the phone never stopped whining.

Peter came home from work, and his mother met him at the door, exhausted. "I really don't know what to do," she said.

He picked up the receiver and dialed Information. "Can you give me Peter Lawford's phone number?"

"Of course." The lady on the phone was ever so cooperative. "Just a minute, it's—" And she told him.

"Thank you so much," he said, hanging up, and plucking a grey hair out of his head. One hell of a confidential number that was.

One summer day Pete was wading out into the surf, when he glimpsed a woman following him. He went a little further; she came a little further.

She followed him until the water was up around her neck, and then he noticed she was clutching an autograph book over her head.

"You got a pencil?" she said brightly.

It would have been a swell spot for an under-water fountain pen gag.

Sometimes, he wonders about autograph hunters. It isn't that fans aren't delightful people, but queer things happen.

Like the night he was with Frankie. Frank had on his usual bow-tie, and he and Peter were surrounded by kids. Suddenly, two of the kids took up stands on either side of Frank, and each one grabbed an end of his tie.

They yanked so hard, his feet almost left the ground, and he started to turn purple.

Peter beat them off. "What do you think this is, a taffy pull?"

Afterward, he kidded Frank. "Maybe this'll teach you to wear ties like other human beings. If you want to get ahead, why don't you model yourself after somebody like me?"

"Thanks," Frank said drily. "I haven't got the strength."

Peter does give the impression of a Mixmaster in full swing. Take a Saturday he spent not long ago—

He didn't have to go into the studio, and he had a date with Lana Turner for that evening.

Now any right-minded gent would simply sit back and think about Lana Turner until it was time to go get her.

Not Peter. He got up, and showered, and had breakfast, and kissed his mother goodbye. "Don't answer the phone," he said. "I'll see you later."

Then he went down to Van Johnson's—the Johnsons have a wonderful new tennis court—and dragged Van away from his coffee.

They batted the ball around for a couple of hours, and then sat down to rest.

Van got up presently. "Going to hop in the pool. Want to?"

"No."

Dead silence. Then: "Think I'll go down to the beach. I don't like pools."

Van watched him go, and wiped his brow. Imagine tearing off to the beach, when there was a pool at your disposal.

The energetic Mr. Lawford had, by this time, disappeared in his red car, and a cloud of dust. His red car is just about the most exciting thing that ever happened to him. Its mother was a convertible coupe, and its father was a sturdy station wagon, and it inherited the best features of both.

When he first acquired it, he was the worst date in town. He was out with Ava Gardner this one time, and she was talking, and he was giving her half-witted answers.

People who go out with Ava Gardner generally do better than that, so she was beginning to get irritable. Not only was he giving her half-witted answers, but he kept getting up, excusing himself, and leaping out the front door.

When he came back after about the fourth or fifth time, Ava looked at him coldly. "Is there something out there I ought to know about?"

He shook his head, feeling sheepish. "It's the car. I just wanted to see if she was all right."

"She's doing better than I am," Ava observed.

But getting back to that Saturday morning—Peter drove away from Van's, and sped down toward the beach.

After a swim, he had lunch at a little restaurant, and then he figured he might as well go home. On the way he slowed down for a guy trying to hitch a ride. "Get in."

The car whizzed forward, top down, sun shining, air clean and warm. Peter had his radio tuned to the opera being broadcast from the Metropolitan in New York, and he felt great. He turned to his companion, who was fidgeting. "Don't you like opera?"

"Oh, sure," the man said. "I love it."

Twenty minutes later, he spoke again. "But could we switch stations for a minute? I want to know who won the third race at Santa Anita."

Trick endings, even to Bizet.

Peter got home late, as usual. He's always late, and he always thinks he's early, and he always acts hurt about the whole business.

"You're taking Lana to dinner?" Lady Lawford asked him. "You'll have to hurry."

He arrived at Lana's precisely forty minutes behind schedule, and she's not a girl men keep waiting.

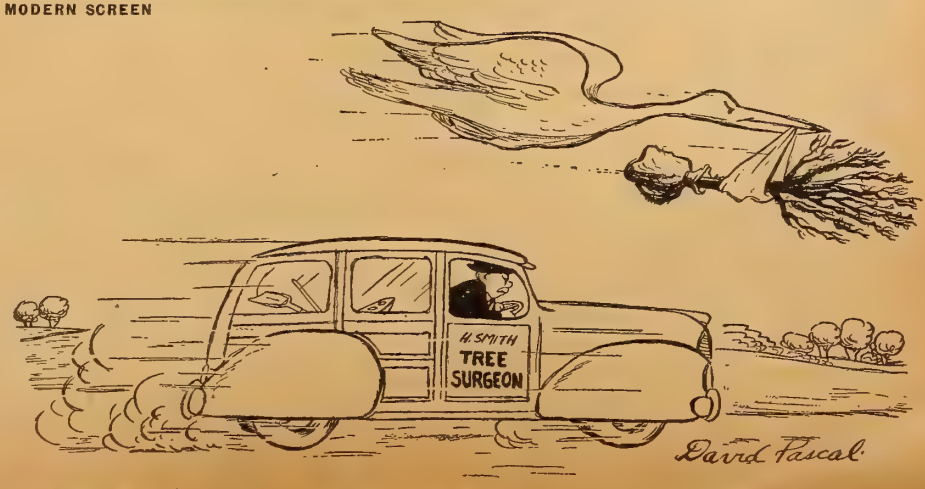
"You're late," she said looking very beautiful.

"Nope," he said. "I'm Lawford." (This is borrowed from Mortimer Snerd, Charlie McCarthy's friend. He says "nope, I'm Mortimer," to everything.)

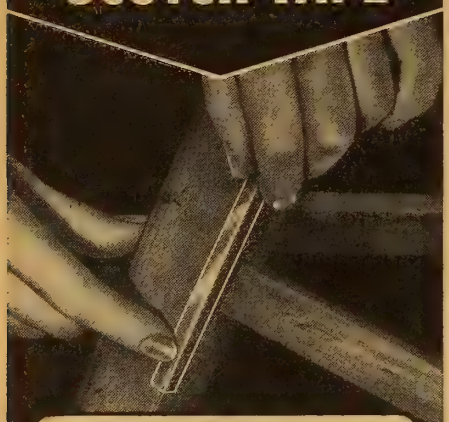
Peter gazed at Lana. "You're lovely."

"Nope," she said. "I'm Lana."

They were still giggling, half an hour later. They laugh all the time they're together, just because they're both young and good-looking and pleased with them-



SLICK TRICK with SCOTCH TAPE



DON'T snag stockings on rough chair legs. Cover rough edges with firm-holding and transparent "SCOTCH" TAPE.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

25c at your favorite store

Scads of "Scotch" Tape ideas in the new free "Slick Tricks" booklet. Send for yours today . . . and if you have some clever hunches on how you use "Scotch" Tape, let us hear from you! Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 941 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.

© 1947 3M CO.

VETO Colgate's Amazing New Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant... Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness—and to check perspiration, stop underarm odor safely.

DOUBLY PREFERRED!

Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

selves and the world. They have a friendship based on nothing whatever but slightly hysterical compatability.

They are not a big romance.

They went to dinner that night, and later, they danced, and much later, they stopped at a drive-in for hamburgers.

"I'm having onions," Peter said. "You'd better have onions."

Lana had onions and the waitress had a breakdown, and Peter had two chocolate malteds.

What a life.

The one concession Peter makes to being human is that he sleeps late on Sunday mornings.

He has a nice place to do it, too. The Lawfords' new house in Brentwood is small and charming. It has two bedrooms, a living-room, dining-room, den, a big flagstone porch, and a little garden and barbecue. Peter did every bit of the decorating himself. He has an uncanny memory for color.

When he and Keenan Wynn went East for a personal appearance tour, they stopped in Chicago. Peter walked into Keenan's room one morning. "How about coming out with me? I want to look for some lamp shades."

Keenan went along, and it wasn't until Peter was telling the clerk to send him two of those maroon and gray lampshades, that it occurred to Keenan that this was a highly irregular process.

"What makes you think they'll match your other stuff?" he asked him. "Nobody can carry color in his head."

"I can," said Peter.

When he and Keenan and the lampshades got home, he proved his point. The drapes and the shades looked as though they had come from the same dye lot.

Now every time Keenan enters the house, he bows reverently to the shades, to Peter, and to the East.

Over at M-G-M, these days, Peter's making Good News. It's his first big musical; that is, the first in which he's sung and danced all the way through.

He comes home some nights so hoarse he feels like Gravel Gertie.

There's one number in French, that he and June Allyson do together, and Junie goes around wailing about it.

"His accent's so good," she tells people. "And mine's so awful. Why does his accent have to be so good?"

They explain it to her. "He never spoke English until he was five years old," they say.

"I don't care." Junie's off again, her small face mournful. "Why does his accent have to be so good?"

One of Peter's best friends at M-G-M is a little dancer named Jean Coine.

Now and then, in the commissary, Peter looks at her contemplatively. "I might even marry you someday," he says.

She flashes him a grin, over a bowl of soup. "I'll keep you in mind."

It goes that way. Cracks with your lunch, and crackers with your shoes, and beer on your head.

Some Saturday nights, when things have been almost too hectic during the week, Peter has a few of the kids out to the house for a quiet party. There'll be Keenan, and the Lufts, and Ava, and Marilyn Maxwell—

And you know what they like to do best?

Play word games!

Everything with trick endings.

CARY, CARY QUITE CONTRARY

(Continued from page 55)

he countered with that famous quizzical, bewildered-little-boy-smile which knocks all women for loops. And I may say about that time my resistance was low, too, and I'm not easily swayed.

"Now, now, Florabel," he remonstrated. "You know I'm not going to answer that question. How would you like to hear about the party we're getting up tonight to give Dame May Whitty some laughs?"

So I heard about the party and it gives you an idea of what a sweet, thoughtful guy Cary is. Recently Dame Whitty was saddened by the death of her husband, the noted actor, Ben Webster. Her outward show of courage doesn't fool her friends. Cary heard that Frederick Lonsdale, the playwright, had invited her to dinner at La Rue on the Strip. When she arrived, she had not one escort, but ten of the most charming men in Hollywood, all rounded up by Grant, who was there himself, of course.

After that I steered the conversation back to Betty. What did he think of her? What sort of girl is she?

"All women are angels," he said.

"Is Betty an angel?" I asked.

"I don't like to talk about any one else for publication. I would dislike having a girl tell the world what she thought about me, so I'll have to give her the same breaks I would want."

Around Hollywood, Cary has the reputation of being the man nobody really knows. Not because he is a recluse who walks alone, avoiding people. On the contrary, he probably has more friends than any other actor in the business. But he doesn't throw wide the portals of his innermost soul and invite those friends to speculate to their hearts' content on what is revealed there. He doesn't give the appearance of being secretive at all. In fact, he seems so frank and open that he disarms you completely. You feel that he is telling all, but when you go away you realize how little he has told. However, under a rapid fusillade of questions, it is difficult to keep up one's guard all the time. I managed to get a few quick glimpses into the mind of this quite often bewildered fellow, clad in the armor of extraordinary masculine attractiveness in a world of prowling females. As everyone knows, such an armor has more holes in it than Swiss cheese.

Some people suspect that Cary is consciously playing hard-to-get. I know he isn't because he hasn't the guile called for to be either a Don Juan or a male coquette. I think he's going to marry Betty one day. I say that because I know that he has to have two qualities in a wife. First, she must be willing, and have the know-how, to create a home for him; second, she has to submerge herself in his career.

What must not be forgotten is that Cary has made two passes already at marital happiness and muffed both. He thought he had found what he was searching for in Barbara Hutton, the "poor little rich girl," whose life was so pathetically cramped by her millions that she couldn't possibly have had anything but a distorted view of any human relations. Previously, Cary had taken a terrific jolt straight to the button from Cupid when he fell head over heels in love and married beauteous, captivating Virginia Cherrill, who eventually left him to wed into the British nobility.

And so, when and if he and Betty Hensel speak the vows that bind them to one another, he will have found matrimonial serenity only after much trial and error—and suffering. That goes for Betty, too.

On March 14, 1945, the lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emil R. Hensel, of St. Louis society, was scheduled to become the war bride of a lieutenant, whose family is of New York society.

The invitations to the wedding had gone out. Betty had even had her wedding gown made, of traditional ivory satin. A few days before the ceremony was to have been performed, Betty went to St. Vincent's Hospital in Los Angeles. Gossip buzzed and fluttered. Hollywood insiders knew that there was a great mutual attraction between Betty and Cary, who had been squiring her to lots of parties after his separation from Barbara.

Mrs. Hensel announced that Betty, whose real name is Mary Elizabeth, had suffered a nervous collapse. Here was something that had all the elements of a romantic mystery. The public, expertly abetted by Hollywood's horde of professional gossips, found its appetite whetted. Cary helped it along by hiding from reporters and when he was finally corralled for a statement, all he gave out with was: "Nothing to say." Mrs. Hensel announced flatly that there was no romance between her daughter and the dashing movie actor. "We've known him for years, but there is nothing to that gossip," she said. "Just deny everything, please."

After a decent interval had elapsed, Betty began to be seen around with Cary again. Both avoided columnists and reporters. Last Christmas, the talk was revived with a terrific bang when Betty, in St. Louis, was seen wearing a magnificent diamond ring. Yes, she admitted, the ring was a gift from Cary. Was it an engagement ring? Oh, no, not an engagement ring at all. Just a little Christmas remembrance. Naturally, no one believed her.

When Cary finished The Bachelor and the Bobbysoxer at RKO, he went on a long gallivanting air tour with his close pal, Howard Hughes, the fabulous millionaire-flyer.

The secret of the close companionship between these two casts another interesting light on the kind of man Cary is. Imagine, if you can, these gents, who are unquestionably close to the top of anyone's glamor list, getting into a speed plane, taking off into the wild blue yonder on spectacular flights, and not exchanging a word for hours on end! Yes, that's Cary and Howard. That's what they like. Especially Cary. Like Gandhi, he can sit quietly and enjoy himself for hours on end.

silent partner . . .

This may explain why he must have sometimes given rich little Babs Hutton the screaming meemies. All her life she has been wound up like a top ready to spin, and here was this big lug she was married to sitting at his bedroom window for hours, looking out over the blue Pacific —just contemplating. It left her lonely and frightened because she couldn't go with him into that realm of thought. She probably tried to bully him into getting on the merry-go-round with her and that gay continental set who were her buddies, but he wouldn't bully worth a Woolworth dime. She charged in her divorce action that he was moody and wouldn't join her and her friends at dinner. "He would just stay in his room," she testified in a plaintive voice. And the over-awing possessiveness of Barbara wasn't his idea of a good time, either. When she remodeled their house in the Pacific Palisades, overlooking Santa Monica Bay, she had it arranged so that he had to pass through her sitting room and bedroom before he could reach his own suite. That gave him a feeling, I imagine, of being the little man on the end of a string. This might have been why

Three Superb New

Romantic Novels by DELL BOOKS – only 25¢ each

FAITH BALDWIN'S Self-Made Woman No. 163

"A self-made woman is a freak," said dynamic Bill Burke—and lovely, successful Cathleen McElroy was furious. The clash of will power and personalities builds up to a thrilling climax in one of Faith Baldwin's most powerful novels. Don't miss it!

OLIVE HIGGINS PROUTY'S White Fawn No. 167

The author of "Now, Voyager" and "Stella Dallas" writes another exciting romantic novel of the emotional tug-of-war between lovely Fabia Vale's social world and a brilliant young surgeon's middle class background, and its effect on the lives of these two people.

MAYSIE GREIG'S Reluctant Millionaire No. 170

Imagine a millionaire who would rather not have any money! Simon Bruce was such a man, and his reluctance to wealth attracted the attentions of several people, including the lovely Roenna. Who gets who in the end is as surprising as this novel is engaging.

ALSO AVAILABLE

No. 118 HALF ANGEL.....by Fanny Heaslip Lea
No. 130 THE HARVEY GIRLS.....by Samuel Hopkins Adams
No. 138 MEN ARE SUCH FOOLS.....by Faith Baldwin
No. 140 FOOTPRINT OF CINDERELLA.....by Philip Wylie
No. 141 THE SWIFT HOUR.....by Harriet Thurman

If you cannot obtain the titles listed, mail this coupon. Send 25c for each book ordered. This offer good in the U. S. A. only.

DELL PUBLISHING CO., Inc., 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Please send me the Dell Books checked below. I enclose $.....

☐ No. 163 ☐ No. 167 ☐ No. 170 ☐ No. 118
☐ No. 130 ☐ No. 138 ☐ No. 140 ☐ No. 141

Name.....

Address.....

City, Zone & State.....MS-67

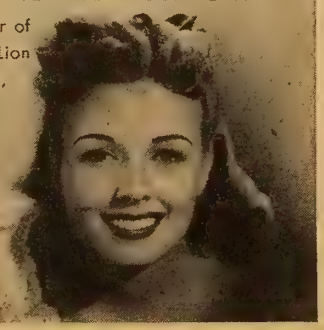
GIRLS! Want quick curls?

WHAT girl doesn't want quick curls these days! Especially when that favorite fella gives you a call at the last minute. With New Wildroot Hair Set you can set that favorite hair-do in less time. It's absolutely tops for quick good grooming that's so important these days. New Wildroot Hair Set contains processed Lanolin. Leaves any texture of hair soft, natural-looking, and at its lovely best. Replaces old-fashioned thick gummy wave sets. Light bodied. Faster drying. Lets you style your favorite hair-do at home quickly, without fuss or disappointment.

NEW WILDROOT HAIR SET

NOREEN NASH

Lovely Star of the Eagle-Lion Production, "Red Stallion"



For Lovely, Lustrous Hair

NOREEN NASH'S bewitching hair charmingly illustrates the exquisite beauty possible in hair of her shade. If you want lovely, lustrous hair, then use a rinse made especially to bring out the full beauty of your shade. Golden Glint Hair Rinse offers you 12 delightful shade selections in 10c and 25c sizes.

Golden Glint Rinses all contain pure RADIEN —the modern, scientific hair brightener. See a Golden Glint color chart at your dealer's showing the effect of the individual rinses on 12 different hair shades. Get a package of Golden Glint Rinse for your shade and learn what a miraculous improvement a rinse made especially for your particular shade of hair can make.

GOLDEN GLINT

he installed the luxurious couch in front of the huge window and there, regardless of how close she was to him, he could travel to imaginary far seas. He told me the ocean always has drawn him with an irresistible surge as compelling as the drag the moon has on the tides. He used to sit for hours, watching the sea, when he was a boy growing up in Bristol, England.

"As soon as I could make it, I crossed that ocean," he said.

"I've always loved to travel and the best treat of all is to drop into some town without fanfare and talk to the people I meet. They're never quite sure, but they always have the feeling that they know me. Hughes and I had lots of fun that way on our air trips. At Houston, Texas, Howard's home town, I met a druggist and we struck up a conversation. He was sure he had met me at an Elks' convention. At the end of our talk, I said to him, 'You know, you never really met me at an Elks' convention. I'm an actor and I guess you must have seen me on the screen.' He said well, maybe I was right, but he wasn't sure. Never inquired my name. He didn't care whether I was a movie actor or not, and I loved that."

Cary explains that he has no bitterness against bobby soxers or autograph hunters, but the trouble is, crazy, hysterical, or downright malicious people pose in these characters and make a star's life miserable. That's why he's adamant in his determination to give no autographs. It seems a shame that stars like Cary, who really love people, are forced into such an attitude. But what can they do about it?

Count Haugwitz Reventlow talked to me freely about Barbara while he was having that famous legal tug-of-war over the custody of their child, Lance. He said he pitied poor Cary because it was inevitable that his marriage with the five-and-dime heiress would end on the rocks. He said he believed Barbara would never find happiness with any man because her whole life and upbringing had bred in her an irremovable suspicion that all people wanted from her was her money. Cary Grant never needed her money. All he wanted from Barbara was a home.

That seems to be what he has been searching for all his life. His parents were separated when he was a very young boy and he spent his formative years in a boarding school. This background gave him a great understanding of Barbara's little boy Lance, so that he and the kid got along famously together. I think Cary would like to have a little boy of his own. He told me he likes children because they can drift into the world of make-believe so easily. These are the things he will undoubtedly ask from the next girl he marries: a place to light, a place to go away from on long travel jaunts, a place in which to contemplate. A woman who will let him be himself.

But he's not playing hard to get. Not really. And I still think I'd risk maybe eight to five that one day there'll be a third Mrs. Cary Grant, and the name on the marriage license will be Mary Elizabeth Hensel.

LIFE CAN BE BEAUTIFUL

(Continued from page 52)

plays she wanted to see. At the last moment, radio work in Hollywood had interfered.

Her voice was warm and laughing when she answered his long distance phone call. "Bill darling, why aren't you at the theater?"

"Oh, plays! Are the kids all right?"

"Of course. West took a bridge lamp apart today with a screw-driver he found somewhere."

"My son's a mechanic, at the age of three. Is Dee-Dee still practicing ballet like crazy?"

Dee-Dee, whose real name is Virginia, is nine, and is Ardis' daughter by her first husband. But there was another very important member of the family to ask about—the baby.

"How's Scott?" Scott, who looks like Bill. Who's still so new you don't quite believe in him. Ten months old.

Ardis' voice softened. "He's wonderful. He sits there and smiles all the while, and manages to look like a little old Irishman happily watching the world go by."

Bill laughed. "I wish I was calm and placid like Scott. He's going to be the sort of person I always wanted to be."

"I like you as you are, darling."

"It's a good thing," Bill said wryly. "I guess it's too late for me to change."

He has changed, though. The Army changed him. The Army was tough for Bill, as it is for everyone. He started out as a private and emerged as a first lieutenant. He got his commission by going through Officers' Candidate School, and he still wakes up in a cold sweat sometimes, thinking about it.

He could hardly wait!

Disillusionment came fast. He had his first warning of what was to come when Clark Gable dropped in to see him the night he arrived in Miami. Clark was in the class that was just being graduated.

"The boys'll ride you to death because you're a picture star," Clark warned him.

"I'm in the Army under the name of Beedle. You happened to recognize me as I came in, but no one else will."

"I wouldn't want to bet on that," Clark said, with his flashing grin. "They have a sort of hazing system with the new guys here, and an officer can come into your room any hour of the day or night and make you stand at attention as long as he likes."

"Why would they come in in the night and do that?" Bill was bewildered.

"They call it discipline," Clark told him.

As it turned out, Clark's visit focused attention on Bill, and he was immediately recognized as Holden of the movies. For the next forty-eight hours, Bill spent most of his time day and night standing at attention!

Another time, his "record" as Holden of the movies almost got him shot at sunrise. Shortly after graduation, he was ordered to escort a man from Pratt-Whitney and another man from Sikorski through the plant where the then top-secret B-32's were being made. Bill's orders were made out for Lieutenant Beedle, as usual.

He picked up the men at their hotel and drove them out to the plant, where a public relations colonel and a very Regular Army major general were waiting for them. They had to sign in and Bill, who wasn't used to chumming around with generals, signed nervously and without thinking—"William Holden."

They had progressed halfway down the main floor of the plant, inspecting the machinery, when two men marched up behind Bill and grabbed him by the shoulders.

"Who are you?" they barked in unison.

"Why, I'm William Holden. Uh, I mean Lieutenant Beedle," Bill stammered.

"Your pass is made out for Beedle, but you signed Holden. Now you say you're both." They eyed him with a look that said, "You're a Nazi spy and you might as well admit it now."

"But I am both," Bill told them, crimson with embarrassment.

"Don't be a fool," the general said irritably. "You can't be two people."

The public relations colonel interposed. "This is Lieutenant Beedle, sir, but he's actually—I mean he used to be—William Holden, the movie star."

who's holden . . .

"Never heard of him. Never go to movies," the general barked. "Better get your name settled one way or another, young man, before you end up in the guardhouse."

"Yes, sir," Bill said. He did it, too, and is now legally William Holden.

When Bill came out of the Army, he was dubious about what would happen next. But it turned out to be simple enough. Paramount put him right into Dear Ruth, with Joan Caulfield. And there he was playing a first lieutenant in the Air Force—just what he had actually been. Type-casting, that's what it was.

His next picture was Blaze Of Noon. It's the story of the Air Mail, back in the days when flying a mail plane was practically a form of suicide. There were, actually, forty pilots who started out on the Air Mail route, and out of that forty, thirty-one were killed.

Blaze Of Noon takes four brothers and follows them in their career as pilots. They are played by Bill, Sonny Tufts, Sterling Hayden and Johnny Sands.

Bill never was a pilot in the war, although he traveled over 200,000 miles by air.

One experience he had in flying during the war came in handy to make a scene in the picture extra convincing. His plane is beginning to ice up and naturally he's supposed to be pretty scared, as who wouldn't? So he got to thinking about a time during the war when they were flying a B-24 out of Los Angeles over Guadalupe Pass, and they ran into a fog that was about the consistency of jellied soup. Bill saw ice start to form on the wings, and he thought, "That's all, brother."

The pilot, he remembered, grinned at him and said "I ought to give you a towel, bud. You sure are sweating it out." And sure enough, when Bill raised a hand to his head it was dripping wet.

So when Bill came to make that icing up scene in the picture, he got hold of a fur-lined flying suit, and drank a quart of hot water before he went up. The timing was good, and the ice formed on the plane and the sweat on Bill's forehead in perfect synchronization!

Bill's next picture is to be a Western. He's a good rider, fortunately—has ridden all his life. But he's given up admitting it since it got him into a jam one time. He was in Arizona on location for a picture.

A man from Tucson came out to the set one day, and watched. "Pretty good, aren't you?" he said to Bill.

"Oh, I'm used to horses," Bill admitted airily.

"That's fine. I'm from the University of Arizona and we're putting on a horse-show Friday. It would add a lot to the show to have a movie star in one of the contests. How about letting me enter you for Musical Chairs?"

Musical Chairs, Bill thought. That's the old game where you have one less chair than you have people, and everyone runs for a seat when the music stops. Seemed like a funny kind of contest for a horse show but Bill said certainly, he'd be glad to enter.

"Do you have your own horse?" the man asked.

"Horse? No, but I can get into town by car."

"I mean to ride in the contest," the man explained patiently. It seems this was an equine version of Musical Chairs, and it demanded considerable skill as a rider. Bill tried to get out of it on the grounds that he had no horse.

"I'll lend you one of my cow ponies," the man said.

"This one better be a musical genius, too," Bill said grimly. He spent the next few days worrying about the show. He didn't ask much—just not to be the first one eliminated. It would look so silly to have them announce "Here is the Hollywood star, Bill Holden," and then be the first one out of the game. He'd never live it down.

Fortunately, the pony lent to him was smarter than any three people, and Bill won the contest. He had a wonderful time, and the college kids cheered him till he almost died of embarrassment. That's typical of Bill.

give me the simple life . . .

Since Bill came out of the Army, the Holdens have been living a quiet, peaceful life, with a few "gay" evenings on the town.

Of course, there are times when Ardis, who was a success on the screen as Brenda Marshall, gets a longing to go back into pictures, or to do a play. She comes to Bill, all excited.

"Bill darling, so-and-so has a part in a play for me. It's a beautiful part, but it would mean going to New York. What do you think?"

His answer is standard by now. "I think you ought to do it, dear. Wire him okay and start packing right away." And, as far as he's concerned, there's nothing more to say.

But somehow Ardis doesn't get around to sending the wire. Bill pretends not to notice this, and is very surprised when Ardis comes in the living room one evening, and announces, "I've made up my mind. I'm not going!"

"Why not? What's wrong?" he asks innocently.

"I just went in and looked at Scott asleep. You know darn well I can't leave the kids—and you—you wouldn't know how to take care of yourselves."

"I know darn well I don't want you to," he says softly. "We've been apart too much as it is. Stick around, honey, this is a good life."

It is, at that.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Were it not for the fact that my brother's name is Perry, my adventure might never have occurred. It happened on a crowded subway. Somehow I became separated from my little brother, Perry. When I finally caught sight of him, I called out his name. "Are you calling me, honey?" a voice nearby asked. I turned and looked in the voice's direction. What I saw wasn't the Perry I'd been calling for, but I forgot about my brother for the moment. It was none other than Perry Como. He grinned, then called out, "Oh, Lana," and said, "See, it doesn't work for me."

Enid Gottlieb
Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAKES SWEEPING CHANGE from older method of Intimate Feminine Hygiene
Easier—Daintier—More Convenient

Greaseless Suppository Gives Continuous Medication For Hours Easy To Carry If Away From Home!

Here's one of the most effective and satisfactory methods ever discovered for intimate feminine cleanliness—easier—daintier—more convenient—SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues. It's called—Zonitors.

Positively Non-Irritating; Non-Smarting

Zonitors are greaseless, stainless, snow-white vaginal suppositories. They are not the type which quickly melt away. Instead, when inserted—Zonitors instantly begin to release their powerful germicidal properties and continue to do so for hours. They are positively non-burning, non-poisonous, non-irritating.

Leave No Odor or Sticky Residue

Zonitors actually destroy offending odor. Help guard against infection. They are so powerfully effective they immediately kill every germ they touch. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE Zonitors KILL every reachable germ and keep them from multiplying. Buy at any drugstore.

Zonitors

(Each sealed in separate glass vial)

FREE: Mail this coupon today for free booklet sent in plain wrapper. Reveals frank intimate facts. Zonitors, Dept. ZMSC-67, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

NO DULL DRAB HAIR

When You Use This Amazing

4 Purpose Rinse

LOVALON, simple and quick to use after a shampoo, does these 4 things to give YOUR hair glamour and beauty:

1. Brings out lustrous highlights.
2. Adds a rich, natural tint to hair.
3. Rinses away shampoo or soap film.
4. Leaves hair soft, easy to manage.

LOVALON does not permanently dye or bleach — merely tints the hair as it rinses. Comes in 12 flattering shades. Try Lovalon.

At stores which sell toilet goods

25¢ and 10¢ sizes

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

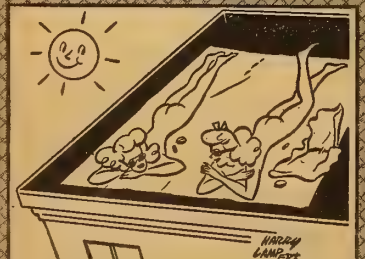
FREE TO ALL WHO NEED MONEY

I'll help you get extra cash to fill your pocketbook—to live on. Supply my food and household products to regular customers. No previous experience or capital needed. I'll send FREE F.O.B. Factory flashy assortment of products to test and show. Start near home, full or spare time. Gift premiums, big monthly premiums. Rush name today for free outfit. Give nearest express office. Hurry!

Pay Nothing!

BLAIR, Dept.360-CL, Lynchburg, Va.

SUNTOONS BY... Oculens Trade Mark



"I WOULDN'T THINK OF BEING SEEN IN THE SUN WITHOUT MY OCULENS SUN GLASSES"

SEEING IS RELIEVING ...with Oculens SUN GLASSES

For Streetwear, Sportswear, Beachwear, Fashionwear — everywhere. For Men, Women & Children. $1.98 to $10 . . . at your favorite store.

© 1947 COMPTONE CO., LTD., NEW YORK

LET THIS BE FOR ALWAYS

(Continued from page 50)

a big, gay party, and it should have been fun; but the faces were strange, the voices unfamiliar and, when no one was looking, Kathryn and Johnnie held hands in a funny, desperate sort of way. Johnnie's father came in from Boston to spend Christmas with them. They had Tom and Jerrys and gave each other silly presents, but in spite of their efforts it was not a good day.

After Christmas, things began looking up. They packed 'em in at the Oriental Theater. Shattered the previous attendance record. When Kathryn found out that the old record holder had been Two Sisters from Boston, she turned to Johnnie sort of doubtfully. "Sa-ay—beating my own time. Is that good?"

song without words . . .

"To the tune of a nice new refrigerator, washing machine and mangle," Johnnie told her, "that is very good, my sweet."

The day before they were to leave Chicago, Johnnie noticed that Katy wasn't singing with her usual spark; that the big dark eyes looking up at him during their duets had a glazed, unseeing look. Suddenly, right in the middle of a song, she stopped singing. She didn't mean to, but when she reached into her head for the words, they weren't there. Johnnie picked them up so quickly that no one in the audience noticed, and he sang his own lyrics plus all of hers, including one utterly female line about "going home to mother." When the curtain came down, Kathryn stood there and laughed till she cried. "Imagine a man going home to mother—" she wept, and then there was pain written on her face and, abruptly, there were no more tears.

"What's the matter, baby," Johnnie asked her gently.

"There's a sore place on my side."

A sore place! Department of understatement. Johnnie and Alice Weil, Kathryn's secretary, took her to a doctor, and inside of twenty minutes he was operating on an abscess. She didn't want an anesthetic because there was one more show to do that night, and she didn't want to be groggy. She just hung on to Alice's hand, and Alice cried, but she didn't. When it was over the doctor said, "Lady, you're a better man than I am."

They opened in Cincinnati next day, and there was a blizzard again.

"No one'll come out to see us in this," Johnnie gloomed. (He's the worry-wart.)

"Oh, someone will," Katy said. (She never worries. Doesn't know what stage-fright is.)

Needless to say, Cincinnati's Albee Theater was jammed to the rafters. That was a good week, all told. They stayed at the Netherland-Plaza, and the food and service were indescribable. The fans were wonderful, and the college boys in town voted Kathryn their Dream Girl. There was just one bad time, when one of the comedians in one of the acts that was appearing with them failed to show up, and Johnnie had to go on in his place. He had no script, and he has no idea what he said, but Kathryn claims he was hilarious. "Why they screamed over him," she reports, and she's much more impressed than if he'd sung at the Met.

The next town was Hartford, Conn., and Katy and Alice had really looked forward to that. From the time they left home, Hartford was kind of a beacon, an oasis. On the strength of having seen Christmas In Connecticut some time before, they'd packed peasant skirts and ballet slippers in order to be right in the swim. And, of course, they arrived in a blizzard. "Worst one in twenty-six years," the taxi driver boasted. "Yessir, she's a-shore comin' down." They could have smashed him.

It was a nice town, nonetheless, with the smilingest, friendliest sort of people, and Kathryn came away loving all Hartfordites except two: the plumbers who banged on pipes beginning around five a.m. in the wall directly adjacent to her bed, and who never did get the much-advertised "hot and cold running water in every room" running.

Boston came next, and that was fun. Getting lost on the silly narrow little streets, finding cute places to eat, listening to those wonderful accents. The lads from Tufts College and Boston University and Harvard kept Kathryn's dressing-room filled with flowers, and had the phone rung down asking for dates.

One morning, they got a call asking them to appear at the opening of the March of Dimes Drive, and they said "Sure." They hurried over in a cab between shows, and when they arrived, they saw that the streets were lined with people and that there was hardly an inch of space for them to get through to the building. It was all sort of terrifying and strange. No policemen to hold back the crowd. Nothing official-looking about it at all. People clawed at the buttons on Kathryn's $325 suit, pushed their faces right up into her face. When one kindly little old lady, with no doubt the best intentions in the world suddenly extended a long, bony hand and muttered, "God bless you, dearie," Kathryn's nerves snapped. She jumped straight up in the air and finished plowing through the crowd with foolish tears pouring down her face. Of course, it eventually turned out that it wasn't the March of Dimes opening at all. A brand new dress shop had simply figured out a way to get itself some high-priced publicity—for free. Johnnie and Kathryn felt pretty let down about it, and their agents were really burned. They sent the dress shop a bill for Johnnie and Kathryn's services, and whatever they collect will go to the March of Dimes.

rest cure . . .

When they finished at the Boston-RKO, they trained back home to Hollywood for a quick peek at Julie and at Katy's house that is in the throes of being remodeled. En route, they hardly saw each other. Katy stayed in her compartment and slept and read dozens of twenty-five cent Dell mysteries; Johnnie stayed in his and ate chocolates. It was a rest cure they both needed badly, and when they got home they felt marvelous, and they were so happy they wanted to shout. Standing in front of the lovely, substantial, English-style house that they'll share after their marriage next September first, Katy felt all out of breath with excitement. "Johnnie," she whispered. "It looks so un-Hollywood. It looks so doggone permanent." She held his arm tight, and they both knew that they were making the same wish . . . Let this be for always.

The house itself is testimony to the fact that this is no scatterbrained young pair marrying in haste. They hope to have four children, and they've set aside rooms in the house for that many. The boys will sleep on the third floor in a room with built-in bunks.

"Let's not have it nautical though, do you think, darling?"

Johnnie shakes his head. "No. How about ranch-style? Leather and cowhide and stuff."

"Mmm. And there's room for sort of a dormitory for when they bring the bunch home to visit later on."

This, you can see, is definitely no short-term contract.

The house is entirely free from the usual Hollywood gimmicks. Instead of the customary tricky little bar, there is a beautiful walnut-paneled library with book-shelves to the ceiling and low, comfortable couches. There is a sewing-room—which is a bit of an innovation out that way. There are trees of every description, and Katy is familiar with them all.

"Imagine," an Eastern friend marveled one day. "Just picking an avocado and devouring it on the spot."

"Oh, but you don't do that," Katy said, her bright, pretty face earnest. "You keep them packed in flour until they get ripe."

"Why, Katy Grayson," the friend said, eyeing her with awe. "You're all domesticated!" She is, too. She loves to look at drapery material and fuss with wall colors. She's such good friends with the painters and the other men working around the place that when she and Johnnie went back East to wind up the tour, they wrote her letters to let her know how they were doing, and one of them took pictures of the house and sent them to her.

The end of the tour made up for all the rough spots that had gone before. Not that there wasn't a blizzard—there was a beauty; not that Johnnie didn't get laryngitis—he got it like crazy. But just the same, New York was wonderful. For one thing, the people at the Capitol Theater, remembering Kathryn's last personal appearance stint, had arranged a really divine dressing-room for her, had even given it a name—Grayson's Inn. Last time she kept skipping out between shows to get snacks or to have her nails done, and, being Katy, she had often overstayed herself and missed the show. This time she didn't have to budge for a thing. They installed an electric stove and an icebox, a radio, pretty chintz curtains and a spread for the couch.

The fans in New York were such nice kids, with their shining eyes and their thoughtful gifts. Three of them gave her a heavenly cyclamen negligee. Another one gave her a handsome gold compact. (She doesn't use powder, did you know? So she keeps her penicillin pills in it.) All of them gave her a warm, lump-in-the-throat feeling. To think they cared enough about her to want to come back-stage and talk to her. To think they were grown-up enough to wish Johnnie and her happiness.

Yes, New York was a good deal. The Essex House, with its sweeping view of Central Park, was perfect. The additional personal appearance offers were dazzling. London wanted them; Paris wanted them; there was even a bid from Johannesburg, South Africa! The shows and the stores were superb. But both Johnnie and Kathryn are honest enough to admit that half the charm of New York was that it was the end of the line. After New York they could sit down and count their gold, and then go on that long-awaited shopping binge. After New York, what's more, they could buy two tickets back home!

JULY ISSUE

Better warn your newsdealer to wear his slicker next June 13, when our July issue goes on sale. Gorgeous Esther Williams will be splashing all over our cover, and we wouldn't want him to get wet—would you?

This car is running with an "EMPTY" gas tank!

EVEN AFTER the gas gauge says "empty" a modern car can keep going for a good many miles. Here's why.

Automobile manufacturers know human nature. They figure that, sooner or later, we'll get careless, or misjudge how far we have to go. So the gas gauge is set to show "empty," while there are still a couple of gallons left in the tank.

This reserve supply is a swell idea that has kept many a family from getting stuck. It's an even better idea for a family's budget!

A reserve supply of dollars is a lifesaver in case of financial emergency. It will keep your family going if sudden illness strikes, or unexpected expenses show up.

And one of the easiest ways to build just such a cash reserve is buying U. S. Savings Bonds on the Payroll Savings Plan!

What's more, the money you save in Bonds buckles right down and starts making more money—in just 10 years you get back $100 for every $75 you put in today.

So keep on buying Bonds on the Payroll Plan. Buy all the extra Bonds you can, at any bank or post office. And remember, every Bond you buy plays a part in keeping the U. S. strong and economically sound!

Save the easy way..buy your bonds through payroll savings

Contributed by this magazine in co-operation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

The Advertising Council

HATTIE had Hair-Do Fatigue

Smooth at six— dressed for her date, with a honey of a smooth, sleek hair-do. But, does the hair stay that way? Alas, no . . .

Tangled at ten. Hattie's hair just seemed to tumble, and so did her rating with the lads (How they notice hair!) . . .

'til she discovered Nestle HAIRLAC

—the delicately perfumed hair lacquer

Now Hattie knows what to do—she bought a bottle of Nestle Hairlac and conquered all those wayward wisps. Why don't you get a bottle today? At drug and dept. stores. 50¢

Keeps all styles of Hair-Dos Well Groomed

Nothing cleans like a liquid

AMBROSIA

The Liquid Facial Cleanser

Removes Dirt . . . Leaves No Grease in Pores.

At Department, Drug and Ten Cent Stores

New 2-WAY

SEAL·COTE

ORIGINAL NAIL AND POLISH PROTECTOR

(A BASE AND TOP COATING)

2 WAY PROTECTION

1. PROTECTS YOUR NAILS....
2. DOUBLES THE WEAR AND LUSTRE OF ANY NAIL POLISH.

DRIES QUICKLY TO A CRYSTAL HARD FINISH

Apply on fingernails as a base cote and nail protector. Apply over dry polish as a polish protector. Now used by men as a polish without color.

25¢ AT DRUG AND VARIETY STORES

NEW ODORLESS CREAMY LOTION SAFELY
REMOVES HAIR

1. A pleasant white lotion without bad clinging depilatory odor.
2. Not messy. Quick—rinses off easily with lukewarm water.
3. No razor stubble. Keeps legs hair-free longer. Economical!
4. Doesn't irritate normal skin.
5. Removes hair close to skin, leaving skin soft, smooth, and alluring.
6. World's largest seller. For free sample mail this ad before Dec. 30, 1947, to Dept. 110, Nair, 53 Park Place, New York 8, N. Y.

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair

NAIR 59¢ plus tax

At Drug, Department and 10¢ Stores

AMAZING NEW Pocket or Purse Size RADIO!
SMALL AS A PACK OF CIGARETTES

Weighs only a few ounces—Beautiful black chrome plastic case. Uses new crystal diode. Hi-Q slide dial. No tubes, batteries or electric "plug-ins" required! Receives local broadcasts and when used according to instructions sent with each radio! You can use it at home, in many offices, hotels, cabins, in bed, etc.—lots of fun—real entertainment.

GUARANTEED TO PLAY

SEND ONLY $1.00 (cash, money order, check) and pay postman $2.99 plus delivery fees on arrival or send $3.99 for postpaid delivery. Complete as shown ready to play with self-contained personal phone. For gifts—children will love it—grownups too! An exceptional value—order yours and enjoy the many good radio programs coming! Don't be without your Pa-Kette Radio another day! (All foreign orders $5.00 U. S. cash.)

Pa-Kette Electric Company, Dept. MM-6, Kearney, Nebr.

Wear This Captivating, Diamond-Like BRACELET
Beautifully Set With 96 Genuine
Czecho-Slovakian Rhinestones

ONCE AGAIN YOU MAY ENJOY the dazzling brilliance of imported Rhinestones, in an enchanting Bracelet. Combines World renowned craftsmanship of Czecho-Slovakian experts with the latest in style—a gloriously beautiful creation you'll wear with pride. Exceptional value. An ideal gift.

ONLY $4.95 Plus Tax

SEND NO MONEY: Pay postman $4.95 plus 20% Federal Tax and postage, or inclose $5.94 for postpaid delivery. Satisfaction or money back. Order today!

National Chicago Company
375 W. Adams St., Dept. D-6, Chicago 6, Illinois

BLESSED EVENT

(Continued from page 56)

I was completely wrapped up in this picture, which had come to be a symbol of the type of work I wanted to do."

Olivia stated flatly that she would not do the picture unless Mitchell Leisen directed. She knew he could keep the simple theme believable and full of power by virtue of his sensitive understanding of the theme and his great knack for attention to detail.

"The selection of Alma Mac Crory to play the part of Belle is typical of Mitch's genius," Olivia says. "Alma had been Mitch's cutter for years, and a number of actresses had been considered for Belle before Mitch had the sudden inspiration. I don't know of another case in which anyone without previous acting experience has turned in so remarkable a performance.

"People have asked me what I considered the most difficult and moving scene in the picture. I think it is the point at which I have to tell Jody that he is adopted, and the child rushes out, locking himself in the bathroom.

original sitter . . .

"I used to be a 'sitter' for my mother's friends on bridge nights, long before the term was used. I was also extremely fond of Geraldine Fitzgerald's little boy, Michael. I think that the realism of this scene can be credited to some extent to a genuine concern I have had for the problems that loom so large in the life of a child.

"And, of course, little Billy Ward, who played the role, almost broke the heart of everyone on the set."

Olivia was a problem child to cameraman Danny Fapp to whom she gives a full share of credit for her award-winning work. She is so absent-minded when concentrating that she frequently fails to respond to her own name. Leisen dubbed her "Moonglow." So great was her preoccupation that she frequently turned her back to the camera.

Mitch turned to Danny after one particularly good take and said, "How was it, Danny?" Mr. Fapp pulled one eye away from the camera range finder and exclaimed, "It was wonderful—perfect. The only trouble is that Moonglow didn't get on the film."

Her performance was enhanced, too, by the makeup of Bill Wood. After long conferences, it was decided that Olivia should play a woman of forty-six as such a woman would actually be, and not become the glamorized, typical movie version of a female whose hair has turned white with grief.

She did try on a white wig just once. When she walked on the set in an evening gown, the crew took one look at the glamor wig and whistles broke out spontaneously.

"Believe it or not," Olivia declares, "That was the first time in my life that I had ever been whistled at. I can hardly wait until I am forty-six. Imagine the trouble I am going to give my husband."

Not that Olivia hadn't already given Marcus Goodrich, her husband, his share of trouble. Goodrich elaborated on the incredible disturbances Oscar creates as we sat by the pool of the quiet and beautiful Hotel La Quinta in the desert some twenty miles outside Palm Springs. He and Olivia came there a few days after the evening of the Academy Award presentations to escape the incessant telephone calls which erupted continuously after their private number suddenly became public.

One particularly exasperating well-wisher had the habit of calling up, and when Olivia answered the telephone he simply remained silent as she helloed herself to death.

Goodrich had seen To Each His Own, just a few months before he and Olivia were married. He reminded himself to tell Olivia when next they met that she deserved the Academy Oscar.

"The trouble was," he said, "that she was already being told that by dozens of people. I knew how important the winning would be to her, and it became my job to discourage the idea to prevent a possible disappointment."

"He did, too," Olivia broke in. "He pointed out just how the voting would go so that in the end the Oscar would waltz off with Rosalind Russell."

Then, Roz wrecked this logic by bumping into Olivia at a party and exclaiming, "How's it going to feel to clutch Oscar in your palm? You're going to win it, you know. Not I. I'll get it some other time, but this year it's yours."

Author Goodrich was acutely aware of his bride's preoccupation with Oscar. Unfortunately, those who love her turned militant in their hopes that she would win. And as the day of the award approached, Mr. Goodrich discovered himself rapidly becoming regarded as an arch enemy of Olivia's staunch supporters.

"For instance," he recalled, "there was the violence with which Curt Frings (Olivia's agent) regarded my calm assurances that she didn't have a chance. Curt is a former lightweight boxing champion, so you can realize the risk I took in weighing my campaign to soften the blow for Olivia if the worst should happen."

The night before the awards, Olivia pretended to sleep, but was such a bad actress that her husband finally snapped on the lights and hauled out the Chinese checker board. They played on until neither one could any longer keep an eye propped open.

Next morning, she had a call from Leonore Weaver, who had done her hair all through To Each His Own. Leonore wanted to do it again for the Academy, and this gesture stopped Olivia's heart for a long beat.

Enveloped in a light, numb haze, Olivia sat down to an early dinner with her husband and close friends at the home of Mr. Charley Brackett, who started all this agony by bringing Olivia the script in the first place.

it's not all gravy . . .

Olivia didn't remember much about the dinner, except the point at which Mr. Brackett passed the gravy. She saw him fumble, and like a stop action photo she saw the gravy arrested in mid-air. Then it exploded all down the front of her pale blue, strapless evening gown.

The other guests were superb. Emergency repairs were effected. She was wrapped to the neck in napkins—eight to be exact—to prevent further accident. The conversation now naturally turned to the subject of the great amount of ill luck that seems to befall Academy Award winners.

"Most of them," Mr. Brackett mused sadly, "either never again amount to much in pictures, or they are divorced by their mates. But I'm sure nothing like that will happen to you."

Miss De Havilland is sure, too! She waited a long time to marry, and this one will be the one and only.

"My husband," Olivia stated flatly, "is an

LONGER LASTING GRIP

FOR REPEATED USE.

SMOOTH FINISH INSIDE AND OUT!

Scoldy Lox BOB and HAIR PINS

NEVER LET YOUR HAIR DOWN

MATCHED BRIDAL PAIR DIAMOND RINGS

$4.95 EACH BOTH FOR $8.95

Genuine Diamond Chip engagement Ring set in square 10 kt. Yellow Gold Mounting—perfectly matches the lovely Wedding Ring with 3 brilliant chip Diamonds in embossed 10 kt. Yellow Gold setting. Either ring only $4.95 or both for only $8.95 plus postage and 20% Fed. tax on our Money Back Guarantee. Send No Money! Just send name and address with piece of string or paper showing finger size. Pay postman on delivery.

WORLD-WIDE DIAMOND CO. Dept. H-356
2451 S. Michigan Avenue Chicago 16, Illinois

64 ACTUAL PHOTOS of the Favorite WESTERN STARS

Roy Rogers

Including Sunset Carson, Gene Autry, Tex Ritter, "Wild Bill" Elliott, Bob Steele, Bill "Hopalong" Boyd and many others. Action poses, portraits, and on horseback.

50c FOR THE COMPLETE SET OF 64

Catalog of 100's of stars with first order.

Stewart-Croxton Studios, Dept. D3, 1408 Westwood Blvd., West Los Angeles 24, California

Make Money

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS

As low as 50 for $1 With NAME IMPRINTED

Show exclusive NAME IMPRINTED Personal Christmas Cards, low as 50 for $1. Amazing values bring you easy sales.

BIG SELLERS IN BOX ASSORTMENTS

Boost profits with 21 "Feature" $1 Christmas assortment—sparkling new features. Other money making assortments—including our famous Christmas and new Everyday Gift Wrap Ensembles, Religious, Everyday, Humorous, many others.

For Samples write now to Dept. K10

JANES ART STUDIOS Inc. 1225 Clifford Avenue Rochester 5, New York

WANT A U·S·GOVERNMENT JOB?

START $1,756 to $3,021 Year

Men—Women Get Ready Immediately
Common education usually sufficient
Veterans Get Preference
Mail Coupon today sure

COUPON

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
Dept. H108, Rochester 4, N.Y.

Sirs: Rush to me without charge (1) 32-page book with list of many U. S. Government Big Pay Dependable Jobs. (2) Tell me how to get one of these jobs.

Name.....

Address..... Vet?....

extremely biased individual about some things. Despite his gruff assurances that I couldn't possibly win, he sat beside me in the auditorium with extreme impatience. I could almost read the thoughts racing through his mind—at least that's what I imagined.

"I was positive that, when the fatal envelope was opened and someone else's name was read off, he would leap to his feet and shout, 'We demand a recount!'

"When the blinding moment came, Marcus leaned over and said to me, just before Ray Milland began the announcement, 'Be sure to straighten out the back of your dress when you walk up to the platform.'

"Then my name was called.

"When it was over, I started off the stage—the wrong way. I whispered to Ray Milland, 'How do I get out of here?'

"'Don't worry,' Ray answered, brightly. 'Just keep going the way you're headed. It may not be right, but it's shortest.'

"'Isn't it a wonderful feeling,' Olivia exclaimed. 'It really feels wonderful to win, doesn't it, Ray?'

"'It sure does,' Ray answered. 'But you couldn't have lost. If I'd seen anyone else's name on that slip of paper I'd have called out OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND anyway!'"

Somehow, the Goodrichs pushed through the mob and back to their apartment. Marcus had invited some friends over for a champagne supper. This was to have been Olivia's "consolation party."

Flowers and telegrams poured into the room. One huge bouquet of three dozen red roses arrived. The card attached was from Bette Davis. It read: "One dozen for To Each His Own. Two dozen for The Dark Mirror."

Olivia wanted to cry a little.

Strange, the influence a man named Oscar can have over a woman.

When Marcus Goodrich began to pack for their trip to the desert, Olivia handed him the gleaming statuette.

"Don't tell me," he exclaimed, "that we're going to take that along, too!"

Olivia's expression was one of dark-eyed incredulity.

"Of course," she retorted. "It took me twelve years to get Oscar, and I'm not going to leave him now!"

TIME ON MY HANDS

(Continued from page 60)

it's drafty. But, oh, you darling fool. I'm glad you called. I love you, too!"

"That's what I wanted to hear," sighed Glenn. "Good night, Ellie."

"The charges on your call," droned the operator with a ring-back, "are one hundred and seventeen dollars and sixty-two cents, with tax." She was very careful to compute the tax, too.

"Thanks," said Glenn vacantly. He walked over to the calendar on his desk and made a new "X." "Only fifty-four more days to go," he sighed, walking to his desk and pulling out the blue stationery. He whistled "Clair de Lune" as he wrote, "My Darling—"

Then he grinned. Good old blue envelopes. He started using them when he was courting Ellie and she was traveling on tour. It was her idea. "When I look at the mail rack over the hotel desk I can see it right away." She used the blue ones, too, when Glenn was in the Marines, and his memories were bitter-sweet on that point. Every day you lined up before the drill sergeant's shack for your mail—and when you got more than five letters at one time you had to run the belt line with all

FOOT HEALTH WEEK MAY 24-31

Sponsored by National Assn. of Chiropodists

Say good-bye to your foot problems the easy BLUE-JAY way!

Why suffer from common foot ailments when it's so easy to get welcome relief the Blue-Jay way? Just pick the Blue-Jay Foot Aid that fits your need—and have happier, healthier feet!

STOP CORN PAIN

Blue-Jay Corn Plasters have exclusive anesthetic Nupercaine* that curbs surface pain. Soft Dura-felt pad instantly stops shoe-pressure pain. Gentle medication loosens hard "core"—lift it out in a few days. Streamlined, flesh-colored, non-slip. Now in 2 sizes: Standard and Little Toe. Also Blue-Jay Soft Corn Pads.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Ciba's Brand of Dibucaine

Relieve, Remove CALLUSES!

Blue-Jay Callus Plasters relieve painful pressure while medication helps remove callus.

Soothe TIRED FEET!

Blue-Jay Foot Powder reduces perspiration and deodorizes, is soothing and cooling.

Protect from BUNIONS!

Blue-Jay Protect-O-Pads for Bunions are soft, cushioning, reduce pressure and friction.

End SHOE TORTURE!

Cut Blue-Jay CushionMoleskin to fit over tender spots where shoe rubs. Extra soft, adhesive, flesh-colored.

NEW! Blue-Jay All-Elastic Arch Lift

100% more effective than ordinary bands. Comfortable—easy to put on—not bulky. Gives greater relief from arch strain and fatigue.

For more serious foot ailments, see your chiropodist

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

BLUE JAY

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS

EASY TO LEARN

Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.

NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan. Dept. 236-A, Chicago 5

I GOT RID OF BLACKHEADS

NADINOLA'S 4-WAY ACTION HELPS AMAZINGLY TO COMBAT UGLY BLACKHEADS, EXTERNALLY-CAUSED PIMPLES, DARK DULL SKIN

One glance may kill romance—if your skin is dark, dull or needlessly blemished! That's why thousands of girls and women trust to Nadinola Cream, the clinically-proved 4-way treatment cream. Quickly, gently, Nadinola helps to loosen and remove ugly blackheads—to clear up externally caused pimples—to fade freckles—to lighten, brighten and freshen your skin to creamier loveliness. See for yourself what Nadinola can do in days—what wonders it works in weeks! Full treatment-size jar of Nadinola Cream just 60c, with money-back guarantee; trial jar, 10c.

SEND FOR FREE ILLUSTRATED BEAUTY BOOKLET—richly printed in full color, with photographs and sworn proof of wonderful results from just one jar of Nadinola. Write NADINOLA, Dept. 30, Paris, Tenn.

you DO NOT need to buy EXPENSIVE SHOES to safeguard your Toddler's feet Why?

No shoes at any price are better than sensibly-priced WEE WALKERS for a toddler's normal feet. Cost less because they are made by America's largest exclusive baby shoe manufacturer, and sold through mass distribution stores. The best safeguard is to not let baby grow into and out of shoes. Buy the correct size NOW and change to a larger size IN TIME.

Ask your doctor about WEE WALKERS . . . see them . . . compare them . . . try them . . . in Infants' or shoe department of stores listed. Birth to size 8.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE

W. T. Grant Co. S. S. Kresge Co. J. J. Newberry Co.
H. L. Green Co., Inc. I. Silver & Bros. Scott Stores
McCrory Stores Schulte-United Charles Stores Co.
Metropolitan Chain Stores, Inc. Kinney Shoe Stores
F. & W. Grand Grand Silver Co. McLellan Stores
Montgomery Ward & Co.

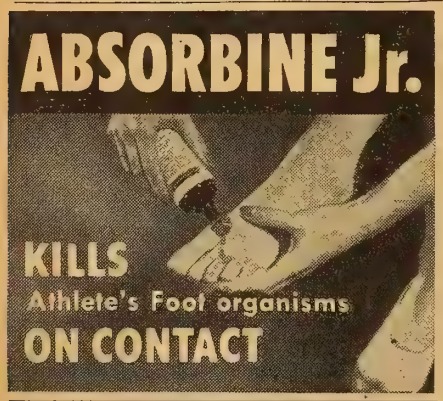
Smooth One-Piece Tongue:

Stops pressure on nerves, muscles, blood vessels caused by sewed-on tongue, still used on some shoes selling at top prices.

FREE: Pamphlet, "Look At Your Baby's Feet." Valuable information on foot care, and scale to measure size needed. Moran Shoe Co., Dept. M, Carlyle, Ill.

WEE WALKER Shoes FOR Wee WALKERS

ABSORBINE Jr.



KILLS Athlete's Foot organisms ON CONTACT

FRECKLES

Write for FREE BEAUTY SUGGESTIONS

We will send you a delightful story about Stillman's Freckle Cream. It is not only a freckle bleach, but also a beautifying cream. It makes skin look lighter—feel softer, smoother. Over 30 million jars have been purchased by enthusiastic users! Only 50c at all drug and cosmetic counters. A postal card brings this amazing story of beauty to you! Use according to directions

THE STILLMAN CO., Box 2, Aurora, Ill.

Stillman's FRECKLE CREAM 50¢

the guys swinging lustily at your tail. Usually that happened to Glenn, ducking wildly down the stinging lane—holding those blue envelopes from Ellie. But it was worth it.

His letter finished, Glenn walked around the room, put his hand on his boy's, Peter's, nursery door and then took it off. If the little guy did happen to wake up and give him that, "Where's Mommy?" routine—well, he'd do something desperately foolish maybe—like grabbing Pete and calling a cab to the airport.

The truth was, Glenn missed Ellie twice as much as Pete did. He'd been between pictures when Ellie left on her dancing tour. With time on his hands.

He drove her to the train, piled her compartment on the Streamliner (City of Los Angeles) high with flowers. Then Ellie kissed him and said, "Now, go. I don't want to see your face looking sad like a St. Bernard's when the train pulls out."

So he gave her another hug and left. Halfway down the ramp he glanced at his watch. He had five minutes more! He galloped back up. Ellie was taking off her hat and reaching for a book. She reached for Glenn instead, and they said good-bye all over again.

When the train pulled out, Glenn didn't know what he wanted to do—but he knew he didn't want to go home. He called up some pals—Watson Webb, Mark Stevens, Bob Walker. Nobody was home, of course. He dragged into the Lincoln and moped along out Sunset Boulevard toward the studio. He wasn't thinking of much of anything, certainly not what his speedometer said. It said 45 m.p.h. The siren sounded and he pulled over.

"Listen, young fella—" began the cop. He spied the streamlined job that Glenn had cut down himself at home. When he recognized Glenn, he said, "Gosh, I thought you were one of those hot rod kids. There's a drive on, you know. You weren't really going very fast—but I'll have to give you a ticket now."

western union casanova . . .

The first week was the hardest, and he started haunting Western Union. One morning, Glenn breezed into the WU office busting with things to say. The girl spread his scribble-packed yellow sheets on the desk and starting counting with her pencil. Pretty soon her face took on a rapt look, like she was reading "Forever Amber." His cheeks burned. "Here, gimme," croaked Glenn, grabbing the lengthy, impulsive wire. He dashed off a new one: "Dear Ellie. Miss you. Hope you are well. Love. Glenn."

He was talking to Ellie that next night long distance in Buffalo. He caught himself saying the things he'd written first in that telegram he'd torn up. Suddenly Glenn heard an operator's sigh cut in on the conversation. He realized with horror that he and Ellie were wearing their hearts right out in public.

"Hey, honey," he told Ellie, "we just can't talk like this over a telephone. It's too public."

He heard Ellie laugh. "I don't give a darn who knows I love you." By the end of the week Glenn didn't give a darn either.

And by the end of that week Glenn Ford's phone and telegram bill was $532.18—with tax!

By the end of the week, too—'way back in Buffalo—Ellie realized something had to be done—so she put Glenn to work.

He'd noticed the notebook she'd tossed in her traveling bag last thing before she closed it. It was blank then, but after the first week it came back crammed with instructions.

"Monday—cleaning woman comes . . . put symphony records and pipes away . . . open windows. Tell egg man strictly fresh . . . lay out suits for cleaners . . . gather soiled shirts, shorts for Bendix . . . don't put with Pete's things in hamper . . . Dog food man—tell him usual amount . . . pay gardener.

"Tuesday—Agnes' day off. Be sure let know if you want cold supper left in icebox. Lock all doors night. Take in Pete's toys.

"Wednesday—" and so on down the week—every day, something to think about, every hour.

Glenn pondered over every instruction. He finally got a little suspicious that she was just keeping him out of mischief.

Not that there was any real mischief hanging around in G. Ford's mind. That is, unless you counted a couple of paternal slips with Pete. With Ellie away Glenn found he wanted to see a lot of Pete, even more than he did when she was home.

There used to be a certain hour of the day—right before dinner—when he and Ellie went into Pete's nursery, played the Mother Goose records and caught up on the little guy's day. And there were the Sunday walks, that were a regular family ritual. They'd set out, hand in hand, toddling Pete up the hills of the little glen they live in. The high spot of the adventure was when Pete picked a flower and handed it to Ellie.

Now Glenn took Pete for walks every day, instead of just Sunday, so that every blue envelope had a posey for Ellie's collection.

Glenn packed Pete, too, into Columbia for a portrait sitting and sent the pictures to Ellie in Washington, where she went, after Buffalo, to dance at the White House. He sent a dozen pink carnations (her favorite flower) from Pete on Pete's birthday and a note saying it wasn't going to be celebrated until Glenn's birthday came along in May—when "Mommy" would be home. Glenn sent along all bulletins about Pete he knew Ellie would be dying for, as soon as they happened. The party he took him to for Roy Rogers' little girls. The haircut he got Pete down in Beverly. The new word Pete knew.

But there were a couple of items that Glenn didn't send. He took him down to the fun pier one day and fed him popcorn, taffy, suckers and ice cream. Glenn's quaking still for the moment when the

MODERN SCREEN

"Silly dog."

Help yourself to
BEAUTIFUL FINGERNAILS

Don't be embarrassed by short, broken, thin nails. It's so easy to cover unsightly nails with NU-NAILS. Applied in a jiffy, they bring you long, lovely nails that everyone admires. Can be worn any length and polished any shade. Help you overcome nail biting habit. Set of 10 only 20c at all 5c-10c stores . . . and at Sears.

NU-NAILS ARTIFICIAL FINGERNAILS
5251 West Harrison Street
Dept. 15-G Chicago 44, Illinois

FOOT RELIEF

Instant-Acting Soothing Cushioning Foot Plaster

To instantly relieve painful shoe friction and pressure on corns, sore toes, callouses, bunions, tender spots—use Dr. Scholl's Kurotex—a flesh color, cushioning, superior type moleskin. Cuts to any size. Sold everywhere.

Dr Scholl's KUROTEX

14K GOLD RINGS SET WITH GENUINE DIAMONDS

4 brilliant gen. chip diamonds in this wedding set. Both for $9.50, or $5.50 ea. 16 gen. chips in set below. Both for $18.00, or 10.50 for ea.

Include finger size. Pay postman price plus Fed. tax. Rings beautifully boxed. Money back guarantee.

FREE CATALOG OF RING VALUES!

L'AMOUR JEWELRY CO., INC.
DEPT. D5, 545 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 17

Destroy UNWANTED HAIR

Temporary relief not enough — you want freedom Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure your unwanted hair has gone FOREVER. The Mahler Method—used successfully all over the world for over fifty years—positively enables you to do this in the privacy of your home. It brings relief and social happiness long denied you . . . Send 6c in stamps TODAY for illustrated booklet, "New Charm for Madame."

MAHLER'S, Inc., Dept. 367 G, E. Providence, R. I.

High School Course at Home Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. HA14, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

BE A Nurse
LEARN AT HOME

Practical nurses are needed in every community . . . doctors rely on them . . . patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 48th yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 236, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name_____
City_____ State_____ Age_____

three of them go to the pier when Ellie's back, and Pete demands the treats his widowed dad handed him. Then she'll know!

Then there was a certain household episode where Glenn slipped up and hid the bad news from Ellie. Pete wandered into her dressing-room one day and turned on the radio down in the China room. It ran for three days before Glenn caught it. By then all the insides were burned out and the rubber insulation was dripping.

Before she left she told him, knowing him: "Now don't touch anything in the house. Don't redecorate or paint or fix anything up." So he waltzed down to a decorator's and bought some fireman-red venetian blinds for the den!

But his darkest secret has to do with a long suppressed personal vanity. He'd always yearned to know what he'd look like with a nice black, sporty mustache—but every time he'd even remotely hinted it to Ellie she cracked down on him.

He had a pretty good excuse this time. He was readying his part in The Man From Colorado, where he plays a Western killer. He had to look menacing.

He let the lip grow for ten days. On the eleventh, he took a long look in the mirror and reached for a razor. That night when he called Ellie, Glenn said, out of the blue, "Ellie, you were right!"

"What are you talking about?"

"I mean, dear," Glenn caught himself, "you're always so right about everything."

anyway, the static was clear . . .

The first acting job he did without Ellie around was on the radio show, "Suspense." He wired her in Buffalo to listen in. She'd never missed any radio show he'd done, any movie he'd made. But Ellie wasn't in Buffalo; she was on the train to Washington. She got the wire on the train, raced to the club car. A passenger had a hockey game on. "Pardon me," said Ellie, switching it to Glenn's station. She got a dirty look from the sport fan, the static went "scr—rreeek—sc-r-r-a-a-w-wk" and she couldn't hear a word Glenn said.

There are a few frank reasons why Glenn Ford is mighty glad his wife left him—temporarily. He's happy because at heart he knows Ellie's a terrifically talented girl—too brilliant to just sit at home and take care of him and Pete.

Glenn's proud as a peacock of the record Ellie made. At the Town Casino, for instance, in Buffalo, the attendance record had stood since 1930—and it took three top entertainers—Sophie Tucker, Harry Richman and Joe E. Lewis—to set it then. Ellie smashed it to pieces her opening night. She played two floor shows daily—with all brand new tunes and routines. Between shows every night over 300 people lined up in the 14-below weather—waiting for a chance to see Eleanor Powell in person.

After reading her rave notices, Glenn started addressing his letters "Eleanor Powell." He got a wire right back from Ellie to set him straight on that the minute the first one arrived.

"I am Mrs. Glenn Ford," it read. "Everybody knows it. And don't you forget it!"

Her agent came by to see him one day. "What would you say to the news that Ellie's had an offer to play London for eight more weeks—Albert Hall and everything?"

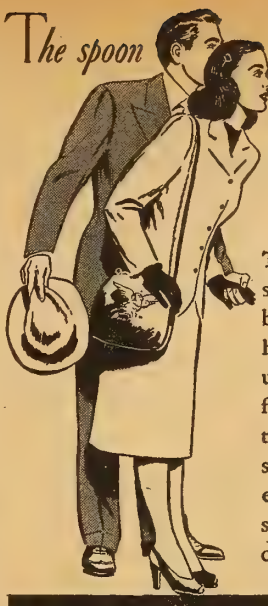
Glenn gasped.

"Why," he gulped, "okay—if Ellie wants to. I—"

The agent sighed. "That's just it, damn it! She doesn't want to. She turned it down cold," he frowned. "Says she wants to come back and be with you. How do you account for it?"

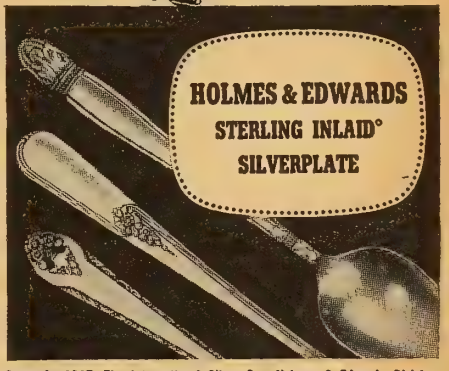
Both Glenn Ford and Ellie Ford know the answer to that. Home is where the heart is, that's all.

The spoon for June



...has these

The two blocks of sterling inlaid at backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks. They make this silverplate stay lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 with chest. No Fed. Tax.



Copyright 1947, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

No more Lift-work when you iron!

THE AMAZING PROCTOR NEVER-LIFT IRON gives you easier, better ironing without lifting, tilting or twisting. It lifts itself at a finger touch . . . cool sturdy legs provide stable support . . . prevent tipping and falling . . . legs snap out of the way when you resume ironing. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

It's new... it's exclusive... it's
PROCTOR
PROCTOR ELECTRIC COMPANY,
PHILADELPHIA 40, PA.

SILHOUETTE SMOOTH

SAY SIT-TRUE

Fine mesh with elastic

SITROUX HAIR NETS

BY THE MAKERS OF SITROUX TISSUES

ARE YOU PALE WEAK, TIRED

due to MONTHLY LOSSES?

You girls and women who lose so much during monthly periods that you're pale, weak, "dragged out"—this may be due to lack of blood-iron. So try Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS—one of the best home ways to build up red blood—in such cases. Pinkham's Tablets are one of the best blood-iron tonics you can buy!

Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo

FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 296, Hollywood, Calif.

LASHES LOOK LONGER

Eyelashes seem lovelier, longer—Eyes seem lovelier, brighter, gayer when you beautify your eyelashes! Gain glamour and charm this easy way, with Lechler's famous EYELASH GLAMOUR KIT. Use according to simple directions and watch yourself grow more stunning. Enclose only $2.40 (tax incl.) with this "ad." Also C.O.D.

HOUSE OF LECHLER, Dept. 336

560 B'way, N. Y. 12, N. Y.

Easy as A-B-C

Be Your Own MUSIC Teacher

LEARN AT HOME THIS QUICK MONEY-SAVING WAY

Simple as A-B-C. Your lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. You read real notes—no "numbers" or trick music. Some of our 850,000 students are band LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. Soon you may become an excellent musician. Mail coupon for our Illustrated Free Book and Print and Picture Sample. Mention your favorite instrument. U. S. School of Music, 1446 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y. 10, N.Y.

FREE BOOKLET

U. S. School of Music, 1446 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y. 10, N.Y.

Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).

Instrument..... (Have you Instrument?.....

Name.....
(Please Print)

Address.....

STAR LIGHT, STAR BRIGHT

(Continued from page 39)

meant.

Until someone called me up a couple of days later. "You've got a date with Guy Madison," they said.

"Sure," I said, laughing on the outside.

The funny thing was, I had a date with Guy Madison.

"Wash your face," Maggy said. "And comb those stars out of your eyes. You don't want to scare the poor man."

I was supposed to meet Guy at a place called the Beverly Hills Club, late in the afternoon.

I made a nonchalant entrance, around eleven-thirty a.m. There was a couch out in the lobby, and I sat down to wait.

A lot of workmen were walking around with buckets in their hands, and painters' caps on their heads, and every once in a while, they'd look at me curiously.

One of them approached, after a while. "Fire here, lady," he said.

let 'er burn . . .

"Go right ahead," I said grandly. At that point, I thought he intended to burn the place down, and I was in that settled state of mind where it seemed like a reasonable enough idea.

He explained further. "There was a fire here, lady. They ain't serving any lunch."

"Oh, I don't want any lunch," I said. "I want Guy Madison. That is—"

"A lot of people want Guy Madison, lady," the man said, shaking his head, and going away.

I was thinking of asking him to give me a new coat of paint, too, by the time Guy arrived.

And right here, I'd like to make a small speech about Guy Madison. To begin with, he's the handsomest man I've ever seen. He's terrifically tall (I had on the highest heels in the United States, and I'm no shrimp in the first place, but still he loomed over me); he's very tanned, and he's blond. You probably know all that. It shows up in his pictures.

But a lot of stuff doesn't show up. He has a certain gentleness of manner—a way of helping you in and out of cars, and doors, a way of lighting your cigarettes, a way of listening when you talk—that makes you feel like Helen of Troy.

It isn't an effusive thing, with him. It isn't this personality-kid stuff some actors can turn on and off. He's a quiet boy; he has a lovely smile, he dances like a dream, and he says nice things about other actors. I think he is a good and pleasant person, with rare charm. And now I've got that said, I can go on.

Guy showed up at the Beverly Hills Club, and five minutes later, I felt as though I'd known him for a year.

"What would you like to see most?" he asked me. "In the whole town."

We were having something long and cool and sweet at the cute little bar in the Club (the bar hadn't been a fire casualty) and I deliberated.

He grinned. "Never mind. Come on."

We went from the Club to a place called The Tropics. Bamboo decorations, candles on the tables, Hawaiian music, leis for your neck—it was lousy with atmosphere. We ate shrimps with chopsticks—and from the off-hand way I say that, you needn't think I didn't suffer—and you needn't think I didn't love it.

After that we started for a restaurant called The Kings.

Guy was extolling the glories of lobster à la King, and I smiled sickly. "Guy, those shrimps. I'm not very hungry any more."

He scoffed. "Those shrimps were just an appetizer."

At The Kings, they let us go out into the kitchen, and we saw the way they split live lobsters. Guy'd caught a lot of Pacific Coast crustaceans, and he and the chef swapped recipes for a while, and then we went back out front and sat down.

We had oysters Rockefeller and broiled lobsters, and strawberry shortcake and milk, and by that time, I had begun to lose my appetite.

Somebody said, "Oh, there's Leo McCarey," and I looked up listlessly, and Guy, who was dipping his hand in his finger-bowl, stopped short and stared at me. "You're green."

I didn't doubt it for a single minute, but I'll bet it was a lovely shade of green. I was in heaven.

I gazed at Mr. Madison. "—Ciro's," he was saying. "Xavier Cugat's there, and you could use a little exercise."

I said "yes," dreamily. It wasn't until we were seated at a table in Ciro's, and the band began to play, that the awful truth struck me. Cugat plays rhumbas, and sambas. My rhumba is mediocre (that's putting it politely) and sambas, I just don't know from.

Guy was standing up and holding out his hand.

"I can't," I said. "You're a movie star, and people will be watching, and I'll trip, I'll faint, I'll die—"

"Wanta bet?" he said easily.

He led me out to the floor, and all around us there were sleek women in bright dresses and jewels, and the lights were muted, and not quite real, and I neither tripped nor fainted nor died. I rhumba-ed and samba-ed, and had the time of my life. Mr. Cugat chuckled every time we passed him.

Things went fine, until the realization hit me again. This was I, dancing with Guy Madison, in the fabulous Ciro's. This was I, smiling sweetly at Xavier Cugat, practically nose-to-nose.

Suddenly, I was overwhelmed by my own eminence, and I pulled at Guy's arm. "Let's sit down," I said weakly. "For a minute."

I was reaching for a cigarette, when the proprietor, a Mr. Hover, stopped at our table. "Oh, you smoke," he said. (Guy doesn't smoke; tobacco has an almost

I SAW IT HAPPEN

The night superintendent here at Hollywood Hospital stopped Bill, the orderly, and said: "There's a new man on duty tonight. Show him around, will you?" Bill sighed and went upstairs. For 20 years Bill has shown "new men" around. At the desk, upstairs, sat a young man in sports clothes. "Come on, I'll show you where to change your clothes," said Bill. The young man looked astonished. "Change my clothes. . . ?" "Yes," replied Bill. "We furnish uniforms and laundry. Aren't you the new orderly?" "Oh, no, sir," laughed Peter Lawford.

Mrs. Grace M. Hulst, R.N.
Los Angeles, Calif.

narcotic effect on him.)

Mr. Hover disappeared, and when he came back, he had a little aluminum lighter, with "Ciro's" engraved on it. "A souvenir," he said. He gave me a lipstick in a gold case, too.

Now all I do is smoke and put on lipstick, in an ostentatious way.

After Ciro's, we went to Mocambo. Mocambo is the place where the dance floor is always crowded, and each succeeding face is richer and more famous than the elbow that's in it. Two bands alternate, and at the side of the room, under the ceiling, there are enormous bird cages, full of different-colored birds.

It's startling, because the birds are never still, and underneath the cages are the windows, and through the windows you can see the lights of the city, down the hill.

Once I'd caught my breath, we danced, and I spotted Diana Lynn a few feet away, in a brown dress, and Guy steered over close to her to say hello.

She laughed up at him. "Good evening, Mr. Moseley." She looks like a little girl, close up. Cute, and full of sparkle.

We noticed a waiter standing at our table, then, with a be-ribboned white box, and we went to investigate. My name was on the box, and I untied the ribbons quickly.

Inside was a magnificent orchid! I picked out the little white card. It was from Gail!

Guy sat down in his chair. "That little Gail," he said in a pleased voice. "She's a real character."

It was almost too much excitement for one night.

We left Mocambo with me clutching my orchid box and we walked down the street in the cool night air, and any second, I expected to wake up.

"Would you like to go to a real Russian place?" Guy said. "With gypsy music?"

I would have gone even without the gypsy music, but Madison's an awfully modest guy.

Charochka—I don't know what it means, and I was too overwrought to ask at the time—isn't a night club. It's a restaurant with an air, and it's run by a Mr. and Mrs. Sankar. They're known as Papa and Mama Sankar, to devotees.

Papa, dressed like a Cossack, wanders around serenading the guests with Russian songs. He drifted over to our table, and started to play his guitar and sing.

Neither Guy nor I understood the words, but every so often, Papa would come to a ho-ho-ho or ha-ha-ha refrain, and Guy

I SAW IT HAPPEN

My sister, who works for the telephone company in Atlanta, took a call to the United Artists Studios in Hollywood. She was very surprised at the call, as people in Atlanta very rarely call Hollywood. In her amazement, she couldn't help exclaiming out loud her favorite slang phrase: "Well, what do you know, Joe?" Imagine her astonishment when her party answered, "I don't know nothin'." How could she possibly have guessed that Joe Cotten was right there in Atlanta, and making a call to his studio?

Martha Horne
Columbus, Ga.

REDUCE UP TO 7 lbs. A WEEK ...OR DOUBLE MONEY BACK

EAT WHAT YOU WANT

Thousands have used amazing MYLO method to banish ugly fat, and gain gloriously beautiful figure. Easy! Safe! No Starving. You get all daily required vitamins and minerals—delicious concentrated food energy to keep up pep. Just eat sensibly and take healthful, wonderful MYLO as directed—and it is possible for you to lose up to 7 lbs. in a week.

MYLO 7-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Either you are more than delighted with the results MYLO brings you in loss of weight or you get double your money back. SEND NO MONEY! Just mail us your name and address and on delivery of MYLO pay the postman $2.00, plus C. O. D. charges or send $2.00 with your order and we will pay the postage. Follow direction for 7 days. Then, if you are not truly amazed at the loss of weight, if you don't notice remarkable improvement in your figure, if you don't look better, feel better, you will get double your money back. Don't let ugly fat distort your shape. Send for delicious, nutritious MYLO today.

INTERNATIONAL LABORATORIES
329 S. Wood St. • Dept. 15-GG • Chicago 12, Ill.

3¢ A DAY HOSPITAL PLAN

PAYS HOSPITAL & DOCTOR BILLS

In case of sickness or accident, you may go to any Hospital in the U. S. or Canada under any Doctor's care. WE PAY YOUR EXPENSES in full accordance with Policy Provisions.

INDIVIDUAL or FAMILY

You are eligible for this low cost Protection from birth to age 70 . . . without medical examination. The famous North American Plan is sold direct at a saving to you. BE PREPARED! Sickness and accident strike suddenly. Insure now! Send for free details at once. No Agent will call.

POLICY PAYS
Hospital Room and Board for Sickness or Accident
Per Day Up to $6.00
Doctor Visits In Case of Accident
Per Visit $3.00
Surgical Operations
Up to $150.00
Time Lost from Work In Case of Accident
Per Week $25.00
Accidental Death
Up to $2000.00
Physical Dismemberment
Up to $2000.00
Identification Service
Up to $100.00
Ambulance Service
$10.00

FREE! MAIL COUPON
NORTH AMERICAN MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY
Dept. MM7-6, Wilmington, Del.
Please send me, without obligation, details about your "3c A Day Hospitalization Insurance Plan".
Name.....
Address.....
City.....State.....

PULVEX DDT FLEA POWDER

now also contains

Kills the fleas QUICKLY!
Keeps others off for days!
Still 25¢ and 50¢

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Lovelier Nails with TUFFENAIL

Enhance and glorify the natural beauty of lovely nails . . . Hollywood's own daily nail-care with easy-to-use applicator. Nails stay lovelier longer . . with TUFFENAIL. 25¢

AT ALL 5 AND 10¢ STORE COSMETIC COUNTERS

WALDORF BUBBLE BATH

THRILLING EXOTIC RELAXATION AT YOUR GROCER OR 5 AND 10

LARGE 11 OZ. PACKAGE 10¢

Exclusive Offer 4 ENLARGEMENTS!

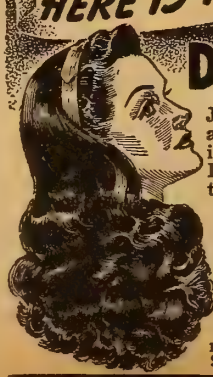
Four beautiful deckled enlargements for 10¢! Send 4 negatives same size (up to 2½" x 4¼"). We will send you 4 valuable enlargements, dated on Velox. Negatives returned. Send ad, 4 negatives, and 10¢ coin today! This ad must accompany order.

ONLY 10¢

MAIL-N-SAVE, BOX 310-10 QUINCY, MASS.

HERE IS THRILLING NEW HOPE FOR MILLIONS

Do You Want LONGER HAIR?



Just try this SYSTEM 7 DAYS and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of LONGER HAIR beauty that so often captures Love and Romance for you.

HAIR may get LONGER!

when Scalp and Hair conditions are normal and dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Just try JUELENE System 7 Days and let your mirror prove results. Send $1. (If C.O.D. pstge extra). Fully Guaranteed! Money back if not satisfied.

MAIL COUPON NOW!

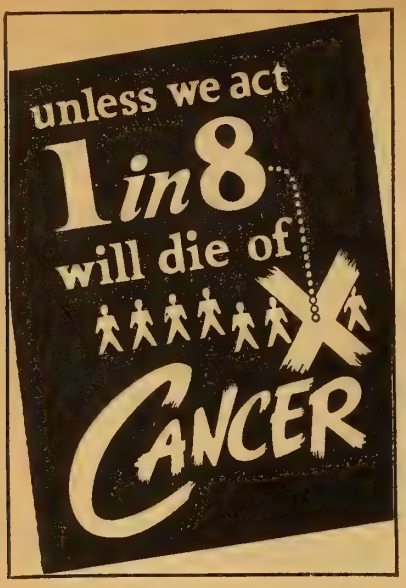
JUEL COMPANY, Dept. G-603, 4727 N. Damen, Chicago 25, Ill.

I will try the JUELENE SYSTEM 7 days. If my mirror does not show satisfactory results, I will ask for my money back.

☐ I ENCLOSE CASH
☐ I WILL PAY POSTMAN

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____STATE_____

OUR REGULAR CUSTOMERS PARTICIPATE IN GIFTS!



NO ONE IS SAFE FROM CANCER

This year, 184,300 Americans will die of Cancer . . . one every three minutes.

YET . . . one in three could be saved thru early detection and prompt treatment.

GIVE to help win mankind's great war — the fight against cancer.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
47 Beaver Street
New York City

would join in loudly.

Papa Sankar suddenly smote his brow. "You must have Wadka!" he cried.

"I've never tasted Vodka," Guy admitted, and Papa frowned, troubled that anyone should have had such an underprivileged childhood.

He even sang a sad song about it, and then a waiter named Boris brought some little glasses with a colorless liquid in them, and Papa beamed.

"Wadka."

"It looks like gin," I said. I'm the low type who knows what gin looks like.

"It looks like water," Guy said. He's a high type.

"Dreenk!" Papa said simply.

Guy drank, while I observed with interest. He didn't exactly light up and start shooting flames out of his ears, but he gasped once or twice, I thought.

If I'd been waiting for a detailed description of the experience, I'd have been disappointed. "It doesn't taste like water," is all he said.

Papa offered him some more, but he declined. "My head isn't good for much, but I can't spare it just yet."

Our next stop was a place out in the San Fernando Valley. Guy's kind of place. It's called Sportsman's Lodge, and that's exactly what it is. It could only happen in California.

Inside the big, rustic house, you can eat and drink, and sit by an open fire. Outside, there's a trout stream, and a waterfall, and woods.

We stood on a little wooden bridge, and underneath the clear water I could see the fish slipping past, their bright bodies shimmering in the moonlight.

By the side of the stream, there was a fat, feathered creature dipping its bill into the water. It was snow-white. Now my experience with wild life and the great out-of-doors is strictly from newsreel travelogues. I'm a city product.

"Is that a goose or a swan?" I asked, trying to be intelligent.

"It's a duck," Guy said, disgusted. He's an outdoor product—hunts, fishes, camps. He made hissing duck noises at the thing, but it paid him no heed, and he gave it up. "Scorned by a duck," he sighed.

I still think maybe it was a swan, who had no intention of recognizing duck noises.

And I still think that Sportsman's Lodge is one of the most beautiful places I'll ever see.

We watched the waterfall rushing in the stillness, and the trees twisted in the small wind, and I felt tired, and good.

The music and noise and the gay people had been wonderful earlier, and now the quiet, and the sky and the smell of the damp ground was wonderful, too.

But there was one thing more I wanted to do, before we called it a night. For years, I'd been seeing Grauman's Chinese Theater in the movies. I'd seen actors and actresses pressing their feet into the wet cement, and the box-office built like a pagoda, and all the rest of it.

I told Guy, laughing, because I thought he'd laugh. "I know it's foolish."

"I don't see why," he said, and the next thing I knew, I was standing on the scarred cement at Grauman's Chinese.

We picked our way around, because it was very late, and the area was almost all in darkness. A tall boy stepped out of a patch of shadow, and came up to Guy.

"You're Guy Madison, aren't you?" he said, logically enough.

Guy talked to him for a few minutes, and when he walked away to look at something else, the boy turned to me.

"You a movie star?"

"Nope," I said.

After a second, he spoke again. "I've seen a lot of movie stars, and some of 'em don't look so hot, up close. But that guy—" There was astonishment in his voice. "He's nice, besides. I like him."

I smiled at the kid, and said softly, "That's for two."

FAMILY CIRCLE

(Continued from page 35)

Jean's face appeared at the head of the stairs. "Stevie broke a lamp."

Stevie's face appeared beside hers. "I sorry."

"Okay," Jimmy said. "Don't do it any more."

They didn't hear another sound for maybe three minutes.

By lunch time, when Jimmy was weakly inviting Dana to stay, his wife, Ethel, stepped in. "I don't think so," she said. "I think perhaps Dana ought to get Stevie home. Mary might be worried."

Dana figures it's only a question of time before Stevie will be getting him home. The kid's fantastic.

The treacherous thing about him is that he has this disarming personality—he smiles sweetly, the whole time he's tearing the house down, and when Dana says, "What are you doing, Stephen?" he acts innocent.

"Nothing," he says. It's his stock answer.

Mary and Dana were having a drink of beer one night, when Stevie approached.

"I want some," he said.

Dana explained it was not for little boys.

He looked at them out of the corner of his eye. Then, wham! wham! he'd picked up two glasses, one right after the other, and hurled them against the wall.

Dana looked at Mary. Mary looked at Dana. "I sorry," they said, together.

The other kids—David and Kathy—took naps, when they were tiny. Dana sighs. "You think you can get him to take a nap?"

There's very little you can get him to do, when you come right down to it.

Kathy, on the other hand, is going through a lovely stage. She thinks her father is magnificent, the best person in the world, the only person worth passing the time of day with.

Dana puzzles over it. "Six months ago, she wouldn't even say hello to me."

Now she watches him adoringly while he eats; she follows him from room to room, being friendly. He's waiting for her to ask him if he's read any good books lately.

Her one big passion besides Dana is sailing. Dana has a skipper named Gus, for his 80-foot ketch, "Vileehi," and between Gus and Kathy, it's love.

Gus is a big, burly guy; Kathy's the size of his head, but when she marches up to him in her navy blue slacks, and says, "I'm a good sailor," he melts.

All the Andrews are mad about sailing, and they've been doing plenty of it, because while Dana was waiting to start Memory of Love, his new picture, he had some spare time.

Mostly, they use the "Katherine," which is their 55-foot cutter, and a beauty of a boat. They're real snobs; never run their motor, and have nothing but harsh words for people who do.

Sailing is an art; motors, any slob can cope with.

BRUSH AWAY GRAY HAIR ...AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or

Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE

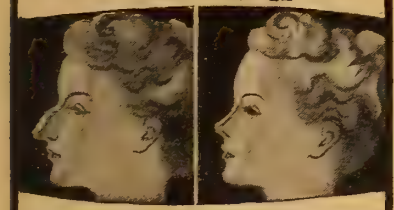
Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 296, COVINGTON, KY.

CAT'S PAW

Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

Are You Satisfied With

YOUR NOSE?



Nobody today need go through life handicapped by a badly shaped nose, disfigured features or blemishes. In YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, a famous Plastic Surgeon shows how simple corrections "remodel" the unbeautiful nose, take years off the prematurely aged face. Yours, postpaid, in plain wrapper—only . . . 25c

FRANKLIN HOUSE, Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg., Phila., Pa. Dept. 12-R

Marvel

WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women $3.29

At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Free Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

STOP Scratching

It May Cause Infection

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, pimples—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Calms itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D. D. D. Prescription.

LEG SUFFERERS

Why continue to suffer without attempting to do something? Write today for New Booklet—"THE LIEPE METHODS FOR HOME USE." It tells about Varicose Ulcers and Open Leg Sores. Liepe Methods used while you walk. More than 40 years of success. Praised and endorsed by multitudes.

FREE BOOKLET

LIEPE METHODS, 3284 N. Green Bay Ave., Dept. F-25, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Use DERMOIL

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547 Northwestern Station, Dept. 9209, Detroit 4, Mich.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1953 LAKE LAB.

"There's something about using the wind to push you," Dana says, and he gets the note in his voice some people get when they talk about Beethoven.

He's sensationally good, too, considering the fact that he's only been sailing a year or so.

He was coming up from Catalina one day, with a load of guests aboard, and a fog rising. Fifteen miles out, he got a bearing on the sea gate (there's an artificial sea wall at Long Beach, with a 200-yard opening) and then the fog closed in, thick and grey and wet.

Now, Dana's no navigator. He couldn't see twenty feet in front of him, and the wheel was icy in his hands, but he was sweating.

Once in a while, someone would approach him. "Will we make it?" He could sense the panic; his own fear was sizeable.

"Don't worry," he'd say. "Go back, and don't worry."

When he caught sight of the harbor lights, the Katherine was already passing safely through the gate. It's a piece of work he's proud of.

He had another close shave, too. It was his first trip out alone with his brother, Bill, and they'd forgotten to look at the storm warnings, before they left.

Naturally, a storm came up.

Dana was working furiously, and Bill came back, laughing. "I've been sitting on the bowsprit," he said. "It's the dryest part of the boat."

He hadn't any more than finished the sentence, when the bowsprit went under a ten-foot wave.

The brothers looked at each other, and laughed shakily. "Good to see you," Dana said.

Bill coughed. "Glad to be here."

Bill's a handsome blond boy, six feet tall. He went into the army, right out of high school, and when he was through with the service, Dana lured him to California.

He's going to UCLA now, and getting a little more accustomed to the ways of Hollywood.

In the beginning, he was hopelessly confused. He'd hear Dana talking on the phone to some girl at the studio. "Thank you, sweetheart," Dana'd be saying.

Bill would look at him strangely. "You know her that well?"

The day he heard Charlie Feldman,

I SAW IT HAPPEN

In June of last year, Ingrid Bergman toured Europe with the Jack Benny troupe, entertaining U. S. soldiers. My company was privileged to have one man dine with Miss Bergman at Traunstein, Germany. The lucky individual, whose name had been drawn out of a helmet, was a 36-year-old farmer from the Ozarks of Missouri. During the dinner, I looked over to their table and saw the two of them holding an extensive conversation. "M-m-m, he's getting all the latest Hollywood news from Bergman," I thought. Later that night, I asked him what news he had of the film world. "Nothin'," he replied. "We had a wonderful talk about my six children. She must be a fine mother!"

Joseph Mello, Jr.
Fall River, Mass.

Why do so many millions choose this ONE Laxative?

WHAT'S SO GOOD about Ex-Lax that over 40 million boxes were sold last year?

Why do many doctors recommend Ex-Lax and use it in their own families?

Why has Ex-Lax been America's favorite family laxative for more than 40 years?

Because millions know, from experience, how dependable Ex-Lax is . . . how thoroughly effectively it acts, yet how very gently too.

And how grown-ups, as well as children, go for that swell chocolate taste! They take Ex-Lax with a smile . . . not a shudder.

So get Ex-Lax, the laxative that millions have learned to trust! As a precaution, use only as directed. Still only 10¢. Economy size—three times as much—25¢.

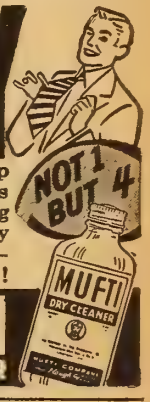
When Nature "forgets"... remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

• ACTS WELL ... TASTES SWELL •

HANDY



To keep clothes spotless, keep Mufti bottle handy! Mufti gives you not 1, but 4 tested cleaning ingredients . . . cleans so many spots from so many fabrics—and cleans them in a jiffy, too!

MUFTI
• SPOT REMOVER

STAMMER?

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 2296, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

GET THIS FREE BOOK!

Tired Kidneys Often Bring Sleepless Nights

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. When they get tired and don't work right in the daytime, many people have to get up nights. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder. Don't neglect this condition and lose valuable, restful sleep.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may also cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Dana's agent, call Dana "baby," he gave up. It's tough, for a guy from Texas.

Bill stayed with Dana and Mary for a while, but now he lives in Santa Monica, in a little house out in back of Mary's parents' place.

He got himself into a play at college, and Dana and Mary caught a performance. It gave Dana a shock.

Off-stage, Bill seems very adult. He's been in the army; he's seen a lot. On-stage— "Why, he's only a kid," Dana whispered to Mary. "He's so damn young!"

Mary giggled. "Keep still, Grandpa."

Bill and Dana have another brother in the neighborhood. He's Charles Andrews, vice-principal of Poly-Technic High School in Long Beach. He's a bright man, but awfully modest.

Several months ago, he told Dana a story idea. "I think possibly I'll write it some day," he said.

Dana was enthusiastic. "It sounds terrific." But Dana also knew brother Charles. He needs pins stuck in him.

Being on friendly terms with MacKinlay Kantor, because of Best Years of Our Lives, and respecting Mr. Kantor's opinions, Dana thought he'd like to have Mr. Kantor hear Charles' idea.

The problem was, where to get Mr. Kantor so he couldn't walk away.

The solution was obvious: the boat. Dana slyly invited Mr. Kantor for a sail, and Mr. Kantor came on down, and they all set off.

"Charles has an idea for a story," Dana began. "You want to go on up and listen to it?"

Mr. Kantor laughed. "Do I have to?"

"Sure," Dana said. "There's no place else to go but overboard."

Mr. Kantor went up and talked to Charles. When he came back, he was a different man. "It's wonderful!" he said. "Make him do something with it."

Dana tried for a long time. Charles would just listen, and look agreeable and say, "Oh, I don't know if I could write it or not."

After a while, they dropped the whole subject. And then when Dana was in Vermont, he got a letter from Bennett Cerf.

"I had lunch the other day with MacKinlay Kantor," Cerf wrote, "and he told me of an idea your brother had. I'm interested, and I wonder if you'd please send me your brother's address."

Dana sent Charles' address to Mr. Cerf. He also sent Mr. Cerf's letter to Charles, along with a piece of paper saying, "See what I mean?"

Cerf wrote Charles, and then, when he came out on a visit, he saw him, and that did it. Charles is really going to start working, now. He's already been granted a leave of absence from school, and Dana is beating on him.

"You can do it," he keeps telling him, and Charles undoubtedly can. The Andrews family is loaded with talent. Take Dana's son, David. Thirteen years old, and he makes radios.

There's a little house out in the back yard that Dana had thought would make a nice, orderly shop. When David got through installing his varied equipment, the only orderly thing left was the walls. He comes home with these enormous pieces of junk that he finds lying in the streets.

Dana looks at him sternly. "David, what are you going to do with that? Isn't the place cluttered enough?"

"I'm going to make a radio," his son says seriously.

And two days later, David will call Dana from the house. "Daddy, I'm broadcasting."

Dana can neither encourage nor defeat him. His own knowledge of radio is confined to the fact that he thinks it's nice.

There was the time the very correct-looking gentleman came up to the house, looking for Mr. Andrews.

"I'm Mr. Andrews," Dana said, waiting.

The gentleman held out his hand. "I'm from the FCC. You registered a complaint about a short-wave broadcaster using the same frequency as KNX—"

At which point David broke in on the scene. "I did it," he said. KNX is the Columbia Broadcasting System's outlet for Los Angeles, and one night, when David was tinkering around with his set, he'd picked up a ham broadcast using the KNX frequency, which is strictly illegal. It irritated David, so he phoned the authorities.

mr. andrews, jr. . . .

The authorities—at least those vested in the person of the correct-looking gentleman—tried not to smile.

"You want to see my shop?" David asked him.

"The boy knows exactly what he's doing," the gentleman told Dana later.

Dana grinned. "All I know is that we've got a $400 radio inside, and his plays better."

All told, they're rather nice kids—maybe because Mary and Dana are such a wonderful combination. They're not Hollywood, in the glittery sense, and all they ask of friends is a reasonable amount of intelligence, and a reasonable lack of affectation.

She and Dana share an enormous curiosity about people, but hers isn't as far-reaching as his.

She'll meditate about that, when they're going home from a party. "So-and-so was awfully dull. How could you talk to him so long?"

"Nobody's dull," he says. "If you try to find out what makes 'em tick."

"But you want to find out everything about everybody," she says. "You never go to sleep."

It's nearly true, too.

Not Mary, though. One cocktail before dinner, and right after dessert, Mary retires to the den, and falls asleep.

When she wakes up, he's sitting there watching her. "My fascinating wife."

"I'm sorry," she says humbly, not meaning a word of it, and then she goes off into gales of laughter. "I forgot to show you what I found on the floor today. Some of Kathy's art-work."

It turns out to be nothing more than a couple of scribbled lines on a piece of paper, but it's the funniest thing Mary ever saw.

Sometimes Dana thinks it's that humor, constant and fresh and deep, that he loves best in Mary. Sometimes he thinks it's her honesty, or her lack of sophistication, or her curiosity. Sometimes he knows it's everything she is.

"That girl," he says in wonder. "I'm dead for that girl."

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Of course, we think ALL our stories are tops this month—but it's you readers who really decide. Your opinion—multiplied by thousands—is what keeps MODERN SCREEN alive. That's why we're anxious as ever to have you fill in the Questionnaire below and mail it to us IMMEDIATELY. We still have 500 FREE three-months subscriptions (July, August, September issues) waiting for the first 500 answers we receive!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our June issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2 and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd and 3rd CHOICES.

Papa Flynn (Errol Flynn) ..... ☐
Rita Explains (Rita Hayworth) by Hedda Hopper ..... ☐
You Can't Say That About Bing' (Bing Crosby) by Billy Rose ... ☐
Secret Heart (June Haver) ..... ☐
Family Circle (Dana Andrews) ... ☐
Star Light, Star Bright (Guy Madison) ..... ☐
Van Heflin, That Is ..... ☐
Everything With Trick Endings (Peter Lawford) ..... ☐
John Lund Life Story (Concluded) . ☐
Time On My Hands (Glenn Ford) . ☐
Call Me Mama (Deanna Durbin) .. ☐
Let This Be For Always (Kathryn Grayson-Johnnie Johnston) .... ☐
Life Can Be Beautiful (William Holden) ..... ☐
Gay Blade (Cornel Wilde) ..... ☐
Cary, Cary, Quite Contrary (Cary Grant) ..... ☐
Blessed Event (Olivia De Havilland) ..... ☐
Holiday! (Bob Mitchum) ..... ☐
Best Year of His Life (Fredric March) ..... ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ..... ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST? .....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference .....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference .....

.....

My name is .....

My address is .....

City ..... Zone ..... State ..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Radiance" and "Aristocrat" shown about ⅔ actual size.
Cartwheel," about ½ actual size
Next to winning a diploma or catching the bride's bouquet, exquisite Elgin American compacts and cigarette cases make graduating and bridesmaid hearts flutter most. Such glorious designs, jewel-like finish and supreme craftsmanship glamorize the occasion because you gave the alluring, enduring gift. On the male side, Elgin American cigarette cases are perfect gifts for college graduates, wedding parties, and Father's Day.
at better stores everywhere
THE PERFECT June GIFT...
Elgin American COMPACTS AND CIGARETTE CASES artwheel" aved comin sterling
r and gold
, $35 plus
al tax
"Aristocrat"
Silver finish cigarette case with engraved jeweler's
bronze, $10
"Radiance"
mel and engraved
eler's bronze . . .
arette case, $5.95
mpact, $3.95
Elgin American
COMPACTS • CIGARETTE CASES • DRESSER SETS
ELGIN, ILLINOIS
other compacts, $2.95 to $500
Copyright 1947, Elgin American

HOLLYWOOD DISCOVERS New Improved DRENE!

Now! The Miracle Shampoo that lets your hair Shine like the Stars!

IDA LUPINO, glamorous Hollywood star, says: "It's simply wonderful the way new Drene brings out all the brilliance in my hair." Now . . . you, too, can have hair that shines like the stars.

For this amazing shampoo discovery brings out all the glorious brilliance . . . awakens all the natural highlights . . . reveals all the shimmering lustre that may now be hidden by dulling soap film. Yes! You can have hair that shines like the stars, tonight . . . if you take Ida Lupino's advice, and shampoo with new, improved Drene, today!

New Improved Drene doesn't dry-out hair! Leaves hair far easier to manage!

Actually preferred in tests by hundreds of women. New, improved Drene does not dry-out your hair. Instead, its fragrant, freshening whipped-cream lather leaves your hair seductively soft, sublimely smooth, far easier to set, curl and arrange right after shampooing.

You owe it to your hair to try this miracle shampoo. Ask for it today!

New, improved Drene is at your dealer's now in the familiar blue-and-yellow package.

NEVER BEFORE DRENE COULD ANY SHAMPOO PERFORM ALL OF THESE MIRACLES:

Reveals All the Lustre in Your Hair • Leaves Hair far Easier to Manage

Does Not Dry-out Hair • Removes Unsightly Dandruff • Luxurious Instant Lather

For All Types of Hair • No Acid After-rinses Needed • Flower-fresh Fragrance

NEW IMPROVED Drene SHAMPOO

FOR ALL TYPES OF HAIR

july 15c

modern screen

HER WILLIAMS

• A DELL MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE
DELL
• A DELL MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE

Tonight She's Getting Married!

SHE FEELS AS THO' SHE'S LIVING A DREAM — but her wedding veil just came, the ring's on her finger, her heart's going bumpety-bump! It's been a whole month since Bill proposed to her, but she can still feel his fingers on her arm... still see the look on his face when he said, "Darling, there's such a haunting fragrance about you — I want you near me forever!" Lucky girl! She's glad she used Lander's Lilacs and Roses talc that night! It's exciting fragrance helped make Bill hers!

For you Lander's has ensnared the essence of femininity in subtle talc fragrances! Spicy Apple Blossom, Gardenia and Sweet Pea, Lilacs and Roses ... an exquisite bouquet of garden scents for life's important moments!

Buy it at your ten cent store—today!

10¢ EACH

ASK FOR OTHER LANDER'S TOILETRIES AT ALL 10¢ TOILET GOODS COUNTERS

LANDER'S

For the Talc that Tempts

FIFTH AVENUE BUILDING
NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

JUN -8 1947

Make a wish! Little Bette Daly (third from the left), just four years old, may well wish that she grows up to be as pretty as her Mommy. Read why she's well on her way toward having her "model" mother's sparkling smile!

Betty Daly is a Model Mother—five times over!

She safeguards the future smiles of not one, not two, but five little Dalys!

PROBABLY you've met Betty Daly. In newsreel fashion revues, smiling at you from under John-Frederics' newest creation. Or modeling a smart little $15,000 mink number.

Now meet the real Betty Daly—mother of 3 boys, 2 girls! A "model" mother who teaches her children what models know so well: The importance of a smile. The older Daly children, in fact, already follow Betty's prized dental routine: Regular brushing with Ipana, then gentle gum massage.

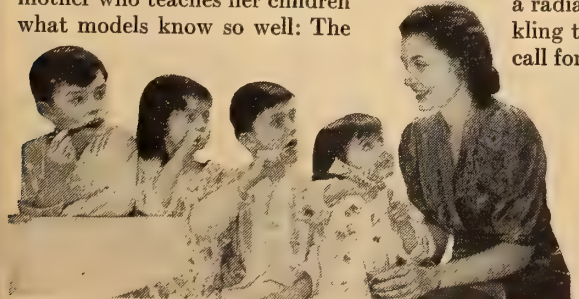
For this Jackson Heights, N. Y. mother knows what thousands of schools and dentists are teaching—that a radiant smile depends on sparkling teeth. And sparkling teeth call for healthy gums.



Jere, Joan, Jackie and Bette hear Mrs. Daly explain proper care of teeth and gums. Among adults, sensitive gums, "pink tooth brush," are signs to see your dentist. Let him decide whether yours is simply a case for "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

Product of Bristol-Myers

Peace and quiet descend on the Daly household after this nightly workout. Nightly, the Daly gums, too, get a workout—with Ipana and gentle massage. For Ipana is specially designed, with massage, to help gums become firmer . . . teeth brighter . . . smiles more sparkling.

Firmer gums, brighter teeth—with Ipana and Massage

JULY, 1947

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

STOP SMEARING SINATRA! (Frank Sinatra) ... by Ed Sullivan 4
THE TRUTH ABOUT HELEN WALKER ... by Valerie Sloan 12
FIRST BORN! (Jeanne Crain) ... by Jane Wilkie 24
IF YOU'VE WONDERED . . . (Mr. and Mrs. Van Johnson) ... by Florabel Muir 27
MODERN SCREEN GOES TO ARROWHEAD SPRINGS (Esther Williams) ... 28
IF TY HAD HIS WAY . . . (Tyrone Power-Lana Turner) ... by Hedda Hopper 32
PIXIE FROM DIXIE (Evelyn Keyes) ... by Kirtley Baskette 34
TIME OF THEIR LIVES (Barbara Stanwyck-Robert Taylor) ... by Ed Sullivan 36
THE GABLE TOUCH (Clark Gable) ... by Deborah Kerr 38
JANE WYMAN LIFE STORY ... by Ida Zeitlin 40
LARRY AND VIV (Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh) ... by David Niven 42
BRINGING UP ELIZABETH (Elizabeth Taylor) ... by Mrs. Francis Taylor 44
YOU'RE ALL WRONG ABOUT MATURE! (Victor Mature) ... by Carl Schroeder 46
WAR BABY (Janis Paige) ... by Jack Wade 48
TWINKLE TOES (Vera-Ellen) ... by Irene Greengard 50
OPTION PARTY (Diana Lynn-Kirk Douglas-Billy De Wolfe-Macdonald Carey) ... 52
SECRETLY, HE LOVES HER (June Allyson-Dick Powell) ... by Christopher Kane 56
THIS LITTLE PEGGY . . . (Peggy Cummins) ... by Gregory Ratoff 58
PIED PIPER (Gene Kelly) ... by Rosemary Layng 60
THE HEPBURN STORY (Katharine Hepburn) ... by Pandro S. Berman 62
IN THE PINK (Danny Kaye) ... by Kaaren Pieck 64

features

GOOD NEWS ... by Louella Parsons 6
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "The Egg and I" ... selected by Dorothy Kilgallen 14

departments

REVIEWS ... by Virginia Wilson 16
FASHION ... by Constance Bartel 73
BEAUTY: "Accent Your Lips" ... by Carol Carter 82
INFORMATION DESK ... by Beverly Linet 88
FAN CLUBS ... by Shirley Frohlich 94
MUSIC: "Sweet And Hot" ... by Leonard Feather 104

COVER PORTRAIT BY NIKOLAS MURAY • DESIGNED BY LESTER BEALL

ALBERT P. DELACORTE, Executive Editor HENRY P. MALMGREEN, Editor

BERYL STOLLER, associate editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
BEVERLY LINET, information desk
CHARLES SAXON, cartoon editor
MAGDA MASKEL, western manager
FRANKLYN PHILLIPS, western editor
GUS GALE, staff photographer
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
DON ORNITZ, staff photographer
CARL SCHROEDER, editorial consultant
LAYNG MARTINE, promotion director
JEAN KINKEAD, contributing editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 35, No. 2, July, 1947. Copyright, 1947, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office, Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

"LIVING IN A BIG WAY" is not a bad idea.

★ ★ ★ ★

It involves embracing life. Recommended for those who like embracing.

★ ★ ★ ★

M-G-M's new musical, "Living in a Big Way" will make you merrier. It may make you live in an even bigger way.

★ ★ ★ ★

Gene Kelly and Marie McDonald are the "Boy-meets-Girl" of this hearty, happy picture.

★ ★ ★ ★

Gene is the shiniest dancer—the best "timer" of scenes—and, to our and the public's mind, one of the very top stars in pictures. He has never been better, not even in "Anchors Aweigh". How the boy can dance!

★ ★ ★ ★

What originality characterizes his dance plots! The scene in which he does a terpsichorean routine on the girders of an unfinished dream-house is worth your week's movie allowance.

★ ★ ★

He teeters on a block and tackle, totters on ladders. Sure-footed, sure-fire Gene!

★ ★ ★

Marie McDonald has been bruited about a bit in the columns. She is known as "The Body". Her curves are classic and where she walks one hears a whistle.

★ ★ ★

In addition to Gene and Marie, you will see Charles Winninger, Phyllis Thaxter, Spring Byington, and others.

★ ★ ★ ★

Gregory La Cava, the director, is also the author, collaborating with Irving Ravetch. Pandro S. Berman, one of our better producers, is the producer.

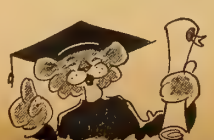
★ ★ ★ ★

When William James, the philosopher, was asked, "Is life worth living?" he said, "It all depends on the liver".

★ ★ ★ ★

And if the liver is "living in a big way", then life has its worth. So roareth the Lion among philosophers—

—Leo



LIVING IN A BIG WAY

When a gal who's got curves... meets a guy who's got angles... it's loving ...laughing... living in a big way!

M-G-M's new, gay, tip-topical musical!

starring

GENE KELLY with Marie McDonald

CHARLES WINNINGER · PHYLLIS THAXTER · SPRING BYINGTON

A GREGORY LA CAVA PRODUCTION

Directed by GREGORY LA CAVA · Original story by GREGORY LA CAVA and IRVING RAVETCH · Screen play by GREGORY LA CAVA · A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE · Produced by PANDRO S. BERMAN stop smearing sinatra!

by ed sullivan

■ Basically, I am a gentle man. And so my heart goes out to some of the more hop-headed columnists who have been making a living out of dancing on Frank Sinatra's narrow chest. I can't help thinking regretfully that there must be safer, cleaner ways of holding your circulation.

I write a bit of a column myself, and I've learned that one good technique for avoiding a good punch in the eye is to follow facts—not twist them.

Take, for instance the case against Frank Sinatra. He's been accused recently of (1) being a 4-F (2) having a permit to carry a gun (3) having met Lucky Luciano in Cuba (4) being a Communist. The facts are that Frank has always been an outspoken foe of Communism, that hundreds of thousands of good Americans had been rated 4-F, that Sinatra was within his legal rights in getting a gun permit, that all performers who've ever worked in night clubs are bound to know underworld characters. I've bumped into some of the choicest of them myself!

I don't like to pin any kind of medal on Lee Mortimer, entertainment columnist for the N. Y. Daily Mirror, but I've got to admit he stands at the head of the list of Frank's detractors.

For two years or more, this Mortimer had hitched his wagon to the Sinatra star, clinging tenaciously to the Sinatra coattails—not as a rooter, but as a heckler. When heckling drew no response from the victim, Mortimer grew bolder and more vicious.

When Sinatra returned from an overseas tour of entertainment, and criticized some of the Special Service officers whose officiousness had aroused the antagonism of Ed (Archie) Gardner and other performers, Mortimer attacked Sinatra as though Frank were a blood-relative of Benedict Arnold. With no sense of proportion, and completely lacking in good taste, Mortimer characterized Sinatra as "the 4-F who waited until hostilities had ended before going overseas." This was not

(Continued on page 72)

Lifting Your Heart to the Highlands of Adventure...

with the endearing charm of young love!

BOB, Son of Battle

in Technicolor

The call of adventure rings out across the hills and glens! Surging with the warm spirit of the classic millions have read and loved!

Starring

LON McCALLISTER

with PEGGY ANN GARNER
EDMUND GWENN
REGINALD OWEN
CHARLES IRWIN

From the producers of "Smoky" and "My Friend Flicka"

20th CENTURY-FOX ACTION HIT!

Directed by LOUIS KING · Produced by ROBERT BASSLER

Screen Play by Jerome Cady · Based on the Novel by Alfred Ollivant

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Sterling Hayden and Betty De Noon, Pasadena socialite, were married near Santa Barbara on April 25. They honeymooned aboard Sterling's schooner, the "Quest."

Although Rory Calhoun squired starlet Myrna Dell to the Decca party, Barbara Hinsdale, ranch heiress, is the reason he spends all his weekends down at Laguna Beach.

Gail Russell and Guy Madison, shown here at a Decca Records party, wear their riding clothes everywhere. Guy—the softy—has given her a heart-shaped locket. Latest grapevine gossip: they'll elope any day!

I printed that Greer Garson and Richard Ney had reconciled and that they'd had dinner together at the hospitable home of Sir Charles and Lady Mendl, and they were together every night for a week.

Never did a lover woo a lady more assiduously or persistently than Richard.

I talked with him when I was in New York and he said, "I still love her. I'll never love any other woman." But Richard has learned his lesson and he talks little.

Later, I talked with Lady Mendl, who had brought the estranged couple together. She said, "There are a lot of adjustments, but it's all settled, I am happy to say."

I think if this reconciliation fails at this stage, it will perhaps be because Richard has been too broken-hearted in his efforts to get her back. A little independence might have helped, it sometimes does. But he's always wearing his heart on his sleeve, and when he went out with girls in New York, it was with a different girl every night.

Jack Benny's famous quartette warms up for its historic commercial: Dennis Day, Andy Russell, Dick Haymes and Bing Crosby.

Greer, who denied that they had reconciled, did not deny that they had been discussing going back together. She said, "Nothing is definitely settled." Which means at this writing that if they're not together, you might as well say they never will be.

One thing that Greer felt about Richard was his complete immaturity. She wanted him to grow up. He's a great big kid, but he has a sweetness that's hard to resist.

I think that if Greer gets a good picture soon, and feels happy in her career, that she'll have a different viewpoint on her marriage.

Richard told me that she was very unhappy over her career, and she, herself, told me that she realized she was a difficult person when she was working.

I can say one thing for Greer, though. She certainly hasn't been difficult about practically re-making A Woman of My Own. It isn't easy for a star to go back over a production that has had so much bad luck in the original filming. She's cooperated in every way.

* * *

I predict right now that Michael North will be your next Dream Boat when The Unsuspected. is released He has a lot of Alan Ladd's charm—only in a Michael North way.

As Ted North, he made several movies—but this is his first biggie. Not long ago, he and Mary Beth Hughes were divorced, so he is one of the few eligible males in town—and how the gals are chasing him.

I could give some of these belles a tip! He's not a boy to be obviously pursued. The other evening, at a cocktail party, I watched a bit of by-play out of the corner of my eye.

One of the most glamorous girls in Hollywood had eyed Mike from the moment of his entrance and had stalked him like a Big Game hunter from room to room.

When he finally called a taxi, in desperation, she cooed, "Oh, I'm leaving, too. Is your taxi going my way, do you suppose?"

"Oh, I'm sure it will go anywhere," said Mike. "Go ahead and take it. I'll wait for another."

So what could the poor huntress do—but let him escort her to the empty cab?

Just another case of a male preferring tc do his own stalking!

* * *

After a month in New York (my first jaunt in over two years), I've made a couple of pertinent observations about movie life—East vs. West Coast.

First, Hollywood stars do NOT behave the same in New York as they do in Hollywood. I don't mean, better or worse. Just different.

Second, the social events are certainly not Hollywood's way of tossing parties.

Perhaps, it's just the change in locale and settings that brings on a change in personalities and events. But these things I noticed:

Victor Mature, who is "Mr. Stay-At-Home" himself in Hollywood, was back night clubbing every night with a different gal on his arm. And he was back "wising" with the "cracks" again, too. Whether this will carry over on his return to Hollywood after making New York scenes for Kiss of Death, I wouldn't be knowing.

Jennifer Jones, who is very conservative in Hollywood, was a fashion show-stopper in almost everything she wore in the Big Town. One night, in the Stork Club, she caught every eye in a hat that was nothing more or less than a glorified lace baby cap!

Helmut Dantine, a thoroughly moody guy who looks permanently unhappy in movietown, was a gay blade around New York if I ever saw one, raving about everything from the weather to Tallulah Bankhead with whom he appeared in The Eagle Has Two Heads.

Joe Cotten, who wears slacks constantly on the Coast, was dressed up like a rival for Adolphe Menjou every time I saw him in New York.

Gene Tierney, who gave or attended few parties in Hollywood, is getting sooooo social in the East.

And I'm willing to bet you dollars to peanuts, that James Mason and his wife, who have irritated the entire Eastern press will completely charm the Hollywood scribes when they land there several months from now.

* * *

As for the movie parties—the New York brand are neither as elaborate nor as novel as the Hollywood variety. My husband's illness at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore brought me East, and the little man on the flying trapeze was no giddier than I commuting between Baltimore and New York, trying to cover the movie and social news—so I'm speaking from first hand impressions.

Perhaps the largest was given for Charlie Chaplin and his young wife, Oona, at the famous 21. I had had an after-the-theater supper earlier with Mr. and Mrs. James Mason

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Now that Joan's divorce from Phil Terry is final, Hollywood is watching the Crawford romance sweepstakes with renewed interest. When Joan showed up at the Mocambo with Steve Crane, Lana Turner's ex, tongues wagged furiously.

HE CALLED HIMSELF "THE POET"

...and he signed his name in lead!

DENNIS MORGAN
EXCITINGLY TEAMED WITH JANE
WYMAN

WARNER SMASH!

CHEYENNE

WHERE A MAN WITHOUT A CONSCIENCE RAN A CITY WITHOUT A SOUL!

co-starring
JANIS PAIGE · BRUCE BENNETT

Every eye in Cheyenne is on her as she sings "CHEYENNE" "SO IN LOVE"

DIRECTED BY RAOUL WALSH · PRODUCED BY ROBERT BUCKNER

ALAN HALE · ARTHUR KENNEDY

Screen Play by Alan LeMay and Thames Williamson • From a Story by Paul I. Wellman • Music by Max Steiner any day of the month with Tampax

SWIM

BECAUSE it's "that time of month" do you stay out of the water pretending you don't care? You do care and others are likely to know it. So why not use Tampax and take your swim? Women everywhere now are doing just that . . . Tampax is modern sanitary protection worn internally. There are no belts, outside pads or anything else that can show. In bathing suit wet or dry, you are safe from the most watchful eyes.

Made of compressed absorbent cotton, Tampax was invented by a doctor for this monthly use. Individual applicators make insertion easy and when the Tampax is in place it cannot be seen or felt. It is quick to change and easy to dispose of. Also, no odor can form. Do you wonder that millions of women are now using Tampax?

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

Buy Tampax and swim to your heart's content. At drug stores and notion counters in Regular, Super and Junior absorbencies. Month's supply fits into purse. Or get the economy box with 4 months' supply (average). Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Looks like the John Paynes are due to hit the jack-pot any second now! On vacation in Las Vegas, Glo announced she'll quit the screen.

Red Skelton, who's a brand-new father, sniffs real flowers atop Dorothy Lamour's hat. That "serious" operation of Dot's was—adenoids!

and suggested that they go on with me to meet the Chaplins.

The entrance of the Masons, both wearing tweed suits, into the private dining room where all the women had on low-cut gowns and the gents were equally formal, was startling to put it mildly.

Charlie, who can be as charming as anyone I know when he isn't talking politics, delighted Mason when he said, "You are my wife's favorite actor. When Mrs. Chaplin hears you are here, she is going to be delighted." Mason sincerely returned the compliment by saying he had long been an admirer of the Chaplin movies.

Gene Tierney had on a fascinating greenish dress which she promptly told me was designed by her estranged husband, Oleg Cassini. There have been rumors that Oleg and Gene would kiss and make up—and just between us, I wouldn't be surprised. Meantime, he's running true to type—being seen everywhere with a girl who looks so much like Gene, everyone thinks it's his lovely ex-wife's hand he's holding at the night spots.

* * *

Everybody's kidding me about my crush on James Mason—particularly after several potshots I'd taken at him both in my column and on the air before I met him! I, as the saying goes, don't care.

The Masons are completely charming even if they do have cats all over the place—at their New York apartment and their country home—and I'm not a cat fancier, myself. They politely put up the felines whenever I came visiting.

I have a private hunch that the Masons are completely at sea about life in Hollywood. They prodded me with question after question and seem to think that Hollywood parties are as fabulous as the old orgies of Babylon.

They'll find out!

One thing Mason believes, and no one can change his mind about, is that actors should not get too close to the public—spoils illusions, and all that sort of thing that went out of our American publicity methods with the Ark. Anyway, it's funny that with all our differences of opinion and the many things I said chiding him—we really like each other.

* * *

The big gossip every place I go is, "Do Greer Garson and Deborah Kerr like one another? Or are the two English queens of M-G-M feuding?"

There's no sense kidding anybody that they are close pals. (Continued on page 114)

RKO PRESENTS

CARY GRANT · MYRNA LOY · SHIRLEY TEMPLE

Cary's Wary!

Fabulously funny affairs of a bobby-soxer who latches on to a reluctant bachelor...and a jealous lady judge who leaves the bench for a game of love!

THE Bachelor and the Bobby-Soxer

with

RUDY VALLEE · RAY COLLINS · HARRY DAVENPORT · JOHNNY SANDS

A DORE SCHARY PRODUCTION

Directed by IRVING REIS · Original Story and Screenplay by SIDNEY SHELDON

RKO RADIO PICTURES

the truth about helen walker

The headlines gave you one picture of a tragic automobile smash-up. Here's the real story of what happened to a gallant girl—who fought for her life in more ways than one.

by valerie sloan
special Modern Screen reporter

■A few years ago I met a young actress from Worcester, Mass. She had just been signed by Paramount and was trying to be neither naïve nor fresh. As we talked over the luncheon table, I was impressed by one bit of conversation.

"My family," she said, "was always poor. You'd say we didn't have a biscuit. My father died when I was four, but I always remember mother telling me that he had an important position. He worked in a grocery store and was the manager. It was a point of pride with us, even though he had only one employee working under him."

Believe it or not, such conversation is unusual. Most young ladies, on being initiated to Hollywood, are careful to conceal any biographical information which would tend to show that their parents were not the élite of the home town.

Hence, in a town widely known for its "different" people, Helen Walker has not seemed at all unusual to me. I liked her at once and I still do. That's why, on picking up my newspaper, on New Year's Day, and reading of the accident in which a young soldier was killed when the car Helen was driving turned over, I didn't send her a wire. I told myself that a girl with eight severe fractures wouldn't appreciate it anyway. (Continued on page 117)

BARBARA

STANWYCK

and DAVID

NIVEN

in the daring unpublished story by

ERICH MARIA REMARQUE who wrote "Arch of Triumph"

THE other LOVE

Presented by

ENTERPRISE STUDIOS

with

RICHARD CONTE

GILBERT ROLAND • JOAN LORRING • LENORE AUBERT • MARIA PALMER
NATALIE SCHAFER • Screen Play by Ladislas Fodor and Harry Brown
Adapted from the short story "Beyond" by Erich Maria Remarque
Directed by ANDRE de TOTH • A DAVID LEWIS Production

A UNITED ARTISTS RELEASE

dorothy kilgallen selects "the egg and I"

■ Laughter is a lovely sound at the end of a long, hard day, and therefore, I can think of no more felicitous method of forgetting the boss's grouch or the customers' complaints than a nice relaxing evening on the audience end of The Egg And I.

It's a darling picture.

It has quantities of fun in it. It makes fun of the rich and fun of the poor. It pokes a humor stick at the stingy, the slattern, the queer, the cautious, the timid, the pixilated, the haughty, the absolutely nuts.

Perhaps you know what to expect when girl meets egg—I didn't. I had not read the book, but any book that produced The Egg And I must have had more in it than yokes—it had yaks. It had a wonderfully accurate insight into the mind of a city fellow who yearns, with all the unbridled poetry of his pin-striped soul, for the good earth and the feel of the land—and it had an obviously first-hand and still painful knowledge of the trials of a city girl married to such a man. Or I never would have laughed until I cried when Claudette Colbert fell into the mud with the pig.

The Egg And I is a very funny picture.

Try to (Continued on page 108)

All the MacDonalds knew about chickens was that you could scramble their eggs. But then Bob (Fred MacMurray) decided he and his bride (she's Claudette Colbert) should live on a farm. Because it's such a healthy, simple life . . .

Are you in the know?

How would you discourage this?

- ☐ Keep a cool head
- ☐ Tell him off
- ☐ Let your hair down

When he gives that wayward wisp a tug — why rant? Or wear a warm, longish mane? Keep a cool head. Twine stubborn strands around two straight hairpins, and everything's under control. You can master other trying situations, too. At certain times, for instance, by choosing Kotex you can be sure of extra protection from that exclusive safety center. And you're so at ease with that elastic Kotex Wonderform Belt. So snug! So smooth-fitting! No binding!

How can a newcomer find new friends?

- ☐ Just sit and wait
- ☐ Go where they are
- ☐ Play hard to know

You're a new gal in town? Don't let ol' rockin' chair get you. Go where the crowd goes: tennis courts, local ball games, church socials. You'll find friends by joining the fun . . . whatever the day of the month. Let Kotex befriend you; keep you cloud-deep in comfort. For Kotex is a softie at heart, with a loyal kind of softness (this napkin's made to stay soft while you wear it.) You'll be comfortable hours longer. What a welcome "plus" for your poise!

If you're a budgeteen, would you buy—

- ☐ A good mink
- ☐ A "bargain" beaver
- ☐ A magnificent mouton

You drool for mink, but it's too rich for your budget? Well . . . it's smart to select the coat best suited to your problem. Just as on problem days, it's smart to select Kotex — because only Kotex offers you a choice of 3 sizes to help you find the napkin that exactly meets your needs: Regular, Junior or Super Kotex. So too, when buying furs, choose what's best for you. In short, take the very finest mouton—rather than a third-rate beaver.

What brings out a suntan best?

- ☐ A smart beret-beach-bag
- ☐ A white bask-ground
- ☐ A hot bath

Beauty and the Beach can go together. Consider the sharp new beret shown here — that shakes into a beach-bag! (Neat?) You can wear it with confidence. On "calendar days" you can wear any beach togs without a shadow of a doubt — thanks to Kotex. Because Kotex has flat pressed ends that prevent "outlines" from tattling. And while you're sunning, remember this: Bask on a white sheet or towel. It's shadowless . . . brings out a suntan best.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins

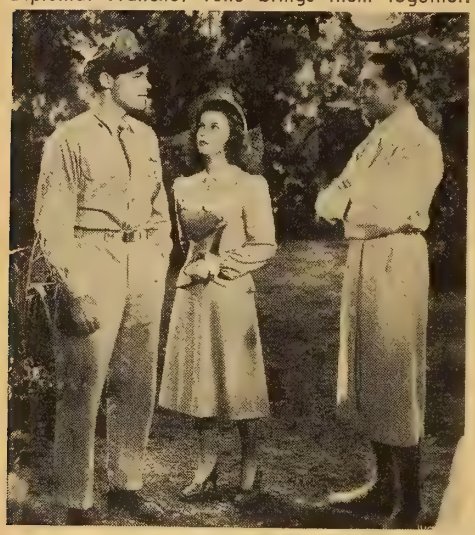
A DEODORANT IN EVERY KOTEX* NAPKIN AT NO EXTRA COST

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

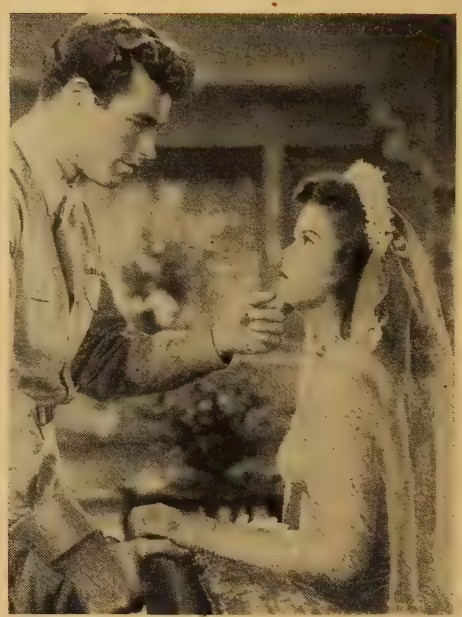
movie reviews

by virginia wilson

Guy Madison and Shirley Temple come to Mexico to be married—and nearly lose each other. Diplomat Franchot Tone brings them together.



After they bump heads in a pool, Shirley decides Franchot is the "fascinating older man" type she prefers to Guy. But Tone's engaged to Lina Romay and has no intention of cradle-robbing.



When Guy finds out about the pool accident, he brings Shirley to her senses—by dunking her in the pool himself! And so they are married . . .

HONEYMOON

■ Take the prettiest girl in the United States, played by Shirley Temple. And the handsomest man—that's Guy Madison. Get them engaged, and have them plan to be married in Mexico City. Then throw every possible complication in the way, and you'll have a picture called "Honeymoon." You'll also have a fine time.

Barbara (Shirley Temple) has dreamed for most of her almost-eighteen years of a wedding with dozens of bridesmaids, a long white satin gown, and the biggest cake in the world. But when Phil (Guy Madison), who's stationed in the Canal Zone, wires her to meet him in Mexico City and be married, she just packs a bag and takes the next train. But Phil's plane is grounded.

And so there's no one to meet Barbara, no place to stay, no nothing. She bursts in on the American Consulate, and tells its trouble-shooter, Flanner (Franchot Tone), her tale of woe. She even shows him a picture of "Phillsie-love" and then bursts into tears. Later she faints from lack of food, and Flanner takes her to lunch.

It's sad but true that in this world a good deed never goes unpunished. Flanner is engaged to a charming Mexican named Raquel (Lina Romay). Her father sees him lunching with Barbara. Raquel's best friend sees him dancing with Barbara—just to cheer her up, of course. He has to break a date with Raquel so he can take Barbara around Mexico City looking for Phil, who has arrived and is making a search for his girl.

When Phil finds her, things just go from bad to worse. They have no health certificates and the doctors are all at a medical conference. And on top of that, the dear girl decides she's in love with Flanner! It's a good thing Phil knows jiu-jitsu.—RKO

(Continued on page 18)

"Be Lovelier Tonight!"

"My Beauty Facials give skin fresh new Loveliness"

MARSHA HUNT

Star of United Artists' "CARNEGIE HALL"

A PRODUCT OF LEVER BROTHERS COMPANY

"I always use Lux Soap for complexion care," says Marsha Hunt. "Smooth the fragrant lather well in. Rinse with warm water, then cold. Pat dry with a towel."

"Skin is softer, smoother—looks so much fresher too!" In recent tests of these facials by skin specialists, 3 out of 4 complexions improved in a short time!

"IT'S SO WONDERFUL the way Lux Soap facials leave skin softer, smoother—give appealing new loveliness!" says fascinating Marsha Hunt.

Don't let neglect cheat you of Romance. Try this gentle Lux Toilet Soap care Marsha Hunt recommends. It will make you lovelier tonight!

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use Lux Toilet Soap—Lux Girls are Lovelier!

1947's Greatest Travel Values!

Choose From
65 PLEASURE PLANNED VACATION TOURS

Travel Trailways...Thrill to a Perfect Low-Cost Vacation. Enjoy America at "Scenery Level"

National Parks, West—East • Ozarks
California • Gulf Coast • New York
Rocky Mountain Playgrounds • Texas
Historic Southeast • Southwest
Washington, D.C. • Mexico • Florida
New England • Pacific Northwest

5 DAYS from $29
7 DAYS from $42
14 DAYS from $95
20 DAYS or longer from ... $124
TAX NOT INCLUDED

NATIONAL TRAILWAYS BUS SYSTEM

Trailways Pleasure-Planned Tours include transportation, fine hotels and de luxe sight-seeing. Start any day you like—follow a regular itinerary or arrange stop-overs to suit you. Travel by yourself or with your own small group. There's no better way of seeing America. Mail coupon for complete details.

FUN... ADVENTURE... ROMANCE!

Exciting days, romantic nights, watching America's spectacular beauty... her mountains, beaches and famous cities, while enjoying the friendly atmosphere and comfortable accommodations aboard a big Trailways luxury liner. For good times, good friends and grand memories, take a Pleasure-Planned Tour. It's low cost... easy on the budget... shows you more... takes you farther... gives you extra spending money.

MAIL THE COUPON TODAY

TRAILWAYS

NATIONAL TRAILWAYS BUS SYSTEM
Dept. D-7, 185 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

Please send me free folder of tours as checked:
Gulf Coast ☐ California ☐ Great Smokies ☐
National Parks ☐ Southwest ☐ Mexico ☐
Ozarks ☐ Colorado Rockies ☐ Historic East ☐
Northwest ☐ Virginia ☐ Carolinas ☐ Florida ☐

Name.....
Address.....
City & Zone..... State.....

FIESTA

The most exciting thing to come out of Mexico since the jumping bean is Ricardo Montalban, who plays Esther Williams' twin brother in Fiesta. Besides this discovery-of-the-month, you will see the lovely Esther as a bull-fighter (honest!), plus plenty of music and Technicolor.

The greatest matador in Mexico used to be Antonio Morales (Fortunio Bonanova). When injuries force his retirement, he concentrates all his hopes on his son, Mario (Ricardo Montalban). Mario is much more interested in music, but he obediently learns the technique from his father. So does his twin sister, Maria (Esther Williams), who handles a cape expertly herself.

On the evening preceding the twins' twenty-first birthday, there is great excitement at the Morales hacienda. Next day Mario is to fight a bull under the exacting eyes of the great Barrios, manager from Mexico City. If he qualifies, he will be scheduled for a fight there in a few weeks.

Mario is calm about this prospect, but in a dither as to the fate of some musical compositions he has sent to the head of the Mexican Symphony Orchestra. Actually, news comes on his birthday that they have been accepted. But Senor Morales, fearful of anything which might deflect his son's interest from bull-fighting, keeps it a secret. Mario fights well and is approved by Barrios.

Then, on the day of his great debut in Mexico City, he discovers what his father has done. Grimly disillusioned, he walks out of the ring, and is branded a coward by the crowd. Mario disappears completely and even Maria doesn't know where he is.

She postpones her wedding to Pepe (John Carroll) and goes off secretly to fight under the name of Mario. She hopes to avenge her brother's honor and also believes that he will come back when he hears about this.

Akim Tamiroff is good as an aging banderillero who helps the twins. Mary Astor is effective as their mother.—M-G-M

THE TROUBLE WITH WOMEN

A college professor who comes out with the statement that women like to be bossed shouldn't be surprised at anything that happens to him thereafter. But Professor Gilbert Sedley (Ray Milland) is surprised when his statement gets in the newspaper. He's surprised when reporters won't let him alone. He's even more surprised when one of them turns out to be a pretty girl named Kate (Teresa Wright), who does not like to be bossed.

Gilbert has a fiancée, also professorial, Dean Agnes Meeler (Rose Hobart). But somehow Agnes has never had quite the effect on him that Kate does. Kate first meets him by pretending to be a maid bringing towels to his room. That was the only way she could get into the Men's Faculty Club. Her city editor, McBride (Brian Donlevy), has ordered her to get a story on Gilbert and McBride doesn't go for alibis.

While she's there, Gilbert's fiancée and a welcoming committee from the University show up. At that point, Gilbert and Kate are under the bed looking for his socks—a hard thing to explain to either a fiancée or a welcoming committee. And Gilbert infuriates Kate by ordering her to leave.

In order to get a story that will satisfy McBride, Kate bribes a man arrested for wife-beating to say it was Gilbert's theories which inspired him. This makes the front pages, natch, and Gilbert sues the paper for $300,000 libel. Kate thinks she can protect the paper by goading Gilbert into hitting her, thus proving he believes in violence. With a cameraman present, of course.

She enrolls in his new psychiatry class at the University and spends as much time with him as she can. This suits Gilbert fine, but pleases his fiancée less. "What I feel for this girl is just a temporary infatuation," Gilbert tells Agnes soothingly. "The more I see of her the sooner I'll get over it."

It's a good theory, but what has a theory got to do with a pretty girl like Kate?—Par.

Fiesta: The handsome bull-fighter is—Esther Williams! She's taken her twin brother's (Ricardo Montalban) place in the arena, which seems to upset brother Ricardo and Akim Tamiroff (left).

Which Twin has the Toni?

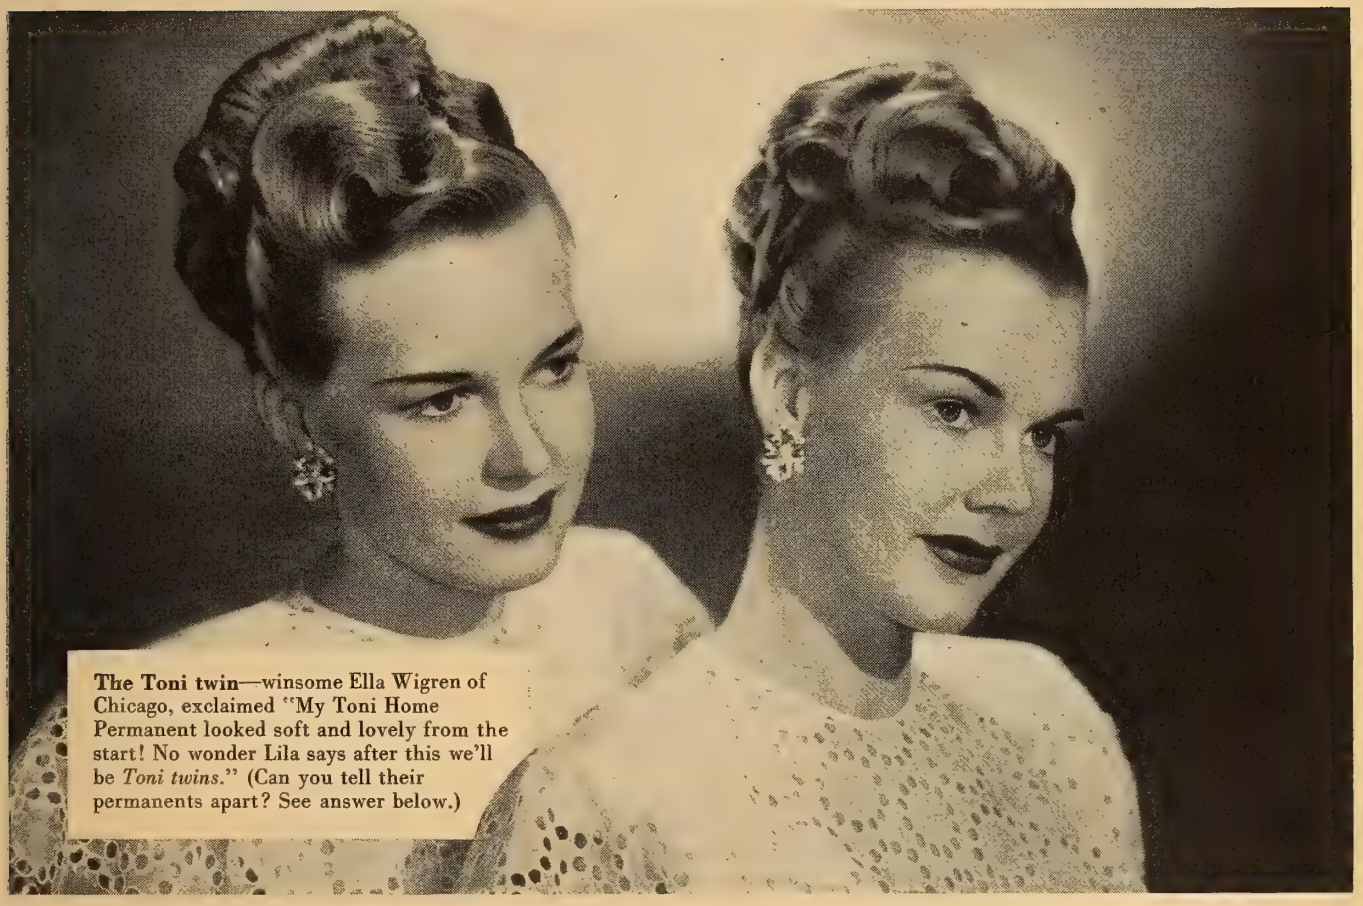
(and which has the beauty shop permanent?)



The Toni twin—winsome Ella Wigren of Chicago, exclaimed "My Toni Home Permanent looked soft and lovely from the start! No wonder Lila says after this we'll be Toni twins." (Can you tell their permanents apart? See answer below.)

Yes, you can give yourself a lovely TONI Home Permanent for your date tonight

Beautiful, deep, graceful waves — so smooth, so natural-looking. A Toni is truly lovely. And look how easy it is to give yourself a Toni Permanent—at home.

1. Roll your hair up on curlers (new Toni plastic curlers make it easier than ever). Dab on Toni Creme Lotion as you go.

2. Tie a turban round your head and do whatever you like for 2 to 3 hours.

3. Saturate each curl with Toni Neutralizer and rinse.

Your wave is in — just the way you like it. By following the simple Toni directions you get the curl just as tight or as loose as you want. And your wonderful Toni wave is frizz-free from the start. For Toni Creme Lotion coaxes the hair into soft, graceful, easy-to-manage waves.

Toni works like a charm on any hair that will take a permanent — even gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair. And the wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a beauty-shop permanent costing $15 or more. That's why — every hour of the day another thousand women use Toni. Take a tip from them and get a Toni Home Permanent Kit today. On sale at leading drug, notion and cosmetic counters.

Ella, the twin with the Toni is on the right above. Did you guess right?

Easy as rolling your hair up on curlers — but the wave stays in for months.

De Luxe Kit with re-usable plastic curlers $2.00

Regular Kit with fiber curlers $1.25

Refill Kit complete except for curlers $1.00

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

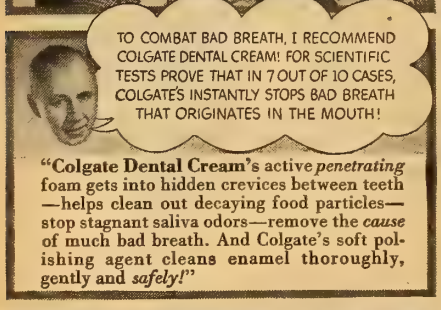
All prices plus tax • Prices slightly higher in Canada

Toni HOME PERMANENT

THE CREME COLD WAVE

Met Her on Sunday-
Lost Her on Monday!

JUST WHEN I THOUGHT THIS PERT PIGEON AND I WERE DEFINITELY ON THE BEAM. SHE FLEW! AND WHY? I ASK YOU, SIS, WHY?
EVER THINK OF THE BAD BREATH ANGLE? NO FOOLING, PETE, YOU OUGHT TO MAKE TRACKS FOR OUR DENTIST'S—BUT FAST!



TO COMBAT BAD BREATH, I RECOMMEND COLGATE DENTAL CREAM! FOR SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE THAT IN 7 OUT OF 10 CASES, COLGATE'S INSTANTLY STOPS BAD BREATH THAT ORIGINATES IN THE MOUTH!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!
COLGATE
RIBBON DENTAL CREAM
Use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM twice a day and before every date!

MONSIEUR VERDOUX

If you were a middle-aged widow, a little plump, a little vain, a little rich, you would be enchanted by Monsieur Verdoux (Charles Chaplin). Deliberately enchanted, for widows like that are his business. He pays them compliments, charms them, marries them, takes their money, and kills them. All with the greatest neatness and efficiency.

For thirty years, Monsieur Verdoux was a bank clerk. Then came the depression and he was fired without ceremony. Not young, with an invalid wife (Audrey Betz), whom he adores, and a small son to support, he casts about for a new business. He hits, quite coolly, upon murder. The murder of women for money. This necessitates leading a double, even a triple, life at times. It's all very tiring and a distinct nuisance. But no sacrifice is too great to make for one's family!

Speaking of families, he always tries to select victims without any. However, one of his "wives" has a brother and sister who are sufficiently concerned about her disappearance to go to the police. Gradually the authorities realize there is more than coincidence at work in the sudden vanishing of so many women of the same type in the same general region. No bodies are found, which makes a charge of murder difficult.

Meanwhile, Verdoux is concentrating on two new prospects. One he has already "married." Her name is Annabella (Martha Raye) and she's younger than most of his victims. Also more stubborn—hence, she still has her money, and her life. The other, Marie (Isabel Elsom) is older and richer. An ideal prospect, really. But courting her is costing more than Verdoux can afford—unless he can get Annabella's little nest egg.

This is quite different from Chaplin's earlier pictures, though there are flashes of the old, wonderful slapstick technique.—U.A.

THE OTHER LOVE

High up on a Swiss mountain top is a very de luxe sanitarium. Its newest patient is Karen Duncan (Barbara Stanwyck), famous concert pianist. Karen knows she has tuberculosis, but she hasn't much idea yet what that involves. Dr. Tony Stanton (David Niven) tries to break her into the new life gradually, but soon the iron discipline that's necessary for a cure clamps down around her.

Rest in the morning. Rest in the afternoon. Go to bed at nine. Don't work. Don't worry. Don't think. Even her precious piano is forbidden. But for a while Karen doesn't mind all this too much. She even comes to like the quiet, restful life, the happiness of an occasional drive to the village with Tony.

Then, one day, she meets a handsome racing car driver, Paul Claremont (Richard Conte). He doesn't know she's a patient at the sanitarium, and he urges her to meet him for dinner after the big race Sunday. She refuses and returns from the village in a glow of virtue.

She's greeted by Tony with bad news. He has looked at her latest X-rays. There are to be no more trips to the village for awhile. No more anything but rest. Karen's next-door neighbor, Celestine (Joan Lorring), urges her to rebel. "You can come in here at all hours if you bribe the night watchman," she says airily.

So Karen goes to the village surreptitiously to meet Paul. When she steals in again, very late, Celestine's body is just being taken out. The shock is too much for Karen. She is terrified suddenly of the sanitarium and all it implies. She rushes back to Paul and goes with him to Monte Carlo. She'll lead her own life from now on, no matter what happens.

You must see the picture to find out whether it's worth it.—U.A.

Monsieur Verdoux: Charles Chaplin is a charming deceiver, forced by loss of his job to murder a series of rich widows, in order to support his family. Martha Raye is one of the widows.

Cynthia: Elizabeth Taylor dreams out loud about junior prom. Mary Astor is her mother.

CYNTHIA

When you're sixteen, going to Junior Prom is the most important thing in the whole world. Sometimes parents understand this and sometimes they don't. With Cynthia (Elizabeth Taylor), it's divided. Her mother, Lou Bishop (Mary Astor), knows how she feels, but her father, Larry (George Murphy), calls it much ado about nothing. "There'll be other dances," he says, in what's meant to be a comforting tone.

Of course, the story really starts a long while before that Junior Prom. Before Cynthia was even born. It starts when Lou and Larry met at college, and fell in love. They made great plans for the future. Lou was going to Vienna to study music. Larry was going to become a doctor. Instead, they got married, and Cynthia came along, and they settled down in a little Mid-West town. Larry went to work in a hardware store, and Lou was too busy with housework and the baby to think about her music. But she is determined that Cynthia shall have the rich, full life she herself has missed.

Cynthia has always been delicate. Even now, at sixteen, she has to spend more time at the doctor's than out with the other kids. The doctor is her Uncle Fred (Gene Lockhart), and she hates the very sight of his office.

She's never had any boy friends. They know that if they ask her for a date, she'll be sure to have a cold or something and not be able to go. But when Ricky Latham (James Lydon) comes back from the Navy to finish high school, he doesn't know that. And he thinks Cynthia is cute.

When a couple of miracles fix it so he asks her to go to the Prom, you can see how important it is for her to go. You can see, but her father and Uncle Fred can't. That needs another miracle!—M-G-M

CHEYENNE

In Wyoming, in 1872, bandits were as common as jackrabbits. They had some mighty fancy names, though, like "The Poet" (Bruce Bennett) and "Sundance Kid" (Arthur Kennedy). Jim Wylie (Dennis Morgan), gentleman gambler, has been hired by the Wells-Fargo outfit to track down "The Poet." No one

Oh, yes—you look sweet enough to kiss!

But kisses mean close-ups, so guard your charm with Mum

THAT'S a smooth make-up job, Honey. On you it should catch a man's eye, steal his heart.

But even tempting lips hold no lure when a girl is guilty of underarm odor. So why take chances? Be sure you're sweet with Mum. Remember, a bath washes away past perspiration, but Mum prevents risk of future underarm odor.

Mum checks perspiration odor

1. Safe for charm. Mum checks underarm odor, gives sure protection all day or all evening.

2. Safe for skin. No irritating crystals. Snow-white Mum is gentle, harmless to skin.

3. Safe for clothes. No harsh ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical, Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

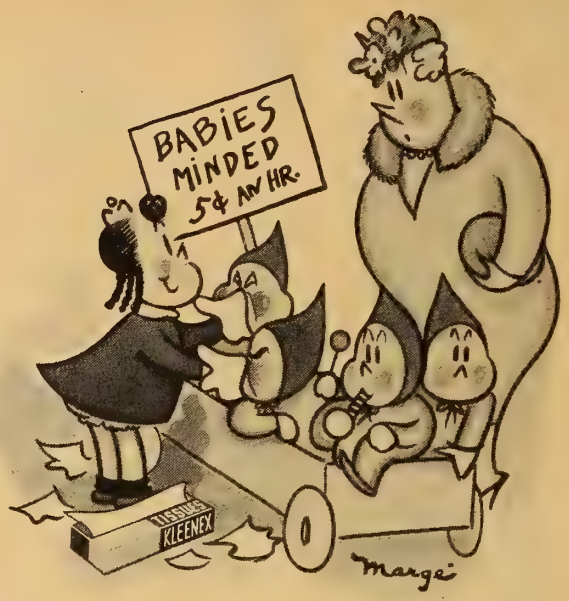
• • •

For Sanitary Napkins—Mum is gentle, safe, dependable . . . ideal for this use, too.

Product of Bristol-Myers

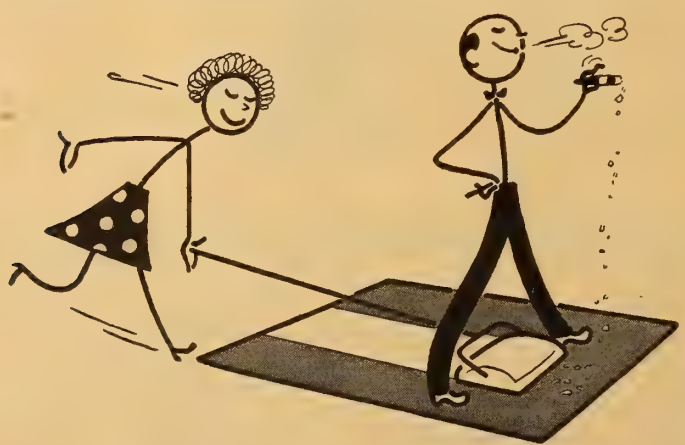
LITTLE LULU



"Just leave it to me and Kleenex, ma'am!"

Little Lulu says...Compare tissues—compare boxes—and you'll see why 7 out of 10 tissue users like Kleenex* best! Soft! Strong! Pops Up! It's America's favorite tissue.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.



NO "BEAR DOWN" WITH NEW BISSELLS*!

New "Bisco-matic"* Brush Action sweeps clean without any pressure on the handle whatsoever!

Just roll this "BISSELL" sweeper lightly for perfect pick-up—on thick rugs or thin—under beds or under chairs! "Bisco-matic" does all the pressing down for you!

Available now in limited quantities at Bissell dealers only—complete with exclusive "Sta-up" Handle and the new, easier "Flip-O" Empty.

NEW BISSELL SWEEPERS

with patented "Bisco-matic" Brush Action

*REG. U. S. PATENT OFF.

BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO., GRAND RAPIDS 2, MICH.

Cheyenne: Gentleman-gambler Dennis Morgan is out to get Jane Wyman's bandit-husband.

knows what the bandit looks like, but his hold-ups have been making quite a dent in the company's profits.

Jim takes the stagecoach from Laramie to Cheyenne, and sure enough, it's held up en route. This time it's Sundance's gang of desperadoes, but when they get the money box open, they find it's empty except for a bit of doggerel signed, "The Poet."

There are two girls on the coach with Jim. One is a dance-hall hostess, Emily (Janis Paige), and the other is Ann (Jane Wyman), whose past, present and future all seem rather mysterious.

That night, at a local gambling spot, Jim sees two of the men who held up the coach. He follows them and is led straight to the Sundance Kid himself. Jim bluffs, telling them that he is "The Poet." Sundance believes him and says, "Your wife is in the next room. She brought us your message." The "wife" is Ann, and to Jim's surprise, she doesn't deny that he's her husband.

He takes her home, and she tells him she'll make a deal with him if he'll split the reward with her. She says he can capture her husband in South Fork the next night. Instead, Jim is led into a trap and has to shoot his way out, killing Sundance. The tempo accelerates as Jim closes in on "The Poet," who has made the mistake of underestimating both his wife and his opponent.

Arthur Kennedy makes Sundance the real menace of the picture.—War.

COPACABANA

You know what a gay spot the New York Copacabana is. Full of beautiful girls, and columnists like Louis Sobol, Walter Winchell and Abel Green. Well, they're all in the picture, too. So is Carmen Miranda, Andy Russell and Gloria Jean, with Groucho Marx leading off this mad dance through the world of neon lights and champagne.

As Lionel Devereaux, Groucho plays the agent of Carmen Novarro (Carmen Miranda). They were formerly an acting team, but that led only to foodless meals. So Lionel decides to book Carmen solo into the Copacabana. If he can. Chewing his usual big, black cigar, he crashes the office of Steve Hunt (Steve Cochran), the Copa's owner. "This gorgeous little girl," he says, waving the cigar, "is just in from Brazil. She's terrific!" Carmen does a number called "Tico Tico," and Steve admits she's terrific. In fact, he hires her.

"Got any more clients I can use?" he asks Lionel. Of course Lionel hasn't any more clients, but that would be awkward to admit. So he hastily makes one up. Mademoiselle Fifi. When Steve insists on auditioning her, Lionel's in a spot. But he finally fixes Carmen up with a blonde wig, an Arab costume and a black half-mask. He presents her proudly. "Mademoiselle Fifi from Morocco. Only her husband may see her without the mask—and she hasn't any husband." Steve signs her, too!

So here's poor Carmen, doing a double shift in the new show, and switching from Portuguese to French so fast she's practically speaking English. Things get tougher when Steve decides he's in love with her instead of his pretty secretary, Anne (Gloria Jean). He's going to get that mask off if he has to marry her to do it! As a result, Lionel is arrested for murder.

You'll want to see this pot-pourri of nonsense.—U.A.

MOSS ROSE

Victor Mature and Peggy Cummins are an exciting combination in this smoothly eerie tale of London in 1905. It will remind you a bit of The Lodger. It begins in the chorus dressing room of a third-rate musical show. Pert Belle Adair (Peggy Cummins) has a date after the show with George (Patrick O'Moore), a bookie. She's a little envious of Daisy (Margo Woode), a sultry beauty. Daisy's date is no bookie; he's a "proper toff," as the girls put it. But none of them ever had more than a glimpse of him.

On this particular night, Belle hears his voice as he greets Daisy. "A lovely, educated voice it was," she tells George, who is unimpressed. Belle wants to become a real lady, but George wishes she'd relax—preferably in his arms—and be herself.

Next morning Belle sees "the toff" coming out of Daisy's room. When she goes in, she finds Daisy has been strangled. The police are called, and Scotland Yard sends over Inspector Clinner (Vincent Price). Clinner is a tall, leisurely man, who seems quite casual but misses nothing. The only clue to the murderer is a Bible, with a moss rose pressed inside it.

Belle's sharp cockney wits help her to locate "the toff." He is Michael Drego (Victor Mature). She follows him to his hotel and tries a spot of blackmail. It

(Continued on page 124)

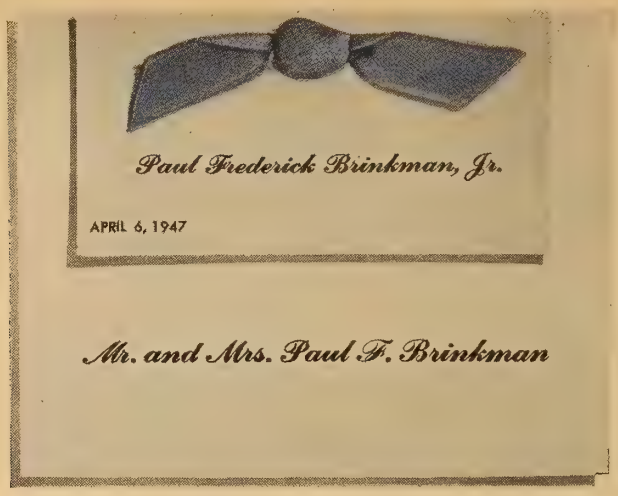
Moss Rose: Peggy Cummins asks murder-suspect Vic Mature to teach her to be a lady.



Jeanne Crain can't understand that special glow she feels inside her. After all, women have babies every day. This one must be different!

BY JANE WILKIE

First Born!

■ It was sort of a dream world for Jeanne. She realized vaguely that they were wheeling her down the hospital corridor. She couldn't see very clearly, because the anaesthetic hadn't yet worn off, but she was dimly conscious of passing white-coated figures as she progressed along the hall.

Then she was in bed in her own room, and alone for a few minutes before the phone rang. It must be Paul, she thought. It had to be Paul; they had given orders to put no one else through on the phone. With an effort, she reached toward the table and took the receiver off the hook. Her voice seemed far away, as though it came from another room.

"Hello?" she said.

"This is Sam Adams," said a man's voice. "I'm a reporter, and I wonder if you could help me. I heard that Jeanne Crain just had a baby. Is that true?"

Jeanne remembered then, and a sleepy smile touched her lips.

"Yes," she said.

"Is it a boy or a girl?"

"It's a boy."

"Can you tell me how much it weighed?"

"Seven pounds (Continued on page 116)

The stork caught the Brinkmans in the midst of house-building. Jeanne's taking care of Paul, Jr., herself—until she starts Chicken Every Sunday.

A Great Star Of Today Brings You The Life, Loves and Thrills Of A Great Star Of Yesterday...As Betty Hutton Portrays The Adventures–On Screen and Off– Of Pearl White, Beloved "Queen Of The Serials"!

Paramount Presents

"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"

in TECHNICOLOR

Starring

Betty Hutton
John Lund

The spectacular life story of a star who risked a thousand deaths in chapter after chapter of the serial that helped make movies famous. Then sang and danced her way into the hearts of 50 million Frenchmen...only to find that love was the most perilous adventure of them all!

with

BILLY DE WOLFE
William Demarest
Constance Collier
Frank Faylen

Directed by George Marshall

Screen Play by P. J. Wolfson and Frank Butler

VIRGINIA MAYO discovers New Improved Drene

At Last! The New Miracle Shampoo that lets your hair Shine like the Stars!

New! Leaves your hair dazzling as the stars! Take Miss Mayo's advice. Discover how new improved Drene's richer, creamier lather brings out all the glorious brilliance now hidden by dulling soap film!

New! Never leaves hair dried out! Proved superior in tests by hundreds of women. New improved Drene does not dry out hair. Instead, its richer, mellower lather actually leaves your hair softer, smoother, far easier to set, curl, and arrange right after shampooing.

New! See and feel the difference, instantly, in the way new Drene lathers . . . the way it brings out all the beauty of your hair! Ask for new Drene today.

Now! For All Types of Hair
New improved Drene is at your dealer's now in the familiar blue-and-yellow package.

VIRGINIA MAYO
Co-starring in Samuel Goldwyn's Technicolor Comedy,
"THE SECRET LIFE OF WALTER MITTY"

Miss Mayo says: "Thanks to new Drene, my hair is now so full of highlights it actually shines"

Never before DRENE could any shampoo perform ALL of these Beauty Miracles

- ★ Reveals ALL the lustre in your hair
- ★ Does not dry out hair
- ★ Leaves hair far easier to manage
- ★ Marvelous hair conditioning action
- ★ Luxurious instant lather
- ★ Removes unsightly dandruff
- ★ No acid after-rinses needed
- ★ Flower-fresh fragrance

IF YOU'VE WONDERED...

VAN AND EVIE DISCUSS THEIR AMAZING MARRIAGE WITH FLORABEL MUIR

■ In case you've been wondering how the Van Johnson-Evie Wynn marriage is coming along, I can report that, from where I sat by the swimming pool at their charming home watching these two healthy young people sitting in the sun after a gay gambol in the water, their wedded life seems to be definitely all right.

Van had been playing for an hour with a toy diving submarine someone had given Evie's six-year-old son. The kid hasn't had a chance at it yet. Van told me: "I guess when you see me playing with this thing, you wonder, Florabel, why I don't grow up." I told him it would suit me fine if he never did.

Then I asked him to go away and play tennis while I found out from Evie how it felt to be Mrs. Van Johnson. He said he'd leave if I promised to tell him what she said. He can read it here with pride because what she thinks of him ought to set him up as the number one husband of America.

"I never really think of Van as a big important motion picture actor," Evie told me. "There are a lot of picture actors in Hollywood you wouldn't want to be married to. But Van isn't one of them. He is really the kindest, most considerate (Continued on page 92)

■ Esther Williams is a home gal. When her cute guy, Ben Gage, dangled vacation folders before her eyes, she yawned at them and murmured, "Sunshine, a pool and exquisite cuisine we've got, so let's stay home." Then she spied some literature from the Arrowhead Springs Hotel. The expressive eyebrows shot up. The long slim fingers turned pages frantically. "This is different," she said, fascinated by the descriptions of the mineral spring baths. "What are we waiting for?"

They made reservations, packed bags and two hours later they were there. (It's sixty-five miles east of Los Angeles.) They took one look and decided that all it needed was St. Peter to make you know you were in heaven. No folders could possibly prepare you for the place. It is really a plush spot, surrounded by palm trees and set against a backdrop of hills and mountains. As the bellboy led them past wonderful Dorothy Draper-decorated rooms to their own lush quarters, Ben stage-whispered to Mrs. Ben, "Home was never like this."

It never was. Imagine a spot with dinner-dancing to the (Continued on next page)

Maybe it's the heat that has Esther Williams calmly submerging husband Ben Gage in Arrowhead Springs Hotel pool. The palm-ringed swimmin' hole is always 80 degrees!

Ben, an expert, taught Esther to play golf at Arrowhead. She encouraged his shots with, "Hit a good one, Pop;" then beamed at his 250-yd. drives as if they were her own.

LUSH, LAVISH, BUDGET-BUSTIN'—THAT WAS ESTHER AND BEN GAGE'S DREAM VACATION AT ARROWHEAD, WHERE EVEN THE MINERAL SPRINGS SPRAY GLAMOR—AT 40 BUCKS A THROW!

modern screen
goes to arrowhead springs

After the mineral bath, mud bath, steam cave and other assorted ablutions, Es was ready for a stiff massage.

Bingo was a nightly feature—with Ben playing no less than 8 cards at once. Esther found winning easier with one.

Reminiscent of her new picture, Fiesta, was this peasant skirt and blouse, which Esther wore to romp in the grassy slopes surrounding their hotel. When going got tough, Ben carried her back to their hotel.

arrowhead springs

(Continued from preceding page) tune of top-flight bands six nights a week, with swimming, golf, ping pong and badminton right in your back yard. A place where tennis courts are floodlighted after dark; where sixty-five miles of old Indian trails beckon to the horseback rider; and ski-ing on sun-drenched slopes is less than an hour away. All this in addition to the main event—the springs. (There are four, including The Pen-Yugal Springs, at 202°, the hottest in the world.)

Ben was less enthusiastic about these than Esther. She was mad for 'em, tried them all—including one for rheumatism, joint trouble, arthritis, neuritis, etc., none of which she has, of course. They (Continued on page 106)

Before rushing back to his spot on the Joan Davis show, Ben challenged his wife to one last knock-down fight to decide the badminton champion of the Gage family.

Es, who's too young and healthy to need 'em, insisted on trying all the baths, including the lush pine needle-CO_2 bubble bath at $3.50 per.

If Ty had his way, would he marry Lana? Here is a frank and unusual interview with the only man who knows all the facts— Ty Power himself!

if Ty had his way . . .

Hedda Hopper, who calls the Power-Turner romance "the real thing," visits Ty's Captain From Castile set.

by hedda hopper

■ If Tyrone Power had his divorce from Annabella today, he'd marry Lana Turner tomorrow. That's the way Hollywood's number one star romance stacks up, in my considered opinion. I've never seen a pair of people more in love.

I called Ty as soon as he came back to Hollywood from Mexico, where Lana had flown to visit him twice.

"I'm not trying to muscle in on young love or anything," I kidded Ty, "but how about a date with a middle-aged lady who thinks you're pretty cute—meaning me? I'm curious as a cat about a lot of things—so come over and see me, and I won't breathe a word to Lana."

Ty laughed. "If you didn't breathe a word," he cracked, "you wouldn't breathe at all. I know you. Don't kid me!"

"You're absolutely right," I admitted. "But how about it anyway? I promise not to tell anyone—except maybe a couple of million people who read MODERN SCREEN."

When Ty stepped inside my doorway, it was hard to believe that this was the same grim guy I'd seen right after he'd split up with Annabella, his wife. Drawn, pale, nervous, he was then, with furrows between his eyes like hatchet marks.

This time Ty was still mighty serious-looking—but the beaten-up look had vanished. He seemed at least five years younger, gayer, handsomer, and that old jolly, interested sparkle was right back in his handsome black eyes. I came out with the only possible question.

"Young man," said I, "just (Continued on page 89)

Dixie from Dixie

Elementary, Dr. Watson! Nigel Bruce, famed Dr. Watson of screen and radio, lines up a putt. The guys—Bruce, Rex Harrison, Clark and David Niven—vacationed at Del Monte Lodge, went fishing or golfing daily.

When Hollywood's biggest star sends flowers to a newcomer, that's a friendly touch. But when he signs the card, "From your leading man," that's the Gable touch!

by deborah kerr

the Gable touch

watched a picture he had made several years ago, one of his favorites, It Happened One Night, I had to pinch myself to realize that I was seeing it again, in Clark Gable's own house in Hollywood.

I'm sure that never in a million years would I have dreamed of such a fantastic future the first time I saw It Happened One Night. At the time I had only vague dreams (Continued on page 122)

Jane thought an actress could go far on a pair of shapely legs and false lashes. But acting—she found—is born out of living. And living means being yourself:

By Ida Zeitlin

jane wyman life story

■ Jane was sleeping late that morning. Or so she thought, till the voice of Reagan broke through.

"This is it, baby—"

He spread the papers under her nose. Academy Award Nominations—Best Actress Division—Jane Wyman one of the five for her performance in The Yearling.

She drew a long breath and looked up. What could you say? Nothing. Ronnie stooped to kiss her. She knew right along she wouldn't get the Oscar. Said so then and stuck to it. Livvy was her candidate, Livvy had it coming. Of that she was so dead certain that she sat through the crucial moment on Academy Night without a quiver in her stomach.

If she never gets an Oscar, that'll be fine with Jane. She's made her point. Her point is, she's an actress. In M-G-M's Yearling, Sidney Franklin and Clarence Brown gave her her chance, and now she's come through. Picked among the top five. That's good (Continued on page 66)

If you were big enough for movies in 1937, you'll remember Jane Wyman's tiny part in The King and The Chorus Girl, starring Joan Blondell. Joan now says that was the pic she most enjoyed making.

Posing with cubs was—and still is—standard procedure for young starlets, and these two Warner babies were no exception. That's Jane at left, and the other ingenue? It's glamorous Lana Turner!

Ronald Reagan was just another hopeful at the studio when he caught Jane's eye. Pictured here at their wedding, Jane admits she "chased him till he stopped running, got his breath, and proposed."

For Maureen, born in 1942, Jane started collecting linen and silver, all monogrammed with "M." If the baby due in October is a girl, her name will begin with "M" also, in order to divide the loot!

What with her dancing class taking up so much time, Maureen hardly had time for her fifth birthday party. Jane believes in children playing with other small fry, so Maureen and her brother attend nursery school.

The star of Stallion Road [illegible] Town and Cheyenne (Mr[illegible] fun. If the new baby's [illegible] Reagan) and the star of Magic [illegible]aying with Maureen and Michael named after his pa—Ronnie.

No wonder Vivien Leigh and Larry Olivier did such a good job in Romeo and Juliet; they're always rehearsing and improving their art.

■ I've seen Laurence Olivier play Richard the Third, King Lear and Oedipus, which critics have labelled the finest acting of our times. But the most exciting performance I ever saw Larry give, took place in my own house one night when I watched him carve a roast goose.

It was during the war in England. I was stationed with my family near Windsor, about ten miles from Denham, where Larry and Viv lived while Larry produced his film masterpiece, Henry V.

The goose was pure manna from Heaven. It arrived one day as a gift from relatives in Scotland. I immediately invited the Oliviers to dinner—but unfortunately I didn't stop there. In no time, I had twenty eager acceptances for a feast. When my wife took the goose from the oven, I almost fainted. It had shrunken sadly. Four hungry people, I realized, could murder that bird with ease. Larry saw the dismay on my face.

"What's the matter, Old Boy?" he asked calmly. I explained.

"Let me carve," suggested Larry. I handed him the knife and in no time the bones were sliced neatly bare and twenty plates were heaping with goose. I have no idea how he did it. But if there's been a greater commissary miracle since Moses I don't know what it is!

Another time, I saw Larry conquer another awkward situation—with a different sort of bird—by sheer force of personality and talent.

It was during the war, too, down at Aldershot, where thousands of British soldiers trained. One night he took a dramatic company to the stronghold of the British Tommy. Larry was a Navy man and so were his players. To make matters worse, they were dressed as British soldiers. He was greeted with the English version of a Bronx cheer, and believe me, a "bird" is just as loud and devastating (Continued on page 106)

Larry and Viv

SO YOU THINK THE BRITISH ARE RESERVED? THEN DON'T DISCUSS THE OLIVIERS WITH DAVID NIVEN—OR YOU'LL BE DISILLUSIONED!

▼ The Olivier home in Chelsea has a small office where Larry and his secretary attend to business. He's inclined to be careless about money.

▼ While Larry was in England making Henry V he and David Niven became fast friends. The two families got together and pooled food rations.

◀ When Larry got out of the Navy, Vivien complained about his ruddy appearance. "Do get pale and thin again," she teased. "Like a real actor!"

by David Niven

The battle of the lipstick was a clear victory for Elizabeth, but Mrs. Taylor is confident she'll win the war of the strapless evening gown—if her strength holds out!

Bringing up Elizabeth

Elizabeth's best friend, Anne Westmore (of the famous Westmore makeup family) is a frequent overnight visitor. They'll lie awake for hours planning the oriental trips they'll take when they're all grown up.

It's not unusual for the Taylors to entertain famous artists at dinner, for Liz's dad is director of the Francis Taylor Galleries. Here, Mané-Katz, noted French painter, gives Elizabeth a few priceless hints.

Her roles in Life With Father and Cynthia completed, Liz is permitted to hold open house for her friends Saturday nights. Mom and Dad do the barbecue-ing—and the butcher and baker do a land-office business!

■ The mother of one of Elizabeth's friends said something to me that I thought was very funny.

"I wish they'd invent a gadget," she said, "that would keep teen-age daughters hibernating till they're past teen-age."

Any mother of a girl in her teens will know what she meant. But that's only one side of the medal. To my mind, children need as much patience with their parents as the other way round. No matter how hard you try to stay young, you do forget. In my own case, I ride and swim and try to do all the things Elizabeth does, short of going kittenish on her. With some misgivings, I even joined her ballet class.

But whatever you do, there's still a gap of twenty years—or more—to bridge. Entering into your daughter's activities helps, but not enough. Staying young in spirit helps more—trying to project memory and imagination back to when you were fifteen. I must say Elizabeth's very sweet about the whole thing. She's never called me old-fashioned, and I wear that possibly negative compliment like a feather in my cap.

One question, applying only to movie children, has been put to me so often that I'd like to deal with it first. How do you keep a child normal when, being in pictures, she gets more than her normal share of attention? Well, Elizabeth was ten when she made her first M-G-M picture, Lassie Come Home, and by the time you're ten your disposition's taken roots.

As a tiny girl, she was extremely shy. Howard, three years older, had beautiful blond, curly hair; Elizabeth's was dark and straight. In England, where we lived for the first seven years of her life, people would stop on the street to admire Howard. "What a pity," they'd say to the nurse, "that she's not the boy and he the girl." She grew up, thinking, "Too bad about me . . ."

To overcome this shyness, we sent her to dancing class, but what helped her most was learning to sing.

We had just moved to the Pacific Palisades, and didn't have a (Continued on page 93)

by Mrs. Francis Taylor

you're all wrong about Mature!

Writer Carl Schroeder has known Vic for years. In fact, he was sitting at his desk (feet up, just like this) the day Victor barged into his office unannounced, demanding, "Get me in pictures!"

With Brian Donlevy and director Henry Hathaway, Victor discusses the Kiss Of Death script. Incidentally, author Fred Othman, in his new book, "Man On The Half-Shell," devotes a chapter to Mature.

■ I remember it like yesterday.

My office was a hole in the wall up over a pet shop on Hollywood Boulevard. A nice, quiet place. An editor could think there.

I was an editor, and quite a thinker. On a particular Thursday I was thinking that if I went out to Lakeside Country Club and put in a little work on my irons, I could straighten out that slice.

Then, without warning, all Hell broke loose.

Excuse the language. That is exactly what happened. Now I know that I will never cure the slice, and my life will never be quite the same.

The door to my office opened, and this guy walked in.

I went around behind my desk, put my feet in the top drawer, and snarled, "How did you get past my secretary?"

The tall, black-haired young man laughed.

"Easy. She was out in a dead faint," he said with a broad grin.

Without further banter, the fellow announced, "Look, Roscoe—I am a guy who wants to get into movies,

Vic, who's used to making his home in a tent, was forced to live in a swank New York hotel for the filming of Kiss Of Death. He relieved the stuffiness by reading the funnies on the carpeted floor.

Although it's said Vic will resume his romance with Rita Hayworth, he's been dating half a dozen New York girls. He took pretty Dorothy Bell (above, with Sherman Billingsley) to the Stork Club.

and my name's Vic Mature." He waited for an answer.

I told him that I didn't put people in movies, and besides anybody could pick a better name for an actor than Vic Mature.

"That's my real name," he said, "and I have it on good authority that if you'll put my picture in your magazine I will be a cinch to get a job acting."

I am a little guy. I resent characters who are six feet, four inches tall and think that everything comes easy. Something sadistic in my nature (Continued on page 70)

This story is for people who get a knowing look when they hear the name

Mature. If you're one of them, watch out! It may wipe the leer clean off your face!

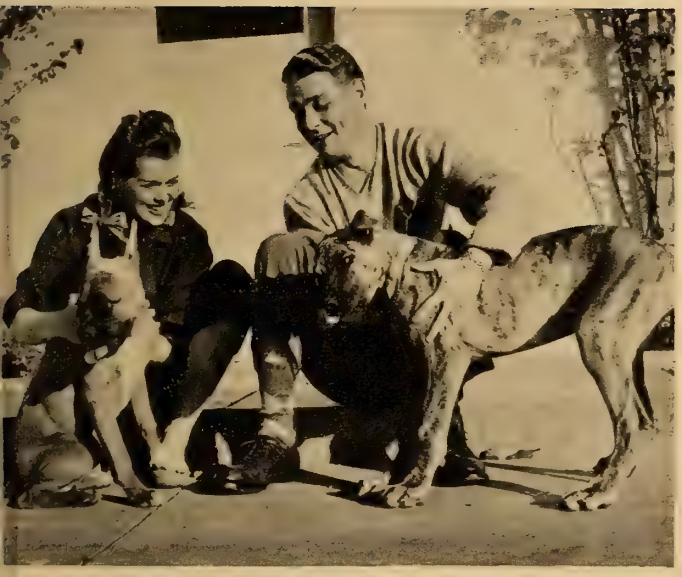
By CARL SCHROEDER

war baby



Neighbors Janis Paige and Michael North are mutually interested in the romance of her Boxer and his Great Dane. Neighbors at Warners, too, Jan is making Wallflower; while he's in The Unsuspected.

THE BOYS AT THE CANTEEN WANTED JIVE AND GINNY SIMMS. WHAT THEY GOT WAS OPERA AND SOME UNKNOWN CANARY. AND THAT WAS JANIS PAIGE'S INTRODUCTION TO SHOW BUSINESS!

By Jack Wade

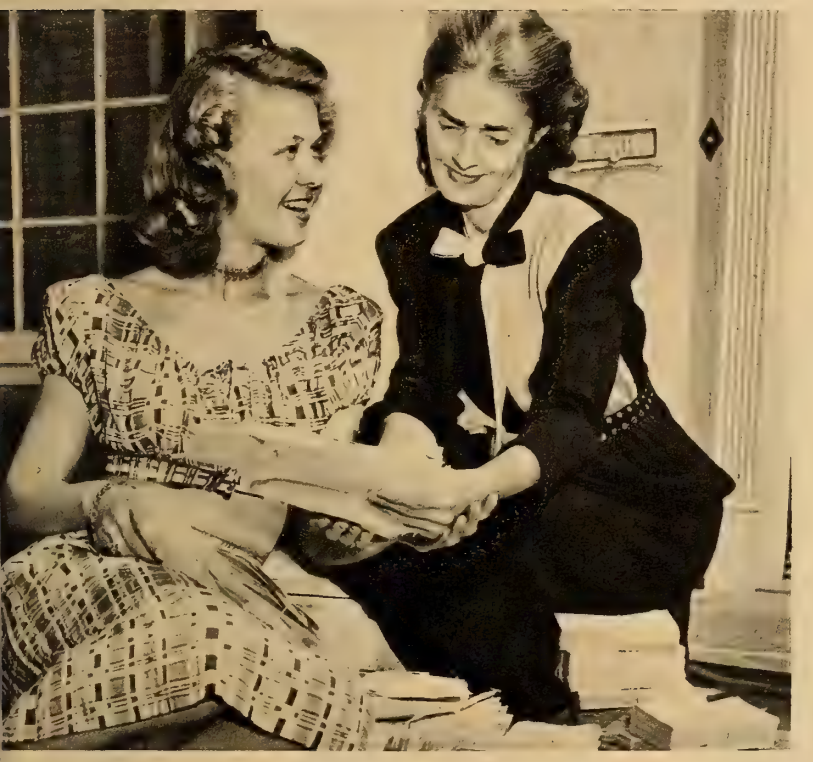
■ The doctor stared down at Janis Paige and shook his head. He thought, "What some of these young Hollywood stars will do for a career!" Because, before she'd fainted away in his office, Janis had gasped out a confession:

The last two days on The Time, the Place and the Girl, she'd come to work with a burning sore throat and had danced and sung both days in sheets of water, filming the "Rainy Night in Rio" scene. After which, she'd wobbled into his office with the worst strep throat he'd ever looked at—and promptly passed out, cold as a pickle!

Now Janis was in bed, semi-conscious, with a nurse and not too much chance to pull through. The streptococcus was in her blood stream. Glucose injections hadn't done enough good, nor 500,000 units of penicillin. She needed a blood transfusion, and that's why the doctor frowned. Only one in 5,000 were of her blood type. He'd ransacked Southern California for donors with no luck. In desperation, he called Warner Brothers, and in a few minutes the story crackled out over the radio. They had to put in an extra switchboard to handle the 3,000 calls that promptly peppered the studio. Luckily, a sailor on leave looked at his dog-tag when he heard the desperate appeal.

It's absolutely fittin' and proper that Janis Paige has GI blood (Continued on page 99)

A star in Billion-Dollar Baby and Carnival in Costa Rica, no wonder Vera-Ellen is swamped with mail. Fans and fan mail are crowding her and Mom out of their tiny apartment, so they're house-hunting.



OUT IN CINCINNATI, THERE'S A LITTLE RIVER, AND EVERY SPRING, IT TURNS INTO A WHIRLPOOL. ALSO FROM CINCINNATI IS A PINT-SIZED DANCER, VERA-ELLEN—WHO'S LIKE THAT ALL YEAR ROUND!

by Irene Greengard

TWINKLE TOES

■ Alma Rohe looked in at the door. Vera-Ellen was on her knees beside the bed, her flannel pajamas hanging loosely around her, her small, scrubbed face turned upward.

She was praying, but she didn't pray like other kids. Other kids asked for a brother, or a sister, or a tricycle. Vera-Ellen begged earnestly "—and please let me gain enough weight so I kin diet."

The thing about Vera-Ellen was that there seemed to be no possibility of a compromise between her tiny body and her huge zest.

For instance, her mother and father gave her piano lessons. They'd thought of it as a pastime, a pretty accomplishment.

They made her stop, after a while. They were afraid the piano would last longer than Vera-Ellen.

During her whole short life, her need to work has been almost as tangible as her work itself. (Continued on page 101)

▼ The Hotel Del Mar, 100 miles from Hollywood, was selected by Billy De Wolfe and Diana Lynn as ideal for Kirk Douglas' option party. Billy (in Perils of Pauline) was official host—because the party was his idea.

▼ To clinch the studio's lifting of Kirk's option (you'll see him next in I Walk Alone), the party-throwers (Betty Carey, Billy, MacDonald Carey and Diana L.) dipped Kirk, seat first, in the cold Pacific.

◀ Duel in the sand. Pistol-like device sets off toy plane. Kirk's wife, Diana, took advantage of Billy's bad aim: he'd shoot first, miss, and turn around to chase his plane. Then she'd aim, let him have it!

■ He made a nice dignified entrance, only he was standing on his hands.

Lindsay Durand, the pretty Paramount press agent, turned to Diana, the hand-stander's wife.

"It's okay," she said. "Paramount just lifted his option. And if you're real nice to me, I'll see if I can get his head examined, free."

Options, to the uninitiated, are those very important clauses at the end of a option party

AN "OPTION" IS THE BOSS' RIGHT TO RENEW A STAR'S CONTRACT. KIRK DOUGLAS CELEBRATED HIS MIRACLE-OF-THE-OPTION WITH A GALA BEACH PARTY—INVITED MS!

star's contract which give the studio the privilege of keeping him on the payroll or dropping him like a dog. Needless to say, when a studio does take up the option of a new star, there is much rejoicing and dancing in the streets.

Kirk Douglas catapulted to his feet, and leered at Diana. "How does it feel to be married to a handsome, sought-after movie star?"

"I don't know," she said. "I'll run out and ask Barbara Stanwyck."

Kirk considered that gravely. "She's in England."

"Okay," said Diana. "So don't wait up."

Then she kissed him.

"She's really proud," Kirk told Lindsay. "She's just being modern."

The telephone was ringing and Kirk finally answered it. It was Billy De Wolfe. (Continued on next page)

option party

"We're going to have a week-end party," he said. "You're as good an excuse as any. After all, it isn't every day that you have your option picked up."

Kirk, being a man of action, packed a bag, grabbed wife Diana, and met him. He—Billy—had Diana Lynn and the Macdonald Careys with him, and they were all heading for the Hotel Del Mar.

When they reached the hotel, everyone's behavior was exemplary. Except for Mr. Douglas.

The Del Mar has millions of old trees, the Pacific under its nose, and a breathtaking stretch of lawn.

Douglas proceeded to leap around like a drunken Nijinski. "It's like taking off G.I. shoes and running bare-footed," he howled.

Diana Douglas nudged Diana Lynn. "Let's walk on as though we weren't with him."

It was a lovely time. Charades, and bicycling, and aquaplaning, and fishing —Kirk caught a good-looking shoebox—and a Grunion run . . .

Grunion are fish eight inches long, and they come up on the beach at high tide to talk things over, and then they rush back in.

If you intend to catch a grunion, you have to do it with your bare hands, because the State of California doesn't allow nets or pails.

When it was over, De Wolfe sighed. "I hate fish, myself."

"They sensed that," Macdonald Carey said bitterly. "Why do you think our luck was so bad?"

Later on, there was a bonfire, and hot dogs, and after a couple of sentimental old songs, somebody held up a Pepsi and said, "I give you Kirk Douglas."

"Don't give me Kirk Douglas," said Billy. "I wouldn't have him as a gift."

Mrs. Douglas grinned, looking very young and pretty in the firelight, under the stars. "You can give him to me," she said softly. "He's my type."

In their own version of charades, the opposing teams enact famous titles. Billy, D. Lynn, and Kirk (below) are baffling the others with The Bartered (Battered?) Bride. Diana plainly shows she prefers her role in Variety Girl.

This is Suddenly It's Spring, with Diana Douglas, Macdonald and Betty Carey, though Billy insisted Mac was enacting his new film, Dream Girl. The junket, incidentally, was Dutch treat, with Douglas' expenses shared by the rest.

Junie doesn't want Richard to fly, but he's taking off soon for Havana, for final scenes of Assigned To Treasury. J.'s finished High Barbaree; her next is Good News—in color!

Junie's a caution,

says Richard admiringly.

But what other wife makes meat balls that bounce and drives holes in the golf course?

BY CHRISTOPHER KANE

secretly, he Loves her

■ He stood in the doorway, and watched her rolling on the floor.

"If I may be so bold as to point it out," he said, "you'll never gather any moss that way."

"Moss!" she said, sitting up straight, and dusting herself off. "Richard! I'm trying to train the dogs."

He shook his head. "I've never understood why people wanted dogs to roll on the floor in the first place."

"Oh, you'd just have uncouth dogs," June said scornfully, and went back to training the heck out of the two French poodles.

One's named Pat, and he's silver; one's named Casey, and she's black, and with June, it's like having children. She keeps discovering new and wonderful things about them; she respects their intelligence, and worries about their security.

Dick came home for dinner one night, and she met him in a state of hysteria.

"Richard!" she shrieked. "Pat can spell, Richard!"

"What does he want to spell Richard for?" asked her husband, happy as if he were bright.

"Oh, Richard," she cried impatiently.

He gave in. "Okay, tell me all about it."

She told him all about it.

June had been talking to Tehru, the housekeeper. "I don't think we'd better (Continued on page 87)

Other little girls went to market—the movie market. But this little Peggy Cummins stayed home —in England—and the movie makers came to her!

this little Peggy...

Victor Mature shared basket luncheons with Peggy both on and off the set, while working in Moss Rose.

Director Ratoff taught Peggy American slang—with a Russian accent! Fresh from The Late George Apley set, Peg still had her Boston "a."

by gregory ratoff

■ Thirteen years I am with Darryl Zanuck, and always he uses adjectives. There was the time when he saw Tyrone Power, and he said, "That will be my big star." But in England, he saw a little girl, Peggy Cummins, and this time he uses the biggest adjective of all.

As I say, for thirteen years I listen to Mr. Zanuck being enthusiastic about personalities, and usually he is right.

Only I remember that I can hardly believe what he reports about Peggy Cummins. Since she is seven years old, she acts, he tells me. She studies ballet; she plays Shakespeare. Now she is twenty, and she weighs ninety-eight pounds, and besides, she is beautiful.

And he is going to make her Amber.

For six weeks they shoot Forever Amber and suddenly production stops. The script is not right yet, and Peggy Cummins looks too young for such a worldly role, and Amber has to be re-shot.

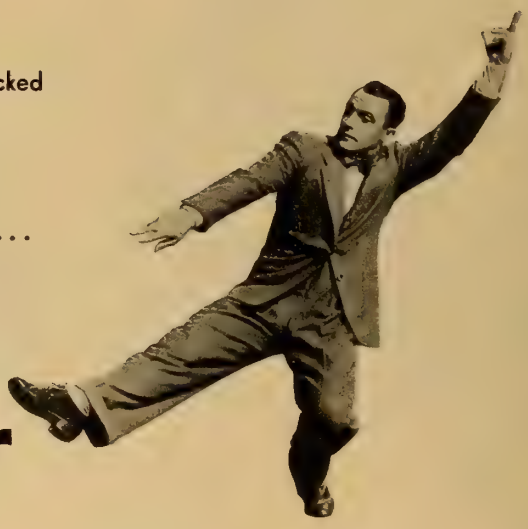
But Mr. Zanuck still believes in the screen future of Miss Peggy Cummins.

This he proves when he puts Peggy into the feminine lead in The Late George Apley, and when the picture is previewed in (Continued on page 121)

The Pied Piper of legend had an irresistible way with children. But even he could have picked up a whimsical trick or two from Gene Kelly . . .

By ROSEMARY LAYNG

pied piper



■ The windows in the big, bare room were open, and a dozen tousled heads peered through. "Yah! Yah!" came the small-boy chant. "Sissies. Sissies." Gene Kelly left his dancing class for a minute and stood in front of one of the windows. His hands were in his pockets and he rocked back on his heels casually, and no one could have known that his heart was beating like mad.

"Hi, kids," he said. You know how nice and easy his voice is. "Say, how about dropping over to the gym next Friday. I'd like to shoot some baskets before class. Any of you guys any good?" There was a sprinkle of "Yah's," and then a modest murmur of "Gee-no's," and after that the heads vanished.

Gene went back to his group of be-rib-boned, be-laced little girls and reluctant (Continued on page 97)

Solarex

SCIENTIFIC SUN GLASSES

Keep Your Eyes Bright as the Stars

SUSAN HAYWARD

Co-starring in the Walter Wanger Production

"The Lost Moment"

A Universal-International Release

SOLAREX THE ORIGINAL TWILIGHT COLOR

Changes Bright Sunlight Into Soft Restful Twilight

AT LEAST 94% OF THE SUN'S

Irritating Infra-red (heat) Rays and Ultra-Violet (sunburn) Rays are Filtered Out When You Wear Solarex

Bachmann Bros., Inc., 1400-38 E. Erie Ave., Phila. 24

Manufacturers of PLASTIC PRODUCTS Established 1833

by pandro s. BERMAN
as told to frank nugent

■ Something I ought to mention is that before writing this story I had my secretary dig through the magazine files at the public library to see whether any other Hollywood producers had been writing about stars they had worked with and, if so, what line they took. Not that I wanted to be a copy-cat, you understand! It's just that in this business you learn to keep an eye on the opposition.

My secretary didn't find many of these articles, but the ones she did locate were very revealing. In each case, the producer spent the first half of the article praising his star to the skies and the second half in subtly impressing the reader with the notion that the actress wouldn't have climbed higher than a bean-hill without his taking her by the lily-white hand and guiding her every step of the way.

Well, I'm different and so is Kate Hepburn.

Kate today is probably as high on the Hollywood ladder as she ever has been. She can have pretty (Continued on page 119)

the HEPBURN story

Being Katharine Hepburn, she couldn't show her real feelings. So she stuck out her tongue and sassed the whole world—when all she really wanted was to run away.

Broadcasting with Cary Grant, Kate asked if he'd mind her wearing slacks. Cary said yes, disappeared into an office, and came out wearing a wide grin—and a borrowed skirt!

Bill Grady, M-G-M executive and Edward Arnold enjoy conversation with Katharine Hepburn (now in Song Of Love) because she "thinks straight, and argues her point to a logical ending without dragging in personalities."

Capable of seeing herself objectively, Katharine takes advice gladly, especially from producer Berman. If she's not careful, she tends to overdo some facial expressions.

Spoiled kids are a dime a dozen. But a spoiled daddy, who weighs his Dena every hour and gets mad when she's untidy in the diaper department—that's Danny Kaye!

by KAAREN PIECK

In the pink

■ Dena is the best thing Sylvia and Danny Kaye ever collaborated on. She's their tiny, blue-eyed, red-headed daughter with fantastically long fingers and feet, exactly like her father's, and lungs just like her father's, from all indications.

She's a New Yorker—Park Avenue, instead of Bradford Street, Brooklyn, which was Danny's and Sylvia's old beat—because Sylvia's doctor was in New York, and Sylvia came East from Hollywood, and lived in New York until the baby was born.

Luckily, Danny wasn't with her all the time. Danny was impossible. He'd clutch her arm, when they were crossing the street. "Take it easy; go slowly." (Continued on page 111)

Dena Kaye couldn't possibly have seen her daddy in The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, but she's captured his famous facial expression and gestures like a trouper!

Sylvia and George Burns, at the Tony Martin Party in the Beverly Hills Hotel, kept stuffing Danny's mouth with weiners—to stop his bragging about talented Dena.

Cutex (wonderful new, improved Cutex) brings you beautiful new bowl-him-over "Applecart"

So spicy, so saucy, such a flattering red it's wicked!

"Applecart"—the bright young thing to wear with your sun-gold tan! You'll love the provocative new shade, "Pippin," too—dark and delightfully attractive.

And the beauty of it is—all the new Cutex polishes are so wonderfully well behaved.

New stay-on and-on-and-on! Improved Cutex can really take it—thanks to a highly talented ingredient found only in the new Cutex. This wonder ingredient defies chipping and peeling.

New drying speed! Try new Cutex on one hand, your old-time polish on the other, and clock-watch them. You'll be amazed—new Cutex dries so fast!

"Polished performance?"—now, more than ever, you get it with Cutex. Northam Warren, New York.

NEW! NOW! LUSCIOUS CUTEX LIPSTICKS!

Yes, Cutex, the most popular name in nail beauty, now brings you heavenly new lip beauty!

Creamy-smooth, alluringly lovely lipsticks in shades that match or harmonize with your new Cutex nails. Only 49¢, at your favorite cosmetic counter.

Are you sure of your loveliness—sure the deodorant you now use gives you complete protection 24 hours of every day? Be sure—switch today to safe, new Odorono Cream.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours

Wonderful, new wartime discovery gives more effective protection than any deodorant known.

New Odorono Cream not only protects your daintiness a full 24 hours, with the most effective perspiration-stopper known, but . . .

It gives you the exclusive extra protection of HALGENE . . . the new wonder ingredient that checks perspiration odor.

Just think! One application of new Odorono Cream in the morning keeps you dainty—all day and night.

It does not irritate. So safe and gentle—can be used after shaving.

Stays soft and smooth down to the last dab. Never gritty. (Even if you leave the cap off for weeks.)

Greaseless, stainless, vanishing. Odorono leaves no sticky film. Protects dresses from perspiration stain and odor.

More economical! Odorono gives 21 more applications from a 39¢ jar than other leading brands. Savings on 10¢ and 59¢ sizes, too. (Odorono comes in liquid form, also.)

24-hour protection with Odorono Cream

(Continued from page 40)

enough for Jane Wyman. Her point is proven.

Without an Oscar, there were still plenty of thrills. The night Franklin ran the first rough cut for the Reagans, the Pecks, the Jarmans and Clarence Brown. Came the fadeout, and not a word out of any of 'em. Ronnie sat mum, Greta Peck sat mum, so did Jody's parents. "Will somebody," pleaded Brown at last, "kindly say something?"

Ronnie blinked and came to. "There's nothing to say. I can't figure if I've just been to church or ought to go there—"

The night of the premiere was world-shaking. Jane was working in Magic Town with Jimmy Stewart. Billy Wellman, the director, let her go home early. They had Milo Anderson and Erving Kaplan to dinner, and Erving brought her a wonderful gold locket, with Jane as Ma Baxter on one side, as herself on the other.

After dinner, there was the grand march to the door of Carthay Circle, where she'd gone to so many preems and was finally going to one of her own. The applause. The compliments. The party at Ciro's. She loved it all. She also loved the kidding next day on the Magic Town set, when Jimmy, Wellman and the others went down on their knees to her, bowing like mandarins. And the huge sign on her dressing-room door: THE QUEEN—MERRY CHRISTMAS AND HAPPY YEARLING. And Wellman snapping at her whenever she blew a line: "You stinkin' deerkiller, you—!"

salute to ma baxter . . .

But what gave her the deepest satisfaction was something she heard through Ronnie. On his way home from Warner's one day, he picked up a caddy waiting for a hitch. The youngster eyed him. "You're Ronald Reagan, aren't you? Say, I go to the government dramatic school for GI's, and they sent us three times to study your wife's performance in The Yearling. Don't think I'm just saying this," he continued earnestly, "but I could go twenty times and learn something new. That's acting."

As far back as memory goes, Jane had charted her course for independence. Most kids look forward to stepping out on their own, but with her it was a passion.

Her brother once told her a thing she never forgot. "If you study hard, you'll get knowledge. With knowledge, comes wisdom. With wisdom, you can stand on your own two feet." And that became the goal of Janie's existence.

Meantime, life went smoothly enough in St. Joe. Summers, you'd hunt turtles through little caves by the river, and gorge on those wonderful things called paw-paws—a cross between bananas and passion fruit. Winters, you'd build snowmen and play chase-the-fox. Then at Christmas time there'd be a trip to the orphanage, Mother carrying baskets of goodies, Jane her last year's toys that were just-like-new. Maureen does the same in California today.

Though Jane and her mother could hardly be called pals, there was something else they always did together. On Saturday afternoons they'd lunch downtown and take in a play at the Lyceum Theater. This led to a minor stock company in the stable behind the house where Dad kept his horses. She never thought of herself as a future Duse, though, but clung to just one dream—the dream of standing on her own two feet.

When her father died, they moved to Los Angeles, where Jane's sister had already set up a small law office. Jane's day consisted of lessons. Piano and dancing she'd always taken—the latter from LeRoy Prinz's father, who ran a school in St. Joe. Though by now their means were limited, her mother insisted that Jane take dramatic lessons, too—not with the idea of stage or movies, but simply because she thought they'd be good for her.

The Jane of those days was a plain little high-school kid, whose long brown hair went round her head in two braids, whose clothes had no oomph, who went straight home from school every day. At the end of her junior year, love, the miracle-worker changed all this . . .

There was a boy every girl in the school had her eye on. Let's call him Pete. He was a senior, one year ahead of Jane. She thought him divine.

On his graduation day, she stood outside the building with a couple of girls, when HE came up.

He looked straight at Jane. "Could I see you a minute? There's something I'd like to tell you."

They wandered through the lanes around school. Pete said, "I've been noticing you. You've got such big brown eyes. But I thought you were snooty till a fellow in your class said I had you all wrong."

Before they parted, he'd given her his fraternity pin.

young love's dream . . .

For two years it was an idyl. Their names are still carved on a tree in the school grounds. Pete started his college course in Los Angeles. Jane finished high school and took one year of college. As classes let out, he'd come by and pick her up. They couldn't afford night clubs or restaurants, but maybe once a week they'd climb into his jalopy and drive to Santa Barbara, making plans for their home.

The home never got beyond paper. At the end of two years, Pete changed to an out-of-town college. For a while they wrote—every day, every other day, once a week. Then the letters stopped . . .

Jane can't imagine being married to anyone but Ronnie. But until she met Ronnie, Pete was the only boy in the world.

What helped her get over him was her first job.

"How about taking me on as office girl?" she asked her sister.

"Jane, I couldn't pay you to empty the waste-paper basket. But I'll keep my ears open."

A few days later she phoned. "How about working at Manning's Coffee Shop?"

They started her in the pie department, but the pies had to be cut into even hunks, a knack Jane couldn't master. At the end of six weeks the boss laid her off.

"I'm sorry, Miss Wyman, but we've got too many girls and you've had the least experience."

Jane grinned. "I'll go quietly. You've been darn nice to keep me this long."

A couple of weeks after Manning's gave her the gate, she ran into a girl she'd gone to school with. It seemed this girl was dancing in a Goldwyn musical.

"They're crying for hoofers, Jane. If you can do a timestep, you're in."

She was in, by the skin of her teeth, and one dancing job led to another. She wasn't flooded with calls exactly, but at $66 a week when you did work, and with apartments renting for $25 a month, you could manage if you watched your step. Jane managed.

This went on for a couple of years, in the course of which she met show people. One day she was lunching at Sardi's with Vince Barnett's wife. Bill Demarest, in the agency business then, with Small & Landau, came by to say hello to Mrs. Barnett and took a look at Jane.

"There's my card," he told her. "Look

—that Always-Fresh look says LOUISE ALLBRITTON, featured in the Universal-International Picture " THE EGG AND I "

"My beauty-glow cleansing

"Want skin captivating . . . for your close-ups? Beauty-cleanse my way . . . with Woodbury Cold Cream! It's different . . . so clean-cleansing make-up whisks off . . . and skin's beauty-clean." Four rich oils in Woodbury—deep-cleansing oils that free skin of powder, rouge, grime. Try Woodbury . . . for that "Always-Fresh" look!

Luscious Louise dines with husband. "First after work, my date with Woodbury . . . to cream away that worn dry look. Instantly, skin's fresh . . . velvety!" Thank Woodbury's rich softening oils! Girls . . . to soften skin lovely-smooth . . . it's Woodbury Cold Cream!

—with Woodbury Cold Cream"

WOODBURY CREAMS FOR PROBLEM SKINS

DRY SKIN. First, cleanse with WOODBURY COLD CREAM. Soften with WOODBURY Special DRY SKIN CREAM — rich in lanolin's beautifying benefits. Skin looks dewy-fresh, younger!

OILY SKIN. Cleanse with WOODBURY Liquefying CLEANSING CREAM. It melts — takes off surface oils, grime, for clearer skin!

me up if you're ever looking for a movie job." "What can I lose?" thought Jane.

Demarest got her an interview with LeRoy Prinz, and Prinz sent her to the dramatic coach, to find out if he thought she could do a line here and there. The coach said no, she wasn't for pictures, her face didn't go with her voice.

"How right you are," agreed Jane.

But she did a lot of musicals with LeRoy, made herself a nice bit of change, and watched it melt away as the musical drought struck. The drought lasted long enough to give her visions of herself back in Manning's Coffee Shop. From that fate she was snatched by Anything Goes.

A girl she'd hoofed with told her they were calling interviews for a big Alice Faye musical.

Janie went, did two steps of a rumba and was hired.

By this time she had bloomed into her natural self—a peppy young colt with a dry and salty wit who attracted notice. Another agent approached, and this one was a wizard. He got her a date with a flesh-and-blood producer. Jane promptly went to town on herself. To be an actress, you've got to look like an actress. At the beauty parlor she had her hair dyed black and ordered an eyelash job—the kind you have to stick in one at a time. Shopping around for an outfit to sock 'em in the eye, she came up with a black crepe and red georgette. Her shoes were adorned with outsize cut-steel buckles, and she hung enough rhinestones on to frighten a train.

Five minutes in the producer's office, and they asked her to leave. A few minutes later her agent tottered out, so chalk-faced he scared the daylights out of his client. "What's wrong with you?

"Know what that guy just said? If I brought any more cold fish like you around, he'd bar me from the lot."

There were other interviews. All they netted her was a line in My Man Godfrey. Meantime, she went right on hoofing. At rehearsal one morning a girl kept looking at her. "Mind if I give you a tip, Jane? Here you are with no makeup on, and you look so much better than with all that junk on your face."

She went home, took a good gander, and by the time her agent had another date lined up, the dye was out of her hair, the eyelashes ditched. But she hauled out the black-and-red again and, with thirty bucks, added a cape of red foxtails.

This date was with Max Arnow of Warner Brothers and he asked her to read for him. At which point even the red foxtails drooped. She'd never read before . . .

But again, what could she lose? Assuming a bright professional air, she asked if she could take the script home overnight. In the living room she put on a show for Cheri, her roommate. "Does that sound right?"

"Sounds like you're reading, not talking."

As with the makeup, a hint at the providential moment showed Jane the light. Enough, anyway, so that Arnow said next day: "You read very well. We might use you." She didn't believe him.

A couple of weeks later, she answered the phone and heard her agent say she had a contract with Warners, and then the lid blew off!

no more kidding around . . .

Now she turned dead serious. These people must think she had the makings of an actress, or they wouldn't be forking out good dough every week. Okay, she'd be an actress and she'd be a good one.

Eventually they gave her a small role with Glenda Farrell in Smart Blonde. She registered. Before the picture's release, Max Arnow sent for her. Mervyn LeRoy had just come on the lot to make Fools For Scandal with Lombard and Fernand Gravet, the big French star.

"It's the chance of a lifetime, Jane, and I don't think you'll get it. But we'd like him to use one of our contract players, and somehow you remind me of something foreign. Think you could play a French girl?"

"Sure," said Jane, who'd have brazened it out in Choctaw for this.

By appointment next day, she tapped at LeRoy's door. "I am Jane Wyman," she said in her French accent.

"Oh. You speak French?"

"Oui."

She didn't fool LeRoy, but she did get the part. And it did the trick. Lo-o-ve that little French girl in the restaurant scene, yelled the fans. Fools For Scandal was followed by Mr. Dodds Takes the Air, which was followed by Brother Rat, which was followed by more ups and downs than most of us could take and still come out fighting. Jane lost lots of battles but, with The Yearling, she won her war.

We've told the whole story in past issues of MODERN SCREEN, and we've kept you up-to-date on the happy married life of the Reagans. The one tale we've never told is how Jane got her man.

As we've mentioned, there's nothing coy about Wyman. She did the chasing, and doesn't give a hoot who knows it. When she and Ronnie met, he, too, was nursing a romantic scar, only his was fresher, and he thought he was through with girls.

One day, as she lunched at a table for two in The Green Room—this was after Mr. Dodds and before Brother Rat—in he walked. A voice halted him. "Would you like to sit here?" She gave him the full benefit of the big brown eyes.

He told her he'd seen Mr. Dodds in Des Moines, and liked her. Glenda Farrell came by. Glenda Farrell's a good egg. "We ran Smart Blonde, Janie. With you in the same studio, I'll have to watch my step."

Jane was feeling a little top-heavy anyway. After all, she'd done thirty pictures to this character's two. "He must think I'm a great gal," she informed herself and went in search of a certain Mr. Arnow.

"Look, you're always working on publicity for people. Sending them out to the night-spots together and so on. How about working it on this Reagan and me?"

"No. You ought to go out with a bigger name than your own. So should he."

Little girl, what now? Well, she was moving to her own apartment. Her beloved friend, Betsy Kaplan, was fixing it up for her. "When it's ready," said Betsy, "ask him over for cocktails."

Jane called him. "Let's have cocktails at my place."

"What for?"

Which stumped even Jane.

a new campaign . . .

She knew when she was licked, and after that she laid her next campaign more cleverly. Ronnie spent most of his time with a bunch of his fraternity brothers. Swimming. Golfing. Riding. To Jane, the beach was a place where you got a suntan, but a girl can learn. She wormed her way into the graces of two fraternity brothers. All of a sudden she was a bug for outdoors. Ronnie started hearing what a swell scout the Wyman kid was. Before he knew it, she was one of them.

He proposed in a hospital room, after sending her roses with the loving message, RONALD REAGAN. Really sunk this time, Jane had shoved the roses off her bed and turned her face to the wall. That night Ronnie made the big discovery. All he wanted was to drive the sorrow out of her eyes. Suddenly, the world righted itself for them both.

The year of The Yearling is also the year of Jane Wyman, and not only because of the laurels they've crowned her with. It's the year of Stallion Road, her husband's first post-war release. When the sneak preview was over, the audience whooped it up for their old favorite and the beam on his face was another kind of award. Since then he's copped one of the year's prize plums—Voice of the Turtle.

Before the year's out—in October, to be exact—they're expecting another baby at the house on the hill. Maureen can hardly wait. Mike's too young to get excited.

For a while, they'd been hoping to add to the house, but that's out while things are so high.

"Let the kids double up," says Ronnie. "I roomed with my brother and shared a bed, and it never stunted our growth."

"Let's pile 'em ten deep then," agrees Jane, "so's they'll all turn out like you."

"Up they go again—eight months before Christmas."

Helen Neushaefer, color and style authority . . . originator of creme nail polish

NEW COLOR TWINS for Summertime lips and nail-do

EXCITING GAY

Precious pair for Summer wear! Newest of Helen Neushaefer's 12 heavenly colors . . . Carnival Red! In NAIL POLISH with amazing Plasteen . . . to help shock-proof this more brilliant nail-do against chipping. And in the new LIPSTICK with the miracle ingredient—Lasteen—for new softness of lips . . . for lovely, lasting color! At leading chain and drug store cosmetic counters.

Helen Neushaefer

harmonizing NAIL POLISH and LIPSTICK

Distributed by A. Sartorius & Co., Inc., Fifth Avenue, New York 11, N.Y.

YOU'RE ALL WRONG ABOUT MATURE!

(Continued from page 47)

went to work. I told this boy Mature that he should go away somewhere and study to be an actor for a couple of years. If he did that, I would make him famous.

The naïve lad from Louisville, Kentucky, took the bait.

"All right," he said. "I will do that little thing. I will keep my word, and I expect you to keep yours."

We now dissolve to a time two years later. My feet are still in the same desk drawer. The telephone rings. It is publicist Jules Selzer. He says—

"There is an actor over here who lives in a tent and stays alive by eating two hamburgers a day."

I said: "It's a corny gag, Jules; but life is pretty dull, so the cameraman and I will come right over.'

Mr. Selzer took us to the tent.

A big tall guy came out.

"You!" he exclaimed. "You're the guy who was going to put my picture in the magazine. I did like you said. I have studied for two years at the Pasadena Community Playhouse. I have appeared in 87 plays, mowed two lawns a day and I expect you to keep your word."

I did.

I printed his picture in the magazine. The title of the story was, "What Hollywood Needs Is a Man." There was a big picture of Vic with arms outstretched. Under one hand was a little picture of Tyrone Power, and under the other, an equally small Bob Taylor. For four months, the magazine was full of pictures of Mature.

By that time, Vic was saying "Stick with me, bub, and you'll be wearing diamonds."

We decided it was time to put on a little front. Why not get two more guys to go in with us and rent a house in Beverly Hills? Split four ways, we could live like kings, and Mature could move out of the tent. I collected the $48.74 which he owed for the first month's rent and told him that he was the luckiest actor in Hollywood.

Chez Mature, he called our place. We hired a housekeeper who was a genius with fried chicken. Her fame was so great that we had dinner guests every night, most of them blonde. Such hospitality! Nobody could eat before shelling out 67 cents.

In spite of the big front, however, Vic was not becoming an overnight sensation, as planned. One night we sat down and talked it over. "Joe," he began, "things are not going so good." He calls me Joe because my name is Carl. "Maybe they are not going to pick up my option. How the devil am I going to become a big name?"

"Easy, Joe," I counseled. I call him Joe because his name is Victor. "Just have a terrific romance."

"All right," he agreed. "Fix it for me."

The next afternoon a nice girl by the name of Betty, who was giving me no time at all, called up and said that she and a friend of hers didn't have anything to do in the evening, if I would care to go to the public library, or a night club, and bring along something tall, dark and handsome.

We went to a Russian rendezvous called Madame Sonja's—Betty and I, Mature, and an eyeful named Lana Turner.

Joe got his romance without trying to stage one.

A few days later the columnists all reported that Mr. Mature and Miss Turner were taken with each other. The romance lasted for six weeks, but they secretly hated each other for five.

the hunk on broadway . . .

"I was thinking," he remarked one evening, elated that the big romance had worked so well. "I think I will go to New York and do a play."

"Great idea," I agreed readily, thinking what a time the rest of us would have with his little black book of phone numbers. "After a smash hit on Broadway, you can name your own price in Hollywood."

Lady in the Dark, in which he subsequently strolled around in pink tights, made love to Gertrude Lawrence and was dubbed the "gorgeous hunk of man" by Moss Hart, made Vic a celebrity!

But he was still Joe to me—a friend who had plenty on the ball, but could use an auxiliary brain. I was sure of that when he told me over long distance phone one night that he was going to get married.

"Fine!" I howled. "Wonderful. Get married. Throw away a career. Think of the publicity you'll get, sitting home nights with the little woman."

He said he guessed he wouldn't get married after all, and two days later the newspapers announced his marriage.

Pretty ridiculous, I thought.

His marriage to Martha Kemp took place on June 18, 1941. It lasted less than a year. I had a little ranch in the San Fernando Valley where I lived with my parents. Joe moved into the garage.

He liked that place. He said he couldn't stand the elegant Hollywood life. He was afraid he'd go soft.

Then he did something I really approved of. He fell in love with Rita Hayworth.

He did something else. He enlisted in the Coast Guard.

Of an evening, when Joe came up from San Pedro where he was stationed, we'd sit around at Rita's place, playing records and gabbing. He was not long for such fun. Joe got orders to report for duty on a Coast Guard cutter called the Storis.

Eleven months later, my telephone rang at midnight.

"Presque Isle, Maine, calling," the operator said. Then Joe was on. "Joe," he said, "what's this about Rita?"

"I wouldn't know, Joe," I replied.

"Well," came back a strained voice, "if you don't know, I guess nobody would."

That was that.

And Rita Hayworth married Orson Welles.

Joe was now Chief Boatswain's Mate. He went back to the Storis and the North Atlantic. I still have a stack of letters he wrote, and during those months in the North Atlantic, I guess that in them I learned more about what sort of guy he really was than I ever knew before.

I can tell it better through an incident which happened in the grill of a midwestern hotel shortly after he'd been flown back from Londonderry, Ireland, to join a bond tour. The Treasury Department needed a power house to boost payroll deductions. Joe was being sent around with Major Allan V. Martini, the great air ace, who had four Flying Fortresses shot out from under him during missions over Germany, and Johnny Basilone, first Marine to win the Congressional Medal of Honor.

three guys named joe . . .

The three had become fast friends and were on their way to an important meeting. As they passed a table full of male civilians, somebody sitting there said, sotto voce, "Look at the heel with the two heroes!"

Basilone and Martini wheeled around. Mature took two steps more toward the door, being accustomed to nasty remarks. Then he turned around and saw tables being turned upside down and heads being cracked. Then he joined in.

A few minutes later, the three of them, straightening their ties, met the Treasury official in the lobby.

"What held you men up?" he asked.

"Mature," Basilone said. "We were helping him with autographs."

When The Character, as I sometimes call Joe, arrived back in Hollywood after his first long hitch overseas, he got himself a date and joined my wife and me at Mocambo.

Somebody at the next table said, "Seems mighty peculiar to me the way all you actors fight the war in night clubs."

Joe turned around and saw he was the only actor within earshot.

He said: "I hate to ask a man to apologize, but I guess I have to."

"Oh, dear, did I forget the napkins again?"

The other guy replied with a sneer.

"In case you don't say you're sorry," Joe snapped, "I'm going to ram that fat head of yours down your throat."

"You and five other actors couldn't do it," was the reply.

Joe did it.

Last year, Joe, fresh out of uniform, bought a house. $13,500 it cost him, and in a neighborhood far removed from movie star mansions. Joe simply wouldn't be hijacked by the famous California black market in rents. Back of that is a sense of good citizenship.

Sure, I say these things because we've been friends for a long time. I like him.

I know of no other actor who arrived in Hollywood broke, yet really had a fortune behind him. His father, who died several years ago, was worth over a half million. When Vic decided to become an actor, he refused any financial help from home. He used to return, uncashed, checks his father sent him. When Vic made good, no father was ever more proud of a son.

Still, Vic didn't accept his legacy. He turned it all over to his mother. He spent all the money he had saved having a good time with friends while on leave during the war. He backed a buddy in business, and they both lost their shirts.

Meantime, his name in headlines stood for almost every crazy thing an actor can do. People constantly are surprised when they get to know him, and exclaim in amazement, "Why, he's really a nice guy."

Actually, his name in headlines means nothing to him, except to prove that a guy can start from scratch and become famous without using "pull," hurting anyone, or discarding his friends.

He is involved in endless plots to do something special for people he likes. On one occasion, he talked Moss Hart into giving a cocktail party for me in New York. Every big celebrity of the literary world was there. I was used to movie stars, but in the presence of playwrights and authors I was as helpless as a beached halibut.

lifesaver . . .

A prominent Los Angeles physician credits him with saving my father's life.

Dad had gone to the hospital for an operation, and at the last moment the doctor said the case was inoperable. The man was too far gone. He'd lost all his fight.

Advised of the situation, Vic was indignant.

"That's silly," he stormed. "You can't lick a guy like that." Promptly, he sent off a barrage of telegrams to my father. The wires were all urgent, ridiculous and demanded an answer. Three hours later, the old man was sitting up in bed dictating replies to a nurse.

Next day, the operation was a success.

Vic's romantic life is confusing because he looks on almost every girl as a potential bride. Not that he is in a tearing hurry to get married again. He just has a normal desire to have a home and a family of his own. Usually, he is attracted to girls not generally considered attractive, and he forever chides his friends for pursuing beautiful women. "The trouble is," he says, "you prefer a mirage to the real thing."

A singular exception to the theory was Rita Hayworth. Somehow, I can't shake off the idea that life may twist around until they get back together again. I had the thought again this morning when I read that Rita would probably be separating permanently from Orson Welles.

Yet, I know that my friend Joe is seriously interested in a girl whose name has barely been mentioned. She is not an actress, and I won't divulge her identity.

Whatever happens, the results will be spectacular, and you'll be reading about it in the headlines.

Sunny Mackay, Adorable Cover Girl, Says

So I changed to the Gentle FLOATING LIFT of SWEETHEART SOAP'S Extra Lather!

Discover SweetHeart's 1-2-3 Extra Lather Care! Night and morning, massage your face one minute with SweetHeart's extra lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Skin is cleansed . . . stimulated . . . looks more radiant!

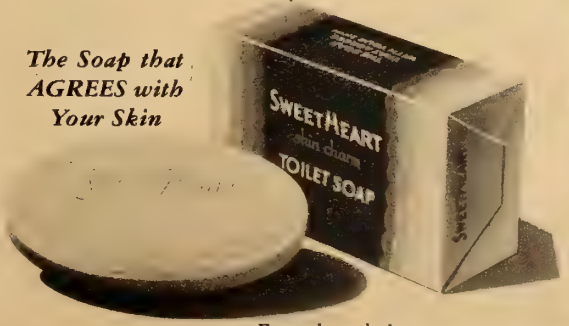
• "I thank my lucky stars for this amazing SweetHeart Care," says Sunny. "It leaves my skin soft and smooth as creamy satin."

Be lucky, too! Discover this glorious beauty care! For pure, mild SweetHeart Soap gives up to twice as much lather as average beauty soaps. And this soft, rich lather has a gentle floating lift. Pictures taken through the microscope prove it.

Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off—float away—dirt and dry skin flakes—revealing the smoother, more radiant loveliness that is rightfully yours.

Try Sunny's beauty secret. Then you, too, may dance and dream and be adored for your lovely SweetHeart complexion.

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin



For tub and shower, you can now also get the new, large bath size. SweetHeart's extra lather with its floating lift is marvelous.

So new it leaves you breathless!

Woodbury

Fiesta

...powder, lipstick, rouge!

Never... ever...
such adventure-in-color!

In all your life, no powder did so much for you. Fiesta lives, breathes, pulses with excitement. It wakens your skin to a glow with spirits-of-roses! Add lasting cling . . . color-freshness . . . heavenly fragrance. All yours in this new new shade. Be first with Fiesta today!

Cyd Charisse featured in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Fiesta"

Woodbury FILM FINISH Powder

WOODBURY MATCHED MAKE-UP

With Fiesta Film-Finish Powder you also get Fiesta Lipstick and Rouge All 3 in the dollar powder box - ONLY $1.00

Fiesta and 8 other exciting shades come in Matched Make-up $1.00; "Purse" size Powder 25c and 10c. (All prices plus tax)

Free! TRY FIESTA ... Free!

Seeing's believing! See Fiesta's sparkle on your skin. Send for free Woodbury Powder Sampler; get Fiesta, eight other flattering shades, plus Hollywood Make-up Chart. Print name, address clearly. Mail* to Box 45, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.
344

NAME.....

STREET.....

CITY.....STATE.....

(Sorry, offer good in U. S. A. only)

*Paste coupon on penny postcard, if you wish.

STOP SMEARING SINATRA!

(Continued from page 4)

only offensive to countless patriotic citizens, who, like Sinatra, had been given this physical rating, but it was also incongruous: Mortimer, who, without previous military experience, had been given an Army commission, sat out the war safely in New York City night clubs. If it is conceded that this happened for reasons beyond Mortimer's control, it must also be conceded that Sinatra was adjudged physically unfit for reasons totally beyond his control.

What Mortimer deliberately failed to establish, at any time in his writings, was the fact that Sinatra had done and was doing a magnificent war job, at all times—entertaining in U. S. Military hospitals, sandwiching in flights to cities where War Bond sales were lagging, aiding the Red Cross to raise money, singing at Army camps and Navy bases, and on the side, doing a fine job in curbing juvenile delinquency by addressing classrooms in person and through the medium of such a fine movie short as The House I Live In, a sincere plea for tolerance. It was a splendid American job, one that reflected honor on Sinatra and the entire movie industry.

Fresh opportunities for abuse of Sinatra developed when he met Lucky Luciano, at Havana, Cuba, although at the time, men high in Cuban society were inviting Luciano to their homes. Luciano openly attended the racetrack, the best Havana hotels and cocktail bars. At this exact moment, too, Walter Winchell broadcast the story, later denied, that the American government was about to present the Legion of Merit to Luciano for undercover aid he had rendered during the war.

There is no doubt that Sinatra should not have punched Mortimer in the eye. But how many other self-respecting men would have endured the ridicule that Sinatra took for two years, without lashing out?

For redress, Mortimer can exhibit his punched eye to a judge and jury, in an attempt to collect substantial damages. For additional redress, his paper and allied papers can subject Sinatra to a daily parade of injurious statements, without too much concern for their accuracy.

Mortimer is making a good thing of his talent for righteous indignation. Don't get me wrong. I applaud righteous indignation. But I think it's high time that Mortimer and his kind developed a conscience about the gross indignity of attacking Hollywood performers who cannot possibly strike back—except, perhaps, with some hot-tempered physical violence.

Veronica Lake . . .

soon to be seen in Paramount's Saigon. Veronica poses for MODERN SCREEN in a sweetheart of a dress which answers all this issue's challenging fashion questions: How crisp can you get? How cool? How summery?

Here Veronica wears red and white striped chambray, iced with eyelet, and pulled by a circular drawstring to a draped neckline. Pretty as can be. And high-fashion, because it has the long torso look—absolute latest! Also blue, green or brown. Sizes 9-15.

By Laura Lee About $8.95.

To find out where to buy dress, hat and jewelry, please turn to page 86.

modern screen
fashions

By Connie Bartel,
Fashion Editor

how CRISP

Know how crisp celery is? That will give you an idea. Laugh off the sun in this seersucker worn by Veronica Lake. Red and white stripes—scalloped sleeves, nice swingy skirt. Cute? Also brown, blue. 7-15. By Minx Modes. About $10.95.

WHERE TO BUY
see page 86

can you get?

Look as though you'd just stepped out of an icebox—and stay that way all day!
Try on (for crispness)
this checked dress worn by Veronica Lake. Dan River's Starspun gingham, in red, blue or brown. Sizes 10-18.
By Queen Make. About $8.95.

how

Cool as the kiss of a fresh little breeze—and graceful as Karin Booth, new find who'll dance and act her way into your affections in M-G-M's technicolor The Unfinished Dance. She wears a one-piece playsuit, plus a flounced skirt over the pants. Dan River gingham in aqua, pink, gold. Sizes 9 to 15. By Juniorite. About $8.95.

COOL

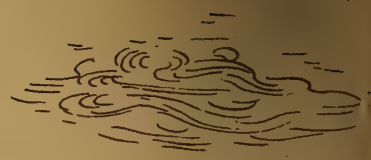
can you get?

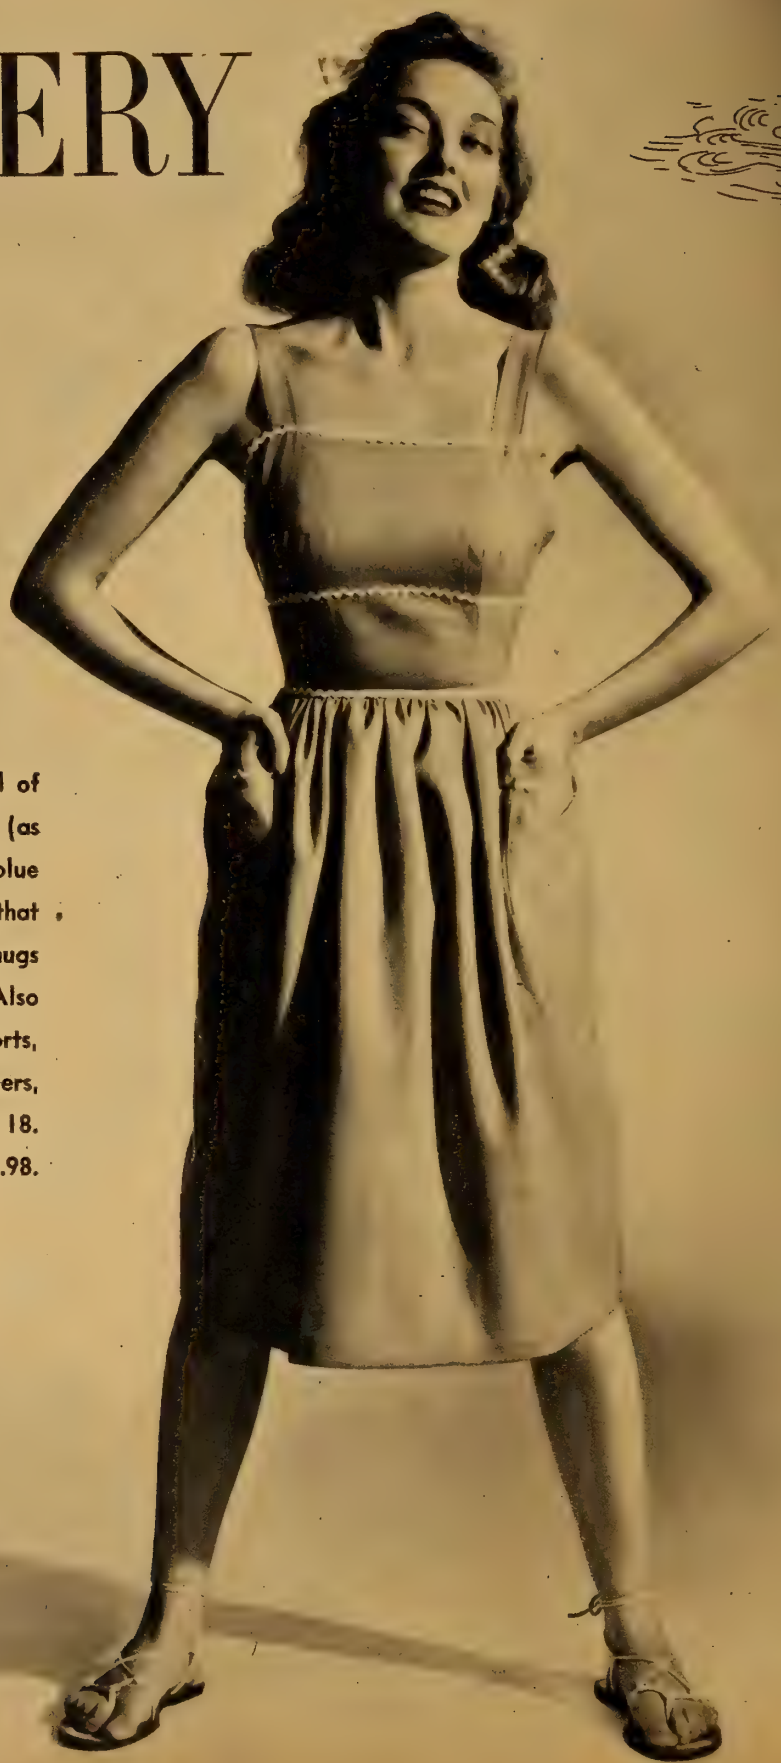
Cool as a bare-armed, bare-legged patio dress can make you! Karin Booth wears a flounced cotton print in dreamy shades of copen, rose and lime. We wish you could see it in color. Also aqua, red, gold. Sizes 10 to 18. By Mayflower. $7.95.

how

SUMMERY

can you get?





You'll look like the soul of a blue July day (as Karin Booth does)—in a blue denim playdress that bares your shoulders, hugs your waist. (Also available—matching shorts, jacket, pedal pushers, overalls.) Sizes 10 to 18. By Jane Irwill. $5.98.

WHERE TO BUY
see page 86

Modern Screen shops for you

BY MAXINE FIRESTONE

Calico cologne makes you feel as fresh as your newly-laundered dress—like the one on page 77 for instance. The perfect combination—half spice, half sweet. By Minx Modes, $1.50, plus tax, Saks-34th St., N. Y.

A darling leather wallet made just for you with your first name or initials in a contrasting color. Holds pictures, change. Zipper closing. $3.35. Order from Crown Craft Products, 246 Fifth Avenue, New York 1.

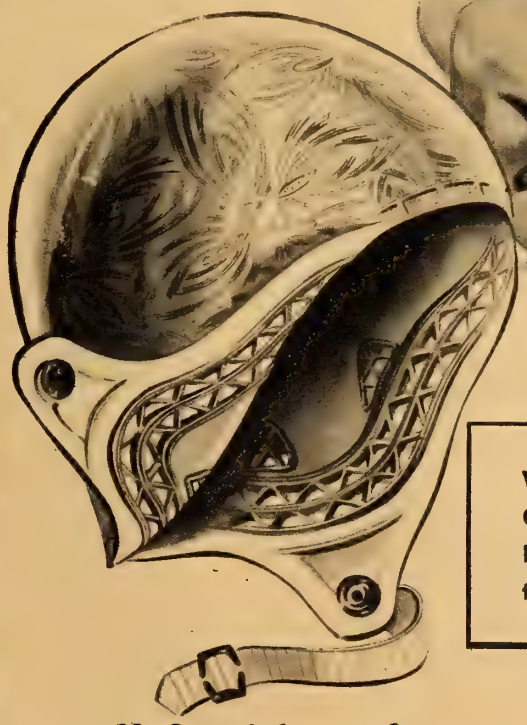
A link bracelet with a dangling compass—to let you know where you stand! Accurate? It's government reject paratrooper's escape kit equipment. Gold or silver. By Jordan, about $2, plus tax, Saks-34th St., New York.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
SERVING THROUGH SCIENCE

Dive and Swim... TO YOUR HEART'S CONTENT

Really enjoy swimming this summer, knowing that your hair will stay soft and dry. This wonderful swim cap, selected in your correct size, keeps your hair party-perfect.

At department or specialty stores



WATER LOCKED OUT
CAP HOLDS DOWN
FOR EAR PROTECTION
fitted in sizes like a hat

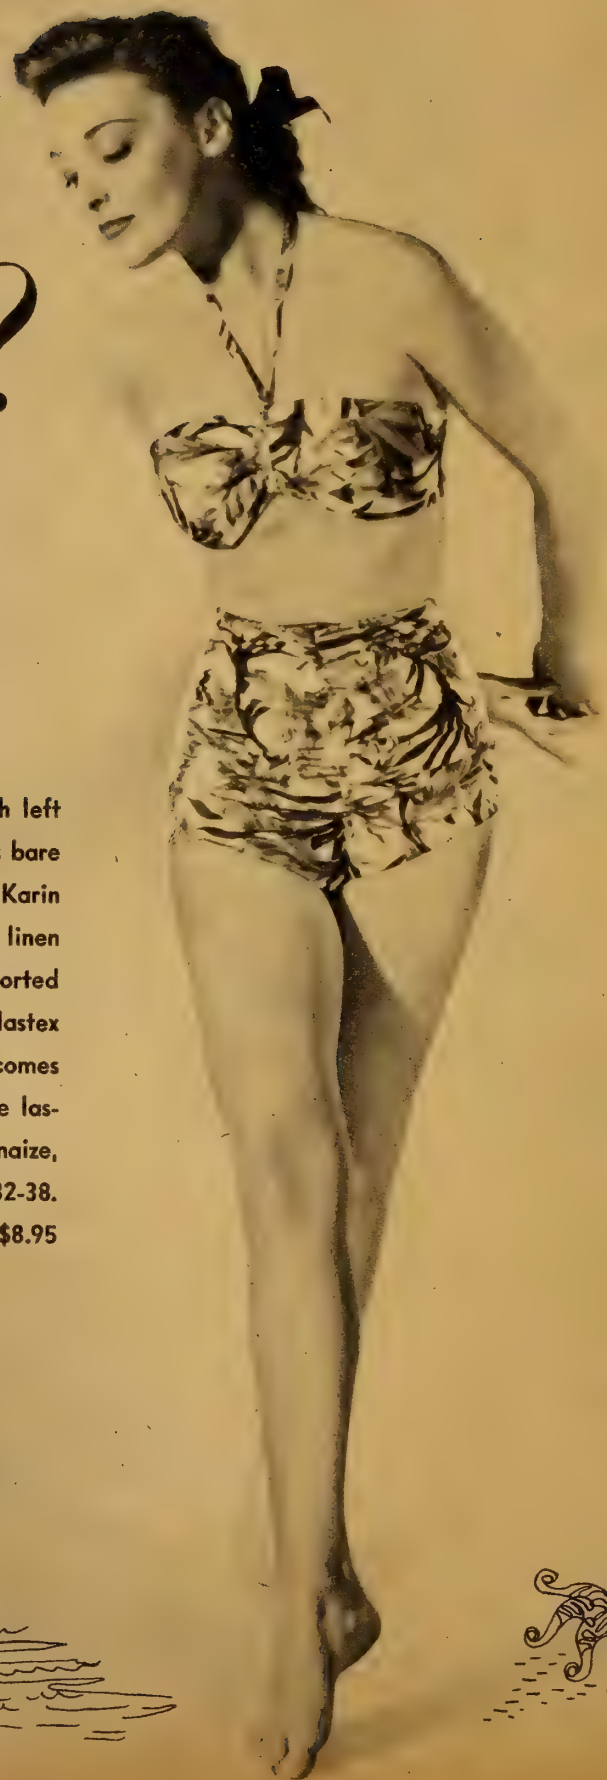
U.S. Howland
HAIR-DRY SWIM CAP

WITH THE EXCLUSIVE SNUG-FIT FEATURE

Only U. S. Howland has the patented V-shaped reinforcing ribs that turn flaps inward to make a perfect seal.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY • Rockefeller Center • New York 20, N. Y.

how much can you BARE?



Tan every inch left uncovered by this bare minimum suit, modeled by Karin Booth. It's printed linen in front (the real imported thing!)—clinging lastex in back. The print comes in luscious multicolor—the lastex in black, red, maize, white. In Sizes 32-38. By Sea Goddess. About $8.95

WHERE TO BUY
see page 86

LETTER FROM THE FASHION EDITOR

Dear You:

Know what? We've got a crush. Have had for a long time. Guess who. No, not Van or Guy or James Mason (although we'd walk a mile on broken glass to see any one of them). Our crush is on—the American manufacturer of American fashions. Honest.

Did you ever stop to think that nowhere in the entire world can you buy such wonderful clothes at really low prices—as you can in the U.S.A.? It's true. If you were a chick in China, say—or a young thing in Spain, or a cute trick in England—you could scarcely keep yourself covered with the money that will buy you a whole wardrobe here. Girls in those countries would think they were in heaven if they could plunk down eight dollars for a playsuit—or twelve for a dress—or two dollars for a dreamy hunk of costume jewelry.

But in these United States you can actually build a best-dressed rep on an average budget. And the man who makes it possible is the American manufacturer. It's he who turns out hundreds and thousands of good fashions for low prices. And we mean good—not just cute. Good fabric. Good construction. Seams that stay sewn, buttons that stay put. Colors that stay their original shade. Zippers. (They're luxuries in lots of places).

As for style—did you know that some of the most budget-priced manufacturers have some of the highest-priced designers? Well, they have. Some of the most expensive boys and girls in the business sketch and drape and pin and cut—all to make your twenty-five dollar suit look like a million.

That's why more and more manufacturers are sewing their designer's names into the clothes they make. They're proud of their fashions, and they want you to know it.

So when a dress or coat has a label which says something like "By Susan Sparks" or "A Marjorie Minton Original"—you can be pretty sure that it has been made by a manufacturer who is knocking himself out to offer you the best for the least.

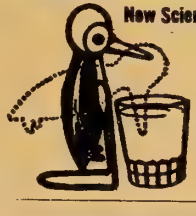
Same goes for fashion photos. When you see a dress you like in a magazine, and the caption says it's "A Jeannie Junior"—by all means mention "Jeannie Junior" to the sales girl when you go to buy the dress in a store.

Catch our drift? We mean—mention the trade name, and end up with what you really want. Look for the label, and come up with the cutest clothes in town. And while you're at it—look for Modern Screen's cute pink and green tag, too!

Yours for fashions that are proud of their name,

Connie Bartel

GROW
long lovely eyelashes
Take a tip from Movie Stars and Models — acquire long stunning eyelashes that everybody admires. Long eyelashes add so much to your attractiveness. Now, You too, can enjoy the glamourous feeling of long silky lashes and bright sparkling eyes by using Long-Lash a Doctor's Discovery, GUARANTEED to make your eyelashes grow longer or your money refunded. Try it for a few days and watch these admiring glances. Only $2.00 per tube (tax inc.) and that is all you need.
Long-Lash
333 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 528-K
Chicago, Ill.



New Scientific "GUZZLIN CHARLIE"
Mystery Drinking Bird with Roly Poly Eyes
$1.95 Complete with glass and stand. No springs, no gadgets, no wires, not mechanical. Amazing "Guzzlin Charlie" drinks and drinks; he is always thirsty. You won't believe your eyes. Young and old go wild over him. Mail your order today. Write for catalog.
BERNARD FINE CO.
581-6th Ave., Dept. BM, N. Y. 11, N.Y.

For unblemished loveliness ask to see
Those unsurpassed Nylons named RIVOLI
ASK TO SEE
Rivoli
NYLONS
At fine stores since 1900.
RIVOLI HOSIERY CO., Inc. 292 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 1

Lucille Garden BRA
NO PADS • NO PUFFS
The simple-to-adjust Patented feature inside the Bra gives you the fuller bust you so desire and require to be in fashion.
• For very small bust: AA200
• Small bust: A200
• Average bust: B200
$2.00* Sizes 30,32,34,36
• Small bust—with 2 inch band—A250
• Average bust—with 2 inch band—B250
$2.50
*In NYLON—$2.50 In NYLON—$3.00
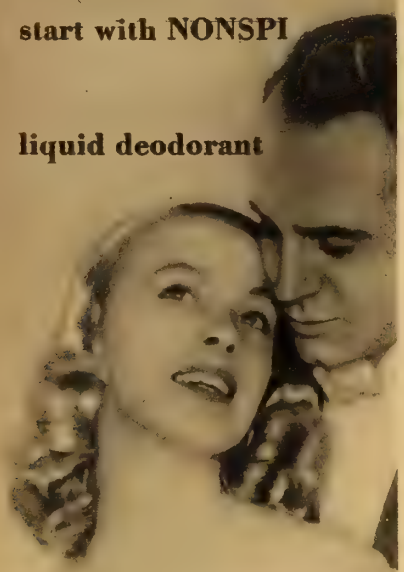
At stores everywhere, or write: Dept. MS
GARDEN FOUNDATIONS, INC.
45 White Street, New York 13, N. Y.

ready for romance?

start with NONSPI

liquid deodorant



checks perspiration—

prevents odor—

longer-lasting—

fewer applications

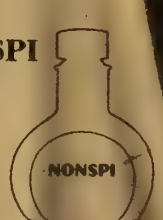
non-caking—

won't dry out

applicator cap

makes NONSPI

easy to use



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

35¢ and 60¢ plus tax everywhere

accent your lips says Veronica Lake! She has happy ideas that are bound to inform us about beautiful lip designs

By CAROL CARTER, BEAUTY EDITOR

■ "A man likes a woman's lips to look kissable! No thick coating, exaggerated outlines . . . or red smears on her pearly teeth." Such definite talk makes a Beauty Editor take notice. Too, it was Veronica Lake talking! We were at New York's 21 Club.

Veronica is enthusiastic about lipstick, says it should be used to best advantage. Think of your audience; don't start shudders by painting lips rose blue when you're wearing russet-checked gingham. Save the rose blue lipstick to team with your navy suit. An orange-red lipstick will be happier (and prettier!) with the russet gingham.

Veronica owns the largest lipstick wardrobe in Hollywood! Collect yours by realizing there are three basic tints, true red, orange red and blue red. Know the intensity best for your complexion. For example, a blonde uses light shades of true red, blue red and orange red. Her brunette sister will take all three in deeper shades.

Variety is possible because of the large selection of lipsticks on your cosmetic counters. Prettier colors are always coming up! Six divine new lipsticks in "golden" metal containers are being shown by a firm that makes wonderful nail polish. Another house has metal-cased lipsticks. Each case tip is painted red to show the shade of lipstick inside. You'll find plenty of help in accenting your lips!

* * *

"You Can Be Charming!" Find out how in our pamphlet of that name. To get your copy, send 5c and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Carol Carter, Beauty Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Veronica Lake, whom you'll be seeing in Paramount's Saigon has beautiful lips.

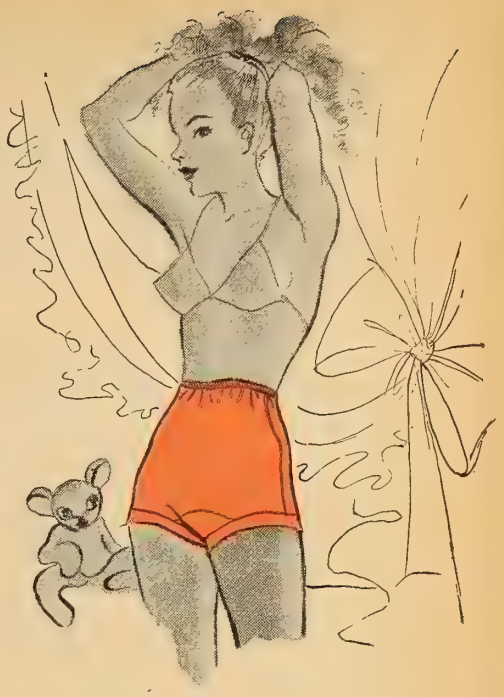
modern screen shops for you

A great big flattering beach hat that has no carrying problem. Folds up when you're not wearing it. Called "Hollywood Halo"—name fits doesn't it? About $3.50, at The May Co., Los Angeles, Calif.

A compact that looks just like Grandfather's watch. You press the stem to open. Comes on a bright red ribbon fob that you can pin to belts or pockets. By Wadsworth, about $3, at McCreery's, N. Y.

Who ever gets enough playshoes? Only $3—how's that for a real bargain! Greggies cute fabric ones have a rope sole for extra bounce. Greg Shoe Co., Inc., 26 N. Kentucky Ave., Atlantic City, N. J.

Rhinestone initials to make any man ask what's the name—and probably the phone number too! A nice way to add extra sparkle to you. By Omar, $1, each initial, plus tax, order from Lane Bryant, N. Y.



Smart girls say... "McKay Lingerie!"

The versatility of the "undie-world" is proven time and again by McKay. Clever styling to please every type — from the petite to the statuesque.

Now with summer coming on, women everywhere request them — because they're so trim ... so free ... so cool ... so easy to wash!

Made in an attractive variety of luxurious rayons that make them your favorite budget buy!

To be found at S. S. Kresge Co., S. H. Kress & Co., and Sears Roebuck and Co.

Next time say, "McKay Lingerie!"

McK McKay LINGERIE

Empire State Bldg. New York

LEE-ROWAN
Marvel
TROUSER CREASERS

LEE-ROWAN
Marvel
TROUSER CREASER
AUTOMATIC TRIGGER LOCK!
SAVES IRONING
NEW RANGE OF
5 SIZES . . .
Tots . . . for ages 2 to 4
Kiddies . . . for ages 5 to 8
Juniors . . . for ages 9 to 14
Regular . . . for trousers up to 32"
Long . . . for trousers over 32"
NEW AUTOMATIC TRIGGER LOCK

Minimize hot, tiresome ironing of wash pants and slacks! Simply insert "Marvel" Trouser Creasers in pants as they come out of washer, hang on line to dry. New automatic "Trigger" Lock sets creasers to exact tension. Trousers dry smooth, shaped, neatly creased with little effort on your part. More than 1,000,000 in use!

LEE-ROWAN CO., 6307 ETZEL, ST. LOUIS 14, MO.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

Red and white striped long torso chambray dress worn by Veronica Lake in the full color photograph (Page 73)

Akron, Ohio—M. O'Neil Co.
Columbus, Ohio—F. & R. Lazarus Co.
Seattle, Washington—Frederick & Nelson
St. Louis, Missouri—Famous & Barr Co., Teen Town Department

Large white off-face straw hat carried by Veronica Lake in the full color photograph (Page 73)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Cleveland, Ohio—The Halle Bros. Co.
Indianapolis, Ind.—Wm. H. Block Co.
St. Louis, Missouri—Famous & Barr Co.

Daisy comb and bracelet worn by Veronica Lake in the full color photograph (Page 73)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Philadelphia, Pa.—N. Snellenburg & Co.

Striped seersucker dress with scalloped sleeves worn by Veronica Lake (Page 74)

Atlanta, Georgia—Davison-Paxon Co.
Cleveland, Ohio—The May Co.
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th
San Antonio, Texas—Frost Brothers
Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothrop

Checked gingham dress with button-trimmed yoke worn by Veronica Lake (Page 75)

Buffalo, N. Y.—Adam, Meldrum & Anderson Co.
Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co.
Norfolk, Va.—Ames & Brownley
Oakland, Calif.—Kahn's Dept. Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Strawbridge & Clothier
Portland, Ore.—Olds, Wortman & King
South Bend, Ind.—Robertson's Dept. Store

Shoes worn by Veronica Lake by Johansen
Two-piece gingham playsuit worn by Karin Booth (Page 76)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's
Cincinnati, Ohio—The John Shillito Co.
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers

Printed cotton dress with deep hem flounce worn by Karin Booth (Page 77)

New York, N. Y.—Arnold Constable
Washington, D. C.—Lansburgh's

Blue denim sunback dress worn by Karin Booth (Page 78)

Boston, Mass.—Filene's
Detroit, Michigan—Demery's
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins
Norfolk, Va.—Smith & Welton, Inc.

Two-piece lastex and printed linen bathing suit worn by Karin Booth (Page 80)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's
Buffalo, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins

Leather thong tie playshoes worn by Karin Booth (Pages 76, 77, 78)

Baltimore, Md.—N. Hess Sons

(Continued from page 56)

give Pat any more candy," she'd said. "He's getting too fat."

Pat gave her one wounded look, and flew out to the candy box.

The next time she broached the subject, she spelled candy. "C-a-n-d-y," she recited, being a well-educated girl.

Pat gave her one wounded look, and flew out to the candy box.

Richard listened politely to this startling story, and then he said, "I'll tell you something, doll. I just bought Pat a year's subscription to the New Republic."

His wife moved her eyebrows haughtily. "Be sarcastic," she said. "At least Pat isn't mean about my cooking."

Neither is Dick, really. But then, she doesn't cook for him, so he never gets the chance to be.

She cooked for him once right after they were married.

She'd planned a simple dinner. Meat patties, they'd have, and boiled potatoes, and carrots, and a salad.

The boiled potatoes got water-logged. This isn't unusual. The salad wilted. Some people like salad fatigué. The meat shrank into hard little bullets. That happens sometimes. But those carrots— To this day, she can't figure what got into those carrots. One was soft, and one was hard, straight through the whole batch. She guesses she must have struck some rare scientific formula that might even be valuable.

But it wasn't worth much then.

Dick stared down at his plate, knowing she'd burned her fingers three times, and she wanted it to be so good, and now she couldn't eat a mouthful.

follow the bouncing ball . . .

He picked up a meat patty, and tossed it in the air. "Who cares about a little old bit of meat?" he cried gallantly. And waited for the meat patty to bounce back onto his plate.

It bounced on the brand-new couch, instead. It spattered forty-six grease spots all over, and June burst out crying, just like brides do in the movies.

Distressed, Richard went to her, and lifted her chin. "Honey, don't. I'll buy you more meat. I'll buy you more couches. I'll buy you—"

"Go away," June sobbed. "I'm a bad wife."

"But I like bad wives," he said. "Honest I do. The worse they are, the harder I fall for 'em."

She grinned up at him shakily, through big, wet eyes. "Richard, you're such a beautiful man."

After that, she didn't cook any more. Now she's working on a couple of other accomplishments.

The last few months of vacation have been a boon, as far as learning golf was concerned. In some ways, that is.

Every morning, June would sally forth with the clubs, and the will, and the fervent desire.

Every night, she'd stagger home with a broken heart.

Dick would arrive to find her glaring at her golf sticks. "I'd like to break them," she'd be muttering. "I'd like to smash them in a hundred thousand pieces and bury them deep in the ground. I'd like to beat that laughing caddy over his fat head!"

Dick plays a wonderful game, so of course, he won't play with June. She's humble about it; she doesn't expect him to. "You'd go crazy, waiting around for me, wouldn't you?" she says wistfully.

He says, "Yes, I would," and that ends that.

LESS IRONING
on wash pants and slacks!
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
LEE-ROWAN
Marvel
TROUSER CREASERS
LEE-ROWAN
Marvel
TROUSER CREASER
AUTOMATIC TRIGGER LOCK!
SAVES IRONING
NEW RANGE OF
5 SIZES . . .
Tots . . . for ages 2 to 4
Kiddies . . . for ages 5 to 8
Juniors . . . for ages 9 to 14
Regular . . . for trousers up to 32"
Long . . . for trousers over 32"
NEW AUTOMATIC TRIGGER LOCK

Minimize hot, tiresome ironing of wash pants and slacks! Simply insert "Marvel" Trouser Creasers in pants as they come out of washer, hang on line to dry. New automatic "Trigger" Lock sets creasers to exact tension. Trousers dry smooth, shaped, neatly creased with little effort on your part. More than 1,000,000 in use!

LEE-ROWAN CO., 6307 ETZEL, ST. LOUIS 14, MO.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

Red and white striped long torso chambray dress worn by Veronica Lake in the full color photograph (Page 73)

Akron, Ohio—M. O'Neil Co.
Columbus, Ohio—F. & R. Lazarus Co.
Seattle, Washington—Frederick & Nelson
St. Louis, Missouri—Famous & Barr Co., Teen Town Department

Large white off-face straw hat carried by Veronica Lake in the full color photograph (Page 73)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Cleveland, Ohio—The Halle Bros. Co.
Indianapolis, Ind.—Wm. H. Block Co.
St. Louis, Missouri—Famous & Barr Co.

Daisy comb and bracelet worn by Veronica Lake in the full color photograph (Page 73)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus
Philadelphia, Pa.—N. Snellenburg & Co.

Striped seersucker dress with scalloped sleeves worn by Veronica Lake (Page 74)

Atlanta, Georgia—Davison-Paxon Co.
Cleveland, Ohio—The May Co.
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th
San Antonio, Texas—Frost Brothers
Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothrop

Checked gingham dress with button-trimmed yoke worn by Veronica Lake (Page 75)

Buffalo, N. Y.—Adam, Meldrum & Anderson Co.
Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co.
Norfolk, Va.—Ames & Brownley
Oakland, Calif.—Kahn's Dept. Store
Philadelphia, Pa.—Strawbridge & Clothier
Portland, Ore.—Olds, Wortman & King
South Bend, Ind.—Robertson's Dept. Store

Shoes worn by Veronica Lake by Johansen Two-piece gingham playsuit worn by Karin Booth (Page 76)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's
Cincinnati, Ohio—The John Shillito Co.
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers

Printed cotton dress with deep hem flounce worn by Karin Booth (Page 77)

New York, N. Y.—Arnold Constable
Washington, D. C.—Lansburgh's

Blue denim sunback dress worn by Karin Booth (Page 78)

Boston, Mass.—Filene's
Detroit, Michigan—Demery's
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins
Norfolk, Va.—Smith & Welton, Inc.

Two-piece lastex and printed linen bathing suit worn by Karin Booth (Page 80)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's
Buffalo, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins

Leather thong tie playshoes worn by Karin Booth (Pages 76, 77, 78)

Baltimore, Md.—N. Hess Sons

SECRETLY HE LOVES HER

(Continued from page 56)

give Pat any more candy," she'd said. "He's getting too fat."

Pat gave her one wounded look, and flew out to the candy box.

The next time she broached the subject, she spelled candy. "C-a-n-d-y," she recited, being a well-educated girl.

Pat gave her one wounded look, and flew out to the candy box.

Richard listened politely to this startling story, and then he said, "I'll tell you something, doll. I just bought Pat a year's subscription to the New Republic."

His wife moved her eyebrows haughtily. "Be sarcastic," she said. "At least Pat isn't mean about my cooking."

Neither is Dick, really. But then, she doesn't cook for him, so he never gets the chance to be.

She cooked for him once right after they were married.

She'd planned a simple dinner. Meat patties, they'd have, and boiled potatoes, and carrots, and a salad.

The boiled potatoes got water-logged. This isn't unusual. The salad wilted. Some people like salad fatigué. The meat shrank into hard little bullets. That happens sometimes. But those carrots— To this day, she can't figure what got into those carrots. One was soft, and one was hard, straight through the whole batch. She guesses she must have struck some rare scientific formula that might even be valuable.

But it wasn't worth much then.

Dick stared down at his plate, knowing she'd burned her fingers three times, and she wanted it to be so good, and now she couldn't eat a mouthful.

follow the bouncing ball . . .

He picked up a meat patty, and tossed it in the air. "Who cares about a little old bit of meat?" he cried gallantly. And waited for the meat patty to bounce back onto his plate.

It bounced on the brand-new couch, instead. It spattered forty-six grease spots all over, and June burst out crying, just like brides do in the movies.

Distressed, Richard went to her, and lifted her chin. "Honey, don't. I'll buy you more meat. I'll buy you more couches. I'll buy you—"

"Go away," June sobbed. "I'm a bad wife."

"But I like bad wives," he said. "Honest I do. The worse they are, the harder I fall for 'em."

She grinned up at him shakily, through big, wet eyes. "Richard, you're such a beautiful man."

After that, she didn't cook any more. Now she's working on a couple of other accomplishments.

The last few months of vacation have been a boon, as far as learning golf was concerned. In some ways, that is.

Every morning, June would sally forth with the clubs, and the will, and the fervent desire.

Every night, she'd stagger home with a broken heart.

Dick would arrive to find her glaring at her golf sticks. "I'd like to break them," she'd be muttering. "I'd like to smash them in a hundred thousand pieces and bury them deep in the ground. I'd like to beat that laughing caddy over his fat head!"

Dick plays a wonderful game, so of course, he won't play with June. She's humble about it; she doesn't expect him to. "You'd go crazy, waiting around for me, wouldn't you?" she says wistfully.

He says, "Yes, I would," and that ends that.

INFORMATION DESK

by Beverly Linet

ARTHUR KENNEDY, who scored as the accused man in BOOMERANG!, was born in Worcester, Mass., on Feb. 17, 1914. He is 5' 11", 162 lbs., and has blue eyes and blond hair. He's married to Mary Chaffee. Write to him at Actors' Equity Assoc., 45 W. 47th Street, N. Y., as he is currently starring on Broadway in All My Sons.

Also in BOOMERANG!, as the cub reporter, was brown-haired, brown-eyed JIMMY DOBSON, who was born in Greenville, Tenn., some twenty-odd years ago, on Oct. 2nd. Jimmy is 5' 11" tall, weighs 155 lbs. and is unmarried. He can be reached at Fox, Beverly Hills, for a photo.

RAY McDONALD returned from service to appear as Allyson's dancing partner in Till The Clouds Roll By. He was born in Boston, Mass., on June 27. Is 5' 11" tall, weighs 145 lbs., and has blue eyes and brown hair. Is married to Elizabeth Fraser, and they have one child. Write to him at M-G-M, Culver City. Next pic, Good News.

Victor Morales, N. Y.: Charlotte Setzer, 635 Chestnut St., Janesville, Wisc., has the Richard Webb Club; Yvonne Mickle, 238 W. 106th Street, N. Y., has Rudy Wissler's.

Helen O'Connell, St. Louis: When stars free-lance, it means that they aren't with any studio. Thus, address the star care of Screen Actor's Guild, Hollywood. EVERY screen player is registered with the Guild, and can be reached there when he has no studio.

FREE OFFER: For each of the following, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope: (a) Questions on any of your favorite film players or pics (b) Instructions on starting a fan club (c) Score of Humoresque (d) Entire Academy Award list since origin. Address your letters to Beverly Linet, Information Desk, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

SPECIAL OFFER

SUPER-STAR INFORMATION CHART—1946-'47 (10c)—A new edition of the chart that's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia of fascinating data on all your favorite stars. 100 additional names never before listed! Please send 10c in coin to Service Dept., MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

She's terrific at tennis, though, and also she's been gardening passionately.

To her surprise, flowers are actually growing where no flowers grew before.

Dick can't keep a straight face when June talks about her garden.

"I watched her one day," he tells people. "She dug a lot of holes in the ground, and then she put a lot of seeds in the holes, and then she admires the seeds sitting in the holes for a while, and after she was tired of that, she came over to me.

" 'See those piles of dirt I dug out of those holes?' she said. I said 'yes.'

" 'Well, Richard,' she said, 'what do I do with all that dirt?'

"You could have knocked me over with a short-handled spade. I told her to put the dirt back in the holes, and she beamed as if I'd given her an oil well. She's brilliant, my wife. I should give her the subscription to the New Republic."

In spite of the contempt which Dick professes for June's gardening ability, amazing progress is manifesting itself. Pansies and camellias sprout up like out of an Olsen and Johnson show, with frantic disregard for the way proper pansies and camellias sprout up, and June brags to Dick.

"I did it. Me, myself."

"Anything'll grow in California," he says. "You're the only living object I know that stopped at a scant five feet."

Whereupon she goes in the house and puts on four-inch heels, so Richard will be sorry he ever hinted she wasn't majestic.

She knows exactly where to find her four-inch heels, too. When Richard designed the closets for the house, he designed her a shoe closet, a sweater closet, a glove closet, a purse closet, a slack-and-blouse closet—you name it, and they've got a closet for it. In one closet, there is nothing but seven identical hats.

The reason for this last is simple. Before Christmas, Dick and June were going to make a short trip to New York. June never wears hats; she dislikes them, and usually Dick doesn't care. But this time, his sense of fitness rose up and smacked him.

"Sweetheart," he said, "you need a hat."

He went shopping and came home with a small sort of taxi-driver's-cap number, and she tried it on.

"It looks pretty good," he said proudly.

She admitted it looked as good as a hat ever looked on her, so he went out and bought six more, in six different colors.

She never wore them.

"I wouldn't say she was stubborn," Dick says, defending her staunchly. "At least, I wouldn't say she was stubborn where she could hear me."

Dick has his own stubbornnesses. They center around flying, mostly.

He loves it; June detests it. And never the twain shall meet.

. . . into the wild blue yonder . . .

Almost every week-end, they fly down to Palm Springs, or up to Santa Barbara, or out to God-knows-where, and meet a whole lot of other sprightly young couples who own planes, and they all talk about altitudes and instruments and stick time. Excepting June, who listens in glum silence.

Dick used to have an Ercoupe; now he has a Navion, and he's working up to a two-engine baby. Two engines would undoubtedly be still safer, but June's irrational about planes. She figures if she gets one headache from one engine, ipso facto, ergo, and two engines means two headaches.

She isn't one of those people who just hates to take-off, but is fine in the air. Or one of those people who's fine in the air, but can't stand landing. She simply hates the whole process from the minute she gets in until the minute she gets out.

Dick, who is flight-happy, is making a picture called Assigned to Treasury, and the last scenes take place in Havana.

"Maybe the studio'll let me fly down myself," he says, his face all glowing, and June sits there, dying.

Or he'll outline his plans for the near future. "I'd like to fly to Little Rock, Arkansas," he says. "And then I'd like to fly to Washington, and then I'd like to fly to New York."

"I won't let you!" she says. Adding, sadly, "But you will."

He worries about her the way she worries about Pat and Casey. He worries about her eating and her sleeping and her working, and whether or not she goes to the dentist.

For three years, he's been saying, "Go to the dentist and get your teeth checked, while you still have some teeth."

Finally, three weeks before she started Good News, she went, shaking with fright. What price, years of neglect?

this won't hurt a bit . . .

She told herself she deserved anything she got, but that wasn't much comfort, and when she sat down at last in the dentist's chair, her hands were wet, and her heart was banging.

She volunteered some information. "I had four fillings before," she said.

"Yes." The dentist was poking around with a little instrument. "I think we'll change those four."

"And what else?"

She sounded as though her voice were changing from boy soprano to girl bass, and back again.

"Nothing else, Miss Allyson," he said. "You have fine, strong teeth."

Currently, June is sitting around in her dressing-room at Metro, and feeling her four new fillings with her tongue. She looks so smug about the operation that someone will occasionally be cruel. "You know it isn't really such a sensational achievement to go to the dentist."

"It is for me," she says, and goes right on looking smug.

Part of the smugness could be on account of the dressing-room, of course. It's a new one that she decorated herself. It has red chairs with black legs, and a sort of aquamarine couch, with plump cushions, and a lamp with a frothy white shade, and the whole place is papered gaily. Naturally, it has very unusual closets, too—Dick designed them.

June loves it, and she and Betty Carlson, her secretary, spend spare hours there.

Dick found Betty Carlson for June. "She's a terrific girl," he said. "She used to be a French teacher."

When June met Betty, she was delighted, and the deal was closed. But that night, at home, June cornered her husband. "That Betty Carlson's awfully pretty," she said.

He laughed till he looked like a lobster with a crew-cut. "A jealous wife!"

"Well, she is," June said. "Awfully pretty."

June's supposed to speak some French for Good News, so Betty's tutoring her. Betty's accent is beautiful; June's is not, but it's fun anyway.

The only thing June doesn't love about Good News is the Technicolor makeup. She can't bear a lot of grease on her face, and for Technicolor you need it.

The very first day of shooting, her little dressing-room was so filled with flowers she could hardly turn around.

There were flowers from Chuck Walters, the director, and there were flowers from Peter Lawford, her co-star.

"Don't worry about a thing, Junie," Peter's card read. "I'll carry you through the entire picture."

And while she was chuckling over that, another long white box came, and she opened it, and it was full of red roses.

She picked up the card. "Happy picture," it said. "Husband." That was all.

But for Junie, that's enough.

IF TY HAD HIS WAY...

(Continued from page 32)

what is all this—love?"

Ty wasn't grinning when he said what he said, because it wasn't a kidding remark.

"If it isn't," answered Ty, "then it's the nearest I've ever come to it. She's a wonderful girl, Hedda, and I want you to know her."

"For heaven's sake, Ty!" I exclaimed, not believing my ears this time. "I do know Lana Turner." He shook his head.

"I don't believe you do, Hedda. I don't think anyone has ever tried to know her."

"Well," I began, "I understand she's pretty spoiled, and—"

He stopped me with another vigorous headshake. "Put that in the past tense," corrected Ty. "She's not any more."

Now this Tyrone Power has never tossed me a curve in any department and I decided—playing a quick truth-and-confessions with myself—come to think of it, he was right as rain. I certainly had never "tried to learn to know" Lana Turner. I thought the answers to Lana were fairly obvious. Maybe she'd been fooling me all these years—just as she'd fooled me not so long ago; in fact, the first time she'd appeared publicly in Hollywood with Tyrone Power.

That was at a party Otto Preminger, the director, gave. Ty brought Lana—and that's what I'd missed and Lana knew I'd missed it—that's why she wore a smug proud-to-fool-you-Hedda look. Well, I take off my best hat to a gal who can slip one like that over on me.

Ty had seen Lana before that. Here's how they discovered each other, just as Ty Power told it to me the afternoon he dropped by my house.

it all began . . .

It was at Romanoff's, last winter just after she came back from her South American tour, just before Ty flew off on his. He came in after dinner at the party both were invited to and the first person he saw was Lana, sitting by herself in a booth. She smiled invitingly and patted the empty seat beside her. Ty strolled over, feeling a funny pounding inside his shirt. Before he left, he'd found himself asking Lana's telephone number, and getting it. He drove by her house the next afternoon and they took up where they'd left off. Then Ty flew away on his "Filthy Five" all-male barnstorming tour of South America. When he came back, there was plenty to talk about concerning the romantic land they'd both visited. And when Ty Power came back things were very different with him. His marriage rift, already a fact, was announced in New York.

And since the formal separation was now known Ty felt free to follow his heart. It led straight to Lana Turner.

Lana found out in the very beginning that her new love was all man. She had her eyes opened once and for all when she flew to meet Ty in Mexico City. Ty was working there, making Captain From Castile, and Lana was on vacation. She was out for fun; Ty was working. They went to Ciro's, at Mexico City's Reforma Hotel, the first night. After dinner, it was late but Lana was just starting her evening. "Let's stay and dance," she said, but Ty shook his head firmly.

"No," he said, "I've got a four o'clock call and I've got to get some sleep."

"I want to stay," pouted Lana, and that pretty pout had always worked before.

Ty rose from the table and Lana placed her hand on his arm. That had always worked, too. "You're not going," she whis-

Sparkling hair that thrills men!

Your hair can be your most intriguing charm—when you know this special secret of shining natural hair beauty. For whether your hair is honey blonde or raven black, sunny brown or fiery red—whether it's straight or curly—it's your natural hair-appeal that wins the eyes of men. And more and more women of all ages are discovering that Lustre-Creme Shampoo is the winning secret of True Hair Loveliness! Not a soap, not a liquid, Lustre-Creme Shampoo is an amazing new dainty cream that whips up luxurious lather like magic in hard or soft water—sweeps dullness away—and in its place leaves hair heavenly soft, shining, delightfully obedient. Out of her wealth of cosmetic lore, Kay Daumit combined gentle lanolin with special secret ingredients to achieve this almost-magic new formula that gives your hair a stunning new sheen and finish. Discover what true hair loveliness one jar of Lustre-Creme Shampoo can bring. At all cosmetic counters.

See how a fingertipful of Lustre-Creme Shampoo bursts into heaps of fragrant lather. See how tempting it leaves your hair! Not dried—not dulled—not unruly—but silken soft, responsive, sparkling as if you'd given it a hard brushing.

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Four Ounces, $1.00; Family 1 lb., $3.50

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor), 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

pered. "You're going to stay and dance with me."

"You don't know me," said Ty. He paid his check, walked out and left—by himself. Lana had to call a cab. But I don't think she was so mad as she was surprised, and probably pleased. I doubt if anyone had ever done that to her before. Anyway, Lana liked what she discovered, because she flew to Mexico City again against M-G-M's wishes, right in the middle of Green Dolphin Street.

"I guess I don't know the Lana you describe," I confessed to Ty after a few minutes' chat, "and I want to know her. Why don't you bring her here for dinner?"

"Love to," he smiled. "I think you'll be surprised."

hedda goes overboard . . .

I was. I certainly was. In fact, after one of the most pleasant evenings I've had in a long time with the most handsome and utterly love-struck couple I've seen in ages, I'm prepared to go a bit overboard. Not only do I think they'd be wed tomorrow if Annabella had her divorce—but I think they'd stay married.

It wasn't necessarily the perfect picture they made together—although that was as flawless a matched male-and-female vision as I've ever seen. I've always thought Lana Turner one of the world's really great beauties. She had her naturally taffy silk hair darkened for Green Dolphin Street. It made her even more striking.

"I'm going to try and keep it this way," she said. "Do you like it?" I nodded. "I'm glad," said Lana. "I love it this way." Then she added what was most important. "Ty does, too."

That recurred like the theme in a symphony as we sat and talked until midnight. What Ty thought, what Ty did, what Ty said. And when Ty spoke, it was about Lana.

We chatted about Mexico, and all that Lana had seen was through Ty Power's eyes. They'd both collected a golden tan together which made them look younger and fresher and more alive. Ty's was a darker hue. Lana's a honey-gold. And every other moment it was "Ty did this and Ty showed me that." Through Ty, it was plain, Lana saw things that just wouldn't have been there otherwise.

They went to Acapulco, the heavenly seaside resort where Mexico's mountains meet the blue bay. To Lana, with Ty it was the most romantic spot on earth. "You've never seen such stars, Hedda," Lana marvelled. "You could reach right up into the velvet sky and pluck them out, they were that big!"

I couldn't help asking, "As big as the stars in your eyes?"

"Does it really show that much?" Lana smiled, startled.

"It certainly does, my dear," I told her. "And it's very becoming."

It was, too. Everything is more becoming to a lady when she's in love. Lana seemed more at peace to me, quieter, lost in a dream. I saw what Ty meant. Maybe I didn't know this Lana. She wasn't restless. She was content to sit and hold his hand all evening.

We talked of pictures and both Lana and Ty wanted to talk about one they'd like to do together. Together. We talked about their living problems. Ty has moved out of Annabella's house and he's camping with his friend, Watson Webb, until he can find one he wants to buy. He looked at Lana when he said that "I want"; I took it to mean "we." It was not long after Easter then and Ty and Lana told about their own particular Easter Day, about the identical bonnets Lana had had made at John Fredericks for herself and her daughter, Cheryl. "They looked like twins," chuckled Ty. Lana said Cheryl was crazy about the chocolate Easter eggs, chicks, and bunnies Ty brought over. It all sounded like a cozy understanding.

"What about you two?" I asked them. "What about wedding rings and things?"

"We can't discuss that until after Ty's divorce, Hedda," said Lana.

Said Ty quickly, "Of course, you know Annabella's getting it very soon."

Later Lana told me, "It's just as though all the past romances in my life had never existed. Ty is the only man I've ever loved."

There was a time when I would have smiled pretty skeptically at that remark, coming from Lana Turner. But it suddenly occurred to me that Lana certainly could well mean what she said. Not only did every word and gesture she made that night in my house back her words, but for the first time I realized Lana Turner was in love with a man who matched up. Probing my memory through the men in her life, I knew Lana had always consistently picked the wrong kind for the girl she is.

"I'll bet," I told myself wonderingly, "if Lana and Ty had met and fallen in love at the start they'd be settled happily down now with a bunch of kids!"

But they didn't meet at the start.

There isn't space enough here to go into the Romances of Lana Turner. But the ones that flashed through my mind that night all fell smack in the same wrong-guy-for-Lana groove. Greg Bautzer, the lawyer-man-about-town, for instance, whom Lana thought she loved and would have married, only Greg liked his independence too much to be tied down. And Artie Shaw, the band leader, whom Lana married.

Then there was her unfortunate, spectacular marriage to Steve Crane. You'll remember the hideous mix-up when it turned out that his divorce had not been final when he'd married Lana. The one bright spot in this brief, ill-starred alliance was Cheryl, Lana's darling little girl.

There was Howard Hughes, the brilliant millionaire aviator who's never married anyone of the Hollywood stars he's beaued. Howard flew Lana across the continent and went out of his way to show her the Grand Canyon. It was deep enough to swallow their romance, because when they landed in Hollywood they never saw each other again. There was a South American swain supposed to be captivating Lana with Latin love and lavishness when she took her flying trip to Rio. He was supposed to send her a race horse, as I recall, but that horse, like the romance, melted into the mists.

All the time, I know, Lana wanted to get married, and maybe that was why she circulated, stayed the party girl even though she was a mother—until Ty Power came along.

Ty Power matches Lana in more ways than just being an extremely handsome guy perched on a Hollywood star's throne. He, too, had been unlucky in love. Furthermore, though he has an acting tradition in his family, he came through in Hollywood almost as suddenly as Lana did when she put on her first fatal sweater. They're both—Lana and Ty—Young America who came through—and I've always thought Young America should team up together to make a marriage work.

Well, that sums up the reverie I slipped into while I talked to Ty and Lana over coffee at my house and watched them hold hands like a couple of puppy lovers. They used to save a table for Turner every night at Mocambo, and she usually showed up with some pretty boy or other. They don't save it any more. Ty and Lana go out to dinner and to parties, of course—they aren't ready for slippers and a rocking chair yet, by any means. They came together to one I gave the other day for Col. Robert McCormick, the Chicago Tribune's publisher, and Lana proved she hasn't lost any of her wonderful flair for elegance when she wants to use it.

She wore a sable-black dress with diamond earbobs, rings and clips and a perfect black hat with flowers. I appreciated her dressing up for my party. I knew Ty would have to run Lana home to change to informal clothes, because they had another informal dinner engagement later that night. But she knew I wanted the Colonel, on his first Hollywood visit, to see Hollywood's most beautiful star at her most glamorous.

I'm not quite sappy enough to think Lana Turner will ever settle down to making apple-pan dowdy with flour on her face, or anything—don't misunderstand me. But I think with a quick divorce action there might be something very solid for Lana and Ty in a Hollywood union that would blend successfully with two very flourishing careers.

the waiting game . . .

But the path of true love never did run smooth—in Hollywood or anywhere else—and there are clouds that hang today over Ty and Lana's hopes and plans. For one, although Ty and Annabella's property settlement is all signed and sealed, the divorce has been delayed until she returns from Paris.

Everyone who is interested in the happiness of these two hopes the way will be clear for their marriage before long.

For if time drags on, say another twelve months or even six, then the danger curve for Cupid rises, day by day. There are too many psychological termites boring away at a love affair in Hollywood, and anything can happen to a drawn-out romance.

When they said "Good-night" at my door that night I told them right out what I thought, no matter what they admitted or didn't admit about wedding talk. "You've got companionship, and love—and that spells marriage to me," I said. They didn't say no, at least . . .

What I didn't say was something I thought, as I watched the handsome jet-and-marble male features of Tyrone Power blend into the darkness with the lovely ivory-and-gold beauty of Lana Turner:

It was, "If they only were married, those two, think of the beautiful babies they'd have. Why," I mused, as I closed the door on my disappearing dinner guests, "that pair could found a whole divine new dynasty of movie stars if they had the chance!" I hope they do.

DOIN' WHAT COMES NATCH-ER-LY!

Naturally, Lana Turner doesn't walk down the main street of your town every day in the week. But we've hardly heard of a movie fan anywhere who doesn't have at least one eye-witness story to tell about meeting a real, live movie star in person. If you're one who's "seen it happen," you just naturally want to tell the whole world about it, don't you? That's the idea behind our "I Saw It Happen" Department. So, how about sending us your experience? First, of course, you'll want to read the "Happen" boxes in this issue so you'll see that we want short, unusual and true anecdotes. Mail your entries to: "I Saw It Happen" Editor, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. And—naturally!—there'll be a check for $5 waiting for every entry we use.

You can stay at home and still discover new things!

BUSY WIVES AND MOTHERS TEST NEW NAPKIN—102 OUT OF 122 REPORT NO CHAFING WITH NEW FREE-STRIDE MODESS!

Housewives over the country recently made a discovery that'll be comforting news to every girl who chafes . . .

In home after home, busy women who had suffered chafing with their regular sanitary napkin were asked to try a new, improved napkin —Free-Stride Modess.

Of course, the women weren't told the name or brand. Simply that it was a new napkin . . . would they see if it gave them freedom from chafe?

At the end of the test, 102 out of 122 reported the good news: no chafing with Free-Stride Modess!

The secret of the chafe-free comfort so many women found in Free-Stride Modess lies in the clever fashioning of the napkin edges.

Free-Stride Modess has extra cotton on its edges—extra softness—right where the cause of chafe begins.

The extra cotton also acts to direct and retain moisture inside the napkin, keeping the edges dry and smooth longer. And dry, smooth edges don't chafe.

So safe, too! A triple safety shield in each Free-Stride Modess keeps you so carefree—free of accident fears. No worry about telltale outlines—Free-Stride Modess is silhouette-proof! On sale everywhere now.

Product of Personal Products Corporation.

Walk with comfort!
Move with freedom!
Try the new Free-Stride Modess!

IF YOU'VE WONDERED . . . By Florabel Muir

(Continued from page 27)

person I have ever met anywhere in all my life. He constantly amazes me. I wonder how anyone can be so thoughtful. It isn't only with me or with his close friends. He's that way about people he scarcely knows. The other day he read about the death of a man he had met once or twice. To my surprise, he sat down and wrote a letter to the widow and sent her flowers. A little boy from down the street came here the other day to play with my son and Van took their pictures. Then he got the idea of how much fun the kid would get out of an enlarged picture of himself and how his mother would like it. So he spent the whole afternoon getting that picture finished. There isn't ever too much trouble if he can make someone happy. Is it any wonder that I love him?"

She told me she couldn't really say when she began to love Van. It was something that grew first with a great friendship, then a deep affection and finally the realization that here was the man she wanted to spend the rest of her life with.

"I am essentially a woman who wants a home and the security and peace that should go with it," she explained. "Like every other woman, I wanted a husband who would share the home with me. I guess we all want some one to play house with us from the time we're in pigtails.

"That's why I fell in love with Van. He noticed all the little things I did around the house. He knew when I had a new dress or changed the style of my hair. If I felt depressed or blue he told me something funny that would make me laugh till the tears rolled down my cheeks."

Evie wouldn't say anything at all about her life with Keenan Wynn, but she didn't need to tell me why she didn't find happiness with him because I've been watching these two for a long time in Hollywood, and although I am very fond of Keenan and admire him greatly, I wouldn't want to be married to him, either. I'm sure, although he appreciated the lovely home Evie made for him and the children, that he would have been just as happy living at the Lambs Club. I've seen them night after night together in the gay spots and nearly all of the time he would be table hopping, talking animatedly with his friends, while Evie sat alone at their table, twiddling her thumbs.

One night she and a girl friend went to Ciro's with Keenan, and he left them sitting while he galloped off to talk to everyone in the place. I heard the friend tell Evie she was silly to stand for that, and when Keenan didn't come back for too long a time the friend went and got him. Since he and Evie have been divorced, he goes out with many a pretty girl. But they all wind up sitting at the table alone while he table-hops.

He doesn't want to play any games that a girl could play, either. He is happiest when he's off dashing about the country on a motorcycle. Up and down hazardous roads, over hill and dale he rushes. And, of course, when he gets home, he's too tired to be entertaining or amusing to a wife. It wasn't in the cards that their marriage could last.

"I hesitated a long time about getting a divorce, though," Evie told me. "I didn't want to hurt Van with those wonderful people who idolize him. It has been like a miracle to me that our marriage hasn't changed them. And they're so nice to me, too. But I do wish they wouldn't keep thinking about me as a woman older than Van. We are just about the same age, you know."

And she didn't look like an old woman, sitting there with her feet tucked under her, in a bathing suit, her short hair tied back with a blue ribbon.

"Pretty cute kid, huh?" said Van pushing her into the pool. "You'd never believe she's the mother of two kids would you?"

a party for evie . . .

Van was planning a party for Evie's birthday, which was May 8. He made up the guest list, planned the menu, ordered the food, and then he suddenly realized that he was doing everything.

"Hey, this is your party," he told her. "Why don't you get some ideas about this affair, too?"

"You seem to be doing so well. Why should I bother?" she asked.

She told me that she hasn't bought one single thing for the house unless he was with her.

"He'd kill me if I did. He wants to see everything we get even if it's only an egg beater from the five- and ten-cent store. We've spent hours in furniture stores and drapery shops together. Every time we go shopping, it's like the circus for him. He has such a good time.

"And I used to think I was neat and orderly about the house, until I came to live with Van. He's Swedish, you know, and has the almost fanatic urge to be clean that Swedes have. He sees a speck of dust no bigger than a fly and is always polishing things. Never leaves his clothes lying around.

"On the cook's day off, he makes my breakfast, and he wants to cook dinner too, when we're by ourselves. And, of course, he washes the dishes. You should see him shine the glasses. He told me that he got used to helping around the house because his grandmother who raised him wasn't young and strong. He loved her so, he wanted to save her from any extra step. You've no idea how wonderful it is to be waited on like this. It's heavenly."

I asked her if he notices her clothes or the way she wears her hair.

"Notice them? He tells me what to wear. He likes to choose the dress he wants me to wear when we go out and he's fussy about my makeup. It was on his orders I had my hair cut shorter."

I told Evie that friends had noticed that Van wasn't moody any more like he used to be. He even stays at parties until everybody else has gone home.

"Have they noticed that, too? He has changed. He used to be so restless. No sooner did he arrive at a party than he wanted to leave. He often used to desert the girls he took out and say he had a headache or something. It was just that he couldn't be bothered." Van joined us at this point and explained why he used to duck parties. "It was because I felt so inadequate. Never had anything to talk about but my acting job and who wanted to hear about that? Now I have lots to talk about. My house, my wife, my car and my tennis. I can entertain people for hours. Guys tell me about their houses, and I tell them about mine."

When Evie left us alone, I quizzed Van about her.

"You know, Florabel, I've always felt like a fool talking about anything that I cared deeply about. I'm just one of those inarticulate Swedes, I guess. But my happiness frightens me. I realize my great responsibility. I hope I can measure up to it. I want to make Evie and the children so happy. Maybe I'll stumble occasionally in my efforts. But I guess Evie will always know I mean to do the right thing."

Since their marriage, Van has been vacationing. But he has to report to the studio soon to start a picture, and he dreads it.

"I used to hang around the studio all the time," he said. "That little old dressing room was my home, pal. But it's different now. I guess I'll be thinking up excuses to stay home. Gee, I hate to leave this place for a whole day. Why do I have to work for a living? Why can't I just sit here and relax by the pool for the rest of my life?"

"You'd go crazy," his wife told him.

"You're so right. Say, let's go down to La Cienega and buy us one of those tent things to put over here in the corner by the pool. I saw just the one we ought to have driving by there last night." So off they went on another shopping spree, like two kids on the way to their very first circus.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

As I was nervously waiting to interview Sister Kenny for our school paper, a tall, beautiful woman entered the room. She asked me if I were waiting for Sister Kenny also. I said yes and, as she seemed so friendly. I told her how scared I was about the interview. "Would it help," she smiled, "if I went in with you?" Just then Sister Kenny came out and said to her, "Why, Miss Russell, how lovely of you to come to see me." Yes, it was Rosalind Russell. She went in with me and I was never so proud in my life as I was to have the reel Sister Kenny sit beside me, while I interviewed the real Sister Kenny.

Louisa Foss,
Minneapolis, Minn.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

The movie company of The Stronghold was on location at the Courthouse here in Quebec, and I went downtown for my first view of a film in the shooting stage. When I arrived on the scene, a policeman stopped me from getting very close to the action. I was very disappointed because from where I was standing I could not see too much. Just then Helmut Dantine, one of the stars of the picture, came by, saw my plight and took my arm. "Let the lady through," he told the policeman. "She's my girl friend." Of course, it was just a scheme to get me through the lines, but I certainly appreciated Mr. Dantine's kindness.

Gisele Charest,
Quebec, Canada

BRINGING UP ELIZABETH

(Continued from page 45)

piano. "If we could get an old second-hand one, anything"—I said to my husband—"maybe I could teach her a few nursery songs." Up until that time she hadn't been able to sing one note. He found one and we started and it looked pretty hopeless for a while. But, before too long our noteless Elizabeth had developed a sweet coloratura. We'd put a record on, and she'd take it with Lily Pons. Lily would stop, and there'd be Elizabeth still holding this note, looking so happy that Daddy and I would laugh till the tears rolled down our cheeks.

Singing seemed to do something for her. Out of her shyness, she blossomed into the gayest of children. Indeed, it was her voice that first attracted interest at M-G-M. As for acting, she loves it, but it's made no essential change in her. If there'd been any tendency toward self-inflation, her brother would have squelched it. To Elizabeth, Howard is king, and like most older brothers, he considers it his mission in life to keep her from feeling that she's so much. Which we think is fine.

For example, they were running a girl-ask-boy dance at Beverly High. I should explain that, while Elizabeth goes to school at the studio, Beverly High, where Howard's a senior, is her second home. Most afternoons you'll find her at the canteen, having malted milks with her friends, and the school dances are the only ones she's allowed to attend.

wanted: one fixer-upper . . .

On this occasion she appealed to Howard. "I might ask someone who's accepted another bid, and I'd hate to be turned down. Could you sort of find out for me?"

Howard was incensed. "You mean go round asking fellows, have you got a date? Not me! Go ahead and take a chance on being turned down. The other girls do."

If anything, her work's made Elizabeth a stricter conformist. Acting is different enough. In all other respects, she must be even more like the rest. At 15, there's apparently something so horrible about being different that it's almost a crime. I have to go out and buy hideous sloppy-joe sweaters and those wretched angoras that shed all over the house. One day I caught a gleam of hope. Flittering through a fashion magazine, my daughter gave a startled yip. "Look, she's wearing her sweater inside her skirt. That must be the latest."

She tucked her own sweater inside and ran across to Ann Westmore's. Ann's not merely her bosom pal, she's the law and the prophets. When Elizabeth returned, her sweater was pulled out again. "What happened to the newest trend?"

"Oh, I got razzed. Ann said the magazine must've lost its mind."

It was while she was working in Life With Father last summer that Elizabeth grew clothes-conscious. She was 14, playing 16, and all of a sudden it was anything to make her look older. Little waists, tight belts, high heels. Pleated skirts are tabu. "Oh, they're so juvenile, Mother." But the big battle was the battle of the lipstick.

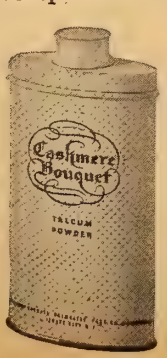
In Life With Father she wore makeup for the first time and loved it. The makeup men, with only kindness in their hearts, gave her little jars of pomade, and she'd try to get around me by pointing out that, as these were gifts, it was the part of courtesy to use them. That didn't work. One night she came home with Howard from a basketball (Continued on page 95) with this fragrant cooling talcum powder

KEEP FRESH! For a smart start—sprinkle yourself with Cashmere Bouquet Talc after bathing. Like a cooling caress, it leaves your whole body sweet and fresh.

FEEL SMOOTH! Take a little time to pat some extra Cashmere Bouquet Talc over those sensitive spots. It imparts a silken-smooth sheath of protection to chafeable skin. And girdles slip on—slick!

STAY DAINTY! For long-lasting freshness use Cashmere Bouquet Talc generously and often. It accents your feminine daintiness with the fragrance men love.

Pamper your person with Cashmere Bouquet Dusting Powder. Smartly packaged with a big velour puff.



Cashmere Bouquet Talc

with the fragrance men love

NEW SIZE!
NEW COMFORT!

Let me send you a trial package of new Slender Meds tampons! REGULAR absorbency most mature women need. Extra easy to insert! You'll hardly believe such comfort!

See what Meds give you:

- "SAFETY-WELL" designed for your extra protection
- COTTON of high-test absorbency, soft and fine
- EXPANSION—mostly sidewise—to avoid pressure
- APPLICATORS—dainty, firm, easy to use

Enjoy new comfort "next time"! Mail the coupon today for your Slender Meds!

Slender MEDS with REGULAR absorbency and extra ease-of-use (in light blue box)

De Luxe MEDS with SUPER absorbency for greater need (in dark blue box)

29¢ for 10 in applicators

Martha Steele MS-7
Personal Products Corporation
Milltown, New Jersey

Dear Martha Steele: I want to try the new Slender Meds. Please send me, in plain wrapper, the trial package of 3 for which I enclose 10¢ in coin to cover mailing cost.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Meds are made by Personal Products Corporation.

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION • SHIRLEY FROHLICH, DIRECTOR

Here it is—at last! The month of the big Hollywood Fan Club Convention. It is the sincere wish of the Modern Screen Fan Club Association that this convention will be a successful one, and that every delegate will work whole-heartedly to contribute something worthwhile and beneficial. Because we know that for most of you this will be a new experience, we'd like to mention a few of the "pitfalls" of which we hope all of you will steer clear: 1. Keep in close contact with convention headquarters at all times, so that you are sure of which event will take place next, where and when it will be held, and how to find your way there. 2. Obey carefully whatever instructions are given for the conduct of delegates. Remember, rules are made not to inconvenience you, but to protect you. 3. This will not be the time for petty jealousies, personal squabbles or destructive criticism and action. Always conduct yourself in a well-mannered, orderly fashion.

THE CONVENTION PROGRAM

Monday, June 23
12 p.m. Luncheon—Open Forum
Evening. Radio Shows
Tuesday, June 24
Afternoon. Sight-seeing tour, via bus
Evening. Dinner in Colorful Olvera Street
Wednesday, June 25
All-day Outing
Thursday, June 26
Morning. Radio Broadcast
Evening. Theater Party
Friday, June 27
Open
Saturday, June 28
4 p.m. Tea and Presentation to Charity at Ambassador Hotel
Sunday, June 29
9 p.m. Fan Clubs' Representatives' Ball at Ciro's

Note: Delegates who are under 18 and attending the Convention from out of town, must have the written consent of their parents, and be accompanied by a guardian, or they will not be seated at the Convention.

CLUB BANTER: Martha Farrington's Jeannette MacDonald Club has inaugurated a Sunshine Committee, headed by Peggy Murphy. Object: to send cards and notes to clubbers who are either ill or celebrating gay occasions . . . the "Baby Sitter Brigade" of Dixie Gibbs' Jack Smith Club in Rochester, Indiana, is a novel idea in fan clubs. When prexy gets a call from a frantic mother in need of a sitter, she taps available mems to fill the job . . . Darryl Hickman (McCreight) Club's "Favorite scene" Contest is a new twist in club contests . . . Betty Grable, Dale Evans, Bill Williams and Barbi Hale will be the stars honored in the next Four Stars Journal . . . Girlfriends of the "Boyfriend" (Vic Damone) wrote to Arthur Godfrey of the Talent Scout Program, inviting him to be an honorary (because Vic was winner of one of his contests) and Art was so pleased, he read the letter and accepted over the air . . . Sid Ceasar threw a private party for his club (Joan Schneider and Anne Cohen, co-prexies) in the rehearsal hall of the Roxy Theater, during his p.a. . . . Bobby Beers' Club made half a column (Harve Fischman's) in the Chicago Times . . . for the first anniversary of his club, Danny Scholl entertained prexy Lenore Larson and other clubbers at his radio guest shots and the theater . . . Theresa Smith, prexy of the Skip Homeier Club, was the subject of a feature story in the Wilmington Star. All about her activities as a one-woman drive against racial prejudice . . . Walter Goldby, of Lois Carnahan's Barbi Hale Club (and 29 others) draws sketches for Jane and Ronnie Reagan's daughter, Maureen. She likes to color them . . . Beatrice Gussin (Gerry Kee's Ladd's Legionnaires) painted an oil portrait of Linda Darnell and won a top prize with it in her high school art contest . . . Dorene Granade is offering free memberships to all veterans in her James Gleason Club . . . Any prexy (or group of prexies), preferably with club under 500, interested in purchasing a used portable mimeo machine, please inquire MSFCA, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16.

TROPHY CUP CONTEST

Here they are: the current club leaders in the fifth lap of our Trophy Cup Contest. League One (clubs of 600 members or over): Nelson Eddy Music Club, 1350 points; Gene Autry Friendship Club, 800 pts.; June (Allyson) Bugs, 700 pts.; Shirley Temple Club, 650 pts.; Dick Haymes Associates, Ernest Tubb Club, 600 pts. League Two (clubs of 200 to 599 members): Bob Crosby Club, 1050 pts.; Dennis Morgan Club, 950 pts.; Ginger Rogers Club, 800 pts.; Charles Korvin Club, 750 pts.; Gene Kelly Club, 600 pts.; Larry Douglas Club, Gloria Jean Club, 600 pts. League Three (clubs with under 200 members): Sinatra Club (Wolfenstein), 850 pts.; Bill Williams Club (Demers), 750 pts.; Basil Rathbone Club, 700 pts.; Richard Jaeckel Club, 650 pts.; Carole Landis Club, New Stars Club, Sinatra Club (Beattie), Joe Cotten Club, Sinatra Club (Chiappari), 600 pts.

THIS MONTH'S WINNERS: THIS IS MY BEST, 100 pts. ea. to club. (Individual Prize, Gift set, FABERGE's sophisticated APHRODISIA Perfume and Cologne for the girls; FABERGE's WOODHUE Men's Cologne for the boys): Iris Perry, Sinatra (Pacilio) C.; Amena Peacock, Vincent Price C.; Mildred Avarado, Allyson C.; Arthur Holden, Ginger Rogers C.; Robert Waste, Stardusters C.; Herb Pease, Bob Crosby C. CANDID CAMERA CONTEST: (First Prize, 100 pts. to club; Beautiful TANGEE TRIP KIT for travel) Kathy Campbell, Darryl Hickman C. (Others: 50 pts. to ea. club; surprise package of four DELL MYSTERIES to winners) Barbara Feit, Sinatra (DiMattia) C.; Berenice Olson, Gene Autry F.C.; Dianne Beresford, Dennis Morgan C.; Ronnie DeArmond, Glenn Vernon (McCarthy) C.; June Sams, Ella Mae Morse C. BEST JOURNAL EDITORS OF MONTH, 250 pts. ea. to clubs. (Individual Prize: Special assortment of lovely PONDS Cosmetics for girls; Year's subscription to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE, SCREEN ALBUM, 4 Dell Mysteries to Dave) Marianne Gitzler, Carmen Cavallaro C.; Marion Oppenheim, Bette Davis C.; Dave Hanson, Allyson C. BEST ORIGINAL PIECE OF ART WORK, 150 pts. to club. (Individual Prize: Year's subscriptions to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE, SCREEN ALBUM and 4 Dell Mysteries) Phil Steriti, Sinatra (Delaney) C. BEST COVERS, 250 pts. to ea. club: June Allyson Journal; Ginger's Gems; (tied) Stardusters and Johnnie's (Johnston) Gay Notes. MOST WORTHWHILE ACTIVITIES, 250 pts. to ea. club: Gene Autry F.C.; Dennis Morgan C.; Sinatra (Pacilio) C. BEST JOURNALS, 500 pts. to ea. club: Nelson Eddy Golden Notes (Music C.); Jive (Bob Crosby C.); Swooner's Corner (Sinatra C., Chiappari). GREATEST MONTHLY PERCENTAGE INCREASES IN MEMBERSHIP; 100 pts. to ea. club: No qualifications in League 1; Bill Williams (Chandler) C.; A. Ladd (Pearl) C. BEST MSFCA CORRESPONDENTS, 50 pts. to ea. club: Mary Susan Leonard, S. Temple C.; Annette Russell, Baritony C. (Ray Heatherton-Jerry Cooper-Jimmy Farrell); Josie Ciabattoni, Marian McManus C.

(Continued from page 93) game, and spoke to me firmly.

"Mother, I was the only girl at that game without lipstick on, and it made me look different. You wouldn't want me to look different, would you?"

"Yes, I would. I'd want you to look clean and scrubbed, and show the whole world you don't have to wear makeup."

"But Mother, you don't understand." (That cry of the teen-ager—Mother, you don't understand.) "The girls don't see it that way. They think you're a square."

Well, she confused me. It was probably that word "square," which they use as if it meant leprosy or worse. I finally agreed to lipstick within reason, and I've just flatly picked two shades she's allowed to use, and no others—Hildegarde Rose and Seashell Pink, which are almost the color of her lips.

If I have any rule, it's the rule of compromise. You give a little, and you take a little. The one thing I won't take is back-talk. Reasonable argument, yes, but no impudence. Elizabeth doesn't talk back, but for doggedness in trying to get her own way, any teen-ager could give cards and spades to a mule.

With her, the most effective method of showing displeasure is to stop talking to her. Elizabeth can't bear it. On the set one day, we had a little difference of opinion. You know how young girls wear their hair all over their faces? It irritates me, makes me think of a sheepdog. I'd push it back, and she'd flick it forward. In the end, I just walked off the set, which worked better than any number of words. When I came back, she was an angel.

on her it looked good . . .

I have no more use, however, for an arbitrary parent than I do for a self-willed child. In New York last fall, we went through the phase of the black party dress. For a girl not yet 15, black seemed to me absurd. I said certainly not. No sooner had I said it, than they brought out this heavenly black velvet and Elizabeth went mad. "Oh Mother, just let me try it on."

Once I saw her in it, I realized there was no reason why she shouldn't have it, except that I'd just said no, which isn't much of a reason. So I changed my mind and said yes.

On the other hand, I can be adamant. On the subject of strapless evening gowns, for instance. A dozen times it's been, "Oh Mother, you don't know. All the girls wear them. You want me to look like a teen-ager, don't you, Mother?"

And a dozen times, weary but holding my own, I've said: "What the other girls wear doesn't concern me, Elizabeth. You're not wearing strapless evening gowns." I believe she's beginning to be convinced.

We're also firm about going along to premieres. We let her accept a date, but her father and I are in the party. Of course, we bring up the rear, and they always manage to photograph her and the boy, so that no one could possibly know we were around. But Elizabeth knows it. And doesn't always relish it. She did her best to wangle it to the Academy affair alone. Her date was Marshall Thompson. Let me say that you couldn't find a nicer boy in the world, nor one we'd rather have her be with. But if a girl of 15's allowed to go unchaperoned to these big affairs, we just don't see how you can keep her from feeling blasé later on.

"Oh please, Mother," she begged. "It looks so much more grown-up, stepping out of the car with just your date."

"That's exactly the point, darling. You're not grown up, and we'd rather you didn't try it before your time."

She goes out only with boys whose families we know. Or if Howard knows the family and brings the boy home, and

Arthur Murray Girls tell secret of daintiness while dancing

For safe-and-sure protection they rely on this deodorant above all others

THOSE GRACEFUL, gracious young instructresses at Arthur Murray's must be socially poised . . . must keep themselves completely dainty through strenuous hours of dancing.

NO WONDER they rely on Etiquet. For Etiquet gives safe-and-sure protection . . . stops underarm odor . . . checks perspiration . . . can be depended upon to guard daintiness through hours of active exercise. And not only is Etiquet so effective—so efficient . . . Etiquet is delightfully "fluffy"—goes on easily—is soothing to the skin.

ETIQUET stays moist in jar—is harmless to the most delicate fabrics. Now you can share this secret of "dancing daintiness"—always have confidence in your charm by using Etiquet. At all cosmetic counters—in 10¢, 25¢, 39¢ and 59¢ sizes.

Etiquet

The safe-and-sure deodorant

PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK PRODUCTS CORPORATION

Elizabeth meets him at the dinner table. Weekdays, she's allowed no dates unless it's a special premiere, and then only when she's not working. If she's on a picture, her dinner's served in bed, after which she studies her script.

If she goes out Friday night, she stays in on Saturday. Maybe asks her crowd over for a barbecue, the advantage being that we can send them home early. On parties, we set a 12 o'clock deadline. Several times she's put up an argument about that and, when it's seemed reasonable, we've yielded.

On party nights, we make sure the refrigerator's well stocked, and encourage the children to bring their friends in for a snack. If we left milk and sandwiches out, it would be a bore. But if they can raid the icebox, and the boys can fix bacon and scrambled eggs, that's fun. Especially if they burn the eggs and let the hot chocolate run over.

I'd now like to record a small miracle worked in our midst, which may interest other mothers. Elizabeth had no sense of money values, so we hesitated to increase her weekly income of a dollar. After talking it over, we decided to put her on a clothes allowance and see what happened.

What happened was a revelation. She used to want everything she saw—from junk jewelry to mink. On our first shopping expedition with her own money, my daughter became a changed woman under my nose.

Elizabeth had turned 15 on February 27th, and by request had been given money for her birthday. "To spend foolishly—because I've never been allowed to spend money foolishly." This birthday check was also tucked into her bag. First thing she sighted was a handpainted blouse—price, $45. "Oh mother, how divine! I know! That'll be with my foolish money." I didn't say a word. Folly, after all, had been the purpose of the check. But Elizabeth hesitated. "Let's look around first." The upshot was that she found and bought an equally effective blouse at $5.95. What really floored me, though, was her approach to the purchase of an Easter outfit. "I'm on an allowance now," she confided to the salesgirl, "so don't bring me things that are too expensive. Have you anything on sale?"

We have two other problems that are harder to handle. One is untidiness. Never will I forget the day when a photographer was coming to do a home sitting. It was during the war and we couldn't get any help. Twenty times I'd impressed it upon Elizabeth that her room must look particularly neat. When the photographer arrived, the place was in apple-pie order, everything shone. Why the bed had to be moved, I don't remember—for my sins, I suppose—but moved it had to be for a certain shot. There must have been fifty comic books under that bed, face tissues, shoes, even clothes—oh well, why go on? The photographer laughed., wanted to take pictures of it, but my own humor failed me. Over my dead body, I told him.

crime and punishment . . .

I doubt if Elizabeth's ever stowed anything under her bed since. But unless she's watched, sweaters are still thrown in drawers any old way, and her dressing-table's a mess. I've experimented with all sorts of corrections. Correction's her word, by the way. To me it sounds awful, but she prefers it to punishment.

At last inspiration came. The radio! Unless the radio's blaring, she's lost. Now I just leave little notes on the bedroom door. Notes, I find, are more effective than talk—also less tiring. It's my profound belief that the fewer words you use with teen-agers, the better. They've got such a long list of arguments, and so much more energy. So I leave a note. "Sorry, darling, there'll be no radio this evening. You didn't hang up your clothes." That does it for a while.

Our second, and only real trouble is time. Time doesn't exist for Elizabeth. Her timeless world is really something I haven't been able to cope with. It drives me crazy. Take baths. Unless I'm standing right there, she'd stay in her bath till tomorrow morning. Take school. At first, seven seemed a reasonable rising hour; gradually it got to be 6:30; then six. She'd play with the cat; she'd get the chipmunk out of his cage; then he wouldn't go back; then she'd have to feed him. One evening I found myself setting the alarm for 5:30. To save myself, I had to put a stop to that.

I tried letting her be late to school, thinking that would embarrass her. Not at all. I talked to her teacher. We decided to keep her double the length of her lateness after school—triple the length. All we accomplished was to wear the teacher out.

And it's not that she doesn't like school. She does. Certainly, she adores premieres, yet exactly the same thing goes on. We'll be downstairs, me wilting in my fur coat, with my orchid threatening to follow suit —"We're all waiting, Elizabeth."

"Don't get upset, Mother, I'll be right down."

Long minutes elapse, to the tune of rumblings from Daddy. At length, he erupts and starts up after her.

"I'm just ready, Daddy; I'm just coming." And our daughter appears, sweet and smiling, at the head of the stairs.

Nothing helps. No correction corrects. If any mother anywhere can tell me what to do about time and Elizabeth, four Taylors will be everlastingly in her debt.

ADVERTISEMENT

"She's not a model really—that bag's full of Pepsi-Cola."

PIED PIPER

(Continued from page 60)

junior Astaires and knew in his bones that next week things would start looking up.

When he'd taken this job teaching at the dancing school sponsored by a Pittsburgh synagogue, he'd pictured himself surrounded by dozens of kids, and his heart had warmed to the thought. With some guys, it's horse-racing. With Kelly—now as then—it's kids. He's nuts about them. That first day the small, uninspired turnout was a real kick in the teeth, but the next week, a dozen of the ten- to twelve-year-olds showed up, in addition to the original group. They started out eyeing Gene as if he had two heads, but after fifteen minutes of shooting baskets with him, they relaxed and began to have fun. By the end of the afternoon, they weren't quite on Strauss waltzes, but Gene had them all doing dance steps reminiscent of Doug Fairbanks in his palmy days. And when the kid they called "Duckfoot"—a small-scale Eddie G. Robinson—mopped his brow and said admiringly, "He-eey, this is strictly a work-out," Gene knew with a quick stab of joy that he was "in."

Getting the teen-aged boys to come to dancing class required a different approach, but Gene was close enough to his own teens to know exactly what to do. He stopped one of the smoothies on the street one day. "Hear you're having yourselves a ball up at the high-school," he said.

"That's right," said the kid.

"Want to be the best dancer at it?" Gene said. "Oh, I don't mean just good. I mean really sharp stuff."

"Well, I guess I wouldn't mind."

a hit with the mob . . .

The smoothie brought a friend for moral support, and the news got around that this Kelly guy was terrific. After a while the gym wasn't big enough to hold the mob that flocked to learn from The Feet, and there wasn't a happier man in Pittsburgh than Gene.

At that point Gene, although only a kid himself, had been teaching dancing for years. He and his mom had organized a dancing school when he was in his teens, and he'd put himself through college on the proceeds. Teaching was his first love, and he'd still rather be a teacher than a dancer. If his pupils were kids, that is.

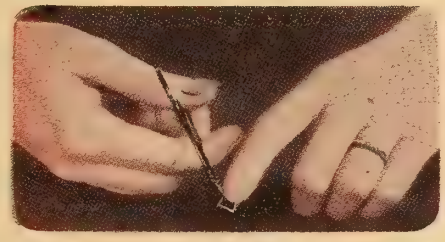
For Gene, teaching always meant more than fun. It was so very gratifying when some of his pupils became fine dancers, but there was a deeper satisfaction to his work than that. Some of the youngsters came from lonely neighborhoods or farms where there were few children. These shy ones used to suffer when they first attended the class. They hung back in a corner most of the time, and when Gene asked them to do an exercise, they melted in embarrassment. Under his gentle guidance and encouragement, they began to bloom, and when they suddenly found that they could dance just as well, and perhaps a little better, than the others, they'd hold up their heads with a new-born confidence. Remembering his own shy childhood, Gene got a kick out of watching the half-pints knock down their own defense mechanisms.

There were the sick kids, too. Several doctors sent paralysis cases to the Kelly school. They shared Gene's feeling that dancing is often not only therapeutically good for crippled children, but wonderful for their morale. It gives them a pretty fancy feeling to know that even though they're lame they can dance a little bit.

In connection with this work, Gene told me a story about a little crippled girl he'd worked with, and then he said, "Hey, you'd

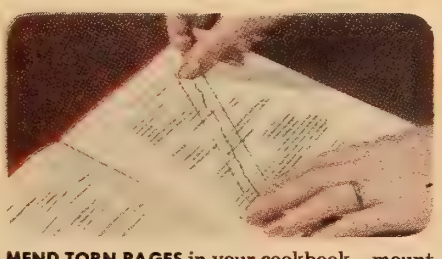
Now, let's see you kick the covers off, Glamour Boy!

SLICK TRICKS
with "SCOTCH" TAPE



PROTECT A SPLIT FINGERNAIL with a bit of "Scotch" Tape trimmed to fit nail, then covered with your regular nail polish.

KEEP CHILDREN BUSY and happy making scrapbooks with cutout magazine pictures and "Scotch" Brand Tape.



MEND TORN PAGES in your cookbook—mount favorite recipes in scrapbook or on file cards with "Scotch" Cellulose Tape.

FOR QUALITY, always insist on "Scotch" Brand Tape in the bright plaid dispenser. 25¢ at stores everywhere.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE
© 1947 3M CO.

Made in U.S.A. by MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO. Saint Paul 6, Minn.
THE 3M COMPANY
Also makers of "3M" Brand abrasives, adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry

FAT IN SPOTS?

☐ THIGHS ☐ ABDOMEN
☐ HIPS ☐ WAIST
☐ CALVES ☐ BUTTOCKS

LOSE TO 15 POUNDS

IN LESS THAN 30 DAYS

(Many report even greater success)

LOSE POUNDS — INCHES where they show most and in such a short time. Stimulate Active-Revitalizing Blood Circulation in Fatty Tissues . . . help Tone Sagging Muscles and Flabby Flesh to Normal, Desirable Firmness. Use a method proven in World Famous Reducing Salons, the HOLLYWOOD TWO-WAY PLAN. Sensible, Harmless, Effective, External. Designed by Hollywood Figure Experts for Movie Personalities. Now made available to YOU.

REDUCE

Fatty "Spots"

without

Drugs Laxatives

Here is a "PLAN" that is designed for YOU, the normal healthy, Busy Woman who has no time for Strenuous Exercise . . . Severe Diets. YET . . . Rolls and Bulges mar Beauty and Happiness. Slender Loveliness may be Yours again if you use the HOLLYWOOD TWO-WAY PLAN, an External, Scientifically proven method that includes Internal-External Correction, Caloric Guidance, and the Hollywood Body Toner for effective Self-Massage and "SPOT" TONING.

$2.00

"SPOT" TONE

ANY PART OF THE BODY

Self-Massage and "SPOT" TONE Any Part of the Body with the Hollywood Body Toner. This external applicator works like a Good Firm Hand Massage. Passive and Soothing, its action Stimulates Active Blood Circulation in Fatty Tissues. It takes a few minutes a day to Tone and Tighten Flabby Flesh and Sagging Muscles to Normal, Desirable Firmness. FEEL YOUR BODY GLOW FROM "TOP TO TOE."

REDUCE or MONEY REFUNDED

ORDER TODAY . . . At No Risk To You . . Either REDUCE NOTICEABLY within 10 days or your money will be refunded immediately. You are "Sole Judge." Just mail Coupon TODAY . . . NOW . . for the "HOLLYWOOD TWO-WAY PLAN" including the self-massage "Hollywood Body Toner" and a liberal supply of Body Cream. Not a monthly purchase but complete at $2.00. SEND NO MONEY.

Hollywood Beauty Consultants
6808 Sunset Blvd. Dept. 5-DM
Hollywood 28, California

Send me in plain package the "HOLLYWOOD TWO-WAY PLAN," including the "Hollywood Body Toner" for "Spot" Toning, and a liberal supply of Hollywood Body Cream. I'll pay Postman $2.00 plus postage. This money will be refunded immediately if I'm not satisfied within Ten Days.

NAME_____
(Print Plainly)

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ZONE____STATE_____
(Canada and Foreign, $2.50 in advance)
We Pay Postage if Check or Money Order Enclosed better skip that. It might embarrass the kid if she reads it." But you know, Mr. Kelly, I can't skip that story. It needs to be told because of the encouragement it will give to hundreds of youngsters. I've changed the little one's name so that she can't possibly feel bad, and Mr. Kelly, you old softie, please don't be mad at me.

We'll call her Joan, this five-year-old Gene discovered in one of his classes one morning. Her right leg was considerably shorter than the left, and she was so painfully conscious of her deformity that at first she wouldn't even look at Gene. His big heart went out to her. He flopped down in a deep chair and stretched his right leg in front of him; then rose from the chair standing on that one leg.

"Joan," he said, "can you do this?" Joan watched him, a brief wistful smile on her face, then she dropped her glance shyly.

"When you can do that, Joan, I'll teach you a dance step. Will you try?"

Well, she practiced for a week, awkwardly at first, her face burning with embarrassment, and there came a beautiful morning when she could do it quite easily. She tugged at Gene's arm, too excited for mere words, and he watched her go through the exercise feeling his own pulse pound. When she'd finished he discovered that he had no words either, so he just gave her the old prizefighter salute, his hands clasped over his head. She became one of his star pupils, and in time her leg lengthened almost to normalcy.

he's been around . . .

Gene's really traveled since those early days in Pennsylvania. From Pittsburgh he went to New York where he started at the bottom of the ladder in show business. He danced in Leave It to Me. Then in One for the Money, he did a solo, some songs, and had a line or two. He dabbled briefly in summer stock, came back and appeared in The Time Of Your Life, which won the Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Award, and established Gene as a legitimate actor. Pal Joey cinched that fact, and then he staged the music and dancing for Best Foot Forward. Now, after a few solid years as a Hollywood star, he's back where he started —teaching kids. And still getting results. It's like this.

For his new picture, Living in a Big Way, he does a dance called "The Pied Piper" with a bunch of small sprouts. In order to select them, he asked the casting department to send him a couple of hundred boys and girls. In they trouped one morning, all like small Eleanor Powells and Fred Astaires, and executing entrechats for Gene. They left him very cold, so he called Casting again and asked them to send him kids who couldn't dance a step as he wanted to teach them himself. Out of the second batch he was able to salvage a few normal unstage-struck youngsters, and his experience in the Pittsburgh synagogue school held him in good stead. Inside of an hour, he had them all crazy about dancing—all but this one straight-haired, snub-nosed little boy who was much more enchanted with playing in the half-built house that was one of the props. During an intermission, Gene took him aside. "Bet your mom misses you this morning, Joe," he said companionably. The kid eyed him silently. "Kinda hard on her with you gone all day." The kid swung by his knees from a beam. "So I think I'll let you go along home," Gene finished quietly. No scolding, no loud voice. Just that. And when the youngsters lined up again, Joe was right there in the front row dancing like absolutely crazy, meek and obedient as a lamb. He was like that from that day forward. When you see the movie, look for the kid with the halo—that's Joe. The Kelly touch with children is still deft.

In fact, his touch in all the art forms connected with dancing is deft, and as a choreographer, he is little short of a genius. Unlike other artists, he doesn't have a studio or a canvas or a piano; his office is in his head, and he spends silent hours working out his dances in introspect. Once in a while he does use mirrors to get the effect of line. All ballet is based on as long a sweep as possible, and he must be certain that his steps don't include awkward angles. Sometimes the steps he designs are divine when viewed head-on; and then the director will decide to shoot a portion of the scene from overhead or along a line of legs; whereupon, Gene will have to revise them. To the tune of hours' more work.

loves his work . . .

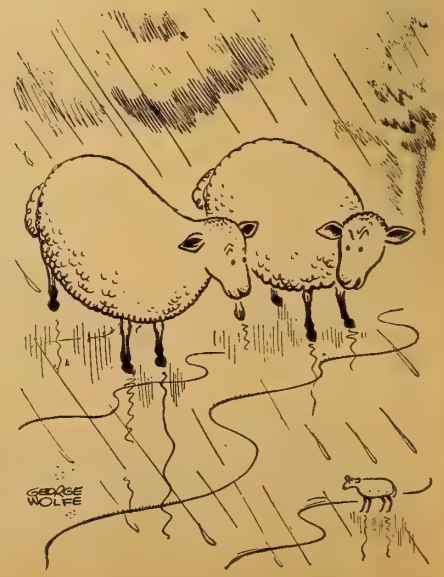
Incredibly, dancing and all its difficult ramifications are for Gene the sheerest fun. There's an exhilaration to his work that can't be put into words, that only another dancer could understand. In addition to this exhilaration, he feels that dancing gives a person a certain animal grace which is a great social asset if, says Gene, you care about social assets. He stresses the importance of avoiding overtraining. He has seen some dancers who walk continually on the balls of their feet, giving you the feeling that they're about to spring at you, a habit directly resulting from two much training. Not that some training isn't advisable. Gene does a great deal of swimming, which is excellent for dancing, and very little walking, which slows you down because you land on your heels, pulling the back leg muscles. He eats more or less what he wants, but has stopped smoking since his discharge from the Navy.

Gene admits that dancing today is highly commercialized, yet he feels that it still opens up worlds of appreciation to a child, bringing with it music, painting, and even literature. With that in mind, he has taught Kerry, his own little girl, a few dance steps. He does sort of hope she'll be an artist of some sort when she grows up, but whether it's a painter or a writer, or a musician or a dancer he doesn't much care. Nevertheless, if she hasn't evidenced any terpsichorean instincts by the time she's eight, he thinks he'll weasel her into it.

He doesn't think parents should force children to dance, but he does wish they'd at least let them try it.

"Remember me," he says. "I hated it, and now I'm not only having fun, but they pay me for it!"

MODERN SCREEN



"I don't see why he should shrink—he's supposed to be 100 percent wool!"

WAR BABY

(Continued from page 49)

chasing along in her lovely veins. She's a Hollywood War Baby if there ever was one. Service guys discovered Janis, named her, adopted her and spread her fame to the far corners of the globe. They gave her the experience she needed in hundreds of camp shows, and finally they saved her life.

If any girl had the right to pinch Elsie Janis's last name for her movie monicker, it was Donna Mae Jaden. Elsie, you know, was the dream girl of World War I.

One of her prize possessions is a tattered picture of herself that a marine sent her from Guam. He'd taken it off a Jap he'd killed, who obviously looted it from a dead Yank. Another Air Corps flyer fan buzzed into a ravaged Chinese village and found Janis, glossy and grinning, pasted in 8 x 10 likeness in the town hall by a Japanese invader. "You certainly get around in this man's war," he wrote.

Small wonder that when she gets in a jam, she doesn't hesitate to reach back and grab an idea out of her old wartime duffel bag. There was her appearance at New York's Strand Theater, for example.

She'd never been in Manhattan in her life, and she'd never been on a real big-time stage. The morning she opened—Friday the thirteenth, of all days—she gave a quick look around the Strand—and she had an idea. The house had a low, flat stage, like the one at the Hollywood Canteen. All during the war Janis' biggest hit was her number where she dragged a mike around singing first to a red-faced soldier and then to a grinning gob—night club stuff, but they loved it. Why not now?

her knees wobbled . . .

The manager tossed up his hands. "Let me try," begged Janis. That night her knees were shaking under a long dress as she grabbed her mike and whipped into her favorite GI sigh-song, "Embraceable You." She sang to a bald head in the front row—then to a slicked-up wolf, a curly-headed college kid, spreading herself around. When she was through, they whooped, whistled and yelled. The manager said, "I've been running Broadway theaters twenty years—but I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't seen it." But then he hadn't seen Janis before.

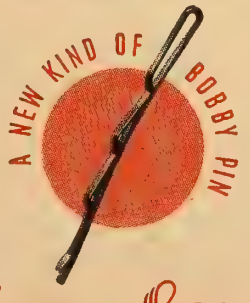
Since she was knee-high to a gnat, Janis was in there pitching for a career. She was only four when she learned "My Blue Heaven" from a phonograph record. A few years later she made the church choir. All that took place in Tacoma, Washington, where Janis was born, about twenty-three years ago. What kicked the urge to entertain along in her kiddie days was a theater smack across the street from the apartment house her grandpa and grandma Paige managed. Grandpa Paige (whose name she took for her Hollywood last tag) was a painter and paperhanger by trade, but plenty proud of Donna Mae's artistic ambitions, until he died recently. Janis' dad walked out on the family during the depression, and her mother had to work to scrape up a living for her sister Betty and Janis, but whenever the Right Steps for Janis' ambitions arrived, she took them.

Like the time in early high school when Janis fell for a rosy want-ad in a Seattle paper. "Guaranteed!" it promised, "to create a beautiful voice in six months. Only $150." Mom said, "We haven't got it but we'll find it." She did, too—and then drove Janis the 100 round-trip miles to Seattle twice a week.

The six-easy-lessons guy didn't do her much good but her Tacoma High School music coach, Clayton Johnson, was super.

Holds 144% Better

At last— a bobby pin that really holds fully 144% better by unbiased certified test* . . . a totally new kind of bobby pin! You'll see the difference at once—these bobby pins look like lightning. You'll feel the difference at once, too. They're strong, yet flexible—gentle as a lover's embrace. Note, too, the invisible heads, rounded-for-safety ends, super-smooth finish. They stay more securely, feel better, keep your hair looking neater, smarter all day through.



Gayla
HOLD-BOB
SUPERGRIP

*United States Testing Company, Inc. Test No. 75435, Nov. 25, 1946

COPYRIGHT 1947 · GAYLORD PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED CHICAGO 16, ILL.

Yodora checks perspiration odor

the SOOTHINGEST way

It's New! Made with a face cream base.

It's Gentler! Yodora is actually soothing to normal skins.

It's Effective! Gives lasting protection.

Won't Rot or Fade Fabrics. Better Fabrics Testing Bureau says so.

No Irritating Salts. Can use right after under-arm shaving.

Stays Soft and Creamy. Never gets grainy in jar.

Economical. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢

You'll adore Yodora! Try it today!

McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

IS THIS YOUR WALLFLOWER WEEK?

Why "sit it out" while your friends go bowling or dancing? Unless there are underlying organic conditions, Chi-Ches-Ters Pills offer blessed relief from "monthly blues". They tend to relax muscular contractions that often induce pain and nervousness. For best results take them as directed two or three days before your time.

MOST LEADING DRUGGISTS CARRY

CHI-CHES-TERS PILLS

DIAMOND BRAND

For relief from "periodic functional distress" 50 CENTS, AND LARGER ECONOMY BOXES. FREE — Illustrated booklet of intimate facts every woman should know. Mailed in plain wrapper. Write: CHICHESTER CHEMICAL COMPANY, Dept. E-7, Philadelphia 46, Pa.

"I know you're going right to the top!" he told her, and handed her the singing lead in a school operetta, The Desert Song. Well, a measles blight hit school about then and days before her Big Night Janis turned right into the Lady in Red. She stayed in bed two days but on the third, even though she still looked like a walking polka dot, she wobbled up the stage. Did swell, too.

She liked to sing and entertain better than she liked to study, so after squeezing through high school, Janis decided that was her formal education—period. She had her eyes set on the Metropolitan Opera, and to finance voice and piano lessons she turned lady plumber. She'd moved up to Seattle by then, where her mother had a new job.

She might have been studying and singing yet in Seattle, except for a trip south to Los Angeles with a girl friend whose aunt turned out to be a singing teacher. "Why not come here and study with me?"

strangers in town . . .

Janis and her mom sold their furniture for $800 total, bought an old car and headed south. When they rolled into Hollywood neither of them knew a soul. But in no time at all they had a tiny 2-room apartment, Janis' mother had a job in a bank and Janis was studying away at voice with Edith Merrithew, the girl friend's aunt.

That went on for about six months, before the afternoon the Hollywood Canteen called Janis' teacher. "Someone's sick," they explained, "and we need a girl to sing in her place."

Janis didn't know until she was about to step on the Canteen stage just whom she was pinch-hitting for. When she found out it was Ginny Simms, she almost swooned. She faced the sea of uniforms and let them have the "One Fine Day" aria from Madame Butterfly in her best operatic voice. Janis brought down the house and right afterwards turned into a one-girl tug-of-war between two studio talent scouts. One was from Goldwyn's and the other from M-G-M and both shouted "contract" as loud as they could.

Janis picked M-G-M. They signed her at $150 a week without even a test. "This is what I've been waiting for," thrilled Janis. But she never got near a camera. She studied voice, diction, dramatics, singing and dancing—and stewed.

She was a pretty unhappy girl when they took up her option even though the boost was to $200 a week. Her agent finally had an idea: "They make a lot of musicals at Warners. That's the place for you."

"All right," agreed Janis, "but this time —please—let's make a test. No more gift contracts for me."

The test was a nightmare for Janis, but Warners signed her—and from then on Lady Luck hopped right on her shoulder.

The day she walked on the Burbank lot, just to look the place over, was the day a New York actress wired Director Delmer Daves she couldn't take the part he wanted her to do in Hollywood Canteen. When Daves heard that a real Hollywood Canteen discovery was just signed, he took one look and right into that picture went Janis, opposite Dane Clark.

That same day Del Daves took a squint at Janis' girlish beauty and said, "I'd like to see you in pigtails for this picture."

So Janis tripped over to the commissary the next noon in her rattails and pretty soon a waitress handed her a note. "Please come to Mr. Goulding's office right away," it read. Mr. Goulding, she knew, was Edmund Goulding, the artistic director of super special A pictures. He had had a look at Janis in person and in pigtails—and that did it. She was cast as Sally in Of Human Bondage.

That's the way her luck ran from the minute she started as a Warnerette—and it's never stopped. Even when she landed in trouble she came out on top.

Janis knew it was a cardinal crime at Warners for a cast member to catch a sneak preview. But when Hollywood Canteen opened at Huntington Park, she and her mother secretly chased down to see it. They got two inconspicuous balcony seats —and who should plunk themselves down right behind her but Del Daves, the director, Alex Gottlieb, the producer, and Jack Warner, himself, czar of all the Warners. When the title sheet came on and there was her name—Janis Paige—right up with all the other stars she let out with "Oh, there I am—there I am!"

Was Jack Warner angry? No—he thought it was all very charming!

Besides musicals and the Morgan-Carson funnies, she's had a straight dramatic part with Zachary Scott in Her Kind of Man, too. Came next a Western barroom belle in Cheyenne, then straight comedy again with Jack Carson in Love and Learn. Wallflower, her current starring script, was written especially for her. "I shouldn't be surprised," she states flatly, "if I won an Academy award—in about five years!"

That might sound like a pretty chesty crack, but Janis Paige has seen so many of her prize dreams come true in Hollywood, she simply can't sell her good luck short. She's been saving for a Buick super, and the other day up one rolled, all blue and shiny—and all paid for. Her favorite dream house was one perched high on a windy hill with a view all over the whole world. That's where Janis lives today with her young-looking mother, Grandma Paige and "Debbie," her Boxer pup. It's the first house of her own she has ever had and she got homesick for it before she ever saw it!

Janis was in Manhattan on this Strand personal appearance of hers when Thanksgiving rolled around. She tortured herself with visions of her family in the new Hollywood house around roast turkey, and that made the Gotham Hotel seem very dreary.

In the midst of her sobs, a bellboy knocked at her door. "Miss," he inquired, "will you accept a compliment of the management?"

highness and the bellboy . . .

Janis opened the door and found a tray with turkey and the Thanksgiving works. They'd heard she was alone. "Please come in and sit down," she told the bellboy. "I'm lonesome and homesick." Turned out he was an ex-GI and one of her special fans. He talked for three hours—but when the bellboy left, he still couldn't believe a glamorous movie star could be lonesome.

Janis doesn't smoke or drink—alcohol, coffee or even tea. She knits socks constantly, she papered three rooms of the new house herself and took the kitchen right over to mess around with the devil's food cakes she likes to bake.

That kind of a domestic female character, you'd think, would be all-out for marriage instead of a career. But Janis Paige has the quaint notion she can handle both assignments. She's had fun dates with Jack Carson, Howard Hughes, the millionaire aviator, Playboy Cubby Broccoli and other Hollywood men-about-town but nothing terrific has developed yet.

A while back an old Tacoma High School crush of hers, a flyer, came through Hollywood and dropped in to see her.

"Gene," she asked him, a little wistfully, "think you'd like living in California?"

"Listen," snorted her old beau decisively, "I'm going to live on my farm in Washington, and," he added pointedly, "no movie stars for me!"

That sort of burned Janis up. She doesn't see why she can't be an actress and a human being, too. "Someday," she says, a little grimly, "I'm going to make somebody a mighty fine wife!" She will, too.

TWINKLETOES

(Continued from page 51)

Now she has a contract with Samuel Goldwyn and financial security, and she could relax a little. But she isn't conceited enough to relax, or old enough to relax, or maybe she's just not built that way.

Vera-Ellen signed up for a French course at Hollywood High, a few months ago. It's every Monday night. "Why?" her mother asked her. "Haven't you enough to do?"

"Mr. Goldwyn might send me abroad," Vera-Ellen said. "I have to be prepared, don't I?"

Last summer, she enrolled in a shorthand class at U.C.L.A., and she was miserable when she had to give that up.

Every Thursday night, she goes down to the Lutheran church for choir practice, too. And Alma Rohe watches her go, and thinks of a little kid bent over a piano, a long time back . . .

Martin and Alma Rohe lived in Cincinnati.

Before Vera-Ellen was born, Alma had a dream, and in the dream, she saw the name, Vera-Ellen. Just like that, hyphen and all.

The next morning, she told Martin and her mother. "If my baby's a girl," she said, "that's what she'll be called."

Her mother laughed. "Why, Alma, I never heard of such a name."

Alma was adamant, however, and Vera-Ellen was duly born.

She grew up in Cincinnati, and she was an only child, but she had a million friends and a million interests.

She started taking dancing lessons when she was nine years old, and she's still taking them.

you oughta be in pictures . . .

Those dancing classes used to put on shows, the way dancing classes do. And Vera-Ellen was always prominently displayed in them. People would see her at the dance recitals, and approach Alma Rohe. "Why don't you take that child to New York, or Hollywood?"

Alma would smile. "We're not thinking of a dancing career."

Nevertheless, when Vera-Ellen's teacher departed for the Dancing Masters' Convention in New York, Vera-Ellen went with her. She was in high school, at the time.

The convention was being held in New York's Roosevelt Hotel, and Vera-Ellen trampled the streets, that visit, seeing and smelling and breathing New York. She fell in love with a strange, new country, and she fell hard.

She went home to Cincinnati in August, and had a few words with her mother, and by the first of November, they'd packed, and moved to the big city.

Martin Rohe was skeptical. "I can't leave my work, just like that," he said. "And you two, all alone—"

They hushed him. "You'll come later; we'll be fine."

Their first step, on arrival in New York, was to write to Major Bowes. At that time, Cincinnati thought an appearance on the Major's program was the pinnacle. If you made that, you were in.

Vera-Ellen got a reply, asking her to come for an audition. She went. As she remembers, there were two men at two grand pianos. Or maybe they were two angels at two golden harps. Anyway she sang, and did a tap number, and the major's representatives got in touch with her a couple of days later. She was to appear on the next program; it would be Cincinnati Night.

Cincinnati Night came, and Vera-Ellen

Such Kissable Skin

Satin lure for his lips . . . your skin, so deliciously smooth with Jergens Face Cream. The only beauty cream containing Vitone—the new, unsurpassed dry-skin smoother. Tests by leading skin specialists show: 8 out of 10 complexions beautifully improved: "Skins softer, fresher, smoother."

All-Purpose...plus Vitone

Like four beauty creams in one jar. Jergens—with Vitone—cleanses...softens ...helps smooth tiny dry-skin lines...acts as clinging powder-base. Rich with precious Vitone, yet Jergens costs no more than other fine creams. Used by lovely women everywhere. 10¢ to $1.25. (Plus tax)

VITONE: special Dry-Skin "Smoother" in JERGENS FACE CREAM

A Cleanser....
A Softener.....
A Dry-Skin Cream
A Powder Base...

Free! Prove to yourself at our expense what Vitone can do for your skin!

Please send me generous trial-size, free, of Jergens Vitone-enriched Face Cream.

MAIL TO: Box 57, Cincinnati 14, Ohio

424

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

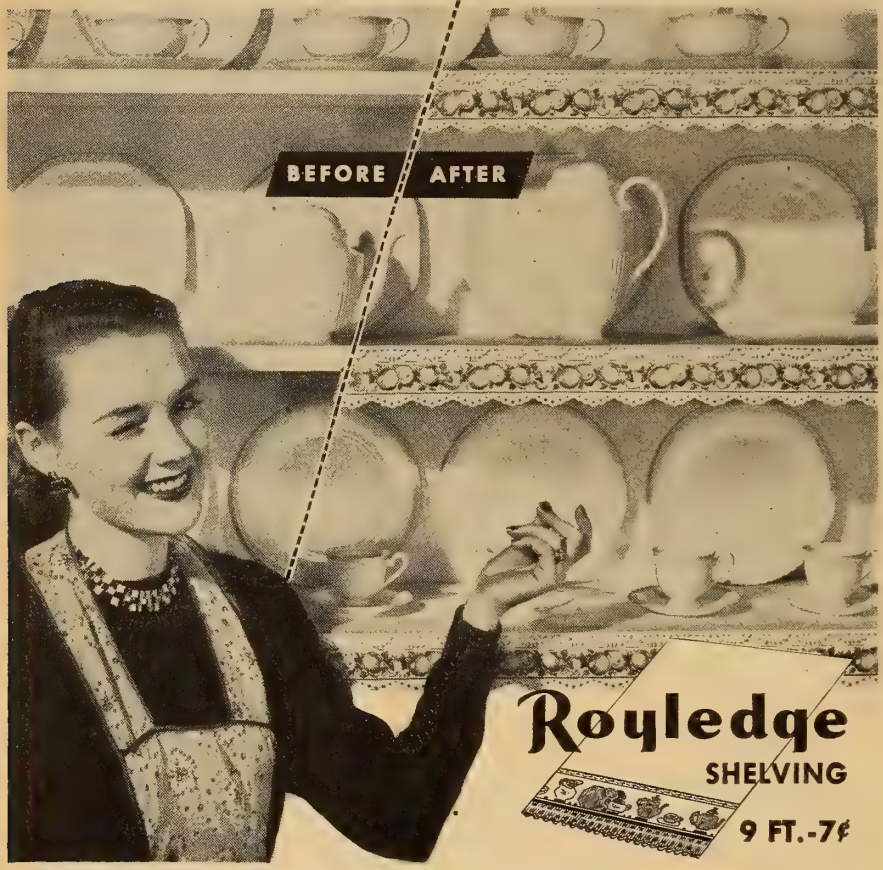
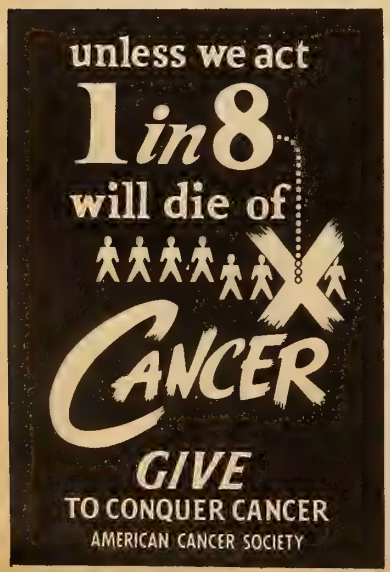
(Paste on penny postcard, if you wish. Sorry, sample offer good in U.S.A. only.)

PRESTO—beautiful kitchen!

Transform your kitchen with new beauty in minutes—just lay colorful Royledge shelving on shelves, and turn down the sparkling doubl-edge. What a wonderful difference! So easy, Royledge is shelving paper and edging all-in-one. So inexpensive, less than a penny a day to change patterns monthly. No other compares—ask for beautiful new Royledge designs at 5-and-10's, neighborhood, hardware, department stores.



NO ONE IS SAFE FROM CANCER



It is known that this year, 184,300 Americans will die of Cancer . . . one every three minutes.

•

GIVE to help win mankind's great war—the fight against cancer.

•

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

47 Beaver Street New York City went on. She thought she was pretty good.

When it was over, she'd won. That entitled her to join the Major's unit in Cincinnati. It was an all-girl unit; Vera-Ellen would have to be on a train in an hour—

They made the train, all right. And half an hour out of Cincinnati, they were snowbound. Alma and Vera-Ellen stared at each other.

"This was going to be my big debut. Opening night in Cincinnati; all my friends. . ."

Her mother was comforting. "It could be worse, dear."

So it got worse. The next day, the Ohio River flooded, and electricity quit (in theaters as well as other places) and none of Vera-Ellen's friends ever saw her in Cincinnati. Because the Unit got sent on to St. Louis.

She stayed with the Unit six months, and then headed back for New York.

She was studying dancing at a studio in Steinway Hall (her mother had got a job as secretary to the dancing school) and she was practicing, the day Alma called her over to the desk.

"I've got a message for Mr. Smith," she said. "He told me he'd be downstairs in Room 405. You want to run down with it?"

Vera-Ellen said sure; Mr. Smith was one of her tap teachers. She picked up the note, and left.

In Room 405, she discovered not only Mr. Smith, but also a tall young man, and Ted Lewis, the bandleader. She delivered her message, and was starting out, when Ted Lewis stopped her.

"You dance?"

"Yes," she said.

"Where are your shoes?"

She looked at him in some surprise. "Upstairs."

"Go get them," he said.

She went and got them, and half an hour later, she had a job.

For three months, she toured with Ted Lewis, and they never hit Cincinnati. She used to fret, but it did no good.

surprise for billy . . .

When she got to New York again, she heard that Billy Rose was auditioning dancers for his World's Fair Aquacade, and also for his night club, Casa Mañana.

Vera-Ellen went to audition, and discovered five hundred other girls with the same idea.

She watched them as one at a time, they stepped forward, did a time-step and a kick, and listened for the verdict.

When her turn came, she spoke up. "Do you want me to do time-steps and kicks, like the rest of them?"

Mr. Rose's voice was deceptively soft. "What would you like to do?"

"I want a specialty," said Vera-Ellen. "I don't want to be in any chorus."

And she opened with a specialty at the Casa Mañana. Along with a trained seal who played "My Country, 'Tis Of Thee."

She did some work in other clubs, later, for the experience, and then a minor part in Very Warm For May, the Broadway musical.

The next show was Higher and Higher, with Jack Haley. Then she was a Rockette for three months, and lost nine pounds, and left. She went into Panama Hattie, and did the lead on the road; then she came to New York and went into By Jupiter.

Richard Rodgers and Larry Hart had done the music for By Jupiter, and Mr. Hart liked Vera-Ellen.

"If I ever do a show of my own," he told her, "you'll have a good part."

She thought it was one of those nice things people say, and she didn't worry about it.

But Mr. Hart really did do a show of his own—Connecticut Yankee, it was—and she really did get a good part. It opened in Philadelphia, and she stopped the show four times.

Major Bowes saw Yankee, in New York, and a week afterward, a special messenger came to Vera-Ellen's dressing-room with a package from the Major. Mrs. Rohe tore it open. "It's a record, Vera-Ellen."

It was a record of Vera-Ellen's performance on Cincinnati Night. Gone but not forgotten.

Major Bowes wasn't the only person who caught Vera-Ellen in Yankee. Mr. Sam Goldwyn was among those present opening night, and he sent for Vera-Ellen.

She and her mother went up to his hotel. There was a contract lying on the table.

"You can sign here," Mr. Goldwyn said.

Vera-Ellen looked startled. "Oh, we didn't come to sign anything," she said. "We just came to talk things over."

By the time she finally signed, Mr. Goldwyn was beginning to worry.

She had a run of the play contract with Yankee, and she went on tour.

One of the nicest things that happened to her during the play's run was meeting Chuck O'Brien, Marilyn Miller's husband.

He came around after the show and said, very quietly, "You're the only person I've ever seen that I've wanted to play Marilyn." Vera-Ellen's still hoping she may do the Marilyn Miller movie.

Her very first picture was Danny Kaye's Wonder Man, and for that, she had to learn double-talk. She was thin, then, but there's something in the California air—

By the time retakes were shot, she'd gained thirty-five pounds. She had to stop eating for three days before she could squeeze into her costumes.

She lives in a little rented house in Hollywood, and it's currently stuffed with souvenirs of last Valentine's Day. Fans sent her a sweater, a ring, a lace hat, a set of dishes, two dozen roses—

She turned to her mother Valentine's night, and she had tears in her eyes. "People are so kind."

drop it in a pail of water! . . .

There was another present, a black thing, with gadgets, and pieces of glass. She was afraid to touch it, it looked so complicated. One of the boys from the studio was over, and she hauled it out. "What's this?"

He roared. "Why, girls, it's a projector!"

"Oh," Vera-Ellen said, replacing it tenderly. So now she's got a projector. But she's got nothing in the world to project.

And no time for projection, if she had. What with working, and French Monday nights, and choir Thursday nights, and practicing singing. She wishes the people next door would go right on having their floors sanded. It means she can practice singing at the top of her lungs, and nobody will call the police.

One Sunday afternoon, Vera-Ellen took the phone off the hook (they have a party line that never stops ringing), and lay down for a nap.

Two hours later, she was awakened by her mother. "Honey—" Mrs. Rohe's voice was husky. "Somebody's trying to get in the house. They're even using some kind of key in the lock."

Together, they went down to investigate, and there, outside the door, was a delegation from the phone company, and a bunch of irate neighbors, and the landlord. It seemed that if the Rohes left their phone off the hook, none of the other people on the line could use theirs, either!

Vera-Ellen doesn't date very much. Not only is her schedule full, but Hollywood's a funny place. Vera-Ellen has no Cadillac, no swimming pool, no mink coat, and she doesn't go out with married men. Her rules of behavior concerning men are not predicated on any (Continued on page 105)

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Yes, even finest soaps and soap shampoos hide the natural lustre of your hair with dulling soap film

- Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave dulling soap film!
- Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights.
- Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely!
- Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant!
- Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic!
- Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl!

HALO REVEALS THE HIDDEN BEAUTY OF YOUR HAIR!

Don't Write it- SAY IT!

send talking letters on

Recordio Discs

How much easier to pick up a microphone and talk to your family or friends. All the warmth, inflection and personality of your voice reaches them on the easily mailed RECORDIO DISC.

RECORDIO DISCS are perfect for Holiday Greetings or Business Letters . . . they offer fast, economical recording. Special mailing envelopes carry your recordings in safety. RECORDIO DISCS are available in lightweight fiber base or long lasting, lustrous black aluminum base. Easily filed for future reference, they may be played back on any electric phonograph.

Gay, colorful, Holiday Greeting Labels will personalize your message.

to be sure, always specify...

Recordio Discs and Recordiopoint Needles

WILCOX-GAY CORPORATION • CHARLOTTE, MICH.

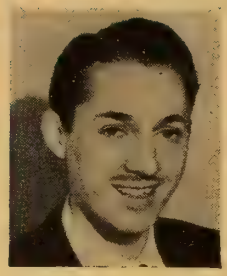
MANUFACTURERS OF

Recordio

T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. 122M

....the World's Finest Home Recording Instrument

sweet and hot



By LEONARD FEATHER

Highly recommended
*Recommended
No stars: average

POPULAR

AS LONG AS I LIVE—*Kay Kyser-Jane Russell (Columbia)
Critics to the contrary, The Outlaw gal is a promising singer, with nice tone, good phrasing and a beat. Give her a chance, puleeze!

GUILTY—Ella Fitzgerald (Decca), Tony Mottola (Majestic)
Listen to Ella's disc for some of the greatest singing ever heard on records.

LULLABY LANE ALBUM—*Joe Dosh (Continental)
Only a couple of years ago, the good-looking young fellow who's heard on these records was an FBI agent! The transformation is amazing—he couldn't have been better at sleuthing than he is at singing. Dosh was on the Hit Parade for a while, but they never announced his name—just said, "Sing it, Joe!" This is a promising disc debut.

NO GREATER LOVE—Billie Holiday (Decca); *Woody Herman (Columia); Charlie Spivak (Victor)
This is Woody's first record as a solo singer, using only an instrumental quartet.

SUNDAY KIND OF LOVE—*Jo Stafford (Capitol)
For the first time on records, Jo's deadpan voice has life and warmth as she sings this great tune.

THAT'S MY DESIRE—*Frankie Laine (Mercury); *Martha Tilton (Capitol); *Woody Herman (Columbia); Ray Anthony (Sonora)
After singing for years in Cleveland and Hollywood night clubs, Frankie Laine made his own name with this record as well as starting a big revival of this old song.

HOT JAZZ

BABS' THREE BIPS AND A BOP—*Lop-Pow (Blue Note)
Bebob music adapted to scat-vocal style. Cute idea.

IKE CARPENTER—*Jeep's Blues; Things Ain't What They Used To Be (Modern Music)
This young pianist, who looks like Artie Shaw and talks like Senator Claghorn, does well with his 12-piece Hollywood group in two Ellington tunes, with Lucky Thompson on tenor sax.

DUKE ELLINGTON—Carnegie Hall Album (Musicraft)

METRONOME ALL STARS—Sweet Lorraine (featuring Sinatra); *Nat Meets June (Nat Cole & June Christy) (Columbia)

MARY LOU WILLIAMS—*Lonely Moments (Disc); also recorded by *Benny Goodman (Capitol); *Milt Orent-Frank Roth (Disc); *Gene Sedric (Harmonia); *Edmond Hall (Continental)
Versatile Mary Lou Williams wrote a different arrangement of her own tune for each of these records, except the first, on which she plays it herself, as a piano solo.

FROM THE MOVIES

CARNEGIE HALL—Beware My Heart: Larry Douglas (Signature)

EGG AND I, THE—Title Song: Sammy Kaye (Victor); Helen Forrest (M-G-M)
This department's nomination for the most synthetic song title and the most feeble, ungrammatical lyrics of the year.

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN—I Believe: *Louis Armstrong (Victor); *Frank Sinatra (Columbia); *Artie Shaw-Mel Torme (Musicraft)

LADIES' MAN—What Am I Gonna Do About You: Harry James-Art Lund (Columbia)

RAZOR'S EDGE, THE—Mam'selle: Frankie Laine (Mercury); *Pied Pipers (Capitol); George Towne (Sonora); Ray Bloch (Signature)
The Laine version is zooming, but Art Lund's on M-G-M, listed here last month, is still way ahead.

UNDERCURRENT—Theme music: *Al Goodman (Victor)
Two sides of good movie background music. This one, based on parts of Brahms' Third Symphony, features pianist Vladimir Sokoloff. Overleaf is some Schumann music from Song of Love with the spotlight on Oscar Shumsky, violinist. It's a 12-incher.

(Continued from page 103) how-holy-I-am attitude. She simply doesn't want to get hurt, and she's living in a town that's famous for hurting people.

She's talked to her mother about it, often. "You and Dad being with me is what helps. We manage to have a normal life."

"You'd be just the same," Alma Rohe says.

Vera-Ellen's not so sure. "If you're alone, and you don't want to be alone, you do a lot of things—"

One of the biggest events in Vera-Ellen's life was going back to Wadena, Minnesota, where her grandmother lives, for this last Christmas.

"I don't know if I can stand another Hollywood Christmas," her mother had said. "All those pink and yellow surrealist trees."

In Wadena, it was thirty below zero, and there were twelve inches of snow.

There was a real, green tree, tall and cold and smelling so wonderful it made you feel four years old again.

And Aunt Julia and Uncle Fred handing you a pan of popped corn. "Here, string this, for the tree."

Grandma, eighty-seven years old, and as sound and alert as they come, stood Vera-Ellen off and studied her. "Gained a little weight, haven't you?" She wasn't impressed with Vera-Ellen's being a movie star. Grandmothers have a way of loving their grandchildren for simple biological reasons, and movie stars or school teachers, it's all the same to them.

That didn't go for the little kids in the neighborhood. The little kids would come around, and Uncle Fred would stand in the window, watching them. "What in thunder are those kids doing?"

Vera-Ellen grinned. "They're writing my name in the snow."

Uncle Fred would snort. "Don't they think we know your name?"

It was a lively Christmas.

And just as they were leaving, Grandma Rohe approached Vera-Ellen, and thrust a white table-cloth into her hands. "Thought you might need it there," she said. "Hear there's a linen shortage."

Vera-Ellen took the cloth, and got out fast, so she wouldn't break down and disgrace herself.

All the way home, she hugged that cloth. "She wanted to do something special for me, Mother. Nobody ever had a family like mine."

Friends have asked Mrs. Rohe if she isn't proud of Vera-Ellen, and she says no. "I wouldn't say I was proud. I'm just happy, because Vera-Ellen's got what she wanted."

So we give you Vera-Ellen, who got what she wanted. And who looks like a baby Jane Wyman, and who can't bear to part with her old ballet shoes.

(Once, at the studio, she steeled herself, and hurled 'em all out to be carted away, but the man who cleaned up thought it was a mistake, and set them back in the dressing-room. She's never had the heart to try it again.)

We give you Vera-Ellen, the girl who made it. She gained enough weight so she kin diet.

AUGUST ISSUE

He may be Forever Amber's now—but, come August, and he's all ours! Who? Cornel Wilde, of course. You'll find him in action and in close-up on the cover of our August issue—on sale July 11.

Take a Rhythm ...from Sweet to Hot!

(IN THESE 3 SWELL RCA VICTOR ALBUMS)

NEW Hawaiian Album

"SONG OF THE ISLANDS and other Hawaiian Favorites," by Ray Kinney and his Coral Islanders with the Mullen Sisters. Eight recordings, in authentic Hawaiian style.

Song of the Islands — My Isle of Golden Dreams
Lovely Hula Hands — Hawaiian Paradise
Sweet Leilani — Blue Hawaii
Little Brown Gal — Aloha Oe

Ask for RCA Victor Album P-176, $3.15

ROLLICKING Fats Waller ALBUM

"FATS WALLER FAVORITES" includes some of Fats' most famous recordings . . . an album you'll play for years!

I Can't Give You Anything but Love, Baby
Honeysuckle Rose — The Joint Is Jumpin
Your Feet's Too Big — Two Sleepy People
Ain't Misbehavin' — The Minor Drag
Hold Tight

Ask for RCA Victor Album P-151, $3.15

SOLID Hot Jazz ALBUM

"NEW 52nd ST. JAZZ," by Dizzy Gillespie, Coleman Hawkins and their Orchestras . . . 15 top musicians from New York's famous 52nd St.:

52nd Street Theme — Ol' Man Rebop
Night in Tunisia — Anthropology
Say It Isn't So — Low Flame
Spotlite — Allen's Alley

Ask for RCA Victor Album HJ-9, $3.75

NATURALLY...ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS!

Two "exclusives"—Victor's billion-record skill . . . plus RCA's electronic wizardry . . . make music sound so natural on RCA Victor Records! Hear them on a Victrola radio-phonograph.

Prices are suggested list prices, exclusive of taxes.

HEAR BOB MERRILL on the RCA Victor Program. Sundays, 2 p.m., EDT, over NBC Network.

Victrola—Trade Mark Registered United States Patent Office. Radio Corporation of America.

THE STARS WHO MAKE THE HITS ARE ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS

RCA "HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

GIRLS! Want quick curls?

WHAT girl doesn't want quick curls these days! Especially when that favorite fella gives you a call at the last minute. With New Wildroot Hair Set you can set that favorite hair-do in less time. It's absolutely tops for quick good grooming that's so important these days. New Wildroot Hair Set contains processed Lanolin. Leaves any texture of hair soft, natural-looking, and at its lovely best. Replaces old-fashioned thick gummy wave sets. Light bodied. Faster drying. Lets you style your favorite hair-do at home quickly, without fuss or disappointment.

NEW WILDROOT HAIR SET

CLEAN

When looks count, get the Mufti bottle, clean those spots! Mufti gives you not 1, but 4 tested cleaning ingredients . . . cleans so many spots from so many fabrics—and cleans in a jiffy!

NOT 1 BUT 4

MUFTI
SPOT REMOVER

LONGER LASTING GRIP
FOR REPEATED USE.
SMOOTH FINISH INSIDE AND OUT!

Scoldy Lox BOBBY PINS
NEVER LET YOUR HAIR DOWN

MODERN SCREEN GOES TO ARROWHEAD SPRINGS

(Continued from page 31)

were pretty expensive whimsies to indulge, prices ranging from $1.00 for an unspectacular foot bath to $4.00 for the super-duper mineral mud job. However, this vacation was sort of a second honeymoon, and the budget was given a two-week back seat.

Meals prepared by world-famous chefs and served to them on the terraces, beside the palm-ringed pool or in the main dining-room, averaged about $7 a day for each of them, and their bed-room with sun-deck was $22 a day. If they'd wanted to be really fancy, they could have taken a $40-a-day suite! Golf rates were comparatively low at $1.50, as was horseback-riding at $2 an hour. Esther rides like Roy Rogers, is a dream in riding clothes and consequently is nuts about the sport. But Ben feels like a heel every time he gets on a horse. He's six four and weighs at least 225 pounds, and he keeps feeling that the horse should be riding him.

They both love swimming, and Ben was on his school and college swimming teams. He claims he never could do a respectable crawl, though, till "Es" gave him lessons. Her story is that he could show her how.

It was strictly a dream-vacation, a beautiful damn-the-expense interlude in the lives of a really hard-working, thrifty couple. When they left to go back to work (Esther to M-G-M, where she's just finished Fiesta; Ben to CBS, where he's on the Joan Davis show) did they think they'd gotten their money's worth? We'll say! Says Esther, "This holiday will last me till I'm an old, old lady. Then I'll come back for a couple more mud baths and massages—and I'll be good for another fifty years!"

LARRY AND VIV—By David Niven

(Continued from page 42)

in Britain as it is in the good old U. S. A.

Larry paid no attention to the raucous Army razz for the Navy—because that's what it was. He went on with the scene and pretty soon you didn't hear any razzes. In fact, pretty soon you could have heard a pin drop. When it was over the roof shuddered with the ovation he got.

It's not my purpose here to estimate Laurence Olivier's stature as an actor. He has London and Paris and New York at his feet with his marvelous Old Vic company. He produced, directed and starred in Henry V, which some people think is the greatest film ever produced. He came up this year for an Academy Award. All in all, Laurence Olivier is quite a boy. I've learned to admire him, though, for other things, too.

We were together the day England declared war. I remember Larry saying "There must be something I can do."

I couldn't tell him what it was. No one could. But I think the decision he made required an extra amount of courage. While he was finishing his Hollywood job and clearing up his affairs, he took flying lessons out in San Fernando Valley, every spare minute he had, at his own expense, to make himself valuable in a war. He was thirty-six then, well over-age for combat flying. He knew he faced a tedious war service even if he passed the tests.

I've been rattling on quite a bit about Larry—but I don't want to give the impression that he's the whole show in the famous Olivier-Leigh team.

On the stage and in person, Larry and Vivien complement each other like tea and cake. Matter of fact, their careers have travelled along side by side for years. They met when Larry took a Shakespeare company to Denmark to play Hamlet in the original castle of Elsinore. Vivien played Ophelia, his luckless sweetheart. When he came to Hollywood to make Wuthering Heights, Viv traveled to New York with a Shakespearean company. She flew to Hollywood to see Larry.

I had never met Vivien Leigh until the day she walked on our set, but I've never changed my instant impression that she was the most beautiful woman I've ever seen. I wasn't the only one who thought so. Myron Selznick, Larry's Hollywood agent, whisked Vivien straight over to his brother, David, and the great search for Scarlett O'Hara was over.

As I said, Vivien Leigh is the most beautiful woman I've ever seen outside an art gallery, and remember I've seen her in dusty jodhpurs, slacks, in a kitchen dress. In person, she's dainty, speaks quietly and moves gracefully. With Larry's restless stride, his shoulders hunched always as if he's wearing armor, they make an amazing-looking couple wherever they are.

No pair is gayer, more eternally bubbling with wit, fun and life than the Oliviers. I've heard Viv, many a time, discussing some world-shaking question with a British peer or government big shot, and right in the middle of the conversation slay him absolutely by saying, "Oh, but that's all absolute rot, you know."

I met Larry Olivier first years ago. Ann Todd took me backstage when I was just out of Sandhurst and introduced me. Larry was in a London play then, a flop, but it didn't keep him from being completely charming. I had no idea of acting at that time, but Larry made an indelible impression on me, and when a freak of fate later landed me in Hollywood and set me to making faces myself, he immediately became my ideal as an actor. In between, I saw Larry only once in New York, when I called him up to sell him some whiskey, and instead he gave me some. The next time we met was while making Wuthering Heights together in Hollywood. I had to cry over Merle Oberon's body in the death scene, and I couldn't for the life of me.

They brought out the glycerin blower, and at last I shed floods of tears over poor Merle, prone on the bier. Larry was amused. He still insists that what came out of my eyes was not tears at all but Scotch whiskey.

Viv is a marvelous hostess; both she and Larry are experts about food and especially wines. They've made a hobby of wines, know all the vintages, bottling, shipping dates and everything.

Since the war they've kept a cottage in Chelsea, the artists' section of London. Most gala evenings at Larry and Viv's, I remember, usually wound up around three a.m., with Viv at the piano and Larry singing the whole of Handel's "Messiah"—his prime musical feat. It's long and, the way he sings it, frightfully noisy. They love card games of all descriptions, and Vivien is absolutely crazy about those twenty-question quiz books, probably because she always wins. But often the evening resolves itself into just sparkling conversation, at which the Oliviers excel.

They work hard at hobbies on top of all their stage and screen work. The main one they share is collecting old furniture and paintings, although how they manage to keep their collection I'll never know. Both Larry and Viv are supremely generous. Vivien has sent my David a first edition on every birthday, so he'll have a valuable library when he grows up. I once made the mistake of admiring a painting of Larry's, and he handed it to me. I wouldn't take it, of course—it was worth thousands—but that's the sort of chap he is.

Money means absolutely nothing to that pair. The play's the thing, frankly, and what Larry has accomplished as guiding genius of the Old Vic is, I'm sure, the proudest feat of his life—despite the fact that it has brought him none of the riches his talent could command in Hollywood.

Recently, when he'd finished his Old Vic engagement in New York and hopped off from Newfoundland for England, his plane, you'll remember, lost an engine in mid-air and cracked up. Garson Kanin, one of his best friends, heard of the accident in New York. He called Larry promptly to ask if he and Viv were okay.

"We're quite all right, thanks," Larry told him. "And I'm awfully glad you called me. I couldn't possibly have called you." Garson asked how come. "The toll's $18," Larry explained, "and I haven't the price."

one masterpiece at a time . . .

Both Larry and Viv are impatient with anything short of perfection, in everything: I have a producer friend in Hollywood who pesters me constantly to get them to read a movie scenario. I've sent them several tempting scripts but they always come back, unread, with a note of explanation from Larry. "If I read it, I might like it and want to do it. Then I'd take my attention away from what I'm doing. That wouldn't be fair. Wait until this is over." That's how conscientious he is when he works.

However, Larry at least has some Philistine leanings. For instance, he has a weakness for joining clubs. He never goes in one, just joins, buys the club tie and pays dues. The harder they are to join, the more tempting they are to Larry.

I belonged to an ultra-conservative West End Club which Larry yearned to join. I boosted his stock pretty thoroughly with the members, stressing the fact that he was an officer in the Navy, from a family who traced back to the Norman conquest and all that rot. I finally wangled an introduction for Larry with the committee, who were about as familiar with the stage as they were with Timbuktu.

The interrogator was Lord So-and-So. He fixed a cold eye on Larry. "Tell me, Oliver," (he called him Oliver) he said, "Are you at the Admiralty?"

Larry never flicked an eyelash. "Oh no," he replied. "I'm at the Garrick!" That was the theater he was playing, but the old boy never got it! And now Larry's a member in good standing!

Although he works night and day, Larry enjoys the solid health of an ox. He has practically no dissipating vices—except work. They bought Notley Abbey, a Fifteenth Century manor house in lovely Oxfordshire, at the close of the war, and when I last saw them they had great restoration plans—and also enough work to keep them happy for years.

But if anyone thinks either one is going to settle down at Notley and grow gracefully old, they've another think coming about the Oliviers. Neither Larry or Vivien will ever give up acting, I'm sure as long as they can toddle. And that—I'm also sure—will be quite a time yet.

Are you really sure of your present deodorant? Test it against Fresh.
See for yourself why more and more women are switching to Fresh—the new cream deodorant they find the most effective and so gentle

Use FRESH and be lovelier to love

Lovely to know . . . that you can really rely on Fresh. Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-stopping ingredient known to science!

Lovely to use . . . creamy Fresh stays smooth . . . never greasy, gritty or sticky . . . doesn't dry out.

And gentle . . . Fresh contains a patented ingredient that makes it gentle to skin, safe for fabrics.

No wonder . . . more and more women are switching to Fresh.

Now in 59¢ economy size. Also 10¢, 25¢, 43¢.

The Ideal Way to Reduce

LOSE FAT

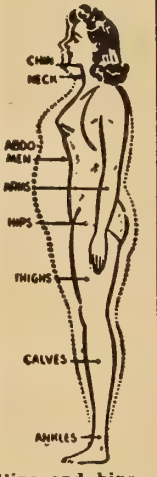
Lose Pounds
Lose Inches

REDUCE

In the Privacy of Your Home

WONDER BATH

Helps you to relax while reducing. LOSE WEIGHT with this new, easy, pleasant, harmless method. No more tiring exercises, no more laxatives or drugs. No starvation diets. You just take a warm, soothing, comforting WONDER BATH, just rest and relax for 15 minutes this healthful, pleasant way. By following the WONDER BATH method, you will be amazed and delighted at the way your fat and bulges just seem to melt away. If you are normally overweight you can easily lose pounds and inches. The more you use the WONDER BATH method, the more weight you lose. This is the easy, pleasant, harmless way used by the most expensive and exclusive Reducing Salons. This is the way many New York and Hollywood stage, screen and radio people help to keep their figures slim, lovely and glamorous. You may now say goodbye to your heavy waistline and hips and those unnecessary, unsightly bulges at a trifling cost.



The WONDER BATH method is an amazing new way to reduce superfluous fatty tissues on most all parts of the body.

FREE A large size jar of Special Formula WONDER Body Cream and "FIGURE BEAUTY" will be included absolutely FREE with your order for WONDER BATH. To achieve best results, this Special Formula Body Cream should be used after each WONDER BATH.

10-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Use the WONDER BATH method for 10 days at our expense. If you are not truly delighted with your loss of weight, if you don't look and feel better—return the remaining contents and your money will be refunded in full.

ACADEMY VITA PRODUCTS CO., Dept. DM-7
Academy Building, Newark 2, N. J.

Please send me postpaid, 60-day supply of WONDER BATH and Free Special Formula WONDER Body Cream with "FIGURE BEAUTY." I enclose $5.00 cash, check or money order. If I am not 100% delighted, I may return the remaining contents within 10 days and my money will be promptly refunded.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

C.O.D. Orders. Send $1.00 deposit. Pay postman balance of $4.00 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. Same Money-Back Guarantee.

DOROTHY KILGALLEN SELECTS "THE EGG AND I"

(Continued from page 14)

stay solemn if you will. Just try not to giggle or guffaw. Marjorie Main, giving one of the great characterizations of all time, will make you howl. Percy Kilbride, a dream of an actor and tailored for rural roles, will reach right out of the celluloid and tickle you where you are most ticklish. The problems of Claudette Colbert as the unwillingly agricultural wife will touch the soul and funnybone of every woman who ever wrestled with an omelet, let alone a chicken farm.

The Egg And I has its gentle moments, too. You may find a tear in the eye that does not stem from laughter when the MacDonalds lose their fields and orchards and outbuildings in a night fire but discover the generosity of their neighbors, the way you always feel warmly moved when you uncover simple goodness. That scene is fine and genuine, undoubtedly based on the splendid kind of unrecorded human history that goes on in farm communities year upon year.

As I watched the film, I kept wondering who would enjoy it more—the city woman, to whom a farm is a mysterious and terrifying experiment, or the farm woman who has been through it all as the routine of a lifetime and emerged with a well-earned disdain for any female afraid of dirt or weather or early rising or the hazards of nature.

I decided the city woman would contribute the loudest guffaws in the audience. She can sympathize while applauding with hands like velvet. She can snicker, but she has never made love to a porker. She can root for the heroine, but she has never slept with a sieve for a roof, nor danced the barn dance equivalent of the schottische with an Indian brave. She can laugh with impunity, because the black-of-night arisings are not hers—and there is something fantastically ludicrous about getting up at four-thirty every morning when you are not the one who is doing the getting up.

In The Egg And I, Claudette Colbert is flawlessly cast as the only female alive with enough humor to survive the combined blessings and curses of the simple life as lived on a farm and with the character played by Fred MacMurray. Fred manages to convey exactly the proper amounts of intelligent stupidity and blind idealism to make you see why he allowed his wife to go through what she went through, and almost enough charm to make you understand why she stayed around as long as she stayed.

Don't miss this picture, if you like gay entertainment, even though you may never again enjoy your breakfast, thinking of what poor Claudette Colbert went through to get you a couple of fried eggs.

PIXIE FROM DIXIE

(Continued from page 35)

face to match, with oversize, slightly slanty hazel eyes, taffy-silk hair and a nice unactressy laugh.

Diego Rivera, the famous Mexican artist, met Evelyn in Mexico City a few weeks ago. The first time she wore a red suit, red beret, with her blond hair tumbling. He took a look and sighed. "You remind me of a Francesca painting!" Next day he saw her again. Evvie was hatless in black. "You're exactly like an aristocratic Van Dyke," he corrected himself. The third time, Rivera had even another idea. Evvie wore a peasant dress. "A Raphael madonna!" he proclaimed.

Hollywood press agents in the past have struggled to label Evelyn with this and that glamor tag, but they roll off her like raindrops off a slicker. The only one that's endured—around the Columbia lot, at least—is "Pixie."

By nature, however, Evelyn Keyes is about as pixie-ish as Joe Di Maggio. The record shows she's been as direct as a base hit about that, ever since, at a tender 17, she shook the red clay dust of Atlanta, Georgia, from her sneakers and headed for Hollywood, to visit her sister, wide eyed and green.

"I came out to get in the movies," Evelyn announced the minute she stepped off the train. "I'll have no part of any such silly idea!" said her sister.

She did though, because by knowing a Hollywood agent—her lone acquaintance in the studio set—she's the one who sparked the miracle.

They were sitting in a Hollywood restaurant one day when this agent said hello, and spotted baby sister Evelyn. "Would you like to be in pictures?"

"That's what I'm here for," Evelyn answered.

The agent took her to Cecil B. DeMille the next morning. C.B. looked her over and signed her pronto, without even a screen test. To this day, Evelyn thinks it must have been because of her fingernails. She wasn't wearing any polish that day, as all the rest of the girls in the world, practically, were. "If there's anything that makes Mr. DeMille see red," the agent informed her later, "it's nail polish. How did you ever figure that out?" Evelyn shrugged. If people think you're smart, she thought, let 'em think it.

Almost every one of the 20-odd Columbia pictures Evvie's made she's taken seriously. When she played the blind girl, she spent a week at the blind school in Los Angeles. She did a cockney maid once and pal-ed around with some English servants in Hollywood. She's never been a shrinking violet about going after what she wanted, either.

Evelyn got the idea it would be swell experience to play in a technicolor western. She pestered the producer about it thoroughly, but in the middle of her campaign she had to leave town. From the minute her train pulled out, this harassed mogul got a wire every hour on the hour. "I'm an old cow hand from the Rio Grande. How about it? Evelyn." "Don't fence me in. Let me play that buckaroo babe. Keyes." After due bombardment the producer succumbed. "You win," he wired Evelyn. Evelyn strapped on her pistol belt for The Desperadoes.

When Al Jolson okayed her to play his toe-tapping wife in The Jolson Story, she plunged into concentrated dancing lessons, tackling ballet, modern and tap. She worked Sundays, nights and holidays. By the time the dance scenes came around, the double the studio had hired was out of a job; Evvie could do them herself.

She carries this deceptive determination and "obey that impulse" complex right into her private life. Take her marriage. . .

Evelyn barely knew her husband, John Huston, the talented writer-director, when they decided to tie the knot. She'd met his dad, Walter, once on a flight to Seattle during the last election campaign, and they'd chatted away about John, then off in the army making war documentary films. She met him finally last spring at one of Lady Mendl's parties. Later that summer, one July night, they sat at Romanoff's after a late dinner, got off on the subject of marriage (Evvie's marriage was with Director Charles Vidor) and they had a lot of mutual ideas on the subject. Right in the middle of the discussion, they happened to look at each other and that was it. They both chorused, "Why not now?"

It was almost midnight. Evvie was in the middle of Johnny O'Clock then, and about the only favorable feature, as Evvie recalls, was that she had a nine o'clock call the next morning instead of the usual six. They figured they'd have time to make it to Las Vegas and back. They called over "Prince" Mike Romanoff, their royal host, and told him what was up.

Mike got Paul Mantz, the perennial Hollywood flying Cupid. He had a ship ready in Glendale. There was just one other small matter then—the ring. Mike fixed that, too. "Someone dropped one in my swimming pool the other day," he said. "I'll go get it." He came back with a nifty gold band which Evvie still wears.

So that July night they flew to Las Vegas, walked into the courthouse around 3 A.M., and a half-hour later said "I do," with their pilot, Paul, and the cab driver as witnesses. By morning they were back in Hollywood and Evvie scurried off to the studio, on time, but a little puffy-eyed from no sleep.

The Hustons live in a cozy pine-and-fieldstone ranchhouse, tucked away on seven acres of a sunny cove in the San Fernando Valley. John designed and built it in his bachelor days just before he went off to war. Evvie had never seen the place before she moved in. What's more, she'd never even seen his wonderful wartime documentary classics, Report From the Aleutians and San Pietro filmed right in the middle of a brutal battle in Italy.

even steven . . .

John evened that up because he'd never seen any of Evvie's movies. The first time he saw her in action was on their delayed honeymoon trip to New York last fall. They walked into the Music Hall one day, and Evvie came out with her nails bitten bare. She hadn't seen The Jolson Story until then, either. But they both liked it, so everything came out all right.

Ever since their marriage, they've been discovering things about each other. Evvie walked into an art gallery on 57th Street one day because she knew John was very art-happy. She wanted to surprise him with a new painting for Christmas. "Who is a good modern painter?" Evvie inquired.

"Well," said the dealer, "your husband's pretty fair himself." Turned out painting was John Huston's first love, but he'd never mentioned the fact to Evvie. When they got back home, she made him dig out his canvases and unlimber his palette and paints again.

One other thing Evvie discovered about the tall, gangling, Abe-Lincoln-like John Huston, is that he's a millionaire in friends. One night they came home and found 150 guests awaiting them and a terrific party—orchestra, outdoor dancing floors and fancy frills—all staged as a surprise by well-wishers like Burgess Meredith and Paulette Goddard, the William Wylers, Jennifer Jones and six or seven other close Huston pals. They also found a burro, grazing out in the front lawn, with a sign, "Treasure of the Sierra Madre," the name of John's new picture, on his side—a wedding gift

"Our marriage was all thorns . . ."

Ned was habitually bristling like a cactus, over nothing at all . . . was seldom his sweet, loving self any more. What had happened to our perfect marriage? Why, this: I only thought I knew about feminine hygiene. I didn't realize that careless now-and-then care could spoil one's married happiness . . . until my doctor enlightened me. Yes—then, he recommended using "Lysol" brand disinfectant for douching—always.

"Now it's love in bloom"

Happiness is, to the heart, as sunshine to a flower . . . and we're so happy again now! Ever since I began following my doctor's advice on feminine hygiene—always use "Lysol" for douching. No more salt, soda or other homemade solutions for me! Not when far more effective "Lysol"—a real germ-killer—is so easy and economical to use. As the doctor said, "Lysol" is a thorough yet gentle cleanser . . . and it works!

More women use "LYSOL" for Feminine Hygiene than any other germicide . . . for 6 reasons

Reason No. 2: NON-CAUSTIC . . . GENTLE . . ."Lysol" douching solution is non-caustic, non-injurious to delicate membrane—not harmful to vaginal tissue. Try the easy-to-follow "Lysol" way!

Note: Douche thoroughly with correct "Lysol" solution . . . always!

For Feminine Hygiene use "Lysol" always!

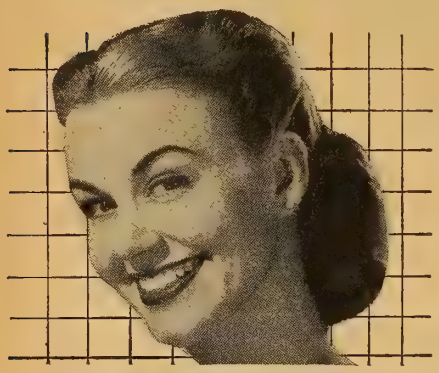
Brand Disinfectant

WOMEN 'IN THE KNOW' thrill over this HIGHER TYPE Intimate Feminine Hygiene

So Powerful Yet Absolutely Safe To Tissues



Greaseless Suppository Assures Continuous Medication For Hours

Easier—Daintier—More Convenient

There has long been an urgent need of a higher type method for intimate feminine cleanliness. One that would be powerful yet absolutely safe to tissues—one that would be easier, daintier, more convenient to use. Thanks to Zonitors—you have it!

Positively Non-Irritating, No Burns, No Smart

Zonitors are greaseless, stainless, snow-white vaginal suppositories. They are not the type which quickly melt away. Instead, when inserted—Zonitors instantly begin to release their powerful germicidal properties and continue to do so for hours. Positively non-burning, non-poisonous, non-irritating.

Easy To Carry If Away From Home

Zonitors actually destroy offending odor. Help guard against infection. They are so powerfully effective they immediately kill every germ they touch. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE Zonitors kill every reachable germ and keep them from multiplying. All drugstores.

Zonitors

(Each sealed in separate glass vial)

FREE: Mail this coupon today for free booklet sent in plain wrapper. Reveals frank intimate facts. Zonitors, Dept. ZMSC-77, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

from Burgess and Paulette.

There are plenty of items, too, that Evvie's fascinated new husband has learned about the pretty pixie he married. Such as, for instance, that his bride is likely to do anything that pops into her lovely head.

He flew down to Mexico recently to hunt locations for his picture the same time that Burgess Meredith went to New York on radio business. The two forlorn Hollywood widows, Paulette Goddard and Evvie, promoted plane seats that night and arrived in Acapulco the next morning to appear before the startled Johnnie, just in from the jungle, like two lovely apparitions. By now John knows that what she sets her mind on, she does.

Evvie had her convertible packed with presents to deliver last Christmas Eve. A California rain started bucketing down in gray sheets. "Better wait until tomorrow, Ellavyn" (that's what he calls her), suggested John.

"Pooh," said Evvie.

She whizzed off and on her winding way up a hill to the first stop, slithered off the road and smacked into a bank. She finally sloshed through the mud up a hill and wove her way into the first house she could find, looking like a drowned rat. Who should open the door but Katharine Hepburn, whom Evvie had never met but had always wanted to.

Katie slipped on her slicker, sloshed back and helped her get started again, couldn't have been nicer, in fact, and Evvie consoled herself, Pollyanna-like, that the accident was worth it.

There are various other vagaries of Ellavyn Keyes that Johnnie Huston has unmasked. She's a tennis shark—can take her embarrassed husband easily; she's so good, in fact, that the pro at the Beverly Hills Tennis Club swears Keyes could have been a champ if she'd gone after racquet work like she has gone after her acting.

She reads four books at a time, and in bed, takes showers on the hour all day long, gets up disgustingly early, likes to dance, but at home, and to play the piano while John plays his harmonica. She eats everything edible, with no wasted thoughts on her dainty figure. She can't stand eating at regular hours and won't let the cook tell her what's coming up for dinner because it spoils the suspense. Any regular habits of life give her the pip. She has no business sense and can't remember dates and engagements. She's very likely to say the wrong thing at the right time. Not long ago Evvie remembered that the funeral of a friend's relative was due but she was afraid she'd waited too late to send flowers. She called. "It's not until tomorrow," said her friend.

"Oh," replied Evvie. "That's just fine." She meant about the time to send flowers—not the unfortunate demise. John tells that one on her when she gets uppity.

In the shopping line, she falls especially for shoes, fancy belts, coats and unusual jewelry. White is the shade that really wows her. She has enough perfumes and colognes to float a small yacht but always forgets to use them. She looks best in peasant things, slacks and sweaters, but when she does dress up, it's formal as all get-out. Nothing in between.

Evvie's current crush is Mexico, and she shares it with John and their good friends Paulette and Burgess. But her real deep-down love is the same one that bit her away back when she was sweet seventeen, and to which she's been strictly faithful all these years. It's a Hollywood career.

"What I really want out of life," says Evelyn Keyes doggedly, "is just one good—I mean—absolutely terrific, stupendous, sensational part!" She thinks while there's life, there's hope.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Notice a lot of new faces in MODERN SCREEN lately? Well, you put them there—by filling in the Questionnaire below and returning it to our editors by the millions (it seems like millions to the gals who tally the scores). And what's even better, thousands of you have already received your FREE three-months subscriptions to MODERN SCREEN. This month we're offering 500 more (August, September, October issues) for the first 500 entries we receive.

QUESTIONNAIRE

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

If any of the stars below is UNPOPULAR with you, please check the box opposite his or her name. If you like them all, please check the box opposite "No dislikes." CHECK ONLY ONE BOX!

☐ Betty Grable	☐ Jeanne Crain
☐ June Allyson	☐ Rita Hayworth
☐ Lauren Bacall	☐ Guy Madison
☐ Bing Crosby	☐ Lana Turner
☐ Jane Wyman	☐ Shirley Temple

☐ No dislikes

My name is.....

My address is .....

City..... Zone..... State..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

IN THE PINK

(Continued from page 64)

Sylvia would sigh. "Darling, relax. I walk all the time. I learned when I was one year old."

Danny's sense of humor just didn't extend to his wife and unborn child. He even used to help Sylvia from one side of the living-room to the other, and after a couple of months, she gave up, and let him help.

They were both sure the baby was going to be a girl, and she'd be named Dena, after Danny's famous song.

Every once in a while, Sylvia would have a qualm, though. "Suppose—oh, I know it's treacherous of me—but suppose it just might be a boy?"

Danny would give her a black look, and she'd apologize. "It's just that I'm alone so much, dear, I'm getting fanciful—"

"If it's a boy," Danny'd say, "we'll name it Waldemere. That'll teach it!"

After that, it didn't dare be a boy.

Danny and Sylvia wouldn't talk about the baby to strangers. They were superstitious. They wouldn't even let anyone except Eddie Dukoff (Danny's manager) give them a present. Eddie bought the crib—with pink ribbons, naturally.

At Thanksgiving, Danny was making personal appearances in Boston, and Sylvia went up to join him, and they came back to New York together. Dena was due the first of December, but she took her time.

December sixteenth, Sylvia went to the hospital. Danny took her over late at night, and then the waiting began. For thirty-six hours, he wandered around with all the other nerve-wracked husbands, talking himself green.

He fastened on one man, and went into a lecture. "It'll be over in no time," he said to the man. "Everything is going to be fine."

The man opened his mouth, and closed it again.

Danny spieled away. He actually has a good deal of medical knowledge, and he gave the man a short course in obstetrics. When he went off for a drink of water, the man walked over to a nurse.

"Your doctors sure have a lot of time to spare around here," he said wonderingly.

The nurse blinked. "What doctor?"

The man pointed to Danny.

"That was no doctor," said the nurse. "That was Danny Kaye."

The man scratched his head and marched back to Danny.

"I tell you," Danny started again, "there's nothing to worry about."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Late last December, I went to see the Broadway show, Call Me Mister, starring Betty Garrett. In the second act, there's a scene called, "A Home Of Our Own," in which a lot of people were involved. I looked about and happened to notice one whom I recognized immediately. It was Larry Parks, star of The Jolson Story and husband of Betty Garrett. I discovered later that Larry, while waiting for his wife in the wings, decided to go on as an extra.

Ruth Cooper,
Bronx, New York

THE SIGN OF GOOD READING

DELL BOOKS • 25c

No. 174

The novel that gave

RUDOLPH VALENTINO

his most famous role—

THE SHEIK

by E. M. Hull

One of the most powerful love stories ever written

now published by DELL BOOKS for only 25c

E. M. Hull's fascinating character of Sheik Ahmed Ben Hassen gave Rudolph Valentino his most perfect role in a movie that still stands as one of the greatest love stories ever produced. Now this famous novel is brought to you by Dell Books for only 25c. For thrilling romantic reading, don't miss it.

If you cannot obtain THE SHEIK in your locality, send 25c for each copy ordered. This offer good in U. S. A. only.

DELL PUBLISHING CO., INC., 149 Madison Ave., N.Y. 16, N.Y.

Please send me ..... copies of THE SHEIK, No. 174.

I enclose $.....,.

Name.....

Address.....

City, Zone & State.....MS-77

NO DULL DRAB HAIR

When You Use This Amazing

4 Purpose Rinse

LOVALON, simple and quick to use after a shampoo, does these 4 things to give YOUR hair glamour and beauty:

1. Brings out lustrous highlights.
2. Adds a rich, natural tint to hair.
3. Rinses away shampoo or soap film.
4. Leaves hair soft, easy to manage.

LOVALON does not permanently dye or bleach — merely tints the hair as it rinses. Comes in 12 flattering shades. Try Lovalon.

At stores which sell toilet goods

25¢ and 10¢ sizes

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PULVEX "DDT" FLEA POWDER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Kills the fleas Quickly! Keeps others off for Days.

Pulvex also comes with ROTENONE, the original formula. BEST FOR CATS.

Either Kind 25¢ & 50¢

Doctors and Dermatologists Agree: Beauty begins with a perfectly clean skin!

AMBROSIA

The Liquid Facial Cleanser Frees Pores of Dirt.

At Drug, Dept. and 10¢ Stores.

For Athlete's Foot Misery

ABSORBINE Jr.

Kills Athlete's Foot "Bugs" on contact

"I ain't worrying," said the man. "Can I have your autograph?"

And then the nurse came out and told Danny that Dena had arrived, and Danny, red-eyed and groggy, just stood there saying, "Thanks. Gee, thanks."

When they let Danny in to see Sylvia, he was still in a state of shock. "A baby, honey," he said. "Honey, a real baby."

"Yep!" She grinned up at him. "One head, and everything. Aren't we terrific?"

The first night Sylvia and Dena came home from the hospital, the nurse and the maid were off.

This delighted Danny, who had made up his mind that he was going to diaper his child.

Five minutes later, he went over and touched Dena. "She's wet," he said in an aggrieved tone.

"Don't take it personally," Sylvia said. "She's a baby. She doesn't mean anything by it."

Danny picked Dena up and diapered her.

Half an hour more, and she was sodden. "She's certainly not very fastidious," her father complained.

For a couple of weeks, he insisted on personally weighing Dena every morning, and then forcing half the population of New York City to listen to a report of her hourly gain in ounces.

"You're wearing the newness off her with all that handling and weighing," Sylvia observed. "First thing you know, she'll be a second-hand child."

But Danny goes on being a wild-eyed father. Packs a hundred thousand pictures, and wants you to pick out points of resemblance between him and her.

"The image of me!" he'll tell people. "'At kid knows which side her bread is buttered on."

He and Sylvia left Dena with the nurse, and went to Miami for a time, because Danny had an engagement there, so now Miami is full of people who know all about Dena Kaye, too.

A friend named Irvin Graham wrote a song called, "Dena's Lullaby," for Danny, and Danny sang it at the club in Miami every night.

And Moss Hart had a contract drawn up for Dena, which specifies that she'll play the lead in Lady in the Dark on Broadway, when she's eighteen years old. (Lady in the Dark started Danny on his way.)

But until she's eighteen, Danny and Sylvia seem willing to support her. They go around like a couple of cocaine addicts; nothing matters but Dena.

one mink, more or less . . .

Sylvia's mink coat was swiped in Florida. She started to feel bad about it. "My beautiful coat," she said mournfully. "My beautiful coat that you bought me."

Danny shrugged. "Think if anything had happened to Dena. There are other mink coats in the world."

"You're right," she said. "You're so right, darling."

The nurse wrote letters to them in Miami, and she signed Dena's name. Danny would study them by the hour, in a half-witted glow. "The pink sweater's too tight!" he'd exclaim. "Imagine that! The pink sweater being too tight. She must be growing."

"That's a habit they have," Sylvia said. "Growing."

Danny'd get to his feet dignifiedly. "Gotta go buy a new pink sweater."

He's the boy who used to jeer at pals who were fathers. "You spoil your kids," he'd tell them. "You buy 'em too much junk."

And now you can find him in Infants' Wear, the long, slender fingers poised expressively over bootees, the bright blue eyes gleaming, the red hair on end with delight.

"It's only Danny," his friends say charitably, looking the other way. Danny, the kid from Brooklyn, who forgot to grow up.

Bradford Street, where he used to live in Brooklyn, was shabby, and crowded with kids, and cats, and flies, but it was exciting in a way that spotless, milk-fed, suburban children never know about.

Danny, going back to visit the old neighborhood a while ago, felt a twinge of nostalgia. And even though he's pleased that he can provide his child with something better, he was, for the moment, in love with Bradford Street, simply because years of his life had been left there.

He remembers a crowded flat, and his mother singing him to sleep.

He remembers how his father loved to dance. Papa Kaye was a tailor, but his heart belonged to the Ballet Russe.

He remembers that he wasn't the most interesting kid on the block, by any means. He wasn't even nearly the most interesting kid. He'd sit on the front stoop for hours, staring at his scuffed knees and thinking, and what he was thinking, nobody ever knew, and he doesn't remember himself.

In the winters, he'd go to school, and be unremarkable. He was an inmate of P.S. 149, and the kids called him "Red," which was logical, since his hair was red. He was the only child in the neighborhood who didn't care to imitate Jackie Coogan.

type casting . . .

Once he got into a show at P.S. 149. It was a minstrel show, and the only prop was a big watermelon slice with holes in it for the performers' heads.

The auditions were interesting, if not awe-inspiring. The teacher went around the room pointing at pupils, telling them to call out their names. Like those army gags where they take the guy if he's breathing, if a kid could talk loud enough, he could act.

Later, the teacher began to worry about having cast Danny. "Who ever heard of a red-headed watermelon seed?" she said irritably.

He appeared in the show, and sang something called, "Let It Rain," and came home to be greeted by his big brothers, Mac and Larry. "How'd it go?" Mac said.

"Oh," said Danny brightly, (he was about twelve then and very witty, he thought) "I thought we looked a little seedy."

P.S. 149 was followed by Thomas Jefferson High School, and there again, Danny made almost no impression on anybody.

Until he came into a class taught by a Mr. Schenck.

Mr. Schenck, poor man, was one of those students' delights—he always looked as though he were whistling, and he used his hands like Zasu Pitts.

If he was fool enough to turn his back on cruel young Danny, the class immediately exploded. Mr. Schenck never did know quite what was going on. By the time he turned around, Danny would be sitting quietly in his seat, studying the sky from the window. He never went so far as to study books, or anything rash like that.

Still, Mr. Schenck put the thing in motion, you might say. Danny being such a success at satire, he decided to run away from home and make his fortune.

He was fourteen, and he mentioned his plan to a neighborhood friend who was also fourteen. In no time flat they were on their way; boy artists. They didn't hit any headlines, but people gave them rides, and bought them meals, and slipped them a buck now and then.

There was a woman in South Carolina. They'd stopped at her farm to offer their services. The only farming on Bradford Street was in cigar boxes, but they assumed they could pick up the knack.

"We'll work," they said hopefully.

The woman had them in, and fed them till they were sick, and let them put on their show with the ukelele, and then led them up to a lovely, clean bed.

After she'd left them, they stared at each other. "What do you suppose it's all about?" Danny said.

The next morning, the woman told them. "I had a son who used to thumb his way around. I haven't seen him in years. I only hope that wherever he is, or wherever he goes, people will be kind to him, too."

Our musical twosome, those hard-hearted men of the world, got wet in the eyes, and lumpy in the throat, and thanked the lady hoarsely, and hitched back home.

Back in Thomas Jefferson, and more boredom. Danny was a lazy kid. All the other characters in the neighborhood knew what they were going to do with their lives. All Danny knew was that he liked to sleep in the morning.

Danny wandered into the pool-room around the corner occasionally, but he discovered that wasn't to be his place. Because his brother Mac heard about it, and followed him in one afternoon, and kicked him right out again. Literally.

Danny got up and dusted himself off, looking pained. "You didn't have to kick so hard," he said. "I'm crummy enough with a cue as it is."

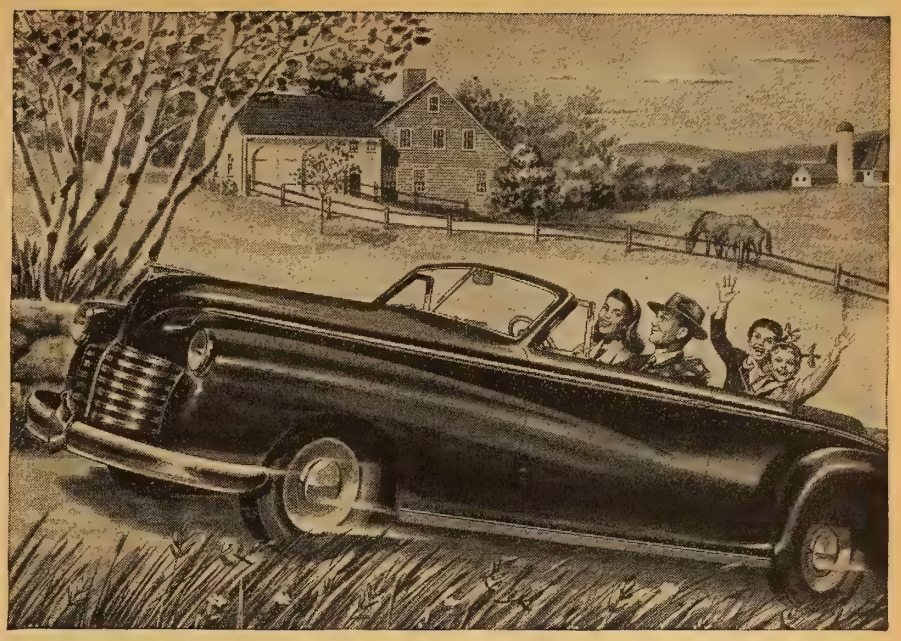
He gave up being a pool shark, and went to work in a dentist's office.

Unfortunately, the dentist was out too much, and during an off-day, Danny picked up an electric drill and made pretty patterns in the woodwork. He was fired.

All the way back to the house, he talked to himself darkly. "Anyhow, I won't have to listen to that darn old girl practising that darn old piano any more," he said. "Her and her sissy piano."

The darn old girl was Sylvia Fine, and her father was the dentist, but she and Danny didn't meet until 1939. You remember how they met, rehearsing for a semi-professional show, how they worked together on the borscht circuit, and got rich and famous thereafter.

And now there's Dena, to bring the whole thing into focus, to round out the picture, and complete the accomplishment. Dena the wonder-child, who'll probably talk double-talk before she's a year old, who's going to have all the advantages the old man missed. Plus the most terrific advantage of all—the old man!



This car is running with an "EMPTY" gas tank!

EVEN AFTER the gas gauge says "empty" a modern car can keep going for a good many miles. Here's why.

Automobile manufacturers know human nature. They figure that, sooner or later, we'll get careless, or misjudge how far we have to go. So the gas gauge is set to show "empty," while there are still a couple of gallons left in the tank.

This reserve supply is a swell idea that has kept many a family from getting stuck.

It's an even better idea for a family's budget!

A reserve supply of dollars is a lifesaver in case of financial emergency. It will keep your family going if sudden illness strikes, or unexpected expenses show up.

And one of the easiest ways to build just such a cash reserve is buying U. S. Savings Bonds on the Payroll Savings Plan!

Millions of Americans have discovered that automatic Bond buying is the quickest, surest way of piling up an emergency fund. And of saving money for other things, too—important things like college for the kids, or a home in the country, or a cash income for later in life.

What's more, the money you save in Bonds buckles right down and starts making more money—in just 10 years you get back $100 for every $75 you put in today.

So keep on buying Bonds on the Payroll Plan. Buy all the extra Bonds you can, at any bank or post office. And remember, you're helping your country as well as yourself—for every Bond you buy plays a part in keeping the U. S. strong and economically sound!

Save the easy way..buy your bonds through payroll savings

Contributed by this magazine in co-operation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

A PUBLIC SERVICE PROJECT — The Advertising Council

HAIR
he'll dream about
... is hair you've kept soft, shining – in spite of summer! Use PROTECSUN, the anti-burning oil for skin and hair ... CREME SET, for dry hair ends, SPECIAL PREPARATION for cleansing, removing loose dandruff.
Castile-Creme Shampoos
Preparations For Dry, Oily Hair
at drug, dept. stores
Ogilvie Sisters
Write: Free Booklet
HAIR PREPARATIONS
50 E. 42 St., N. Y. C. Dept. D-7

LASHES LOOK LONGER

Eyelashes seem lovelier, longer—Eyes seem lovelier, brighter, gayer when you beautify your eyelashes! Gain glamour and charm this easy way, with Lechler's famous EYELASH GLAMOUR KIT. Use according to simple directions and watch yourself grow more stunning. Enclose only $2.40 (tax incl.) with this "ad." Also C.O.D.
HOUSE OF LECHLER, Dept. 337
560 B'way, N. Y. 12, N. Y.

High School Course at Home
Many Finish in 2 Years
Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.
American School, Dept. HB14, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

Guy Madison

2 FREE PHOTOS of your favorite
MOVIE STARS
Direct from Hollywood
Introductory Offer
Also FREE list decorated with all the latest Stars and Poses
Send name of TWO favorites with ten cents to cover handling and mailing.
HOLLYWOOD SCREEN EXCHANGE
Box 1150—Dept. L-2
Hollywood 28, Calif., U.S.A.

BE A Nurse
MAKE $30-$40 A WEEK
You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. 48th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women 18 to 60. High School not required. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan. Write today.
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 237, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name
City State Age

GOOD NEWS—By Louella Parsons

(Continued from page 10)

But they are certainly cordial and go out of their way to speak whenever they meet at the studio.

Although both charmers hail from London, they didn't meet until Academy Awards night in Hollywood. A fellow M-G-M-er introduced them and they stood chatting backstage over a couple of cups of coffee.

Considering the gay, giddy and ofttimes foolish but never dull feuds that used to go on between rival studio queens, this is all very charming but doesn't make for much excitement.

* * *

Lana Turner has sunburn poisoning again. That girl just can't keep out of the sun regardless of what it does to her and the way she suffers.

Ran into Lana and Ty Power at a beach house party the first week I got back and she looked stunning in a black dress with diamond clips. Ty doesn't go for informal attire and these two are still so much in love she likes to do everything to please him.

* * *

My dander is up—and good!

I am indignant for every star in Hollywood who has been the victim of those auxiliary group make-up men who have been shooting off their faces and mouths in print in their fight to be taken into the Make Up Departments Union as full senior members.

What a lot of malicious drivel to parade before the public revealing secrets of facial and physical imperfections in the stars.

I won't dignify their "revelations" by mentioning names (which they did) but one charming girl was referred to as a "messy kisser"; an actor who suffers terribly from sinus trouble was heralded as "Mr. Bags Under The Eyes"—leaving the implication that he is dissipated; another glamour girl was held up to ridicule because her eyes are too close together.

All these are secrets that should be as inviolate as the confidences between a patient and a doctor or a client and a lawyer.

* * *

I saw Gloria De Haven and John Payne at the Mocambo the other night and she doesn't look too happy since her break with M-G-M, if you ask me.

Seldom do I get in these squabbles between studios and stars. Both usually have their sides. But I do think that unless a young player has definitely hit the star brackets, she is much better off with a major studio handling her career problems. Both Gloria and John are very upset over the stories that she walked out of M-G-M because he wanted her to be a housewife and forget her career.

* * *

I thought to myself, "What's Betty Grable doing during these last couple of restless months awaiting the birth of her baby?" I hadn't seen Betty for a long time, so I dropped in on her at her Coldwater home.

She's as sun-tanned as a hickory nut and there are sun-streaks in her golden blonde hair. These particular days the James menage is as quiet as the proverbial mouse on the night before Christmas. Harry is away on a six weeks' tour and his absence completely mystifies four-year-old Vicki James.

She veers through the house and out around the swimming pool chirping, "Where's Harryjames?"—all one word, which is the way she constantly refers to her father.

Betty says her entire time is spent reading and lounging by the pool. "I've read every best seller on the market," she laughed. "Bet I polish off a novel a day." She also reads the comics—prefering "Blondie" and "Dick Tracy."

She still likes to play poker and gin rummy and gives "hen" parties for girls who feel likewise in the evenings.

"When the baby is born," she told me, "we're evicting Vicki from the nursery. She's getting to be a big girl now and should have a room of her own."

Ma James won't say whether they want a boy or a girl but I have a hunch some fingers are crossed for a boy. "Still," mused Miss Pin-Up, "it would be fun to name another girl Jessica and call her Jessie James!"

* * *

That feud going on between Robert Hutton and Joyce Reynolds during the entire making of Wallflower ended in a big make-up scene the day the movie finished.

The trouble was that Bob is a quiet, reserved, non-talkative fellow and Joyce bubbles over with Texas good fellowship. She thought he was trying to snub her when he would retire to a quiet corner between scenes.

Joyce got her dander up and said, "If Warners think they're going to make a co-starring team of us—they're crazy. I don't want to make any more pictures with him."

But the day the picture ended, Bob did a mighty nice thing. He had a big cake brought over to Joyce, also a corsage of three beautiful orchids. But the thing that really GOT her was a letter in which he said he was sorry he had seemed grumpy but he was just a fellow who doesn't do much talking.

* * *

Don't say I spilled the beans, but they say Betty Hutton does a devastating imitation of Joan Fontaine in Dream Girl. Incidentally, this is the movie in which Betty neither sings nor dances nor gives with the wild antics. In fact, she doesn't even wear makeup most of the time.

* * *

Rex Harrison was on location making a picture when his birthday rolled around, but that didn't keep him from tossing himself a party—six weeks later.

"What difference does it make whether you hit the right date or not," said the British actor, "a birthday party is a birthday party." So when the birthday cake was rolled out, it had written on it, "Happy Birthday to nobody in particular!" It made a big hit with everyone.

Since his real natal day was over, and none of the guests had been notified that he had selected another for himself, he received no presents other than a couple of nice ones he sent himself!

Most of the feminine guests—Mary Benny, Deborah Kerr, Loretta Young and the hostess, Lilli Palmer, all wore white gowns. So Sylvia Sidney and Mrs. Gary Cooper were stand-outs in red and green dresses, respectively. Millicent Rogers, the heiress, was also there—but minus Clark Gable. I don't believe he has seen her since her arrival in Hollywood.

* * *

Speaking of Gable—how that boy hates to be pinned down about his plans.

Just before taking off on a fishing trip to Canada, a harassed press agent asked him where he was going. "Oh, North," replied Clark. "And where will you be after that?" the p.a. pressed on.

"Oh, South," said the evasive Mr. G.

Sue and Alan (do I need to add, Carol and Ladd?) have started a wonderful idea for four-year-old, Alana.

On her fourth birthday party, they gave her toys, of course. But they also presented her with some really beautiful pieces of table silver. By the time she is a young lady, Alana will have a complete service of silver—which is a mighty nice thing to own.

* * *

Everyone on the Selznick lot is crazy about Valli, the new Italian star who debuts in The Paradine Case. They go out of their way trying to think up things to surprise and please her.

During a recent heat wave, one of the department heads had her house equipped with a cooling system which was formerly in one of those theaters where you go in and freeze on a hot summer day.

Being new to our modern ways, poor Valli didn't know what had happened.

Imagine his surprise to go out to her home one day and find she had stoves burning brightly in every room in the house. "All of a sudden this place turned into an ICE BOX!" she explained. And then somebody showed her how to turn off the cooling system!

* * *

While I was still in New York, Wild Bill Elliott, that rootin', shootin' cowboy from Republic was there, too—incidentally, his first trip to the Big Town.

I must say Wild Bill doesn't live up to that "wild" in his name. He was plum flabbergasted, ma'am, that New York fans recognized him.

He surprised the Republic publicity department because his first request was not to visit the Statue of Liberty or Radio City. Instead, Bill's first stop was to Brooks Brothers because "I've heard so much about that men's furnishing store." After looking through the complete stock of wearing apparel—he didn't buy a thing!

But his big adventure came when he took over the reins atop a hansom carriage while Mrs. Elliott obliged by getting into the vehicle. Suddenly, the horse reared and began to act up!

"That's a fine way to act with a cowboy at the reins," yelled Wild Bill at the fractious nag, as his face got redder and redder!

* * *

I've been particularly interested in my mail this past month. Such interesting and intelligent letters from many, many of you who read this column in MODERN SCREEN.

Let me give you a few samples of what I mean:

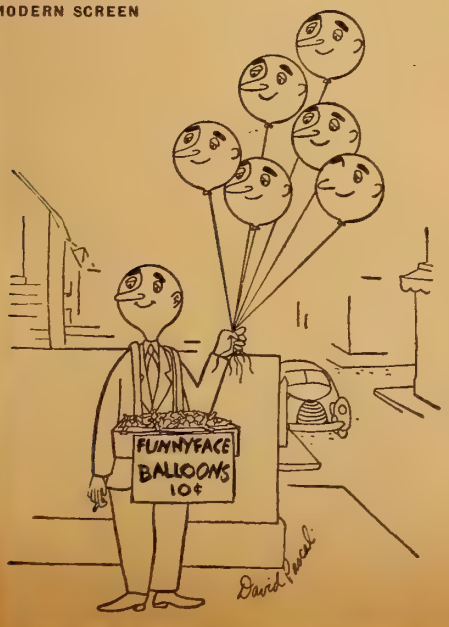
Mrs. Dorothy McIntosh, of New York City, writes: "I have just seen Sea of Grass and consider it one of the finest pictures I have ever seen. But I am puzzled as to how they could handle such a theme as infidelity and illegitimacy—which I have always understood to be banned by the Hays (it's now the Johnston) office. How did they get away with it?" A very intelligent question, Mrs. McIntosh.

I believe that the reason this picture could handle such taboo subjects is that they were presented with such dignity and drama and without one iota of sensationalism. If you noticed, even in the advertising there was nothing lurid or offensive to drag in the paying customers. The picture also pointed up that the characters who had sinned against society were punished and suffered for their transgressions.

Evelyn Sanger, of Detroit, writes: "I can't understand Hollywood romances. Right up to the time June Haver eloped with Jimmy Zito we heard that she was madly in love with Dave Rose. How can people meet and fall in love so hurriedly?"

June and Jimmy didn't "just meet," Evelyn. She has known him a long time and their friendship began when they were both working with well-known bands around the country. Girls in the movies have many escorts and after all, remember that Junie never said she was "madly in love" with Dave Rose. Perhaps that was just the idea of some press agent.

That's all for this month. Do keep on sending me your interesting comments and letters about Hollywood topics and we'll continue to talk over some of them in this column.



Debutante BRA
$1.75 each
3 for $5
Hollywood beauty . . . cool comfort! Modern — scientific — quilted cup for permanent uplift and smart separation . . . Lastex front insert . . . adjustable straps . . . elastic back . . . 4-way adjustable fastener. Nude or white rayon satin or fine cotton. Glamour-perfect for sheerest frocks. For new beauty . . . order DEBUTANTE BRA now! Satisfaction or your money back.
MAIL THIS NOW!

USE THIS HANDY COUPON

INTERSTATE STORES CO., Inc., Dept. 17-D
Owensboro, Ky.
Please send me _____ Debutante Bra at $1.75 each (3 for $5).

	32	34	36	38	40
Nude						Cotton ☐
White						Rayon Satin ☐

(check one) Cash ☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
We pay postage if remittance is enclosed, no C.O.D.'s outside U.S.A.

HOLLYWOOD POSTURE VIVACIOUS CURVES
GLAMOUR Belt
For Posture . . . For Health
$2.50 ea.
Enjoy cool figure loveliness with GLAMOUR BELT! It slenderizes immediately, actually helps reduce waist, hips and abdomen. Scientifically designed . . . supports back . . . corrects posture. Makes clothes fit better, look better. Comfortable, easy to wear! Cool cotton coutil . . . easy to launder . . . weighs less than 8 ounces. Order your GLAMOUR BELT now for an instantly new, improved figure! Satisfaction or your money back.
BEFORE
AFTER
MAIL THIS NOW!

USE THIS HANDY COUPON

INTERSTATE STORES CO., Inc., Dept. 17-D
Owensboro, Ky.
Please send me_____ Glamour Belt at $2.50 each.
My waist measure is_____ My hip measure is_____ (check one) Cash ☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
We pay postage if remittance is enclosed, no C.O.D.'s outside U.S.A.

VETO Colgate's Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Underarm Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant . . . Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness and to check underarm perspiration, stop odor safely.

OFFICIAL TESTED BY RETAIL LABORATORIES

DOUBLY PREFERRED! Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

Brush Away GRAY HAIR ...AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or

Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE

Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 297, COVINGTON, KY.

STAMMER?

GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 2297, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

FRECKLES

Write for FREE BEAUTY SUGGESTIONS

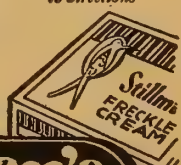
We will send you a delightful story about Stillman's Freckle Cream. It is not only a freckle bleach, but also a beautifying cream. It makes skin look lighter—feel softer, smoother. Over 30 million jars have been purchased by enthusiastic users! Only 50c at all drug and cosmetic counters. A postal card brings this amazing story of beauty to you!

Use according to directions



THE STILLMAN CO.
Box 2 Aurora, Ill.

Stillman's FRECKLE CREAM 50¢

FIRST BORN!

(Continued from page 24)

and—I can't quite remember. But I think it was almost eight."

"Thanks, lady," he said, and then there was the click of the receiver.

And so with her first words since the advent of Paul Frederick Brinkman, Jr., Jeanne announced the birth of her son to the press, and unless the reporter reads this he will never know he was speaking with the new mother herself.

That same day, an item appeared in the papers to the effect that the Brinkmans were so sure the baby would be a girl that they were caught without a name for their son. This wasn't true. Whole evenings had been devoted to discussion of this most weighty problem.

"For the first boy," Jeanne decided, "I like Paul Frederick Junior. And for the second boy—"

Paul interrupted. "I don't know about that 'junior' stuff," he said.

"Why darling, that's taken for granted. Of course, he'll be named after you. Now, the second boy—how about Michael Anthony?"

Paul grinned. "Have you picked a monicker for the twelfth boy?"

one with hair, please . . .

Jeanne had a couple of major worries during her pregnancy. She didn't want a bald baby. And she was scared to death at the thought of bringing a new baby, even a bald one, into their crowded apartment. Things had got so bad, what with the loot from Jeanne's baby shower, that she and Paul had to keep their clothes at their respective parents' homes. Enough baby clothes littered the cramped quarters to outfit a nursery. But every time the two of them had to dress for an occasion, they had to synchronize their watches, split up, head for the Crain and Brinkman homes and rejoin later.

The new home isn't yet complete, but it's livable enough for the present, and with a new baby to add to life, who cares about the inconvenience of painters and carpenters swarming over the house? On her homecoming, Jeanne found a lot of changes. The fence was installed and thirty of the fruit trees had been planted. The artificial waterfall, designed by Paul to drain water from the swimming pool and tumble down a cliff into a running brook, was not yet in operation. The fireplace, flanked by huge glass windows overlooking the city, was doing its best with a roaring fire. Both the indoor and outdoor barbecues were functioning. The freezer was installed to take care of the forty different types of fruit to be grown on their acres, and most wonderful of all, closets sprawled all over the house—thirty whole feet of closet space.

There was ice cream in the freezer, which reminded Jeanne of the Saturday night preceding Easter. She and Paul had gone out for dinner and then to a movie. There was no necessity for Paul to inquire about her wants when they left the theater; he automatically steered toward a drive-in.

"Two hot fudge sundaes," he told the car hop. Jeanne smiled at him. That was one of the nice things about Paul; he knew her so well that he seldom had to ask about her feelings on any subject.

Now she was engaged in the pure ecstasy of putting away the sundae. And suddenly, she didn't feel very well. When she told Paul, he immediately switched on the ignition.

"We'd better get home," he said.

"Wait a minute," said Jeanne. "There's another spoonful here."

By the time they reached the apartment, Jeanne realized that the pains were regular, and they decided to check with Paul's watch.

"Now?" he said.

"Now."

Paul watched the slowly moving hands for six minutes, and then Jeanne squealed slightly. They looked at each other in horror. She had read somewhere that pains ten minutes apart meant almost immediate action, and here they were, six minutes apart, and in the Santa Monica apartment, miles from the hospital. Paul grabbed the phone and called the hospital immediately.

"Dr. McCarthy—quick," he said.

"Dr. McCarthy is in surgery," said the girl at the switchboard. "He's delivering a baby."

Paul gasped. "But he can't— Oh. Oh, well, we'll be right down."

"What's the matter?" said Jeanne.

"Nothing. The doctor's with another patient—that's all." He thought it discreet not to tell her the whole truth in view of her delicate condition.

During the mad dash to the hospital, Jeanne held Paul's watch in her hands, consulting it under the flashing light of street lamps every six minutes, then every five.

"Golly!" she said.

They needn't have got into such a nervous stew, for the ways of Nature are unaccountable. Although they entered the hospital at 12:30 on Easter morning, Paul Junior didn't put in his appearance until 5:15.

Dr. Alphonsus McCarthy was the only person involved who deserved a nervous collapse, as he delivered four babies during that night. He was more than weary when he finally showed the baby to Paul for identification, yet he couldn't restrain a comment.

"Will you look at the shoulders on that boy?" he said.

For a moment, Paul thought the buttons would pop off his shirt. Then he exhaled and asked the doctor when he could see Jeanne.

"In a little while," said Dr. McCarthy. "Just be patient."

The little while went by, and then he stood in the doorway, looking at his wife It was a long minute before either of them said anything. At length, Jeanne broke the silence.

"He has hair!" she said. "Lots of it— just the way I always knew he would!

this one's different . . .

This matter has been the subject of most Brinkman conversation ever since—including grandparents, friends, and the assortment of workmen who are completing the house. Jeanne and Paul try not to brag, but this baby is somehow different from others.

"I'd like your opinion," Paul says to almost anybody. "Our son has very clear-cut features. Now—isn't that unusual for a baby so young?"

And, of course, everyone talks right back on the same topic. Jeanne was in the hospital for several weeks after the birth of the baby, and it naturally followed that friends were concerned about the state of her health.

"How did she look when you first saw her?" they wanted to know.

Paul had the same answer for them all. He said, "She looked—beautiful."

THIS LITTLE PEGGY . . .

(Continued from page 59)

Pasadena, I see with my own eyes the reaction of the audience.

Remember, this is the first time any American audience has seen her. It is an opportunity for people to say, "Well, we wanted to be shown—and she showed us."

They prove to Zanuck he is right.

In Moss Rose, which I just finished directing myself, Peggy has a big, starring role. She plays a Cockney girl, with ambitions to become a lady.

A couple weeks before the picture starts, Peggy comes to me. "It is better you know now," she says. "I can't speak with a Cockney accent."

We decide to change the accent to Irish —Peggy is Irish, to begin with, and she plays at Dublin's Gate Theater for years. "You can do Irish?" I ask her.

She says yes, and we begin. One scene later, surrounded by people with Cockney accents, she discovers she can do Cockney. She is a gifted child.

Peggy has real respect for fine acting, and she admires Ethel Barrymore, who is also in Moss Rose.

One day, we are shooting a big scene—between Miss Barrymore and Peggy.

When everything is at last ready, I call, "Camera!" and all of a sudden, in the middle of the scene, Peggy stops acting, and starts watching Miss Barrymore.

"Peggy!" I call to her. "What is the matter with you, spoiling the take?"

"I'm sorry," Peggy says. "I was so fascinated by Miss Barrymore, I forgot."

There is a dance Peggy does in the movie and the studio calls her in a week early, to learn the routine. Peggy learns it in one day.

The afternoon we are shooting the dance scene, everything is going fine, and suddenly Peggy falls. "What is the matter?" I say to her. "I thought you were a dancer at seven years old?"

"I didn't have to be provocative at seven years old," she tells me.

Little Peggy has wonderful lungs. Ask anyone who works with us on Moss Rose. There is a place where she has to walk down the hall, and into a room, and find a body on the bed.

"You shake the body, to wake it up," I tell her. "And then when you discover it's dead, you scream."

Well, after the first rehearsal, and a timid scream from Peggy, I decided she shall save her throat for the take.

her screaming wakes up the dead . . .

Margo Woode, who is the body on the bed, falls asleep under the hot lights, during the subsequent rehearsals, and when the take finally comes, and Peggy screams, Margo Woode forgets all about being dead, and sits up howling.

No one blames her for a minute, because in all your life you never hear such a scream as that one of little Peggy.

Opposite Peggy in Moss Rose is Victor Mature, who is as rugged as Peggy is dainty.

Peggy claims that Victor does not know his own strength. In a love scene he holds her arm so strongly that when he lets her go, she is all black-and-blue.

Victor already teaches Peggy American slang—he is a very restless, energetic man, and he has a lot of humor—but one of her favorite slang phrases, she gets from me. "Making with the jokes," it is.

She is forever coming up to me on the set. "Gregory," she says, "you're not making with the jokes today."

What I say that she likes best of all, though, is something I personally do not think is so funny. When I try to get some animation from her and Victor for a certain scene, it is a habit of mine to use that old Army call, "Come out, now, laughing and scratching—" and every time I do this, she gets hysterical.

Those two have good times together. It used to be every lunch hour Victor will ask Peggy to marry him, and then walk away without waiting for an answer.

"If she said yes, she'd probably be sorry," he will explain, "and if she said no, I'd be sorry."

Once, when I have a new line for Victor put in the script, I announce it, and Peggy smiles wickedly. "He can use a new line," she says.

it's a dog's life . . .

But she really likes him. For instance, a while ago, Victor gets a new, two-story doghouse. Such a doghouse as I never hear of before. Once it belongs to Myrna Loy, Gene Markey's wife, and now it belongs to Victor. His Boxer, "Genius," and his Shepherd, Mickey, live in it. It is the most deluxe dog house ever built.

Well, anyhow, one morning Peggy and I are talking of it, and about a week later, Peggy sends Victor a present. It is a regular, conventional sized doghouse, and it has on it a little sign. "Guest House," the sign says.

Victor comes to work the next morning, beaming. "It's like I always say," he confides to me in a loud voice. "The English have a sly sense of humor, Gregory."

Peggy says Victor is the person who teaches her how to really laugh, for the first time since she is in the United States.

He is always asking her for dates in Cockney accent. "'Ow about Sat-eh-day noight, ducky?" he shouts all over the lot.

There is such a hopelessness of accents on that set that I remember we are arguing all the time whether the cast shall learn to speak Russian, or I shall learn to speak American.

But talking about Victor's dogs reminds me of Peggy's cat. The publicity department at 20th Century-Fox says that the cat is a "pure marmalade Persian," but Peggy says that cat is mostly alley. In any case, its name is Timmie, and it is sick in the hospital part of the time we are making Moss Rose. This is good for the picture. She is playing a girl who has reason to worry, after a murder next door. Timmie helps her to look worried.

Peggy has a birthday while we are making Moss Rose, too. Vincent Price comes up to her and says, "What birthday is it, Peggy?"

"The twenty-first," Peggy says.

Vincent looks thoughtful. "It is a long time since I was twenty-one," he says. "And I was twenty-one for a long time."

Not a straight man on the set, I keep telling them.

There is the scene where Peggy wakes up in bed. A gun shot wakes her, really, and then she hears weird, terrifying noises. For one thing, the chandelier is tinkling.

Well, I am trying to help her get into the mood, and every time we do the scene, I make weird noises for her, but she never seems to appreciate them. She laughs.

She says I go, "Tinkle, tinkle, tinkle, tinkle," and maybe it sounds strange, but it is not in the least terrifying.

After a while, I give the whole thing up. I get a prop man to ring bells.

Another interesting item about that scene in bed is Peggy's hairdo. Originally, I want realism. "Go on over to Peggy's house," I tell the photographer. "and get

CORN GRIEF?
Get Relief!
BLUE-JAY
Corn Plasters with NUPERCAINE*
GIVE YOU GREATER RELIEF!

Have carefree feet again. Blue-Jay's soft Dura-feltpad instantly stops shoe pressure pain. Then wonderful Nupercaine, exclusive with Blue-Jay, curbs irritating surface pain. Gentle medication loosens hard "core"—you just lift it out in a few days! And Blue-Jays are streamlined, flesh-colored, non-slip. Ask today for Blue-Jay . . .

"America's Largest Selling Corn Plaster"

FREE—One complete treatment. Write Dept. B-49.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Ciba's Brand of Dibucaine

BLUE JAY Corn Plasters

NOW IN 2 SIZES: STANDARD and LITTLE TOE
Also Blue-Jay Soft Corn Pads

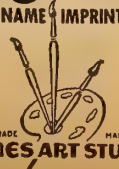
BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company
Chicago 16

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo
FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 311, Hollywood, Calif.

* Spare Time—Full Time
Earn Money EASY PLEASANT WAY
Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS
AS LOW AS 50 for $1 WITH NAME IMPRINTED



Complete Line! Exclusive Name Imprinted Personal Cards. Also smart Box Assortments—including 21 Christmas Folders $1, our famous matched Christmas and Everyday Gift Wrap Ensembles, Religious, Everyday, Humorous, many others. Write TODAY for SAMPLES.

TRADE MARK JANES ART STUDIOS Inc.
1225 Clifford Av., Dept. L-10 Rochester 5, N.Y.

QUICK RELIEF FOR SUMMER TEETHING

EXPERIENCED Mothers know that summer teething must not be trifled with—that summer upsets due to teething may seriously interfere with Baby's progress.

Relieve your Baby's teething pains this summer by rubbing on Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion—the actual prescription of a famous Baby Specialist. It is effective and economical, and has been used and recommended by millions of Mothers. Your druggist has it.

DR. HAND'S TEETHING LOTION
Just rub it on the gums

Destroy UNWANTED HAIR

Temporary relief not enough — you want freedom Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure your unwanted hair has gone FOREVER. The Mahler Method—used successfully all over the world for over fifty years—positively enables you to do this in the privacy of your home. It brings relief and social happiness long denied you . . . Send 6c in stamps TODAY for illustrated booklet, "New Charm for Madame."
MAHLER'S, Inc., Dept. 36 H, E. Providence, R. I.

Marvel
WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women
AT DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
Free Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

Be an ARTIST

LEARN AT HOME IN YOUR SPARE TIME!
Trained artists are capable of earning $50, $60, $75 a week. By our practical method we teach you COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING and CARTOONING all in ONE course. FREE BOOK—"Art for Pleasure & Profit" describes training and opportunities in art. STATE AGE.
Veterans' Training Available Under "G. I." Bill
STUDIO 807-H, WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
1115—15th ST., N. W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

DON'T GET CAUGHT SHORT!!
Be prepared with greeting cards for all occasions. Send NOW for our beautiful assortment of 14 Harry Doehla greeting cards. Also wide selection of Birthday cards. Price $1.00 postage prepaid.
KAY-N-BEE SALES CO., 3148 W. Ainslie St., Chicago 25, Ill.

AMAZING NEW Pocket or Purse Size RADIO!
SMALL AS A PACK OF CIGARETTES
Weighs only a few ounces—Beautiful black chrome plastic case. Uses new crystal diode. Hi-Q slide dial. No tubes, batteries or electric "plug-ins" required! Receives local broadcasts and when used according to instructions sent with each radio! You can use it at home, in many offices, hotels, cabins, in bed, etc.—lots of fun—real entertainment.
GUARANTEED TO PLAY
SEND ONLY $1.00 (cash, money order, check) and pay postman $2.99 plus delivery fees on arrival or send $3.99 for postpaid delivery. Complete as shown ready to play with self-contained personal phone. For gifts—children will love it—grownups too! An exceptional value—order yours and enjoy the many good radio programs coming! Don't be without your Pa-Kette Radio another day! (All foreign orders $5.00 U. S. cash.)
Pa-Kette Electric Company, Dept. MM-7, Kearney, Nebr.

a picture of her when she wakes up. Drag her out from her bed, even."

So they get the picture of Peggy, and then we give the picture to Lillian Hokom, Peggy's hair-dresser, and every morning it takes her one hour and fifteen minutes to disarrange Peggy's hair so it should match the picture.

Fortunately, she only needs to be disarranged five mornings or so, or the picture will still be going on to this day.

During that picture, we make it a practice to have tea every afternoon. Mine, I have with lemon, and Peggy has hers plain, but we remain friends.

At lunch time, I remember Peggy trying to make me not eat so much. I am a man who will occasionally diet, but I do not like it, and for months, Peggy tries to be my conscience.

It gets so bad, I sneak away from her every so often to get a little snack.

She is a big fruit eater, herself, and anything else doesn't matter much to her.

The fact is, I first met Peggy at a dinner-party. Where, I have no doubt, she eats fruit-cup, fruit-salad, fruit-compote, and fruit drink. She says I don't pay any attention to her at this particular party, but she thinks I must notice her, because the next time I run into her, I say sternly, "Go wash your face, and take that stuff off your eyebrows."

I don't remember this, but it is possible. She has very pale eyebrows, and I like her best when she is looking natural.

Peggy, being a stage actress, prefers to rehearse a lot, and she has a recording machine, and she reads her scripts into it, when she gets home at night.

And although I am associated with Peggy in a professional capacity, I know a few personal facts about her. I know she is a terrible speller, and she has a twenty-inch waist, and she has a convertible car, and she lives with her mother in an English type bungalow (a rented one).

And I know she is going to be a very big star.

Peggy has everything that the doctor prescribed. She has youth, looks, tremendous technique, and also sex appeal. And a woman without sex appeal is like soda water without bubbles.

And Peggy Cummins has plenty of bubbles.

THE GABLE TOUCH

(Continued from page 39)

of ever acting myself. I didn't exactly swoon, but I thought Clark Gable was pretty exciting.

Right after that I tacked his photograph up in my room, along with those of my English heroes, Leslie Howard, Ronald Colman, Laurence Olivier and others. Clark Gable was the first and only American to make my private gallery.

Later on, the wheels of fate started spinning in my case and I found myself an actress, making motion pictures in England. They whirled a bit more and, after Vacation From Marriage, I found myself under contract to M-G-M and on my way to Hollywood to make a film, but what film I had no idea.

As Tony and I boarded the boat, I mused, "Wouldn't it be odd if it turned out I made a picture with Clark Gable?"

"Better than odd," he grinned. "It would be smashing lucky. He's a perfectly grand chap. I saw quite a bit of him in Hollywood during the war."

"Why, Tony," I exclaimed. "Why don't you tell me these things?"

"Can't tell you everything, you know," teased Tony. "Besides, I haven't had time!"

That was true. Anthony Bartley and I were married only a few months before. He was a squadron leader in the RAF and not inclined to talk much about his war service. But I finally wormed the facts out of him: after the African campaign Tony flew on a quick lecture tour of the United States. Clark, a flyer himself, was a Captain in the U.S. Air Corps and they made contact in Hollywood.

The day we arrived in Hollywood, there was a luncheon to meet M-G-M officials, and Tony and I were placed at the head of the table with a line of unfamiliar faces stretching down on both sides from us.

The room was crowded and before we were seated someone elbowed through the crowd. It was Clark Gable. I had just a touch of a panicky feeling and braced myself to say "How do you do?" in my best manner. But he didn't even see me!

"Good heavens," boomed Clark, grabbing my husband's arm, "What in the world are you doing here, Tony?"

Then they jabbered away, catching up on the past three years. I stood, completely unnoticed and just a little put out. At last Clark said, "I came here to meet Deborah Kerr. Have you seen her?"

My husband stepped aside, taking huge delight in the situation. "Why yes," he said. "Clark, I'd like to have you meet my wife." Clark Gable didn't know Tony was even married, let alone to me!

The thing that struck me at once about meeting Clark Gable in person is that he's exactly as you think he'll be after seeing him on the screen. I had always imagined him as typically American, unsophisticated, direct, humorous and good natured.

After we made the screen-test for The Hucksters, I stayed home waiting for a telephone call from the studio. When it came, a familiar voice said excitedly:

"Baby, you're in!"

That was how I first knew I'd gotten the part. Clark called and told me himself! I later learned he'd made everyone at M-G-M promise to tell him first. The minute he knew he'd rushed straight to a telephone to bring the good news.

That is typical of Clark Gable, I've since discovered. He takes the greatest delight in making anyone happy. Around M-G-M, I soon found, he has been doing that for years, putting new actresses cast with him at their ease. And although I was hardly a new actress, still Clark realized as much as anyone how difficult it is in a strange new world, getting down to work.

"Golly," he grinned to me the first week. "I'm glad it isn't me doing a picture in England."

Though we never had the slightest script disagreement, Clark has too ready a funny-bone not to be amused at what Britishisms cropped out in me. One day, for instance, I looked at the script and was horrified. There was a line for me to say: "If you think I'd ever go off to a hotel with you—"

With my particular British upbringing that was a very ungrammatical sentence. "I'd never make an error like that," I told Clark, utterly shocked.

"What's wrong with it?" he asked blandly.

"Why," I replied, "it should be 'an hotel,' of course—"

He grinned. "Not in America it shouldn't. That's the way we say it." From then on whenever I'd unconsciously give an English twist to anything—like pronouncing 'clerk' 'clark'—or protest at what loomed in my glamorizes, highlights and lusterizes all shades of hair with ABUNDANT COLOR... Beautifies white and gray hair. Blends in the unwanted gray in mixed gray hair. NOREEN Colors are TEMPORARY.. are intended to wash out at the next shampoo. 19,313,918 NOREEN Rinses were produced in 1946. Ask for a NOREEN Rinse at your beauty salon or buy an 8-rinse carton at drug or dept. stores.

Worry no more about DULL, GRAYING, FADED or YELLOWED HAIR

NOREEN
SUPER COLOR RINSE

* For trial in your own home, send 10c (to cover cost of processing your request) and sample rinses will be sent to you FREE: Name hair color, or send hair sample and state your hair color problem. We will select and send to you appropriate NOREEN shade, & advise solution of your problem.

NOREEN, Dept. D-3, P. O. Box 989, Denver 1, Colorado

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

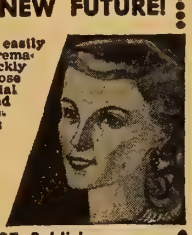
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

A NEW FACE —A NEW FUTURE!

How Plastic Surgery easily takes years off the prematurely aged face, quickly reshapes an ugly nose and corrects other facial blemishes is told and illustrated with 88 before-and-after pictures in fascinating book, YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, written by famous Plastic Surgeon. Yours, postpaid in plain wrapper—only 25c



FRANKLIN HOUSE Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg. Philadelphia, Pa. Dept. 13-R

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIT TROUBLE)

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Use DERMOIL

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547 Northwestern Station, Dept. 9309, Detroit 4, Mich.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1935 LAKE LAB

British background as an impossible error, Clark teased, "Oh, of course, it's 'an hotel'."

But there is never any sting to Clark Gable's ribbings, and absolutely no offense in his easy-going familiarity. Clark called me "Baby" all through the making of The Hucksters. My own husband doesn't call me "Baby," and I might have bridled except that Clark can say "Baby" in a way different from anyone else.

The only trick Clark Gable played on me all the time we made The Hucksters was one inspired by an attempt to give me a pleasant surprise. I'm sure he had no idea it would turn out to be a durable reproach to my vanity.

One day, between scenes, I was in my dressing-room when a knock came on the door. It was Clark Gable's stand-in. He was apologetic, but he said he admired my work very much. He wondered—would I give him my autograph?

"Oh, but of course," I answered. I was really quite pleased; it was the first time in America I'd been asked for that favor. In my eagerness to please, I'm afraid I overdid the autograph. I dashed one off in my best Spencerian hand with sweeping lines and flourishes.

"Thanks," he said, and I forgot all about it. I'm not much of a sleuth, I'm afraid. It never dawned on me to suspect that Clark had sent him in to get the autograph. Not until—a week later—he presented me with a lovely leather script cover—with that dreadful, glamor autograph of mine tooled all over the front!

vanity, all is vanity . . .

Like every man I've ever met, Clark's got his own little share of "rugged" male vanity, of course. One day on the set, for instance, Diane, the little girl who played my daughter in The Hucksters, turned up with the sniffles and a runny nose. Clark was in the habit of swooping Diane up in his arms for a hug whenever he arrived on the set. This morning he headed for her and his usual morning hug-and-kiss. But Diane's mother warned him. "Better stay away from Diane today, Mr. Gable," she said. "It looks like she's coming down with a cold." But Clark laughed it off.

"Don't be silly," he said. "No kid can give me a cold." So up swooped Diane for her regular Gable blessing.

The next day Clark was reaching for his handkerchief regularly. The day after that he had the "flu!"

On Tony's last birthday, Clark invited my husband and myself out to his ranch for dinner. It was exactly the kind of place you'd expect him to live in. Out in the open country, plain, comfortable, with trees and animals all around. After dinner, we sat in the big living room, panelled in wood, beside the crackling fireplace in the roomy, masculine chairs and talked mostly of England.

Before we left that evening, Tony and I pestered Clark for a picture to keep in the library of our Hollywood cottage.

"No, no, no," he objected in horror. "No pictures of me, please!"

We realized that Clark loathes giving out pictures of himself, but we were pretty much a pair of British bulldogs about it. Finally, Tony almost had to wrestle Clark for the portrait before he gave in grudgingly. "All right for you," he muttered as he signed it ruefully and handed it over. "I'll never give you anything again."

But if Clark Gable never gives me anything again, he has already given me something that is deeply appreciated, and for which I should say, "Thank you, Mr. Gable." He gave me confidence in American actors and confidence in myself making my first American film. I couldn't wish better luck for an English actress, new to a strange and frightening Hollywood, than to make her first movie with Clark Gable.

NEW ODORLESS CREAMY LOTION SAFELY REMOVES HAIR

1. A pleasant white lotion without bad clinging depilatory odor.
2. Not messy. Quick—rinses off easily with lukewarm water.
3. No razor stubble. Keeps legs hair-free longer. Economical!
4. Doesn't irritate normal skin.
5. Removes hair close to skin, leaving skin soft, smooth, and alluring.
6. World's largest seller. For free sample mail this ad before Dec. 30, 1947, to Dept. 110, Nair, 53 Park Place, New York 8, N. Y.

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair

NAIR 59¢ plus tax

At Drug, Department and 10¢ Stores

CORNS

Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

Private Addresses of 250 of Hollywood's Top Stars . . .

FREE! —Brochure with over 250 prints absolutely free with each order. . . only 25c

DELUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 75, Box 953
Church St. Annex New York 8, N. Y.

SCREEN ALBUM
Now on Sale
At Your Newsstand 15c

QUALITY SUN GLASSES IN GLAMOROUS STYLES

● GENUINE "EAGLE" SUN GLASSES created in latest styles of modern eye wear, including 12 Karat Gold-filled Ful-Vue Arc-Way. Easy on the eyes while enjoying the sun. Reasonably priced.

WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG and FREE EYE GLASS CLOTH

ALSO LARGE STOCK OF JEWELRY AND WATCHES

EAGLE JEWELERS-OPTICIANS
1447 MILWAUKEE AVE.
DEPT. D-6 CHICAGO 22, ILL.

MOVIE REVIEWS

(Continued from page 23)

doesn't work until she actually puts the police on Drego's trail. Then he is ready to talk terms. By that time, Belle has other ideas. She wants to be a lady like Drego's aunt, Lady Sterling (Ethel Barrymore) and his fiancee (Patricia Medina). With a childish naïvete, she tells Michael if he will help her to that end, she will keep silent about seeing him come out of Daisy's room. From the moment he agrees, Belle comes closer and closer to death . . .—20th- Fox

DOWN TO EARTH

I'm sure Rita Hayworth has frequently been referred to as a goddess, so it's not surprising to find her cast as one. Very beautiful she is, too, all done up in Grecian gowns and Technicolor. But don't get the idea the picture is strictly mythology. This particular goddess comes down to earth and stirs up plenty of excitement.

You see, a Broadway producer, named Danny Miller (Larry Parks), is staging a musical based on the Nine Muses. But he's burlesquing them, and the Muses, hearing about it up in heaven, get pretty annoyed. Terpsichore (Rita Hayworth) gets hold of Mr. Jordan (Roland Culver), intermediary between heaven and earth. Looking wide-eyed and innocent, she tells him she wants to help young Danny, who's in trouble.

As a matter of fact, Danny actually is in trouble—trouble that she knows nothing about. He owes a hundred grand to a certain gangster who's all set to take him for a ride if the show fails. Mr. Jordan knows this. He knows everything. So he lets Terpsichore descend to Broadway because she might be able to help. He even supplies her with a mink coat and an agent (James Gleason).

Being the goddess of the dance, she has no trouble snatching the lead role of Terpsichore away from Georgia Evans (Adele Jergens). She fascinates Danny with her beauty and talent. Then Kitty, as she is known on earth, really goes to work on the poor guy. She gradually persuades him that he's making a mistake doing a cheap burlesque like this. Before the rest of the cast knows what's happening, they find themselves doing classical dances instead of bumps, and singing Grecian chants instead of jive.

They open in Philadelphia, the audience goes to sleep, and the gangster begins looking for a good location to dump Danny's body. However, here comes Mr. Jordan to tell Kitty some of the facts of life—and death. —Col.

LIVING IN A BIG WAY

Gene Kelly plays a straight role as a lieutenant, Leo Gogarty, who married a girl he met at a Canteen during the war. Her name was Maggy (Marie McDonald) and she was gay and sweet and that was about all he knew about her. It was, he thought, enough.

But when Leo comes back after the war, he finds that Maggy is Margot Morgan, who lives on a big estate with butler, swimming pool and the maddest family since You Can't Take It With You. She isn't gay and sweet any more. She's busy studying ballet and getting her picture in the papers. And she wants a divorce.

Leo might have left right away if it hadn't been for Grandma (Jean Adair). She is, Leo thinks, the only one in the household who makes any sense. Father Morgan (Charles Winninger) isn't a bad guy, but he's too engrossed in high finance to do much about his family. Mrs. Morgan (Spring Byington) flutters. The butler, Everett (Clinton Sundberg), is a fabulous character, but screwy.

Grandma persuades Leo to stay around.

Down To Earth: Rita Hayworth, goddess of music and dance, comes down to earth to show Larry Parks how to put on a musical show. Taking over Adele Jergens' role, she dances with Mark Platt.

Living In A Big Way: G. Kelly wed M. McDonald during the war. Now she wants a divorce.

Maybe if he sees Margot for awhile he'll decide she isn't the girl for him. (She is, Grandma confesses, spoiled, selfish and useless.) That's exeactly what happens, but by then Margot and the rest of the family have become very fond of Leo. When he says "Okay, go ahead and get the divorce," Margot, with the usual contrariness of women, has decided she doesn't want it. But Leo does. He feels that Maggy has vanished and Margot could never take her place.

Meanwhile, he and Grandma have started a little Veterans' Housing Project of their own. It leads to a lot of things, including a bathtub, a courtroom and a dog whose name is not Fido.—M-G-M

BRUTE FORCE

They've selected an accurate title for this picture—it's definitely not for the squeamish. It tells the story of desperate men, made brutal by imprisonment. Burt Lancaster has the leading role and does well with it.

There are six men living in Cell R-17, in Westgate Penitentiary. Joe Collins (Burt Lancaster) is their dominating spirit. He is moved always by an intense, driving force that won't let him be still. As the story opens, he is just back from a week in "solitary" for being found with a knife in his pocket. Joe knows who planted that knife on him—a cringing, tricky, little stool pigeon named Wilson. And he knows why. It was because Munsey (Hume Cronyn), the head guard, ordered him to do it. Munsey hates Joe and is determined to break him.

Joe's cellmates are sure nothing will break Joe. They have their weaknesses. Lister (Whitney Bissell) talks constantly of the wife who never writes to him. Soldier (Howard Duff) dreams of his wife in Italy. The others have brooding secrets, too.

They don't know that Joe, too, has tragedy in his heart. That Ruth (Ann Blyth), the girl he loves, is dying of cancer because she won't have an operation without Joe beside her. Somehow, some way, Joe must get out of prison—to Ruth.

There's trouble stirring all through the prison. Wilson, the "stoolie," meets with an "accident." Lister is deliberately driven to suicide by Munsey. Big Gallagher (Charles Bickford) who has always kept order among the men, loses his parole, and tells Joe he'll try a "break" with him. Plans are made for Tuesday night. Plans that lead to disaster and bloodshed and violence.—Univ.

SEE THE DIFFERENCE Maybelline MAKES!

Compare the two sides of this revealing picture. First, cover the right side . . . then cover only the left. What a thrilling difference! Soft, lovely Maybelline Eye Make-up can do the same for you. It's amazing to see how much larger and more expressive your eyes appear when lashes are darkened to their very tips with Maybelline Mascara—and brows are gracefully defined with the smooth, soft Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Insist on Maybelline — the Eye Make-up in good taste.

MAYBELLINE SOLID MASCARA in the new gold-colored metal vanity, $1. Refills, 50c. Shades: Black, Brown, Blue.

MAYBELLINE CREAM MASCARA (applied without water) comes in handy leatherette case, $1. Shades: Black, Brown.

MAYBELLINE EYE SHADOW in subtle shades of Blue, Brown, Blue-gray, Green, Violet, Gray.

MAYBELLINE EYEBROW PENCIL with fine, smooth, soft point — so easy to use! Black or Brown.

EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER!

From simple forward dives to intricate spins and twists, Mildred O'Donnell mastered them all to win New York's Metropolitan diving championship.
"In diving, you practice and try until you find the particular forms and styles that suit you best," explains Champion Mildred O'Donnell.
IT'S TRUE IN DIVING... EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER! ...AND IN SMOKING TOO. THE CIGARETTE FOR ME IS CAMEL!
Mildred O'Donnell
DIVING CHAMPION

More people are smoking CAMELS today than ever before in history!

Yes, experience during the shortage taught millions the differences in cigarette quality!

YOUR 'T-ZONE' WILL TELL YOU...
T for Taste...
T for Throat...
That's your proving ground for any cigarette. See if Camels don't suit your 'T-Zone' to a 'T'
CAMEL
TURKISH & DOMESTIC BLEND CIGARETTES
CHOICE QUALITY

DIVING Champion Mildred O'Donnell hasn't forgotten the war shortage of cigarettes. "I never realized there were such differences in cigarettes until the shortage," she recalls. "That's when I really learned what cigarette suits me best — Camel."

Millions of others had the same experience, with the result that today more Camels are being smoked than ever before in history. But, no matter how great the demand:

We don't tamper with Camel quality. Only choice tobaccos, properly aged, and blended in the time-honored Camel way, are used in Camels.

IT WAS NO FUN, the cigarette shortage; but it was a real experience. That's when millions of smokers learned the meaning of the phrase, "Camels suit my 'T-Zone' to a 'T.'"

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C.

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS

than any other cigarette

Three nationally known independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors—in every branch of medicine—to name the cigarette they smoked. More doctors named Camel than any other brand.

august 15c

modern screen

A DELL MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE • DELL • A DELL MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE

©C18 85313

PER.

CORNEL WILDE

Softer, Smoother Skin can be yours with just One Cake of Camay!

Lady, if you'd be lovely, look to your complexion. A soft, clear skin is beauty's first essential. Yes, and you can have a softer, smoother skin with just one cake of Camay . . . if you'll forego careless cleansing . . . go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet! Just follow directions on the Camay wrapper. Camay—so mild it cleanses without irritation—can give your skin a thrillingly softer look!

MEET THE BAUDOS

Kay met Joe, a doctor, at a hospital dance. This was it! Kay is tall, dark and stunning—one of the most interesting-looking girls you ever saw!

MRS. JOSEPH S. BAUDO
the former Kathryn M. Cheetham of Forest Hills, N. Y.
Bridal portrait painted by Alex Ross

The site is chosen for the Baudos' home on Long Island. They'll build soon. And in the meantime, Kay stays on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Let it help you too!

You're sugar-sweet... but will you keep?

Guard your after-bath freshness—stay nice to be near with Mum

Of course you're sweet and fragrant after that refreshing shower. But, Honey, don't expect too much of your bath. Remember, it can't protect you against risk of future underarm odor.

So play safe. Be sure. Complete your bath with Mum. After you wash away past perspiration, let Mum guard your charm all day or all evening.

Mum

Product of Bristol-Myers

checks perspiration odor

1. Safe for charm. Mum checks underarm odor, gives sure protection all day or all evening.

2. Safe for skin. Snow-white Mum is gentle, harmless to skin . . . forms no irritating crystals.

3. Safe for clothes. No harsh ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical, Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

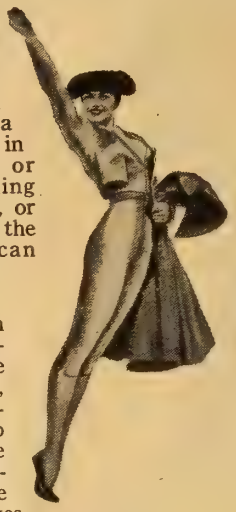
The greatest star of the screen!

We love "Fiesta". We recommend "Fiesta". "Fiesta" is the most-a of the best-a. And so is Esth-a!

★ ★ ★ ★

We refer, of course, to lovely Esther Williams, who lends her glamorous presence to M-G-M's big Technicolor spectacle, "Fiesta".

★ ★ ★



Even standing still, Esther is lovely to look at. And when she swirls a matador's cape in the bull ring, or dances a flaming Latin flamenco, or romances under the mellow Mexican moon—ai-ai-ai!

★ ★ ★

You'll revel in gay "Fiesta"—and meet, for the very first time, handsome newcomer Ricardo Montalban, the M-G-M star discovery whose torrid love makes the screen curl up at the edges.

★ ★ ★ ★

Ricardo's equally adept at dancing and at the strings of a guitar . . . equally audacious in the bull ring and in the moonlight. Welcome, Good Neighbor!

★ ★ ★

The beauty of Esther Williams ... the manliness of Montalban... the music of Mexico . . . the magic of Technicolor... the thrills of the arena—that's M-G-M's "Fiesta".

★ ★ ★

Viva! we say for Director Richard Thorpe, Producer Jack Cummings and a prime supporting cast: Akim Tamiroff, John Carroll, Cyd Charisse, Mary Astor, Fortunio Bonanova. Also for screen playmen George Bruce and Lester Cole.

★ ★ ★ ★

"Fiesta" leads off a festival of M-G-M hits. Soon "The Hucksters" comes to town, with Clark Gable (as Vic Norman) and lovely Deborah Kerr (pronounced "new star"). Wait till you see Frederick Wakeman's bombshell best-seller! You'll be saying "Love that picture!"

★ ★ ★ ★

Coming along, too, is "Song of Love", starring Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker. We'll say only one thing about it: "Song of Love" is one of the ten greatest love stories of all time.

★ ★ ★

Meantime, be a guest-a at "Fiesta".

—Leo

AUGUST, 1947

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

WELCOME, STRANGER! (Bette Davis) ... by Hedda Hopper 35
STRANGE WOMAN (Joan Crawford) ... by Eric Bishop 36
THE JOLSON-CROSBY STORY ... by Ed Sullivan 38
JEEPNIC (Elizabeth Taylor and Marshall Thompson) ... 40
PAIR OF ACES (James Stewart and Henry Fonda) ... by Carl Schroeder 42
JAMES MASON'S LIFE STORY ... by Virginia Wilson 44
WHO, ME? (Larry Parks) ... by Kirtley Baskette 46
MALE ANIMAL (Rory Calhoun) ... by George Benjamin 48
OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES (Dennis Morgan) ... By Howard Sharpe 50
MIRAGE IN MINK (Lizabeth Scott) ... by Irene Greengard 52
"JESSIE" FOR SHORT (Betty Grable and Harry James) ... by Ida Zeitlin 54
PALM SPRINGS (Cornel and Pat Wilde) ... 56
DREAM GUY (Macdonald Carey) ... by Arthur L. Charles 60
HONEY CHILE (Ava Gardner) ... by Rosemary Layng 62
A MAN'S CASTLE (Dick Haymes and Joanne Dru) ... by Jack Wade 64
LITTLE MAGGIE COMES TO TOWN (Margaret O'Brien) ... by Christopher Kane 66
POISE, IT'S WONDERFUL! (Myrna Loy) ... by Hank Jeffries 68
SOUND OF LAUGHTER (Rosalind Russell) ... by Cameron Shipp 70

features

GOOD NEWS ... by Louella Parsons 4
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "The Bachelor And The Bobby Soxer" selected by Dorothy Kilgallen 14
MODERN SCREEN GOES TO A CHRISTENING ... 32

departments

REVIEWS ... by Virginia Wilson 18
FASHION ... by Constance Bartel 73
INFORMATION DESK ... by Beverly Linet 83
FAN CLUBS ... by Shirley Frohlich 92
BEAUTY: "Your Smile Insurance" ... by Carol Carter 94
MUSIC: "Sweet And Hot" ... by Leonard Feather 98

COVER PORTRAIT BY NICKOLAS MURAY • DESIGNED BY LESTER BEALL

ALBERT P. DELACORTE, Executive Editor HENRY P. MALMGREEN, Editor

BERYL STOLLER, associate editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
BEVERLY LINET, information desk
CHARLES SAXON, cartoon editor

MAGDA MASKEL, western manager
FRANKLYN PHILLIPS, western editor
GUS GALE, staff photographer
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
DON ORNITZ, staff photographer
CARL SCHROEDER, editorial consultant
LAYNG MARTINE, promotion director
JEAN KINKEAD, contributing editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 35, No. 3, August, 1947. Copyright, 1947, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year, elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office, Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

Bravo for a Beautiful Daredevil!

By day, disguised as a man, she fought the fiercest beasts in Mexico's bull ring— but at night, in the arms of her sweetheart, she was all woman!

M-G-M's BIGGEST, GAYEST TECHNICOLOR SPECTACLE

FIESTA

(WHERE THEY LIVE AND LOVE DANGEROUSLY)

ESTHER WILLIAMS

AKIM TAMIROFF · CYD CHARISSE · JOHN CARROLL · MARY ASTOR · FORTUNIO BONANOVA

AND INTRODUCING RICARDO MONTALBAN

Gorgeous ESTHER WILLIAMS is an eyeful
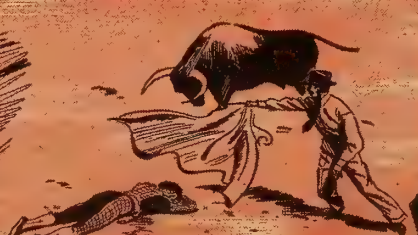
—in dazzling evening gowns!
—in matador costume!
—in bathing scenes!

Torrid romance with new star Ricardo Montalban!



Saved by a miracle from death in the arena!

Music! The dance of desire— with exotic Cyd Charisse.

Directed by RICHARD THORPE · Produced by JACK CUMMINGS

ORIGINAL SCREEN PLAY by GEORGE BRUCE and LESTER COLE

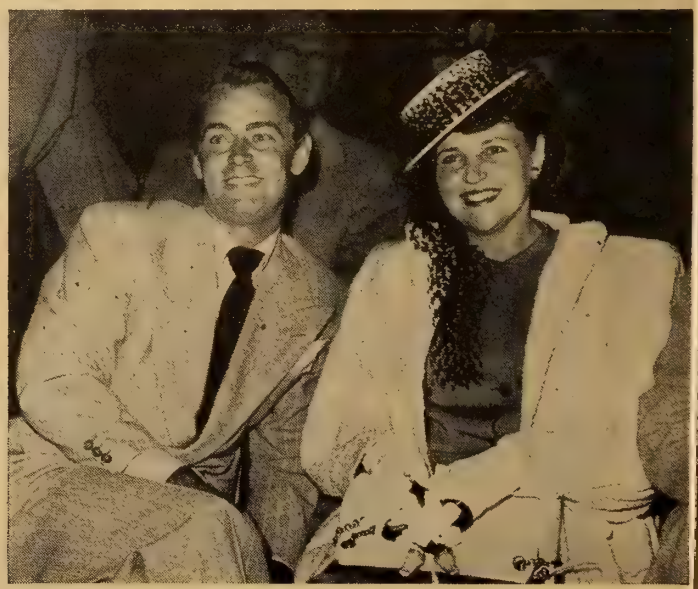
A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

louella parsons' good news

At Tony Martin's Beverly Hills Hotel party, Annelle and Mark Stevens kibitzed their host, while he tried to order up more hors d'oeuvres. "That's my literally agent," Mark kept insisting, "calling about my book."

It was a real treat for Judy Donlevy, 4, the day her daddy escorted her to N. Y.'s Stork Club for lunch—and a present (in the box). Brian and Marj. Lane were divorced last February, after 11 years of marriage.

Esther Williams and Ben Gage are still talking about the vacation they spent at Arrowhead Springs. At the Martin party, they found a fascinated listener in Janet Blair. Ben and Es are busy laughing at divorce rumors.



Sue Ladd's new streamlined figure drew raves at the Ice Capades opening. Grapefruit—cold and baked—helped do it! Alan, who has sold his interest in the Mayfair Restaurant, is now concentrating on ranching.

The Ty Power-Lana Turner romance dazzles Hollywood. They fly his boss, Darryl Zanuck, to and from Palm Springs every week-end.

Before Van and Evie Johnson announced hat the stork would visit them in December, Evie had the most divine squelch for women who kept asking her if she were going to have a baby.

Before a stork-minded femme could get to her at a party, Evie would spot the unspoken question in the eye, then go up to the belle and say, "Are YOU going to have a baby?"

Such sputterings and stammerings you've ever heard—particularly when some of the victims weren't even married!

Up until a few hours ago, Evie insisted hat she and Van were not "expecting."

"It's just that we happen to have the most wonderful cook in the world and both Van and I are putting on weight, which we'll have to start watching," she would say.

Well, now we know that Van will definitely be a father, before the end of the year.

* * *

I don't often report items like this—because they are better left unsaid. But in this case, I think some good can be accomplished even though I mention no names. The girl in question will know whom I mean.

If she thinks the great amount of drinking she is doing is unknown to her studio bosses, she is seriously mistaken! It's true that she doesn't make an exhibition of herself in public or in night clubs. But that is not the point.

This dangerous habit to which she is falling victim is marking her face with lines and kidney circles under the eyes, and the hangovers she suffers shows in the dull, slow way she reads her lines.

How silly and pointless this all is. There is nothing in her life to "drive her to drink."

She has a wonderful contract with one of the big companies. She is in love with a very fine boy. She has friends rooting for her to go straight to the top of the movie ladder. And she has youth and beauty.

But, believe me, she won't keep any of these things if she continues along her present path to a smash-up. I was present at a dinner party the other night attended by one of the top men at her studio. He told me she had lost out on a very good role because they couldn't take a chance on her.

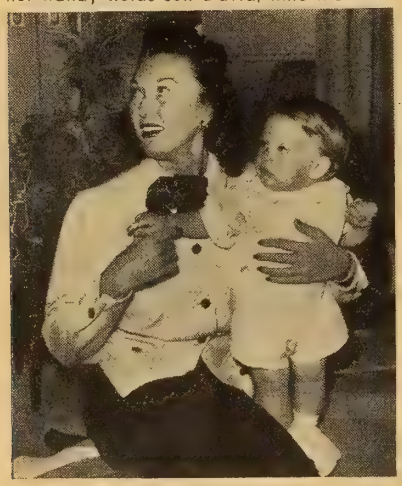
In this case, a word to this very "unwise" young lady should be sufficient.

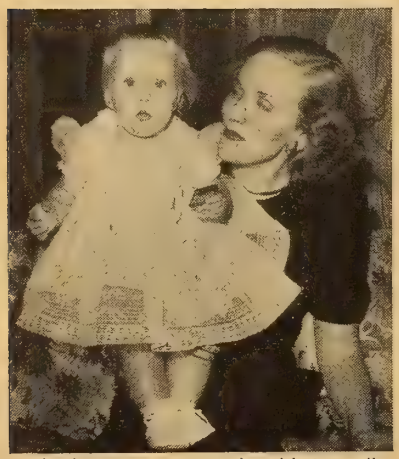
* * *

I don't know what's happened to Hedy

louella parsons' good news

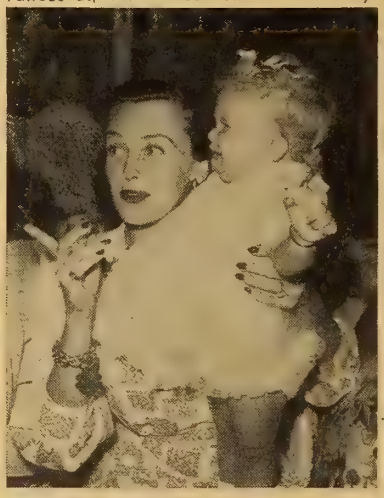
Mrs. Hyatt Dehn (whom you'd recognize as Ginny Sims if she had a microphone in her hand) holds son David, nine months.





Kimberly Kyser, 11 months old, is really too young to smoke; the matches are for her ma, Georgia Carroll Kyser.

Competition for Charlie McCarthy: Candice Bergen, daughter of Edgar and Frances B., celebrates her first birthday.



Master Robert Cummings, Jr. (second baby from left) was definitely the Older Man at Candice Bergen's birthday party. But in spite of his fifteen months, mama Mary Elliott Cummings still had to wipe his mouth. Georgia (left) and Ginny (right) had a wonderful—but exhausting—time.

Lamarr. I saw her walking along Vine Street—slacks, shirt, bandanna tied around her head, and looking anything but glamorous. I passed her by and didn't recognize her.

Even if Hedy is down and blue, she shouldn't appear in public on a crowded business street in slacks and a bandanna over her head. There are hundreds of women who idolize Hedy and think of her as glamorous, beautiful, and chic.

It's true she's unhappy. Her marriage hasn't worked out just as she thought it should. She left John Loder once, and I wouldn't be surprised if she left him again. She feels she has had too much responsibility with two babies and four pictures all within three years.

Well, maybe so—but for the sake of her public, Hedy should leave those troubles at home, and when she steps out on the street, look as a movie star should look—carefully turned out, beautifully groomed, and properly coiffured.

* * *

I was happy when I told you a few months ago that I was sure Greer Garson and Richard Ney had ironed out their troubles, but as I write this, they have separated, and I don't believe there will ever be a reconciliation.

Greer is fond of Richard, but she thinks he has to grow up first. She believes they are better off apart. I see her dining sometimes with David Lewis, the producer, or Sam Raphaelson, the writer, usually talking business. I'm sure there is no other romance in her life, and I'm doubly sure there is no other in Dick's.

(Continued on page 8)

SEE IT NOW... from now on you'll be hearing about it !!!!!!

ANN SHERIDAN
LEW AYRES
ZACHARY SCOTT

it's so easy to cry "Shame!"

"THE UNFAITHFUL"

IF SHE WERE YOURS
COULD YOU FORGIVE ?

THE NEW WARNER SENSATION!

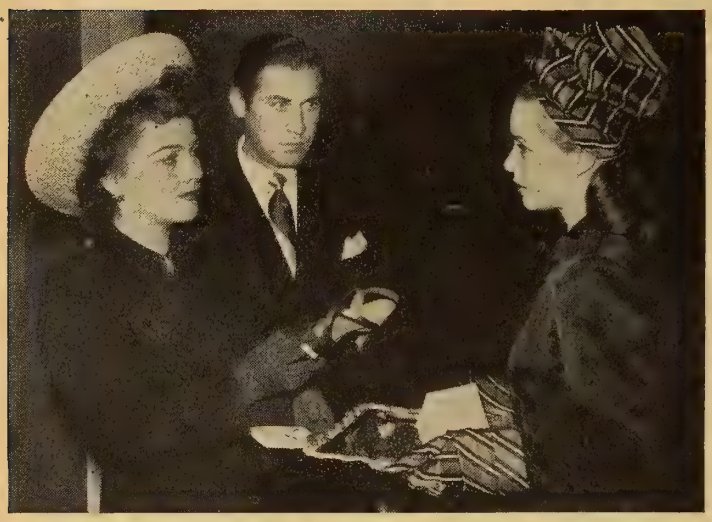
with EVE ARDEN STEVEN GERAY · Directed by VINCENT SHERMAN · Produced by JERRY WALD

ORIGINAL SCREEN PLAY BY DAVID GOODIS AND JAMES GUNN · MUSIC BY MAX STEINER

louella parsons' good news



At designer Don Loper's swank fashion shop, a mannequin offers a sandal to Anne Baxter, while husband John Hodiak looks on. Anne, who's been working too hard, recently went on a long fishing trip with John, to relax.

Instead of having a famous person as his guest of honor, famed host Atwater Kent threw an aviation party—with a Douglas DC-6 as the star! Among the younger guests were Scotty Beckett and Peggy Ann Garner.

Ran into Kathryn Grayson and she told me that she's the first bride-to-be on record who ever moved into the honeymoon house ahead of the groom!

The housing shortage is responsible. "Johnny has a place to live and I haven't," Kathryn said, "so I moved in even though only three rooms are furnished."

They aren't at all sure the house will be furnished for the Big Event. She said it wouldn't surprise her in the least to have the social columns report the wedding like this:

"The bride entered from the partially furnished kitchen, and the happy couple exchanged vows before an improvised altar in a corner of the empty living room. Guests remained standing throughout, because of the shortage of chairs. The reception was a clubby affair in the cramped breakfast room."

* * *

Even the most devoted of husbands like their wives streamlined, no matter what they say about loving the little woman just as she is. Listen to this:

Alan Ladd is so proud of his Susie's new trimness, since the birth of their last baby, that he left word in the kitchen that Mrs. Ladd was to get half a grapefruit for dessert every night.

The other day, Sue had a few thousand words to say to the cook, herself. It all added up to the fact that she was tired of the same thing.

"Oh, you don't have to eat cold grapefruit all the time," replied the Queen of the Kitchen. "Mr. Ladd says if you get tired of that—you can have baked grapefruit!"

* * *

Lilli Palmer and Rex Harrison are completely redecorating their home, and Lilli told the interior decorator that Rex's bedroom was to be done entirely in gray—gray ceiling, walls and floor.

"And what will we use for color relief?" the decorator asked.

"Nothing," cracked Lilli. "He says he wants it all gray—and gray it will be unless he comes home in a blue funk or a red rage!"

* * *

When Shirley Temple signed to do Mary Hagen for Warners, it was in her contract that Mary Lou Isleid, who has been her stand-in for 14 years, would do her regular chore for this movie.

I think it is really astounding and a coincidence that these two girls who started working together when they were five years old have grown up and retained exactly the same measurements!

Mary Lou's figure, height and weight are exactly the same as Shirley's.

Most stars acquire stand-ins after they are fully grown. But Shirley and Mary Lou set a record of some sort, or I miss my guess.

* * *

This has been a month of "little parties."

Irene Dunne was so intrigued with the new Rodeo Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel that she chose that spot for a small cocktail party. The motif is very swanky modern "Western," if you can imagine such a thing. Clever lighting makes the soft tan and beige decorations look like desert gold and one whole side of the room is taken up by an amazing frieze of illuminated cowboys.

Irene was a vision in a cool green and white summer print against this background. "My feelings are hurt," she whispered to me. "Everybody is asking me 'what's the occasion for this party?' There's no occasion. I just felt like seeing my friends, and I think this is a stunning room."

Betty Hutton looked cuter than peanuts in a white dress with a snood-effect hat just dripping little pink roses. If there was ever a time when Betty and Ted Briskin were having their troubles, that's all over since the birth of the baby. The only time they stop holding hands is when Ted reaches in his pocket to bring out pictures of their debutante of 1960.

Natalie Draper, with her bright red hair was a stunner in one of the new "daytime" long dresses in a soft shade of green.

Ted North, one of the best looking boys in this town, was stagging it—which ain't fair.

Right in the middle of the festivities, I noticed everybody crowding around the big win

(Continued on page 10)

THE SONGS HE WROTE! THE LOVES HE KNEW!

Wherever he went there was a lovely face, a trim ankle and melodies that set an era aflame! Gad, what a life!

The story of Joe Howard, America's most romantic troubadour!

I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now

Color by Technicolor

JUNE HAVER · MARK STEVENS

with MARTHA STEWART · REGINALD GARDINER

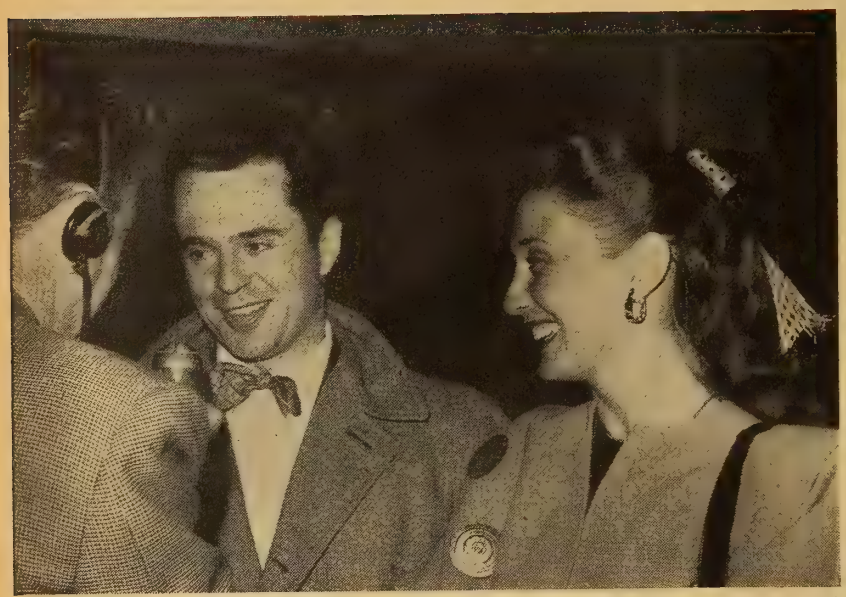
LENORE AUBERT · WILLIAM FRAWLEY · GENE NELSON · TRUMAN BRADLEY · GEORGE CLEVELAND

Directed by LLOYD BACON · Produced by GEORGE JESSEL

Screen Play by Lewis R. Foster

20th CENTURY-FOX

louella parsons' good news



Larry Parks and Betty Garrett were interviewed by the roving mike reporter at the opening of Ice Capades. What the radio announcer probably asked Larry to do was to "make like Al Jolson"—a request he hears everywhere he goes these days.

Bob Hutton and his wife, Cleatus Caldwell, were among the happiest spectators at the ice show premiere. Poor Bob can't see two feet in front of him without the specs he's cleaning. The Huttons are headed for a delayed honeymoon soon.

dow overlooking the swimming pool—and no wonder. Johnny Weissmuller and Esther Williams were both down there doing exhibition dives and water stunts. Believe me, they were simply wonderful. We were all sorry when the light faded and we couldn't watch those two water babies any longer. All in all, Irene's "little party" was a splashing success.

* * *

Want a good beauty tip straight from one of the prettiest faces in Hollywood?

I was in the beauty parlor the other day, and as I passed a booth where Audrey Totter had just finished putting on a brand new makeup, I was surprised to see her go over to the tap and dash cold water in her face!

"What's that for?" I asked.

"Oh, it's a little trick I learned a long time ago," she said. "There's nothing so unattractive to me as a face that shows every bit of freshly applied makeup—the powder, the rouge and the definite line where the lipstick has just been applied. Well, if you want to do away with that—just dash cold water over your face and blot it dry with a towel. It gives a completely natural, unmade up look."

It certainly gave that to Audrey. Give it a try.

* * *

No one even suspected that Spencer Tracy was an amateur veterinarian until he successfully brought his pet dog through a serious intestinal infection.

Then it came out that he has bred and raised two young colts which he intends to race in California.

But Spence, who is the quietest guy in the world and seldom talks about his interests, just tosses it off with, "Oh, I've been interested in veterinary work for some time and have been reading a lot of books on the subject."

* * *

The wackiest set to visit is the one on which Annie Sheridan and Errol Flynn are making Silver River at Warners.

The day I dropped over, Ann was walking around in hoop skirts, very heavy, with ice packs on her feet! "These danged costumes are so heavy my feet are killing me," quoth the amazing Miss Sheridan, who refuses to give a hoot for glamor where comfort is concerned.

Over in a corner, Errol Flynn was in a huddle with a salesman, fingering the most beautiful Irish linen, and when I asked, "For hankies?" he replied, "Nope—for dresses for two beautiful girls—my daughters."

The doors to their portable dressing-rooms happened to be open, and when I glanced in I noticed that both were adorned with baskets of the most wilted flowers I have ever seen. It started out as a gag on Errol's part—sending Annie the most dilapidated posies he could order from the florists. But Annie got wind of what was up, and ordered equally dried up specimens delivered to Errol the same time on the same day!

These two have made so many pictures together and know each other so well they are continually trying to think up new gags, but Flynn seldom gets away with anything because he swears Annie has a "pipeline" to his gags, and either beats him to them or duplicates them.

Some way or another, even with all these shennanigans going on, they get a movie made—and most of the time they are good ones.

* * *

It's no publicity story that Lauren Bacall wants out of her Warner contract to settle down and be just plain Mrs. Humphrey Bogart. She even signs photographs sent out to fans, "Lauren Bacall Bogart." (Well, Olivia de Havilland returns mail that is not addressed to Mrs. Marcus Goodrich!)

I think the thing with Lauren, or Betty, as her friends call her, is that she has no burning ambition for a career of her own. People ask, "But how can a girl want to give up fame and her own career when things are breaking so well?"

It has happened before. Look at Alice Faye.

* * *

Van Johnson is "tennis happy" and I'm not kidding. He just doesn't talk about anything else these days—except Evie!

This summer he goes to Honolulu, where he will play several exhibition matches with Jack Kramer and Ted Schroeder, and when you play with those gents, you have to be good. (If he played like a mudlark, he'd still draw the girls to the courts, I betcha.)

(Continued on page 12)

Only a Sucker Would Turn His Back...

on a Dynamite Dame Like This!...

RKO PRESENTS

PAT O'BRIEN
WALTER SLEZAK
ANNE JEFFREYS

in

"RIFF-RAFF"

Killer mob closing in!... A blonde in his arms who might double-cross him for a dime... anything can happen to a guy in the toughest racket in tough Panama!

with
PERCY KILBRIDE
JEROME COWAN
GEORGE GIVOT

RKO RADIO PICTURES

Produced by NAT HOLT • Directed by TED TETZLAFF • Screen Play by MARTIN RACKIN

louella parsons' good news

Lately, I've been amused at how many of our stars run to form where their party manners are concerned. Recently, I attended a cocktail party where most of the big names in Hollywood were present and I noticed—

That Spencer Tracy always joins a group of men—and sticks with them.

That Joan Fontaine and Bill Dozier remain the shortest time. They dash right in and dash right out again.

That Roz Russell never wears the same gown twice.

That Dinah Shore and George Montgomery never touch anything to drink but they just l-o-o-ove hors d'oeuvres.

That Lauren Bacall wears the most tailored gowns—even dinner dresses.

That Greer Garson experiments the most with different hair-dos. Greer is seldom coiffured the same way twice.

Joan Crawford, whether she arrives with Greg Bautzer or some other escort, always leaves early enough to get to the Mocambo or Ciro's for an hour or so of dancing.

Cary Grant usually arrives alone, but usually spots a beautiful belle to whom he devotes himself for the rest of the evening.

Tyrone Power refuses all social invitations if he is making a costume picture. Too self-conscious about his long hair and sideburns. But Cesar Romero doesn't care about beards.

Lana Turner attracts the most candid camera shots.

The best "eater"—Van Johnson.

* * *

Close-Up of Lana Turner: She drives Tyrone Power crazy by laughing before he gets to the point of a story—but he loves her just the same. She drives others crazy when she tells stories of her own. She always misses the point!

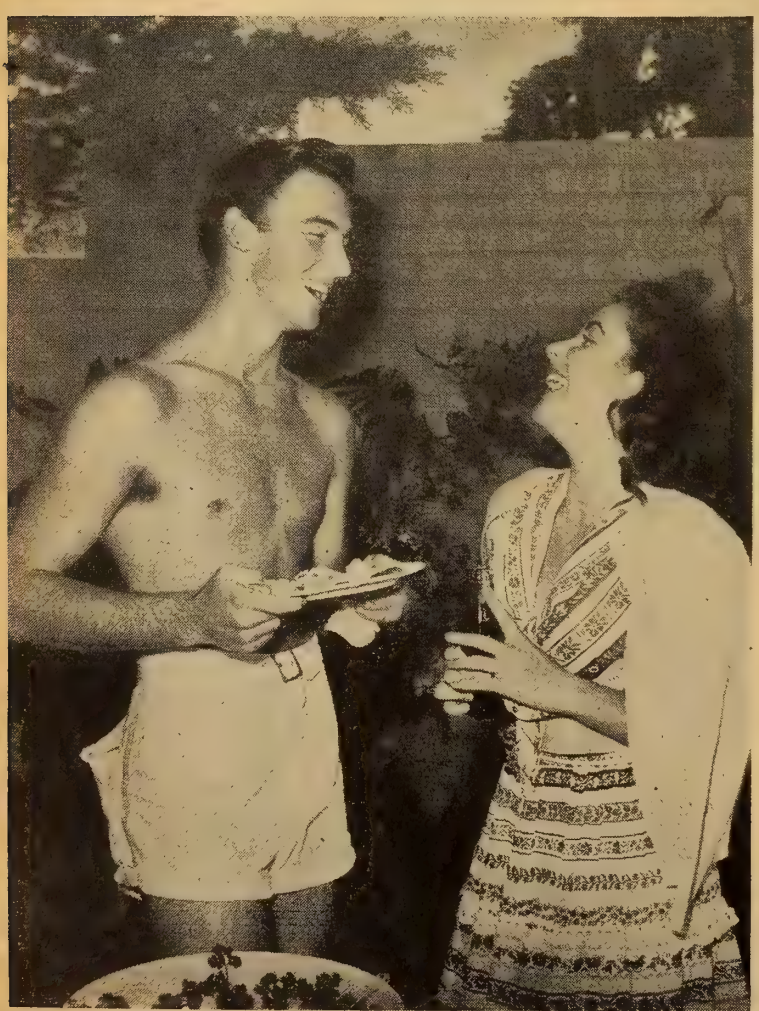
She's one of the best dressed girls in Hollywood—but seldom makes any of the "ten best-dressed" lists.

She both hates to go to bed—and hates to get up.

She thinks black over pink is the most seductive combination a woman can wear.

When she's in the mood, she can talk "jive" with the best of the jitterbugs.

She buys every new shade of lipstick that comes on the market whether it's for blondes or brunettes, because she never knows which color she's going to have her hair. But her



Jerome Courtland's Sunday afternoon swimming parties are a gay habit with the movies' younger set. This particular Sunday, though, the sun wouldn't shine; in fact, it was cold! But Elizabeth Taylor dared Jerome to don swimming trunks.

With swimming counted out, guests Shirley Temple and John Agar sample the second-best feature—the wonderful picnic food. Others played tennis, listened to records—or just loafed.

favorite is a pale pink "Watermelon,"

She is very proud of the amateur portraits she makes of her daughter, Cheryl, and likes them better than the professional ones.

When she does her bedroom over again, it will be in yellow and orchid.

She "sneaks" candy and pastries and then gives others advice about dieting.

Because she has a naturally gay disposition, she laughs a lot and likes to be around people who are happy.

Around the M-G-M lot, she has the reputation for being easy to get along with.

She loves to go to parties, but hates to give them. As a hostess, she worries.

Like Edna St. Vincent Millay, "there isn't a train she wouldn't take—no matter where it's going"—or a plane, either!

Shirley and Joyce Reynolds (who dates Marshall Thompson, who dates Elizabeth Taylor, who's recently been squired by their host) enjoyed a quiet chat with Jerome's step-brother, tiny Kurt Wordeman.

Among the record-enthusiasts were Liz Taylor and Jan Ford. The warbling on the disks was done by Jerome, himself—and he's quite good. He won't sing professionally, though, until he's had more training.

Both Joyce and Marshall Thompson brought their swimming togs, but their bathing suits never got wet—or worn! After some strenuous sets of ping-pong, they helped devour the party delicacies.

dorothy kilgallen selects "the bachelor and the bobby soxer"

■ Years ago, when I watched Shirley Temple dimple and coo as a curly-topped five-year-old, little did I dream that one day I would be referring to this beruffled angel as "sexy." But the interests of science compel me to report that a new Shirley Temple—almost adult, deliberately alluring and admirably designed for sweaters—is on view in The Bachelor And The Bobby Soxer, and in a refined way she is giving Lana Turner quite a run for her money.

In fact, I can hear the whistles from the balcony now.

What is more to the point of this report, I can hear noisy applause for The Bachelor And The Bobby Soxer, a bright and delightful picture designed to give anyone in any family anywhere—grandmas in Grand (Continued on page 16)

Poise—that's what Cary Grant needs to beat Rudy Vallee. Shirley Temple, Myrna Loy, Ray Collins and Harry Davenport lend moral support.

MAGIC STARS! MAGIC STORY! MAGIC ENTERTAINMENT!

JAMES STEWART
JANE WYMAN

Robert Riskin's

"MAGIC TOWN"

Their meeting was saucy and flippant!

Their romance found birth in the magic of a sudden kiss!

Their love jeopardized the happiness of thousands!

-ELECTRIC-as only the stars of "It's A Wonderful Life" and "The Yearling" can be!

with KENT SMITH · NED SPARKS · WALLACE FORD · Ann Shoemaker · Donald Meek

Written and Produced by ROBERT RISKIN · Directed by WILLIAM A. WELLMAN ·

A William A. Wellman Production

Released by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

WOMEN GAVE THEIR LIVES FOR HIM... AS READILY AS THEY GAVE THEIR LIPS!
Man among men. Lover.. Adventurer.. Soldier-of-fortune —his life and loves made a new kind of history!
J. ARTHUR RANK
presents
STEWART GRANGER
the Screen's Great New Lover!
6 Feet Three of MAN!
JEAN KENT
ANNE CRAWFORD
in
"CARAVAN"
with DENNIS PRICE • ROBERT HELPMANN
From the novel by Lady Eleanor Smith
Screenplay by Roland Pertwee
Produced by Harold Huth
Executive producer Maurice Ostrer
Directed by Arthur Crabtree
A GAINSBOROUGH PICTURE
AN EAGLE-LION FILMS RELEASE

DOROTHY KILGALLEN SELECTS "THE BACHELOR AND THE BOBBY SOXER"

(Continued from page 14)

Rapids, patricians on Park Avenue and kids in Kokomo—an evening of happy hilarity.

There must be a universal and grateful audience for this type of film, because while it is true that some people like to cry and some people like to worry about the state of the world, everybody likes to laugh. Here's their chance. Here is merriment based on situations as familiar and normal as the adolescent phone call, the drug store sundae and the potato race, and anyone who has lived any part of a lifetime in an average community can find identity and great humor in it.

Myrna Loy (see page 68 for a story on Myrna) just as pretty and pert and appealing as when she first got gay in The Thin Man, is a real charmer as a female judge, and Shirley is cast as her younger and more complicated sister. When Judge Myrna dismisses a case against an almost too attractive and more than somewhat playboyish artist, only to discover a few hours later that little sister Shirley has fallen wildly in love with him, the story is off to a spritely start on a series of incidents that, if not world-shaking, are certainly rib-tickling.

Cary Grant, of course, plays the artist, and with considerably more lightheartedness than he has shown in recent seasons. It's becoming. He seems actually to be having fun with the comedy scenes, his manner with the tirelessly predatory Shirley striking just the right balance of patience and desperation. His particular brand of widow's-peak, black-eyed, casual-drape magnetism makes it easy for any female member of the parish to understand why Shirley falls for him.

Then there is Rudy Vallee. A few years ago some genius at type casting thought of putting Rudy in the role of a stuffy and pedantic young gent, and he was transformed into one of Hollywood's most desirable comedians. The trick is done again here: he is an assistant district attorney vaguely enamored of Myrna and with his briefcase, Yale collar and air of canonization he might have stepped right out of the old Tom Dewey racket-busting office. He is extremely funny, and I am afraid he steals a good many of the scenes.

But it is a gay kind of larceny, appropriate in one of the gayest comedies to flit across the screen in a blue moon.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Would you like to receive the September, October and November issues of MODERN SCREEN absolutely free? Every month we give away 500 three-months subscriptions to the first 500 of you who fill out the questionnaire below and mail it to us IMMEDIATELY! Pretty neat, isn't it? We tally your choices, find out what stars you like to read about in MS, so we can give you the kind of magazine you like—and you may win three free issues—if you hurry!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our August issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd and 3rd CHOICES.

Honey Chile (Ava Gardner) ☐
A Man's Castle (Dick Haymes) ☐
Jeepnic (Elizabeth Taylor-Marshall Thompson) ☐
Dream Guy (Macdonald Carey) ☐
Palm Springs (Cornel and Pat Wilde) ☐
Mirage in Mink (Lizabeth Scott) ☐
Little Maggie Comes To Town (Margaret O'Brien) ☐
Who, Me? (Larry Parks) ☐
Pair of Aces (James Stewart-Henry Fonda) ☐
James Mason Life Story ☐
Male Animal (Rory Calhoun) ☐
Out Of The Mouths of Babes (Dennis Morgan) ☐
Poise, It's Wonderful! (Myrna Loy) ☐
Sound of Laughter (Rosalind Russell) ☐
Welcome Stranger! (Bette Davis) by Hedda Hopper ☐
Strange Woman (Joan Crawford) ☐
The Jolson-Crosby Story (Al Jolson-Bing Crosby) ☐
"Jessie" For Short (Betty Grable) ☐
Good News by Louella Parsons ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST?.....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

My name is.....

My address is.....

City..... Zone..... State..... I am..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

PERSONALS
FAMOUS ARTIST seeks beautiful model. Meet 9 o'clock, sixty paces west of Battersea Bridge. Will wear red carnation.

Don't answer this ad...

Don't

Don't

Don't

HUNT STROMBERG presents

GEORGE SANDERS ★ LUCILLE BALL ★ CHARLES COBURN ★ BORIS KARLOFF

IN

Lured

WITH

SIR CEDRIC HARDWICKE ★ JOSEPH CALLEIA

ALAN MOWBRAY ★ GEORGE ZUCCO

Directed by DOUGLAS SIRK • Screenplay by LEO ROSTEN

PRODUCED BY JAMES NASSER

Executive Producer, HUNT STROMBERG

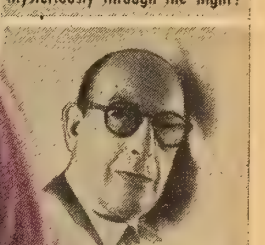
Released thru United Artists

How far will she go to trap a killer . . . or any other man?

Eight beautiful girls on his mind . . . and all of them quite dead!

His alibi was clever . . . and she was very, very beautiful, too!

What does he seek as he prowls mysteriously through the night?



Was he the artist who lured 8 beautiful girls to their deaths?

Movie Reviews

by VIRGINIA WILSON

Louise (Joan Crawford) has been in love with David (Van Heflin) long enough to know he's no good and not worthy of her—but she can't help loving him.

After David throws her over, Louise roams the streets looking for him. She cracks under the strain and is hospitalized. Dr. Willard (Stanley Ridges) treats her.

Through all her troubles, Dean (Raymond Massey), her ex-employer whom she married, never deserts her. When he learns about David, he understands that too.

POSSESSED

In other, less scientific days, an insane person was said to be "possessed of a devil." In those days a woman like Louise Howell (Joan Crawford) would probably have been stoned to death. Now she is treated by psychiatrists, who patiently unravel the threads of her strange story. . .

For our purposes, the story starts when Louise, a registered nurse, comes to take care of Mrs. Graham. The invalid is filled with jealous fancies, and imagines her husband, Dean Graham (Raymond Massey) is having an affair with the new nurse. Louise actually is having an affair, but not with Dean. She is madly, uncontrollably in love with a cynical, worldly man named David Sutton (Van Heflin).

David has made it clear from the start that he isn't serious, that for him it's just one of those things. Gradually Louise grows more and more demanding, until at last, tired of her possessiveness, he tells her the affair is over. She refuses to believe it, pleading wildly with him to take her back. But he makes immediate plans to go to Canada on a mining job for Graham.

That night, Graham's wife is drowned in the lake by their house. Accident? Suicide? Murder? The coroner says accident. The household believes suicide. Except Louise. Her mind, unbalanced by her own emotional turmoil, can recall nothing of that night. Did she drown Mrs. Graham, or let her drown? She isn't sure.

In a year's time, Louise is married to Graham and they are living in a beautiful house in Washington. Graham's eighteen-year-old daughter, Carol (Geraldine Brooks), can't make herself love her father's new wife. She doesn't trust her, and they don't see much of each other.

Then David Sutton comes back from Canada, and an already explosive situation is touched off. Louise tries to convince him that he still loves her. He tells her brutally that he never did, and starts to take Carol out. Louise's mind gives way under the shock, and Graham learns quite suddenly that his wife is insane. Events move with appalling swiftness to their terrible climax.

Joan Crawford turns in another Oscar-worthy performance. Van Heflin gives a convincing portrayal of a heel, and young Geraldine Brooks is a definite discovery.—War.

(Continued on page 20)

She's out of this world and down-to-earth in

Technicolor

with Music!

who is she?

where is she from?

They say she kissed 2000 men!

COLUMBIA PICTURES presents

Rita HAYWORTH · Larry PARKS

in

Down to Earth

with

MARC PLATT · ROLAND CULVER · JAMES GLEASON · EDWARD EVERETT HORTON

ADELE JERGENS · GEORGE MACREADY · WILLIAM FRAWLEY

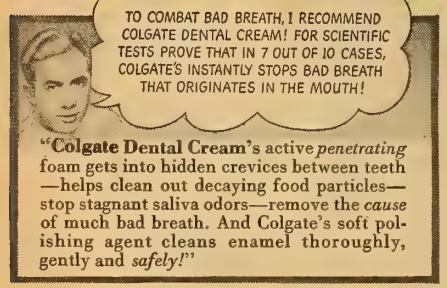
Original screenplay by Edwin Blum, Don Hartman · Songs by Allan Roberts and Doris Fisher

Directed by ALEXANDER HALL · A DON HARTMAN PRODUCTION

HEAR THE NEW SONG HITS:
"They Can't Convince Me"
"Let's Stay Young Forever"
"People Have More Fun Than Anyone"

Woe is Me! I've Got No She!

GIRLS, GIRLS EVERYWHERE, BUT NOT A GIRL FOR ME! HOW COME EVERY GUY'S GOT CUDDLE-CARGO BUT ME, SAM?
MAYBE IT'S BECAUSE YOU NEED YOUR DENTIST'S SCHOOLING ON HOW TO SQUARE AWAY THAT BAD BREATH OF YOURS, JOE!



TO COMBAT BAD BREATH, I RECOMMEND COLGATE DENTAL CREAM! FOR SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE THAT IN 7 OUT OF 10 CASES, COLGATE'S INSTANTLY STOPS BAD BREATH THAT ORIGINATES IN THE MOUTH!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

After the Civil War, Van Johnson lives with—and charms—Janet Leigh's southern family.

Host Tom Mitchell asks wife Selena Royle and son Dean Stockwell if Van is a "damnyankee."

Comes the showdown and Van's in real trouble with Chas. Dingle, Guy Kibbee and their friends.

ROMANCE OF ROSY RIDGE

I think you'll like Van Johnson better in this than in any picture he's ever made. There's warmth and sincerity in his portrayal of a young man with a difficult mission to perform. Janet Leigh is perfectly cast as a shy, pretty girl in backwoods Missouri. The time is right after the Civil War. The story is of the MacBean family, and of Henry Carson (Van Johnson) who comes to live with them.

Gill MacBean (Thomas Mitchell) fought on the Confederate side in the war. So did his son, Ben (Marshall Thompson), who is still missing. It's hard for Gill to run the farm alone. His wife, Sairy (Selena Royle) and daughter, Lissy (Janet Leigh) do all they can. Even little Andrew (Dean Stockwell) lends a hand. Still, it would be mighty nice if they could get a strong young man to help.

But when a strong young man comes along, in the person of Henry Carson, Gill is reluctant to let him stay. Henry won't come out and say which side he fought on. Just does a lot of talking about how folks ought to forget the fighting and settle down to helping their neighbors. But folks aren't feeling very neighborly because of the "night riders"—a masked group who have been burning barns at night.

No one knows who they are, but as Gill points out, "there ain't no Northern barns been burned." Meetings are held and feeling runs high. "It's plumb silly to talk like you do about having a dance, everybody together," Gill tells Henry. "They'd be a-fightin' in five minutes."

Henry doesn't think so. He likes to sing and dance himself, and he believes other people do, too. And he's sure Lissy would look lovelier than ever in a party dress. Because by then he and Lissy are in love.

So they have the party, and for a little while everything's fine. Then trouble starts, and Henry has to come out at last and show which side he's on. That looks like the end of the romance—until a dead man tells a tale.

Wait till you hear Van singing those hill-billy songs. He's terrific!—M-G-M

(Continued on page 22)

THE THRILLING STORY OF OLD CALIFORNIA'S MOST ROMANTIC DAYS !

The tough-shooting, hard-fighting times of pioneer California. Days filled with adventure . . . Nights filled with excitement . . . Hearts filled with glorious love!

HEAR THE NEW SCORE BY RUDOLF FRIML

Nelson Eddy
Ilona Massey

in

NORTHWEST OUTPOST

A story of rough-riding men . . . heart-stealing women!

with

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT

ELSA LANCHESTER • HUGO HAAS • LENORE ULRIC

And Introducing The American G. I. Chorus

Lyrics by EDWARD HEYMAN

Directed by ALLAN DWAN

A REPUBLIC PICTURE

Screen Play by ELIZABETH MEEHAN and RICHARD SALE • Original Story by ANGELA STUART • Adaptation by LAIRD DOYLE

Beech-Nut Gum

Everywhere it goes the assurance of Beech-Nut for fine flavor goes with it

Most everyone you meet in vacationland enjoys Beech-Nut Gum.

It's all in the day's work for Pearl White (Betty Hutton), dare-devil heroine of silent films.

Betty fixes it so boy-friend John Lund can play her leading man—but John doesn't like it at all!

When World War I breaks out, Betty leaves the movies to entertain our soldiers in Europe.

PERILS OF PAULINE

Our beautiful blonde heroine, bound hand and foot, lies on the railroad track. Swift as death, the locomotive hurtles toward her. Pauline hasn't a chance! Or has she? See the next chapter of this thrilling serial, folks, at the same theater next week. . .

Around 1914, Pearl White in Perils of Pauline was the hottest bet in the movie field. When you see Betty Hutton playing Pearl, you'll understand why. Pearl is quite a gal, even before she becomes a heroine star. "A regular cut-up," the other girls in the sweat-shop where she works, call her. One day the boss has her deliver a dress C.O.D. to Julia Gibbs (Constance Collier), stock company actress. Pearl is so impressed with this "grande dame" that she hands over the dress for nothing, on condition that she get a try-out in the stock company.

The company is run by Michael Farrington (John Lund). He reluctantly gives Pearl her chance, and she wows the audience with a wild novelty number. She stays on with the company, sewing, ironing and once in a while doing a walk-on. At last Mike lets her do a scene with him in a South Sea Island play. This leads to utter chaos, and Pearl gets fired.

Julia leaves with her. She and an actor called Timmy (Billy de Wolfe) are both fond of Pearl. Mike is more than fond of her, but hasn't sense enough to know it. Pearl still has a stubborn determination to be an actress. It is through Julia, a lion, and a custard pie, that Pearl becomes "Pauline," the dare-devil girl of the serials. Pearl loves it, even though McManus (William Demarest), the director, has her risking her neck every day.

But she misses Mike. Eventually, she manages to get him as her leading man, and marriage is just around the corner. Then Mike's pride gets in the way—he isn't going to be Mr. Pearl White. Instead, he enlists in the Army, for war has just been declared. Pearl gives up pictures and goes to Paris where she's an enormous success as an entertainer. Eventually Mike, too, turns up in Paris and Pearl gets another chance! And being Pearl, she makes the most of it.

If you're looking for good escapist entertainment, this is it.—Par.

HERE'S THE Biggest Book Buy in DOLLAR BOOK CLUB HISTORY

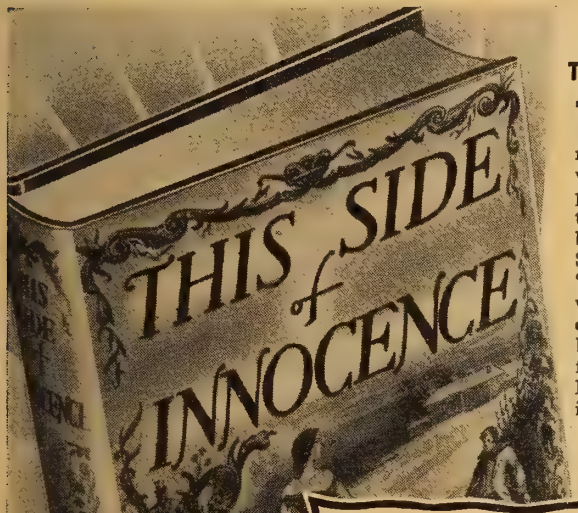
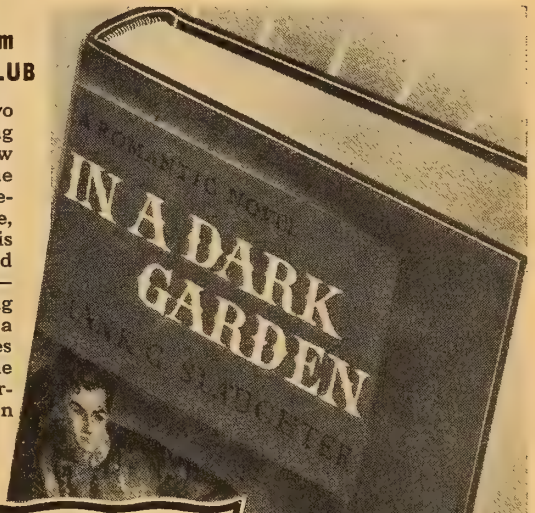
As a special inducement to join the DOLLAR BOOK CLUB now . . . take this amazing 2-in-1 bargain . . . this DOUBLE package of best-sellers . . .

Not One, but BOTH for $1





as your first books from THE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB

THINK of getting two of the best-selling novels today (you know what they cost in the publishers' editions at retail) for only $1—not one, but BOTH for $1! "This Side of Innocence" and "In a Dark Garden"—what a package of reading enjoyment—and what a bargain! With it comes free membership in the Dollar Book Club—offering the greatest savings in the book world today! Read facts below.

THIS SIDE OF INNOCENCE

by Taylor Caldwell

AMALIE, the whispered-about daughter of a drunken ne'er-do-well, sold herself into a marriage with wealth and position. Only one man could threaten the security of this ravishing minx—the wastrel half-brother of her husband. Then these two, the wanton and the wastrel, found themselves whirled into a lawless passion that defied every rule of honor. The Philadelphia Inquirer called this best-seller "a masterful piece of story-telling . . . pulsing with life."

IN A DARK GARDEN

by Frank G. Slaughter

HERE is a story that will hold you transfixed as you plunge with Julian Chisholm into a furious War between the States. Fascinating characters, including Lucy, intoxicating Southern belle, who gave her body recklessly but refused Julian's offer of honorable marriage. . . . Brave, lovely Jane, a mid-century Mata Hari, who would stop at nothing to gain her ends, yet whose coldly planned wedding became a thrilling romance. . . . If you liked "Gone With the Wind," you'll love this great new novel!

Every DOLLAR BOOK CLUB Selection Saves You 60% to 75%!

NO other book club brings you popular current books by famous authors for only $1.00 each. No other book club saves you 60 to 75 percent from the usual retail prices of books!

Yet membership in the Dollar Book Club is free and requires no dues or fees of any kind. You do not even have to take a book every month; the purchase of as few as six books a year keeps your membership in full force. In fact, for convenience most members prefer to have shipped and pay for books every other month.

More Than Half a Million Families Buy Books This Money-Saving Way!

Think of it! With book-manufacturing costs at an all-time high; with most popular current fiction selling for $2.75 and $3.00 in the publishers' editions at retail, the Dollar Book Club continues to bring its members the cream of the books for only $1.00 each! And in distinctive, full-size library editions bound in a format exclusively for members! The Club's huge membership makes such savings possible.

Famous Authors—Top Best-Sellers!

Outstanding fiction hits by such popular writers as W. Somerset Maugham, Kenneth Roberts, Mary Roberts Rinehart, and many others have been received by members for $1.00 each, while the public was paying up to $3.00 for the same books in the publishers' edition, at retail.

Start Enjoying Membership Now

You need send no money now. Upon receipt of the attached coupon you will immediately be sent the Double Book Package consisting of "This Side of Innocence" and "In a Dark Garden." As a new member, you will be billed a total of only $1.00 for BOTH books.

Then, every other month, you will receive the Club's descriptive folder called The Bulletin. The Bulletin describes the forthcoming two months' book selections. It also reviews about ten additional titles (in the original publishers' editions selling at retail for $2.50 or more) available to members at only $1.00 each. You may purchase either or both of the two new selections for $1.00 each, or neither. Or, you may purchase any of the other titles offered for $1.00 each. The bargains are there—but only if you want them!

Join Now—Send No Money

When you receive "This Side of Innocence" and "In a Dark Garden" and consider that these are typical of the values you are privileged to buy for only $1.00 each, you will be more than happy to have joined the club. Mail the coupon today.

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB, Garden City, New York

MAIL THIS COUPON

"This Side of Innocence" "In a Dark Garden" } BOTH FOR $1

Doubleday One Dollar Book Club, Dept. 8 M.M., Garden City, New York

Please enroll me free as a Dollar Book Club subscriber and send me my two introductory membership books, "This Side of Innocence" and "In a Dark Garden"—both for $1.00.

With these books will come my first issue of the free descriptive folder called "The Bulletin," telling about the two new forthcoming one-dollar bargain book selections and several additional bargains which are offered for $1.00* each to members only. I am to have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish either of the following months' selections and whether or not I wish to purchase any of the other bargains at the Special Club price of $1.00 each. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six during the year to fulfill my membership requirement. I pay nothing except $1.00 for each selection received plus a few cents shipping cost.

PLEASE PRINT

Mr. / Mrs. / Miss .....

Street and No. .....

City & Zone .....

State .....

Occupation ..... If under 21, Age, please.

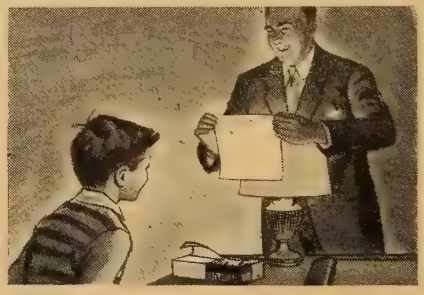
*Same Price in Canada: 105 Bond St., Toronto 2.

"But I didn't say tissues . . . I said KLEENEX !"

It's not the same thing at all—bridled Mother. Look. This is the only face I have—and I intend to take care of it. With a s-o-f-t tissue. A Kleenex Tissue. Good heavens—how many times do I have to tell you that Kleenex isn't another name for tissues?

Your Mother's right—for once! Pop chimed in. Kleenex is different. Take this box. Does it say Kleenex? No! Does it serve up tissues one at a time—so you don't have to fumble for 'em? No! So? Before you mistake other tissues for Kleenex—think twice, son!

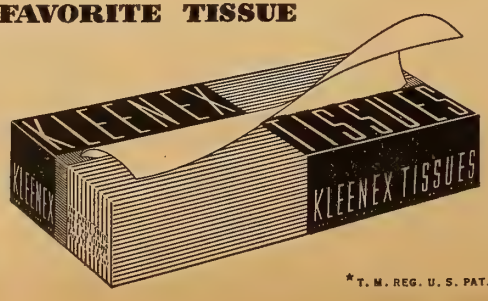
I've got my NOSE to think of! blurted Sis. Talk about a raw deal! Jeepers—all day I've been quietly dying for some dreamy, soft Kleenex for these sniffles. And what happens? Smarty-pants, here, hands me ordinary tissues—when my nose knows there's no other tissue just like heavenly Kleenex!



I'll learn you! winked Uncle Joe. Hold this gen-u-wyne Kleenex Tissue to a light. See any lumps, or weak spots? Never. You see Kleenex quality come smilin' through—always the same—so you can bet Kleenex is plenty soft. And husky! Your eyes tell you there is only one Kleenex.

Now I know... *There is only one KLEENEX

AMERICA'S FAVORITE TISSUE



*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Bob, Son of Battle: Lon McCallister plays a shepherd, and Edmund Gwenn, his cruel father.

BOB, SON OF BATTLE

Peggy Ann Garner has her first romance in this picture. With Lon McCallister, which is nice romancing, and in Technicolor. But it isn't allowed to interfere too much with the story of Bob, son of Battle, the champion sheep-dog you read about years ago.

Lon McCallister plays David M'Adam, a Scotch shepherd boy. David doesn't have much fun in life. His father (Edmund Gwenn) has become a cruel, embittered old man since his wife's death. He beats David regularly, and seems to care for nothing in the world but whiskey and his great, ugly dog, Red Wull.

Wull has won the Shepherds' Trials once, and M'Adams is sure he will win again this year. Everyone else is convinced the cup will go to Bob, son of Battle. Bob is champion stock, and is the property of James Moore (Reginald Owen), a neighbor. The old man is fiercely jealous of Moore, not only because of Bob, but because young David spends as much time as he can at the Moores' home.

Mrs. Moore has taught David to play the violin, which he loves. Seventeen-year-old Maggie (Peggy Ann Garner) idolizes him. It's a peaceful, happy household, in complete contrast to his own slovenly, un-homelike dwelling.

One day David buys a violin of his own. He drives a thrifty bargain to get it, but even so, his father thrashes him soundly and tells him he must take it back. When Mrs. Moore dies in child-birth soon after, she leaves her violin to David. But M'Adam, in a drunken rage, smashes it, and David leaves home once and for all.

Meanwhile the sheep-owners round about are losing sheep. Some dog is killing them and they are sure it's Red Wull. M'Adam insists it must be Bob, but no one believes him. The Shepherds' Trials are won by Wull again, since Moore doesn't enter Bob. "One more year and the Cup is mine and Wull's to keep," M'Adam gloats. But a great deal can happen in a year. . .

Edmund Gwenn gives a superb performance as old M'Adam. The scenery has a mournful, haunting beauty that almost convinces you that you are really in Scotland.—20th-Fox

MIRACLE ON THIRTY-FOURTH STREET

So you don't believe in Santa Claus! Well, you will, by the time Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Hara, John Payne and a wonderful little girl named Natalie Wood get through with you. Because that's what the miracle is all about.

It starts on Thanksgiving Day, when a window dresser (Bob Gist) glances up from his arrangement of reindeer and Santa Claus to see an old gentleman with a white beard (Edmund Gwenn) motioning to him. "You've got Dunder and Blitzen in the wrong places," the old gentleman says reprovingly. "Better change them around." He wanders off, leaving the window dresser with his mouth wide open.

Then the bearded man encounters the Macy parade all ready to start. When he finds that the parade's Santa Claus has gotten roaring drunk, he takes over the job himself. He makes a wonderful Santa Claus; everyone says so. Doris Walker (Maureen O'Hara) who is in charge, hires him to play the regular Santa Claus at Macy's store for the Christmas season. She asks him his name and he says Kris Kringle. That's Doris's first inkling that there's trouble ahead.

The second one comes when she hears a report from pop-eyed toy clerks. It seems that if a child happens to ask "Santa Claus" for a toy the store doesn't carry, Kris says cheerily "You can get it at Gimbel's." In fear and trembling she goes to Mr. Macy's office. She finds him up to his ears in telegrams congratulating him on his "good-neighbor policy." She gets a raise!

But in the meantime, Doris is having trouble at home. Her little girl, Susan (Natalie Wood) has been brought up by modern divorcée Doris not to believe in anything. Now, all of a sudden, Susan has started thinking that maybe there is a Santa Claus. And their next-door neighbor, Fred Gailey (John Payne) says, looking at Doris, "I've been sure of it for a long while!"

By the time all the ensuing complications are unraveled, you will have had a lovely, sentimental, Merry Christmas-ish kind of an evening.—20th-Fox

(Continued on page 26)

Miracle on 34th St.: E. Gwenn makes J. Payne, M. O'Hara and Natalie Wood believe in Santa.

GEORGE RAFT
has his hands full of TROUBLE and his arms full of VIRGINIA FIELD
. . . but when Aunt Matilda calls for help he fights his way to her for
"CHRISTMAS EVE"
It's merry!
and That's not all!

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Yes, even finest soaps and soap shampoos hide the natural lustre of your hair with dulling soap film

● Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave dulling soap film! ● Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. ● Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! ● Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant! ● Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! ● Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! ● Buy Halo at any drug or cosmetic counter.

Reveals the Hidden Beauty of Your Hair!

Dear Ruth: Bill Holden, Joan Caulfield and Ed Arnold romp merrily through this soldier farce.

DEAR RUTH

Families are funny. You can do something with the best intentions in the world, and the next thing you know your parents are practically calling you a juvenile delinquent. And your older sister is saying she ought to cut your throat. When all you did was write some letters to a soldier—a lieutenant in the Air Force—and sign your sister's name and enclose her picture.

Of course it does get sort of complicated when the lieutenant, whose name is Bill (Bill Holden), shows up all of a sudden. He's madly in love with your sister, Ruth (Joan Caulfield), just from the letters and her picture. Whereas Ruth, of course, has never heard of him! Just to make it tougher, Ruth picks that day to get herself engaged to a jerk named Albert (Billy De Wolfe), who works in the bank.

Anyway, this Bill arrives when neither you nor Ruth are at home and tells your mother (Mary Phillips) and father (Edward Arnold) how crazy he is about the girl. When you stroll in that evening they are putting Ruth through a fast third degree about this lieutenant, and they catch on to the fact that you're responsible. Your father acts as if he had no understanding of the facts of life, and Ruth is very narrow-minded about the whole deal.

She does get more agreeable after she meets Bill, who's all done up in ribbons, and keeps sending her lilacs every hour on the hour. In fact, she gives Albert the brush-off so she can go out with Bill. She even pretends she did write the letters.

But that just makes things worse, because Bill wants her to marry him right away. Before he gets sent somewhere with the occupation forces. You ought to hear what Albert says about that!

Sure, it all works out, only in a funny way. And you get practically no credit for having really arranged the thing. Families are funny.

("You" is Marian, played by Mona Freeman in just the right key.)—Par.

HER HUSBAND'S AFFAIRS

It's been quite a while since there has been a good screwball comedy around. This is definitely it, with Lucille Ball and Franchot Tone playing the wackiest pair you've ever encountered.

Her Husband's Affair: That's Franchot Tone under the spinach—to Lucille Ball's surprise!

Bill Weldon (Franchot Tone) is an advertising man. All too frequently, however, he is side-tracked by the fabulous inventions of his friend, Professor Glinka (Mikhail Rasumny), a mad Czecho-Slovak genius.

Right now Bill is trying to get the Tappel hat account. Tappel won't give it to him unless he can get the Mayor to endorse Tappel hats. The Mayor won't endorse anything, as a matter of principle. But Bill's gorgeous, zany wife, Margaret (Lucille Ball) tricks the poor man into posing in a Tappel hat at a baseball game. He doesn't know he's doing it, but that doesn't matter—the account is now Bill's. They can go to Bermuda on a second honeymoon.

They have the bridal suite all reserved. Everything is set. Then Glinka shows up with a going-away present for Bill. An innocent looking little jar, it is. Glinka says it's a by-product of the embalming fluid that is really his life's work. "You use it instead of shaving," he says. "It removes hair."

Bill tries it and it works. He sees millions of dollars staring at him from this little jar. It will become a sensation overnight. He cancels the trip, and sells the cream to a manufacturer of shaving products. It's a sensation, all right. Every man who tries it suddenly grows a three-foot beard overnight!

Margaret comes to the rescue to the tune of "From the Halls of Montezuma." She tells them to sell it as hair tonic. They do, and it grows glass instead of hair on people's heads. Honest.

Next thing Bill knows, he's wanted for murder. Glinka's murder. Let's see Margaret get him out of this one!—Col.

CRY WOLF

Barbara Stanwyck and Errol Flynn are an intriguing combination. The plot of Cry Wolf keeps them suspicious of each other most of the time, which seems like a waste of romantic material. Still, it's a good plot, with lots of suspense. It begins with the arrival of Sandra Marshall (Barbara Stanwyck) at the big Caldwell estate. She has read in the papers that is ducking out on a $75,000 cold check... and a million dollar chick named

GEORGE BRENT
JOAN BLONDELL
...but when he gets Aunt Matilda's S.O.S. he takes a chance getting there for
"CHRISTMAS EVE"
It's merry!
but there's more yet!

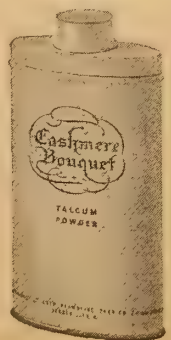
with this talcum powder, so fragrant and cooling

KEEP FRESHER! First, bathe. Then shake Cashmere Bouquet Talc all over your body. How fresh it leaves you. And cool. Divinely cool.

FEEL SMOOTHER! Pamper the sensitive spots with extra Cashmere Bouquet Talc. Its silken sheath of protection insures you against chafing.

STAY DAINTIER! It's an inexpensive luxury to use Cashmere Bouquet Talc lavishly and often. Gives your person the fragrance men love.

Pamper your person with Cashmere Bouquet Dusting Powder. Smartly packaged with a big velour puff.



Cashmere Bouquet Talc

...with the fragrance men love

Cry Wolf: Suspicion and intrigue stalk the high-voltage team of Errol Flynn and B. Stanwyck.

young James Caldwell (Richard Basehart) has died. Now she is here to tell his uncle Mark (Errol Flynn) that she is James' widow.

Mark at first refuses to believe her. He also throws out some fast cracks about fortune hunters. Sandra admits calmly that she did marry James for money—exactly $2,000, which he gave her so she could finish her studies for a doctor's degree in geology. In return, she became his wife "in name only" so he could get control of his fortune away from Mark. It had been left to James and his sister, Julie (Geraldine Brooks) with Mark holding the strings until they either married or reached the age of thirty.

Sandra produces her marriage license, and Mark is forced to believe her. Julie, the seventeen-year-old, is on Sandra's side immediately. "Mark is just a jailer!" she says passionately. "Why, he won't even let me off the estate!" It soon becomes obvious that some very strange things are happening in the big, gloomy old house. There are screams and moans from Mark's laboratory at night. A bearded giant of a man comes and goes by a secret entrance. Sandra stubbornly stays on, partly because she has become fond of Julie, and partly because she is convinced that James isn't really dead. Then murder strikes and with it comes sheer terror.—War.

SINGAPORE

Smuggled pearls, a beautiful girl, a handsome schooner captain and a couple of Oriental gunmen. With all that, how can you miss? Especially when the handsome man is Fred MacMurray.

A few weeks before the Japs take Singapore, Matt Gordon (Fred MacMurray) brings his trim little schooner into port there. He finds himself the object of considerable attention from Police Inspector Hewitt (Richard Haydn), and from a couple of crooks named Maribus (Thomas Gomez) and Sasha (George Lloyd).

None of this worries Matt. He's young enough not to mind taking chances. He blithely caches the smuggled pearls, which are the cause of all this, in a safe hiding place, and goes out to look over the town. He finds that its most exciting landmark at the moment is an American girl, Linda Grahame (Ava Gardner).

Singapore: Ava Gardner and Fred MacMurray search George Lloyd for a string of pearls!

It doesn't take long for Matt and Linda to fall in love. She misses her boat for home—on purpose, natch—and they plan to be married the day before Christmas. Matt gives Linda a string of perfectly matched pearls, and when Inspector Hewitt asks questions about them, he just gets a lot of double-talk.

But on the wedding day, the Japs are approaching Singapore. Matt leaves Linda at the church while he rushes off to get the hidden pearls. When he comes back without having been able to get them he finds that the church has been blown to pieces by a bomb. He sails away with a load of refugees in his schooner, and a load of tragedy in his heart.

After the war he comes back to Singapore, still looking for the pearls. And meets Linda, who isn't dead after all, but has had amnesia. She is not only married to a man named Hollister (Roland Culver) but doesn't even remember Matt.

However, Maribus and Sasha remember him—and the pearls. It takes some fast action to bring about a satisfactory climax.—Univ.

WYOMING

There are various ways of making a fortune. My favorite is the way the old Wyoming cattle barons did it. They got the land free from the government, cut out a few mavericks from somebody else's herd, and they were off!

That's how Charlie Alderson (William Elliott) begins, back in 1870. His wife dies in childbirth and he determines to found a fortune for his baby daughter, Karen. He sends her to Vienna to school when she's only ten, with her old nurse, Maria (Maria Ouspenskaya). When she gets back she is a young woman with her mother's beauty and her father's stubbornness.

By now life in Wyoming has become more complicated for the cattle ranchers. The

Are you sure of your loveliness—sure the deodorant you now use gives you complete protection 24 hours of every day? Be sure—switch today to safe, new Odorono Cream.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours

Wonderful, new wartime discovery gives more effective protection than any deodorant known.

New Odorono Cream not only protects your daintiness a full 24 hours, with the most effective perspiration-stopper known, but . . .

It gives you the exclusive extra protection of HALGENE . . . the new wonder ingredient that checks perspiration odor.

Just think! One application of new Odorono Cream in the morning keeps you dainty—all day and night.

It does not irritate. So safe and gentle—can be used after shaving.

Stays soft and smooth down to the last dab. Never gritty. (Even if you leave the cap off for weeks.)

Greaseless, stainless, vanishing. Odorono leaves no sticky film. Protects dresses from perspiration stain and odor.

More economical! Odorono gives 21 more applications from a 39¢ jar than other leading brands. Savings on 10¢ and 59¢ sizes, too. (Odorono comes in liquid form, also.)

24-hour protection with Odorono Cream

Wyoming: John Carroll and Vera Ralston pause for romance in their hunt for cattle-rustlers.

government is refusing to grant more than a few acres to anyone, and the so-called "nesters," or homesteaders, are moving in. Lassiter (Albert Dekker), a slick character who seems to be the forerunner of the modern gangster, is using the "nesters" for his own purposes. Trouble is looming ahead, especially for Alderson, Lassister's first target.

Alderson has the respect of everyone—and the shrewd advice of his young foreman, Forrester (John Carroll). However, he is gradually needled by Lassiter into a bad error of judgment. He brings in a cut-throat named Jackson to use force against the "nesters." Forrester warns him, but the old man is too stubborn to listen. When his best friend, Windy (Gabby Hayes) is killed by Lassiter's men, Alderson is sure he's right. Forrester is equally sure he's wrong, and Karen must decide between them. A wild climax provides the answer.—Rep.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Before we came to New York from London, where my father is the official physician at the Gainsborough Studios, my sister and I were allowed to visit the set on which James Mason was working. In the film, Mason was playing a doctor, and my father was serving as "technical advisor." During a lull, my father introduced my sister and me to Mr. Mason. He shook hands with us and began to talk medical "shop talk" with Dad. Father had to show him how to look through an eye instrument. James screwed up one eye and looked into mine, through the instrument—what a moment! Then, James was shown how to use the instrument, while I continued to serve as his "guinea pig." I shall never forget the moment when his eyes looked into mine!

Shirley Bowman,
Omena, Michigan

GREEN FOR DANGER

Let me introduce Alastair Sim, an English actor who is, for my money, one of the funniest men on the screen. In Green For Danger he plays a Scotland Yard inspector who manages to be a good detective and a comedian at the same time. Trevor Howard, Leo Genn and Sally Gray form a romantic triangle, with murder as its base.

The scene is a hospital in war-time England, and the first murder victim is a postman. An unimportant little man, you would have said, but he is important enough to someone so that he must be killed. He dies as he is being given an anesthetic, prior to a minor operation.

At first it seems like an accidental death—heart trouble, perhaps. Then it is learned that Doctor Barnes (Trevor Howard) who gave the anesthetic, had another patient die in the same way a couple of years before. Later, when the death seems definitely to be murder, there are other suspects beside Barnes. Eden (Leo Genn), the surgeon, is one, and so is pretty Freddi Linley (Sally Gray), a young nurse who won't make up her mind whether she's in love with Barnes or Eden.

The next night there is a dance for the hospital staff. An undercurrent of tension is evident, and before the evening is over, Sister Bates (Judy Campbell) injects a note of complete hysteria. She screams defiantly to the crowd that she knows who committed the murder and has evidence to prove it. Half an hour later, she is found dead in the operating room.

That's when Inspector Cockrill (Alastair Sim) is called in. He's a big, gawky man with a bald head, and no one is much impressed by him—at first. But the murderer learns that he is a man to be reckoned with.

Green For Danger is a quietly played, but intensely exciting, mystery. The acting of Leo Genn and Trevor Howard is a pleasure to watch.—Eagle-Lion

I SAW IT HAPPEN

When John Garfield and his show came to our bomb group in Southern Italy, naturally every GI on the base wanted to see Johnny in person. However, in the army, someone is always on duty, and Joe was the most disappointed kid on the post that night because he was Charge of Quarters. That was the show he wouldn't have missed for the world, but nothing could be done about it. Johnny Garfield, however, did do something about it! When he heard of Joe's disappointment, through our medical officer, he came trekking over to the dispensary where Joe was working and, not only did he come himself, but he brought Eddie Foy along with him. While we were sweating out a line before the theater, to see John Garfield in person, he was entertaining Joe privately at our group dispensary. Swell guy, John Garfield!

William L. Eury,
Bessemer City, No. Carolina

...and wait till you see what happens when they all get together to rescue AUNT MATILDA
...on CHRISTMAS EVE
Benedict Bogeaus presents
GEORGE RAFT
GEORGE BRENT
RANDOLPH SCOTT
JOAN BLONDELL
VIRGINIA FIELD
DOLORES MORAN
and ANN HARDING
in
Merry "CHRISTMAS EVE"
with
Reginald Denny • Douglas Dumbrille • Clarence Kolb • Dennis Hoey
John Litel • Walter Sande • Joe Sawyer • Konstantin Shayne
Screenplay by Laurence Stallings
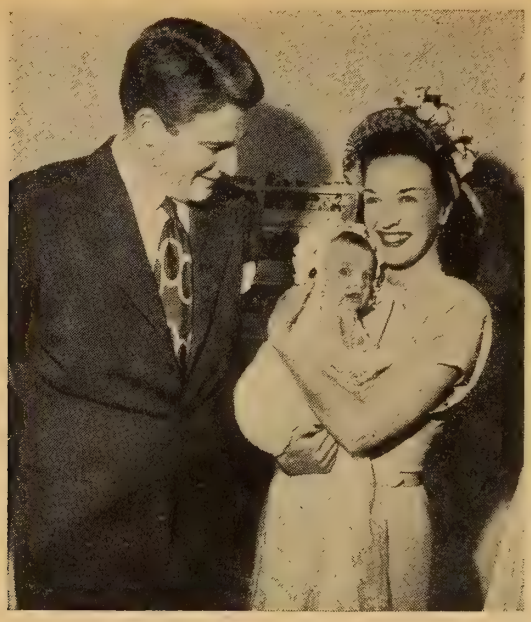
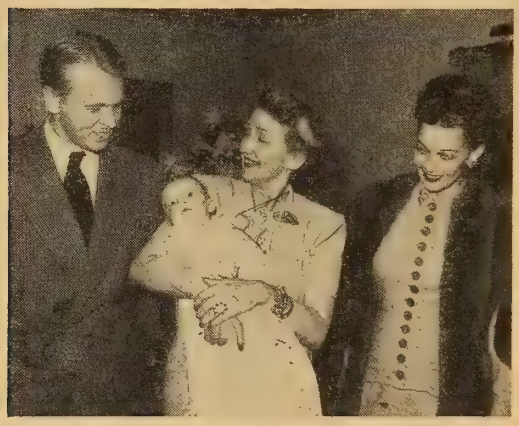
Adapted from original stories by Laurence Stallings and Richard H. Landau
Produced by BENEDICT BOGEAUS • Directed by Edwin L. Marin
Released thru UNITED ARTISTS

modern screen goes to a christening

Hedda Hopper, Merle Oberon, John Lund—they all played supporting roles to the star of the christening: Hedda's first grandchild.



Bill Hopper, Hedda's handsome son, could've been a movie star, but chose a business career instead He and Jane are thrilled over their first baby



Among those who wished health, wealth and happiness for Hedda's grandchild were Mr. and Mrs. John Lund, who raved over the baby's christening-dress!

Proud Mama Jane lets Hedda spoil her off-spring because, after all, that's every grandma's special prerogative! And, like all babies, Joan loved it.

"No, thanks, says Joan. "I think I'll stick to milk." Anyway, it's nice having someone as lovely as Merle Oberon toast your future in champagne. Hedda figures that in 20 years, Joan will take over her MODERN SCREEN assignments.

Smart Evening Necklines reveal lots of skin! For utmost flattery, use Malibu Tan on every bit of skin that shows. You'll adore this divine new face powder shade by Lady Esther.

LOOK HOW

LADY ESTHER'S Malibu Tan

FLATTERS YOUR SKIN AT NIGHT!

It's Summer's Most Flattering Face Powder Shade . . . a soft, subtle, heavenly shade . . . designed to enhance a natural tan or make untanned skin look beautifully, naturally tan. And here, at last, is a summer-tan shade which will not change its color after it's on your skin. Smart women everywhere are wearing Malibu Tan! Why don't you?

"I'm excited about the new Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake with make-up sponge right in the case!"

—says lovely

Gail Patrick

APPEARING IN
"CALENDAR GIRL"
A REPUBLIC PICTURE

A thrilling improvement in cake make-up that's set Hollywood all agog. For Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake has its own dainty make-up sponge in a moisture-proof compartment right in the compact. As glamorous Gail Patrick says, "It's perfect! As soon as I open my Beau Cake there's the sponge, ready for use." Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake imparts ravishing young color to your skin; hides tiny blemishes; lasts for hours and hours. Enjoy it once and you'll agree Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake is truly the cosmetic sensation of the year.

"With BEAU CAKE it's so much quicker to make your skin look youthful, smooth and glamorous."

"BEAU CAKE is so much neater . . . no need for loose cotton in my purse."

Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake $1.50 PLUS TAX

Gay new cake make-up with sponge compartment right in the case

Barbara Davis Sherry, weight 7 pounds, was born to Bette on May 1. Since it was a Caesarean birth, Bette chose the date. One wag wired, "Congratulations on your first production without Warners."

Welcome Stranger!

"It's a girl!"

Only to Bette Davis, she's so much more—a princess, an angel, a dream

she's dreamed for so many years,

finally come true.

by Hedda Hopper

■ "I've wanted her ever since I was twenty-one," said Bette Davis. "Now that she's actually here in my arms, I can't believe it's true. Hedda, isn't she a beauty?"

"She is, indeed." I smiled, because I'd felt that way once myself. "The most beautiful baby in all the world!"

The young lady drawing all those raves was Miss Barbara Davis Sherry. That day she was exactly eleven days old. That day, too, was Mother's Day, and I was spending it exactly as I wanted to, with the happiest mother in Hollywood, Bette Davis.

I'd hopped in my car and driven down beside the rolling Pacific, clear to Laguna Beach, where the William Grant Sherrys live, in their new home perched over a crystal cove where the surf beats a lullaby and the sun makes diamonds dance on the waves to delight a baby's blue eyes.

The tiny sign over the gate said simply, "Sherry," and I pushed it open and went in. I didn't ask to be announced; I hadn't even called from Beverly Hills. I opened the door. "Happy Mother's Day!" I greeted.

"You would," Bette laughed, "catch me right at the psychological moment! I've just finished feeding Barbara. Can you stand a few bubbles and burps?"

"I can stand anything about (Continued on page 104)

She'd made Humoresque,
Mildred Pierce,
then Possessed—and almost collapsed. But after two days' vacation, Joan Crawford was pestering the studio for a new part!

strange woman

■ A tall girl, muffled in a big coat and wearing dark glasses, slipped into the press preview of Possessed after the picture had started, and slid quietly into a back row seat. Just before the ending, she sneaked out. Joan Crawford was worried about how good a job she had done on her toughest part yet. She wangled special permission from the studio to take in the show, even though stars aren't generally allowed to attend press previews.

Joan was very careful that no critics or newspaper reporters saw her that night. She wasn't after pats on the back or polite praise. She just wanted to know eagerly and nervously their verdict. Outside, she paused for a second as a roar of applause from inside reached her ears. That snapped her tension—made her heart skip a grateful beat.

"Golly," thought Joan to herself as that critical, cold-blooded crowd gave her her answer, "this is the biggest thrill of my life."

About everything that happens to Joan Crawford is the biggest thrill of her life—everything that's a step forward, that is. She's got a one-track pair of eyes focused on the future.

"When you look back," she explained, "you just get dizzy." Maybe that's why, after 21 years in Hollywood and so many pictures, Joan can't remember them herself. She is a greater star than ever with a still shiny Oscar at home to prove it, her choice of prize parts, and a paycheck to match.

Adding herself up sometimes, she can't quite understand it, and she is not alone there. After Mildred Pierce won Joan Hollywood's highest honor, a producer who has known Joan since she started acting called to see and congratulate her. "You deserve the title of the first lady of Hollywood—it's you. You're a living symbol of a great screen star. Why, Joan," he said, "you are the most amazing woman I know. Imagine making a brand new career for yourself after all these years!"

Joan gave him a "Poor darling, you just don't understand" look and smiled. "It's not a new career," she said, meaning it. "It's the same old one, and," she added, "believe me, I love it!"

No one ever confessed more truthfully a case of enduring affection. Hollywood is devoted to Joan Crawford, and always has been, and with Joan the feeling is strictly mutual—in fact, sometimes martial.

Joan was in New York recently when a group of ace portrait photographers picked their ideal glamor subject. One prominent lens artist picked (Continued on page 99)

the JOLSON-CROSBY story

by ed sullivan

The incomparable Al tells the real Jolson story—all about his wife, his operation, his career—and his competitor, that up-and-coming young singer, Bing Crosby Jolson, now 60, isn't anxious for his own radio show. "What?" he says. "Only work once a week?" He prefers guest shots, like the Lux Theater, with Margaret Whiting and Dinah Shore.

Al has already collected $1,100,000 as his share of The Jolson Story, and may get as much as $3,500,000. But the big thrill was showing wife Erle Galbraith (above, at the Stork Club) that he's still the great "Mr. Showbusiness."

■ On his last night in New York, Al Jolson had dropped up to my apartment in the Hotel Delmonico to watch a prize-fight. Not, mind you, that the Sullivans were fighting, because I am no chump; Mrs. Sullivan is very fast on her feet. What Jolson and I were watching was a televised battle at Madison Square Garden, the first he'd ever seen televised, because Coast television can't pick up the Garden fights. "Let's listen to the Crosby program," Al suggested, so we sat there and heard Crosby, Groucho Marx, Hank Greenberg and Warren Brown. "That's my boy, that Crosby," said Jolson, approvingly, and when the band played, Jolson sang snatches of songs, without getting down on one knee. Our little French poodle, Bojangles, his head cocked, sat on the floor and listened intently, flapping his ears in rhythm.

"The test of a top-flight performer," pointed out "Jolie," suddenly, "is to come up with the right answers, when the right answer ain't written into the dialogue. Now take that Crosby. In the course of a year, a lot of awfully fast performers go on his program, and that Crosby's gotta be on the beam all night long, because now and then, one of them will drop in a line that ain't set down in the script. I mean, Crosby always is in the position of Joe Louis—he is the defending champ and he can't afford to lose, even once. When you've got a Groucho Marx throwing lines at you, brother, you better be fast, because that guy is one of the all-time greats of comedy in Jolie's book. (Continued on page 85)

Al's appearances on Bing's ABC show created a major stir in Radio Row. Here, they get some help from John Charles Thomas.

jeepnic*

■ Once a year, in California, the Mojave Desert blooms.

There are a lot of scientific reasons for it (involving clouds and high winds twisting through the mountains and slamming into hot breezes and causing rain) but who cares for scientific reasons?

The beautiful fact remains that the desert blooms.

It is a fact which caused Marshall Thompson to approach Elizabeth Taylor, in the M-G-M commissary, right between the soup and the fish, so to speak.

"Want to drive out to the desert?" he said. "I borrowed a jeep. (Continued on page 114)

* A picnic—that's a pack on the back and a hike for a bite. But a jeepnic—that's a leap in a jeep for something to eat!

Marshall Thompson was emoting hard for The Romance of Rosy Ridge and Elizabeth Taylor was working like crazy on Cynthia—but Saturday was their day off, the desert was in bloom, and the jeep was rarin' to go!

Jimmy Stewart says "howdy" to neighbor Hank Fonda, who's now in The Long Night. Conversation between the stars of A Miracle Can Happen is usually limited to a period of restful silence.

On the Miracle set, Stewart enacted his Magic Town role, while Hank glared; he wanted to rehearse for The Fugitive. "What a bunch of hams!" jeered Miracle stars MacMurray and Dot Ford.

When Jimmy left for Princeton to pick up that honorary M.A. degree, he gave orders for no publicity. But news leaked out anyway. Was newcomer Dorothy Ford lonesome till Jimmy returned???

pair of aces

They're a couple of strong, silent hombres—Jim Stewart and Hank Fonda—and they don't talk much. Except about each other . . .

By CARL SCHROEDER

■ I can walk into the United States Mint and stuff my pockets with dollars easier than I can flush out the real story of Jimmy Stewart.

He's a tough one, that boy—tough about gabbing.

And so is his friend, Henry Fonda.

Hank and I finally got together, though. And he made it possible for me to run Jimmy Stewart through my typewriter the way I've always wanted.

This is the story—

The night was dark, and the wind whipped petulantly around among the brick and steel monuments which pass for living places on West 56th Street, New York City.

A couple of guys were sitting around in their New York hotel apartment. They didn't have very much money, so they'd "eaten in," trying to pretend that their experiment with Swedish meatballs was just as good a deal as they'd have had with Oscar of the Waldorf in the kitchenette.

They were sitting there, thinking about washing the dishes.

The door, which they never locked, opened.

Three granite-faced men, hands plunged into the deep pockets of their blue serge topcoats, walked in.

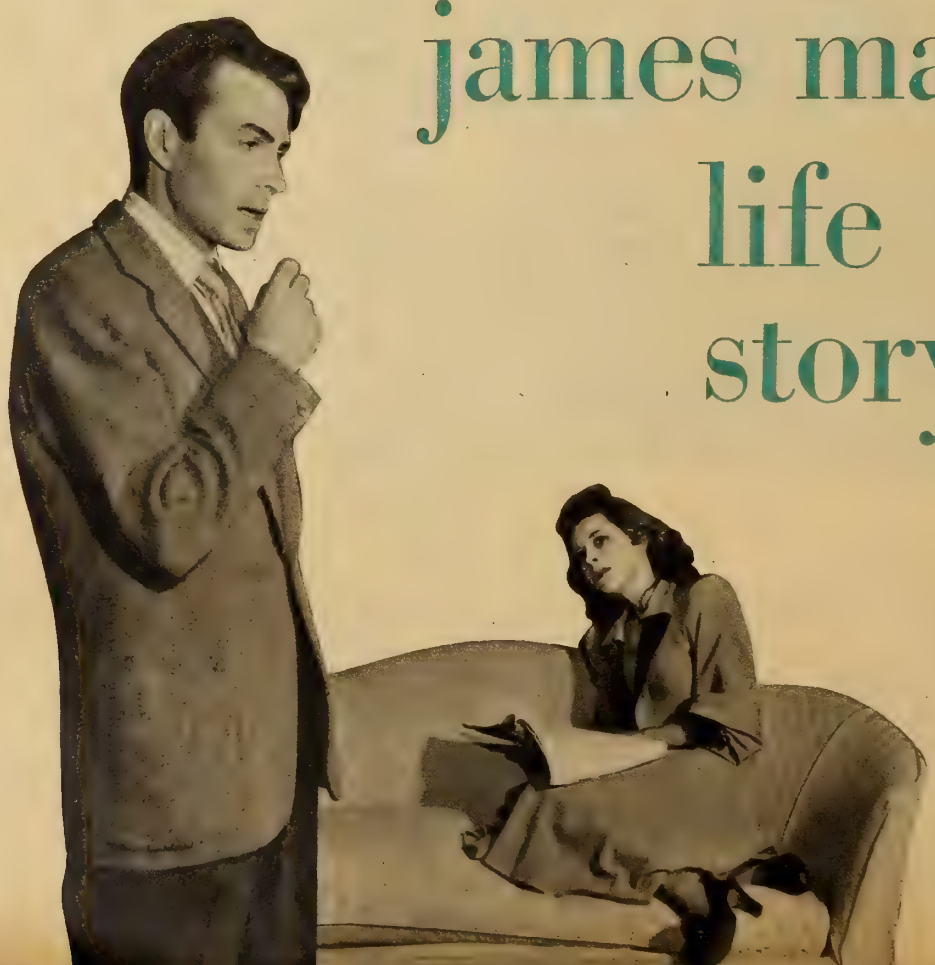
They looked at Jimmy Stewart and Henry Fonda. They hadn't come around for autographs.

Jimmy and Henry, who were almost but not quite real actors at the time, figured this for a good third act curtain. They didn't need X-ray vision to understand that those (Continued on page 114)

james mason life story

What with all that bad-man publicity, Hollywood expected James Mason to roar like a lion. Instead, he turned out to be a lamb—with a preference for strawberry ice-cream sodas.

By VIRGINIA WILSON



■ There's a town in Yorkshire, England, called Huddersfield. Its inhabitants will tell you that it's noted for its fine woolen factories, but any U. S. schoolgirl knows better. What Huddersfield is really noted for is James Mason, and let's not have any more of this nonsense about woolens.

Of course, back in 1909, Huddersfield couldn't be expected to be impressed by the arrival of a new baby in the Mason household. There were two Mason sons already—Rex and Colin, who would probably follow in their father's footsteps in the woolen business. No reason to think young James would be any different.

There continued to be no reason to think so for some time. James was an average boy who got into enough mischief to be normal. He didn't smear himself with greasepaint and put on little dramas in the back yard. He saw his first play at the age of seven. It was Hamlet, and it left him cold.

When he was three years old, he went to his first party. Not from choice.

At the party, he stood aloofly in one corner, heavy brows drawn together in the Mason manner. Finally a pretty little girl in a blue dress came over to him. She had long, blonde, Alice- (Continued on page 88)

Ola Thomas, Larry's cook, who "sweated out" The Jolson Story with him, says Down To Earth and The Swordsman weren't nearly as tough on her mealtime schedule. She's giving Betty cooking lessons now.

Larry was so chagrined when a tree surgeon pruned his orchards, he rushed out to plant nineteen more fruit trees! Below, Betty shows Larry the annual harvest—one lonely, midget-sized apricot!

Strangers peek into his window and the bobby-sockers serenade him nightly. But Larry Parks keeps looking behind him—to see if there's somebody famous standing there.

By KIRTLEY BASKETTE

■ In New York last winter, Larry Parks and his wife, Betty, blinked their way out of a projection room at Columbia's Manhattan offices. They'd just seen The Jolson Story for the first time—together. Betty Garrett was starring on Broadway herself then in a hit musical, Call Me Mister. Larry thought she ought to know whether The Jolson Story was good or bad. Himself, he wasn't sure—he'd been so close to the darned thing, for so long.

"Well, honey," he said, "how'd you like it?"

Betty gave him a distressed look. "Is there some place we can sit down?" she begged. "I'm all weak and wobbly."

Larry didn't know, but he opened a handy door. There was a long, hall-like room and a table big enough to stage a circus, surrounded by empty chairs. Betty sagged down on one, tilted back her hat and let go with a good old-fashioned cry.

It was Larry's turn to get butterflies inside. "What's the matter?" he asked anxiously. "Was I that bad?"

(Continued on page 109)

who, me?

MATE ANIMAL

NO MATTER HOW BROKE RORY WAS, HE ALWAYS MANAGED TO HAVE HIS OWN CAR, HIS CALHOUN GRIN—AND SOMEBODY ELSE'S GIRL!

By George Benjamin

Julie London (above) is Rory's gal in The Red House, but in real life, Martha O'Driscoll is his heartbeat.

Relaxing after a day's work on Adventure Island, Rory learns wood carving from his step-dad, Nat Durgin—who keeps one lesson ahead of his pupil.

■ The middle-aged matron and her fourteen-year-old daughter, obviously first-time visitors to Hollywood, sat quietly in their booth at the Beverly Hills Brown Derby, watching the entrance avidly. Presently, a tall young man and a very pretty girl came in.

"He looks as if he might be in pictures," the woman said.

Her daughter looked disgusted. "For Pete's sake, mother," she said, "That's Rory Calhoun."

"I can't seem to recall his latest picture, dear. But then people look so different—"

"The Red House. He was the woodsman. And he's doing Adventure Island, with Rhonda Fleming."

"He seems like such a young man—"

"He's old," the girl said. "He's twenty-four." She sighed. "But gee," she said, "just think what he must have been like when he was really young . . ."

When he was "young," Rory was like this:

He had a 1930 Model A Ford, converted and stripped and with a souped-up motor—all work that he had done during the three-hour afternoon periods in the school machine shop—and it was painted blue, with white V-8 wheels.

He (Continued on page 101)

MODERN SCREEN THEATRE

DELACORTE & MALMGREEN ..... Proprietors

presents

A HIT THAT RIVALS ALL!

Thousands Turned Away

THE ORIGINAL AND UNCENSORED VERSION OF

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES

OR

LIFE WITH FATHER MORGAN

(notice: pumice stone supplied free in lobby for guests whose hands become calloused from applauding)

WITH THE ORIGINAL (NO SUBSTITUES!) CAST:

DENNIS MORGAN	an indulgent father
STANLEY MORGAN	a 12 year-old boy wonder
KRISTIN MORGAN	a 9 year-old girl wonder
LILLIAN MORGAN	a loving mother
DOG MORGAN	fearless guardians of
GOAT MORGAN	the family silver and honor

AND

HOWARD SHARPE . . . . . the author

Doors open at 8:45 each and every evening

MATINEES SATURDAY AT 2:45

COME ONE! COME ALL!

No Pets Allowed!

Scene: The garden of a five-acre estate in La Canada, California. In the background, an enormous rambling house rather pointedly designed to resemble medieval Italian architecture. In the middle distance, a large swimming pool. A number of bicycles, carts and other childhood appurtenances are scattered about. A Labrador retriever named 'Bruce' putters aimlessly among the shrubbery. A little girl, about nine years old and very pretty, watches him from the edge of the pool, where she sits drying herself in the late afternoon sun.

Your correspondent walks up to her and speaks:

Sharpe: Hello. You're Kristin Morgan, aren't you? I'm Howard Sharpe, and I've come to talk to your dad.

Kris: (Formally) How do you do, Mr. Sharpe. Daddy and mother are out shopping for dresses for me, but if you want to wait for a little they'll be back. And I'll talk to you.

Sharpe: That's awfully sweet of you. (Dropping onto a lawn couch and lighting a cigarette) Tell me—does your dad usually go along with your mother when she shops for you?

Kris: It's the other way around. Daddy buys all my clothes, always—but sometimes mother remembers the measurements better, so he takes her with him. (Sighing) He brings just boxes of things home. But do you know, his shoulder's been hurting him the last few days? He hurt it on a horse.

Sharpe: That's too bad.

Kris: He works too hard, keeping us all like this. (She is a precocious child, and now her eyes flash with resolve) Honestly, I'd rather be dressed in rags!

Sharpe: The sentiment does you credit, darling, but the last time I saw your father he seemed to be having a wonderful time.

Kris: I don't think it's having a wonderful time to have a hurt shoulder.

Sharpe: Well, you've got me there. Does your dad always pick out just the kind of clothes you like to wear?

Kris: Why, yes, of course.

Sharpe: I'll bet the salesladies help him.

Kris: I'll bet they don't. What would a saleslady know about me? Say, do you know what I'm doing?

Sharpe: What?

Kris: Learning to sew buttons. I've sewn all the buttons on Daddy's shirt for two months now.

Sharpe: Commendable, I'm sure. And on Stanley Junior's shirts, too?

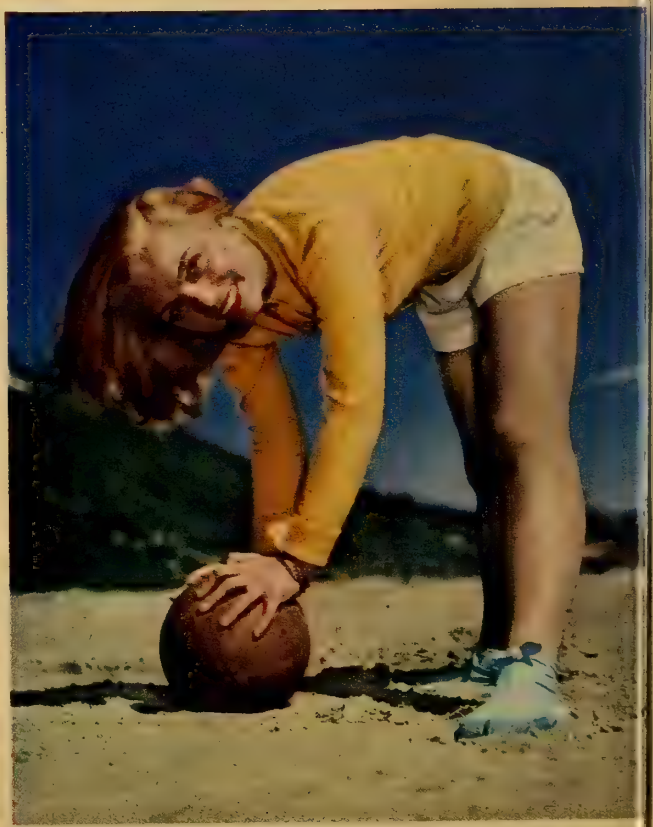
Kris: Well—sometimes. I did one this morning. He's off on a

(Continued on page 96)

Definitely a type to take along on a fishing trip, Lizabeth Scott cheerfully baits her own hook. A real fisherman, even her tiniest catch looked like a whale—to her!

Taking time off from the I Walk Alone set, Liz curls up with a kindred spirit: Breck, the Siamese cat. Natural-born "loungers," Lizabeth and Breck can relax and be comfortable anywhere. Only difference, our photographer said, is that Breck purrs louder.

The tame sea lion at Las Flores Inn takes caviar (though he'll settle for mackerel) daintily from your fingers, but Liz didn't trust him. To show her how easy it was, the innkeeper fed him a fish. "Hmmmm," said Liz, "now count your fingers."



Just after Bob Beerman snapped this shot, Lizabeth, inspired by the trained seal, bounced the basketball off her nose. "A nosebleed in a color shot!" she beamed. "What won't I do for art!"

mirage in mink

ONCE SHE ONLY MODELLED MINKS—AND DREAMED OF OWNING ONE. NOW THAT LIZABETH'S GOT HER OWN, SHE WALKS ON IT—BUT SHE TAKES HER SHOES OFF FIRST!

By Irene Greengard

■ She had a date with Burt Lancaster (back before Burt got married) and when he came to call for her, he noticed an extravagantly beautiful mink coat thrown across a chair, and he grinned.

Lizabeth was a kid to whom a mink coat had seemed terribly important, and she'd done a lot of talking about it. She intended to have one, and she intended to buy it herself.

Lancaster was standing there, touching the soft fur, and finally, Lizabeth appeared, pulling on gloves.

"So you made it," Burt said. "You got your mink."

She looked at him for a minute, and then she picked the coat up and spread it on the floor, and walked over it.

"I notice you took your shoes off," he said drily.

"Well, sure," she said. "I don't want to wreck the thing! But seriously, I guess I was just proving something to myself."

"Like what?"

"Like now that I've got a mink coat, I think it's very pretty, but it doesn't matter much."

Burt sighed. "Scott, I think you're growing up."

Which was about the size of it. For a while, she'd been so sure. She was going to be a career girl, and have money and clothes and people staring at her in the streets—until the day she woke up feeling like a dope.

After that, she was more (Continued on page 123)

■ Betty, who loathes disorder, had everything planned. The new baby was due by Caesarean on June 25th. Harry'd be back from his road tour on the 11th. They'd spend a week at the ranch, which would give her the last week in town to tie up loose ends and wait around, just in case . . .

The baby, of course, was going to be a boy, since that was what Harry wanted, and Betty's chief aim in life is to please Harry. As they'd wheeled her from the surgery after Vicki's birth, she'd murmured: "Next time I'll give you a baseball player—" So that was all planned, too—a little son to be named after his father.

"If it's a girl," Harry said one day, "let's call her Jessica." Coming out of a clear blue sky, this startled Betty. "Don't you like it, hon?"

"Yes, but not Jessie. And Jessica sounds like such a long name. It isn't really though. No longer than Dorothy or Margaret—or Clementine. What made you pick it anyway?"

"Goes good with James," he chuckled. "Jessie James—"

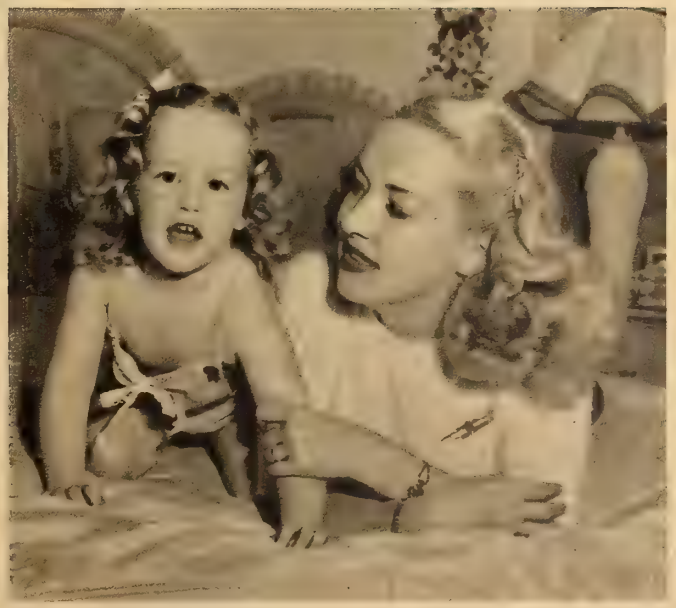
Mother Wore Tights—the best Grable to date, according to those who've seen it—was finished by the end of January. In April, Harry went (Continued on page 122)

"Jessie" for short

HER NAME IS JESSICA, ONLY SHE'LL ALWAYS BE JESSIE JAMES TO BETTY AND HARRY. BECAUSE LIKE HER NAMESAKE, SHE'S A BANDIT—STEALING THEIR HEARTS AWAY!

By Ida Zeitlin

Harry, touring the East with his band, was all set to return home in time for the birth of Jessica. But Betty's premature Caesarean operation on May 21 caught him in Atlantic City.



Vicki, the James' first child, was born March 4, 1944. To stop the rumors that Betty's retiring, she's signed a new contract that runs through 1950. Her next picture will be Mother Wore Tights.

palm springs

Modern Screen invites you to sun-baked Palm Springs, where there's a swimming pool in every parlor, and the man-in-the-street is apt to be Cornel Wilde!

■ Maybe you've heard of Palm Springs, California. In the beginning, it was just a stretch of desert, with the sun beating on it. Now it's still a stretch of desert, but it's complete with fine hotels, and restaurants, and stores, and night clubs, and people. Most of all, people.

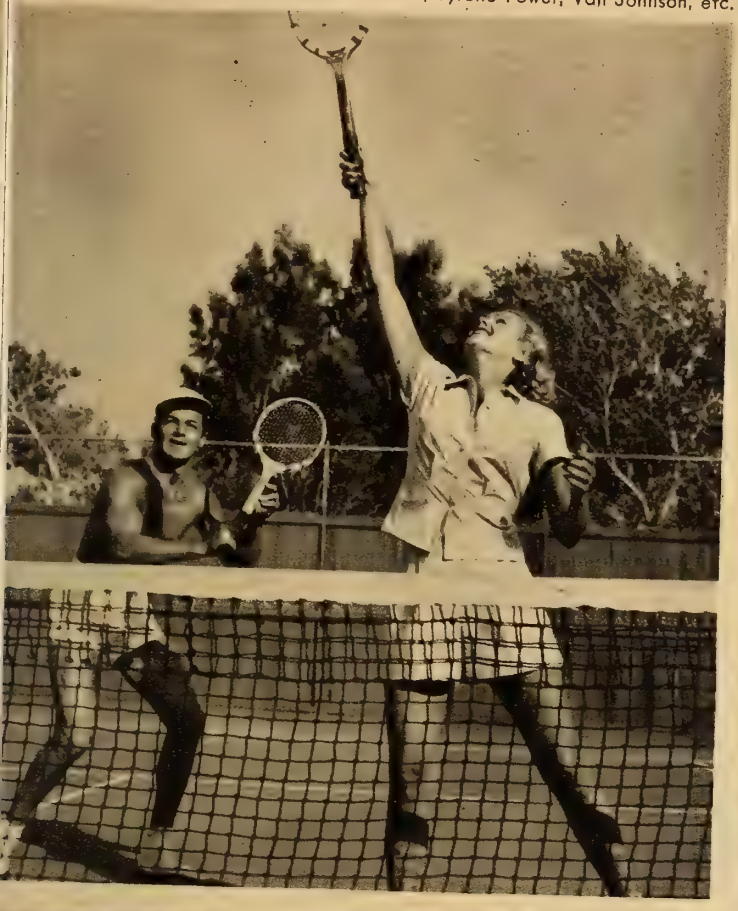
Palm Springs is only a few hours drive from Hollywood, so movie stars are its constant patrons, and best tourist bait.

Next to the sun, of course. Good, hot, healing sun is what really lures the weary.

Pat and Cornel Wilde were going down to Palm Springs, so MODERN SCREEN trekked along and got these pictures, to give you some idea of the fabulous oasis.

Since both Wildes are tennis fans, and fine players, they spent some time at the Racquet Club. The Racquet Club is exclusive; it's owned by Charlie Farrell (silent film star) and it's frequented by celebrities, and citizens who have as much (Continued on page 59)

Tennis is serious business at Charlie Farrell's Palm Springs Racquet Club. Cornel and Pat, who are among the many movie star members, can hold their own with such regulars as Paul Lukas, Tyrone Power, Van Johnson, etc.



A mild protest that he's about to be separated from his shoulder gets him nowhere with the masseur. Cornel finished Forever Amber before his vacation, and starts It Had To Be You on his return.

hotographer Burt Kopperl, who took the pictures on this page and the ext, is a former Army captain, who contracted polio in the war. But ven his wheel-chair didn't keep Kopperl out of the club's shower room.

Lunching beside the swimming pool is one of the luxuries Pat and Cornel enjoy as club members. It's expensive, but dining at restaurants in town is even more so. Their wet companion is Eloise Hardt of The Pirate.

Photographs by Kopperl

If you think chess only exercises the mind, try this outdoor version. After 20 minutes, Pat was too tired to lug her chessmen, so Cornel played both sides.

Six or eight sets of tennis, and both Pat and Cornel are ready to relax in the bamboo-shaded lounge, sipping exotic Hawaiian coolers. Playing Harvey, the Rabbit, for the Wildes is Harry Crocker, Los Angeles newspaper columnist—down for the week-end.

At the Doll House, Palm Springs' swankiest night club, Mr. and Mrs. W. go wild for the boogie beat of Felix, the Drummer. Felix is a permanent fixture, having been there for the past six years.

Prices at the Doll House are anything but hush-hush. Since Pat is the economical housewife, Cornel tried to conceal the tab on the filet mignon —$4.50. Vegetables, dessert, coffee (only 15c per cup) are all "extra."

Dancing into the dawn presents no health problem for stay-up-lates. They're convinced that the Palm Springs sun has "special properties" that will bake their tired bones and send them home fit as a fiddle.

palm springs

(Continued from preceding page) money as celebrities. Non-citizens who have as much money as celebrities could probably get in, too.

Racquet Club members are serious about their tennis. Paul Lukas lives close by, and he never misses his ten sets a day.

Palm Springs specializes in what are referred to as Dude Ranches (some of them are Smoke Tree, Thunderbird, Deep Well), but the only bona fide ranch touches are the horses. And the dudes.

For thirty dollars a day (which is the average ante) a man comes in and lights the fire in your fireplace in your bedroom every morning—it gets nippy in the desert—and there are waiters with towels, telephones and cocktail shakers standing around the pool, hoping you'll want something, so they can service you.

They may even have those under-water pens.

One of the terrific places to eat, in town, is the Doll House, where Pat and Cornel went on our picture-taking day. At the Doll House, a (Continued on page 95)

■ The scene is midnight. Bedroom interior.

Setting—the hilltop house of movie actor, Macdonald Carey.

Betty Carey, his wife, sits erect awakened by Mac's mutterings in his sleep. She listens a moment. Then—

"Mac! Mac! Wake up!"

"Huh? Don't go away, honey. Please!"

"Macdonald Carey, you wake up!"

Mrs. Carey flicks on the night lamp, looking excruciatingly lovely, her auburn hair rumpled, her blue eyes sleepy and provoked.

"What's the matter?" Mac is half awake now, too.

"You were dreaming about that native girl on the South Sea Island again."

"Betty, please." Mac leans over and kisses his wife on her cheek, like is not allowed in British films. "I explained about that before. Every now and then I dream about that island. Actually, there weren't any beautiful girls. Can I help it if a girl shows up in my dreams?"

Mrs. Carey turns off the light, slightly pacified.

She goes to sleep.

So does Mac.

In two minutes he is dreaming again. He is dreaming that he is kissing Paulette Goddard —almost. As he is about to take her in his arms, in storms Betty Hutton. She is indignant.

She shouts, "Macdonald Carey—if you are almost going to kiss anybody, you can almost kiss me."

End of dream.

"I am getting very tired of that dream," Macdonald Carey told me. "It is worse than looking at your own screen test."

Then he explained. It is all Mrs. Carey's fault. She is forever ribbing him because he is the only romantic leading man without a horse who never gets kissed in movies. He never had a clinch on the stage, either. The only time he ever came close was when he worked in radio on the "Stella Dallas" and "John's Other Wife" programs. But even then, the sound man did the kissing and the heroine was six feet away at another microphone.

I saw Mac for the first time in Lady in the Dark, the stage version.

Mac was the advertising salesman who cured Gertrude Lawrence of her complexes just before the curtain went down. There has never been a more romantic moment. There was no clinch at all. In fact, Mac pulled up a chair Gerty was expecting to sit in and she almost landed on her bustle (Continued on page 72)

The Careys had their wedding invitation plates made into a cigarette box and ash tray, then had them gold-plated. To read the inscription, Betty has to hold it up to a mirror—because it's backwards

When Mac comes home after working on Dream Girl, he's too tired for Betty's "knittin' fittin's." So she catches him when he sits down to read—always just when he's finding out "whodunnit."

He's really a perfectly nice husband, insists Mrs. Macdonald Carey. So why won't those mean old screenwriters ever let him kiss the girl?

By ARTHUR L. CHARLES

dream guy

There's no big love in Ava's life right now, so she's playing the field. The "field" includes Peter Lawford (above), who's her favorite escort for gala rumba evenings, and Irving Reis, who, Ava thinks, is a "swell egg," too.

Ava does most of her living at the home of her lawyer, Jerry Rosenthal, and his wife. Daughter Barbi worships her—especially since she's in The Hucksters—with Gable!

One-year-old Susan Rosenthal is responsible for getting Ava out of bed on time to report for work in Singapore. She gets her best results by pounding on Ava's stomach.

■ The way the story always gets told, she was a sophisticated New York model, who came to Hollywood.

The way the facts actually stand, she was a kid from North Carolina, with an accent so thick it sounded phony, and the only thing she'd ever modeled was shorthand.

She was in New York visiting her sister, Beatrice, whom she hadn't seen in a long time. Beatrice looked her over carefully, eyes narrowed. Little Ava was growing up. Pretty, too.

"I think we'll have my guy take some pictures of you," she said. Her husband was a photographer, and her mind was working very fast.

The pictures were taken, and Beatrice sent them to M-G-M's New York office, while Ava jeered. "Honey, you're jus' plain crazy!"

One week later, a letter came from Metro. Could Ava drop in for a screen test?

She went, Beatrice at her side, and when she got through talking to the man, (Continued on page 117) honey chile

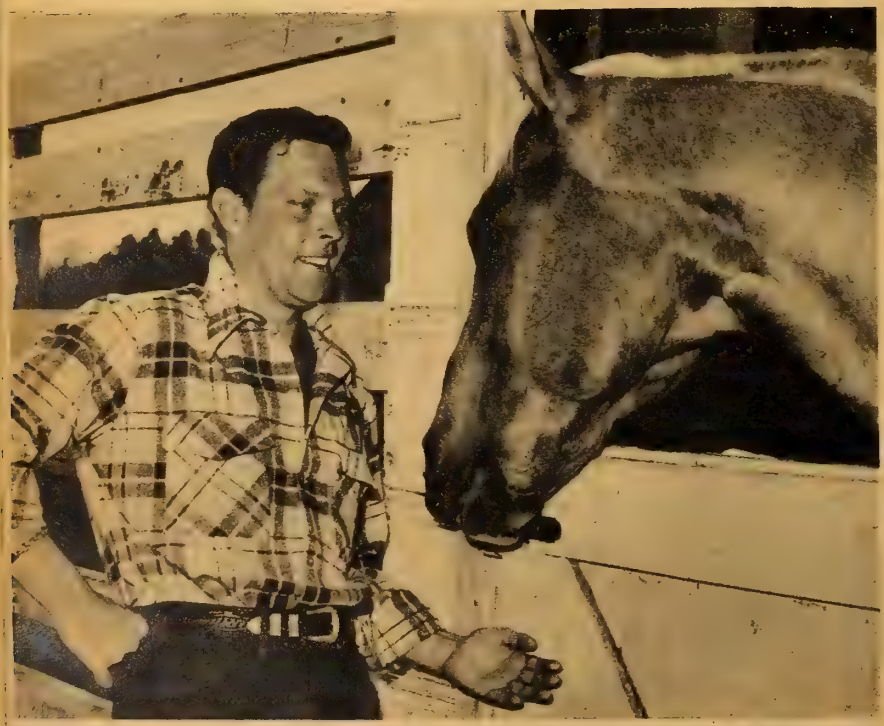
WITH THAT DIXIE ACCENT, YOU'LL NEED AN INTERPRETER, THEY TOLD AVA GARDNER. BUT HER FACE AND FIGURE NEEDED NO TRANSLATION.

By Rosemary Layng

Joanne "retired" temporarily after finishing Red River, to await the arrival of the Haymes' third tot. If a boy, he'll be named for Bill Burton.



Dick's horse, Thunderbolt, has a glamorous movie star wife, too—Flicka. Manager Bill Burton gave the Haymes' Thunderbolt because Dick complained he could only relax in night clubs. Now, he relaxes by riding daily, on one of his six thoroughbreds.

Trying to fill her Daddy's shoes is a mighty ambition for 3-year-old Pidgeon. Dick, whose latest is Carnival in Costa Rica, wants a non-singing, swashbuckling role next.

Most guys go looking for what Dick Haymes has in his own back yard: a beautiful wife, cute kids, seven horses and a pool. No wonder he'd rather stay home!

BY HOWARD SHARPE

a man's castle

■ Joanne Dru Haymes was pretty exhausted by the time she had piled Skipper and Pidgeon into the convertible, and climbed in after them. It was Noonny's day off (that would be Mrs. Estes, the Haymes' nurse) and Joanne had had the care of the children all day. They are five and three years old, respectively, and a handful.

Furthermore, she'd lived up to a resolution made a few days before when a close family friend, watching the kids chasing each other across the lawn wearing nothing whatever but little pants, had said, "Good gosh, Jo, haven't they any clothes?"

Jo's pride as a mother was aroused. Today she'd promised to meet that family friend for sodas at Martha Smith's place in Beverly Hills, after a shopping spree. The children had to come along anyway, and Jo considered the whole thing a God-sent opportunity to show her friend a thing or two.

For a solid hour she'd worked over Skipper and Pidgeon, sloshing them about in the tub, shampooing their hair, and struggling endlessly with underclothes, white shoes and socks, a sharkskin suit and a frilly pink dress reminiscent of a birthday (Continued on page 84)

Practicing for his appearance at the Steel Pier in Atlantic City this summer, Ferryman Haymes gives Pidge and Skipper a fast whirl around the swimming pool. Dick will earn about $150,000 for the four-week engagement.

Kit Rafferty, 4, was awed at Maggie's party—but not speechless!

little maggie comes to town

■ Somehow, the word got around that Maggie O'Brien was going to visit MODERN SCREEN's New York office. Now, Maggie had come East to close a deal with the Public Ledger Syndicate (to write a newspaper column six days a week), so the visit might have been a simple professional matter: M. O'Brien, columnist, coming up to chat with A. Delacorte, and H. Malmgreen, editors. Colleagues, y'know.

"Maybe she can give us a couple of tips," Al said hopefully.

"Don't talk about horse races in front of little girls," Henry said, frowning. (Continued on page 120)

George Delacorte, Modern Screen's publisher, pinned orchids on Maggie, promised to see her in Unfinished Dance.

Mag "sat" for cartoon editor Chuck Saxon, then asked him to direct her to 10th Ave, because she just made a film called, Tenth Avenue Angel.

Adele Meyer, whose mom is our vice-president, and her friend Medora Helffrich, kept Margaret busy with autographs.

WHEN MAGGIE O'BRIEN VISITED OUR TOWN,

SHE HAD OUR PUBLISHER ORDERING UP ORCHIDS,

CLOSED A DEAL TO WRITE A COLUMN,

AND FELL IN LOVE—WITH A CIRCUS CLOWN!

By Christopher Kane

Poise, it's wonderful!

Myrna, whose latest films are Song of the Thin Man and Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer, proves (above) that her role of perfect wife is real as well as reel. She first met husband Gene Markey, producer of Moss Ross, 16 years ago.

SHE WAS LATE, SHE WAS JOSTLED, SHE'D KEPT AN ADMIRAL WAITING! BUT MYRNA LOY REMAINED CALM. WHY GET EXCITED JUST BECAUSE IT'S YOUR WEDDING DAY?

By Hank Jeffries

■ "But you don't understand," Myrna said impatiently to the driver of the hired limousine in which she was riding. "We're going to a wedding."

"All right, Miss Loy," the driver said.

"But it's my own! And it started exactly five minutes ago—I mean it was supposed to. But look where I am!" She glanced despairingly at her two companions: her mother and her matron of honor.

"I'm sorry, Miss Loy," the driver said.

"But Admiral Halsey is best man! You don't keep an admiral waiting!"

The driver sighed. "Look, Miss Loy," he said wearily, "what do you want I should do? Squeeze the car under that stalled freight train? Or back up, get a running start, and fly over it?"

"Don't try to be reasonable. I can't stand it." The flame-haired lady thought distractedly, her lip caught between her teeth.

"Can't you go around it?"

"This is a good car, Miss Loy, but it ain't a jeep or a medium tank."

Myrna was silent for a moment. Then, in a small voice, she said, "Well, you could at least blow your horn!"

The driver did a long, slow burn. Suddenly, he brought his hand up and clamped it on the horn, which began blasting raucously. As if in response, the engine tooted twice, and the long freight screeched into action.

The driver gave Myrna a bewildered look. "You see?" said Myrna, relishing her triumph. As the caboose rattled past the crossing, she added, "Now. The accelerator against the floor and keep it there, please."

Myrna arrived at the Navy chapel bruised from jouncing from one side of the car to the other, her hat awry, a dress seam split; but her face, as usual, was in repose. She did not hurry as she walked toward the entrance. As she calmly entered the chapel on the arm of Captain Jack Ford, who gave her away, the nervousness of everyone disappeared. That is the way it is in the presence of the lady whose name is Loy.

Afterward, as she sat in the car beside her new husband, Commodore Gene Markey, she thought of the first time she had ever seen him, and smiled a little. He saw the smile, and pressed her hand.

In answer to his unspoken question, she said, "I was thinking of that dinner party sixteen years ago." And then they both remembered . . .

Gene Markey, one of the most urbane gentlemen ever to lend his wit, intelligence and sophisticated talents to Hollywood, had advanced to meet his hostess. It was his third night in Hollywood. He anticipated a pleasant evening. The lady who had invited him to dinner was a Frenchwoman of considerable age, whose figure and teeth were false, but whose diamonds and reputation for giving amusing parties were not.

"I've an enchanting girl for you," she told him, leading the way to the drawing room. "An actress, quite new and very young, but so charming. Be very sweet to her. Her name is Myrna Loy."

Gene raised both eyebrows. "Why the oriental siren for me?"

Madame laughed. "Myrna is no siren. Her real name is Williams. She's a simple American girl just out of high school—why, she even posed for a statue of the American Girl that stands in Venice—California. She's very shy and it would not occur to her that the famous Gene Markey could be anything but bored in her presence."

As it turned out, he was anything but bored . . .

While the car carried Commodore Gene Markey and his lady on their wedding trip, Gene smiled silently as he thought of a more recent evening when he and Myrna Loy sat opposite each other at a table in a very famous, very expensive, very dimly lighted restaurant.

Myrna was wearing an unobtrusively elegant dress and one or two magnificent jewels. Gene was in the uniform of a Commodore in the U. S. Navy. Their conversation had jumped pleasantly from the latest Broadway play to Santayana, whose latest book Myrna had just read, to architecture, as applied to California houses.

"What I want," Gene said, "is a house that will work for me, instead of my having to work for the house. I like to live like a simple human being, with the necessities (Continued on page 107)

NEW! COLOR ON A HOLIDAY!

Woodbury Fiesta

...powder, lipstick, rouge!

Color cuts loose... rides high in Woodbury Fiesta! Beauty breaks all bounds in this new new powder shade. Wait 'til you wear it. Like that!—your skin gets a glow from heady essence-of-roses. In a flash—you're alive with Fiesta! And don't overlook Woodbury's lasting cling... color-freshness... heavenly fragrance. Say yes to Fiesta today!

That enchanting rose-sparkle? ...it's yours—with Woodbury Fiesta!

Donna Reed appearing in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's
"GREEN DOLPHIN STREET"

WOODBURY MATCHED MAKE-UP
With Fiesta Film-Finish Powder you also get Fiesta Lipstick and Rouge All 3 in the dollar powder box— ONLY $1.00

Fiesta and 8 other exciting shades come in Matched Make-up $1.00; "Purse" size Powder 25c and 10c. (All prices plus tax)

Woodbury FILM FINISH Powder

Try Fiesta Powder FREE! → MAIL COUPON TODAY! FOR FIESTA FREE SAMPLE

Seeing's believing! See Fiesta's sorcery on your skin! Send for free Woodbury Powder Sampler (contains Fiesta, 8 other flattering shades), plus Hollywood Make-up Chart. Print name, address clearly. Mail* to Box 45, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. 356

NAME .....

STREET .....

CITY ..... STATE .....

*Paste on penny postcard, if you wish. (Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only)

SHE PLANS A GOOD GAG

LIKE A DIPLOMAT'S WIFE PLANS A STATE DINNER.

BECAUSE TO ROZ RUSSELL NOTHING'S SACRED—

EXCEPT MAYBE HER 55 HATS!

By Cameron Shipp

Husband Fred Brisson surprised Roz with a beautiful platinum ring, in honor of their son Lance's fourth birthday. (See Lance with Roz on opposite page.)

Radio guest shots, like this one for Academy Award Theater with Janet Blair, are fun. Her role in Mourning Becomes Electra is the most dramatic of Roz's career—more than Sister Kenny!

Sound of Laughter

■ Mr. Frederick Brisson, one of Hollywood's distinguished younger producers, was neither chagrined nor amazed, recently, to find Clark Gable kissing his wife, Rosalind Russell, in his bathroom.

He also discovered William Powell holding Rosalind's hand in his dressing room and James Stewart making love to her in his clothes closet.

It's not quite as bad as it sounds, for the intimate scenes with the Messrs. Gable, Powell, and Stewart were merely photographs, painstakingly pinned up all over the upstairs—by Roz herself.

Mr. Brisson wags his head admiringly.

"It must have taken several hours to dig those old publicity stills out of the basement and the attic, but she did it for laughs.

"We have to have laughs in this house."

I saw Roz shortly after the photograph gag. She had (Continued on page 82) there's magic in the right lipstick

new TRANSFORMING LIPSTICK

Of all aids to beauty, none is so essential as the right lipstick . . . for the right lipstick alone has the power to instantly "spark" a dull, glamourless face to exciting new beauty. That's why so many women are changing to the new Pearls in Wine lipstick. Pearls in Wine is a true transforming lipstick . . . magically enhances natural beauty as no other lipstick has so completely done before. Try it today. Ask to see daring #6.

Pearls in Wine
TRANSFORMING LIPSTICK

EVERYTHING YOU WANT IN ONE LIPSTICK

- transforming colors
- improved indelibility
- exquisite smoothness
- non-drying
- enchanting fragrance
- delightful taste

in six wonder-working shades
$1 plus tax

arls in Wine cosmetics are ailable only at drug stores.
your dealer hasn't yet received new Pearls in Wine transforming stick, send $1 plus 20% tax to
HE ARMAND CO., Des Moines 6, Iowa.

COPYRIGHT 1947, THE ARMAND CO. ® TRADEMARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

DREAM GUY

(Continued from page 60)

every night. But the situation, the way Gerty and Mac played it, was a punch in the heart.

So punchy that Paramount signed Macdonald Carey at a salary of $1,000 a week, which is almost unheard of for an unknown.

Maybe the big real-life romance Mac was carrying on at the moment had something to do with it.

Mac had known Betty Hecksher, a young socialite and promising actress, for only a short time. They met at Benno Schneider's acting class and found out how they felt when they went to a friend's apartment some weeks later to rehearse each other in lines from Love From a Stranger.

They just looked at each other for a couple of hours.

Then Mac said, "Are you married?"

Betty said, "No, I'm not."

"Maybe we can do something about that," Mac declared.

Five months later he got around to the actual proposal, which is unique in the annals of romantic history.

"You have to choose between me and the William Morris agency," Mac said. "For I just won't go for your being an actress after we are married."

Betty accepted the proposal then and there, and it wasn't until two days later that she realized that Mac had won the eternal argument between sweethearts in the theater, just by attaching a "rider" to the main proposition.

So Betty and Mac were married.

Twice.

The first time in a big formal wedding in the Church of the Redeemer at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania.

Mac left the theater right after the last curtain on Saturday night, and took the train for Philadelphia. On the way over, the wedding guests helped him put on the gold garter set Gertrude Lawrence had given him for a wedding present.

That was a gag, of course. So was the telephone call right after the ceremony

(Continued on page 81)

Jane Greer . . .

RKO actress with two big pictures coming up—They Won't Believe Me, with Robert Young, and Out of The Past, with Robert Mitchum.

(Aside to RKO. Won't you please put Jane in a comedy? The girl's a natural comedienne. She had us rolling in the aisle when we took our fashion photos.)

Jane opens up our "summer in the city" fashion portfolio with the cutest summer raincoat on record. It's got jaunty shoulder flanges and jutting pockets—and each white button bears a red umbrella.

The fabric is Oxford cotton gabardine, Zelan-treated to ward off the raindrops. Comes in aqua, maize, natural, white. Sizes 9-15. And don't rub your eyes when you see the price—it's really that unbelievable!

By Ann Howe $5.90.

To find out where to buy this raincoat, please turn to page 79.

modern screen
fashions
BUS
STO

spend the day in a short sleeved print

By Connie Bartel, Fashion Editor

Who cares how hot it is when you can look so cool—and so cute! Jane Greer models a minx of a dress with an impudent bustle bow—a scooped neckline—and a black ribbon. It's sheer printed cotton with green, purple and pink squiggles in heavenly shades. Also other colors. Sizes 9 to 15. By Jonathan Logan . . . . . $10.95.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 79

● You'll actually hope for torrid weather—when it gives you an excuse for a pretty cooler like the one Jane Greer models here.
The neckline is sweet and low—(for your favorite necklace)—the pouch pockets are cut on a curve.
Printed rayon—gold, blue or pink on white. Sizes 10-18.
By Hadden Casuals . . . . . $10.95.

date in sophisticated black

● Naturally you know that for sheer man-killing lure there's nothing like sheer black. Jane Greer models a sophisticated date dress with a film of net at the throat, an edging of net on sleeves and rippling apron—and a peplum in back. (Back view in above photo.)

Rayon. In sizes 9-15.

By Donna Hale.....$14.95.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 79

● For ooh-la-la, try the rustle of black moire. Here Jane Greer poses in a wicked widow number with a follow-me bustle, a full, longer skirt, and a low curved neckline in front. Wear it with a huge hat, black stockings, and naked sandals. Then wait for results. Rayon. Sizes 9 to 15.

R. & K. Original . . . . About $14.95.

FOR SUMMER IN THE CITY black—with satin

● Did you know that satan satin is fashion's love again? It is—and sirens please take note. Jane Greer models big-city black—very woman of the world. It's two-piece; in crepe with draped satin peplum, satin cuffs, gold buttons and slim gold belt. High neckline. Rayon. Sizes 9-15.
By Junior Accent $19.95.
Helmet by Madcaps, $4.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 79

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

Ann Howe raincoat with umbrella buttons worn by Jane Greer in the full color photograph (Page 73)
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, Hi-School Shop, Second Floor

Jonathan Logan printed dress with bustle worn by Jane Greer (Page 74)
St. Louis, Missouri—Famous-Barr & Co., Little New Yorker Shop, Fourth Floor

Hadden Casuals printed dress with pouch pockets worn by Jane Greer (Page 75)
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus, Central Bldg., Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, Gallivant Shop, Third Floor
Norfolk, Va.—Ames & Brownley, Inc., Sportswear Dept., Third Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Co., Casual Shop

Donna Hale black rayon dress with net at the throat worn by Jane Greer (Page 76)
Philadelphia, Pa.—Oppenheim Collins
Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothrop

R. & K. Original black moire bustle dress worn by Jane Greer (Page 77)
Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's, Junior Dept., Second Floor
Chicago, Ill.—Carson, Pirie Scott & Co.
Detroit, Michigan—Crowley, Milner Co.
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, Junior Dresses, Second Floor
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Brothers, Junior Dress Dept., Third Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Co., Young Washingtonian Shop

Junior Accent black crepe dress with satin worn by Jane Greer (Page 78)
Boston, Mass.—Coleman's, Junior Dresses, Second Floor
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Martin's, Miss Marleigh Junior Shop, Second Floor
Kansas City, Mo.—Rothschild's Jr. Dress Dept.
Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co.
Oklahoma City, Okla.—Rothschild's Jr. Dress Dept.
Washington, D. C.—Erlebacher's, Junior Dept., Third Floor

Lingerie on Page 80
Tommiecoat
Durham, N. C.—Baldwin's, Lingerie, Second Floor
Elizabeth, N. J.—R. J. Goerke Co.
Harrisburg, Pa.—Bowman's, Lingerie Shop, Second Floor
Youngstown, Ohio—Strouss-Hirshberg, Lingerie Dept., Second Floor

Tommies Short-cuts
Durham, N. C.—Baldwin's, Lingerie, Second Floor
Elizabeth, N. J.—R. J. Goerke Co.
Harrisburg, Pa.—Bowman's, Lingerie Shop, Second Floor
San Antonio, Texas—Frank Brothers, Women's Dept., Second Floor
Youngstown, Ohio—Strouss-Hirshberg, Lingerie Dept., Second Floor

Stardust panties
St. Louis, Missouri—Stix, Baer & Fuller, Downstairs Store

Copacabana bra
Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's, Corset & Bra Shop, Second Floor

"Diana" slip by Kayser
Los Angeles, Calif.—The May Co.

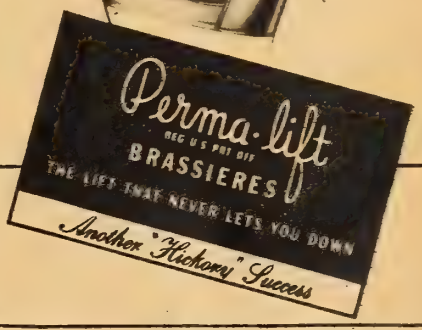
Blue Swan nightgown
Cleveland, Ohio—The May Co., Knit Undies, Street Floor

If no store in your city is listed, write: Fashion Editor, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

The Lift that never lets you down

You'll love the famous uplift feature that makes "Perma·lift"* Bras AMERICA'S FAVORITES. The specially designed cushion insets at the base of the bra cups gently support your bust from below—never lose their uplift through countless washings and wear. "Perma·lift" Bras are at your favorite corset department—most styles from $1.50 to $3.50.

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. Stein & Company. (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)



Write for Free Booklet on corset and brassiere fitting comfort. Address Ruth Stone—"Perma·lift" Stylist, 1143 W. Congress Street, Chicago 7, Ill.—Dept. 44

nationally famous

"GOOD BEHAVIOR" SLIP

style #100

Tall
Medium
Short
Junior

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Your best slip is back again with its famous swirl skirt that won't bunch, ride up, or twist. about $2.25

In a slip it's "Good Behavior" that counts

MOVIE STAR SLIPS • 159 MADISON AVE., N.Y.

For happy feet this Summer, there's nothing quite like these fine Trimfit mercerized cotton ribbed anklets for all your activities. Wear them straight up or cuffed. Get them in colors to match every outfit!

About 59c
Others 35c to $1.00

Trimfit SOX

At good stores everywhere. For one nearest you, write:
TRIMFIT, EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

FOR SUMMER IN THE CITY

lots of lovely lingerie

1. HOT AND BOTHERED. After a long hot day, you're limp. Date at 7!

2. WATER CURE. Slip into a seersucker Tommiecoat, pin up hair, cream face. Then lots of bath salts, into the tub to soak! Tommiecoat, about $3.98.

3. CAT NAP. After your bath, relax! Climb into a pair of Tommies Shortcuts, snooze. Cute, cool chopped off pajamas by Tommies, about $4.98 pair.

4. OOMPHIE UNDIES. Now for glamorizing! First, slick panties. By Stardust. 69c. Then a satin bra, plunging to here. By Copacabana. About $2.

5. SLICK SLIP. Slide into a slip that goes in and out where you do! Pink or white rayon crepe, appliqued lace bosom. "Diana" slip by Kayser. $4.

6. SURE LURE. Man-killer dress, big hat, perfume. This date'll make history.

7. HEARTTHROBS! It was a fate date! Dream of him—in a lacy, full-skirted midriff nightie. Blue, rose, yellow or white jersey. By Blue Swan. $3.50.

WHERE TO BUY
See page 79

DREAM GUY

(Continued from page 72)

telling Mac he had to be at a radio studio at eight the next morning for a show.

I guess you'd call it sort of a between-the-acts honeymoon, but it was romantic enough at that, because a friend loaned the couple a beautiful penthouse apartment. And then, of course, there was the second wedding which took place about three weeks later.

This time Mac really proposed with all the right words. They borrowed an automobile and drove to South Orange, New Jersey. In the back seat was Vic Mature.

Monsignor Kelly, an old friend of Mac's, performed the ceremony. Vic was combination best man, godfather to Betty, and also gave the bride away.

After that he went out into the automobile, crawled into the back seat and slept all the way back to Manhattan, completely ignoring the happy bride and groom.

busy day . . .

Things were really happening fast to Macdonald Carey in those days. On a single day—January 15, 1941—he became engaged, received his 1-A draft notice and signed his Paramount contract. He would have gone into the army before he could get around to those two weddings, but the physical exam kept throwing him out on account of a heart murmur.

Later, in Hollywood, he played in several pictures, winding up with Wake Island. In that he was a Marine. He liked it so much that he decided to really become one.

The Marines didn't bother about the heart murmur. They tossed him out because he was color blind and near-sighted. This burned Mac up. He went to a specialist and took eye exercises. Meanwhile, he signed to play an Army sergeant.

The Marines must have heard about it. He was sent for and nobody mentioned the eyes or the murmur. The rest added up to a one-line history of Carey in the war—

Boot camp, Bougainville, Espiritu Santo, Mindorow, Mindanao and Manus.

During a lull in the shooting, Mac and several friends visited a small island on which there were supposed to be head-hunters. Mac suggested to the Chief of the tribe that they had some very nice things to trade in exchange for some skulls.

"Cannot trade today," the Chief muttered. "No trade heads on Sunday. Tribe all good Presbyterians."

Mac has the darndest experiences.

When he was assigned the leading role opposite Paulette Goddard in Suddenly It's Spring, Producer Claude Binyon wanted him to look older. Night after night Binyon kept Mac up almost until dawn, sitting around with a pint of bourbon, and he still shudders at the memory of one certain saloon.

He and Binyon had been sitting for four hours, when the producer signaled for the waiter.

"Waiter," said Binyon, "bring us a couple of dirty sandwiches."

"Yessir," the waiter replied, not batting an eyelash. "With fingerprints on 'em?"

"Sure—all you can get. And one thing more, waiter. Bring us that shrunken head you have back of the bar."

The waiter brought the sandwiches and the head.

Mac looked a lot older.

As a matter of fact, he's a lot younger than the average romantic actor. He is one of the better tennis players in the colony and can easily trim most of those who have been publicized as experts.

His mom wanted him to be a fine pianist, probably because she was a music teacher, but Mac clung to the idea of medicine.

While prepping at Exeter, the depression came along and swept Mac back nearer home to the University of Wisconsin. From there, as times caused the money wells to begin drying up, he retreated to Morningside College in Iowa. From this vantage point he pictured himself becoming a doctor at about the age of forty.

Writing! Ah, that was it. He chaperoned a car full of hogs to New York, spent all the money he earned on books and then couldn't afford to stay alive. So he bummed his way back home, where he and three buddies joined forces.

The foursome shipped through the Panama Canal on their way to Honolulu. Arriving at San Diego, they missed ship. They rushed to Los Angeles, got to fooling around Hollywood looking for movie stars, and missed ship again. They bought an old Ford and raced frantically for San Francisco, but on the way they stopped to help a couple of people in a wrecked car. They were Helen Gahagan and Melvyn Douglas. Listening to them talk theater, Mac suddenly knew what he wanted. He went home, enrolled at the University of Iowa and kicked around a dramatics course.

He thumbed his way into a road company theatrical troupe and horrified audiences everywhere with his renditions of Shakespearean roles.

When everything did an el foldo in Chicago, he became the First Nighter on that program and the handsome fellow nobody could see in the soap operas.

"I was just as scared then as I am now every time I start to open my mouth," Mac has often said. "It took me several years to understand that's a good sign."

The worst day through which he ever suffered occurred about six months ago when Betty held center stage for the premiere appearance of their first offspring, Baby Lynn.

grandma to the rescue . . .

Betty's mother had arrived for the crisis, which she has faced nervelessly through the birth of something like twenty-seven grandchildren. Mama Hecksher took one look at her son-in-law and knew that he was growing more faint by the minute. When at last they reached the hospital, Mac was limp.

Mama was equal to the occasion. She motioned Mac to a quiet corner and pulled forth a small bottle from her purse. Mac tilted it back and swallowed. His face froze with a look of horror.

"Great Scott," he choked, "what was that?"

"Horse liniment," Mama said, a wicked look in her eyes.

And Mac is not sure yet whether or not she was telling the truth.

"You know, Mac," I said, as we strolled toward the luncheon table, "I hear that you are going to have star billing in your next picture. Maybe now you will get a real smackerino from the leading lady. Maybe now no more dream stuff."

Mac turned a little pink around the ears.

"Guess what the title of his next picture is," Betty said with a slightly malicious smile. "No, don't guess—I'll tell you. Betty Hutton is the co-star and the picture is Dream Girl.

The modern way to ask for silverplate

The two blocks of sterling inlaid at back of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks. They make this silverplate stay lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

Copyright 1947, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

GLAMOUR BRA

FOR YOUTHFUL UPLIFT
SMART SEPARATION

$1.75 each
(3 for $5)

Hollywood figure glamour is instantly yours with Glamour Bra! You'll enjoy added charm and personality . . . you'll feel better . . . look better. Glamour Bra is scientifically designed to give permanent uplift . . . smart separation. Note these features: ● Quilted cups ● Lastex front insert ● V-type adjustable straps ● Sturdy elastic back ● 4-Way adjustable fastener ● Easy to launder. Glamour-perfect for dresses, sweaters, blouses. For curvaceous beauty . . . order Glamour Bra NOW . . . Satisfaction or your money back.

Nude or White —Rayon Satin or Fine Cotton

Sizes 32 to 40

MAIL THIS NOW!

USE THIS HANDY COUPON

INTERSTATE STORES CO., Inc., Dept. 17-D
Owensboro, Ky.
Please send me _____ Glamour Bras at $1.75 each (3 for $5).

	32	34	36	38	40
Nude						Cotton ☐
White						Rayon Satin ☐

(check one) Cash ☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D. ☐

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____
We pay postage if remittance is enclosed, no C.O.D.'s outside U.S.A.

(Continued from page 70)

completed another gruelling night's work in Hollywood's first genuine tragedy, Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Electra, and she was glamorously ensconced in a vast pink bed.

The first thing I asked her about was those funny hats of hers.

"I do not wear funny hats," Miss Russell stated solemnly. "I do not. Nor do I have so many hats, either."

"How many, Miss R?"

Her closet disclosed 39. Miss Russell was astonished. She thought perhaps there were a few more around somewhere; maybe she had 55 hats all together.

"But I wear all my clothes at least a year. Nothing extreme, many things alike. Lots of large hats, and always a pink floppy one."

"Every time I express extreme distaste for one of Roz's hats, she begins to wear it constantly and she begins to appear in it between the covers of expensive magazines. I have learned my lesson. Now I say nothing," said her husband.

Since Fred Brisson turned out to be a man who knows how to live happily with a minor force of nature, I asked him what strategies and charms he employed to get her to marry him in the first place.

"I was coming over from England to go into the agency business," Fred said. "And on shipboard I saw Roz in The Women. When I arrived, I asked Cary Grant to introduce me. He did, and I began to propose, over coffee cups and at parties.

"I proposed steadily from January, 1940, through October, 1941, and she finally accepted me by telephone one morning at 6:30.

"She was very logical about it. She figured that a man who could ask a girl to marry him at 6:30 A.M. must mean it for keeps."

For almost six years they've lived happily in a perfectly appointed, expertly managed home, between pandemonium and laughter.

When she first came to Hollywood, she used up excess energy bounding around shadowing interesting people.

On one such interesting-people exploration, she fell into conversation with a Marine sergeant in San Diego.

"By golly, you look like Rosalind Russell," he blurted.

"I am," she grinned. He invited her to a dance the next Saturday night, and next Saturday she turned up, driving 120 miles to get there. Roz danced all night and reached her home in Beverly Hills at 4 A.M. She'd had a wonderful time, met interesting people.

In spite of her dramatic gifts, Roz obviously has never learned how to act like a movie star.

On a recent trip to Chicago, she was hurrying through the station surrounded by porters bearing her effects in pasteboard cartoons and brown paper sacks.

"Do you always travel in such style?" queried a sarcastic newspaper reporter.

"Invariably," snapped Miss R. "Only this time I forgot my canary."

After Roz had been in Hollywood many years, an older sister whom she calls "The Duchess," arrived for a visit, and Riz gave a dinner party in her honor.

The Duchess dressed elaborately for it. The guests arrived in riding boots, berets, jodhpurs, slacks and sports jackets. They entered with private keys, hugged Roz, strolled upstairs, put their feet on the sofa, and raided the icebox. Finally, Roz's masquerading boy friends settled down and acted like gentlemen, but not before the Duchess had decided that little sister was a gone goose in Hollywood.

Her flair for comedy overshadows her serious side, but there is a serious side to Roz. It is not well-known, even among her closest friends, for instance, that she fought for five years for the opportunity of risking her career in Sister Kenny. This dramatic, controversial film would have a lethal effect at the box office, the experts told her. Roz ignored their mournful predictions, made the picture anyway and was nominated for the Academy Award!

More than that, she became an enthusiastic, hard-working director of the Sister Kenny Foundation and the warm personal friend of Sister Kenny herself.

Fred has a telegram from Sister Kenny, which Roz modestly forgets to mention. It winds up:

"You have done more for humanity than any living woman."

Also, she serves on eleven other committees, among them the Nurses' National Memorial, Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower's favorite, with headquarters in Washington. She is on the board of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Scienes.

In addition, her working day is somewhat tougher than a coal miner's. She is up daily at six, uses her lunch hour for business conferences and her 12 committees, works until six, plays with her son until 7:30, reads new plays or studies her lines until 10, and goes to bed.

At the moment, she is engrossed by Mourning Becomes Electra, in which she plays the dour part of Lavinia.

"It's the toughest thing I ever did," she confesses. "Every scene is tougher than the hardest scenes in Kenny."

Her next picture, following Electra, will be Lucky Penny, to be produced by her husband's new company, Independent Artists, and will be her return to comedy.

"We have to submit scripts to her," said Fred, ruefully. "She isn't under contract to us. I have to compete with everybody else to get Russell in a picture!"

Aside from the staggering amount of energy the Brissons expend as part of their routine, they lead reasonably simple lives. Sunday is special. The family spends it together. The early part of every evening belongs to young Lance, possibly the best-mannered young man of 4 in this hemisphere: he likes to bow from the waist and say "sir" to his elders.

that's my mom . . .

Lance only recently discovered that his mother was a movie star. He was rehearsing his worldly knowledge one evening, reciting his full name, his home address, the Brisson telephone number, and his father's full Danish name.

"And you," he said, grinning at his mother, "are Rosalind Russell."

"Who told you?"

"Some nurses in the park."

The night before Lance's advent four years ago, they sat up all night with friends thinking up ridiculous names for new babies, which inspired Rosalind to laugh so hard and so long that they eventually had to hurry to get to the hospital on time. Lance Brisson was literally born in a gale of laughter.

A few months ago Rosalind sat down at her typewriter, which she operates like a whirling dervish, and started to write a play. It was an autobiographical drama, based upon her extra-cinema experiences. She completed one act and took it to a producer.

The producer read the act and looked at Roz solemnly.

"Tear this thing up," he said. "Nobody will believe a word of it. And if they did believe it, they would have you packed off in a strait jacket."

INFORMATION DESK

by Beverly Linet

CAMERON MITCHELL was born in Dallastown, Pa., on Nov. 4. He is 6' tall, weighs 173 lbs., and has brown eyes and hair. He is married to Joanna Mendel and has one son. Write to him at M-G-M, Culver City, Calif., where his latest pic is High Barbaree with Van and June.

WILLIAM PRINCE was born in Nichols, N. Y., on Jan. 26, 1913. He is 5' 11" tall, weighs 160 lbs., and has blue eyes and brown hair. He is married and has one child Write to him at Actors' Equity Assoc., 45 W. 47th Street, New York.

DREW MILLER was the mechanic in The Farmer's Daughter, and Gwen Littlefield, 1900 Sherbourne Avenue, Los Angeles, president of the June Allyson Club, organized a club to boost him to stardom. Drew is 28, unmarried, and 6'. 3" tall. Send pul-enty of mail to him at Universal, Universal City, Calif. . . ; join his club, and help build this vet to stardom.

Al Hine, New York: Here is that quotation from Smashup:

"To lie in bed and sleep not
To wait for one who comes not
To try to please and please not.

* * * *

To wake each day and tear not
To go to sleep, and dream not
To give one's heart, and doubt not."

M. Cort, Ill.: Annette Sterling, 6400 S. Whipple St., Chicago, has the Richard Conte Club; Pat Semenetz, 6351 Cedar Street, Huntington Park, Calif., has the Janis Paige Club, and Betty Gottschalk, 50-11 205 St., Bayside, N. Y., has the Arthur Kennedy Club.

Betty Lou S., Flushing: Keith Andes was Sven; Lex Barker, Olaf, and James Aurness, Peter, Loretta Young's brothers in The Farmer's Daughter. All at RKO, Hollywood.

Any questions today or any day? Send them and a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Beverly Linet, INFORMATION DESK, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

SPECIAL OFFER

SUPER-STAR INFORMATION CHART—1946-'47 (10c)—A new edition of the chart that's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia of fascinating data on all your favorite stars. 100 additional names never before listed! Please send 10c in coin to Service Dept., MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

The Tale of TWO SHIRTS

Which Cost More?

One cost twice as much as the other. But both are crisp, fresh, smart-looking. Both were starched with LINIT* to give them a smooth, flawless finish...with no streaks or shiny spots.

There's no trick to it. LINIT is easy to prepare. It makes a thin, fluid mixture that penetrates the fabric, lays tiny dust-catching fibres, gives an all-over luxurious finish. Use LINIT for all fabrics . . . dainty cotton frocks, house-dresses, aprons, children's clothes, curtains, tablecloths . . . you'll agree that LINIT is the superior starch for all laundering.

P. S. The white shirt cost $7.95 . . . the blue $3.95

*LINIT IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF CORN PRODUCTS REFINING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N. Y.
©C. P. R. CO., 1947

. . . ADDS THE "finishing touch"

A MAN'S CASTLE—By Jack Wade

(Continued from page 65)

cake. They looked like two baby angels.

"Just wait," she thought triumphantly. In Beverly Hills, she parked the car right in front of Martha Smith's shop and got out. "You two sit quietly there for just thirty seconds," she instructed, "while I go in and bring Auntie Linda out. Don't touch anything. Skip, you keep Pidgeon off the horn."

Exactly forty-five seconds later, she emerged from the shop beaming fatuously, her friend in tow.

"There," said Jo. "What do you think?"

"I think," said Linda, "that you might at least put little shirts on them when you take them out in public, Jo. After all!"

There sat Jo's two offspring, mother-naked except for their little pants. On the sidewalk beside the car, where they had thrown them, lay their carefully selected wardrobes of the day.

The Haymes children, who in moments of this sort are addressed as Richard and Helen, come by their ebullience, good looks and individualism naturally. Both Dick and Joanne go about the business of living with the energy of determined wildcats. When things are right for the Haymes', things are ecstatically right; when things are wrong, they're all wrong. . .

Dick came home from his week in Palm Springs in a towering bad humor. "Of course I had a good time," he told Jo who had been working and unable to go with him. "But look at this weather. I've got that sinus again. Felt it coming on just about the time I hit San Bernardino. Call the doctor, will you, and ask him to bring the penicillin."

He went to bed early that night, with his headache, and woke the next morning feeling, to put it mildly, peculiar. For one thing, he couldn't open his eyes. He put his hand up to his face and discovered that his head was about the size of a watermelon.

Whereupon, he loosed a tremendous groan and began shouting hoarsely for Jo. She came to him on the double.

"I'm dying," Dick told her.

"But what's the matter with you?"

"It's the plague," he said. "Don't come near. Just take good care of the children and keep my memory fresh."

The doctor, when he arrived, was as astonished as anyone else. "Giant hives," he pronounced. "What've you been eating?"

They figured it out, finally. It had been very hot in Palm Springs, and Dick had chosen gin-and-tonic to sip after the day's tennis. There is quinine in tonic water, and that had done it.

"At least," said Dick, as the swelling slowly spread toward his feet, "I have the biggest damn case of hives in all history."

"That's my man," Jo said.

He was well in three days, and spent the fourth recuperating beside the pool. Jo, in a domestic mood, spent it with him, sprawling in shorts on a lawn couch.

From his deck chair Dick surveyed his home, and his family. There was the house on the curving drive; the separate nursery (called "Liza's House," after Pidgeon's favorite doll); the well, pool and bridge; the guest house, the playhouse and bath house beside the pool and tennis courts; the stables, with the five horses (and two others at pasture); and the half-mile exercise track.

The three thoroughbreds were being trotted around the track at the moment. By the tennis courts, Noonny supervised the roisterous play of Skip and Pidgeon. In Beverly Hills and Westwood and Hollywood and New York, inflexible machinery ground away at his business enterprises: his picture work, his radio show, and his music publishing business.

And at his side demurely sat—or, rather, lounged—the girl with whom he has had only one real misunderstanding.

All was infinitely right with the world.

"D'you think you'll make another picture soon?" he asked lazily.

A year ago he would not have been capable of asking that so casually. Those had been the days when Jo had suddenly developed a passion for going into pictures, and he had just as violently opposed the notion.

Being Jo, she had gone anyway, and, of course, in the end he had come to his senses; had even visited her on the set of her second picture, Red River, a couple of weeks before.

The career business had been his own fault, really. He had introduced her to Director Howard Hawks in the first place. He might have known, as beautiful as Jo was, that the outcome must be a movie contract for her.

She answered his question about her next picture. "Not soon," she said. "I like all this too much. I'm afraid I'm really very domestic, after all. Besides, I like

"It's tomorrow's way of doing your lips and fingertips—today"

Madelon Mason
Conover Cover Girl

It's color range for costume change

"I change lip and fingertip make-up to harmonize with my costume," says beautiful Madelon Mason. "Of the 18 fashion-right shades of Dura-Gloss Nail Polish, I've several on my dressing table—together with their matching or blending Dura-Gloss Lipsticks. They make it easy to give each occasion and every frock its one most flattering accent."

*Nail Polish, 10¢ *Lipstick, 39¢

NEW! Creamy-smooth, long-lasting Dura-Gloss Lipstick . . . with matching Dura-Gloss Nail Polish in duo-package, 49¢*

Plus tax*

It's by DURA-GLOSS

Dura-Gloss Tropical—to highlight a British Tweeds Glen Plaid suit and Sally Victor's striking beret

© 1947, Lorr Lab., Paterson, N. J., Founded by E. T. Reynolds being around, so that when you have a little free time, we can spend it together."

"Just for saying such a sweet thing I'll tell you a secret. I'm going to get a cabin cruiser for fishing, and I'll take you over to the Catalina Isthmus in it."

"What—and leave me there while you go out after sailfish? No thanks." She thought suddenly of Bill Burton, Dick's manager, and laughed. "Bill will go right through the ceiling when he hears about this."

"Oh, the boat won't cost much. I'm getting it with a couple of other guys and it's a very sharp deal."

Jo laughed again. "Just the same, I know exactly what Bill will say. He was over for lunch yesterday, by the way, and gave me a lecture on economy. He told me the story of his struggle to keep you solvent. Want to hear it?

gift horse . . .

"Well, Bill said that two years ago he was racking his brain for some method of keeping you out of night clubs, but you insisted that you relaxed by going to them and if you couldn't relax, you couldn't work. And then nobody'd have any money at all.

"So it occurred to him that if you had a horse you might relax by riding it about, and not want to go to Ciro's so often. That's why he gave you the Palomino for Christmas."

"So that's why he gave me that horse. A fine thing, scheming behind my back."

"Not such good scheming," Joanne grinned at him. You forthwith bought two more horses and the board bill was so much, we moved out here to have a place for them, and you know what this place cost.

"And then, of course, you bought four more horses, and had to put up the stables and build a track, and hire a groom, all of which further dented Bill's budget and kept him awake nights.

"And the saddest thing was, you did ride in the afternoons, and then with seemingly inexhaustible energy you went right on relaxing every night at Ciro's and the Mocambo!"

"Poor Bill. But it served him right for being so devious in his methods." Dick chuckled and turned over.

"That's not the end of the story," Jo told him. "His problem still wasn't solved. He read somewhere that people who took photography as a hobby fastened onto it like a vise. So next he gave you that camera.

"You got all excited for a while, and I came home one day to find none of the washing done, and a note from the laundress saying she'd quit. When I looked to see why, I discovered you'd changed the laundry into a dark room."

Dick looked vague. "I wonder what ever become of that camera?"

"Remember? You sold it to Victor Moore. You took pictures of everything and everybody for a time, but usually you forgot to take along your light meter, and you'd come out of your darkroom holding up pictures of someone with no head, or the ocean with the horizon at a cockeyed angle.

"I don't recall that the camera had any effect whatsoever on your night-clubbing. We went out all the time." Jo paused significantly.

"But do you notice we practically never make the rounds any more?"

"I thought we agreed that it was more fun to stay home and run movies."

"Precisely.

"And do you remember who gave you that sound projector?"

"I'll be damned! He succeeded after all, didn't he?"

"That's why he's so good at his job," she said. She stood up suddenly. "Good heavens, I just remembered. Tomorrow's Bill's birthday. What are we going to give him?"

"How about a party? We haven't had a bang-up party for a long time."

"You have lovely ideas, darling," Jo said. "I'll call simply everybody. It's short notice but they'll come—they all love Bill."

Seventy-five people came, bearing assorted gifts. And Carmen Miranda and her trio sang, and everybody else sang or stood on his head or did something, and nobody went home until five in the morning.

good news . . .

Standing in their front door, watching the tail lights of the last car disappear down the drive, the Haymes' felt they had really achieved happiness. And that was when Joanne told Dick that along about fall there would be a third occupant in the nursery.

They stood still in the starlight, and Dick said softly, "What do you do when there are no words?"

"You could kiss a gal," Jo answered.

And he did. Don't all love stories end with a clinch?

JOLSON-CROSBY STORY

(Continued from page 39)

But that Groaner never flounders, and he's always got the right answer. I often wonder if the radio public realizes what a job he does, program after program, competing with the top talent of the country. It ain't no cinch, no-how."

I asked Jolson how it had come about, the radio partnership between him and Crosby.

"Bing and I used to say hello," said Al Jolson, "but actually we never knew each other very well, until he asked me to go on his program. It's a funny thing—first time I ever heard him sing, I listened to those deep tones and I told the crowd at the table: 'That's the new Jolson,' never thinking that years later, we'd be working together." Above Jolson's head, in my apartment, was a picture of Crosby, Bob Hope, Jimmy Fidler and me, taken during an exhibition golf match we played in 1938, at the Lakeside Country Club, in Burbank, California. "He's a pretty fair country golfer, isn't he?" asked Jolie, nodding his head toward Crosby. I told him that Bing ranged from 73 to 78. "He's the kind of kid who does anything well," judged Jolson.

"You know," Jolson said, "I've seen some pretty good performers in my day, but I've never seen anyone as relaxed as this kid Crosby. Scripts mean nothing to him. He drops ad libs any time one occurs to him. On that program we did with Irving Berlin, I figured I'd drop one in on him. So when Bing asked casually: 'Well, what'll we do?' I said, 'You hit the first note and I'll ride along.' So he looked at me, a little surprised, and hit the first note, and I stopped him. I said: 'Wait a minute, lad. We ain't gonna get any place with a note like that.' You know what that guy shot back at me? He says, nice and easy like: 'Take that note down to my bank and they'll discount it.' Yes sir, he's a real solid performer, that Crosby, and smart as a whip."

Do Jolson and Crosby prepare for a program in similar fashion? "You must be kidding," protested Jolson. "Me, I get to lovelier hair around the clock

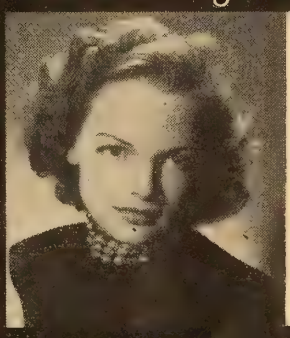
ELYSE KNOX (THE ALLIED ARTISTS STAR) is all sweet simplicity here, to fit the early hours.

Dr. Ellis morning



Lovely Elyse pictures mid-day sophistication (she's appearing in the Cinecolor production "BLACK GOLD").

Dr. Ellis noon

Elyse Knox fits the mood to the hour (she's equally charming at any time of day).

Dr. Ellis night

You'll find it so easy—so effortless—to achieve the exact hairdo that is most becoming to your own type of beauty—with the original Dr. Ellis Wave Set. Pick up a bottle tomorrow, at most any 5 & 10 or drugstore.

Dr. Ellis wave set 10¢ plus tax the studio as soon as the doors open, 1 P.M. From then on, until air-time, or recording-time, I knock my brains out, rehearsing my songs until I've got 'em exactly the way I want 'em. If the control man suggests that a note is not registering, I go over the entire song until he gives me the nod. But take that Crosby. He breezes in, nice and relaxed, about 6 P.M., looking like a California rainbow in those daffy outfits he cooks up. Casually, he runs through his songs and then the bum takes a nap until the audience arrives. If the sound control man suggests he try a phrase in a song over again, Der Bingle grins back at him and says: 'I was just trying it on for size, chum. It'll be tailored to fit when we do the show.' If he's got nerves, he checks them back home."

Jolson had said that Groucho Marx was one of the all-time comedy greats in his book. What other names, I asked, were in the Jolson all-time book?

as al sees 'em . . .

"Well," he said, "in comedy, I'd rate Bobby Clark, Groucho Marx, Ed Wynn and Lew Fields in the very top flight. My all-time ratings would include, in various fields, David Warfield, Irving Berlin, Fred Astaire, Nora Bayes, Gertrude Lawrence, Gracie Fields, and Enrico Caruso." "What about the movies?" "Garbo and Ingrid Bergman," said Jolson. "What male movie stars?" Jolson shook his head: "No standouts."

How would Crosby have compared with the greatest of the older school?

"I was afraid you'd ask that one!" he grinned. "Let me answer it this way. Conditions then and now are a lot different. We didn't have mikes in those days. You had to project your tones to the last rows in the balcony. Bing crowds in on that mike, and purrs into it. Whether or not he could have met the old-time conditions is pure guess-work. But this I do know—in show business, they've always paid off on personalities, and certainly Crosby is one of the most appealing."

With the whole country excited over the Jolson comeback, and with The Jolson Story heading for a staggering gross, in this country alone, of $8,000,000, how did Al react to this new lease on professional life?

"I'm getting a terrific belt out of it," he told me. "Not because of the money, and not because of the autograph fans. Look at it this way, Ed. I'm married to a young wife. All she knew about me, as a performer, was what she read in reminiscent columns, or what performers told her. Now all of a sudden, I'm back again as a star. That's the greatest kick for me—I've impressed my bride." He grinned: "Bride, I said. Next March 24th, we will celebrate our third anniversary."

I shut off the radio. "I've never met anyone like her," confided Jolson. "Sure, we have spats, like any other married couple. She storms out of the room, and slams the door on me, and I sit there, burning. Five minutes later, out she comes and says: "Honey, let me see those socks you're wearing. It's cold and wet out, and I don't want you to wear silk socks. Take them off and put these on." Jolson chuckled: "She can't stay mad for more than five minutes, no sulking—nothing like that—and that's why we're heading for our third anniversary."

I asked him to tell me exactly how they'd met—most people understood that she'd been his nurse when he had his chest operation.

"No, she wasn't my nurse. In fact she never was a nurse, but an X-ray technician in an Army hospital at Hot Springs, Arkansas," corrected Jolson. "I was playing the hospital circuit, and at Hot Springs, the Army nurses and the technicians sat on the floor, in front of the wounded, so they could keep their eye on any of the kids who might suffer an attack during the auditorium show. I got off on the right foot with the nurses. I looked down at them and I told them that I was glad to see so many nurses, and I could assure them that at no time during my performance would I say anything that would embarrass them. They all applauded. And then I added: 'Of course, girls, it ain't too late for you to escape in time.'" Jolson paused. "In those days, Ed, you'll remember that it was tough to get gas, and I was making the tour in my car, so right after the show, I made a bee-line to the executive officer and asked if he'd give me some gas tickets. As he was filling them out, suddenly I heard a weak little voice saying, 'May I have your autograph, Mr. Jolson?' I turned around and there she was—I was looking at her as I signed her slip of paper, but nobody introduced us. So I got my gas tickets and away I went.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

A few years ago, Jeanette MacDonald gave a benefit concert at the Chicago Civic Opera. I was seven years old then, but already interested in a singing career, so I persuaded my mother to take me to hear Miss MacDonald sing. After the planned program, Miss MacDonald offered to sing special requests in return for any substantial contribution to a charitable cause. My mother gave me a dollar bill, which I grasped in my hand, and started to make my way toward the stage. Just then, I heard a man in the balcony ask Miss MacDonald if she'd sing for $3. The reply was "no." Dejectedly, I returned to my seat, but Mother persuaded me to go up to the stage, anyhow. I drew a deep breath and asked very slowly, "Would you sing the 'Italian Street Song' for $1?" She squeezed my hand and addressed the audience: "If someone will add to this dollar, I will sing the 'Italian Street Song'!" From all over the theater now, money poured in. More than a hundred dollars was added to my one—and there I sat listening enraptured to Jeanette MacDonald singing my request for the "Italian Street Song!"

Karla Reynolds
Chicago, Illinois

"The next night, I was in Texas, for another Army hospital show. After the show, I couldn't get to sleep. I kept thinking of that girl's face. About five o'clock, in the morning, I put through a long-distance call to Hot Springs and woke up the Colonel who had given me the gas ration tickets. He must have thought I was completely crazy, but he was very nice. He acted as though a 5 A.M. call from an actor happened every morning. So I asked him if he could remember the girl who had asked for an autograph, while he was giving me the gas stubs. He asked me to hold the phone and he woke up a captain who had been in charge of the nurses that night. Back he came to the phone and told me to copy down the name—Erle Galbraith.

"I wrote to her the very next day," smiled Jolson. "I told her that I was not in love with her, of course; that I was old enough to be her father, but that I believed she had the kind of face that would register in the movies. I explained that I didn't know how much she made a week, as an X-ray technician, but that in the movies she could get a stock contract, while studying, for $100 a week. And I ended the letter by saying that if she came to the Coast, she could live with some married friends of mine who would watch out for her just as carefully as though she were their daughter.

"Weeks later, I was in Hollywood when the doorbell rang. An elderly gentleman introduced himself as a Los Angeles business man, who was a friend of the Galbraith family in Hot Springs. 'Mr. Jolson,' he told me, in a real southern accent, 'I just dropped by to talk to you about this offer you've made to little Erle. As man-to-man, I can tell you that her parents are a little gun-shy of Hollywood. The Galbraiths are one of the oldest families in Arkansas. Naturally, a girl would be attracted by the glamor of the movies, but the family doesn't like it at all. I've come here, to explain these things to you, sir, because it would be MOST unfortunate if everything wasn't exactly as it has been represented.'"

Jolson assured the family friend that the offer was bona-fide, that he wasn't in love with the girl, and had no designs on her, but actually believed that Erle Galbraith had a chance to click in the movies. Al persuaded Columbia to give her a contract, and at long last, "Jolie" received the wire that she was on her way.

"Her train was about 8 hours late," he recalled, "and I spent the last three hours sleeping on a bench in the railroad station, waiting for her. But the worst was yet to come. When she met me, the voice I'd remembered as soft and sweet had the Arkansas rasp of Bob Burns, and for one shuddering moment, I had a mental picture of Harry Cohn's face when he heard her talk! I smoothed that out, that morning, with Cohn, but then disaster really struck. The doctors told me that I'd have to undergo an operation—have a lung removed. So there I was, going into a hospital for a serious operation, and with a protegée on my hands.

just what the doctor ordered . . .

"Yet if it hadn't been for the operation, and for my desperate sickness, I never would have tumbled to the fact that I was in love with her," said Jolson. "Weeks later, while I still had a tube in my back, my nurse told me that a Miss Galbraith was outside, to see me. So I got the doctor to give me a shot of stuff, and they brought her in. And as she walked through the door I knew that I was head over heels in love. I felt like a kid of 16. And every time I saw her from then on, it got worse."

Jolson, convalescing at Palm Springs, sent a letter to Mr. Galbraith, asking for his daughter's hand in marriage.

Back came an airmail, Special Delivery letter that fairly sizzled. "You are old enough to be my daughter's father," blazed Mr. Galbraith. "I have never heard anything so insulting in all my born days." Jolson telephoned Erle, and, crushed, read the letter to her. "Guess I better go home," she told him. "I can twirl Dad around my little finger."

"Greatest part of The Jolson Story," said Jolson, "is the fact that she did get her parents to let her marry me. Now we're all the best of friends, and her mother is out of this world. However, we are still fighting the Civil War. When her mother came to New York to visit us, Erle mapped out a sightseeing trip for her. 'Honey,' objected her mother, 'you have written down here, Grant's Tomb.' Erle nodded. 'Honey,' chided her mother, 'inside Grant's Tomb, there is a YANKEE.'"

There's a New Word in Entertainment.. Copacolossal!
NEW all through . . . a glamorous, glorious show of shows . . . Hollywood's topmost talent on the loose in Broadway's brightest nightspot!
with the 14 most beautiful girls in America! LOOK
COPACABANA
A NEW Comedy Combination... GROUCHO and CARMEN!
A NEW Romantic Complication... STEVE and GLORIA!
A NEW (greater than you've ever seen him) Singing Sensation... ANDY RUSSELL!
GROUCHO MARX
CARMEN MIRANDA
ANDY RUSSELL
STEVE COCHRAN
GLORIA JEAN
in a Sam Coslow MUSICAL PRODUCTION
"COPACABANA"
with the COPA GIRLS—the 14 Most Beautiful Girls in America—and the Nation's Top Nightspot Reporters . . . LOUIS SOBOL—ABEL GREEN—EARL WILSON
Directed by ALFRED E. GREEN
Screenplay by Laslo Vadnay, Alan Boretz and Howard Harris • Additional dialogue by Sydney R. Zelinka
Words and Music by Sam Coslow
Released thru UNITED ARTISTS
Hear them sing:
"Je Vous Aime"
"Stranger Things Have Happened"
"My Heart Was Doing A Bolero"
"Let's Do the Copacabana"

ON ITS WAY TO YOUR FAVORITE THEATRE!

JAMES MASON LIFE STORY—By Virginia Wilson

(Continued from page 44)

in-Wonderland hair, and she smiled bewitchingly.

James eyed her. She seemed a definite improvement on the other little girls, who were shrieking around in some silly parlor game.

Her name was Pam and if she had only stayed around, the party might have been bearable. But she soon was whisked off, and James returned to bitterness.

When he got home, his mother said, "Did you have a good time?"

James eyed her reproachfully. "Parties are hateful," he said.

The accumulated excitement of the afternoon made the three-year-old burst into tears. But through his sobs came a sort of Greek refrain . . . "Anyway, Pam loves me!" It was a family joke for years.

This Pam, whose last name James has forgotten, wasn't the one he eventually married. But Freudians might make out quite a case for her being the reason he didn't marry until he met Pamela Kellino.

James was always rather girl-shy. He went away to school when he was nine, so the only time he saw girls was on his brief vacations, and he didn't think much of them. Of course, later at Cambridge, he danced with them at parties, and sometimes they were fairly bright and he didn't mind too much.

By then, though, his real interest was acting. He'd had parts in a couple of plays at Marlborough, his preparatory school. One of them was written by the French master, and James did so well in it that his marks in French promptly went up, too.

At Cambridge, James acted in The White Devil first, then later in a version of Midsummer Night's Dream set to music. This was a very elaborate production—too elaborate, as it turned out. James was stage manager, and full of enthusiasm.

"There's a chance for a really spectacular scene when Oberon gives the party in the dream sequence," he told the company. "Let's have a cut-out of gauze with the lights showing through it, for a sort of misty radiance. We could make a gauze drum, too, and lower it over Phoebus, with special lighting inside."

They spent most of their time on the props and setting for that scene. It was designed to knock everyone's eye out.

The great night arrived. The play went beautifully until the moment came when James was to speak the line that cued the scene.

James delivered the line, and the curtain rose slowly on what was to have been a scene of faery beauty. Instead it revealed a wild bustle of activity. Stagehands were doing carpentry work on the bridge, which was threatening to collapse. Electricians were switching lights on and off in a desperate attempt to trace a blown fuse. Phoebus was gazing unhappily up at the gauze drum which was about to descend upon him.

When the actors and stagehands realized the curtain was up, they did the double take of all time. Actors froze into position. The technicians fled, leaving their tools behind them. And the gauze drum engulfed Phoebus crosswise in its cavernous depths without benefit of lighting, while he scrambled madly to get out.

The audience, naturally, roared.

"We were right," James said afterward, grimly. "That scene was the hit of the show. But we'll never live it down."

It was his first and last experience as stage manager. After that he stuck to acting. But Cambridge had other things, too, to offer. Rowing, for instance. There's a story afoot that Mason was one of the great University rowers of history. When people ask about his rowing career, James is apt to say modestly, "Oh, I did a bit of it. Nothing to amount to much." And the story continues to grow.

One day his wife pinned him down on this. "Just what rowing did you do, James?" She always calls him James, never Jim.

"Well, actually, I never rowed in any race. Another chap and I used to row about in a small shell, practicing very hard and hoping that one day they'd do something about us. But they never did."

"James! You never tell people that, and they go on believing that you were a crack oarsman!"

A wicked glint appeared in the Mason eye. "Who am I to go about exploding legends?"

James usually spent his vacations at home, but one year, instead of going to Huddersfield, James took a job as tutor with a family in Germany. He would teach English to the children of the family for six weeks. Then when they paid him off, he would use the money to go to Berlin and really do the town, all by himself.

Unfortunately, he neglected to ask what his salary would be, and after six weeks of coping with small Prussians who hadn't the faintest desire to learn English, he was handed the German equivalent of three dollars! Grimly, he settled for a fourth-class ticket to nearby Oberammergau to see the Passion Play, instead of the trip to Berlin.

When he finished Cambridge, he went to work as a junior draughtsman for three months—long enough to convince him that he definitely did not want to be an architect. He found himself thinking more and more about the theater, and—mainly because he had a friend who worked in radio—he decided that that might be an "in."

James went around to see the friend one day. "Do you think you could get me a hearing of some sort with these people you work for?" he asked diffidently.

"I imagine so. Come around on Tuesday morning—they're holding auditions then and I'll slip you in."

the flying yorkshireman . . .

The audition wasn't nearly as frightening as James had expected. He recited some Shakespeare and then did a bit of very broad Yorkshire dialect that seemed to get over pretty well.

They called him the next day to say they had a part for him. "A Yorkshireman?" he queried hesitantly.

"Yorkshireman? Hell, no. It's a French porter!"

But the theater fascinated Mason far more than the radio. He began to make the rounds of the booking offices. The first question that came up was always "What stage experience have you had?" and the answer was always, "None."

The agents would shake their heads and that would be that. Finally, he answered an ad in Stage Magazine, and was hired before he could turn around. No questions at all.

It very soon became apparent that the company was on the verge of bankruptcy. In a couple of weeks they went over the edge, and James was fired. But now he had an answer to the "Experienced?" question. He got a job immediately with another group and promptly lost it because the manager didn't consider him a romantic type!

The next play was Rasputin. This company, while not quite as broke as the first one, was still operating on a shoe-string. Toward the end of the tour, they ran out of blank cartridges for the scene where Rasputin is shot. James and several others found themselves in the humiliating position of having to shout "Bang! Bang!" instead of firing guns, like small boys playing cowboy.

The company closed just before Christmas, but thereafter James didn't have much trouble getting jobs, and it wasn't long before he found himself actually making his debut in London. The play was

"Will this be cash or charge, madam?"

Are you really sure of your present deodorant? Test it against New Perfect Fresh
See if New Perfect Fresh isn't the most effective cream deodorant you have ever been able to buy

Never before in History!

But now* Fresh brings you a new fluffier, creamier deodorant . . . to give you carefree underarm protection *even on hottest days.

Only Fresh can give you this patented combination of amazing ingredients in a new deodorant that has never been made before.

New Fresh is the most effective cream deodorant you have ever tried . . . we think you'll agree! Yet dresses are perfectly safe from rotting . . . normal skin is perfectly safe from irritation.

New Fresh is delicately perfumed, delightful to smooth on. No gritty crystals or annoying hard particles and it doesn't dry out in the jar.

But don't take our word for it—test it. Test New Perfect Fresh today against your present deodorant—see if it isn't the most effective—the most pleasant cream deodorant you have ever been able to buy. Get your jar of New Perfect Fresh now—for carefree underarm protection even on hottest days. Available at all drug and toilet goods counters.

Be Lovelier to Love with new perfect Fresh

New Perfect Fresh comes to you at the same low pre-war prices . . . 10¢, 25¢, 43¢, and new 59¢ economy size.

called Gallows Glorious. After that he was offered a place in the Old Vic company, with Charles Laughton, Roger Livesey and Flora Robson.

James' first role was that of Yasha, the scoundrel valet in The Cherry Orchard. He really went to town on the makeup for that part.

But before the first performance, Laughton got hold of him. "Look here, Mason," he said. "Take that stuff off your face. People like Korda will be coming to see this show. You want to sell yourself as an actor, not a makeup artist! Let 'em see what you look like!"

James washed his face, gave a fine performance, and sure enough, Korda was there. He was not only there, but he promptly signed Mason up to play a comedy juvenile in The Return of Don Juan, his next picture.

James went around walking on air and buying drinks for all his friends.

Well, he played the comedy juvenile for exactly six days of shooting. Then one of Korda's stooges came around.

"Awfully sorry, Mason, but you're not right for this. We're letting you go."

No use saying it wasn't a blow. It was a bitter one, but providentially he was offered a part with the Gate Theater in Dublin just about then, and he stayed there for a year.

When he came back at last, he went to a cocktail party which was also attended by Fate. Fate wore a pinstripe suit and had a discerning eye. The eye, which belonged to Director Al Parker, lit on James. After a brief chat, Al signed him up to make a picture called Late Extra. It was the beginning of a friendship that has lasted all these years, and a business partnership that has lasted as long, without ever a contract being signed.

It was also the beginning of his romance with Pamela Kellino. Her husband was Roy Kellino, who was photographing Troubled Waters, the Parker epic then in production.

James and Roy and Pamela became very good friends. The slump that hit the picture business in 1938 found the three of them in Switzerland together. Pamela was taken sick there, and the two men sat around and worried alternately about her and the slump.

brainstorm . . .

One day she sat up in bed with a temperature of 102 and looked at them. "I have an idea," she said. "Let's make a picture. Just we three. Or practically."

James went over and put his hand on her forehead. "Burning," he told Roy. "The girl's delirious."

"I'm nothing of the kind," Pam said indignantly. "It's a perfectly sensible idea. James is an actor, I'm an actress, and Roy's a cameraman. How much money do we have?"

They humored her. They counted up how much the three of them had, tucked away in bank accounts and old socks. All told, it came to around four thousand pounds.

"We couldn't even hire a studio for that," Roy said, "to say nothing about all the other expenses."

"I wonder." James was looking thoughtful now, his dark eyes intent. "Suppose we shot the picture entirely out of doors? Suppose we wrote the story ourselves . . ."

So he and Pam went to work on the story. It was a haunting tale of a young farmer married to a nagging wife. Eventually, she drives him to murder. While he is trying to escape the police, he meets a girl novelist and they fall in love. The ending is tragic, the excitement intense.

All right. They had the story. But what about equipment? James reluctantly traded his car for a station wagon, and they mounted their camera on that for trucking shots. The camera itself was an antique which fell apart every time anyone looked at it twice, but somehow Roy achieved wonders with it.

They had written a scene involving a fox hunt, so they had to find a hunt obliging enough to let them photograph it. Then wait—and wait, for decent weather. The hunt was not the chic type you frequently see on the screen, with languid gentry in pink coats cantering about and meeting for a stirrup cup of champagne.

The master of this fox-hunt was a farmer. "Don't know if you can catch a picture of that fox with your camera-dingus," he said doubtfully. "Goes pretty fast, he does. I've got a good picture of a fox over the mantel back at the house, though. Could you maybe use that some way?"

They thanked him warmly but said they'd take a chance on getting one in the field. As a matter of fact, they got a beauty, one of the best shots in the picture.

Their money, unfortunately, disappeared much faster than they had counted on, as the weeks went by. Time after time they faced each other across a pint of beer at some country pub and read complete discouragement in one another's faces. But crazily, stubbornly, they kept on. By the time they got to the last sequence, they were really broke.

They had to get a shot of a barn burning. They had managed to build one of salvaged lumber, but it would burn awfully fast with no time for a lot of repeats.

"You've got to get it the first time, Roy," James said.

Miraculously, everything went off beautifully. The barn burned with a pure, celestial flame, and Roy's photography couldn't have been better.

When they came to marketing the picture they ran into more trouble. Finally, a small, independent company took it over, with theatrically bad timing, just on the eve of the war with Germany. When war actually was declared, a week later, the whole outfit went tearing off to the United States on the first boat, leaving I Met A Murderer to its fate.

Early in 1939, Pamela and Roy Kellino were divorced, and soon after she and James married. They had been in love a long time, but their affection for Roy had made it difficult. However, now everything was all right. They were very happy. Pamela is right for James in every way. There is a quality of sweetness about them both which they spend most of their time trying to hide. In spite of their sophistication, they are, more than anything else, two people deeply in love. It's a good way to be.

Pamela approves of James' hobbies of painting and drawing caricatures. Although he has done skillful caricatures of all his friends, his enemies and himself, he has never, to date, been able to do a satisfactory one of Pam, although he has spent days—and reams of paper—trying.

Only once did his caricatures cause any trouble. He did one of an ambitious and very vain young actress, who was thrown into a complete wing-ding by it. Whenever she gets a few cocktails too many, she falls to weeping on the nearest manly shoulder.

"Why did James have to make that wicked, wicked picture of me?" she wails. "It wouldn't be so bad if it didn't look just like me!"

After their marriage, the Masons acquired a house in the country and several cats. Not in that order, actually—the cats made the house seem advisable.

Then James came back to London and embarked on the series of films which were to make him the most popular actor on the English screen.

bobby-soxers' delight . . .

The Man In Grey was his first big hit, but it was The Seventh Veil which really made him the bobby-soxers' idol. It also enabled him to command a very large salary thereafter.

By now he and Pamela had acquired another country house—a charming place just near enough to London so they could get there conveniently, and yet completely secluded. And by now they had also acquired a friend-companion-business associate named Johnny Monoghan, who was living with them. He was a square-jawed, roving-eyed Irish-American, and they had picked him up in a bar. Or rather he had picked them up.

It's quite a story. James and Pamela were touring with a play called Gaslight and the troupe stopped at Salisbury, which was swarming with American soldiers.

"Here's the spot to find a character for my book," Pam announced. The only thing that had been holding up her writing was the character of an American officer.

They sat in the hotel bar and watched dozens of American officers come in and go out. Somehow none of them seemed just the type. There was one solidly built young man who stood at the bar consuming enormous quantities of whiskey and leering happily at Pamela, who tried to ignore him. He wore the dirtiest raincoat in the ETO, and wasn't, they thought, an officer at all.

Finally, the whiskey began to catch up with him and he got truculent. He swaggered over. Would they have a drink with him, or wouldn't they? Oh, they wouldn't? Wham! Two glasses of whiskey landed in the fireplace.

"Those were yours. Compliments of J Monoghan," he informed them.

Alarmed at a possible crisis in international relations, the Masons explained that they seldom drank, but they were delighted to see him and wouldn't he sit down and have one on them?

He would and he did. He told them all about himself. He was Captain John Monoghan. He came from Pennsylvania, where he had been a member of the State Police. And some day he was going to be a writer. Why, just the other day, coming up on the train, he'd had a terrific idea for a mystery-thriller. Here's this soldier, see, and he's AWOL and he gets involved in a murder . . .

Something clicked in Pamela's mind. A combination of ideas. And from this seedling eventually emerged the script of The Upturned Glass by Pamela Kellino and John Monoghan. You'll be seeing it

(Continued on page 95)

I SAW IT HAPPEN

While waiting on line to make a purchase, my friend and I were discussing screen actors. My friend said, with feeling, "Dana Andrews just about paralyzes me." At that moment, a voice from behind her chimed in: "Well, in that case, you may not be able to move ahead on line, so would you mind if I took your place?" My friend was certainly taken by surprise when she turned around, for it was Dana Andrews in person!

Marie Cermine
New York, N. Y.

Which Twin has the Toni?

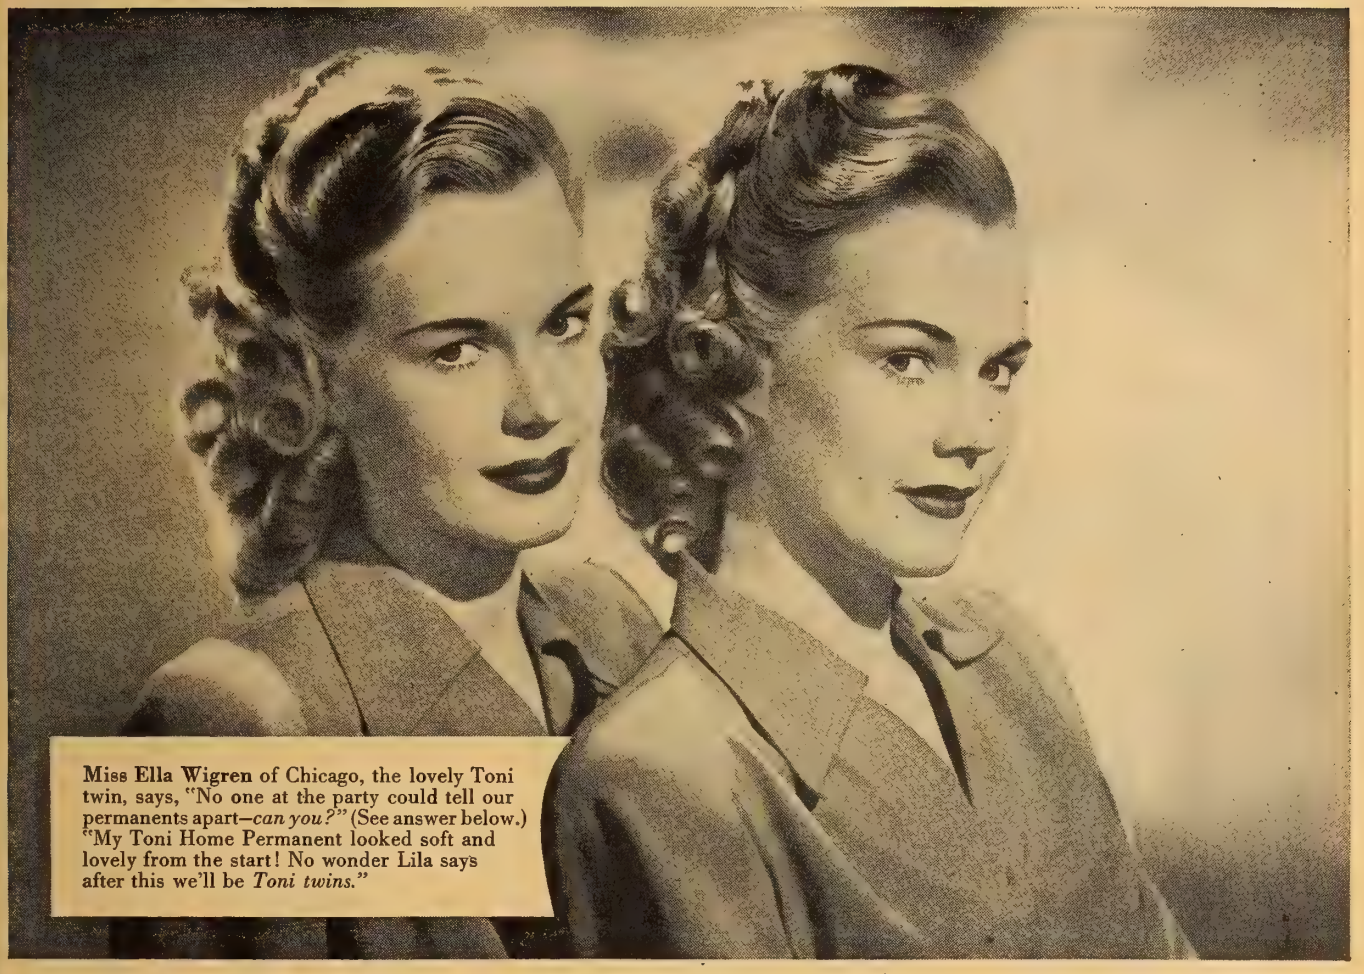
(and which had her permanent at the beauty shop?)



Miss Ella Wigren of Chicago, the lovely Toni twin, says, "No one at the party could tell our permanents apart—can you?" (See answer below.) "My Toni Home Permanent looked soft and lovely from the start! No wonder Lila says after this we'll be Toni twins."

For your date tonight . . . give yourself a lovely TONI Home Permanent

Easy? You would never dream it could be so easy to give yourself a permanent at home. Just three simple steps:

1. Roll your hair up on curlers (new Toni plastic curlers make it easier than ever). Dab on Toni Creme Lotion as you go.

2. Tie a turban round your head and do whatever you like for 2 to 3 hours.

3. Saturate each curl with Toni Neutralizer and rinse.

Wonderfully simple...and oh, what a beautiful wave! So soft, so smooth, so natural-looking. Exactly the amount of curl to suit yourself. Not too loose... not too tight...but just right. Easy to manage from the start because there's no stubborn frizzy stage with Toni.

Even if your hair is gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine it will take a beautiful wave. For Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent. See why every hour of the day another 1000 women use Toni. Try it today.

All leading drug, notions and cosmetic counters feature and recommend the Toni Home Permanent Kit.

Ella, the twin at the right above, has the Toni. Could you tell?

Easy as rolling your hair up on curlers — but the wave stays in for months.

De Luxe Kit with re-usable plastic curlers	Regular Kit with fiber curlers	Refill Kit complete except for curlers
$2.00	$1.25	$1.00

All prices plus tax • Prices slightly higher in Canada

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

Toni
HOME PERMANENT
THE CREME COLD WAVE

"DREADED" DAYS
CAN BE ACTIVE DAYS

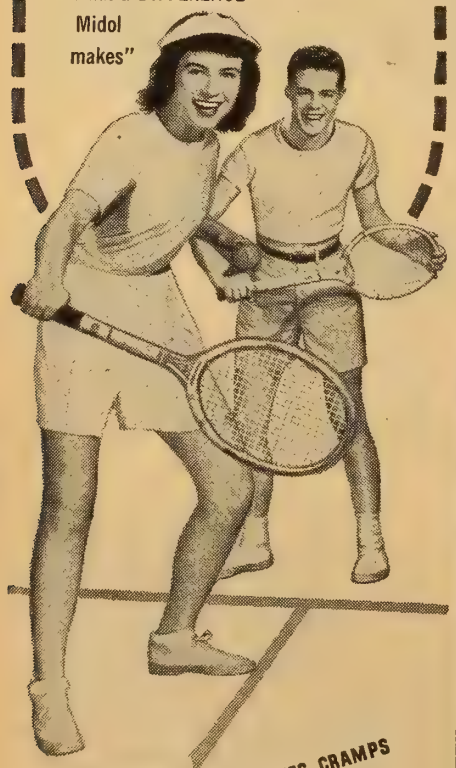
MIDOL
RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL
PERIODIC PAIN
CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"

"What a DIFFERENCE Midol makes"



MIDOL
RELIEVES CRAMPS
EASES HEADACHE
CHASES "BLUES"

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION • SHIRLEY FROHLICH, DIRECTOR

LAST MINUTE FLASH: As we go to press, the judges have just announced the winners in the 5th semi-annual MODERN SCREEN Fan Club Association Trophy Cup Contest. The winning clubs are: League One (600 members or over): Nelson Eddy Music Club, Rita and Jo Mottola, co-prexies. League Two (200 members or over): Jack Carson Club, Loretta Verbin, prexy. League Three (under 200 members): New Stars Club, Iris Archambault, prexy. Next month we'll tell you all about the winning clubs, the runners-up, and rules for the 6th Trophy Contest which starts right away.

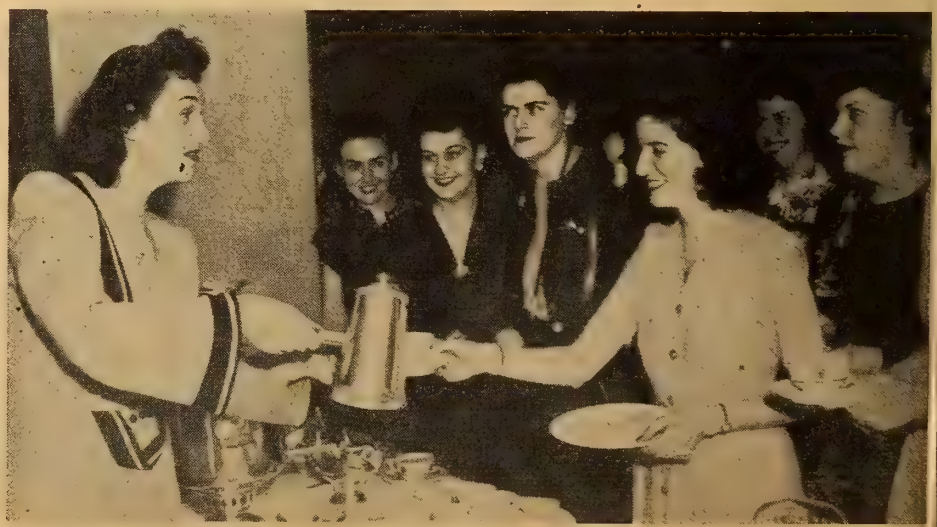
WORTHWHILE ACTIVITIES: So many new prexies have asked us for suggestions for a "club project," or worthwhile activity, that we're going to talk about this feature right now. We might even brag a little, if we're not careful, because we're so darned proud of the many important contributions MSFCA clubbers are making to the health and happiness of others. And here's something maybe you've never thought of before. You know, although your star is secretly proud of his club, he's a little embarrassed to talk about it. But just latch on to some good cause, and your club will probably become No. 1 on his conversation list. We've seen it happen!

But let's get down to cases, or in this case, causes (whew!). About the biggest fan club event in recent months was the Damon Runyon Memorial Cancer Fund Rally at New York's Palladium Ballroom. With the blessings of Walter Winchell, this rally was sponsored by the Al Lombardy (Jo Rampino, prexy) and Dolores Craeg (Millie Grossi, prexy) Clubs, with valuable assistance from Marybelle Mason's Bob Turner Club, Dolores McMullen's Frank Sinatra Club and Fayreta Sweet's Bob Ryan Rooters. Tickets were $1.00, and a total of $500 was turned over to Mr. Winchell. Many tickets were bought by "sponsors" for disabled veterans! Another Cancer Fund affair was the dance held at American Legion Delaware Post No. 1, in Wilmington. Terry Smith's Skip Homeier Club was behind this one—and at 50c a ticket, it was a huge success!

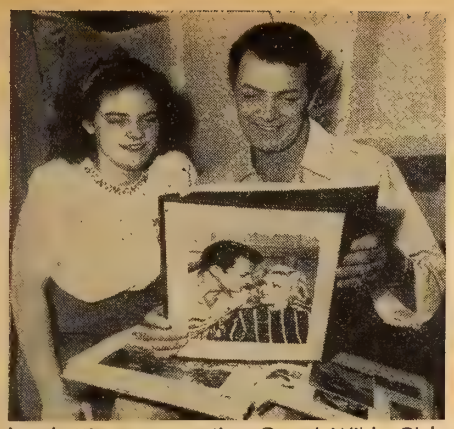
Putting on a dance or a rally takes a lot of work and know-how, for which small or young clubs are not equipped. But there are other ways to do your share. Many clubs turn over a portion of their surplus treasury regularly to some charity drive. Peggy Pearl's Alan Ladd Club, (Continued on next page)

TROPHY CONTEST PRIZES

This month's winners: THIS IS MY BEST, 100 pts. (Prize: Gift package FABERGE Perfume and Cologne to gals; FABERGE Men's Cologne to guys): Cathi Calli, "Visit to U. N.," Glenn's Book (Vernon; McCarthy); Lorraine Capurro, "Help Destroy Juvenile Delinquency," June's Jottings (Lockhart); Russ Gordon, "Cornering DeCamp," DeCampaigner (Rosemary); Jerry Rice, "Carsonated," Carson's Collections (Jack); Robert Waste, "Oscar and I," same; John Huelbig, "The Clock Struck One," Skippy (Homeier). CANDID CAMERA CONTEST (1st Prize: 100 pts., year's subscription to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE, SCREEN ALBUM, plus 4 Dell Mysteries): Paul O'Neill, Sinatra (Bush) C. (Others: 50 pts., surprise package 4 Dell Mysteries): Rose Jane Park, Gene Kelly C.; Ethel Center, Larry Brooks C.; Amena Peacock, Vincent Price C.; Dory Gehrke, Nelson Eddy Music C.; Anne Ling, Sinatra C. BEST EDITORS, 250 pts. (Prize: Specially packed assortment of all of POND's Beauty Products) 1. Virginia Haywood, Haymes Herald (Dick); 2. Kit Pritchett, Morgan Memos (Dennis); 3. Mary Jane Grootenboer, Notes On Nina (Foch). BEST ORIGINAL ART WORK, 150 pts. (Prize: TANGEE TRIP KIT, filled with cosmetics, for travel) Verna Boyd, Rhythm Roundup. BEST JOURNALS, 500 pts.: 1. Autry's Aces (Gene), 2. Carson's Collections, 3. Talent Scout (New Stars C.) BEST COVERS, 250 pts.: 1 None qualified, in judges' opinion, 2. Carson's Collections, 3. Great Scott (Lizabeth). MOST WORTHWHILE ACTIVITIES, 250 pts.: 1. Dick Haymes Associates, 2. (tied) Bill Boyd C. and Shirley Temple C., 3. (tied) Lon McCalister C., Vincent Price C., Richard Jaekel C. and Skip Homeier (Smith) C. GREATEST PERCENTAGE INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP, 100 pts.: 1. Rex Allen C., 2. Bill Boyd C., 3. Dan Duryea (Maben) C. BEST MSFCA CORRESPONDENTS, 50 pts.: 1. Rita and Jo Mottola, Nelson Eddy M. C., 2. Betty Sue Dorris, Pee Wee King C., 3. Jean Crocker, Filmland Fan C.



Rise Stevens poured tea for all her club members at a recent party in New York's Essex House. Co-prexies Rita and Jo Mottola assure us—needlessly—that a good time was had by all.



Ann Latting, representing Cornel Wilde Club, visits "their boy," shows him club scrapbook.

Vera Pultro, Bev Bush's and Joel Pacilio's clubs for Frank Sinatra all contributed to the Cancer Fund in this way.

Another favorite club project is adopting a war orphan, whose home is in Europe, and sending used clothing and food parcels, small toys and letters to your club "adoptee" for a year or more. Among our most recent foster parents are the Gene Autry Friendship Club, Roberta Gutierrez' Lon McCallister Club and Amena Peacock's Vincent Price Club. This is a project requiring long-range responsibilities, but if your club is prepared to undertake the job, contact any foreign relief organization.

The Red Cross is the favorite charity of many stars, so naturally, their clubs follow suit. Examples: Richard Jaeckel, John Lund (Cook) and Bobby Beers Clubs.

The Bill Boyd and Sinatra (McMullen) Clubs collected clothing for the Texas City disaster victims . . . Britain's Gene Autry Club turned over $200 to the Great Ormond Street Children's Hospital in London . . . Dick Haymes Associates are donating a large collection of first-class best-sellers to the Minneapolis Veterans' Hospital library . . . Shirley Temple clubbers turned over $80 to the Infantile Paralysis Foundation . . . and Glenna Riley's Jeanette MacDonald Club's favorite project is the Children's Village, in New York. They recently contributed $35.

So you see, whether your club is large or small, there's something you can do. CLUB BANTER: Membership drives, still the most popular form of club contest, are going strong in the Bab's Boosters (Barbara Lawrence), Vic Damone, Sinatra (McMullen), New Stars, Cass Daley, Bob Turner, and Charles Korvin Clubs. If you're a member, how about trying for some of those grand prizes? If you're not a member—well, what are you waiting for, huh? . . . Congratulations to the Humphrey Bogart Club, on its tenth anniversary, and to the new prexy, Jean Crocker . . . Dot Reisser of the James Melton Club is looking for snaps of Jimmy . . . Clubs enrolled in the James Mason Federation are Jo Anna Fitzmorris' and Bev Montalbano's of California, Jean Meyer's, Miriam Strausberg's and Leonie Warschauer's . . . About 30 mems of Allan Jones' Club attended Irene Hervey Jones' first Broadway performance in State Of The Union . . . Bill Boyd, singing cowboy star of WRR, Dallas, Texas (not Hopalong Cassidy) gave his clubbers a rare treat. After his regular show, he threw a party for them, including a screening of his film, Tumbleweed Trail . . . Members of Viola Myers' Jay Kirby Club were pleasantly surprised to receive announcements of the birth of Jay's baby . . . Arlene Simons asks us to help her out of a real predicament. The address list of her Sinatra club was destroyed by fire. If you belong to her club, please contact her at 163 W. Montana, Detroit 3, Michigan.

Men love hair with this natural glory!

Men know how irresistibly charming is a woman's hair that gleams with natural highlights and shadows—sparkles with silken softness—delights with clean fragrance. Crown of carefree curls, or smart upsweep—it's your natural hair-appeal that captivates men. Women of all ages are discovering that Lustre-Creme Shampoo brings out the fullest natural glory . . . quickly . . . easily . . . inexpensively. Not a soap, not a liquid, Lustre-Creme Shampoo is a new dainty cream that whips instantly into creamy rich lather in hard or soft water . . . swiftly sweeps dullness away. Out of her wealth of cosmetic lore, Kay Daumit combined gentle lanolin with special secret ingredients to achieve this almost-magic new cream that offers shining new appeal and obedience to your hair. Try Lustre-Creme Shampoo. At cosmetic counters.

The cream shampoo for true hair loveliness

Four ounces, $1.00; Family 1 lb., $3.50; also 30¢ and 55¢ sizes.

See how a fingertipful of Lustre-Creme Shampoo bursts into heaps of fragrant lather. And see how tempting it leaves your hair! Not dried—not dulled—not unruly—but silken soft, responsive, sparkling as if you'd given it a hard brushing.

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor), 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago Ill.

(Advertisement)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

At the first blush of Womanhood

by
VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm—There is nothing "wrong" with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike—Don't take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid's exclusive formula. That's why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses—more men and women everywhere—use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself—You'll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don't be half-safe—During this "age of courtship," don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

YOU ARE BOUND TO "SMILE WHEN YOU SAY THAT" IF YOU FOLLOW THESE HOLLYWOOD HINTS FOR SPARKLING TEETH

By Carol Carter, Beauty Editor

your smile insurance

■ Hollywood's a happy place. F'r example, Shirley Temple's animated smile is loved in 48 states. When young newcomers train for stardom they spend hours on acting lessons, diction, make-up—and on smile insurance! Sparkling teeth and fresh breath are "musts!"

BRUSH WORK Cover bristles with paste, powder or liquid dentifrice and s-c-r-u-b! Not a lick and a promise but a thorough, round and round, stimulating motion on each half inch of teeth, upper and lower. Lizabeth Scott likes a workout of at least three minutes. For good measure, put a little of the dentifrice on your finger tips, and massage your gums.

Treat yourself to this workout at least three times a day. Help your brush do a good cleaning job. After every use, rinse it thoroughly in cold water and hang it where the air can get to it.

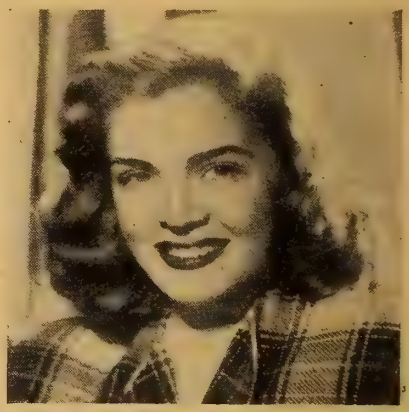
YOUR BEST FRIEND WILL, very often, warn you about unpleasant breath. But she's not always around! So don't take chances . . . use a refreshing mouth wash after every tooth-brushing and, if possible, before every social engagement.

A DATE: Keep one every six months with your dentist. He'll clean any crevices your brush may have missed and he'll put a quick stop to any tiny holes that just might become painful cavities.

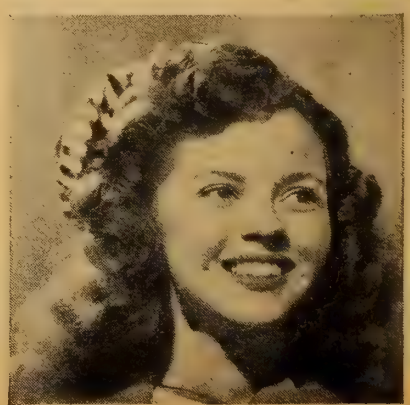
* * *

How'd you like to know all about "Glamour for the Teens?" It's our booklet that tells about makeup, hair, diet and grooming. Send 10c for it to: Carol Carter, Beauty Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

Martha Vickers of Warners owns a smile that is beautifully bright and sparkling.



Even, handsome teeth are another of Lizabeth (Paramount) Scott's charm-assets.



Doesn't she have a pretty smile? Everyone likes Shirley Temple's dimpled grin!

(Continued from page 90)

soon, with Mason starring, and it's quite a picture.

It was Johnny who suggested that they go on an entertainment tour for the American Red Cross. The American soldiers turned out to be the most inspiring audience they had ever had.

After the war, Johnny Monoghan was released from the Army and came to live with them. He has the greatest loyalty and admiration for James and Pamela. When they made their momentous decision to come to America, he was delighted.

"It will show them at home what you're really like," he said. "All this junk they've been reading about you—it's time they found it just isn't true."

For by now the Mason legend had reached fantastic proportions. He was "impossible to get along with in business deals." He "hated the press." He apparently ate seven fans every day for breakfast. All these stories discouraged the bobby-soxers not at all. They formed dozens of James Mason fan clubs and waited agog for his arrival on these shores.

To everyone's amazement, he turned out to be pleasant, well-mannered and fascinated by all things American. He gave polite interviews to the press, went shopping undisguised, and happily consumed strawberry ice cream sodas. He also, with Pamela, appeared in Bathsheba.

It was a beautiful and expensive production, but the Masons admit now that it was a bad choice. (The reviews of Odd Man Out, the new Mason picture, however, more than made up for it.) The play ran for about six weeks after bad notices. When it was over, they retreated, in some relief, to a house in Riverdale with their cats, to consider their next plans.

These involve, eventually, The King's General, which James is to make in Hollywood for Korda. And James may make a picture in New York, which is fast becoming something of a film center itself.

Meanwhile, they're having fun, and in their quiet way, making more friends and influencing more people than Dale Carnegie himself!

M. S. GOES TO PALM SPRINGS

(Continued from page 59)

steak will set you back $4.50. If you want a vegetable, you pay more. You're paying partly for atmosphere, because the lady at the next table is apt to be Hedy Lamarr.

There are breath-taking private homes in Palm Springs. Raymond Loewy's house has a swimming pool that comes right into the living-room, and his walls are hung with pieces of smooth, windswept sandstone.

There is also plenty of night life in Palm Springs, furnished by places like The Chi-Chi Bar, the Lone Palm, and the Plaza. Tourists who start out wanting to see everything Friday night, end up with a terrible headache Saturday morning.

But in Palm Springs, even a headache doesn't matter too much. Because there's always, and above all, the sun, curer of pains, and baker of tired bones.

You'll be walking along Palm Canyon Drive, staring at the expensive shops, and you'll see a girl in white shorts who looks just like Lana Turner, and she'll turn out to be Lana Turner. Down for the sun.

You'll be lying in the sand, and there'll be a couple a little way up the beach who look just like Cornel Wilde and his wife. And they'll turn out to be Cornel Wilde and his wife. Soaking up sun.

The sun and the stars go together.

TAN the famous one-day way with SUTRA FILTERS SUN SPEEDS TAN gloriously • safely

No other product lets you tan more quickly yet more safely!

Use SUTRA . . . it blocks out the burn rays . . . lets the tan rays come through . . . permits prolonged exposure without risk of painful sunburn.

Use SUTRA . . . for only SUTRA employs hydroquinone—the wonder sun filter of modern science—to screen out burn rays.

Use SUTRA . . . either SUTRA Lotion or SUTRA Cream, whichever you prefer. Both are highly effective, lightly scented, non-greasy, so easy and pleasant to use.

At your drug or cosmetic counter

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

ACCEPTED FOR ADVERTISING IN PUBLICATIONS OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

COPYRIGHT 1947. ARTRA COSMETICS, INC.

meet

LARRY PARKS
EVELYN KEYES
DANA ANDREWS
GLENN FORD
JUNE ALLYSON
BURT LANCASTER

and many, many more of your favorite stars

in the new FALL issue of

SCREEN ALBUM

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES—By Howard Sharpe

(Continued from page 51)

picnic today, you know. His class is giving it. He almost didn't get to go.

Sharpe: Why, did he need punishing?

Kris: Not this time. But when he told Daddy about it last night, Stan said, "Fearless Farnum is going to drive us. We're going in his Blue Beetle." So Daddy just said right out that Stan couldn't go.

Sharpe: You've got to admit, Kris, that it doesn't sound very safe.

Kris: That's what Daddy said. (Giggling) He said, "I've been reading about these hot rods and the accidents they get into, and I'm not raising sons to have them scattered all over the highway. The Blue Beetle, indeed!—not to mention Fearless Farnum. I can imagine the way he drives." So then Stan had to explain that the Blue Beetle is the kids' name for their school bus, which is a real old model that won't go hardly fast at all, and that they call the driver Fearless Farnum because he's so safe.

Sharpe: Oh?

Kris: Yes. So then Daddy let him go.

Sharpe: You must be awfully proud of your dad.

Kris: Why wouldn't I be?

Sharpe: Oh, I don't mean just because he's handsome and tall and charming. But he's a famous star, a celebrity. Don't you feel very important when you're with him?

Kris: (She hesitates a moment, regarding her bare toes intently and frowning a little.) I suppose so.

Sharpe: You don't seem too sure about it.

Kris: All right, then. I don't like it. Just look at the other day. Daddy decided to go into town and I asked if I could go along and he said sure. So when we'd parked the car we started walking up the street, and we stopped to look in a store window at some shoes, and all of a sudden a lady said, "That's Dennis Morgan!" And then two other ladies stopped, and in a minute there were about sixty trillion people standing around and hollering, and we had to go into the store.

Sharpe: Did you get a new pair of shoes out of it?

Kris: No, because it was even worse in the store. We had to go out the back way and sneak through an alley and run like anything to the parking lot. Daddy said we'd better let Mama bring me down some other time. That isn't fair. Other girls get to go places with their daddies.

Sharpe: But then, my dear, you have a lot of things other girls don't have, just because your father is a star. You have the best schools, and this nice house to live in; and this pool, where you can bring your friends. You can bring them, can't you?

Kris: Oh, yes. And Stan brings the kids from his school, too.

Sharpe: Well, then. And you live out here in the country instead of in a stuffy city apartment, where you couldn't keep pets or anything.

Kris: Would you like to see the goat?

Sharpe: I'd love to see the goat.

(Kristin leads the way around the house and points out a spotless, rather large nanny goat tethered under a tree.)

Isn't this pretty close to the house? I mean, for a goat?

Kris: Nanny goats don't smell bad. Only billy goats. Daddy taught us kids how to milk her. Do you know how to milk a goat?

Sharpe: I'm afraid that's a little out of my line.

Kris: Over here are wild mallards. Every once in a while Daddy gets hungry for wild duck, so he hangs a couple of these up till they drip and cooks them with wine and garlic. Mmmmmmm.

Sharpe: Mmmmmmmmm.

Kris: Well, and there's the horse over there, in that stable, and we've got peacocks, too. See them, standing around on the wall?

Sharpe: Pretty proud of themselves, aren't they?

Kris: Yes. They used to like to strut around the fish ponds. We had three ponds, but Daddy had to fill them up because Jimmy kept falling in.

Sharpe: He's getting to be a big boy now, isn't he? Past four, I seem to recall.

Kris: But he still dawdles over his food. Except when Daddy comes home, of course. When he hears Daddy singing in the front of the house he begins gulping everything, even spinach, because he knows what will happen if he doesn't.

(At this point, Bruce, the Labrador retriever, stiffens suddenly, listening. Then he dashes off toward the pool.) Somebody's home. Let's see who, shall we, Mr. Sharpe? (A moment later a husky, grinning twelve-year-old boy with a butch haircut and a sunburned nose comes trotting from the house, wearing swimming trunks. He dives in one side of the pool, swims across it, and climbs out again, dripping. Introductions are accomplished faultlessly by Kristin.)

Kris: I may as well tell you now, Stan. Your principal called Daddy this morning.

Stan: (Paling visibly) What about? I haven't done anything.

Kris: (Enjoying the little sensation she is causing.) Oh, just something he wanted to talk to Daddy about. Something about you and Daddy.

Stan: I don't get it.

Kris: The father-son banquet next Saturday, silly!

Stan: Oh. Oh gosh. Now I'll have to tell them. The other guys.

Sharpe: What do you mean, tell them? What?

Stan: (Simply) Who Dad is.

Sharpe: Don't they know?

Stan: Just two or three. You see we go to school under our real name—Morner—and most of the kids think Dad's just another guy.

Sharpe: You mean you don't want them to know your father's Dennis Morgan?

Stan: It makes everything different if they think of me as a movie star's son. I just want to be myself. They'll ask me a million questions, and kid me—you know. I forgot all about this banquet deal.

Sharpe: But Kris just told me that you bring your pals from school over here regularly, for swims and so on. Your dad doesn't hide out all the time they're here, does he?

Stan: Gosh, no! He comes out, and bats the ball for us, and swims, himself. But most of them never noticed—he's just a swell guy, you know, like anybody else's father, and he never talks pictures, or acts like a—a—well—you know—

Sharpe: I think Dennis—your dad, that is—once told me you have most of your recitals here at the house.

Kris: Last time there were two hundred people. And when the next one comes up next week I bet there'll be even more. Daddy calls it a clambake, only we don't have any clams.

Sharpe: You have the recitals here every year, hey?

Kris: It's just that we have the biggest house.

Sharpe: Well, my idea was that all the parents who come to the recital must know that Stanley Morner, Sr. is Dennis Morgan, and I should think they'd tell their kids about it.

Stan: Maybe they just think the kids know already. Well, (He shrugs) it'll work out.

Sharpe: I'm sure it will.

(There is a short silence, while everyone contemplates the situation. After a time, your correspondent speaks.)

Look, you guys, why don't we all put our heads together and figure out what kind of a guy your paw is? That's why I'm here in the

I SAW IT HAPPEN

A couple of years ago, when Barbara Hale had just gotten her first break in Higher and Higher, with Frank Sinatra, the picture was being previewed in Glendale. For some reason, the studio did not want Barbara to be present at the preview, but she was determined to go. So, in an effort to disguise herself, she bound her hair in a turban, left off her lipstick, and wore horn-rimmed glasses. After the preview, Barb escaped unnoticed from the theater, together with another girl and me. We tried to find transportation back to Hollywood, where we lived, but it was after 12 o'clock and the buses had stopped running. For a long time, we tried to find a cab, but had no success, so Barb suggested the only thing to do was to hitch-hike. She stood on the curb (still in her disguise) and extended a thumb. Finally, a beaten-up jalopy, driven by a high school boy, stopped, and Barbara asked for a lift to Hollywood. The boy looked at her, put the car back in gear, and, as he drove off, said: "Sorry, sister. Maybe if you were better-looking . . ."

R. Buckley,
Hollywood, Calif.

first place, and you know him better than I do. Or anybody. How about that?

Kris: What do you want us to say? He's —well, just Daddy.

Stan: Yeah.

Sharpe: Kris, if you were all grown up and married, and your dad was the man around the house, would you think he caused you extra work or not?

Kris: (Looking as matronly as a nine-year-old can manage to look) Well, he does leave his clothes all over, just everywhere. Wherever they drop. And damp bath towels hanging from the backs of chairs. And in the morning he plans everybody's day, including his own —and says what he wants for dinner even before he leaves for the studio. Of course, that's convenient for the cook, I guess.

Sharpe: I guess.

Kris: And when the cook's out, Daddy makes pancakes, and when he comes back from his trips he always cooks the fish he catches, and the game. You know what he likes best if he can't have something he's caught himself? Roast pork with sauerkraut and apples. Mmmmm.

Sharpe: Mmmmmm.

Kris: And he likes toasted English crumpets at breakfast.

Stan: It's funny about Dad. He never pays any attention to money, except our allowances and wasting food. But if I leave a hunk of butter on my plate, he gets sore.

Kris: Well, he doesn't get sore when other people eat up all the food in the house. And there are always people here, and they're always eating.

Stan: Dad says this house is Grand Central Station, only he's always liked Grand Central Station. That's why we've got two guest houses, he says.

Kris: It's something to do with the housing shortage.

Stan: Dad says all his friends keep being kicked out of their apartments and homes and can't get any more, and so they come to visit for a day or so, and then it takes so long to get another house that they have to stay on.

Sharpe: What people? Who?

Stan: I don't know. Dad says he doesn't half the time, either. But it's all right. He says they're all congenial people, and that's all that matters. Anyway, he sings for them and they like that, and Dad likes it too.

Kris: There's a car coming up the drive. (A sleek, shiny, Chrysler station wagon purrs to a stop at the front entrance. Lillian and Dennis Morgan emerge from it, arms piled high with bundles. Dogs bark, ducks quack, the goat does whatever goats do, and children laugh. In the background, looking vague, your correspondent hovers.)

Dennis: Oh—there you are, Howard. Make it all right?

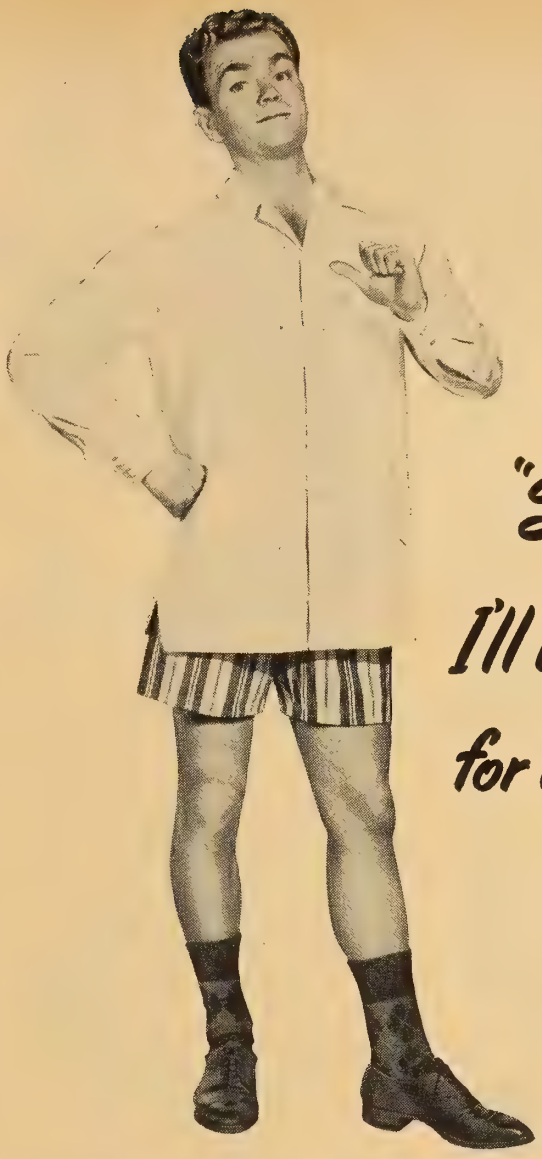
Sharpe: Made it fine.

Dennis: Come on into the playroom. I'll be washed up in a moment, and then we can have a beer and get the story.

Sharpe: I'll take the beer with thanks, but you can relax about the story. I've had it, as we said in the army.

Dennis: What do you mean, you've had it?

Sharpe: The story, that is. Kris and Stan have already written it for me. . .



"SURE I'll be a Model... for Fels-Naptha"

"I'm nobody's pin-up boy—but any time I can do the Fels-Naptha folks a favor—count me in. The missus says I'm a fast man with a shirt and if it wasn't for Fels-Naptha Soap, her permanent address would be R. D. 1, Laundry Tub Row.

"Well . . . she keeps me stocked with clean shirts (white, that is) and she's ready to step whenever I am. So if I'm the type you're looking for . . . shoot! It's on the house."

Welcome, Brother! You are now entitled to membership in the Fels-Naptha Boosters Club. 'Experience' meetings held every week on wash day. Be sure to bring the 'missus'. We want to hear her own report on Why Fels-Naptha is the Best Laundry Soap on the Market.

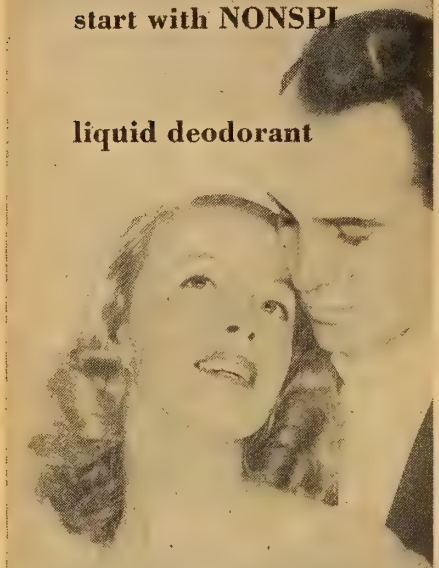
Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

ready for romance?

start with NONSPI

liquid deodorant



checks perspiration—

prevents odor—

longer-lasting—

fewer applications

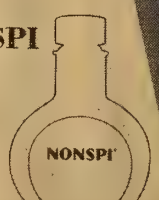
non-caking—

won't dry out

applicator cap

makes NONSPI

easy to use



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

35¢ and 60¢ plus tax everywhere

sweet and hot

By LEONARD FEATHER

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

POPULAR

HOW HIGH THE MOON—David Rose (M-G-M)
After hearing about 6,789 hot jazz versions of this tune, it's a refreshing contrast to listen to Dave's strictly melodic and lushly stringy treatment. On the back is a very holiday-for-stringsish Rose original, Gay Spirits.

I WANT TO BE LOVED—*Benny Goodman (Capitol), *Beryl Davis (Victor), *Savannah Churchill (Manor), Lionel Hampton (Decca), Sy Oliver (M-G-M), Cootie Williams (Majestic)

This tune and the two below are all examples of how an unknown artist on an unknown label can catapult an unknown song into a hit. The above opus was started by Savannah on Manor; despite its odd lyrics and grammar ("Can't you love me just a wee bit little . . ."), it has become a national menace. The Beryl Davis disc introduces this talented lass from London, whom I first heard over there singing with a band when she was about twelve. She's improved.

I WONDER, I WONDER, I WONDER—*Louis Armstrong (Victor), Jack Carroll (National), Eddy Howard (Majestic), The Four Aces (Trilon), The Vagabonds (Trilon), Van Johnson (M-G-M), Ted Straeter (Sonora), *Martha Tilton (Capitol), *Tony Pastor (Columbia), Guy Lombardo (Decca)

This started on the West Coast with the two Trilon versions. Remember another sleeper hit two years ago called I Wonder? Well, this one isn't three times as good.

MAHZEL—*Artie Wayne (The Hucksters); Art Mooney (M-G-M); Marshall Young (Rainbow); *Benny Goodman (Capitol); The Ravens (National); Louis Prima (Majestic); Murphy Sisters (Apollo)

Another surprise hit from Hollywood, started by a promising young singer on the shoestring Hucksters label. The Benny Goodman version is recommended mainly because it has no vocal and I can't see the lyrics. . .

YOU DON'T LEARN THAT IN SCHOOL—King Cole Trio (Capitol); *Louis Armstrong (Victor); *Roberta Lee (Sonora); Rosemary Calvin (Majestic)

Roberta Lee is the comely chick who sang with Les Brown and Raymond Scott and more recently was a hit at Cafe Society.

HOT JAZZ

JIMMY JONES—*New World A-Coming (Wax)

CHUCK MACKEY—*Happy Blues (Jump)

MEL POWELL—Lover Man (Commodore)

HAZEL SCOTT—*I've Got The World On A String (Signature)
Believe it or not, Hazel plays some fine, Earl Hines-like jazz piano on this, her best record yet.

CHARLIE VENTURA—*Moon Nocturne (National); *Ventura Album (Black & White)
Other albums worth investigating are the Herman Chittison Trio, jazzing classics on MHR; a Bebop album on Savoy, in which Dizzy Gillespie masquerades as Izzy Goldberg; Phil Moore's drawing-room piano album on Black & White.

FROM THE MOVIES

GREAT JOHN L., THE—When You Were Sweet Sixteen: *Perry Como (Victor)

IVY—Title Song: *Dick Haymes (Decca), *Woody Herman (Columbia); Jo Stafford (Capitol); Vaughn Monroe (Victor)

MY FAVORITE BRUNETTE—Beside You: Freddy Martin (Victor)

WELCOME STRANGER—*Album of Song: Bing Crosby (Decca). As Long As I'm Dreaming: *Joe Dosh (Continental); Tex Beneke (Victor)

LOVE AND LEARN—Would You Believe Me: Sammy Kaye (Victor); *Skitch Henderson (Capitol); Eddy Howard (Majestic)

STRANGE WOMAN

(Continued from page 37)

her. She went over for the sitting and, typically Crawford, was flattered, grateful, and eager to help. "How would you like me to pose?" she asked.

"Oh," answered the photographer, "just idle around that chair there a minute and you'll strike something natural."

Joan idled around the seat a few seconds, then fell into a position she thought he would like—a bit on the glamor side, maybe, but graceful, and she aimed to please. He took a look, lifted an eyebrow and sniffed. "Ah," he said, "Hollywood."

Joan's temper flared right away. "And what's wrong with Hollywood?" she crackled, clamping her jaw. That was the end of the sitting.

Joan Crawford is proud of being a movie star. "It's my medium," she said happily, "and a darned good one." She doesn't want to go on the stage; she doesn't want to do anything but make better pictures, play better parts right where she started.

Jerry Wald, her good friend and favorite producer, practically pushed her off the set after Possessed. "Goodbye now," said Jerry. "Go away, lose yourself. Forget Hollywood. Take a nice long rest."

Joan nodded wearily. She knocked herself out, really, on that toughie. She had thought she would drop time and again. On the set she kept repeating like a record, "When this is over I don't want to see, hear or smell Hollywood. I want to go away and sleep for a month of Sundays. If I could only have a vacation."

"You have it now," repeated Jerry, "Goodbye."

Two days later Jerry's telephone rang. It was Crawford. She had had her vacation—two whole days. The sight of a bed was driving her wild.

work, work, work . . .

"Jerry," she said, "for heaven's sake, get me back to work. What's my next script?"

Maybe one good reason why Joan is the evergreen tree she is, is because she is still convinced, as she was twenty-one years ago, that she is the luckiest girl in the world to be making pictures. She is still the red-headed unreconstructed movie fan in Hollywood. She droops and sighs when she sees Garbo, Hepburn, or Cary Grant, who top her list of film crushes. She has a projection room in her home since she built it fifteen years ago, and it's a wonder the place isn't worn out. Every Crawford dinner guest knows what's coming after the dessert—a double feature, and probably a Mickey Mouse too.

Joan spends half her spare hours signing autographs. She has been chased and badgered all over the United States by breathless admirers, and she loves it almost as much as Van Johnson does. She can't even get too sore when they step out of bounds and insult her.

The other day Joan was browsing in a village dime store, when a little old lady followed her around the counter, cranning and peering into her face. Joan smiled, and the inquisitive Granny poked her finger right alongside Joan's left eye, felt, and then marveled thus,

"Why, your eyelids haven't been cut open to make your eyes bigger at all. There's no scar or anything!"

Joan's only retort was a good common sense one. "Of course they haven't," she explained. "If I did that, you see, my eyeballs would fall out."

The other day Joan visited her daughter Christina at school. When she came in

"According to our Records —YOU'RE DUE FOR A LOT OF FUN!"

SPIVAK PLAYS "KREISLER FAVORITES" in his brand-new RCA Victor album! In smooth dance time, Charlie and his band bring you eight lovely melodies: Liebesfreud, Caprice Viennois, The Old Refrain, Liebesleid, Schön Rosmarin, La Gitana, Tambourin Chinois and Mighty Lak' a Rose. Ask for Album P-179, $3.15.

GLENN MILLER ALBUM includes eight famous recordings by the original Miller band, led by Glenn himself: Moonlight Serenade, Tuxedo Junction, Star Dust, In the Mood, American Patrol, Song of the Volga Boatmen, Little Brown Jug, Pennsylvania 6-5000. Ask for Album P-148, $3.15.

"8 TO THE BAR" ALBUM is swell two-piano boogie woogie for dancing, played by Pete Johnson and Albert Ammons, with drums. You get Cuttin' the Boogie, Barrel House Boogie, Boogie Woogie Man, Walkin' the Boogie, Sixth Avenue Express, Pine Creek, Foot Pedal Boogie and Movin' the Boogie. It's Album P-69, $3.15.

Prices are suggested list prices, exclusive of taxes.

HEAR BOB MERRILL singing "Music America Loves Best." Every Sunday at 2 p.m., EDT, over the NBC Network. Radio Corporation of America.

NATURALLY...ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS! Two "exclusives"—Victor's billion-record skill . . . plus RCA's electronic wizardry . . . make music sound so natural on RCA Victor Records! Hear them on a Victrola radio-phonograph. Victrola—Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

THE STARS WHO MAKE THE HITS ARE ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS

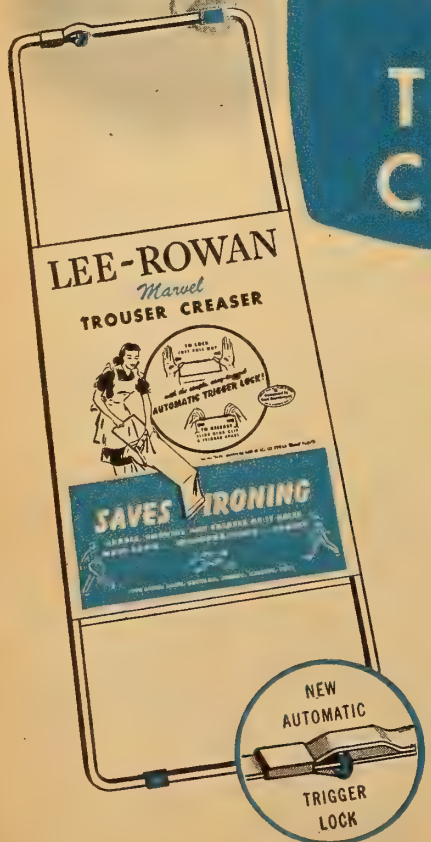
RCA "HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

"TIRED OF IRONING CHILDREN'S WASH PANTS?"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

LR

LEE-ROWAN Marvel TROUSER CREASERS



. . . take the drudgery out of ironing children's pants! Simply wash pants, insert creasers and hang to dry . . . it's quick and easy as A B C. Pants are smoothed, shaped and neatly creased while drying. There's a size to fit every one in the family, tots to six-footers. Get all the sizes you need—they cost so little! Over 1,000,000 pairs sold.

5 SIZES TO FIT THE WHOLE FAMILY!

• TOTS, Ages 2 to 4 • KIDDIES, Ages 5 to 8 • JUNIORS, Ages 9 to 14 • REGULAR, for trousers up to 32" • LONG, for trousers over 32"

LEE-ROWAN CO., 6307 ETZEL AVE., ST. LOUIS 14, MO.

100 SOLD THROUGH LEADING DEPARTMENT STORES

all the moppets began whispering and squirming in their seats. "There's your Mama, Tina," they said. "It's Joan Crawford. Joan Crawford's your Mama, isn't she?"

That night Tina had to know how come they made such a fuss when she visited classes, when all the other mothers caused practically no stir at all. "And there's a boy at school," continued Tina indignantly, "who always yells 'your mother's a movie star, your mother's a movie star'."

"Does that make you mad?" asked Joan.

"No," said Tina, "but the way he yells it does."

"Bop him," advised Joan.

Joan was secretly relieved that she was ill and couldn't be on hand to collect her Academy Oscar in person last year. She confessed to a close friend "I would have cried all the way up to get it, and all the way back, and made a fool of myself."

But, get her into a picture and she knows what to do. What Crawford does is get lost. She is like her kids that way—movies are real to her. The only movie Christina has seen Joan in is Dancing Lady. Though an old one, Joan thought that it was better to show Tina than Mildred Pierce or the very adult Humoresque and Possessed.

Movies are very real to Joan Crawford. When she made Possessed she became convinced, until kidded out of it, that she was a neurotic. When she played the crying scene she couldn't stop when she got home, but bawled half the night.

Joan spent three days at the Los Angeles General Hospital getting atmosphere for that part. Those three nights she couldn't sleep a wink. The first day they were inside the psychopathic ward Joan emerged dripping tears like a sprinkler. Jerry Wald climbed into the car with her and they steamed out the gate. Joan was so blinded by her emotional showers that she plowed right through the red light. A cop hailed her down.

"What's the matter," he demanded, "in a hurry?"

"I," sobbed Joan, "have just come out of the psychopathic ward."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said the cop, diving for the wheel.

Jerry hastily explained what it was all about, and Joan got off with a lecture instead of a strait-jacket.

Joan doesn't stop with tossing herself out into every picture role she plays. It's a habit she has carried into her private life too. Her only perennial complaint about life is, "What can I do now?" She keeps three telephones at home ringing like fire alarms, then clamps the receiver to her ear with her shoulder so she can knit furiously with her hands free. She gardens like mad, and even cut down and sawed up sixteen eucalyptus trees that were in her backyard a few months ago.

She takes care of myriad business affairs every day on the side, and checks all the parcels and goings on about Grosvenor House, her twenty-one unit apartment. She would burst if she didn't have something to burn up her energy. When she goes shopping she leaves a trail of wilted dressmakers and salesgirls in her wake. Joan goes all out for everything.

A magazine called Joan up not long ago. They said they would like to snap a few pictures. "Sure," she agreed, "but I have just time for a few." The photographer left with 106!

Whether this lady's "ball of fire" temperament keeps her young, or vice-versa, no one knows—but plenty of women would like to. She can eat cream puffs all day long, although she likes filet, green onions, french fries, salad and ice cream best, and tosses not an airy thought to her figure. It's as trim and firm today as a liked that car. He had lowered it, at the expense of the springs, and, properly handled, he could make it spin three or four times on the school lawn.

(Continued on page 117)

MALE ANIMAL

(Continued from page 48)

Then one afternoon he remembered the cinder track on the playing field; if he couldn't spin it at least a half dozen times on that, he didn't know his car. By the time he'd spent an hour practicing on the track, it was a shambles, and an outraged teacher was conducting him to the principal's office.

That gentleman leaned back in his chair and sighed when Rory came in. "My boy," he said, "do you realize you spend more time in my office than you do in class? What are you trying to prove?"

"Nothing," Rory said. "I just like to have a good time."

"Your good times are rather expensive for this school. I thought, by the way, that you were to be in the 200-yard dash and shot-put at the meet day after tomorrow."

"My gosh," Rory said. "I forgot all about it."

"Well, you can refresh your memory and at the same time repair the damage you've done by getting a drag, attaching it to your car, and spending tomorrow dragging the track into its former shape. At your own expense."

"Okay, sir."

"Oh, by the way . . ."

He turned at the door. "Yes, sir?"

"Good luck in the meet!"

That was in Santa Cruz, in Northern California, an idyllic little paradise that might have been designed for an energetic, healthy boy to grow up in. It is on the sea; it has rolling hills, and forests, and a population of tolerant, rather casual people. Nat Durgin, Rory's step-father, operated service stations and, on his comfortable income, provided his family with a nine-room house on three acres of ground. Much of the land had been converted to lawns, which it was Rory's privilege to mow when he might otherwise be occupied in hunting, swimming or riding.

One afternoon when he was seventeen, he stopped the mower beside a shade tree, sat down with his back against the trunk, and surveyed his situation. He was already six-three, as husky as any kid in the neighborhood, and full of beans.

He'd finished three years of high school, and it was simply not to his taste. He was happy only when he was streaking around the country in his jalopy with one of several young ladies who reserved their time for him, or when he was riding on the ranch of a friend, Henry Cowell, or when he was whooping it up with the fellows in town.

the open road . . .

Even then he was only mildly content. What I need, he thought, is to get away, see the country, go where I want and do whatever seems good to do. And as he finished the lawn, his resolve grew stronger.

That night, at dinner, he explained patiently to his parents what he had to do.

"But what'll you use for money?" his mother asked.

"I'll work for it. And I've got fifty bucks in the bank, until I find something."

His parents looked at each other. Nat shrugged. Rory's mother said, finally, "Well . . ." And Rory knew he had won.

It was a year later, and in Amarillo, Texas, that he became the proud owner of a 1939 Ford convertible. He had the

Do you envy Claire her thrilling dates? Then learn her secret. Have a SweetHeart complexion and win a sweetheart of your own!

Claire Poe,

ENCHANTING COVER GIRL, SAYS:

Beauty's My Business—

So I changed to the Gentle FLOATING LIFT of SWEETHEART SOAP'S Extra Lather!

Discover SweetHeart's 1-2-3 Extra Lather Beauty Care! Night and morning, massage your face one minute with SweetHeart's extra lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Skin is cleansed . . . stimulated . . . more radiant!

• "The two minutes a day I spend on SweetHeart Care bring me many dollars—many compliments," says Claire. "I face the camera with radiantly fresh, smooth skin."

You, too, will bless this wonderful beauty care! For pure, mild SweetHeart Soap gives up to twice as much lather as average beauty soaps. And this heavenly soft, rich lather has a gentle floating lift. Pictures taken through the microscope prove it.

Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off—float away—the dirt and dry skin flakes that hide natural smoothness, natural radiance. Your true beauty is revealed!

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

For tub and shower, you can now also get the new, large bath size. SweetHeart's extra lather with its floating lift is marvelous.

down payment right there in his pocket.

As he drove his shiny new possession off into the hot Texas streets he reflected that, in twelve months, he had come pretty far.

He had left California by bus and his first stop had been Tombstone, Arizona. He could still smell the dry desert sage as he stood on the lonely road outside Tombstone, hitch-hiking. He remembered how he'd reached a ranch, finally, and remembered the foreman's voice asking, "Know anything about horses?" and his own voice, replying, "I can ride pretty well," and the foreman again: "We'll give you a try, son. The bunkhouse is over thisaway."

Six months of riding herd, patching fences and roisterous pay-day nights in Tombstone had been enough. Now, as he drove through the busy Amarillo traffic, he thought of himself as a young man who had accomplished something.

He had grown up considerably, he had learned a lot about life, as well as ranching and the oil business, and he was having a good time. He had never felt better in his life, in fact; and as this was Saturday, and he had a beautiful new car, he decided it was time to celebrate.

He drove to the best restaurant in Amarillo and ate a top sirloin of gargantuan proportions. Then he set out to find an evening for himself, knowing that no one goes to bed on Saturday night in that country, and that every joint within driving distance would be jumping.

There is, some miles out of Amarillo, a combination barbecue, bar and dancehall, which we will call Mack's Place.

Rory reached Mack's about eleven that Saturday night. He caught the bartender's eye. "Draw one," he shouted, and reached across four shoulders to get his glass of beer. As he turned, someone, a girl, jostled him and about half of the beer jumped out of the glass and splashed on her dress.

SEPTEMBER ISSUE

Who said you can't tell a book by its cover? Every month MODERN SCREEN's colorful, exciting cover is your guarantee that there's a feast of beautiful color spreads and fascinating feature stories inside. Watch for our super-special Gene Tierney cover on the September issue—out August 12.

"Oh Lord, I'm sorry," he said. Her eyes were blazing, but as she looked up at the handsome stranger her fury died away and she smiled.

"Why, it's nothing," she said, in a soft Texas drawl. "Just nothing at all. It was partly my fault." She dabbed ineffectually at her dress with the handkerchief he had given her.

Rory looked at this girl. She was very, very blonde. Her clothes were neat, but also gaudy, because she was a gaudy little personality. "Mmmm Mmm," Rory said. And: "Have you time for a dance or do you have to get back right away?"

"Back where?"

"To your guy."

"Oh." She looked him over once more, speculatively this time, "Why I just happen to be alone tonight. Sure, let's dance."

She did that well, too. Afterwards, she told Rory her name. "Sally," she said, and her voice made it sound like a caress.

For the next month or two, Rory seemed to get into more than his usual number of fights, and surprisingly many of them were over Sally. But it seemed to him to be worth it.

Until, on another memorable Saturday night, he stopped in at Mack's on his way to Sally's, bought some cigarettes, and then decided to wash the dust out of his throat with a beer. It was early, and the bar was almost deserted. Two men he had never seen before were sitting together, talking, and after a moment Rory began to listen idly.

"I just got in town," one was saying, "and went right out to see Sally. She said she's got this guy, a guy she likes, and he don't know nothing about me or any of the others, and she wants me to stay out of the way. How do you like that?"

Rory knocked his glass over with a sudden, involuntary movement. He said nothing. He stood up and walked out to his car. He drove to Sally's house. She was waiting for him, dressed to the eyes, which were sparkling in their frames of incredibly long, mascaraed lashes.

"Honey," she started, but he stopped her.

"Look. That first night, when we met, you said you didn't have a date . . . no ties at all. You came to Mack's with a date that night, didn't you? But walked out on him, didn't you?"

"I told you . . ."

"And all the others. They were guys you knew, guys you'd been out with."

"That isn't so. I . . ."

"Sally," he said, "you're a pathological, perpetual liar. You don't care what trouble I get into, so long as you get what you want." He told her what he'd overheard.

"I just wanted you," she said plaintively. "I've never had anything nice, never known a boy like you . . ."

And the palpable phoniness, the cheap

AN ADVERTISEMENT OF PEPSI-COLA COMPANY

"The three of us alone at last!"

B movie histrionics of her act, made him feel at once sick and somehow, scornfully amused. On a sudden impulse he reached out, turned her over his knee, and spanked her as he would a child. When he set her back on her feet he said, "I hope that did you some good, but I doubt it."

After that, there were a few more years to go on his odyssey, before he returned to his home. In the Spring of 1940, he went to Oklahoma and got a job in the oil fields there. He stayed until, one morning, he blew his top at a foreman who had learned to box in school, just as Rory had.

This time, the outcome was different. Whereupon Rory left abruptly, and went to Mountain City, Nevada, where there was a working mine and a mining camp.

And he stayed there for awhile, until one day . . .

But the story repeats itself. It repeats itself up to 1943—with one outstanding exception. That was when he ate a dish of coleslaw in a restaurant and discovered, too late, that it had a tack in it. The tack punctured part of his intestine and, after it was extracted, he was told that this would always be a tender spot.

The fact is important primarily because it ruined his chances to get into the service when war broke.

In 1943, just before he turned twenty-one, his family wrote asking him to come home for his birthday. It seemed a reasonable request. He was only three days late, in consequence of being held up by a troop train; and in all fairness, he had to admit that home looked wonderful to him again after the open spaces of Arizona and Texas and Oklahoma and Nevada.

He decided to stay. He knew a ranger, Les Gun, who told him of the benefits he might have if he worked for the Division of Forestry in the Santa Cruz mountains. If Rory could pass the proper tests, he could be a truck foreman with five men under him, make $78 a month, with room and board, and have four days off a month . . . fight fires in hot weather, and live in the manner to which he had accustomed himself during the past four years.

Rory took the job.

a visit to hollywood . . .

But in February of 1944, he had twelve days' leave accumulated, and decided to spend it in Hollywood, visiting his great-grandmother and aunt, who lived in Culver City. And whereas grandmothers and aunts are dear and pleasant to talk to, especially at mealtimes, there are other things to do in Hollywood, too.

One of them is horseback-riding over some of the most beautiful bridal paths in the world. One afternoon Rory did this, and on the path stopped to give assistance to a chap whose horse had picked up a pebble; and the chap turned out to be a representative of the Sue Carol Talent Agency who liked Rory and talked him into taking a crack at the movies.

Soon afterwards Sue Carol and husband Alan Ladd gave a dinner party to which Rory was invited, as was Selznick executive Henry Willson, who had previously discovered Guy Madison.

At the dinner party, Henry could not help noticing that strange young man who stood out in the crowd not only because he towered over everyone else but because all the women present kept drifting in his direction as if drawn by a magnet.

"If this is true in this sophisticated group," Henry mused, "what would happen if the American Girl should see him?" Henry thought he could guess.

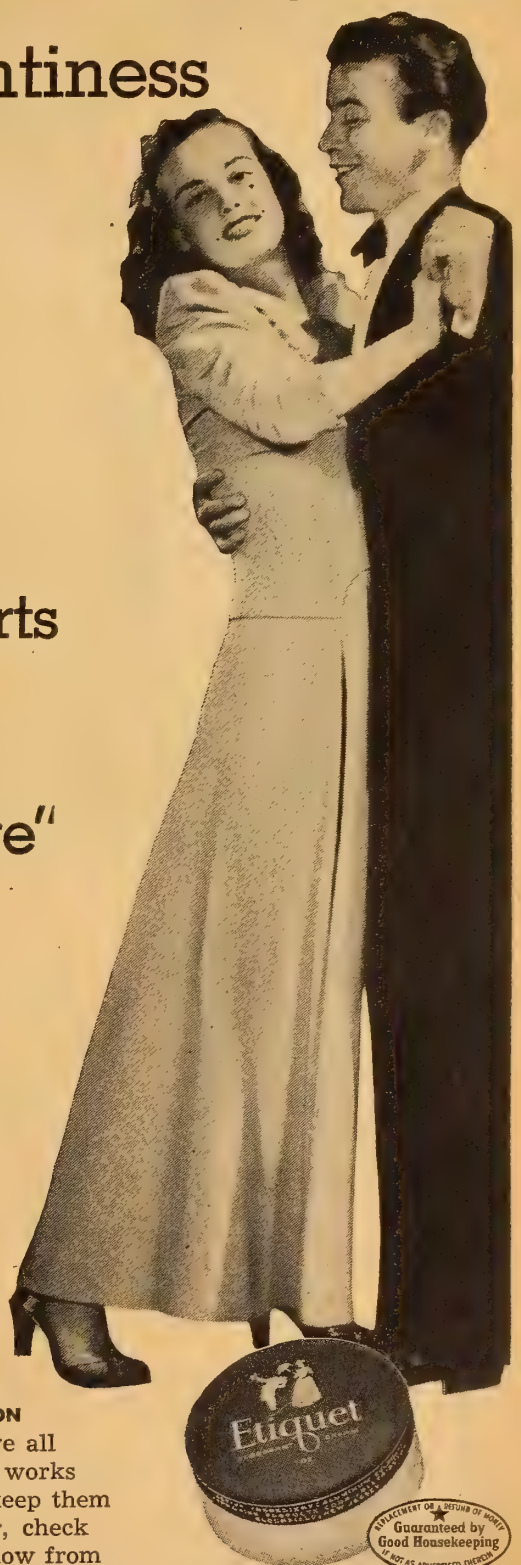
So he said to the young man, "Have you ever thought about being an actor?"

"No," said Rory.

"Well, start thinking about it," Henry told him. . .

Obviously, he has!

How Arthur Murray Girls guard daintiness while dancing!



Lovely experts rely on this "safe-and-sure" deodorant!

SCHOOLED IN GRACE and graciousness . . . Arthur Murray's charming young instructresses take care to keep themselves completely dainty through strenuous hours of dancing.

FOR SAFE-AND-SURE PROTECTION they rely on Etiquet above all other deodorants. Etiquet works effectively, efficiently to keep them free from underarm odor, check perspiration. And they know from experience—Etiquet can be depended upon through hours of active exercise.

SO FLUFFY! SO LIGHT! Etiquet goes on easily—is soothing to the skin. And Etiquet stays moist in jar—is harmless to delicate fabrics. Now you can guard your daintiness as carefully as an Arthur Murray girl—protect your personal charm with Etiquet. Get Etiquet at any cosmetic counter—in 10¢, 25¢, 39¢ and 59¢ sizes.

Etiquet

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Etiquet

The safe-and-sure deodorant

PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK PRODUCTS CORPORATION

1. Rounded Ends

Insertion is easy with Fibs tampons . . . because Fibs have gently rounded ends. You'll see, when you switch to Fibs and find at last—a tampon that's easy to use!

2. "Quilted" Comfort

You scarcely know you're wearing Fibs, because "quilting" makes this tampon really comfortable. You see, quilting keeps Fibs from fluffing up to an uncomfortable size . . . which could cause pressure, irritation or difficult removal. Remember the tampon that's quilted for your comfort: Fibs.

3. "Quilted" Safety

Quilting adds to your peace of mind—because it helps prevent cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal tissues—a Fibs safeguard women always appreciate. Only Fibs are quilted for your safety. So next month, switch to Fibs for internal sanitary protection.

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

WELCOME STRANGER

(Continued from page 35)

new babies," I said, "I love 'em!"

"Well, come on in and look at her," smiled Bette, with the special proud smile only a brand-new mother can beam. "Isn't she a darling?"

Miss Barbara Sherry certainly is—every dainty, beautiful inch of her. She's healthy and pink and perfectly formed, the right length and the right color with a sweet little round face. "Sherry all over," laughed Bette. "You wouldn't think I'd had a thing to do with her. Look at that widow's peak with a hint of red hair, and those sky-blue eyes." Just then Bill Sherry himself walked in and I saw what she meant. I'd met "Sherry" (as everyone calls him), Bette's handsome husband, before, but in a suit you couldn't possibly guess what a handsome Greek god he is. Now he'd run up fresh from the sea with the water still glistening on his mahogany tanned skin.

"It's absolutely sinful for a man to have a widow's peak and eyes like Sherry's," sighed Bette. "But how a girl can use them!"

"She's a lucky baby," I agreed.

"So are we," grinned Sherry.

"Especially me," said Bette. "You know, Hedda, I've wanted Barbara for so many years I can't tell you. I used to think it was awful I hadn't had her when I was twenty-one. But now I realize how perfect it is to have her at my age. When I was a youngster, I was struggling so hard to get somewhere. Now I've got the time to enjoy her."

I looked at Bette. She was reclining on a big, yellow chaise longue in the small guest house where her doctor put her when she begged to come home.

"You look like a baby yourself," I told her, and I meant it. I had never seen Bette look so well. For the first time that I could remember, she was relaxed and rested. She was in trim black satin slacks and a flowered wool challis blouse that made her look gay and young and pretty and she had on ballet slippers that cut her down to little girl size. She looked incomparably happy, and so did Sherry.

maybe next time . . .

I asked him the question I'd asked Bette before, "Are you glad it's a girl?" Bette'd said, "I am. I can't wait to dress her up. She's just what I wanted." Sherry said now, "I wanted a boy, sure, but you can bet I'm head over heels in love with this one." He smiled. He has an even, confident, ingratiating smile, kindly but masculine as a left hook. "Maybe next time there'll be a boy."

"Don't let him fool you," interrupted Bette. "This is my sole production. She's our family." Bette said she wasn't planning on any more children. "Not," she said, "because I had a hard time. I didn't. Right now I feel better than I have for years. But then," she added, "I ought to. It's the first vacation I've had since I was grown up. And for the first time in years, I'm completely happy. It sounds trite, I know, but I'm at peace at last."

I looked at the bronzed man who bent proud looks on his family, and I thought Bette certainly deserves all this: a happy home, a wonderful husband, an adorable child. She's given the screen unsparingly of her talent, ridden it with all her strength and brains. But inside, she's always longed for just this.

"How does it seem, Bette," I asked her, "to have a big handsome man like this around the house?"

She said one word, "Wonderful!"

Bill looked as if he could drop through the floor. "This is where I duck out," he gasped. He fixed the fire before he left, and Bette and I and Barbara, her sister, had a strictly female session, one of the most pleasant and gratifying I'd had in a long time.

Barbara and Bette have always been very close; there's a strong family feeling in the Davis clan and Aunt Barbara is whom Baby B is named for. Barbara said she'd show me around the house later, pinch-hitting for Bette, who wasn't supposed to climb stairs just yet. In fact, grinned Bette, she wasn't even supposed to be home just yet.

"But I simply hate hospitals," she confessed. "It's a complex. I'd barely come out of the ether when I started begging the doctor to come home. He finally said, 'Okay—if you'll do just what you'd do in the hospital.' So on the fifth day, I brought home my nurse and Sherry fixed up this guest house just like the Santa Ana hospital. I haven't even been in the main house yet. I do everything I'm supposed to—only I'm not supposed to see anyone—and here I am talking my head off to you! I feel very wicked. But," she laughed, "frankly, I'm just bursting to talk about that baby of mine. And you're the very first person—outside of the doctor and my family—who's seen Barbara."

"That's an honor I won't forget," I told Bette. "I'm a grandmaw myself, you know," I reminded her, "and I've just got to hear all about it."

I wanted to know a lot of things. For one, why Bette had decided to have her baby in California, instead of at Butternut Hill, her New Hampshire home, as she'd originally planned. The reason for the change in plans, she explained, was that her country place in the East was sixty-five miles over rough country roads to the hospital where she'd planned to go. She decided wisely that it wasn't worth the risk. Something might happen on that all-important, last-minute ride that might have been serious for the baby. Bette hasn't worried a speck about herself from the day she first expected Barbara. "No, I wasn't frightened for a minute," she answered my question. "Not even when they took me to the hospital. I knew from the start everything was going to be all right. I'd waited for it so long. It just had to be all right. Oh," she sighed, "but I'm so grateful she's sound and healthy! I thank God every night for that."

Bette had another reason for having Barbara in Laguna. That's Sherry's home. She knew, too, that she'd resume her screen career sometime this year in California. So she decided to find herself a new home, furnish and fix it up, to keep herself busy during those dull last months before her baby came. She wanted her house all ready to come home to. "So," she explained, "I could enjoy it and the baby together."

It's a dream house, all right, not big, but one of the loveliest I've ever seen on any seacoast. It's fastened to a rocky cliff overlooking Wood's Cove, and from every window there's a breathtaking view of sea and sky. I knew, before "Aunt Barbara" offered to show me around, that, being Bette Davis' house, it would have comfort and charm and homeyness—all her other houses have. I wasn't disappointed. I'd like to tell you about the place where the Sherry family lives.

There's a sweet entrance hall to the main house, paneled in natural wood with old English prints covering the wall. On the right there's a tiny library, covered from floor to ceiling with bookshelves, packed with books. There's a fireplace and a big club chair, a desk and typewriter. Bette uses that as her office, because motherhood won't stop her from running all her own business affairs, you can be sure. I peeked inside this Davis sanctum and then trotted down a hall to the big living room, bathed from windows in the soft North light that artists love. Even this main room is a work room. It's where Sherry paints, up against the huge pane that brings the blue sea right into the room. The walls are covered with his oils—landscapes, marines, still life—beautiful things revealing really superb talent and craftsmanship. On his easel by the window that day rested an unfinished canvas, a winter scene he'd started at Butternut Hill—a lovely view, snowy New Hampshire hills, huge frosted trees, red barn, a church so real it made me homesick.

design for living . . .

Bette's whole house is painted in a lovely restful green. In her living-room the furniture is designed for comfort. By the window there's a great chaise longue, big enough for two to sit in and look at the sunsets. There's a vast easy chair, some antique rockers, and a low, pine coffee table.

The dining room's upstairs, a small, family one, dressed with an old-fashioned walnut table and chairs and the last antique (she loves 'em) that Bette bought before Baby Barbara came. Wide French doors open out to a porch with a wrought iron table and chairs; another porch sweeps around the whole front of the house, and below that a terrace juts out to make a rocky garden splashed with flowers. There's a barbecue patio there, and where the cliffs drop away to the sea, a shallow pool which fills and empties with each tide, perfect for a baby to splash in. Everywhere you look the view is dazzling.

Bette and Sherry's bedroom is on the top floor as their house climbs up the cliff. It's the plainest room in the house—just a huge four-poster bed with barely room on each side for a chair and a chest, and there's a balcony opening out to the sea. The guest room's topside, too, a cottagey,

Lovely hair deserves fine care
. . . use
Du Pont Combs
Whose dream girl are you? Somebody's . . . if you keep your hair shining-smooth with plastic Du Pont Combs. Scalp-gentle, curl-kind . . . yet strong, strong, strong! Rainbow colors . . . buy a complete comb wardrobe. Du Pont quality . . . 10-50¢.
Du Pont Combs
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY
DU PONT

romantic as a rose . . .

your hair . . . like your face . . . needs daily make-up!

Ogilvie Sisters Hair Beauty Aids will lend an aura of enchantment to your hair . . . making the most of your own sweet self. . . .

New! Creme Shampoo $1 & $3.50
*Highlights Hairinse $1
*Creme-Set 75c & $1.25

Special aids for dry, oily hair.

Ogilvie Sisters
HAIR PREPARATIONS
at Dept. and Drug Stores
604 Fifth Avenue • New York 19, N. Y.

Fed. Tax.*

Yodora checks perspiration odor

the SOOTHINGEST way

It's New! Made with a face cream base.

It's Gentler! Yodora is actually soothing to normal skins.

It's Effective! Gives lasting protection.

Won't Rot or Fade Fabrics. Better Fabrics Testing Bureau says so.

No Irritating Salts. Can use right after under-arm shaving.

Stays Soft and Creamy. Never gets grainy in jar.

Economical. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢

You'll adore Yodora! Try it today!

McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

STAMMER? GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 2298, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

Sell CHILTON Christmas Cards

Make BIG MONEY

50 for $1 WITH NAME

SAMPLES FREE

"21 Card" PRIZE CHRISTMAS BOX

25 for $1 WITH NAME

Show friends... neighbors these sensational bargain Christmas Cards. Everyone wants . . . buys. Just show samples — take orders — no risk. Come in beautiful new designs — rich colors — fine papers.

17 Smart Popular Assortments

AMAZING LINE all fast sellers. 21-card "Prize" Christmas Cards, Religious, Fine Arts, Humorous, Everyday, Gift Wraps, retail $1.00. Get "Prize" Christmas assortment on approval. Write today!

Write for Samples

CHILTON GREETINGS CO., Dept. 91-D, 147 ESSEX STREET • BOSTON, MASS.

chintz-draped place with twin beds and comforters of soft beige Chinese chinchilla at their feet. There's no finery, either, in the nursery, a pretty pink one with Sherry's sketches here and there and a beauty of a bassinette where Baby Barbara slumbers when she's not in her mama's lap getting her bottle.

I had a hard time pulling myself away from that nursery, though. Because in an old Spanish chest that Sister Barbara found and bought for Bette, were the baby clothes I knew Bette had the thrill of her life assembling for the great event. I'd asked her if I could see them all—(I get a kick out of baby clothes still)—and Bette said, "Sure you can—but don't look too closely at the ones I made. I do the most appalling things with a needle!" She collected her layette from all over. One prize that took my eye, which came all the way from England, was a short christening robe, with the most delicate lace gathered on the daintiest knitted wool bodice over a lace skirt. A British friend of Bette's sent it, and it's just about the cutest thing I've ever seen. When I told Bette that, she sighed happily. "I can't wait to dress her up in that." Then she laughed, "When my doctor saw all those clothes, he snorted, 'Mrs. Sherry, I hate to disillusion you, but you'll never use them. For the first year all you'll need are diapers and a nightshirt or two.'

"'Don't be too sure about that,' I told him. 'Whether she needs it or not, I'm going to dress her up—just for myself.'" And don't think Bette won't; that's part of the fun of having a doll like Barbara, and Bette's set to enjoy every thrilling experience she's dreamed about for years. But I'll bet a couple of cookies she'll never spoil or pamper that baby, no matter how precious she is to her maw. Her third day home Barbara was right outdoors in the sunshine—at only eight days! One thing Bette Davis has always proved—that she's got good solid sense. With her there's no glamor about this baby, only thankful appreciation. I asked Bette if she'd got any baby-shower loot from the Hollywood glamor girls. She shook her head.

The only shower Bette had was from some of her and Sherry's Laguna Beach friends—not a movie star, incidentally, among them.

something from the boss . . .

But when I asked what Jack Warner, her studio boss, gave her, she hopped up off her chaise longue like a girl athlete, against, I'm sure, doctor's orders. "Just wait till you see," she cried. She opened a dresser drawer, drew out a jewel box and opened it. There on a gold chain were three lovely large pearls, the start of a necklace for Barbara. It was a wonderful gift and showed, I thought, that the people she works with and for think a lot of the gal.

We were on the subject of presents, so I asked Bette, "What did Sherry give you for having the baby?" And I got a typical Davis reply that said just what she felt.

"He gave me the baby," smiled Bette. "I think that's present enough." And so do I!

When the nurse took Barbara away at last for her beauty sleep, I chatted with Bette about her own plans for the future. I'd heard she was to make African Queen next with James Mason—and after that, Ethan Frome. Bette said both were out any time soon for pretty obvious reasons. She couldn't make African Queen because it's an active part which would have her climbing all over a ship and falling into water. Ethan Frome, because it's set in deep New England winter, can't be made until there are tons of snow somewhere. But Bette promised me she'd be back on a Hollywood sound stage sometime in August—if someone can come up with the right story. Even if she makes one then, she'll have been away from theaters for almost two years before it's released. Because the picture she had finished just before she stopped for the stork, Deception, was quickly released.

"Just think," she considered, "by then I'll almost be a new face on the screen. I wonder," she mused, "if they'll like me? You know, Hedda," said Bette Davis, "I've always wondered what it would be like to start all over again. Maybe I'll find out."

"Don't count on that," I warned her. "There are a lot of people who'll have pretty long memories about Bette Davis."

There are a lot of other things that Bette and Sherry and the new family have plans for, namely some trips in their new trailer —a beautiful deluxe job to whisk them off into the woods and mountains. Sherry's strictly an athlete who loves the outdoor life and Bette is pretty determined to share those pleasures with the man she married. Right now the super-trailer's parked on the Warner lot, but they'll get it moving, soon as they can.

oh, to be in england . . .

They've got definite plans, too, to go to England. Sherry's dying to paint the English countryside and Bette, I know, is dying to make a British picture, for she feels that the British are making Hollywood productions look pretty silly right now. Her conscientious brow clouded, though, at her own hopes.

"Tell me, Hedda," she asked, "when you were over there last year, did you feel like you were taking food out of the mouths of the people?"

"I certainly did," I confessed, "every minute."

"That's how I'd feel, I'm afraid," she fretted. "But maybe by the time I can go things will be different."

I don't think things will be particularly different, though, with Bette Davis, as a Hollywood star, since her happy marriage and motherhood. Bette's still a rugged individualist, canny about her career, but I know that around their home there's just one boss—that's Sherry. And Bette loves it. I don't think, however, that Sherry will ever lift a finger to interfere with Bette's Hollywood decisions. That's a thing apart from her home, a thing Bette can take care of beautifully.

In fact, come to think of it, Bette Davis can take care of almost anything else she sets her mind to—even her baby's birthday. I think one of the most typical Davis sidelights on Barbara's birth is that Bette brought her into the world exactly when she said she would! Two weeks before the stork came, a rumor got around that Bette's baby would arrive the very next day. I checked with a friend of mine and Bette's in Laguna.

"Don't you believe it," she said. "Bette's planned on having a May Day baby and that's when she's going to have it—May first."

"Now wait a minute," I protested, "you just can't call blessed events that way!"

"Well," said our mutual friend. "You know Bette—"

Well, that's when Bette Davis had her daughter, May 1, 1947, as advertised. And sunny and sweet as a May day she is, too, that Baby Barbara. As I waved goodbye to Bette, I remembered the name of a certain picture Bette Davis made once. I'm not much of a one for prophetic omens or things like that—but if any star ever made a title come true for herself, it's Bette Davis. Because that's just what she's got today—what she's deserved for a long, long time— All This and Heaven, Too.

POISE, IT'S WONDERFUL!

(Continued from page 69)

and only important luxuries cluttering my existence. How many bedrooms do you need anyhow?"

"One, if single," Myrna said, "one-half if married."

"Married or single, I need a room of my own," Gene told her. Then he turned to her suddenly. "Darling," he said, "what do you say we stop all this nonsense and get married?"

"Well, darling," Myrna said, "I think it's a splendid idea."

Gene looked at his wife-to-be thoughtfully. "Can this be the girl who sixteen years ago felt I was too worldly for her uninvolved tastes and experiences?"

"Not quite the same girl. I've grown up a bit, in your direction. And you have—shall we say 'simplified' in my direction. We are both adult, I think." Her smile was warm, exciting. "And now," she said, her throaty chuckle breaking through, "suppose you tell me more about the house we will have . . ."

During that first year in the tiny Connecticut salt-box he found on the outskirts of the Uplifters' Club in Santa Monica, Gene and Myrna settled easily into the kind of life they had envisioned for themselves.

The house, compact and of classic design, was a focal point of that existence. It had a comfortably large master bedroom, for Myrna, and a smaller room and two baths upstairs; a study, living room, kitchen and service rooms downstairs. Over the garage there were quarters for the two Filipino stewards Gene had brought with him from the Navy.

They furnished the place in comfortable Early American, of course, except Gene's room. "It should have a certain austerity, if you don't mind," he directed. "I'm used to ships' quarters. No frills."

ship-shape . . .

So Myrna put in a boxy single bed that looked like an oversized tailored couch by day, and books from floor to ceiling, and a desk and cabinets for filing papers, and his pet boxing prints. She had brought to him, as a dowry, one of the finest wine cellars in California—although she never drinks herself—and they dug a concrete-lined cave in the hillside behind the herb garden to house it.

It took only a month or so for Gene to discover that the "perfect" wife of the screen was more than that outside the studio.

He discovered that she was a magnificent cook, for one thing, with a library of some 94 cook books and a natural flair for the sort of dishes he liked.

She was never in a hurry, but she was always on time, and while other people spluttered and grew red-faced and irritable she accomplished minor miracles of efficiency calmly and without apparent effort. When, as he often liked to do, he brought home male acquaintances of diversified backgrounds, she always managed to select a menu to their varied tastes.

He found a deep and abiding respect for her as one of the two or three actresses who gave up their careers entirely during the war in order to do a service job. Hers had been a majestic assignment: Assistant to the Director of Military and Navy Welfare, North Atlantic area, for the Red Cross. Her area had covered the entire North Atlantic seaboard.

She told him a little about it, one evening. "I wasn't always as perfectly efficient as I'd have liked to have been," she

"RC tastes best any time!"
says
CAROLE LANDIS
one of the stars of
"OUT OF THE BLUE"
An Eagle-Lion Picture
ROYAL CROWN
RC COLA
X
Z
"IT EASILY WON MY TASTE-TEST!" says Carole. "I tried leading colas in paper cups and found Royal Crown Cola tasted much the best!" Try it! Say "RC for me!" That's the quick way to get a quick-up with a frosty bottle of Royal Crown Cola—best by taste-test!
RC is the quick way to say...
ROYAL CROWN COLA
Best by taste-test

Something NEW under the Sun!
Nutrine SUN TAN PADETTES
The new, SAFE way to sun tan perfection! Just smooth a padette over exposed surfaces of skin . . . it's as easy as powdering your nose!
$1.00* including plastic compact
*plus tax
Other handy NUTRINE PADS
60c and $1.00 sizes
Nutrine Deodorant Pads
Nutrine Ise-Kool Cleansing Pads
Nutrine Hair Lacquer Padettes
Nutrine Hair Lacquer also available in liquid form.
4 ozs. 60c
At better cosmetic counters everywhere
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
MIDDLEBROOKE LANCASTER, INC.
BROOKLYN 11, N. Y. LONG BEACH 4, CAL.

Lovelier Nails with TUFFENAIL
Enhance and glorify the natural beauty of lovely nails . . . Hollywood's own daily nail-care with easy-to-use applicator. Nails stay lovelier longer . . with TUFFENAIL. 25¢
AT ALL 5 AND 10c STORE COSMETIC COUNTERS

EARN MONEY Easy Way
SELL Christmas Cards
New Designs—New Ideas—New Big Values
Get EASY CASH with amazingly fast sellers. Show sparkling new 21 card $1.00 "Feature" assortment. You make up to 50c on every box you sell. Other popular assortments: Religious, Humorous, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, etc. Big value Christmas cards with SENDER'S NAME only 25 for $1.00 up. Amazing profits. No experience necessary. Start earning now. Samples sent on approval.
CHRISTMAS CARDS With Name 25 FOR $1 Up
WRITE FOR SAMPLES TODAY
PROCESS CORP., Troy at 21st St., DEPT. K-8, CHICAGO 23, ILLINOIS

SOFT CORNS Between Toes
INSTANTLY Relieved, QUICKLY Removed
Soft Corns occur only between the toes. To instantly relieve and speedily remove them, use Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads in the special size and shape for Soft Corns (Soft Corn Size). Be sure to ask for them by that name. Sold everywhere.
Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

said. "There was one incident that still bothers me. It was in Atlantic City, in that hospital for amputees and the blind, and malaria cases. In 1945, that was, one day when I took time off for a personal visit to the wards.

"There was that one chap on the sun porch. A big fellow, tall and nice looking, with blue eyes and a butch haircut and a wary smile. 'How do you do, Miss Loy?' he said. He had impeccable manners.

"In the face of his poise I was a little disconcerted. My mind wasn't clicking too well, but I was determined not to bring forth the usual clichés. I said, 'Gosh, where did you get that tan?'

"It was a 'tan' derived from South Pacific diseases and atabrine, of course. He answered, without malice, 'Ma'am, you mean when did I get that tan.'"

They were sitting together on the rear terrace, watching the changing color of the hills and not speaking, relishing the time of day and their lazy mood and the quiet intimacy of the moment. The cat, coal black from nose to tail, came slowly out of the dusk and walked toward them.

This cat was, or at least had been, in obvious trouble. It had not eaten anything much for some time, nor was it decently groomed. It looked battered by fate, and its eyes said as much.

"Don't get up," Myrna said warningly. "You might frighten him. Let him decide."

They sat waiting, and after a moment the cat came up to the terrace and stood there, a tentative look about its ears, and with melancholy tail.

"Kitty?" asked Myrna.

The cat did not budge.

Gene got up, walked over to the cat, lifted it and cradled it in his arms. He stroked his head. The cat began to purr. "I guess he's going to stay," Gene said. "This chap's had a bad time up in the hills. Look, his left ear's gone. And the scars on his back . . ."

"he's" having kittens . . .

Myrna accepted the scrawny animal from him and held it close. She felt suddenly protective. Then, intrigued.

"We've been calling this cat 'he,'" she said.

"Of course."

Gene looked closely at the cat again. "You women," he said.

"We must make her a warm bed, and feed her up. She's eating for two."

"You mean for five or six," Gene said.

While they were fixing a bed in an orange crate for the new cat, Gene said, "I've learned a few things about you since our marriage. It might amuse you if I told you about them."

"Yes."

"Well I've learned that although you have a superb acquired taste for clothes, you pay no attention to them. Where's your wardrobe?"

"Upstairs, silly."

"And you have a few trinkets, to wear when you dress up."

"Yes."

"To be perfectly honest, you have a superb collection of jewels."

She raised her left eyebrow at him. "What're you getting at?"

"Only that I've never seen you in anything but peasant skirts and blouses. You usually look as if you lived in a Mexican fishing village."

"We very nearly do."

"I see. It's a matter of comfort—silly to wear that wardrobe for this kind of a house." He added hastily, "I like what you wear. Naturally. I was only curious."

She sat staring into space, expressionless.

"What's the matter?" he said.

"You know what's the matter?"

"I don't."

"That trade paper. Listing me as a Communist."

His laughter was composed of relief and derision. "Are you kidding?"

"I won't have it."

"No one will pay any attention to that sort of untrue thing about you."

She stared at him in disbelief. "You've lost your perspective, then. People do believe what they read. I'm a liberal. But I'm not subversive. I'm not a Communist. I couldn't be. Nobody can say that about me."

He looked at her silently for a long moment. Finally he said, "You really are sore!"

"Yes," she said, simply, her superb control straining to hold her anger.

"It's the first I've ever seen you really angry."

"Then this is the first time. I tell you I won't have it. I've already called my attorneys, and I'm going to sue."

"I've always said that the great thing you had was excitement with tranquillity."

She spoke quietly. "You turn a neat phrase, Gene, to quiet me. But this anger is more than excitement. I shall sue these makers of false information. Then I can find tranquillity. I'm glad it pleases you."

When, a few days later, the excitement was over, and retractions printed, and The Great Rage of Myrna Loy had been satisfactorily calmed, Gene told her his plan for their belated honeymoon.

"Originally, I thought of India," he said, "but we couldn't get there before the hot weather sets in. How about Cairo? We'll stop at Shepheards. You've never been there and Egypt is fascinating. We can even take a barge up the Nile, if you like. Do you like the idea?"

"It sounds perfect to me," Myrna said equably. "We'll have a lovely time, and I'll ride a camel."

"You don't sound too excited at the prospect."

"I am excited," she told him, "but to tell the truth, I'm so happy here in this little house, with the cat and dog and the lime trees, that I can't jump up and down over the prospect of leaving. Still, it'll be so nice to come back to."

"We don't want to like home so much that we turn into sticks-in-the-mud."

"Why not?" she asked, with a smile that said more than a thousand words.

After a moment he said, smiling back, "Darling, you have me there."

MODERN SCREEN

WHO, ME?

(Continued from page 46)

"H-Heavens no," sobbed Betty. "You were wonderful. I'm crying because I'm —wah-wah—so h-h-happy!"

Larry sighed with relief and looked around the big room. "Say," he exclaimed, "you know where we are? This is the Board of Directors' room! Imagine us," he laughed, "picking this great big place for a family cry!"

Betty dabbed her nose and grinned. "It's a g-good place," she said, "It's a great big occasion."

Since then everything that's happened has proved Betty Garrett right as the rain in her face. It was indeed a great big occasion—for Larry Parks, for Betty and for Columbia Studios, whose inner sanctum that pair pinched for an emotional moment. The Jolson Story went right out from there to bust records in every theater it played, to make more money than a Columbia picture has ever made—$7,000,000 so far and they're betting it eventually rivals Gone With the Wind—to play first runs on Broadway twice for the first time in history, to revive a whole lost era of songs, make a new career for Al Jolson—and to make Larry Parks a 1947 screen swoon combo of Van Johnson, Guy Madison and Frankie Sinatra, all rolled up into one—the new star-of-the-year, whether he believes it or not.

Not long after, Larry rolled regretfully back to Hollywood from his too brief reunion with his across-the-Continent-wife. Betty Garrett got a call backstage one night before the Call Me Mister curtain went up.

"This is the manager of the Radio City Music Hall," a voice explained. "Can you come over tomorrow afternoon? We've got a job for you."

Betty was baffled. "I've already got a job," she protested.

"This one's for your husband," chuckled the Music Hall boss. "And I think you'll like it."

ladder of success . . .

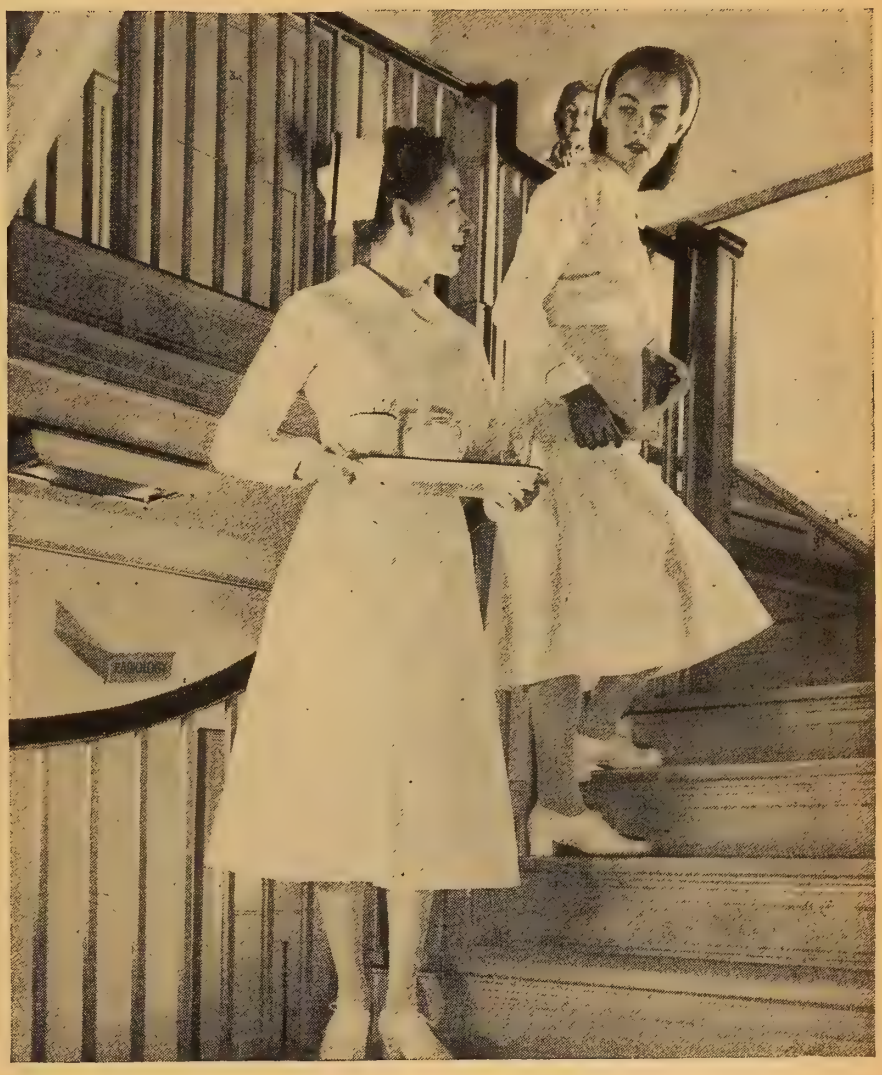
When Betty showed up, they asked her if she'd like to climb a ladder out front and change the letter-lights on the marquee around a little. They read, "The Jolson Story with Larry Parks," at that point. "For the first time in the history of this house," said the manager, "we'd like to switch things around and give a star front billing. Think you can change that to 'Larry Parks in The Jolson Story'?"

"Watch me," grinned Betty, scooting up the ladder.

One of the swellest things about the long-delayed break and success of this dark, wavy-haired Parks guy is that he's had the girl he loves around to share it. Betty's just about the best builder-upper a sensitive fellow like Larry could have. Larry admits that without her he's the type to slip into deep sulks and take a dim view of this and that. "I'm just a mean and nasty man," he smiles slowly. "Betty's the ray of sunshine." Larry's the type to crease a wrinkle in his brow at the height of his triumph and start worrying about what comes next. Even after The Jolson Story proved all his worry warts about it were fakes, Larry couldn't relax. He made Down to Earth with Rita Hayworth and then The Swordsman, a couple of exhausting Technicolors—bang, bang like that—because he couldn't stop after the grinding job of imitating Al Jolson for eight long, night-and-day months.

Right now he's trying to take it easy—for the first time in six years. Sometimes

Who would know better than the girls in white?



101 OUT OF 120 NURSES REPORT NO CHAFING WITH NEW FREE-STRIDE MODESS

Nurses, busy nurses . . . bending, lifting, pushing, stretching . . . WHO could better judge the chafe-free comfort of a sanitary napkin?

Nurses who had suffered chafe with their regular napkin tested a new, improved napkin, Free-Stride Modess. Object: To see if it gave freedom from chafe.

Nurses' verdict: 101 out of 120 reported no chafing with Free-Stride Modess!

The secret of the chafe-free comfort so many nurses found in Modess lies in the clever fashioning of napkin edges.

Free-Stride Modess has extra cotton on its edges—extra softness—right where the cause of chafe begins.

The extra cotton also acts to direct and retain moisture inside the napkin, keeping the edges dry and smooth longer. And dry, smooth edges don't chafe!

So safe, too! Each Free-Stride Modess has a triple safety shield to keep you confident—free of accident fears. On sale everywhere now. Product of Personal Products Corporation.

Walk with comfort! Try the new Free-Stride Modess!

HAPPY DAYS— FREE DAYS— with MEDS!

No "lost days" this summer! Pack a box of Meds tampons in your bag—and enjoy any day!

Meds are different: the "Safety-Well" for extra protection; soft, luxurious cotton; neat applicators—so handy to carry, so easy to use, so simple to dispose of.

Now's the time to discover how marvelous Meds are. Get a box today—or send coupon below for trial package of the new easy-to-insert size with the REGULAR absorbency most mature women need.

Slender MEDS with REGULAR absorbency in the light blue box • De Luxe MEDS with SUPER absorbency in the dark blue box

29¢ for 10 in applicators

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Martha Steele
Personal Products Corporation MS-8
Milltown, New Jersey

Dear Martha Steele: I want to try REGULAR Meds. Please send, in plain wrapper, with full directions, trial package for which I enclose 10¢ (stamps or coin) to cover mailing.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Acceptable for advertising in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

he's happy; sometimes he's blue. He's a black Irishman that way, with a touch of melancholy Teuton. One minute he's glooming that these last two pictures don't measure up to The Jolson Story for him. The next minute, he's full of youthful enthusiasm. "The next," he says, "just has to be better, or they'll say I'm a freak!"

Larry was dead sure he didn't have a chance to get an Academy Oscar at last February's awards. He'd been nominated for Hollywood's highest honor—sure—but so what? He was still a Hollywood nobody, he figured, fresh out of the rut of Westerns, whodunits and the odd quickie jobs he'd been doing for years, where if you dropped dead they kept shooting right over your prostrate body.

Larry had no idea he'd land in the finals until the morning he shuffled out on the front porch in his mules, as usual, and picked up his paper. There he was on the front page, nominated for the best performance of the year. He shuffled back into Betty's kitchen and almost poked the percolator off the stove with the paper. "Hey," he marvelled. "Can you beat this?"

"I'll bet you get it," stated Betty pronto, sparkling sunshine right away.

"Are you crazy?" gasped Larry, shocked at the very idea.

Well, the night of the Award shindig, Larry and Betty, Cornel and Pat Wilde, Glenn Ford and a few close buddies circled a table and everyone was on an expectant edge—except Larry. He felt like a ringer, like a guy in on a pass. All the great star names of Hollywood suffocated the room with glamor and greatness. That had never bothered Larry Parks before, but he'd never been stacked up against it before, either.

They read off the nominations at last and flashed the brief best scenes of each on a screen. All were as short as a wartime shirttail but when Larry's turn came, his scene ran longer than any of the rest. They picked the "Mammy" number and the whole song reeled off. The applause, too, was longer, and louder. For a split second even Larry Parks wondered, against his convictions, if maybe he didn't have a chance. The hearts at his table, especially Betty's, beat like snare drums until the final announcement came, that Fredric March was the lucky winner.

couldn't cut "mammy" short . . .

But on the way out, Betty ran into a Hollywood director who was on the award committee. He grabbed her hand. "Did you see?" he asked. "We left your fellow's scene on longer than anybody else's. Nobody on the committee had the heart to cut that marvelous 'Mammy' number short—it was too good. Frankly," he whispered, "I thought Larry should have won the award."

When Betty told that to Larry he only shook his head. "You must have misunderstood him," he said.

"You're just hopeless!" sighed Betty.

It's taken a flock of potent signs and portents to halfway convince Larry Parks that he's anything extra-special, even after he's seen the evidence piling up: weekly headlines in the trade papers about the whirlwind success of The Jolson Story, floods of critical rave clippings that still pour daily into Columbia, the stacks of fan mail that are putting humps on Hollywood postmen's backs, interviewers hot on his trail with pad and pencil, offers for radio jobs that swamp him every week, urgent pleas from other studios all over Hollywood to star him in the biggest productions with the most glamorous lady stars.

All those things seem a little unreal to a steady working veteran of a pot-pourri of 34 pictures before he ever got this break he'd never dreamed of. In all that time the only fuss that had ever been made about Larry Parks was in his home town of Joliet, Illinois. "Joliet's Own Larry Parks" bannered every picture he made that came to that loyal home town, whether it was a shoot-em-up hoss opera or a two-line bit in an A. But in Hollywood nobody looked twice at the little white bungalow where he lived with his mother. The neighbors dismissed it with "A fellow who acts in the movies lives there, Parks his name is, I believe—ever hear of him?" Everybody has neighbors like that in Hollywood. Larry'd come and gone about his business for the last three or four years without any rubbernecking or curiosity about his private life. He'd trotted in and out of the gate at Columbia, too, getting "Hi, Larry" or just "Okay, Bud."

The first indication that changes had been made smacked him the week The Jolson Story opened in Hollywood, a smash hit from the start. Larry was making The Swordsman then. He breezed in the gate one day as usual. "Good morning, Mister Parks," said the gateman.

Larry stopped. Something sounded funny. "What did you say?" he asked.

"Good morning, Mister Parks."

"Oh," rallied Larry. "Good morning." It sort of embarrassed him. He just wasn't used to that treatment.

And out in Nichols Canyon, where he lives, he was just as slow to comprehend the spotlight that started to beam right away on his front door. The houses along the canyon are just a hop across a concrete ditch conveying a stream runoff from the Hollywood hills. Larry's windows are so close to the street that cars driving by can look right in. But he'd never paid much attention to the cars that whizzed up and down the canyon.

He didn't get it at first when they stopped whizzing, and drove very slowly up and then very slowly down, with people peering at his place excitedly as if it were on fire or something. Sundays it looked like a funeral procession. "What's so funny about this house?" he asked Betty.

"Three guesses," replied Betty. "You."

"Oh," said Larry.

Then there was Norma, the ten-year-old girl next door, and her sudden popularity. Norma had always chased around with the neighborhood kids her age. Suddenly her girl friends seemed awfully old for Norma—fifteen and sixteen. They crowded her front yard. Larry observed naïvely one day, "Betty, why do you suppose Norma

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Last July, while passing by the Paramount Theater, I saw a group of people gathered around a very attractive young lady, asking for her autograph. Suddenly, a man staggered up—visibly under the influence of alcohol. He pushed his way through the crowd, pushed a $50 bill in the star's face, and asked her to sign it. As she did so, he asked the crowd, "Who's she, anyway?" The star glibly answered, "Oh, I'm Ginny Simms." He walked away looking very confused—for the autograph on his $50 bill read, "Dinah Shore Montgomery." Dinah handled that situation very well, I think.

Lucille Mayer,
Brooklyn, New York

likes to play with such grown-up girls?" Betty gave him another of those indulgent it's-time-you-were-told looks. "They don't come to see Norma, you silly," she enlightened Larry. "Who lives next door?"

"Well, I'll be darned!" laughed Larry.

What really made him blush, though, and still does, is a troupe of teen-aged fans who, Larry thinks, must have seen The Jolson Story at least a hundred times. They roll up in a group of jalopies, park out front and serenade him with scenes from the picture. "Hey, Larry," they yell. "What do you want today—'Mammy' or 'The Anniversary Song'? How's about doing the balcony scene?" And they rip it right off, so good that he can't help getting a kick out of it. What makes Larry blush is the fact that the kids remember the scenes more perfectly than he does!

One reason Larry is slow on the up-take with his new glamor is that at heart Larry Parks is just naturally as cautious as a cat. He's got his feet pretty solidly clamped to terra firma and his handsome head's hard to turn. His long years knocking about Hollywood taught him all the answers and made him pretty much proof against the vagaries of movie fortunes. By now, Larry believes it only when he sees it, and even now that he's seeing it, he's not one to go all a-flutter or to sail off into astral spaces. Under his magnetic screen personality, the Parks is the type to shun the spectacular and startling. There's a conservative side to Larry that's almost late George Apley.

Betty's favorite story of her best beau is about the day they went down to the Los Angeles Hall of Records for their marriage license. Betty and Larry's romance was pretty much a case of love at first sight. They'd met long before in New York when they were both kids trying to crack Broadway. But they really got to know and love each other when Larry, producing an Actors' Lab play in Hollywood, cast Betty Garrett for a fill-in part. Betty had just left an Olsen and Johnson show on Broadway for a three months' California vacation, and found herself with time on her hands. So she'd hunted up that select group of Hollywood players who stage plays at the Lab just for the satisfaction of doing something artistic for a change. Larry was a charter member of that gang (who put on some of the finest acting in America these days) and Larry still is. But Betty Garrett took his mind off art the minute he saw her.

caught in the act . . .

Anyway, they both knew what they wanted and right away. So one September morn, almost three years ago now, they dropped into the license bureau to pay their two dollars for that fatal slip. When they signed up, a newspaper reporter sniffed a story in Larry's occupation, "screen actor" and "singer." He started asking questions.

"How long have you and Miss Garrett been engaged?" he wanted to know.

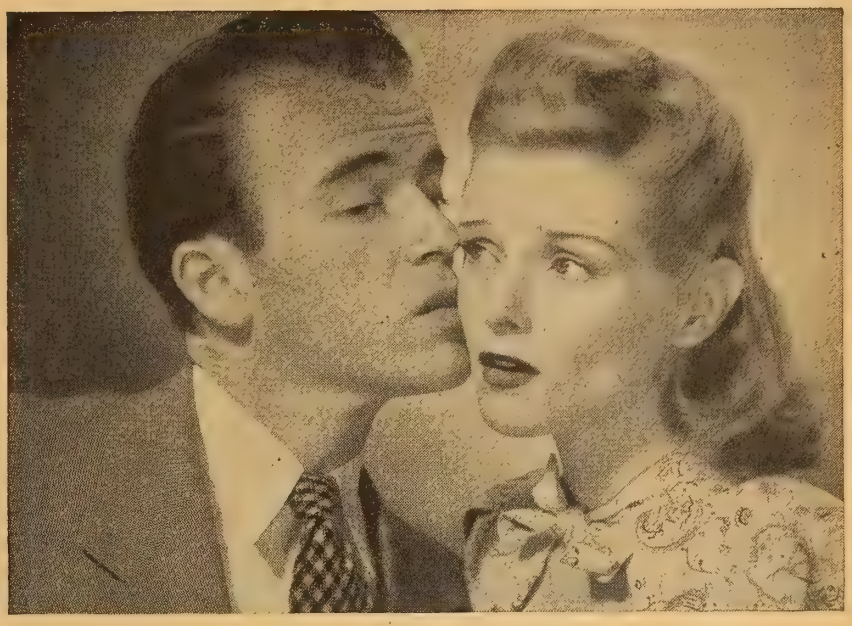
"Five years," replied Larry promptly. Outside, Betty asked Larry why in the world he'd told a fib like that, when they'd really only been engaged one short month.

"Oh," said the proper Mr. Parks, "I didn't want people to think this was a fly-by-night marriage!"

Another good excuse for Larry Parks' calm in the face of Fame's sudden favors is the fact that he bulldogged his break in The Jolson Story so tenaciously and thoroughly that he wore himself to an emotional frazzle making it the great performance it was. Now the let-down is overwhelming, and he admits it robs him of some of the high-riding joy he'd have experienced if he hadn't been so wrapped up for so long in his job.

It's hard to believe, but Larry Parks

Love-quiz... For Married Folks Only



WHY HAVE HIS KISSES GONE COLD?

A. If her devoted husband has suddenly become indifferent, it may be because she has grown careless about feminine hygiene.

Q. Is proper feminine hygiene so important to married happiness?

A. Yes. Intimate daintiness...charm...call for effective douching. That's why so many doctors recommend thorough yet gentle "Lysol" brand disinfectant.

Q. What about salt, soda . . . other homemade douching solutions?

A. Weak, makeshift or homemade solutions cannot compare with the tested and proved cleansing efficiency of "Lysol."

Q. Why is "Lysol" more dependable than many other disinfectants?

A. Because it is effective not only in the test tube but in contact with organic matter. "Lysol" is a proved germ and odor killer.

ALWAYS USE "LYSOL" in the douche, to help you keep the complete feminine daintiness that is magic in a marriage.

Check these facts with your doctor

Many doctors recommend "Lysol" brand disinfectant for Feminine Hygiene. Non-caustic, "Lysol" is non-injurious to delicate membrane. Its clean, antiseptic odor quickly disappears. Highly concentrated, "Lysol" is economical in solution. Follow easy directions for correct douching solution.

For Feminine Hygiene—always use

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

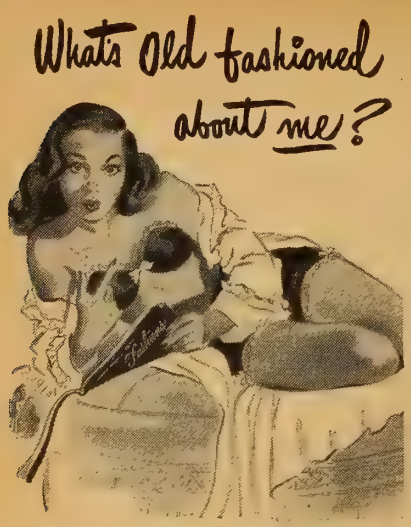
FREE BOOKLET! Learn the truth about intimate hygiene and its important role in married happiness. Mail this coupon to Lehn & Fink, Dept. F-471, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J., for frankly informing FREE booklet.

NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Copr., 1947 by Lehn & Fink Products Corp.



Not your looks—but your old fashioned deodorant! Modern 5 DAY Under Arm Pads stop underarm odor and perspiration better, quicker, longer—1 to 7 days, depending on you and the weather. No spilly liquids, no messy creams—just lotionized pads, gentle, safe, handy. Dab under arms with a pad, then throw it away.

"Cat Odor Away in 2 Seconds"

5 DAY

UNDER ARM PADS

29c, 55c

Also $1 economy size

SELL SMARTEST, NEWEST

CHRISTMAS CARDS

MAKE MONEY Showing CHRISTMAS CARDS WITH NAME 50 for $1 AND 23 ASSORTMENTS

Easy way to earn extra cash every day. Show friends and others sensational Christmas card values! Get orders full or spare time. Personal Christmas cards with sender's name 50 for $1.00 and up. Also make fast money with big-value $1.00 Box Assortments—21-card "Feature," Religious, Everyday, Gift Wrappings, Stationery. No experience needed. Amazing FREE Sample book gets quick orders for you. Get sample sent on approval. Write TODAY.

ARTISTIC CARD CO. 613 Way St., Elmira, N.Y.

For a skin that looks and feels radiantly clean

AMBROSIA

The Liquid Facial Cleanser—at Leading Drug and Department Stores—35¢, 75¢, 1.25

KILLS Athlete's Foot "Bugs" on contact—

Absorbine Jr.

made his first test for The Jolson Story two months after he and Betty Garrett were married. That was two-and-a-half years ago. From that time until the last scene was finished, he thought of practically nothing else. Long months of rehearsals preceded the actual shooting of Jolson, months made longer for Larry because Betty was away in New York, following her own musical comedy career. "But it's just as well she wasn't here," Larry believes today, because he wasn't much of a damsel's delight to live with all that time. He was up at six o'clock and often home at midnight, working Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. He was tense as a watch spring, couldn't half eat, sleep or give anyone a decent answer. He lost weight and his brain whirled with ideas. He thinks it's lucky Betty was 3,000 miles away. "Else," he smiles a little ruefully, "she'd probably have divorced me!"

Except for a week snatched here and one there, between shows when Betty could fly out to Hollywood, the new Parks family had no home life in all that time. Larry lived with his mother in the little white cottage in Nichols Canyon. He wonders how she ever put up with him the whole route, he was so lost in never-relenting problems of how to be Al Jolson better than Al himself. Maybe the most solid tributes he's had about his work, incidentally, came from her and their maid, Ola Thomas, the two who sweated it out with him.

a mother's tribute . . .

Larry's mother passed on last winter. But, happily, before she died, Larry had the pleasure of taking her to see the results of his greatest effort and she had the gratification of seeing her son a star. The Parks family, including his mother, had never been convinced that Larry did the right thing when he abandoned his plans for medicine after graduating from college. They were always, he sensed, just a bit disappointed in him. His dad died while he was still running around Broadway, early in his attempts to get started acting. His mother had watched him make a certain modest place in Hollywood, but Larry felt she never believed he had done right to abandon the M.D. degree. After seeing The Jolson Story, she told him, "I'm proud of you, Lawrence. You were right to take up acting, because I'm sure you were meant to act." That meant more to Larry Parks than anything the critics or millions of fans could ever say.

As for Ola, who had to put up with Larry's mealtime moods all those frantic months, she saw the picture the first day it opened in Hollywood. "Well, Mister Larry," she sighed that night, "I guess it was all worth it!" Which, in its way, Larry Parks considers a mighty high compliment, too.

The greatest happiness Larry Parks has drawn from his success in The Jolson Story is not the fame, because, like I said, he doesn't quite believe that yet, or get impressed; it isn't money, either, because he's still on the same old Columbia contract. His big reward is settling down to some home life with Betty, and having a vacation for the first time he can remember, since he signed a studio contract and went to work.

Larry started Down to Earth during his final two weeks on The Jolson Story, finished that on a Saturday and started The Swordsman the next Tuesday. After that, he flew to New York and brought Betty, her red setter, "Mister," (given her by cast-mates in Call Me Mister) and "Pepper," the blue Persian cat, all back to their Hollywood home. Betty's M-G-M screen contract started, luckily, right at that time. She's not booked for any movies right away, though, so they've both had time on their hands for the past six months and a chance to get solidly acquainted at last. They're both finding it fun playing house like a couple of newlyweds.

Larry came through with a beautiful square-cut diamond engagement ring for Betty, to celebrate the reunion, because, as he explained, "After being married two and a half years, I think it's time we got officially engaged." They hadn't had time before they were married to pick one out!

The Parks' are going in heavy for home life right now because—in spite of their double careers—they're both "hearthbound hicks at heart," as Larry puts it. Larry has always been in Heaven when he's had something to build with his hands. When he was hard up around Hollywood years ago, he teamed with two other pals, carpentered a house and sold it for a tidy profit to keep eating. He's relaxed from the strain of those three straight Technicolors by repairing and staining the roof of his Nichols Canyon place, making shutters, painting the chimney, building a doghouse for "Mister," putting in a back lawn and trimming his 20-year-old avocado trees clean as whistles. Betty painted and wallpapered the whole inside, stitched curtains, got her grandmaw's old china unpacked, sewed drapes and, generally, the pair of householders knocked themselves out so that, on top of their acting letdowns, they collapsed for one whole week of sleep—no kidding!

They started one Saturday night by falling in bed at nine o'clock. The next morning they dragged out at eleven, had breakfast and climbed back at noon to sleep all afternoon. That went on, with variations, for a week. Larry gained five pounds which he had to sweat off the next week at Easton's Gymnasium, but he remembers "The Big Sleep" as a stretch of pure unadulterated bliss.

They haven't been playing possum all the time, of course. Betty, for one thing, has been taking a course in cooking from Ola—concentrating on the specialized care and feeding of Larry Parks. For an actress, she's turned into a pretty nifty pot-and-panner, by the way, whipping up Larry's favorite beef-a-la-Stroganoff and steak-and-kidney pie just like his mother used to. The improvement from their first home-cooked meal the day after their marriage is pretty noticeable.

They had one month together back then, as bride and groom, before Betty flew off to Broadway and a new show. The day

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Some while ago, when my sister was a student at the University of California, she got tickets for a school play, called Rain From Heaven. The play didn't go over very well, but after the last act we went backstage and got the leading man's autograph. Since it was the first stage production I'd ever seen, I went around showing the autograph to everyone, and telling them how wonderful that actor was. Mother, who'd seen the play with us, didn't agree. "That leading man was horrible," was her verdict. But now we both treasure that autograph, because it was Gregory Peck's—and even Mother thinks he's quite good now.

J. R. Smeeton,
Oxnard, Calif.

after their church wedding, Larry chased off to Columbia to work on Counter Attack and Betty rolled up her sleeves to cook THE dinner, their first as Mister and Missus. Well, that night when Larry came home he hopped off his motorcycle like a bee had buzzed under his seat. Smoke billowed from the Nichols Canyon cottage and distressed screams of the Little Woman filled the air. Betty's fried chicken, mashed potatoes and peas were scorched cinders when he arrived to throw open the windows, and Betty was half asphyxiated. She knows better now—lots.

That motorcycle is still the outdoor love of Larry's life. The only way he's blown himself, to celebrate The Jolson Story success, was to send to England for a new Sunbeam, with all kinds of fancy foreign gadgets. Betty's inherited the old Velocette and Larry's taught her to be a pretty good motor buster.

Larry and Betty Parks aren't the frivolous, show-off type of Hollywooders at all, which accounts for why you don't see them crouched over smoky tables around at Mocambo, Henri's and places like that. Betty's an athletic Venus who takes body building at the gym right along with Larry—although in the women's class, of course. And both of them match up on the serious side of their art. Larry has his week nights pretty well filled up as committee member of both the Screen Actors' Guild and the Motion Picture Relief Fund; he's still a board member in the Actors' Lab and the Parks family ambition is to put on a full length play there together, and after that, one on Broadway—Lunt-and-Fontanne style. Their night time pals for coffee and conversation are people like Cornel and Pat Wilde, Lloyd Bridges, Joe Bromberg, Lee Cobb, Kirk Douglas, Jeff Donnell, Glenn Ford, Phil Brown, and the whole Lab gang.

still doing their bit . . .

Betty Garrett has lured Larry into another new big interest in his life—the constructive kind he goes for—entertaining at veterans' hospitals. Betty had the reputation, in New York, of playing more GI hospital wards than any other entertainer on Broadway—and better, too. She's just the type a bedfast GI longs to look on—pretty, peppy, bright and breezy as a May day, and she loves to work when it's appreciated. Betty sings and dances like a dream—but Larry, well, all he's been able to do so far is to chauffeur Betty around, since she's transplanted her hospital circuit to the West Coast. That has been burning him to a crisp. Being no entertainer, all he could do was walk in, grin and say, "Hello, guys." After all, he couldn't play a scene by himself.

While M-G-M has been trying to size up how best to debut Betty Garrett, testing her more times than an allergy doc, she's kept her hand in, studying with a vocal coach. The other day she talked Larry into taking voice lessons, too. For one thing, they want to work up a strictly entertainment song-skit for their hospital audiences. And here's another wistful reason behind Larry's yen to learn to croon.

Everybody knows that Larry didn't sing a note in The Jolson Story. The socko voice was the inimitable Al's. That doesn't take an iota of credit away from what many people consider the toughest, most tediously achieved, incredibly accurate impersonation ever brought to the screen.

But ever since his own acting triumph, Larry Parks has had a yearning—hard to explain—to stand up there and make with the pipes himself.

"Maybe I'm scared," sighs Larry, "that somebody, somewhere, sometime will flash a spotlight on me and ask me to sing 'April Showers.' What would I do then—wire Al Jolson?"

Pity the young wife held back by false modesty...

Often a married woman has no one but herself to blame if her husband starts losing interest—

False modesty may have kept her from consulting her Doctor. Or perhaps she very foolishly has followed old-fashioned and wrong advice of friends.

If only young wives would realize how important douching two or three times a week often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and marriage happiness. If only they'd learn about this newer, scientific method of douching with—ZONITE.

No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO HARMLESS

Up-to-date, well-informed women no longer use old-fashioned, weak or dangerous products.

The ZONITE principle is truly a miracle! No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide for the douche of all those tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues. Absolutely non-poisonous, non-burning, non-irritating. ZONITE positively contains no phenol, no bichloride of mercury, no creosote. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without risk of injury.

Zonite Principle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Chemist

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that it will not immediately kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE that ZONITE kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

Buy a bottle of ZONITE today!

Zonite
FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

FREE! NEW!

For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published — mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MSC-87, 370 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

NEW creamy, white odorless LOTION safely REMOVES HAIR

1. A pleasant white lotion without bad clinging depilatory odor.
2. Not messy. Quick—rinses off easily with lukewarm water.
3. No razor stubble. Keeps legs hair-free longer. Economical!
4. Doesn't irritate normal skin.
5. Removes hair close to skin, leaving skin soft, smooth, and alluring.
6. Country's largest seller, because better way to remove hair.

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair

NAIR 59¢ plus tax

At Drug, Department and 10¢ Stores

Help yourself to BEAUTIFUL FINGERNAILS

Don't be embarrassed by short, broken, thin nails. It's so easy to cover unsightly nails with NU-NAILS. Applied in a jiffy, they bring you long, lovely nails that everyone admires. Can be worn any length and polished any shade. Help you overcome nail biting habit. Set of 10 only 20c at all 5c-10c stores ... and at Sears.

NU-NAILS ARTIFICIAL FINGERNAILS
Dept. 15-K 5251 West Harrison Street Chicago 44, Illinois

Sell Christmas Cards

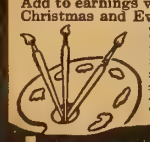
For Those EXTRA DOLLARS You Want

Show 5 NEW SERIES of Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, low as 50 for $1.00. Exclusive designs, big values! Your friends, neighbors order quickly from FREE samples we send you. Big cash profits easy.

50 for $1 WITH NAME

17 SMART ASSORTMENTS

Add to earnings with beautiful, "ARTISTS' AWARD" Christmas and Everyday Assortments. Pay you fine profits. Exclusive variety offers "21 Feature" Christmas Assortment, famous Matched Christmas and Everyday Gift Wrap Ensembles, Holiday Notes, Religious, Everyday, Humorous, 10 other money-makers.



Write Dept. M-10 today for Samples

JANES ART STUDIOS inc.
1225 Clifford Avenue, Rochester 5, New York

JEEPNIC

(Continued from page 40)

A jeep is even better than a horse."

"Hmm," Elizabeth said. "A horse is pretty nice. When would we go?"

"Saturday. I'll tote my gun. There are jack rabbits—"

Elizabeth, who is anti-hunting, sniffed. "I'll take my paints—"

And MODERN SCREEN, tipped off a couple of days later, said, "We'll take a photographer—"

Saturday came up hot and bright. The sky was blue, lunch was in a basket, and the jeep ate up the miles from Hollywood into the desert.

The kids drove through the giant Joshua trees on the very edge of the desert, and suddenly they stopped, and stared in front of them.

"There must be a thousand acres of poppies," Elizabeth whispered. "Out of that old yellow ground. And look at the hills—all white!"

Marsh nodded. "Those are the Sierra Polonas. Come on, let's unload."

But she was already gone, flying through the fields, and he grinned to himself, and loaded the stuff out of the jeep onto his back, and followed her more slowly.

She'd found a little patch of purple, and she was studying it gravely. "That's lupine, I think—and that yellow, that's wild mustard, and the white stalks on the hills are Yucca."

Marshall flung down the bed roll, and parked. "You must have read a book, small fry."

She parked beside him. "I did," she said with dignity, "and I'm smart, besides." She was pulling off her shoes. "I want to feel the grass with my bare toes."

Five minutes later, she howled with pain.

"You're smart, huh?" said Marshall. "How come you don't know enough not to step on a cactus?"

She put her shoes on, chastened. "I forgot it was desert ground. Can we eat now?"

After lunch. they talked lazily, until Elizabeth pulled a poppy. "I think I'll trim our basket."

Marsh sat bolt upright. "No, no, no! They charge you a million dollars and send you to jail for that. It's against the law!"

"You're kidding," Elizabeth said, plucking another poppy. Then she took a look at his face, and decided he meant what he said.

She pinned the two flowers in her hair, got out some paper, and started to rough in a sketch of the foothills.

Every so often, Marsh would take a drink from the water bag, and slop water all over his chin. Then he'd look amazed.

"You know what, Liz? The air evaporates the water on my chin—it feels like ether."

Liz giggled. "If you poured some on your head, I could call you numbskull."

Sighing, he settled back. "You're a mean child."

It was much later, when the sun was fading, that they strolled to the jeep.

Elizabeth's light laugh spread in the air. "And you didn't kill a single rabbit," she was saying smugly.

PAIR OF ACES

(Continued from page 43)

topcoat bulges indicated three loaded automatics.

The men kept on looking.

One chewed coldly, pensively on a dead cigar. He stared around the room. "Casing the joint," it's called in detective fiction.

Somebody was going to die.

Young Mr. Stewart knew it. So did young Mr. Fonda. Neither one was fond of the idea.

Then the tallest of the gangster trio turned on his heel and walked out. So did the other two heels.

"I think," Jimmy said, "we can start breathing again."

Henry said, "Yeah."

Up from the street roared the nasty bark of an automatic doing business. A machine gun burped harshly.

Henry Fonda found himself staring down into the dimly lit street fourteen floors below. Jimmy was at the other window, which needed washing.

"Those three guys who were just here," Henry mumbled, "have found what they weren't looking for."

Jimmy said, "Yeah."

Three sightless pairs of gangster eyes stared unwinkingly up toward the place to which they weren't going.

That's life in the Big City.

It's also death.

And drama.

Jimmy Stewart and Henry Fonda have seen a lot of that, before and since. A lot of fun, excitement, romance and some hell around the edges—Stewart in the skies over Europe and Fonda in the South Pacific.

Getting down to cases, Hank Fonda knew he was going to be an actor. He found that out while studying journalism and working around the Community Playhouse in Omaha. He built scenery, ushered, brought the curtain up and down. He understudied the actors, and every time he walked on the stage, he was scared to death.

"They finally began to pay me," Hank remembered. "I guess I earned about $500 in a year, but I figured if I could earn one dollar in the acting business I could do better some day."

He did better, going the stock player route through Washington, Baltimore and East Orange.

This was in 1928. And Hank, who went from high school in Omaha to the University of Minnesota, from which he had been graduated, soon learned that it isn't only Princeton graduates—like Stewart—who can almost starve to death.

Hank didn't know Jimmy then.

Jimmy was still at Princeton, making like an undergraduate.

Hank latched on to the University Players Guild. He did summer stock at Cape Cod. Did it good, according to the local reviewers.

Broadway was warming up a little when Jimmy and Hank finally met.

The famous Princeton Triangle show hit New York for its annual performances at the Metropolitan. Hank was out front with Josh Logan and "Windy" (Bretaigne Windust) a couple of other guys with theater in their corpuscles.

They liked the show.

One young fellow was darned good. He

FRECKLES

Write for FREE BEAUTY SUGGESTIONS

We will send you a delightful story about Stillman's Freckle Cream. It is not only a freckle bleach, but also a beautifying cream. It makes skin look lighter—feel softer, smoother. Over 30 million jars have been purchased by enthusiastic users! Only 50c at all drug and cosmetic counters. A postal card brings this amazing story of beauty to you! Use according to directions

THE STILLMAN CO., Box 2, Aurora, Ill.

Stillman's FRECKLE CREAM 50¢

Here is Thrilling New Hope for Millions...

Dry HAIR

Just try this SYSTEM on your hair 7 days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of attractive hair that so often captures love, romance.

MARVELOUS RESULTS when scalp and hair conditions are normal and the dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Just try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days, let your mirror prove results. Send $1.00. (If C.O.D. plus postage).

Fully guaranteed. Your money back if you are not delighted.
JUEL CO., 4727 North Damen, Dept. J-603, Chicago 25, Ill.

PULVEX "DDT" FLEA POWDER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If Defective or Not As Advertised Therein

Kills the fleas Quickly! Keeps others off for Days.

Pulvex also comes with ROTENONE, the original formula. BEST FOR CATS.

Either Kind 25¢ & 50¢

SELL PERSONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1

MAKE MONEY EASILY

Show big value Personal Christmas Cards, 50 for $1 and 25 for $1 with name imprinted. Friends, others buy readily. Big profit for you. Also sell Christmas Card Assortments, Everyday Cards, Stationery, etc. — at 60c and $1.00 retail. No experience is necessary. Write today for FREE Personal samples.

FREE SAMPLES SOUTHERN GREETING CARD CO. McCall Bldg., Dept. L-21, Memphis 3, Tenn.

WHY SUFFER

FROM MISERY OF SIMPLE

PILES?

● Here's a single soothing medicine to speed relief from tortures of simple piles. It's amazing Pazo*. Acts at once to relieve pain and itching—soothes inflamed tissues—lubricates dry, hardened parts—helps prevent cracking and soreness—reduce swelling and check minor bleeding. The help you get is wonderful!

So, to speed relief from itching and pain of simple piles, get Pazo*. Your doctor can tell you about it. At all druggists' in tubes with perforated pile pipe for simple, thorough application—also tins and suppositories.

Pile Ointment and Suppositories.*

fooled around with an accordion and made some jokes.

This was Jimmy Stewart.

"I'd like to have you come along with us to Cape Cod this summer," Logan told Stewart, backstage.

"Ah-awr," Jimmy replied in that unspellable drawl which to this day is his prelude to a decision. "Sure. Sure. I'd like that."

Jimmy shook hands with Hank and said he'd see him at the Cape.

He didn't. Hank had himself a job in a road show, and he was working hard at the acting business, while Stewart, not convinced that he could take himself seriously, turned in a couple of good jobs.

That winter, Josh Logan said, "Four guys could live pretty reasonable if they pooled their money."

Hank Fonda agreed.

When he moved into the apartment and sat down, Jimmy Stewart came in and draped his lanky frame in another chair.

I'm not absolutely sure of it, but, think one or the other of them said, "Hello."

Talking too much is a bad habit Stewart and Fonda have not fallen into.

Both of them hate quotation marks.

Henry broke down into a positive rash of words, though, when I interrupted the brick work he was doing on the front porch of his ranch home on Tiger Tail Road.

"I remember," Hank said, "that Jim would land a small part in a show. He'd have three minutes on the stage, speak four lines and get five laughs. The show would run about ten weeks and fold. Jim would say he guessed he'd go home. We kept trying to talk him out of it.

"I figured the theater would get inside him, and eventually it did. He went into Divided by Three. Windy, Josh and I went to see the play on opening night.

Afterwards, we went backstage, and it was Windy, I think, who said:

"Why, you secretive so-and-so! Where have you been hiding that talent? Don't you ever say you can't act."

fonda won't talk . . .

Fonda finished digging out the last brick. We went inside the house and located a couple of davenports to hang our legs over.

"You guys must have had some interesting romances in those early days, what with all the show girls floating around Broadway," I suggested. Hank didn't bite on that. He went on as if I hadn't spoken. "I meant to tell you—Stewart and I were never on the stage together. I figure that was lucky for him. When the role is right I can pound home a pretty good job, but that guy is class all the time." Hank got a faraway look in his eye, and then he said—

"I think it's interesting that Josh Logan, who was doing everything but sweep out the houses learning to be a director has come up this year with three smash hits on Broadway—Annie Get Your Gun, Happy Birthday, and John Loves Mary. Windy (Bertaigne Windust) has, among other things, done Finian's Rainbow, Life with Father and Arsenic and Old Lace. Jim and I absorbed a lot of experience and ideas just by associating with these fellows, who later began to contribute so much to the theater. I don't want to sound arty, but you see what I mean.

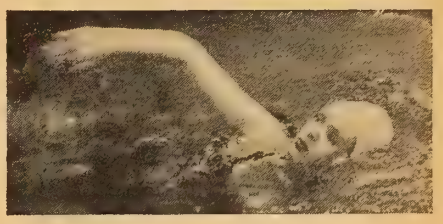
"We finally wound up with the Madison Square Hotel as our last Broadway headquarters. Those were good times. We'd plan a dinner before we took off for the theater. Then we'd fall to and cook it when we got back and polish the whole thing off with a cold bottle of beer."

"Did Stewart do the cooking at the apartment?"

"Seldom. Confidentially, I think he's a lousy cook."

"That's right." Stewart loomed up

Of course you can . .



go in swimming . .

with Tampax!

WHY ENVY OTHERS at that certain time of the month? You can wear Tampax in the water on sanitary-protection days and no one will be the wiser! This summer at any popular beach, you are almost sure to find many women who go in swimming on "those days"—wearing Tampax without any hesitation whatever. . . . There is nothing about Tampax in the slightest degree embarrassing (or offending) under bathing suits wet or dry.

WORN INTERNALLY, Tampax discards belts, pins, outside pads—everything that can possibly "show." Perfected by a doctor, Tampax is made of highly absorbent cotton compressed in modern applicators for dainty insertion. The hands need never touch the Tampax. No odor forms. There is no chafing with Tampax. Changing is quick and disposal easy.

COMES IN 3 SIZES (Regular, Super, Junior). Sold at drug stores and notion counters in every part of the country—because millions of women are now using this newer type of monthly sanitary protection. A whole month's supply will go into your purse. The Economy Box holds four months' supply (average). Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association you DO NOT need to buy EXPENSIVE SHOES to safeguard your Toddler's feet

Why?

No shoes at any price are better than sensibly-priced WEE WALKERS for a toddler's normal feet. Cost less because they are made by America's largest exclusive baby shoe manufacturer, and sold through mass distribution stores. The best safeguard is to not let baby grow into and out of shoes. Buy the correct size NOW and change to a larger size IN TIME.

Ask your doctor about WEE WALKERS . . . see them . . . compare them . . . try them . . . in Infants' or shoe department of stores listed. Birth to size 8.

COMMENDED from PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE

W. T. Grant Co. S. S. Kresge Co. J. J. Newberry Co.
H. L. Green Co., Inc. I. Silver & Bros. Scott Stores
McCrory Stores Schulte-United Charles Stores Co.
Metropolitan Chain Stores, Inc. Kinney Shoe Stores
F. & W. Grand Grand Silver Co. McLellan Stores
Montgomery Ward & Co.

Smooth One-Piece Tongue:

Stops pressure on nerves, muscles, blood vessels caused by sewed-on tongue, still used on some shoes selling at top prices.

FREE: Pamphlet, "Look At Your Baby's Feet." Valuable information on foot care, and scale to measure size needed. Moran Shoe Co., Dept. M, Carlyle, Ill.

WEE WALKER Shoes FOR Wee WALKERS

Women-Earn Money-Sell Yours-truly nylons

AMAZING NEW FIT SERVICE

WRITE TODAY . . . ask for FREE outfit with sample stocking. Enjoy taking orders for YOURS-TRULY Nylon Hosiery. Sensational Individual Customer Fit Service to fit every type of leg: — short, long, extra long, slim, stout, and average. Earn money of your own. No experience needed. Write fully.
AMERICAN HOSIERY MILLS, Dept. G-110, Indianapolis 7, Ind.

QUICK RELIEF FOR SUMMER TEETHING

EXPERIENCED Mothers know that summer teething must not be trifled with—that summer upsets due to teething may seriously interfere with Baby's progress.

Relieve your Baby's teething pains this summer by rubbing on Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion—the actual prescription of a famous Baby Specialist. It is effective and economical, and has been used and recommended by millions of Mothers. Your druggist has it.

DR. HAND'S TEETHING LOTION
Just rub it on the gums through the early American dining room that leads into the Fonda living room. He looked at me with a certain severity.

"Talking about somebody?" he asked.

"Yeah, you. I caught Fonda in a weak moment, after John Ford whipped him through The Fugitive, and I'm making him talk."

"The Fugitive," Jimmy volunteered, "is going to be one hell of a good picture. As long as we have to go through with this you'd better tell your editor not to cut out The Fugitive credit. I'd like to take direction from John Ford some time."

"And I'd like to work for Frank Capra," Fonda broke in.

"You guys never get together, do you?" I asked.

"Sure," Stewart said, "There's a little thing called A Miracle Can Happen. We're in that one together. First time."

Between them, in characteristic short takes, they told me about it. It seems that for years Jim and Hank have been whipping up skits. They've always hankered to do a thing about musicians.

Musicians, it seems, are never shown on the screen quite the way they are. As Fonda explained it, the movie audience looks AT the musicians. They don't sit down in the band and get a load of what these characters are really like.

So along comes a deal for them to do a picture together.

They sat down and mapped out a story, roughly. Then John O'Hara went to work on it. It wound up as the darndest, slapstick comedy that's come down the pike for years.

After the two finished explaining their combined effort, Stewart got up to leave. He tossed a parting shot—

"I always knew that when we got around to doing a picture together, it would be real art."

When Jimmy had gone, I went to work on Hank again.

"Tell me about your Hollywood break," I urged.

"Oh, that! You know how the breaks come when you least expect them. I got a call from my agent in February, 1935. He wanted me to fly right out to Hollywood to meet the producer, Walter Wanger. I wanted to stay in Omaha; but he told me I could go right back.

fine how-do-you-do! . . .

"I went to Hollywood and met Walter Wanger at the Beverly Hills Hotel. He didn't know me, and certainly I didn't know him. To me, he was a perfect stranger; and when he stuck out his hand for the introduction, his first words were: 'I'll give you $1,000 a week.'

"That really floored me. We shook hands on the deal and I went back to New York. June Walker suggested me then for a role in the stage play, Farmer Takes a Wife. At the same time, Jim got Page Miss Glory. As a result of Farmer, I got my first screen offer. It was from Twentieth Century-Fox, and they wanted me to play my lead role in their movie version of Farmer."

Stewart's break came four months later, as the result of Billy Grady's insistence that Metro sign him. Jim got off to a somewhat slower start at $250 on a three months' option deal, but after playing a small part in Rose Marie, with Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, he kept moving on up steadily.

One day Hank Fonda came home from work to find Stewart sitting in his apartment. Jim hadn't wired him. He never does wire or write, unless it's to his family.

They figured it would be nice to have a house, so they rented a Mexican hacienda from Hal Rosson. $200 a month it cost them, and neither one of them could get over the extravagance. They had a couple for servants and referred to them as "the staff."

As usual, the front door was always open. The old friends from Broadway migrated out one by one—Logan, Johnny Swope and all the rest. It was good living, while it lasted, but a sudden turn of events doomed the bachelors' paradise to short life.

Hank went to England to do a picture. He met the lovely Frances Brokaw and spent some time wondering whether he'd lost his mind or his heart. He settled on the latter and seven days later they were married, with old friend Josh Logan as the best man.

Jimmy was tied up in a picture and didn't get there for the big event, much to his disappointment.

He's more or less a part of the family though. When Colonel Stewart returned from the wars to take up the business of being Jimmy again, his own home in Brentwood had been rented to friends and Jimmy just couldn't turn them out.

One day Hank walked around the swimming pool and into his guest house. Jim Stewart was sitting there. He looked up at his long-time friend and said, "Looks like you've got a boarder for awhile. What time is dinner?"

Jim stayed several months and resumed his vast friendship with Hank's children, Jane, aged 9, and 7-year-old Peter.

"Is Jimmy thinking of getting married?" I asked Hank.

"You know he'd kill me for venturing an answer to that one," Hank said. "I think he'd like to. But he's wary."

That he is. Wary, and sensible. Personally, I think Jimmy Stewart would rather not marry an actress. He's seen too many marriage failures, and he plays his loves and loyalties strictly for the long haul.

One of these days, he's liable to show up at Hank Fonda's front door with a girl who's never been mentioned in any gossip column.

"Hank," he'll say, as that slow grin begins to ease across his face, "I want you to meet Mrs. Jimmy Stewart."

I can't think of a better climax.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

About six years ago, at a dinner-date at the Coronado Hotel, I was going up the steps to the powder-room, when a stunning girl stepped aside to let me pass. Since she wore a half-smile and I have a tendency to forget names, but not faces, I said, "I know we've met, but I just can't think of your name." With a twinkle in her Irish eyes, she replied, "It's Maureen O'Hara." Though her very sweet manner did much to ease my embarrassment, it returned twofold when I returned to my table and noticed that for the greater part of the evening, Miss O'Hara had been sitting at the very next table. She was with another beautiful girl who, for a long time had been carrying on a telephone conversation (over one of those plug-in phones they have in restaurants) with someone they called "Dizzy." The girl who was talking to "Dizzy" was none other than Lucille Ball—and the party on the other end of the phone was, of course, Desi Arnaz! Celebrities at my elbow, and I turn my back!

Mrs. Mercedes Dames,
Village of St. John, Mo.

STRANGE WOMAN—By Eric Bishop

(Continued from page 100)

schoolgirl's. She is 125 pounds on her bathroom scale, with everything where it should be. She wears suits, her favorite rig, without any girdling gear, and buys hard-finished suitings at men's tailors. Joan has bi-weekly massages when she works, but not for her figure, just to relax—if that is possible. All in all, everything most gals past thirty wistfully sigh for, Joan has in the physique department because she burns up her talent.

Joan tackles everything with the same whirlwind determination that marks every phase of her life and interests. She always did give the swimming pool in her garden a beating, which doesn't hurt that streamlined figure any—and this year she decided it was high time she played good tennis. Eleanor Tennet, the former champ, is "Teach" to her, and after fourteen lessons, she gave Joan a gold pin of a lady player swinging a racket wildly. "You are one of the club now," said Teach. "You have earned it—but I'm a wreck."

The only casualty she suffers outdoors is persistent freckles (she's a redhead), and her only sporting weakness is her tender heart.

One fall Joan was up in the New Jersey Poconos decked à la Abercrombie & Fitch from head to toe. She had been asked on a pheasant shooting party and sallied forth bravely. But when she flushed a cock ringneck and got a bead, she just stood there. Her host was puzzled.

"You had him," he protested. "Why didn't you pull the trigger?"

"I couldn't," Crawford confessed, "he was so darned pretty."

Like most actresses, Joan Crawford is emotional in unpredictable ways, and as sentimental as a southern belle. She keeps all her old love letters tied up with different colored ribbons. She's like a kid about birthdays, whether around the studio or her own house, and spends half her time consulting a little book of dates.

Joan had a precarious home life as a girl, and that's why her home and the life there hurts her over the heart today. She has lived in the same house for fifteen years, which is staffed today by a cook, a nurse, a gardener, and a cleaning woman, who come by the day. Joan checks on every department pretty thoroughly, but nobody seems to mind.

But the real bosses of Joan Crawford's Brentwood house are her two blond beauties, Christina, 7, and Christopher, 4. Joan has had them since they were ten days old, and her heart is pretty well split in half in their direction.

To get them off to school (Chris is in kindergarten, and Tina goes to Public School), Joan dives out of bed at the terrifying hour (to an actress) of 7:00 a.m. They have breakfast together, and a ride in Joan's Cadillac to school. When she's not acting, Joan brings them home for lunch too, and, unless there's some beau or other coming around, it's a date with the kids for dinner at six, and a walk up the road in the dusk. Sunday, beau or no beau, Joan drives her joys to Sunday School, and then a picnic.

Joan doesn't get around nearly as much in Hollywood's night life as she used to. Sometimes a couple of weeks slip by without her leaving the house at night, but then she'll agree to go out with some superb dancer like Greg Bautzer, and she will have quite a fling, because the early love of her life, dancing, is still tops with Joan for indoor sports. She is as good as ever with one slight exception—where they used to have to usher her out of places like the Grove and the Troc, now a Crawford date knows that at 10:30 the latest, he pays the check.

The other night she made a rare appearance at a large Hollywood cocktail and dinner gala. Joan likes one daiquiri before dinner—and that's all. This affair turned into a prolonged drinking bout, while Joan nursed her lone daiquiri and got hungrier and hungrier. Dinner finally was served around ten, and when it was over Joan promptly rose.

"Excuse me," she said.

She headed toward the Powder Room, but she didn't go there. She went home.

Joan talks dreamily of a farm someday with cows, and chickens and horses and all that—a real one—and she wants it not so much for herself as the kids. She is always planning trips, fishing excursions in Canada, yacht cruises in South America and such. Some of those "vacations" she threatens hypocritically knee-deep in a picture, but knowing Joan Crawford, I would say her luggage will just gather dust, and it will be strictly a map tour as long as there is a picture around the corner to be made; and there is one to be made, Daisy Kenyon, that Joan's itching to start.

That's a love story for Joan—a welcome change after so much character drama. But it's coming at a time when there is nothing to match it in her private life. That's sad but true, Joan will tell you, although, as in her screen career, she is not looking one foot backwards for romance, but straight ahead with the same expectant Crawford eagerness. No one can say that Joan Crawford hasn't had enough unhappy endings to her own private love stories, but they haven't nipped her confident faith in romance one particle.

The other night, Joan was dressing to go out and trying to explain at the same time what had happened to a member of the family, one "Pupschen," a dachshund, lately deceased. As usual, her shadows, Christina and Christopher, were kibitzing on the party process, begging to button a button or spray on some of her favorite Zenza perfume. "Pupschen" was Joan's pet for fourteen years, and the kids had known him all their lives. It was a solemn moment. "Pupschen" was blind and old and he had to be put to sleep. Joan explained all this to Christina.

"I am going to bury him," she said.

Four-year old Christopher missed the word.

"Who are you going to marry, Mommy?" he demanded.

"Nobody, Chris," replied Joan, "nobody at all."

But she wasn't telling the truth. Some day, Joan hopes, when the right man comes along, she'll marry again.

HONEY CHILE—By Rosemary Layng

(Continued from page 62)

he crushed his cigarette, and said, "This is ridiculous! I can't understand one word you're saying; you couldn't possibly do a test, unless you had an interpreter." He kept looking at her.

"But the face," he said. "And the figure—they don't need any translation. We'll do a straight interview test." Which is just what they did.

She was sitting in a chair, dreaming, the day Beatrice came in with the letter. It was from the Coast, and the envelope looked impressive.

Slowly, Ava ripped the envelope, and then she sat up straight.

"A contract, it says here. Three months, fifty dollars a week!"

Already, Beatrice had their suitcases in the middle of the floor. "If you're not too tired, honey," she said, "start packing."

Ava wasn't too tired, for once . . .

For a solid year, in Hollywood, she did mostly extra work, and concentrated on losing her Southern accent.

She married Mickey Rooney and quit work for a year and a half.

A couple of days after the wedding, one of Ava's sisters back home had a baby, so the boy was named Michael.

Michael and his Aunt Ava have never met each other formally, but the family has shown him lots of pictures.

Last time Beatrice was down visiting, Michael approached her with a movie magazine. He pointed to Rita Hayworth. "Is this Ava?"

Beatrice shook her head. "No, dear."

He went on to the next actress. "Is this Ava?"

Another "no" from Beatrice.

Michael frowned. For several minutes, he turned the pages deliberately, and finally returned to Beatrice in triumph. He had a stocking ad in his fist—it was nothing but two legs, and a caption. "This I know is Ava," he said proudly.

Ava got to be friends with Peter Lawford when she was married to Mickey. Mickey and Pete were old pals, and Peter'd come over to the house and sit around, and one night, when the radio was going, he asked Ava to dance.

They took about three steps, and he stopped in surprise. "Hey, you're good!"

She laughed. "Hey, you're better."

Neither of them has ever had any reason to revise that first snap judgment.

After Ava split up with Mickey, if you remember, she went back to work.

One more year, and she was in love again. She married Artie Shaw, and stopped working for the second time.

When that marriage broke up, in 1946, she returned to M-G-M, where they were beginning to regard her as a transient guest. Now that she's really going places (she could have been there and back, if she'd tried), the studio's big problem is to keep her from falling in love.

With Ava, love comes in the door, and Ava turns around and goes on out with it. Out of M-G-M, that is.

She's too busy to fall in love right now, she reassures Burnsie, her anxious dramatic coach, and Burnsie just looks wise.

Actually, she is pretty busy. She gets up at six o'clock in the morning, and bitterly resents it. She trots on over to M-G-M, and maybe she does a scene with Clark Gable, for The Hucksters. The resentment stops there.

She's also started Singapore, at Universal, with Fred MacMurray, and she plays a great lady, which is a little out of her line.

A TRULY FRESH LIPSTICK

SIX SMART SHADES in gold-hued metal jewelry-style cases.

$1.00 PLUS TAX

A new lipstick that is DATED—to assure you it is truly FRESH, with oils and color unimpaired. Goes on, stays on, better. The date is on each box.

Forever Amber
Lipstick – Perfume – Cologne

Kathryn, Inc., 540 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago

TIRED EYES THRILL TO SAFE EYE-GENE

Relieved in SECONDS!

Wonderful EYE-GENE! Just two drops in your eyes that are tired or irritated from wind, glare, overwork, lack of sleep or smoke—will relieve, rest, refresh, clear them in seconds. Use it every day. EYE-GENE is positively harmless. 20¢, 60¢, and $1 in handy eye-dropper bottles at Druggists everywhere. Insist on EYE-GENE!

Weary, irritated one minute . . .

Relieved, rested, cleared the next!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

High School Course at Home — Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. HC14, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

MAKE MONEY SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS

With Biggest Line of Money-Saving Fast Sellers

Start Earning Now—Full or Spare time. Show greatest value Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 for only $1. Rich colorful designs, glorious papers, finest quality at this low price. Others at 25 for $1.00 and DeLuxe line. No experience. Also make big money with 22 Big Value Assortments!

Smashing sellers in Christmas & Everyday Boxes. Many Economy Assortments to sell at 50c retail. Gift Wrappings to sell for 90c. 12 new $1.00 assortments. Earn cash NOW! Send for samples FREE today.

50 Christmas Cards WITH NAME $1

FREE SAMPLES

BEST VALUES EVER SHOWN!

GENERAL CARD COMPANY
1300 W. Jackson Blvd., Dept. 83, CHICAGO 7, ILL.

She's been a gun moll (The Killers) and a brassy dame with a heart of gold (The Hucksters) but never a cultured, refined creature with table manners, before.

When she's not at the studio, she's usually at her dressmaker's. Every other week, she hauls over her eighteen skirts, and all her suits and all her dresses. Sometimes she wants 'em let out; sometimes she wants 'em taken in.

She loses and gains weight erratically, depending upon whether she's in love, whether she's unhappy (she stops eating altogether, then) or whether the studio says, "Put on a few pounds."

The dressmaker glared at her, the last time she came in. "I'm so sick of looking at these clothes, I could die," she said flatly.

Ava thinks maybe she'd better buy some new stuff.

Though where she'd put it in that thimble-sized apartment—

Every so often, in a burst of optimism, she goes shopping for a house. Just a small house, she wants. She saw a doll of a house, sitting up on a hill. It was cute, but not palatial.

"That's for me," she told herself, forthrightly, and went on up the hill.

The people wanted forty-three thousand dollars for it. "That's not for me after all," she told herself just as forthrightly, and went down the hill again.

Back to her little apartment. The place is so crowded, she has clothes stacked in the corners, and in suitcases, and people come in and do takes. "Where you going, Ava?"

"Nuts," says Ava shortly. "Throw my slacks off the chair, and sit down."

In all fairness to the apartment, it should be noted that one of the reasons there's no room for clothes in the closet is simply that the closet is full of shoes.

She's got a passion for shoes that nothing but shoes can satisfy. If she sees a style she likes, she says, "I think it would be pleasant to have these shoes in many colors," and straightaway has them.

Some day, an enterprising shoe manufacturer is going to set up an Ava Gardner Day.

Incidentally, there already was an Ava Gardner Day in Wilson, North Carolina, where the Gardners live. The Killers was premiered there, and every store that advertised in the newspapers ran a little picture of Ava, in the ad.

my day . . .

Mrs. Gardner, who's terribly proud of her daughter, almost split her seams. Mrs. Gardner has definite ideas about what constitutes proper behavior from Ava, and last time Ava was home, she scolded her severely. "You go around the house without makeup, and those filthy saddle shoes," she said. "Suppose someone came to the house?"

"Suppose someone did?"

Mrs. Gardner raised her eyebrows. "Certain things are expected of people in your position."

Later that day, she borrowed her sister's car, and after she'd been driving for a few minutes, stopped for gas.

The man in the gas station looked her over.

"Five gallons, please," she said.

The man took his cap off, and scratched his head. "You know who you remind me of?" he said. "The actress . . . Whatzername—Ava Gardner. Come from right around here, too, she did."

Ava sounded unimpressed. "I don't think she's very attractive."

This was too much for a North Carolina man to take. He told Ava off. About what a great little old actress Miss Gardner was, to say nothing of her having been a local girl, and besides, who did she think she was, anyway, talking like that about Ava.

"Ava Gardner," she said sweetly.

That gas station man should have seen her last New Year's Eve, in Hollywood, if he'd wanted to be dazzled.

She was wearing a white satin evening gown, strapless. The top was dotted with green bugle beads, and the skirt was draped, and she carried a green satin bag with big white pearls.

Peter, who came to call for her, grinned, and mopped his brow. "Wow," he said quietly. "Wow."

When she does it up, she does it up right. The green eyes shaded, and the lashes dark and mysterious. The gown smooth, and tight. The perfume heady, the lady star-touched.

Everywhere they went that night, people felt it. As she and Peter took the floor, other couples edged away, and stood there watching for a few minutes, because this girl was really spectacularly lovely, a girl to make you wonder.

On her more down-to-earth, sweater and skirt days, there's a whole gang of kids including Mel Torme and Bob Wells, who go roller-skating, and bowling, and howl at old silent movies.

Weekends, she plays badminton with Jay and Ruth Rosenthal, her lawyer, and his wife. She shows up for work on Monday lame and halt, and winces if anyone mentions muscles.

The thing you've got to understand about this girl is that she isn't easy to understand. You expect her to be a slinky siren, and she turns up talking badminton. It doesn't prove anything, particularly. She can still slink, and if you've ever seen her in the middle of a rhumba, you know. She doesn't remind you of your mother.

She went through a time when she was miserable, and she got too thin, and she stayed out too late, with too many people. That's over now.

She's still young enough so this present healthy, outdoors routine may also be a temporary phase, of course, but from the way Ava tells it, she's become a happy-medium addict.

As far as men are concerned, she likes them. No denying that. She says there's no big mad love in her life at the moment; she's going around with a man named Irving Reis, who's a swell egg. He's intelligent, he's honest, he's fun. Ask her any more, and she gives you a polite grin.

MODERN SCREEN

"Who is the new pupil from California?"

CAT'S PAW

Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

Here's One Of The Greatest

BLOOD-IRON TONICS YOU CAN BUY

If you have SIMPLE ANEMIA!

You girls and women who suffer so from simple anemia that you're pale, weak, "dragged out"—this may be due to lack of blood-iron. So try Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS—one of the best home ways to build up red blood to get more strength—in such cases. Pinkham's Tablets are one of the greatest blood-iron tonics you can buy!

Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo

FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 326, Hollywood, Calif.

Is yours an Allergic Skin?

In cosmetics, too, physicians know best. Ask your doctor about AR-EX Cosmetics. At leading drug stores. Write for FREE BOOKLET: "New Facts on Skin Care."

℞ AR-EX Cosmetics

FOR SENSITIVE SKINS

AR-EX COSMETICS, INC., 1036-JM W. Van Buren St., Chicago 7, Ill.

LEG SUFFERERS

Why continue to suffer without attempting to do something? Write today for New Booklet—"THE LIEPE METHODS FOR HOME USE." It tells about Varicose Ulcers and Open Leg Sores. Liepe Methods used while you walt. More than 40 years of success. Praised and endorsed by multitudes.

FREE BOOKLET

LIEPE METHODS, 3284 N. Green Bay Ave., Dept. H-25, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

$50 CASH FOR YOU

FOR SELLING 100 ASSORTMENTS

of 21 gorgeous CHRISTMAS CARDS worth 10c to 25c each. Sells $1.00—profit up to 50c. Sample box on approval. 75 money makers. Special Offers. WRITE TODAY.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.

HEDENKAMP & CO., 343 Broadway, Dept. T-9, New York 13, N. Y.

LEARN AT HOME

TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates.

HIGH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED

48th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women, 18 to 60. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING

Dept. 238, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.

Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

Name_____

City_____ State_____ Age_____

On the set and in her work, she's cooperative. She takes direction easily, because she feels she needs it, and that's what the man's getting paid for. He's trying to make her look good, and she knows it.

Ava developed a healthy respect for Clark Gable, while they were making The Hucksters, too.

For one thing, he's got no temperament. There was this scene, a simple scene—

Ava opened the door and said, "Hello."

Gable was supposed to say, "Hello," and give her a once-over. The old Gable take, long, intimate, and loaded with charm.

They must have shot that thing twenty times, and Ava kept thinking, why doesn't he get mad?

He never said a word.

He used to tease Ava about the way one of her low cut gowns was fastened to her skin with toupé tape, for benefit of the Johnston office.

"They taped my ears back with that stuff, a long time ago," he said, grinning.

Every once in a while, some character will come on the set and go up to Ava with a gleam in his eye. "What's it like to kiss Gable?"

She's toyed with the idea of telling them. It would go something like this: "Well, first you think about the lights. And then you think about whether it's your good side or your bad side. And then the camera starts rolling, and you think about your makeup, and the whole kiss is faked, anyhow."

She never says it, though it's true. She just looks at the questioner, and smiles shyly. "It's very nice to kiss Mr. Gable."

She's quite a kid, this Ava Gardner. In The Hucksters, she plays Jean Ogilvie, the singer, who's in love with the hero. She came from the wrong side of the tracks, and she has all the answers, and she's a nice babe who knows she's beaten before she even begins.

There's one place where Gable comes up to Ava in the picture, and asks her where she's singing now.

She tells him the name of the place. "Why don't you drop by, later on?"

Clark shakes his head. "I don't think so."

"Oh, don't be that way," Ava says. "You won't find anything better than me between now and then."

The fadeout comes, at that point, but as Mr. Gable walked off the set, he was heard to remark, "You're so right!"

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Robert Alda was doing a personal appearance at the N. Y. Strand Theater and my friend and I were very comfortably settled in the front row. Mr. Alda went through his rehearsed routine of singing, telling jokes, etc. Then he announced suddenly: "I will now do an impersonation of Dennis Morgan and Jack Carson." He had gone into the wings to remove his coat, when, from the other side, two men strolled casually to the center of the stage. The screaming and laughing of the audience soon became deafening. For the two men on the stage were actually Dennis Morgan and Jack Carson, both of whom were in town and had decided —as a lark—to surprise Bob Alda— and the Strand audience.

Lee Garber,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Reducing Specialist Says:

"Thanks to the Spot Reducer I lost four inches around the hips and three inches around the waistline. It's amazing." Mary Martin, Long Is. City, N. Y.

LOSE WEIGHT where it shows most REDUCE most any part of the body with SPOT REDUCER

Like a magic wand, the "Spot Reducer" obeys your every wish. Most any part of your body where it is loose and flabby, wherever you have extra weight and inches, the "Spot Reducer" can aid you in acquiring a youthful, slender and graceful figure. The beauty of this scientifically designed Reducer is that the method is so simple and easy, the results quick, sure and harmless. No exercises or strict diets. No steambaths, drugs or laxatives.

Miss Nancy Mace, Bronx, N. Y., says: "I went from size 16 dress to a size 12 with the use of the Spot Reducer. I am glad I used it."

Thousands have lost weight this way—in hips, abdomen, legs, arms, neck, buttocks, etc. The same method used by many stage, screen and radio personalities and leading reducing salons. The "Spot Reducer" can be used in your spare time, in the privacy of your own room. It breaks down fatty tissues, tones the muscles and flesh, and the increased, awakened blood circulation carries away waste fat. Two weeks after using the "Spot Reducer," look in the mirror and see a more glamorous, better, firmer, slimmer figure that will delight you. You have nothing to lose but weight for the "Spot Reducer" is sold on a

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE with a 10-DAY FREE TRIAL

If the "Spot Reducer" doesn't do the wonders for you as it has for others, if you don't lose weight and inches where you want to lose it most, if you're not 100% delighted with the results, your money will be returned at once.

Marie Hammel, New York, N. Y., says: "I used to wear a size 20 dress, now I wear size 14, thanks to the Spot Reducer. It was fun and I enjoyed it."

MAIL COUPON NOW!

The "Spot Reducer" Co., Dept. DM-2, 871 Broad St., Newark, New Jersey.

Send me at once, for $2 cash, check or money order, the "Spot Reducer" and your famous Special Formula Body Massage Cream, postpaid. If I am not 100% satisfied, my money will be refunded.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

VETO Colgate's Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Underarm Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant . . . Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness—and to check underarm perspiration, stop odor safely.

DOUBLY PREFERRED!

Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

TESTED

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

AMAZING NEW RADIO!

Pocket or Purse Size

SMALL AS A PACK OF CIGARETTES

Weighs only a few ounces—Beautiful black chrome plastic case. Uses new crystal diode. Hi-Q slide dial. No tubes, batteries or electric "plug-ins" required! Receives local broadcasts and when used according to instructions sent with each radio! You can use it at home, in many offices, hotels, cabins, in bed, etc.—lots of fun—real entertainment.

GUARANTEED TO PLAY

SEND ONLY $1.00 (cash, money order, check) and pay postman $2.99 plus delivery fees on arrival or send $3.99 for postpaid delivery. Complete as shown ready to play with self-contained personal phone. For gifts—children will love it—grownups too! An exceptional value—order yours and enjoy the many good radio programs coming! Don't be without your Pa-Kette Radio another day! (All foreign orders $5.00 U. S. cash.)

Pa-Kette Electric Company, Dept. MM-8, Kearney, Nebr.

MAKE EXTRA CASH Easy Now!

Sell Smart Christmas Cards

Earn good profits taking orders for Personal Christmas Cards with name imprinted. Show to friends, relatives, business people. FREE Samples. No experience. Earn EXTRA money with stunning New Assortments—Religious, Christmas, Everyday, etc. Special plan for lodges, clubs, church groups. Send for your samples TODAY. WRITE NOW!

Personal Christmas Cards WITH NAME 50 for $1

WETMORE & SUGDEN, Dept. B-77
749 MONROE AVE., ROCHESTER (2), N. Y.

WATCHES WANTED
BROKEN OR USABLE

All kinds. Highest prices paid for jewelry, rings, spectacles, gold teeth, diamonds, sterling silver, etc. Cash mailed promptly. Write for FREE shipping containers.

LOWE'S • DEPT. DM
Holland Bldg. • St. Louis 1, Mo.

LONGER LASTING GRIP
FOR REPEATED USE.
SMOOTH FINISH INSIDE AND OUT!

Scotch Lox BOB and HAIR PINS
NEVER LET YOUR HAIR DOWN

LITTLE MAGGIE COMES TO TOWN

(Continued from page 67)

The day of Margaret's visit, what had been a sane and respectable publishing company completely lost its head.

All the editors brought their children to work. All the artists did the same. The President of the company knocked off at four o'clock, and tore out of his eleventh-floor office crying, "Corsage!"

He'd run down two flights before someone pointed out that the elevators both worked. His mind was on an orchid for a lady.

It was like the mad tea party from Alice in Wonderland. It was a place of business turned into a howling, teeming kindergarten. It was, in miniature, what had happened to the entire city of New York. For Margaret set the old town on its ear.

Take the lobby of the Waldorf-Astoria. If you dare. The Waldorf-Astoria (where Margaret and her mother and her aunt stayed) was expecting Mexico's President Aleman one afternoon, and officials began methodically to clear the lobby.

They probably swept out any number of Vanderbilts and Astors, but they stopped at Margaret. "You may stay, Miss O'Brien."

Miss O'Brien beamed broadly, showing braces.

One half hour behind schedule, President Aleman arrived, with a dozen nervous F.B.I. men in tow.

He was heading for the elevators, when he caught sight of Maggie, and he veered.

good neighbor policy . . .

For ten minutes, he talked to her in Spanish, and she was so flabbergasted, she couldn't say a single word, even though she knows a few.

Margaret caused more traffic jams than you could shake Mayor O'Dwyer at. Every time she came out of any place, a million kids would fall into a sort of Pied Piper march and follow her.

She saw Finian's Rainbow, one day, with M-G-M's Bill McCormick, and after the show, they hailed a cab.

As they drove off, Bill pointed out the back window. "See the kids in that next cab? They're following you."

"Oh, dear," she said, like a little old lady, "I wish they wouldn't waste their nickels on me." And then, not at all like a little old lady: "They could buy candy with that money!"

Bill's the man who used to get forty phone calls an hour asking if Margaret would pose, or make a speech, or say she ate spinach. If the request was for charity, he could be pretty sure Margaret would go along.

She's done a lot of work for the New York Infirmary Drive; she did a radio show for Catholic Charities, she appeared for the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund, and one night when she was walking down a hall in the Waldorf, someone asked her if she'd mind stepping inside for a picture to help a Wayward Boy's fund, and she stepped inside gladly.

But there were actually a few days, back before the news spread, when Margaret roamed around New York unrecognized. It all started with a pair of glasses—

Margaret's a fan of a series of magazine stories concerning a child named Violet. Violet is difficult. She's precocious, and intellectual, and she even goes to a psychiatrist, and drives him crazy.

Violet—to get to the point—wears horn rimmed spectacles.

And on this trip, Margaret intended to play Violet. When she got off the train on Saturday, she held her mother firmly by one arm, and her Aunt Marissa firmly by the other.

"Glasses," she said.

They hied them to one of the oldest, finest places in the city, for taking care of such matters, and Margaret spent some time studying frames.

Finally, she settled on the ones she wanted, and the courtly old gentleman who was helping her smiled paternally.

"These are twenty-five dollars," he said.

"In that case—" began Gladys O'Brien, and Margaret hastily searched further. After she'd chosen some compromise horn-rims, the old gentleman said, "And now, your prescription—"

Margaret shook her head. "I haven't any prescription. I just want the rims. You see," she said gently, "I'm being Violet."

At that stage, the old gentleman wouldn't have cared if she was Infra-red. He wrapped up the frames pathetically. The world is in bad shape, when little children come in and—

Sunday, the day after Margaret's arrival, she went to the circus in Madison Square Garden.

She was still Violet, with her glasses on her nose, and a painfully prim expression on her mouth. The circus people had turned the President's box over to her, but nobody in the audience realized who she was, except for one couple sitting directly in back.

They wrote a note: "Are you Margaret O'Brien?" and when she said yes, some surrounding kids caught on, and they bought Margaret some ice-cream.

After that, she bought them pink circus candy.

Once the circus was over, Aunt Marissa studied her closely. "How do you feel?"

"Fine, thank you."

"You had six pink cotton candy sticks," Aunt Marissa said. "I counted them. And you had a hot dog, and half a soda-pop, and a box of crackerjacks. Your mother's going to throw me into the street."

Margaret closed her eyes dreamily. "I think I love Emmett Kelly."

Emmett Kelly's the great clown, and for him, she took off her glasses.

monkey-shines . . .

She also took off her glasses for the monkey man, but that was to intimidate him. The monkey man comes out in an ape-skin, and climbs up the boxes, scaring the occupants out of their wits.

When Margaret saw him approaching, she grabbed off her disguise. "If he thinks I'm in the movies, maybe he won't pick on me," she said trustingly.

He didn't, either.

Death-defying acts that made other people bury their heads held no terror for Margaret. Since her mother had been a circus performer, she kept up a lively commentary on circuses in general. Every time a new act came on, Margaret would scream. "My mother used to do that!" Her tone implied, "Only better."

The very next day, Margaret—or rather, Violet—was strolling along Fifth Avenue, when she noticed a familiar face. Hysterical, too. When the face composed itself, and approached, she saw it was attached to her good friend, George Murphy.

"Hey, Grandma," he said. "What big eyes you have! And such circles around them!"

"Mr. Murphy," said Margaret, changing the subject in a dignified manner, "don't you just love to ride on those high-top busses?"

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL
MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST
Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.
Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547 Northwestern Station, Dept. 9409, Detroit 4, Mich.
SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE
©1935 LAKE LAB

Are You Satisfied With YOUR NOSE?
Nobody today need go through life handicapped by a badly shaped nose, disfigured features or blemishes. In YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, a famous Plastic Surgeon shows how simple corrections "remodel" the unbeautiful nose, take years off the prematurely aged face. Book is sent, postpaid, in plain wrapper—only 25c
FRANKLIN HOUSE, Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg., Phila., Pa. Dept. 14-R

WHY DON'T YOU WRITE?
Writing short stories, articles on homemaking, business, hobbies, travel, local and club activities, etc., will enable you to earn extra money. In your own home, on your own time, the New York Copy Desk Method teaches you how to write the way newspaper women learn—by writing. Our unique "Writing Aptitude Test" tells whether you possess the fundamental qualities essential to successful writing. You'll enjoy this test. Write for it, without cost or obligation.
VETERANS: This course approved for Veterans' Training.
NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
Suite 571-M, One Park Avenue New York 16, N. Y.

FRIENDLY SOCIAL VISITS BRING YOU BIG CHRISTMAS CARD PROFITS
33 DIFFERENT BOXES • ODD CARDS 2½c UP
UP TO 100% PROFIT FOR YOU
Show top quality 21-card $1.00 Christmas assortments. Also Currier and Ives, Jewel Etchtone, Oilettes, Religious, Gift Wrapping, Humorous boxes as low as 30c each. Send at once for FREE CATALOG and FREE SAMPLES 25 and 50 for $1.00 personals, name imprinted Stationery and special feature $1.00 assortment ON APPROVAL. Special Offers. Cash bonus.
FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONALS
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, Box E, North Abington, Mass.

Marvel
WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women
$3.50
At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
ee Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

WANT TO EARN MORE MONEY?
arn SILK SCREEN PROCESS At Home. FREE big illustated Book explains how my training enables you to start ur own successful business or train for a better job in is well paid, uncrowded Advertising Field. Learn at rn in your spare time. Course includes complete Kit of pplies. Write TODAY.
CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF SCREEN PROCESS
pt. WG87, 3740 Overland Blvd., Los Angeles 34, Calif.

LEARN MILLINERY AT HOME
Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, cks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make lusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profble business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.
LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
5 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 188, Chicago 1, Ill.
ease send me your FREE catalog describing your training rse in professional millinery.
me dress

Two blocks further along, she bumped into Harold Lloyd. "Young lady," he thundered, "I like you very much, but you can't use my trademark!"

That was just about the end of Violet. By then, New York knew Margaret was here, and New York was in full pursuit.

The syndicate which is going to publish Margaret's column, "Growing Up," gave a big party at the Waldorf.

It was a lovely party, and Margaret showed off her new portable which unfolds into a typewriter, a tripod to set it on, and a little side table.

One of Maggie's next-door neighbors at the Waldorf was a man named Collett Solberg. He's charming, lives in Rio, and is a director of the Socoma Engineering Company (which built the Natal airport.)

Mr. Solberg, talking to his four children via long distance phone, happened to mention that Maggie was breathing the air of the very same hotel, and got a somewhat frantic reaction.

"If you don't meet her," the children said, "you needn't bother to come home."

So he met her. And he spoke to the kids again, a couple of days afterward. "I met her," he said.

"Buy her a present," chorused the children. "From us and you."

The present he bought looked like a red leather shoulder strap bag, but the bag part is really a radio.

singing with bing . . .

Radios are a big thing with her, lately. She guest-starred on Bing Crosby's program, and suddenly she's a musical devotee. She's given up "Superman" for concertos.

It began when they told her she was supposed to sing on Bing's show. She'd never sung a note in her life—but she's agreeable.

The show was being worked over in a suite at the Waldorf. A lot of people were sitting around; some writers, a couple of musicians. And when Margaret tried to sing, she was pretty terrible.

Her mother thought she might be nervous. "Maybe if everyone would leave me alone with her—"

Fifteen minutes later, Margaret was okay. Now she's interested enough in singing so that she may study voice.

Some of Maggie's New York high-points were getting an autographed baseball from Mel Ott, and going backstage after the Fredric March play, and catching Carmen Miranda at the Copacabana's early show.

Half-way through Carmen's act, Margaret forgot she was enjoying herself, and began to sigh.

"What's the matter?" Gladys asked her.

Margaret sighed again. Dolefully. "She's not wearing her banana hat."

Next day she got an apologetic telegram from Miss Miranda.

This is an exciting year for Margaret. After New York, comes Bermuda, and then, later, England, to do a picture.

It's The Secret Garden, with Claude Jarman and Dean Stockwell, and Clarence Brown's going to direct it.

Maggie pesters her mother frequently. "When we're in England, can we go to Ireland? May we go to Ireland, I mean? And see our relatives?"

"Surely," Gladys says tolerantly, wondering if Margaret really wants to see the relatives, or if she's going to investigate the legend about leprechauns. With Margaret, you never know.

There was a man from the London Daily Pictorial who found that out, when he interviewed her at the Waldorf.

"What do you want most to see in England, Miss O'Brien?" he asked.

Without batting an eye, she told him. "The crown jewels and Vivien Leigh. Vivien Leigh first."

BE THE GIRL OF HIS DREAMS
a beautiful, natural-looking Golden Blonde
Transform your hair into a shining halo of soft, golden tresses. Use Nestle Lite—the new, revolutionary hair lightener.
Contains a golden conditioning oil which makes your hair softer and more lustrous as it brightens it—in contrast with products which make the hair dry and brittle.
Delightfully scented—easy and pleasant to use. Wonderful, too, for use on arms, legs and face. Nestle Lite lightens dark hairs permanently and quickly. At all drug stores, $1.00. Made by Nestle—originators of permanent waving—Meriden, Conn.
Nestle LITE

YOU CAN MAKE $40 to $50 PER WEEK!
Selling Guaranteed Children's Shoes
Big opportunity, tremendous field, big advance commissions. Act now. Give hard working mothers this chance to save that trip-to-the-store . . . At no extra cost.
GET SPECIAL FREE OFFER!
Limited number of Free selling kits available. Avoid delay. Send in TODAY for your opportunity to a future of security. Send post-card to:
HOME SERVICE SHOE CORP.
DEPT. S-2, BOX 232, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Show Friends Smart New CHRISTMAS CARDS
50 CARDS WITH NAME $1.00
$25 IN CASH
Start earning now. Selling 50 big-value 21-card $1.00 Christmas Assortments pays you $25 cash. Easy extra profits from complete line 22 different assortments; DeLuxe Stationery. Also get FREE Samples of name-imprinted Christmas Cards at 50 for $1 and 25 for $1 retail. Request 21-card box on approval. Write today.
For Selling Only 50 Boxes of 21 Cards For $1
SEND FOR SAMPLES NOW
PHILLIPS CARD CO., 816 Hunt St., NEWTON, MASS.

HOLLYWOOD TYPE PERSONAL CARDS
100 PLAIN OR PANELED NAME ONLY $1.00
Wigington, Box 1581-E, Hollywood, Calif.

Made to Order

Exquisite handmade ladies pocketbook zipper attachment with name engraved and hand painted rose, carved into beautiful transparent plastic, which can also be used as a keychain. Send $1.00 plus postage with each order and money refunded if not fully satisfied.
PLASTI-ARTCRAFT CO.
22-20 35th Street, Long Island City, N. Y.

SMOOTH SAILING WITH ASTHMADOR

THE LEADING POWDER CIGARETTE OR PIPE MIX
INHALANT TREATMENT
AT ALL DRUG STORES

If summer means agony to you—if pollen-laden breezes aggravate your bronchial asthma—take a new lease on life with Dr. R. Schiffmann's ASTHMADOR. Just ignite ASTHMADOR powder or an ASTHMADOR cigarette, and let those pleasant, aromatic fumes penetrate congested passages. Notice how they help make breathing easier, aid in reducing the severity of your paroxysm. Enjoy summer vacations—you can get ASTHMADOR anywhere—take it everywhere. No costly sprays to buy, nothing to take internally. No wonder Asthmatics have made ASTHMADOR the leading inhalant treatment! Sold under a money-back guarantee. You can't lose—and you've a lot of welcome relief to gain!

Now She Shops "Cash And Carry"
Without Painful Backache

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

AMAZING! MAKE $25
selling 50 boxes 21 for $1 Xmas Cards. Also 50 and 25 for $1 embossed with name on. Samples on approval.
MERIT CARD CO.
70 WILLIAM ST., DEPT. A, NEWARK 2, N. J.

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS
EASY TO LEARN
Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.
NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan. Dept. 236-C, Chicago 5

Easy as A-B-C
Be Your Own MUSIC Teacher
LEARN AT HOME THIS MONEY SAVING WAY
Simple as A-B-C. Your lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. You read real notes—no "numbers" or trick music. Some of our 850,000 students are band LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. Soon you are playing popular music.
Mail coupon for our illustrated Free Book and Print and Picture Sample. Mention your favorite instrument. U. S. School of Music, 1448 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y. 10, N.Y.
FREE BOOKLET
U. S. School of Music, 1448 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y. 10, N.Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).
Instrument..... Have you Instrument?.....
Name.....
(Please Print)
Address.....

"JESSIE" FOR SHORT

(Continued from page 54)

off on tour. His contracts, made months in advance, couldn't be cancelled except by an act of God. Ordinarily, Betty and Vicki would have gone along. When it comes to parting, the Jameses might still be honeymooners . . .

But since travel was out of the question, Betty consoled herself with plans. Plans to surprise Harry. The ranch house had never been papered. She'd have that done—buy some new furniture—get the old stuff re-upholstered. Make the Beverly Hills place shine. All neat and methodical, everything down on a list where you could check it off. On such a day the cleaners would pick up the drapes. On such a day the rugs would be gone over, and the floors waxed. When all that was finished, she'd buy the baby's outfit, and be ready to welcome Harry without a thing on her mind.

Vicki had been born prematurely. They'd taken Betty off in an ambulance. This time would be different. "This time," she said, "I'm going like a lady—" mamas always know . . .

For Monday, May 19th, her list read: REPLACE LINENS. She and her mother drove to a Beverly shop and whiled the afternoon away among tablecloths and sheets. Betty felt fine, but Mrs. Grable was taking no chances. Call it a hunch. For a week or so she'd been staying all night at the James house.

The evening passed uneventfully. They listened to Inner Sanctum and The Whistler while Betty pasted family snapshots into an album she'd bought that afternoon. By 10:30 the household was asleep. Next morning the nurse washed Vicki's hair, Betty rolled it up as usual, and Vicki—as usual—sat herself under her little dryer with a magazine. Just like the other ladies.

Betty'd made an appointment to have her own hair done later. "How do you feel?" Mrs. Grable asked.

"Wonderful."

"Then I think I'll run home and attend to a few things, and I'll see you later."

"No hurry, Mother. It'll be a quiet day. Just the hairdresser, and tonight some of the girls are dropping in for gin rummy."

It was 9:30 when Mrs. Grable left. It was 11 when her housekeeper answered the phone, and came running. "Betty says please hurry. She thinks it's the baby."

Where she'd left peace, Mrs. Grable found turmoil. They'd phoned Dr. Harris. They'd been told to call an ambulance and get Betty right down to Cedars of Lebanon. Meanwhile, she'd been trying to reach Harry, who was staying with a friend near Atlantic City. He'd just left the house. "Please see if you can't find him," Betty was half sobbing into the phone. "Tell him I think the baby's coming—"

The face she turned to her mother was bathed in perspiration. But it wasn't the pain that worried Betty. "Oh, Mother, what'm I going to do? The ranch isn't finished and everything here's in a mess and my hair's so dirty—and my poor baby!" Her voice broke on a wail, "He won't even have a shirt to come home in."

Pretty soon even the shirt didn't matter. With Vicki, the ambulance had bowled along at 40. This time they hit 70, while the sirens screamed. Up front, Mrs. Grable nearly lost her mind. On top of everything else, they seemed to be hurling motorists right and left. She hid her face in her hands, and the yell of the driver failed to soothe her. "Think nothing of it, Mrs. Grable. One of these days I'll take you on a real joyride—"

At Cedars, only husbands are allowed on the surgery floor, and Betty's mother was obviously no husband. She's a small person and the soul of good humor, but when they tried to stop her, she became a lion . . .

"I never met a good rule that didn't have its exception. Harry's out of town and Betty's all by herself. Somebody's got to be there, and that somebody's me."

She made her point. For three hours, barring a couple of intervals, she stood at the surgery door. Now and then she'd go down to report to Mr. Grable, waiting on the floor below. At 1:15 Harry's frantic call came through, demanding the doctor.

"He's all ready to operate," she told him, trying to keep the quavers out of her own voice. "Said to tell you everything's fine, and it'll be about an hour."

Exactly one hour and five minutes later a nurse appeared with the baby. "It's a girl."

"How's Betty?"

"Okay, but don't expect her out for a while."

Before she could more than peek at her new granddaughter, Harry was on the line again.

"Well, Jessie James is here," Grandma announced.

"No kiddin'!!"

"I haven't seen Betty yet but they tell me she's fine."

An audible gust of relief from Atlantic City. If Harry'd wanted a boy, you'd never have been able to guess it. "When can I talk to my wife?"

"Call back a little later and I'll let you know."

But that final hour before they wheeled Betty out seemed the longest of all. She was conscious, though groggy. "It's a girl, Mother. Did you see her?"

"Yes, and she's beautiful."

"But Harry wanted a boy."

"I've talked to Harry. All he gives a hang about is that you and the baby came through it."

Her lids fluttered with weariness but the blue eyes smiled. "No kiddin'," Betty

I SAW IT HAPPEN

In September of 1945, I was on my way home to Hawaii from a hospital in New York, when I stopped over in Minneapolis, Minn., to pay a short visit to George Grim, popular radio commentator and news columnist. In Mr. Grim's office, we were talking of things in general, when a beautiful girl—charming and sweet—walked into the room. I was flattered to be introduced to Vivian Blaine. Gladly, I joined in the conversation. About 15 minutes later, Miss Blaine said goodbye and gracefully floated out of the room. Then, Mr. Grim asked me, "How did you feel—talking over the radio with an actress?" "You mean—you mean—I was talking over the air with Vivian Blaine?" I stammered—and nearly passed out!

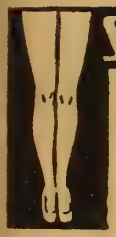
Lt. J. Chinen,
c/o Postmaster
San Francisco, Calif.

BRUSH AWAY GRAY HAIR ... AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or

Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE

Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 298, COVINGTON, KY.



STRAIGHT LEGS

Let Phillips of Hollywood Help You

Many cases of bowlegs and knock-knees may now be improved. Large hips, heavy thighs, thick calves and ankles—streamlined! Thin legs developed and contours made sleek and lovelier! Fat knees reduced! Feet and arches strengthened! A remarkable new course! Don't be embarrassed by ugly legs! Send $1.00 TODAY for "Straight Legs and Beautifying the Legs"—or order c.o.d.! Satisfaction or money back.

PHILLIPS, Dept. M-41
418 W. 64th St. Los Angeles 3, Calif.

FREE THESE BIG MONEY MAKERS AND CASE

Let me send you this Big Box of Home Products, FREE F.O.B. Factory to show friends and neighbors. Low Prices and Money-Saving Premium Offers. No experience needed to start making Good Money. Rush name for outfit today.

Blair, Dept. 360-CP Lynchburg, Va.

Be an ARTIST

LEARN AT HOME IN YOUR SPARE TIME

Trained artists are capable of earning $50, $60, $75 a week. By our practical method we teach you COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING and CARTOONING all in ONE course. FREE BOOK—"Art for Pleasure & Profit" describes training and opportunities in art. STATE AGE.

Training Available Under "G.I." Bill
STUDIO 808 H, WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
1115—15th ST., N. W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

STOP Scratching Mosquito-Other Insect Bites

Relieve the itching caused by insect bites, athlete's foot—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Quiets itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D.D.D. Prescription.

EARN CASH Every Day Sell GORGEOUS NEW CHRISTMAS CARDS

Take easy, profitable orders for Hand Processed Christmas assortment, Religious and Everyday cards. Friends, relatives, business people buy on sight. No experience needed—make calls spare time or full time. Boost earnings with 50 for $1 and 25 for $1 Name-Imprinted Christmas cards. Send name for samples today. COLONIAL STUDIO Inc. 642 S. Summer St., Dept. 39-W, Holyoke, Mass.

SPOTS

To be well groomed, check clothes for spots—Get the Mufti bottle. Mufti gives you not 1, but 4 tested cleaning ingredients . . . cleans so many spots from so many fabrics—in a jiffy!

MUFTI • SPOT REMOVER

whispered before she finally fell asleep.

She was still sleeping when Harry called back, so he talked to the doctor. "Shall I fly home?"

"What for? Betty's fine, the baby's fine, Mrs. Grable's looking after things, you'd only have to turn around and fly right back. Finish your job and then come home."

Next time he called, Betty was awake, but still weak enough to shed a couple of tears. "I'm so sorry I didn't have a boy for you, darling."

His answer is off the record, but it brought a lovely radiance to her face. Cradling the phone, she stole a glance at her mother. "I've got news for you, Mrs. G. Your daughter's married to the sweetest guy in the world."

Right off the bat the papers started yelling for pictures, but Twentieth said nothing doing for two weeks. Betty herself wanted pictures of the baby, "Just for Harry, else he'll never know how she looked when she was born."

She's only five days old as this is written. Though she came ahead of time like her sister, she couldn't have been quite so far ahead. Because Vicki was born bald, whereas Jessica's pate was covered with blond fuzz. She weighed the same, too. Her mother grew quite indignant with one of the papers that put her down as 6:04. "They knocked ten ounces off my baby," she protested.

They haven't washed Betty's hair yet, so she wears it braided and looks like a kid herself in the high necked, long sleeved shorties she gets from Juel Park—rose and blue and white with red piping. The room is drowned in flowers. From Tyrone Power came a basket of rose buds, with a little wooden gun sticking out. "To one Jessie James from another Jesse James." All alone on the dresser stand the red roses Harry sends his wife every day. Twice a day he phones. Each night Betty marks off another date on the calendar, bringing her closer to June 11th.

That's how things stood when this was written. By the time you read it, Betty's hair will be shining and her home spotless. Jessica will be snug in the nursery, her trousseau complete, and Vicki moved to what once was the upstairs music room. Even the ranch house may be finished by then.

"By then," Mrs. Grable laughs, "the Jameses will be together again, and the rest won't matter."

MIRAGE IN MINK

(Continued from page 53)

or less free. She figures she still has a long way to go before she's a completely well-rounded and delightful human being, but at least she's on the track.

Up until recently, she hadn't time enough to analyze herself anyway, she'd been working so hard.

Here's a vague resume:

She made You Came Along, and The Strange Love of Martha Ivers, and then went to London on a publicity jaunt. She flew back from London to New York, hopped a plane in New York for Los Angeles, had a generally horrible trip, and got in seven hours late, at six a.m.

At ten the same morning, she was to report to Columbia for Dead Reckoning.

She reported all right, but her mind wasn't with it. Her mind kept formulating ads to be run in the lost and found columns, concerning her stomach.

Like this: "Stomach—Come home. I will treat you right."

CORN BAD? FEEL SAD? GET GLAD!

BLUE-JAY with Nupercaine* RELIEVES 3 WAYS:

Stops shoe pressure—its soft Dura-felt pad relieves pain instantly! Curbs surface pain, thanks to Blue-Jay's exclusive anesthetic Nupercaine! Loosens hard "core" with gentle medication—you just lift it out in a few days! For greater relief get Blue-Jay. "America's Largest Selling Corn Plaster."

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by Ciba

BLUE JAY Corn Plasters

NOW IN 2 SIZES: STANDARD AND LITTLE TOE

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company
Chicago 16

GROW long lovely eyelashes

Take a tip from Movie Stars and Models — acquire long stunning eyelashes that everybody admires. Long eyelashes add so much to your attractiveness. Now, You too, can enjoy the glamourous feeling of long silky lashes and bright sparkling eyes by using Long-Lash a Doctor's Discovery, GUARANTEED to make your eyelashes grow longer or your money refunded. Try it for a few days and watch those admiring glances. Only $2.00 per tube (tax inc.) and that is all you need.

Long-Lash

333 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 528-KI
Chicago, Ill.

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW and SENSATIONAL in CHRISTMAS CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

AMAZING "OILETTE" CARDS Like costly oil paintings. Designs never before offered. Amazing Value! Gets easy orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with name, 50 for $1 up. New features, clever ideas. Pays up to 100% cash profit. Also Stationery. 20 other money-making assortments sell at 60c to $1. Samples on Approval. Write today.

50 FOR $1 With Name

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 75K, St. Louis 3, Mo.

MAKE MONEY

selling our DeLuxe line of Cosmetic Creams, Face Powder, Medical Preparations, etc., to your friends and neighbors. A Free Bottle or Jar mailed to any address to prove how good it is. No experience necessary.

KING MFG. CO., Dept. 22, St. Louis 3, Mo.

Send Now for FREE CATALOG of Hollywood Styles

Big, new Hollywood Fashion Catalog of screen styles in dresses, slacks, suits, blouses, jackets • Gift ideas, housewares, men's wear, too!

Send one dime (no stamps) to cover mailing and handling charges.

BETTY CO-ED of HOLLYWOOD, Dept. F 96
6402 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.

BETTY CO-ED OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. F-96
6402 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.
Please send catalog. I enclose a dime.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone_____ State_____

Dead Reckoning turned out to be delightful, however. Partly because it had Bogart. Bogart was good for Lizabeth. He likes people, and he'll dig around to find out what's motivating them. Besides which, he's a fine actor, and a helpful one.

The bad actor on the Dead Reckoning set was Lizabeth's wisdom tooth. Every so often, Lizabeth would check in all swollen up, and some wise character'd jeer, "What happened, you walk into a door?"

"No," she'd say sweetly. "Mr. Bogart's been beating me."

The pain used to come and go, and after a while it just came and stayed, and Lizabeth had to take three days off and get the tooth pulled.

She spent the time away from the studio making a present for Bogie. In the picture, his name was Rip, so she got a little tiny coffin, and put the wisdom tooth in it, and printed R. I. P. on the cover. She thought it was rather brilliant of her.

The day she reported back for work, she walked onto the set, and was immediately approached by Bogart, and John Cromwell, the director.

They advanced toward her, brandishing the biggest, ugliest saber tooth she'd ever seen. It took both of them to hold it, almost.

"We got something for you," they said proudly. "We thought you might like to keep your tooth as a souvenir, so we went over to the dentist, and he let us have it."

"He let you have it!" Lizabeth said, awe and hysteria mixed in her voice. "I ought to let you have it—"

Then, meekly, she held out her little gift. "Have an anti-climax."

Bogart roared.

skin of her tooth . . .

Lizabeth proceeded to get the whole cast and crew's autographs on her saber tooth, and afterwards, she had it shellacked, and she now displays it on her mantel, where it looks simply hideous.

It was a good thing Lizabeth enjoyed Dead Reckoning, because she certainly lived with it. At the end of the day, when other actors were going home, she was going off to wardrobe, to have fittings, and test fabrics. At lunchtime, when other actors were eating, she was going off to wardrobe some more.

She'd rationalize, wildly. "Eating makes you fat; sleep is for children." By the end of the picture, she could have enjoyed being fat and childish.

Two days after Dead Reckoning wound up, she went into Desert Fury.

Desert Fury featured Burt Lancaster and John Hodiak, but while Lizabeth admires them both, she goes around talking mostly about a boy named Wendell Cory, who was a Broadway hit in Dream Girl.

It was during Desert Fury that Burt Lancaster was married.

Lizabeth talked it over thoughtfully, with a friend, some time later. "In the morning," she said, "he had to make a passionate love scene with me. In the afternoon, he went off and got married."

"Well?" said the friend.

"But it's happened to me before," Lizabeth persisted. "Bob Cummings and I had a passionate love scene in You Came Along, one morning, and that afternoon, he went off and got married. What is there about me that drives men to other women's arms?"

"Garlic?" The friend said significantly. "In the ads, it's almost always garlic."

Lizabeth was brooding. "Next, I made a movie called I Walk Alone. You think it's spite-work?"

When I Walk Alone was finished, Lizabeth sat back and talked nastily to herself. "Are you crazy?" she said. "Yes, you're crazy. You need a vacation."

As Groucho Marx once observed, "It's pretty hard to be wrong, when you answer your own questions."

The next thing Lizabeth did was announce to Paramount that she was going to Mexico City.

After which she took off for New York.

She spent ten days in New York, before she broke down and called up the studio, and by that time, she'd had enough of the city.

She'd seen her old friends, who'd married, and had children. Once, they'd all traveled the same casting-office-to-Walgreen's-to-casting-office route together, and now here they were with one kind of life, and here she was with another.

There was the night one of the girls looked at her wistfully. "You're lucky," she said. "You got what we all wanted. What's it like?"

And Lizabeth, trying to be truthful, spoke slowly. "It's nice," she said. "I don't want to kid you, or myself. When you work hard, it's nice to get paid off. But in a way, I envy you. I'd like to be married, and have a family. I get lonely—"

The girls smiled. "You can be lonely for more than people—"

MODERN SCREEN

"I lost my gum."

"But never as much," Lizabeth said.

It was a strange ten days. She walked along Fifth Avenue, and the sleek, bright windows that had haunted her were simply sleek, bright windows now.

The excitement was gone.

She remembered the dramatic school, and the pavement pounding, and the place called Piazza, where you got bread, spaghetti and coffee for twenty-five cents.

If you didn't have the quarter, you smiled at the man, and paid him when you could.

Lizabeth wondered whether the Piazza was still going, but you can't say to people who are taking you to El Morocco, and the Stork, "I know a little place where there's spaghetti."

To be truthful, the whirl was enjoyable. Lizabeth dated Helmut Dantine several times. He'd been in the Tallulah Bankhead play, which had just closed, and they were old friends.

As a matter of fact, last year, some columnist said they were about to be married.

"They'll get one look at us together, and claim we've been married the whole time," Helmut decided.

They were walking down the street, and Lizabeth laughed. "I wouldn't marry you, my good man!"

"Nobody asked you," said Helmut. "But why?"

She stopped short, and gestured behind them. There was a whole flock of young girls scampering at Helmut's heels, making adoring noises.

"Too much competition," Lizabeth said. "From your claque."

Lizabeth herself collected a following one afternoon. She was going from the Gotham, where she stayed, to the Sherry Netherlands, for cocktails, and the first thing she knew, she had a howling entourage.

It embarrassed her. She'll sign autographs when she has time, but she can't figure out what possible pleasure anyone gets from studying her name.

And while she doesn't approve of fans trailing actors around the pavements, she thinks fan clubs are wonderful, and that the kids put out fine magazines, and work very hard. She has lunch about once a month with her own fan club in Pasadena, and she says it's thrilling.

In New York, Lizabeth had a reunion with her mother, and her sisters, and they all talked at once, gaily, the way families do, and later, when Lizabeth was alone with her mother, the conversation got more serious.

"Are you happy?" her mother said.

Lizabeth nodded. "Quite happy. And I'm still trying to learn things."

Her mother looked puzzled, and Lizabeth went on. "A long time ago, you told me whatever I learned, I'd have in myself, and that was the only thing I never could lose."

Her mother smiled. "That's strange. I don't even remember."

"I do," said Lizabeth. "Now come see my chartreuse blouse."

That blouse was the only article of clothing she bought in New York.

She had gone to Saks Fifth Avenue in search of a chartreuse blouse, only it had to be a very particular one, and nothing that she saw pleased her.

The saleslady trotted out the handsomest stuff in the place, and Lizabeth shook her head. "No, thank you. I think not."

bargain hunter . . .

And then she caught sight of a rack packed with clothes, and the sleeve of what was surely a captivating chartreuse blouse dangled invitingly from the middle of the rack.

She made a dash.

"But Miss Scott," said the saleslady plaintively. "That's a reduced rack!"

"I love bargains," Miss Scott murmured soothingly.

Lizabeth caught a few of the Broadway shows. She saw Joan of Lorraine, and the Helen Hayes play, and Finian's Rainbow, and she loved them indiscriminately.

Still, toward the end of her visit, she was anxious to go home. A holiday is lovely, but it's no way to live.

At home, when Lizabeth's working, she's up at 5:30 a.m., home by seven p.m., finished eating, and in bed, shortly thereafter. She has a maid who fixes dinner for her three nights a week, and she herself is learning to cook, because she thinks it's important.

It's part of the new personality development course she's set for herself. Along with cooking go French lessons, and ballet lessons, and voice lessons.

She lives in what she calls "half a house," and she wears long cotton skirts instead of slacks, when she's loafing, and she wishes she'd meet a man she really wanted to marry.

Since she always gets what she wants, it shouldn't be long now.

WOMEN! MAKE SPARE-TIME MONEY QUICK this easy way!

Get Your Own Dresses Without a Penny of Cost AS AN EXTRA BONUS

Wouldn't you jump at the chance of earning up to $18, $20 and $25 a week in spare time? Well, here it is—the quick, easy way to make this good money in odd hours—in your own neighborhood — and, besides, get this Fall's loveliest dresses for yourself without a penny of cost! Just imagine! You invest no money! You simply take orders when and where you please for FASHION FROCKS — gorgeous exclusive styles of exquisite fabrics, unbelievably inexpensive—as low as $3.98. For every sale, you get paid in cash on the spot. And, to top it off, you get your own smart Fall dresses as a bonus besides your cash earnings!

No Canvassing — No Experience Needed!

Now can we make this wonderful offer? Because more representatives are needed right now to show a marvelous added feature of FASHION FROCKS—sensational new styles personally designed by the lovely screen star, Constance Bennett, "one of the world's ten best-dressed women." Miss Bennett, famous for her unique style sense, now designs exclusively for FASHION FROCKS. Her Hollywood-inspired creations will thrill millions of women. Be the one to present these exciting dresses to your friends and neighbors. Remember, they can't be bought in stores, so people must come to you if they want to be admired in stunning Constance Bennett originals. FASHION FROCKS carry the famous Good Housekeeping guaranty seal. You can make good profits without previous experience. Our special cooperation plan helps you to exceptional earnings like these:—Marie Patton, Ill., earned an average of $28.84 weekly—Mrs. Claude Burnett, Ala., averaged $27.10 weekly. No wonder so many of our representatives bless the day they mailed the coupon below!

AS YOU LIKE IT
A wearable gabardine classic that goes straight to your heart—and his!

Everything Free — But Delay May Be Costly!

Openings have been going fast ever since the first announcement of Constance Bennett's FASHION FROCKS. Don't risk missing out on this astonishing offer. Decide to use your spare hours to pay you a rich reward—in a pleasant, dignified way. Develop a steady group of regular customers, who buy from you season after season. Mail this coupon now to reserve valuable Style Presentation Portfolio sent FREE. No obligation—and nothing to pay. Just paste coupon to postcard and mail it today.

Free PORTFOLIO OF LATEST FALL DRESSES as low as $3.98

Celebrating Our 40th Birthday This Year!

SOAP 'N WATER FABRIC that takes you places in traditional style.

Fashion Frocks INC.

Desk 52054 Cincinnati 25, Ohio

"THESE LOVELY FASHION FROCKS WERE INSPIRED BY CREATIONS I DESIGNED FOR MY PERSONAL WARDROBE AT $200 TO $300 EACH. I AM HAPPY TO OFFER THEM AT A TINY FRACTION OF THOSE PRICES!"

Constance Bennett

... Glamorous star of stage, screen and radio, one of the world's 10 best-dressed women, she designs exclusively for FASHION FROCKS.

FIRST NIGHTER
A classic black dress — demurely charming for any occasion.

PASTE THIS COUPON ON POSTCARD — mail now!

FASHION FROCKS, INC.
Desk 52054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

YES—I am interested in your opportunity to make money in spare time and get my own dresses without a penny of cost. Send me full information, without obligation.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *Zone*____ *State*_____

*Age*_____ *Dress Size*_____

EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER!

THE WARTIME CIGARETTE SHORTAGE WAS A REAL EXPERIENCE. I LEARNED THAT CAMELS SUIT ME BEST!
Elaine Decker
WELL-KNOWN FENCER

More people are smoking CAMELS than ever before

"The shortage taught me the big differences in cigarette quality," says Miss Decker

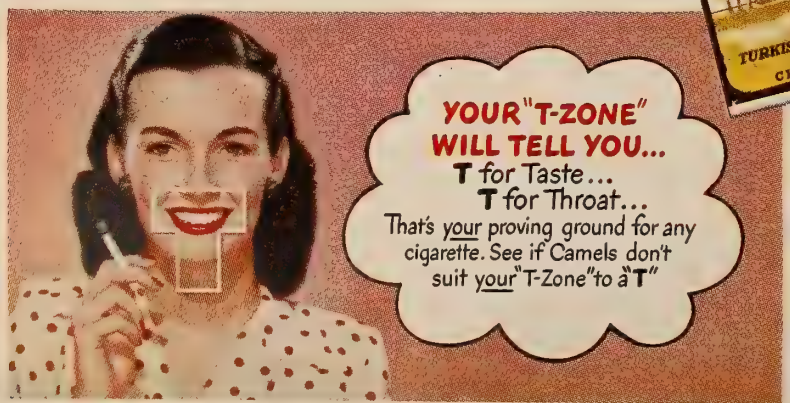
SMOKERS everywhere shared your experience with cigarettes, Miss Decker. They too smoked many different brands . . . and compared.

And millions found that experience is the best teacher . . . that for smoking pleasure you just can't beat the rich, full flavor and the cool mildness of Camels. That's why today more people are smoking Camels than ever before. But, no matter how great the demand:

We don't tamper with Camel quality. Only choice tobaccos, properly aged, and blended in the time-honored Camel way, are used in Camels.

It wasn't much fun, standing in line, taking any brand you could get. But that's when millions learned what cigarette suited them best — Camels!

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C.



YOUR "T-ZONE" WILL TELL YOU...
T for Taste...
T for Throat...
That's your proving ground for any cigarette. See if Camels don't suit your "T-Zone" to a "T"

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS

than any other cigarette

Three nationally known independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors to name the cigarette they smoked. More doctors named Camel than any other brand.

©C1B 96541

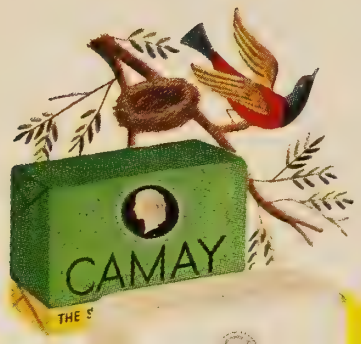
sept. 15c

modern screen

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
SERIALS DIVISION
SEP 26 1947
RECEIVED

PER.

L MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE • L MAGAZINE •



MRS. GERROLD WESTON HART
the former Shirley Humphreys of New York
Bridal portrait painted by Sam Jaffe

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE HART STORY:

Romance began when Gerrold came to tea at the Humphreys' family apartment in New York. No wonder – Shirley's complexion is really something to see!

Just One Cake of Camay brings your Skin a Lovelier Look!

After a June wedding the Harts honeymooned in Oklahoma where they saw the famous Indian dances, and Shirley's "little-girl" loveliness nearly stole the show. P.S. Shirley promises to stay on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet!

Compliments come to you when your complexion's right. And you can possess a softer, lovelier skin with just one cake of Camay! Renounce all careless cleansing and go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet! Follow directions on the wrapper. Camay—so mild it cleanses without irritation —can make your skin so much smoother, lovelier!

AUG 13 1947

"What d'you do — Poison those arrows?"

CUPID: Sure! Arsenic, strychnine – take your pick. I aim to please.

GIRL: Verr-ry funny. But you know darn well you're not aiming to please me! Huh – and the folder said, "Cupid always gladdening the days at Mountain View Inn"...

CUPID: Now wait a minute! You go around looking like the meanest trick of the week, and you expect me to—. Look, cookie, try smiling at men for a change!

GIRL: It'd be a change for the worse. My smile's the original tattle-tale gray. I brush my teeth, mind you –

CUPID: Don't mind me. Just answer this: Do you see "pink" on your tooth-brush?

GIRL: Well –

CUPID: Well, that's a warning to see your dentist. Let him decide what's wrong. Maybe it's just a case of soft foods robbing your gums of exercise – and if so, he may suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

GIRL: Please try to concentrate. We were speaking of my smile.

CUPID: First things first, feather-brain. Sparkling smiles depend largely on healthy gums. So, if your dentist suggests massage, then massage, Sis! 7 out of 10 dentists do recommend gum massage. And get this – a nation-wide survey shows that they prefer Ipana Tooth Paste 2 to 1 for their own personal use.

HOW TO MASSAGE YOUR GUMS. Gently massage at the gum line, always keeping fingertip in contact with the tooth surface. It's at the gum line, where teeth and gums meet, that so many troubles start – where gentle massage can be so helpful. Between regular visits to your dentist, help him guard your smile of beauty.

Ipana

Product of Bristol-Myers

For your Smile of Beauty

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S
LION'S ROAR
Published in this space every month
The greatest star of the screen!

"The Romance of Rosy Ridge"—a story bristling with action, crackling with thrills—is an authentic piece of Americana.

★ ★ ★ ★

And the accent is on "The Romance" because Van Johnson has found a new and exciting darling to love in blonde, vivacious Janet Leigh (rhymes with Whee!). She's in every sense a girl to watch.

MacKinlay Kantor's Satevepost story, set in the embattled border states, seethes with scores of exciting scenes: night raids by black-hooded marauders; bare-knuckle fights to the death; gunplay; breathless races against the elements; lovers' nights alone on moonlit mountainsides.

★ ★ ★ ★

Van in this new element is an elemental Van, a different Van, a man who's really in the van.

★ ★ ★ ★

No wonder that between the fights and the feuds, Van finds time to sing tender love ballads to Janet Leigh—the girl of his heart—and sings as he never has before.

★ ★ ★

Gusto went into the acting of stalwart Thomas Mitchell, Marshall Thompson, Selena Royle, Dean Stockwell. Zest went into the screenplay by Lester Cole. Roy Rowland's direction, the production of Jack Cummings have vigor and taste.

★ ★ ★ ★

All is rosy in "The Romance of Rosy Ridge".

★ ★ ★ ★

Not far over the horizon are two other M-G-M biggies: "Song of Love", starring Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker, which shapes up as one of the greatest love stories of all time; "The Unfinished Dance", in Technicolor, starring Hollywood's biggest little star, Margaret O'Brien.

★ ★ ★ ★

Entertainment-wise, M-G-M shines bright in the summer skies.

—Leo

SEPTEMBER, 1947

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

GLENN FORD'S LIFE STORY ..... by Eleanor Powell 28
THREE MONTHS AND OUT! (June Haver) ..... by Hedda Hopper 30
THE RABBIT GOT AWAY! (Guy Madison and Gail Russell) 32
SONNET TO A LADY (Ingrid Bergman) ..... by Sam Wanamaker 34
"DANA? THAT'S MY BOY!" (Dana Andrews) ..... by Harriet Parsons 36
PARIS LABEL (Louis Jourdan) ..... by Christopher Kane 38
THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE (Bill Eythe and Buff Cobb) ..... by Virginia Wilson 40
LADY IN THE DARK (Hedy Lamarr and John Loder) ..... by Florabel Muir 44
ENCORE! (Jeanette MacDonald) ..... by Cameron Shipp 46
MISS TIERNEY REGRETS (Gene Tierney) ..... by Elizabeth Farrington 48
SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY (John Payne and Gloria De Haven) ..... by George Benjamin 50
WE THREE (Jeanne Crain) ..... by Paul Brinkman 52
MOMENTS OF MAUREEN (Maureen O'Hara) ..... by Louis Pollock 54
FAMILY MAN—WESTERN STYLE (Roy Rogers) ..... by Jean Kinkead 56
DON'T GET AROUND MUCH ANY MORE (Lon McCallister) ..... by Jack Wade 58
THE DELICATE ONE (Loretta Young) ..... by Kirtley Baskette 61
AH, YOUTH! (Beverly Tyler) ..... by Jane Wilkie 62

features

GOOD NEWS ..... by Louella Parsons 4
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "The Hucksters" ..... selected by Dorothy Kilgallen 14 DEMOCRACY ON THE SCREEN ..... by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt 27

departments

REVIEWS ..... by Virginia Wilson 18
FASHION ..... by Constance Bartel 73
BEAUTY: "No Puffing!" ..... by Carol Carter 82
INFORMATION DESK ..... by Beverly Linet 84
FAN CLUBS ..... by Shirley Frohlich 94
MUSIC: "Sweet And Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 102

COVER PORTRAIT BY NICKOLAS MURAY ● DESIGNED BY LESTER BEALL

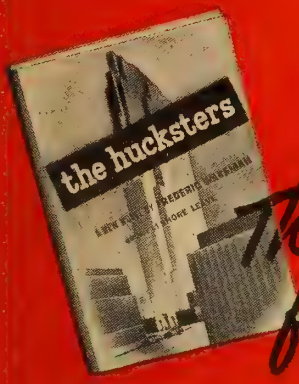
ALBERT P. DELACORTE, Executive Editor HENRY P. MALMGREEN, Editor

TOM CARLILE, western manager

BERYL STOLLER, associate editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
BEVERLY LINET, information desk
CHARLES SAXON, cartoon editor
ROMA BURTON, western editor
GUS GALE, staff photographer
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
DON ORNITZ, staff photographer
CARL SCHROEDER, editorial consultant
LAYNG MARTINE, promotion director
JEAN KINKEAD, contributing editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 35, No. 4, September, 1947. Copyright, 1947, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year, elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930. at the post office, Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879 The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence Trademark No 301778



The STORY for Gable

The GIRL for Gable

CLARK GABLE

The ROLE for Gable

DEBORAH KERR

SYDNEY
GREENSTREET

ADOLPHE
MENJOU

AVA GARDNER · KEENAN WYNN · EDWARD ARNOLD

The HUCKSTERS

Screen Play by Luther Davis • Adaptation by Edward Chodorov and George Wells • Based on the Novel by Frederic Wakeman

Directed by JACK CONWAY • Produced by ARTHUR HORNBLOW, Jr. • A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture

Van and Evie Johnson showed up at the Coronet Theater for the opening of Skin Of Our Teeth, starring—Keenan Wynn! Evie's wearing her "lay-off" present, bought while Van was laid off the studio payroll.

Two enthusiastic first-nighters were Gene and Betsy Kelly. Gene, now a first v.p. of Screen Actors' Guild, has sold a story of his own to Metro and may direct and star in it.

Southpaw Jane Powell was among the 40-odd celebrities at the party Station KFWB threw for disc jockey Martin Block. The guests put on a 3-hour show for 30 partially paralyzed vets from Birmingham Hospital.

As soon as picture commitments allow, the Cornel Wildes told KFWB party guests, they'll be off to Honolulu—on the trip Cornel earned by posing for steamship line ads.

The Vincente Minnellis (Judy Garland) are excited over the screen debut of daughter Liza, in Judy's next picture, The Pirate, which Vincente is directing.

Andy and Della Russell, with an old friend, bandleader Horace Heidt, recalled that it was Martin who gave Dinah Shore her first job on a N.Y. station.

Three divorces hit Hollywood last month—each with its different problem of heartache and bitterness.

June Haver and Jimmy Zito, Annelle and Mark Stevens, and Hedy Lamarr and John Loder have all called it quits in an outbreak of marital aches and pains generally grouped under the head of "incompatibility." Incompatibility? My eye!

Let's look behind the scenes in each case.

If you've heard that the "inside" on the break-up of June Haver and Jimmy Zito is that another girl has been in love with him for years and that she came between them—don't you believe it.

There is no other man or woman in this rift, that came after just three short months of marriage. I know more about the real cause than I am at liberty to print. I can say that June is not the offender in this case and that she has grounds on which to ask an annulment.

But I do blame her, and other girls in and out of Hollywood, for not giving marriage as much consideration and thought as they do their careers.

Why? Well, some of them want to get away from home, they want to have their own lives and apartments without family restrictions. Or they are blinded by infatuation. Or they think "experience" is necessary to being a good actress.

They don't stop to think that marriage is the most important step they can take and that the only basis for a lasting marriage is love, understanding and companionship.

Aiding Frank Sinatra's campaign to bring big-time sports to L.A. were Lana Turner and Ty Power, who thrilled Gilmore Stadium ringsiders. Unfortunately, they quarrelled later, and cancelled plans for a double-vacation trip.

Deserting baseball for the evening, Leo Durocher and Laraine Day gave boxing a boost. Later, Frank Sinatra and Joe Louis confided to the Durochers that they'd like to do a short on tolerance together.

Will Marie MacDonald be Mrs. Harry Karl? Shoe-magnate Karl, a boxing fan, explained the finer points to Marie during the exhibition match between Joe Louis and Harry Wills.

GOOD NEWS

June Haver and Jimmy Zito are of two different worlds. Hers is Hollywood, where she has her home and career. His is the hectic night life of a musician moving from place to place. Yet, after a whirlwind courtship—they eloped to Las Vegas. What makes it more serious for her, they were later married in her faith.

This reckless marriage can ruin her life. Unless she is able to obtain a religious annulment this mistake can mean that she cannot marry again within her church.

What a price to pay for thoughtlessness. I am sorry for June. But surely there is a lesson in her experience for other girls who may be thinking of jumping into marriage without taking time to know their hearts and their men.

* * *

With the Mark Stevenses, it is something else again.

Mark's health, or lack of it, has played a big part in the rows and temperamental scenes they have been staging for the past year and which eventually led to their break.

For a long time, Mark has suffered from a spine trouble that has had him in and out of hospitals for corrective and painful operations.

One of their battles that did not reach the prints was so serious that Mrs. Stevens said, before the birth of their baby, "As soon as the baby is born we will have to part."

In her condition, naturally, she was high strung. So was Mark. For almost a year after the birth of the baby they both adore, they tried to make a go of it.

The final flare-up occurred at a party given by George Jessel, who is producing on the same lot with Mark. George told me, "It was just one of those typical quarrels married people get in now and then at parties. No one thought it was serious and I still think they might get together again."

Heaven knows, their friends are keeping their fingers crossed—hoping. But weeks have gone by and there is still a lot of bitterness on both sides. So, I don't know.

* * *

Hedy Lamarr and John Loder are legally at

In our family, father wore the pants, but—

MOTHER WORE TIGHTS

Mother and Dad were in Show Business. No family ever had such a life!

And now all the fun, the love, the music, the laughter of it has been brought to the screen. "Mother Wore Tights" is the first real, true story of Show Business and Show People. And it's all in Technicolor.

You'll love every minute of it!

Betty Grable is Mother.

And everyone is talking about Dan Dailey as Dad. Lovely Mona Freeman is my big sister, Iris—And Connie Marshall is me—

Mother's Loving Daughter

Mikie

20th CENTURY-FOX TECHNICOLOR TRIUMPH!

Technicolor

starring

BETTY GRABLE

with

DAN DAILEY

and

MONA FREEMAN · CONNIE MARSHALL

Vanessa Brown · Robert Arthur · Sara Allgood · William Frawley · Ruth Nelson

Directed by WALTER LANG · Produced by LAMAR TROTTI

Screen Play by Lamar Trotti · Based on the Book by Miriam Young

Deborah Kerr's handsome husband, Tony Bartley, visiting her on location, arrived just in time for a picnic lunch. The Bartleys are returning to England for the birth of their baby, and it may be a year before Deborah will make another Hollywood picture.

GOOD NEWS

Shirley Temple will make a film with husband John Agar, at last! But John will work on location—and won't have a single scene with S it hammer and tongs at this writing.

I feel sorry for Hedy and I feel sorry fo John. There's no doubt but that she has bee in a very neurotic condition for over a year She's all twisted up in her thinking.

One minute she told him she loved him. The next, her lawyer told him she was filing for divorce.

Loder is completely confused and now he i thoroughly angry. He says Hedy reconcile with him just long enough to get him to sig papers agreeing to pay her "room and board" when he wasn't working—if you can ti that! He signed other papers involving com munity property. Whether she divorces hin or not, he has now made up his mind to su to have these papers set aside.

As for Hedy—she needs to get hold of her self and make up her mind what she wants ou of life. The pity of this battle is that there are two children involved and Hedy's littl adopted son.

* * *

Let's get on to more cheerful subjects. Fo instance, Joan Fontaine, who realizes tha great, big parties are never fun parties. Too many different crowds get mixed up. So she gives dinners for twenty or thirty congenia friends—and in this way she has become a extremely successful hostess.

The last party she gave, she served dinne in the new playroom she and her bridegroom Bill Dozier, have added to their beautifu Brentwood home. It's a huge room done i soft shades of green—Joan's favorite color The hostess herself wore—what else?—a charming green gown.

I hadn't seen Maureen O'Hara for some time and I was amazed to see how much weigh she has put on. I suppose by the time this is in print, she will have taken it off. These glamor girls know how to take off weigh and do it quickly when necessary. To add to the illusion of weight, she was wearing a peppermint stick dress, and stripes are neve slenderizing.

Betty Hensel seems to have been accepted by all of Cary Grant's friends—even though she and Cary no longer see each other. She is now devoting herself to a young English man named Foxall—but I wonder if the spark for Cary is completely dimmed.

David Niven came in late. He's working like mad to get through so he can go home to England.

Laraine Day and Leo Durocher made their one and only social appearance at Joan's. This pair, so sensationally publicized, neither smoke nor drink and are the quietest and mos retiring couple I've ever seen at a party!

* * *

You can't get either Van or Evie Johnson to admit it, but they're hoping it will be a girl That's because Evie has two little boys already and Van has a hankering for little girls, anyway. "You can tie bows on them," he kidded—but he's not kidding much. If they get their wish and if it is a girl, she'll have an old-fashioned name like Mary or Betty.

(Continued on page 10)

LADD and LAMOUR are
TERRIFIC!
Meet the screen's new thrill team . . . in a picture that will set your heart pounding!
Paramount presents
ALAN LADD · DOROTHY LAMOUR · ROBERT PRESTON · LLOYD NOLAN
in
"WILD HARVEST"
with
DICK ERDMAN · ALLEN JENKINS
PRODUCED BY ROBERT FELLOWS
Directed By TAY GARNETT
Screen Play by John Monks, Jr.

Why do you act so funny, honey?

JEEPERS, JEANIE! I'M NO BIG DAME HUNTER—I'M THE GUY WHO'S GOING TO BE YOUR HUSBAND. REMEMBER?
I'M NOT SO SURE, TED. I'D RATHER BE SHOT THAN TELL YOU THIS—BUT WON'T YOU PLEASE SEE YOUR DENTIST ABOUT BAD BREATH, DEAR?
TO COMBAT BAD BREATH, I RECOMMEND COLGATE DENTAL CREAM! FOR SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE THAT IN 7 OUT OF 10 CASES, COLGATE'S INSTANTLY STOPS BAD BREATH THAT ORIGINATES IN THE MOUTH!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!
COLGATE
RIBBON DENTAL CREAM
Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

Like her mother, Tina Crawford, 8, is an accomplished knitter. And it looks as though Otto Preminger, directing Joan in Daisy Kenyon, will be gifted with Tina's latest effort. It's a thank-you gesture for the new dachshund Otto gave them, to replace the late "Pupchen."

GOOD NEWS

When I first heard that Joan Crawford and the cowboy star, Don "Red" Barry, were romancing like crazy, I couldn't believe my ears.

Joan always does startling things to make people talk. It's been one of the secrets of her perennial success. I thought, "Having a cowboy actor madly in love with her is probably just another one of those things!"

But, NO! This romance is blazing and several of her close friends are now beginning to believe that she may even marry him.

If lavishing a lady with gifts is the right way to get her to say "Yes," Don is sure doing his stuff. To date he has given her a diamond necklace, a compact that has a sapphire for a "lid" (along with this went a matching ring and earrings) plus a Platina Fox fur coat. These trinkets are only the headliners. Don never enters the Crawford menage without perfume, flowers, hankies, gloves or some other "remembrance" for Joan or the children.

When she was in love with Greg Bautzer, they appeared in public almost every night, dining and dancing. Joan would rather dance than eat, and Greg is a wonderful dancer.

Since "Red" came into her life, they've seldom stepped out anywhere, and I hear tell he isn't much when it comes to traipsing the light fantastic. So it must be looooove!

* * *

If your mind runs to figures, you may be interested in these fancy quotations.

Joan Crawford was Hollywood's highest salaried lady for last year, taking in $400,000.

Closest to her (and not too close at that) was Bob Hope, cashing $275,000 of Paramount's checks. His side kick, Bing Crosby, drew $250,300, with Ray Miland coming up with $234,166 for his chores.

I think this may surprise you—the highest priced male at Warners is one Stanley Morner, better known as Dennis Morgan, who kept the wolf from his door by $261,000 worth.

Need I add that all these fancy figures are before the Income Tax man starts grabbing?

* * *

I still think that Nora Eddington Flynn's retort snappy to Lili Damita was the best crack of the month.

Nora, who is the current Mrs. Errol Flynn, and Lili—who was Mrs. Flynn No. 1—were unfortunately invited to the same party. For such a warm evening, there was plenty of ice floating around.

Finally, Lili said to Nora, "Oh, pretty soon you'll be fat and he'll walk out on you, too."

Nora opened wide her great big eyes, "But Lili," said she, "you were never fat!"

* * *

So many people are traveling in Europe or are away on vacations or are busy making pictures that our social life has been a bit on the slow side. There have been parties—but most of them small ones.

The biggest party of the month was given by the William Goetzes, honoring the English movie biggie, J. Arthur Rank, and his wife.

It was a glamorous night, believe me, with all the stars sparkling inside and out.

(Continued on page 12)

THE HOWL IN THE NIGHT IS THE VOICE OF DANGER!

ERROL FLYNN

BARBARA STANWYCK

HIS FIRST MIS-STEP
WILL BE HIS LAST MISTAKE!

IF SHE WEREN'T SO IN LOVE
SHE'D BE SO AFRAID!

WARNER BROS. present

"CRY WOLF"

with that rising young star
GERALDINE BROOKS

Directed by Peter Godfrey

Screen Play by Catherine Turney • From the Novel by Marjorie Carleton • Music by Franz Waxman

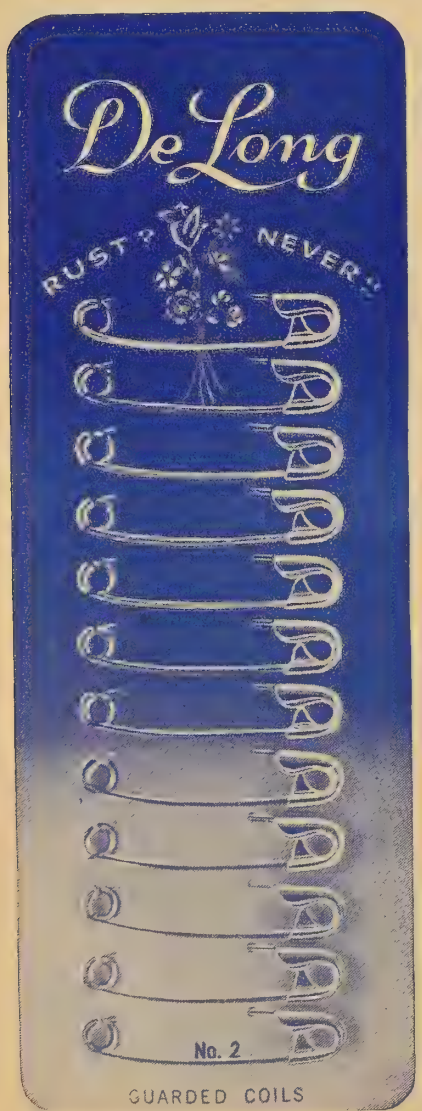
Produced by Henry Blanke

welcome! SOON WARNER BROS. BRING Clarence Day's "LIFE WITH FATHER" in Technicolor TO THE SCREEN!

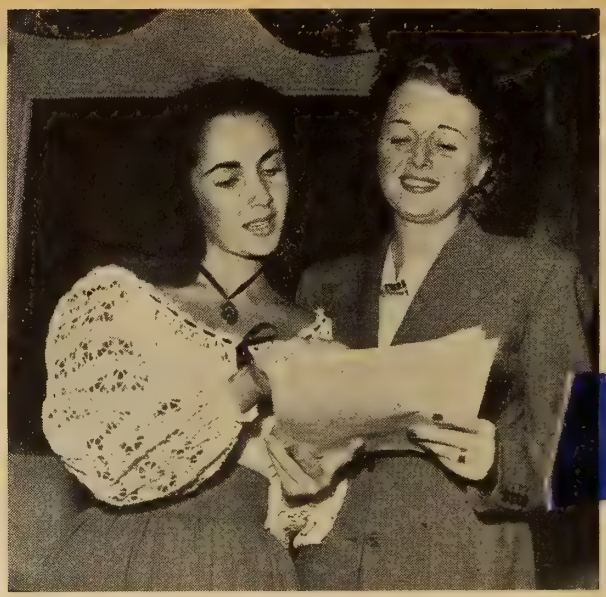
YOUR BABY'S BILL OF RIGHTS

... calls for regular meals ... baths ... plenty of love ... and the best of everything—including the Safety Pins that anchor his pants.

That's why smart, conscientious Mothers buy DeLong Safety Pins ... made of sturdy brass wire that won't rust, and with guarded coils that can't get caught in the diaper material



All Brass . . Won't Rust
Guarded Coils . . Won't Catch



GOOD NEWS

Mary Astor and Elizabeth Taylor repeated their mother-daughter roles for the radio broadcast of Cynthia. The following week, Liz nearly drowned while swimming, and suffered severe shock!

Greer Garson, who left England before Rank became the power he is today, had a long talk with him. But she spent most of the evening with Louis B. Mayer, her boss—so I don't think Rank made much headway, if he was trying to get her back for English movies.

The Charles Boyers and the Ronald Colmans were together, as usual, and—as usual—talking about their children. Juliet Colman and Michael Boyer are about the same age and Mrs. Boyer said:

"We're announcing right now that they are engaged. We think we ought to keep all this money in the family!"

Henry Fonda and I had a lot to talk about. His wife and my husband had both been patients at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore at the same time. "More than that," I told Hank, "Dr. Martin (my husband) bequeathed your wife his private telephone, the only one in the hospital, when he left."

Joan Bennett, a vision in white lace, looked so much like a debutante herself I couldn't believe it when she told me she was leaving next day to see her daughter, Diana, graduate from finishing school.

Another eyeful was Ava Gardner with David Niven. When she walked in, every masculine eye in the place turned in her direction.

Everyone agreed that Mrs. Ray Milland is the most beautiful non-professional wife of an actor in our town. She is always so gracious and nice.

I wish I could say that for the wife of another big star. I like him very much—but for my money, you can take her or leave her. Sometimes you can forgive people who have accomplished something big on their own, for being a little conceited. But this lady's chief claim to snobbishness seems to be that she married a movie actor.

Deborah Kerr, so attractive and such a darling, was with her equally charming husband, Tony Bartley. Speaking of the non-professional mates of stars—he's certainly a winner.

We almost had the jinxed Hope Diamond in Hollywood—and hanging around the neck of Ginger Rogers! I say "almost," because at the last minute the trustees of Evalyn Walsh McLean's estate, turned down the $20,000 offer from Ginger's producers to use the beautiful but unlucky gem for a scene in It Had to Be You.

I heard several women stars say they wouldn't wear the Hope Diamond for a split second—but Ginger told me she isn't superstitious.

* * *

Close-up of Mrs. John Agar: Her other name is Shirley Temple . . . when she knits or reads she wears big gold-rimmed glasses . . . She's never changed her favorite color, which is blue—any shade . . . She loves "dates" with her husband to go nightclubbing or dancing just like "before we were married" . . . She weighs 102 pounds and has grown an inch since her wedding, so she now stands five-feet-two inches . . . A few weeks ago she tried dieting for the first time, didn't like it, and gave it up. She'll take hers off swimming and playing tennis, thank you . . . She's very rich, but she keeps herself on a budget and if it goes quicker than she expected, she just doesn't take her girl friends to lunch that week, that's all . . . Now and then, very rarely in fact, she has a case of the "blues" without knowing why. But if she can turn on the radio or play some records, she snaps out of it . . . She loves engagement parties and showers and any festivity connected with romance . . . Her favorite flowers are tea roses . . . She can't cook very well, and doesn't care . . . Jack Benny slays her . . . She can't stand people who get laughs at the expense of someone's feelings . . . And she doesn't like even mild or cute risqué jokes . . . She will eat corn on the cob in the middle of the night in case there's any around . . . She likes to eat in bed . . . Her private-life clothes are smart, chic and expensive, and she likes gloves very much . . . Her lipsticks are vivid—but she has grown tired of "gaudy" fingernails . . . She is, and always has been, a darling!

MURDER!
MANHUNT!
Raw-nerve realism and terrific excitement thrill... in this high suspense drama of the kind of a killer who makes you mad all over!
DORE SCHARY PRESENTS
ROBERT YOUNG · ROBERT MITCHUM · ROBERT RYAN
in "Crossfire"
with GLORIA GRAHAME
PAUL KELLY · SAM LEVENE
RKO RADIO PICTURES
Produced by ADRIAN SCOTT · Directed by EDWARD DMYTRYK · Screen Play by JOHN PAXTON

dorothy kilgallen selects "the hucksters"

Clark Gable throws over a $35,000 advertising job (with ulcers!) for lovely Deborah Kerr.

■ At last! Clark Gable's back and a good picture's got him!

He's back in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's screen version of the controversial best-selling novel, The Hucksters, which cost them $300,000 and serves as an intelligent and unusual vehicle for what Gable fans pay to see and hear—the big shoulders, the sardonic smile, the between-the-eyebrows frown, the hot look and the voice that has more "Come on, baby, we're wasting time" in it than any other voice in America.

All this is eminently pleasing to the female picture-goer, and should prove equally gratifying to the male, except possibly on the way home.

Since movie audiences are, of course, larger even than the ranks of best-seller buyers, it will be necessary to explain to many flicker fans that the term "hucksters" refers to the advertising business and the gentlemen who for juicy salaries casually referred to as "$20,000 a year" and "$35,000 a year with bonuses" dream up the cheese and soap and cigarette and headache powder commercials that enchant and/or irritate the nation's radio listeners. (Continued on page 16)

INGRID BERGMAN
as Joan Madou, a woman of the shadows

CHARLES BOYER
as Ravic, the ghost doctor

The Enterprise Studios present this magnificent production of

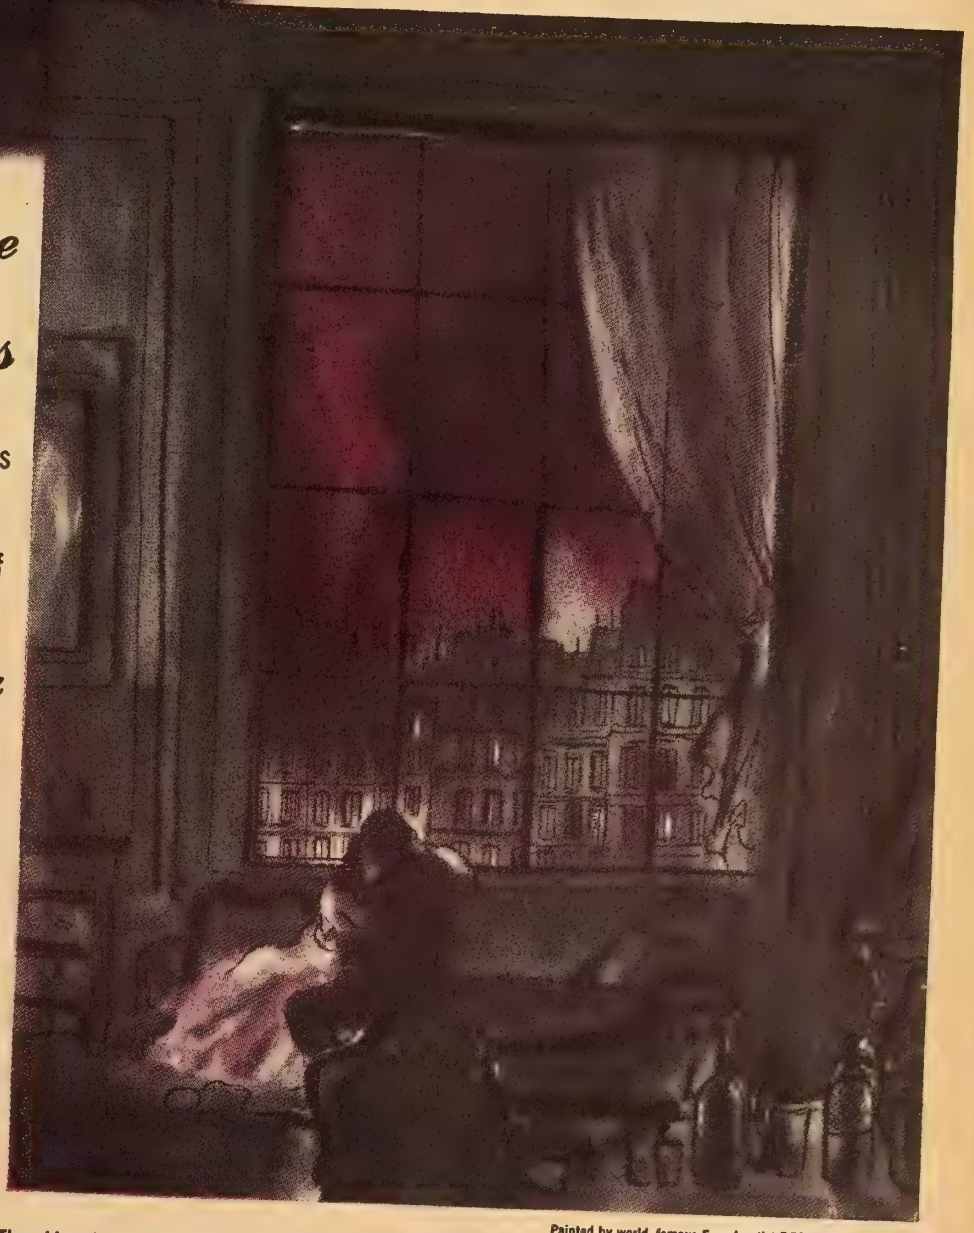
Erich Maria Remarque's

great novel... the most important screen event in years!



Painted by world-famous French artist BERNARD LAMOTTE

They kissed . . . and the street noises of Paris, the ominous shadows of tomorrow, seemed far away . . .

ARCH OF TRIUMPH

co-starring CHARLES LAUGHTON

with LOUIS CALHERN • RUTH WARRICK • ROMAN BOHNEN
RUTH NELSON • MICHAEL ROMANOFF • A LEWIS MILESTONE Production
Produced by DAVID LEWIS • Directed by LEWIS MILESTONE • RELEASED THRU UNITED ARTISTS

TEETH SHOULD SHOW IN YOUR SMILE

NEVER

IN YOUR HAIR-DO

TEETH NEVER SHOW WITH

*Goody

KANT-SLIP* COMBS

...BECAUSE ONLY KANT-SLIP COMBS HAVE CONCEALED TIGHT-GRIPPING TEETH

Only Goody Kant-Slip combs have this overlapping patented construction making the teeth invisible in your hair.

ONLY 10c

Available in a variety of popular sizes at leading 5 and 10c stores and notion counters.

Made by the makers of famous GOODY barrettes • curlers • wave clips

*REG. TRADEMARK

FOR BETTER HAIR AIDS BETTER REACH FOR GOODY

DOROTHY KILGALLEN SELECTS "THE HUCKSTERS"

(Continued from page 14)

As any hep New Yorker can tell you, most of the characters are based on actual inhabitants of the advertising world, and the result is a behind-the-scenes glimpse of everything from the phenomenon known as the story conference to the feudally tyrannical sponsor, in this case played bombastically (and rather lovably, I thought) by the very capable Sidney Greenstreet.

Clark Gable is Vic Norman, the huckster who hawks his wares ever more successfully than most of the well-tailored worriers of his profession, until the hour when he can no longer like his work and himself, and quits the whole business on the crest of his greatest triumph. But all through the story, under the carefully accurate clothes and the "sincere" ties, ripple the Gable muscles, shines the Gable animal vitality, breathes the Gable personality that give vigor and life and excitement to a theme that easily could have run into a groove of trade talk and intellectual debate. Happily, it doesn't. The picture has, indeed, more than its share of romantic interest.

Two—count 'em—beautiful ladies vie for the Gable affections in The Hucksters, the more ladylike being Deborah Kerr, M-G-M's answer to any petulance on the part of Greer Garson, and the more beautiful being Ava Gardner, whose services seem to grow increasingly valuable to her studio with each new appearance. Miss Kerr is brunette, elegant and charming; an excellent actress and perfectly suited to the role of the British widow of an American general (oh, yes, the story's been changed some!) and Miss Gardner is direct, sexy and entirely believable as the singer who is frankly and understandably smitten with all the things Clark Gable is. The one who "gets" him in the end should, I think, be a secret until the admission price has been paid, but it can be said without fear of contradiction that any man in the audience would be delighted to take the leftover.

No expense was spared in the cast. Edward Arnold contributes a splendid and sympathetic bit as the head of an "octopus" talent agency. Adolphe Menjou portrays an upper-brackets advertising executive with such high tension you can almost see his ulcers. And Keenan Wynn races through one brilliant scene as Buddy Hare, a broken-down but ebullient comic. Quite a supporting cast!

With all this, however, the essence of The Hucksters' appeal is Clark Gable, and that is what they will be buying at the box office windows and that is what they will be grateful for when the final take fades out. He is one of the great "naturals" of the screen, and therein lies his easy force. There is no need for subtitles to translate what he is thinking when he looks at a woman in the back seat of a taxicab, and there is only one thing that a woman could possibly think of when she looks at him. This makes it all very simple and fine.

It makes the whole business of Gable's appearance in The Hucksters add up to one word:

Wow!

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

We don't like to brag—even about you lovely people—but no one can hold a candle to MODERN SCREEN's readers when it comes to discovering new stars. It seems that every big name you see in M.S. today first saw print (in your own legible writing) on the dotted lines below. We know that many of you regard the M.S. Poll as a delightful monthly ritual—but just to make it more interesting, we're offering 500 three-months FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS to the first 500 of you who send in the Questionnaire below—neatly filled in with the names of your favorite and—if any—unfavorite stars! But please act IMMEDIATELY—or those subscriptions will all be gone!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

If any of the stars below is UNPOPULAR with you, please check the box opposite his or her name. If you like them all, please check the box opposite "No dislikes." CHECK ONLY ONE BOX!

☐ Betty Grable	☐ Cornel Wilde
☐ June Allyson	☐ Rita Hayworth
☐ Judy Garland	☐ Guy Madison
☐ Van Johnson	☐ Lana Turner
☐ Jane Wyman	☐ Shirley Temple

☐ No dislikes

My name is.....

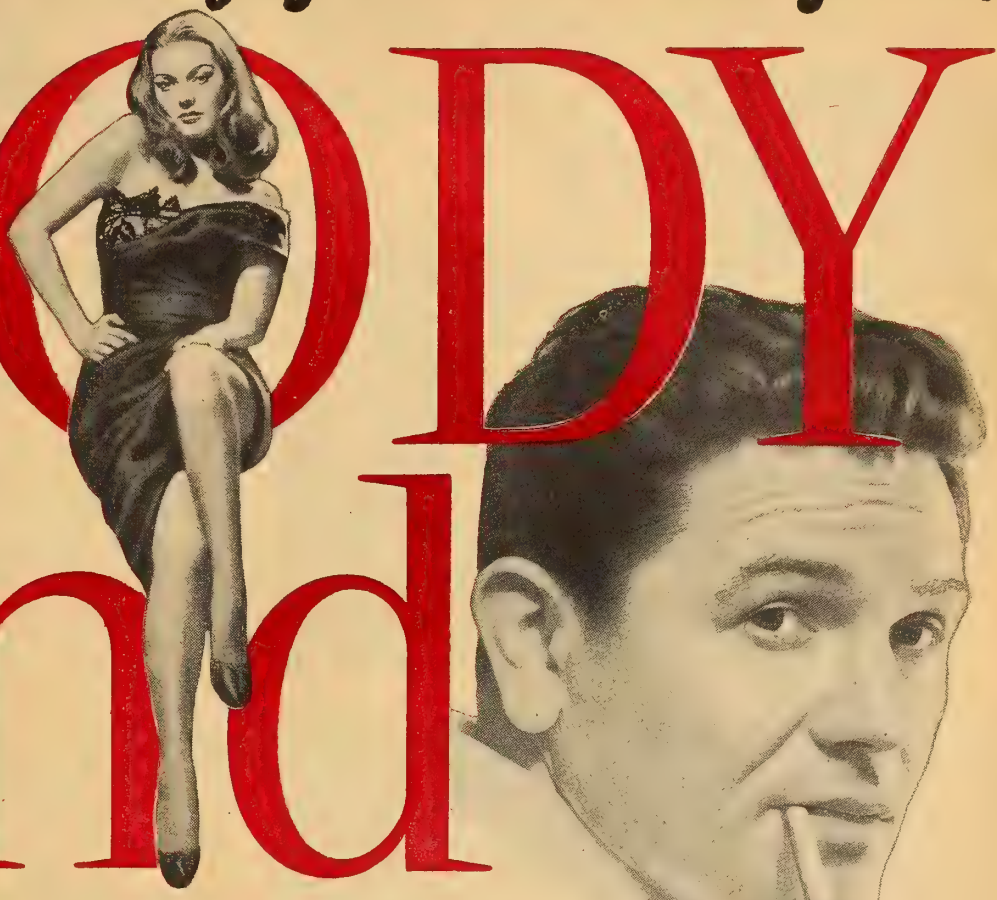
My address is .....

City..... Zone.....State ..... I am..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

The story of a guy that women go for!

BODY and SOUL



JOHN GARFIELD
LILLI PALMER
in 'Body and Soul'

and introducing exciting
HAZEL BROOKS
as ALICE

with
ANNE REVERE

WILLIAM CONRAD • JOSEPH PEVNEY
LLOYD GOFF • CANADA LEE
Original screenplay by ABRAHAM POLONSKY

Directed by
ROBERT ROSSEN
Produced by BOB ROBERTS

RELEASED THRU UNITED ARTISTS

A new climax in entertainment from THE ENTERPRISE STUDIOS

Father (William Powell) loves Mother (Irene Dunne) dearly, but he wishes she'd forget this baptizing nonsense.

Clarence, Jr. (Jimmy Lydon) can't woo Mary (Eliz. Taylor) properly—not while he's wearing Father's old suit!

When his precious Vinnie (Irene Dunne) is ill, Father promises her anything if she'll get well—even that he'll be baptized. Grimly, he sets off to keep his "sacred promise," with the whole family along to witness the performance

movie reviews

by Virginia Wilson

LIFE with FATHER

Life With Father is running merrily along in its eighth year on Broadway. Now comes the Technicolor picture version, which is just as funny and human and lovable. William Powell makes a superb "Father," complete with red hair and a red mustache.

Father is an irascible but charming gentleman who, in 1880, rules his household with an iron hand encased in an immaculate chamois glove. He and his wife, Vinnie (Irene Dunne), have four redheaded sons and a house on Madison Avenue. They live very well, but Father is fond of saying that they could live much better if Vinnie were not so bad at accounts.

Vinnie has a very feminine mind, and while her arithmetic seems logical to her, it drives Father crazy. For example, Vinnie buys a china dog at McCreery's and charges it. Father looks at it and says, "Oh, Gad!" in anguished tones. He says that to practically everything. Anyway, he tells his wife firmly to take that atrocious creature straight back to McCreery's.

Vinnie, like most very feminine women, can be stubborn. She won't take the dog back. But then the problem of a new suit for Clarence (Jimmy Lydon) arises, and she sees a chance to kill two birds with one dog. Clarence can get a suit at McCreery's for twenty-five dollars. So Vinnie explains carefully to Father that she'll take the dog back, get a suit for Clarence, and the whole transaction won't cost a cent, since the dog was charged anyway. Father says, "Oh, Gad!"

The reason Clarence needs a new suit is because he's in love with pretty Mary Skinner (Elizabeth Taylor). She regards him with awe and admiration because he's going to Yale. And Clarence finds himself totally unable to kiss her as long as he's wearing an old suit of Father's. The personality of the former owner imbues it too thoroughly.

So much happens every day in Father's house: the medicine that the two youngest boys sell the neighbors with dire results. The arguments about Father's baptism. Vinnie's getting sick—"Deliberately, to show me how helpless I am without her," Father declares. "Oh, Gad!"

I hope you'll enjoy the picture as much as I did.—War. (Continued on page 20)

Both THESE BOOKS Free!

if you join the Book League of America now

THIS SENSATIONAL 524-PAGE BEST-SELLER!

A Roaring Tale of Flaming Passions in WICKED NEW ORLEANS! 1,000,000 Copies Sold!

DEVIL-MAY-CARE Stephen Fox landed in New Orleans with a ten-dollar gold piece, a pearl stick pin—and a swaggering audacity. But he gambled his way to wealth and power—won the blue-blooded Odalie—then her lovely sister, Aurore—and finally the sultry quadroon with the creamy skin and golden hair, Desiree.

Here are blood and thunder, swashbuckling adventure, ardent romance—in the "wickedest city in the world." "As sheer entertainment, it will take backwater from nothing," says the Chicago Sun of this million-copy best-seller.

The FOXES of HARROW

-and YOU ALSO GET FREE CHARLES DICKENS' HEARTWARMING STORY GREAT EXPECTATIONS

IN addition to your free copy of The Foxes of Harrow, you ALSO get—as your second FREE book—the stirring novel by Charles Dickens, Great Expectations. Millions have laughed and cried at this moving story of a penniless orphan whose mysterious benefactor made him the richest man in London! Now it has been made into a motion picture that the critics are raving about!

The N. Y. Times calls it "Perfect!" The N. Y. Herald Tribune says: "Irresistible entertainment." "Superb, brilliant, delightful, enchanting!" raves the N. Y. News. You can have Great Expectations FREE, as one of your TWO FREE BOOKS on this amazing offer!

Scene from Great Expectations, starring John Mills and Valerie Hobson. A J. Arthur Rank presentation, released through Universal-International Pictures.

You Get Both Books FREE—with Membership in the Book League

IT COSTS you nothing to join this Club. And every month (or less often, if you wish) you may receive the current Selection—a best-seller by an author like Ben Ames Williams, John Steinbeck, Somerset Maugham, or Ernest Hemingway—a book selling for $2.50 and up in the publisher's edition. But you can get it for only $1.49!

You Also Get FREE Bonus Books

IN ADDITION, for every two Selections you accept, you get—FREE—a BONUS BOOK, an immortal masterpiece by Shakespeare, Balzac, Dumas, Zola, etc. These BONUS BOOKS are handsomely and uniformly bound; they grow into an impressive lifetime library.

You Do NOT Have to Take Every Monthly Selection

You do NOT have to accept each monthly Selection; only six of your own choice during the year to fulfill your membership requirement. And each month the Club's "Review" describes a number of other popular best-sellers; so that, if you prefer one of these to the regular Selection, choose it instead. No membership dues; no further cost or obligation.

Mail the coupon without money, and you will receive at once your free copies of The Foxes of Harrow AND Great Expectations. You will ALSO receive, as your first Selection, your choice of any of these 3 best-sellers:

Gentleman's Agreement—Daring novel which became America's No. 1 Best-Seller—almost overnight!

This Side of Innocence—Sensational best-seller about the woman who had to choose between marriage without love—or love without marriage!

Strange Woman—The astounding story of a "Maine Cleopatra"; now a smash movie hit!

Send No Money—Just Mail the Coupon Now

Send coupon—without money—now. At once you will receive, FREE, The Foxes of Harrow AND Great Expectations. You will also receive, as your first Selection, the book you have chosen in the coupon here. Enjoy these three books—two absolutely FREE, the third at an amazing bargain price.

When you realize that you can get popular best-sellers like these month after month at a tremendous saving—and that you ALSO get FREE Bonus Books—you will understand why this IS "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club." Mail the coupon—without money—now. BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA, Dept. MM9, Garden City, N. Y.

Mail This Coupon To

BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA
Dept. MM9, Garden City, N. Y.

Please send me—FREE—The Foxes of Harrow AND Great Expectations. Also enroll me, free, as a member of the Book League of America, and send me, as my first Selection, the book I have checked below:

☐ GENTLEMAN'S AGREEMENT
☐ THIS SIDE OF INNOCENCE
☐ STRANGE WOMAN

For every two monthly Selections I accept, I will receive, free, a BONUS BOOK. However, I do NOT have to accept each month's new Selection; only six of my own choice during the year to fulfill my membership requirement. Each month I will receive the Club's "Review," describing a number of other best-sellers; so that if I prefer one of these to the regular Selection, I may choose it instead. I am to pay only $1.49 (plus few cents' shipping charges) for each Selection I accept. There are no membership dues for me to pay; no further cost or obligation.

MR. / MRS. / MISS .....
(Please Print Plainly)

ADDRESS.....
Zone No.
CITY.....if any.....STATE.....
If under 21
Occupation.....age please.....

Slightly higher in Canada. Address 105 Bond St., Toronto 2, Can Arthur Murray Girls tell how to keep "dainty while dancing"!

This safe-and-sure deodorant is their secret!

GLAMOUR GIRLS to their toes . . . Arthur Murray's instructresses are experts in more than dancing routines . . . they make sure of their complete personal daintiness through those hours of dancing!

THEY SAY that they rely on Etiquet above all other deodorants for safe-and-sure protection. Because Etiquet works so effectively, with such efficiency, it can be depended upon to stop underarm odor, check perspiration during hours of active exercise.

YOU, TOO, can share their secret of personal charm by using Etiquet. And how you'll love Etiquet's fluffy-lightness! The way it stays moist in jar—will not harm delicate fabrics. Get Etiquet at all cosmetic counters—in 10¢, 25¢, 39¢ and 59¢ sizes.

Etiquet

The safe-and-sure deodorant

PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK PRODUCTS CORPORATION

Kiss Of Death: Vic Mature, released from Sing Sing, marries Coleen Gray, who has taken care of his motherless children while he was away.

KISS OF DEATH

There are parts of this story which you might have read in a newspaper. A hold-up where a man is shot. A wife's suicide. The murder of an old woman. A gang killing, or what passes for it. Let's try to put these jig-saw pieces together and see what we get.

Piece number one is the hold-up of a jewelry firm. Three men are in on it and two of them get away. The third, Bianco (Victor Mature), isn't so lucky. He's shot in the leg by a guard and the police get him. The assistant D.A., a nice enough guy named D'Angelo, (Brian Donlevy) offers to make a deal if Bianco will talk. But he won't talk, so he goes up the river for a twenty-year stretch.

Twenty years is a long time. Too long for Bianco's wife (Patricia Morison) to wait. She drinks the first year, runs around with Rizzo, one of Bianco's partners in the hold-up, the second year, sticks her head in a gas oven the third. But there's another girl who loves Bianco enough to wait. She's a kid named Nettie (Coleen Gray) and he hardly knows she exists, but she loves him.

When Bianco hears that his wife's dead and his kids have been sent to an orphanage, he remembers D'Angelo's offer to make a deal. There's nothing to hold him back now. His partners didn't take care of his family as they had promised. Let them have a taste of prison. Bianco turns stool pigeon. He's useful to D'Angelo, who doesn't let it be known where he's getting the information. Word around the underworld is that it's Rizzo who's "singing". A gunman, Udo (Richard Widmark), who's a wild, hopped-up sadist, kills Rizzo's crippled mother to teach him a lesson.

Bianco, out on parole now and happily married to Nettie, has to testify against Udo in court. Gangsters don't like to have people testify against them. They call it the "kiss of death" and the results are apt to be unhealthy.—20th-Fox

THEY WON'T BELIEVE ME

Larry Ballantine (Robert Young) is on trial for murder. He says he isn't guilty, but that's what most people say. "They won't

They Won't Believe Me: No jury will believe the strange story Robert Young has to tell about the mysterious death of Susan Hayward.

believe me," he tells his lawyer, "but anyway I'm going to tell them the truth."

The truth doesn't make a very savory story. Larry, married to a rich wife, Greta (Rita Johnson), falls in love with Janice (Jane Greer). He promises her he'll get a divorce right away. But when Greta tells him she has bought him a partnership in a Los Angeles brokerage firm, and has taken a house for them in Beverly Hills, Larry weakens. He leaves Janice without even a goodbye, and is soon being the busy, handsome young executive in Los Angeles.

There's always another girl for men like Larry. The next one is Verna (Susan Hayworth), the secretary of his partner, Trenton (Tom Powers). Verna is a practical minded little trollop. She knows Larry is married, but he can buy her champagne and orchids, so she doesn't care. At least that's the way it starts out.

Greta again tries to get Larry away from temptation by moving. She buys a hunting lodge in the country and takes him there, hoping to salvage what's left of their marriage. But Larry can't forget Verna. He decides to leave Greta, and go to Reno with Verna for a divorce.

It's a sudden move. He walks out of the house, just leaving a note for Greta. On the way to Reno, a truck hits the car he and Verna are in, and she is killed. When Larry comes to, he finds that the police have mistakenly identified Verna as Greta. The body is burned beyond recognition. And an ugly thought forces itself into Larry's mind. If Greta really was dead, he would have all the money, plus his freedom. If he could get to the hunting lodge before anyone finds out that Greta is still alive. . . .

Robert Young gives one of his best performances as the weak but charming Larry. —RKO

SLAVE GIRL

This glorified Fatima ad has more action and humor than you might expect from the title and general pattern. It's in Technicolor, too, and it begins in Washington in 1830 or thereabouts. A nineteenth century playboy, Matt Claiborne (George Brent) is sent to Tripoli on government business. It's a very

Are you in the know?

To rate, must your date be —

- ☐ A big-time spender
- ☐ A joe with a jalopy
- ☐ Just a grand guy

Would you only date a big wallet deal — or only a character who can chauffeur you around? Too bad to be labelled a snob-sister. Lads like to rate for themselves alone. A really charming girl is sincere. Self-assured, too . . . and when you go dating at certain times, remember those flat pressed ends of Kotex prevent revealing outlines. What's more, that Kotex Sanitary Belt keeps you oh-so-comfortable. Yes! Because it's all-elastic, adjustable — lets you bend without binding.

Which can help you land the job?

- ☐ Your grooming
- ☐ Your manner
- ☐ Your voice

Pipsqueaks and Timid Tillies don't score with the personnel department. But shyness and a tense voice needn't plague you — if you're sure you look smooth. That's one reason why good grooming is vital. It's a prop for your poise. On trying days, let Kotex help. Kotex coddles you with comfort . . . it's made to stay soft while you wear it. And because that special safety center gives extra protection, you can take poise for granted with Kotex!

To dramatize your eyes, should you —

- ☐ Keep 'em rolling
- ☐ Bead your lashes
- ☐ Dodge dark lipstick

You needn't go theatrical to get him to notice those glimmers. Come-hither glances may scare him off. (Likewise, "movie" lashes.) A subtler trick is to dodge dark lipstick. Paler shades are right for you . . . tend to add size to your eyes. And speaking of size . . . did you know Kotex (and only Kotex) comes in 3 sizes? So when you choose from Regular, Junior and Super Kotex, you're sure of having a napkin that's exactly right for you.

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

"I Believe in LOVE"

says Joan Caulfield

JOAN CAULFIELD STAR OF "WELCOME STRANGER", A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

Shopping on Wilshire, the pretty Star attracts eyes. "Hearts are more important," says Joan. "And soft feminine hands attract hearts."

Joan's own hands are heart-snares—soft as soft. "I use Jergens Lotion," she says. Other Stars say the same. The Stars use Jergens Lotion, 7 to 1.

Your hands, too, even softer, divinely smoother, now. Jergens Lotion is more effective than ever today. Contains two ingredients many a doctor relies on for smooth-softening the skin. 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax) for this hand care of the Stars. No oiliness; no stickiness.

For the Softest, Adorable Hands, use

JERGENS LOTION

FREE!

See for yourself why Hollywood Stars, 7 to 1, use Jergens Lotion

Mail coupon today for gift bottle. (Paste on penny postcard if you wish.)
Box 27, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. Please send my gift bottle.

184

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

(Please print name, address plainly.....Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only) simple mission or they wouldn't have trusted Matt with it. All he has to do is deliver a trunk loaded with gold to the Pasha, who in turn is to release ten American seamen he has imprisoned.

They send a bodyguard, Chips (Broderick Crawford), with Matt to make sure he stays on the straight and narrow path. But Chips gets side-tracked himself, the first day in Tripoli. He's a Yankee and can't resist a bargain. So when he sees a cute little slave girl being sold for practically nothing, he buys her.

Meanwhile, Matt's ever-wandering eye has been caught by an alluring, veiled and mysterious beauty called Francesca (Yvonne De Carlo). When she makes a date to meet him at a local bistro that night, it doesn't occur to him that it might have something to do with the trunk full of gold. .

The "date" doesn't turn out so well. Matt gets conked on the head and the gold is stolen. The Pasha (Albert Dekker), who's a very nasty piece of work, tosses Matt into the jug for not delivering the gold, as promised. Fortunately Chips and his little slave girl (Lois Collier) manage to rescue not only Matt but the ten seamen. However, the gold is still missing and the Pasha's men are just one quick jump behind them.

Francesca, who is the Pasha's pick for his next wife, has been playing a complicated little game of her own. She's in love with El-Hamid (Carl Esmond) who is starting a revolution against the Pasha, and she stole the gold to finance him. All she gets for her trouble is the brush-off from El-Hamid, so she transfers her affections to Matt, which almost gets them all shot.—Univ.

THE ROOSEVELT STORY

"We have nothing to fear but fear itself." Those words rang out at a time when the depression had a weary nation clutched tightly in its grasp. They were the words of a great man—a man whose story is inextricably mingled with the lives of all of us.

This picture is made entirely from newsreel excerpts. They go back to the days when he was first married, and show his early political ventures, before the illness which would have put an end to a lesser man's career. After

The Roosevelt Story: Highlights in the life of a great man, who once warned us all: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

Roosevelt becomes President, the milestones in his life are marked by achievements in national progress. Decent living wages for labor, improvements in housing, the development of the country's resources by projects like the TVA. His speeches are quoted, with all their heartfelt sympathy for the "little people," for those whose race or religion has made them the target of oppression.

Roosevelt saw that war was inevitable and made all the preparations for it that were in his power. He was deeply criticized for this by the isolationists and the unthinking, but his wisdom saved thousands of lives. All through the war, the people of Europe as well as America looked to his guidance. One of the most thrilling moments of the picture is when the American troops in Africa look up from drill one bright morning and see their President driving slowly across the field. They can't believe it, but it's so! And you can imagine the cheer that greets that famous smile.

Obviously a picture of this kind can show only the highlights of Roosevelt's career. They are enough to make us realize that his spirit, like that of Washington and Lincoln, will be with us forever.

THE WEB

This is a thriller, but not exactly a mystery. You're never in any doubt as to what is going on, but that doesn't detract from the excitement. There's some fine acting by Edmond O'Brien and Vincent Price, as well as clever dialog to sustain the action.

The plot is fairly simple. A man named Colby (Vincent Price) who's head of several corporations, finds himself in sudden need of a bodyguard. Reason—his ex-partner, Kroner (Fritz Lieber), whom he double-crossed and sent to jail on a million-dollar deal a few years ago, is out again. Kroner was always a gentle soul, but even gentle souls have been known to turn bitter after five years in prison on a phony rap. Also, Kroner has a daughter (Maria Palmer), who isn't gentle at all.

So Colby hires a bodyguard named Regan (Edmond O'Brien). Regan is a lawyer, actually, but lawyers are a dime a dozen around town, and Colby has offered him five thousand dollars to act as bodyguard. Regan

The Web: Edmond O'Brien, bodyguard to a man facing violent death, has found Ella Raines the only pleasant part of his job—until now!

GENUINE REGISTERED
Keepsake
DIAMOND RINGS
Trade Mark Registered

Never a Love so True ..... Never a Ring so Cherished

"Oh darling, it's the loveliest ring in the world!" Through six decades the choice of America's loveliest brides . . . a genuine registered Keepsake Diamond Ring is the traditional symbol of love. Only one diamond in hundreds meets the exacting standards of quality which distinguish every Keepsake Diamond. Identify Keepsake by the name in the ring, and the words "guaranteed AA registered perfect gem" on the tag . . . as illustrated. Let comparison prove that a Keepsake gives you higher quality and greater value than an ordinary ring of the same price. Better jewelers are Keepsake Jewelers. Prices from $100 to $5000.

All rings illustrated available in white as well as natural gold Rings enlarged to show details Prices include Federal tax

Look for the name "Keepsake" in the ring, and require the Keepsake Certificate of Guarantee and Registration.

A CONRAD Set	154.75	C HEATHER Set	362.50
Engagement Ring	125.00	Engagement Ring	350.00
B HUDSON Set	300.00	Also $100 to 2475 and
Engagement Ring	225.00	in platinum $300 to 3450

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

KEEPSAKE DIAMOND RINGS, A. H. Pond Co., Inc.
120 E. Washington, Syracuse 2, New York

Please send the useful 20-page book, "The Etiquette of the Engagement and Wedding" . . . a complete guide to social correctness in planning the betrothal and wedding events . . . with illustrations and prices of Keepsake Rings and the name of the nearest Keepsake Jeweler. I enclose 10c to cover mailing.

Name.....

Street and No.....

City.....

MSC 9-47

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

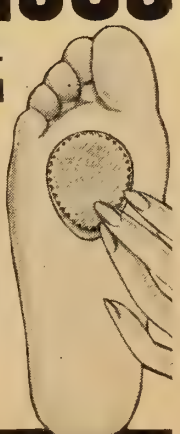
1 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. For good grooming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1.

Callouses

Pain, Burning, Tenderness Quickly Relieved

You'll quickly forget you have painful callouses, tenderness or burning on the bottom of your feet when you use thin, downy-soft, wonderfully soothing, cushioning Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads! Instantly lift pressure on the sensitive spot. Speedily remove callouses when used with the separate Medications included. Cost but a trifle. At all Drug, Shoe, Department Stores and Toiletry Counters. Insist on Dr. Scholl's.



Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

Crossfire: Detective Robert Young, trying to solve a murder without a motive, quizzes ex-soldiers Robert Mitchum and Robert Ryan, suspects. Later, he finds that anti-Semitism was the real reason behind the victim's death.

accepts, gets a pistol permit from a friendly police detective, Damico (William Bendix), and starts his new job.

One part of the job looks very attractive. That's Colby's secretary, Noel Faraday (Ella Raines). A little unapproachable, maybe, but a guy can keep trying. While Regan's trying, the next night, he hears a cry and a shot from upstairs. He rushes up and finds a strange little man with a gun in his hand threatening Colby. Regan shoots the little man, who of course is Kroner.

Detective Damico takes a dim view of the coincidences involved in this killing. Coincidence number one: Kroner gets out of jail one day and is shot the next. Coincidence two: Regan gets a gun permit for the first time and immediately kills a man. Coincidence three: there's a missing million in bonds involved.

Colby is sorry that Regan found it necessary to shoot Kroner, he tells the police. He is also sorry that Regan and Noel are getting so friendly. He's afraid it may mean trouble for Regan. He's right. It does.—Univ.

CROSSFIRE

Once in a while you see a picture which seems completely real and believable, even if the events in it are foreign to your own life. Crossfire is such a picture. I don't know how it's managed, but the characters act and talk like real people and the suspense holds you taut in your seat from beginning to end.

The suspense starts when three soldiers, ready to be discharged, drop into a bar. One of them, Mitchell (George Cooper), a neurotic but likeable lad, gets into a conversation with a guy named Samuels (Sam Levene). Later that night, Samuels is found beaten to death and the police begin a hunt for Mitchell.

Detective Finlay (Robert Young) picks up a couple of Mitchell's buddies for questioning. The first one, Montgomery (Robert Ryan), talks readily enough. Sure, they went up to Samuels' apartment. But he left before Mitchell did and he doesn't know what happened.

The other soldier, Keeley (Robert Mitchum), won't tell them anything. Not until he finds out what they have on Mitchell. "Mitch is no killer," he says stubbornly. "He's a tired, worried little guy but he wouldn't hurt anybody."

Keeley finds Mitch before the police do. He gets Mitch's version of the evening, which certainly doesn't include murder. Mitch says he, not Montgomery, was the first to leave Samuels' apartment. Monty, who hated Jews, was getting nasty, and Mitch left to keep out of the argument. He went for a walk. Later he went to the apartment of a taxi dancer (Gloria Grahame) who had promised to cook him some spaghetti. She wasn't there, but Mitch stayed and took a nap. Then he came back and met Keeley. He didn't kill Samuels. Why should he? Samuels was a nice guy.

That's what bothers detective Finlay for a long while—absence of motive. Then there's another murder and this time the motive is as clear as if it was in neon lights. This time the murderer has been too smart. A lot too smart.—RKO

HEAVEN ONLY KNOWS

Judging by recent pictures, things in the celestial regions are going rapidly to pot. They can't even keep their accounts straight up in heaven any more. Here's Michael (Robert Cummings) who's supposed to be a reliable type of angel, and look what he's done. Forgotten to keep a record on one Duke Byron. As a result, none of the things which were supposed to happen to Duke have materialized. Instead of being a fine upstanding civic leader, he owns a gambling saloon in Glacier, Montana. Instead of being married to a minister's daughter, he is hanging out with dance hall girls.

Michael reluctantly goes down to earth to fix things up. He is at what he considers an unfair disadvantage, since he knows nothing of earth's ways, and had been expressly forbidden to perform any miracles while he's down there. Heaven only knows how he is to get Duke reformed.

(Continued on page 124)

Its cleaner, brighter Taste means cleaner, brighter teeth! New Pepsodent, the only tooth paste containing Irium, removes the film that makes your teeth look dull—uncovers the natural brilliance of your smile!

A Product of Lever Brothers Company

Use Pepsodent twice a day—
see your dentist twice a year

Merle Oberon discovers New Improved DRENE

NEW! DIFFERENT!

The Miracle Shampoo that lets your hair Shine like the Stars!

It's a gloriously new, different Drene! A miracle shampoo adored by shining Hollywood stars like Merle Oberon. A wonderfully improved shampoo that now lets your hair shine like the stars!

Merle Oberon tells you: "It's easy to keep your hair shining with new Drene!" For this shampooing marvel now makes quicker, richer, more active lather. Brings out ALL the sheen now hidden by dulling soap film. Yes, far more sheen—by actual test—than you get with any soap shampoo.

Never dries out your hair! Instead, new improved Drene actually helps guard against "fly-away dryness." Now leaves your hair softer—smoother—far easier to set, curl, and arrange. Start now to use this shampoo of lovely stars in Hollywood. Get new Drene today.

Merle Oberon

Star of the RKO Picture "MEMORY OF LOVE" says:

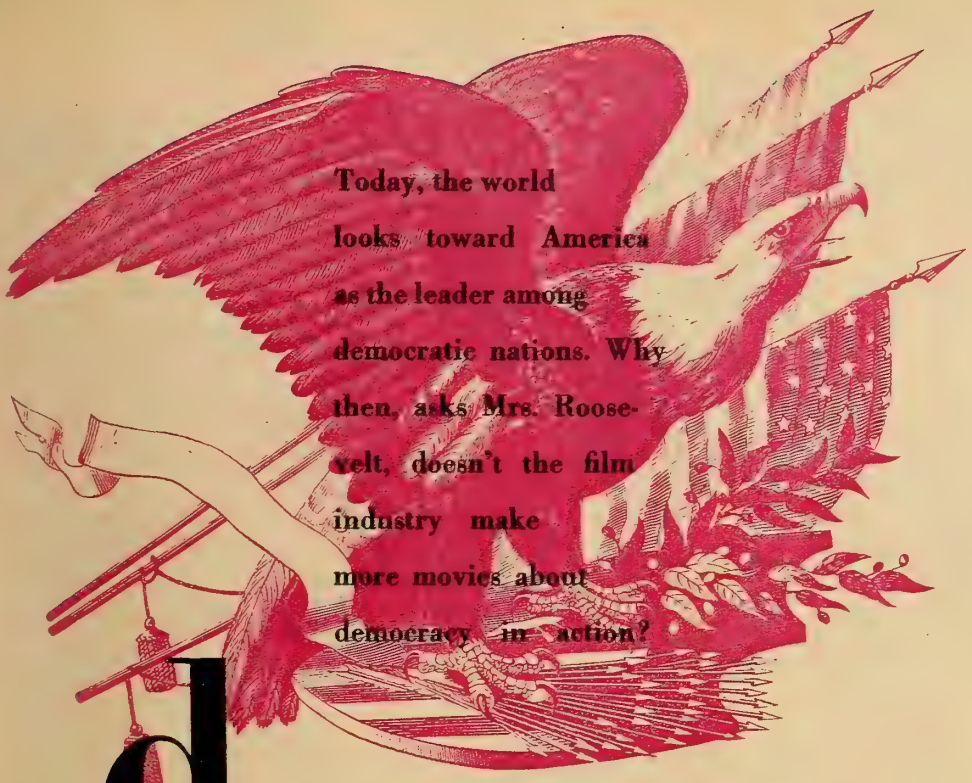
"My hair now has the most glorious sheen thanks to new Drene."

Now! Better for All types of hair!

New improved Drene is at your dealer's now in the familiar blue-and-yellow package.

First Shampoo ever to bring you ALL of these Beauty Miracles!

- ★ Reveals ALL the sheen in your hair
- ★ Never dries out your hair
- ★ Leaves hair far easier to manage
- ★ Marvelous hair conditioning action
- ★ Luxurious instant lather
- ★ Removes unsightly dandruff
- ★ No acid after-rinses needed
- ★ Flower-fresh fragrance



Today, the world looks toward America as the leader among democratic nations. Why then, asks Mrs. Roosevelt, doesn't the film industry make more movies about democracy in action?

democracy on the screen

by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt

■ There is a very necessary piece of educational work to be done in this country at the present time. Not only here, but in the world at large, the understanding of what the United States means by democracy is very limited. On the whole, it seems to me that our methods of communication are not being used to the full in spreading this knowledge. It can not be understood if only learned professors write about it. It must be told in print, over the air and in pictures. Perhaps the best and most effective medium is the moving picture. Practically everybody in this country, at some time during the week, goes to the movies. This large audience should be told the story of democracy not only by documentary films but by films that are purely fictional. All of the people, young and old, would then begin to understand what the rights and privileges of democracy are, and what obligations have to be (Continued on page 105)

He'd coughed over cigarettes, bloodied his nose a dozen times, and generally raised cain. But nothing was worse than that awful moment in the school play . . .

glenn ford life story

by eleanor powell
as told to howard sharpe

■ Glenn's mother, Mrs. Newton Ford, rang me early one Sunday morning shortly after our marriage. "Ellie," she said, "I think it's about time you learned a little more about the Ford family."

"What do you mean?" I said.

"Well, since he's so far away (Glenn was with the Marine Corps then), perhaps you'd like to look through some old albums I just dug up. I believe a new bride ought to know a little more about the man she married than his idiosyncrasies on the dance floor and what he likes for breakfast."

I said, "Have you got the usual picture of him in his birthday suit, perched on a pillow?"

"That one seems to be missing. Odd. It's been torn right out of the album. How mysterious!"

A few hours later, we were both comfortably seated on a divan, our laps piled high with a huge collection of family picture albums.

"Now you may not think this picture of the Quebec Theater should be the first in the book," Mrs. Ford said, pointing. "But there's quite a story attached to it. One of the happiest and proudest moments of my life was when my son brought me back here in 1940, for his first personal appearance in our home town. In fact, the house where Glenn grew up is just a block away from here."

"I suppose that's the old homestead, where he was born," I said.

"No, Glenn, or Gwellyn Samuel Newton Ford, as we named him, was born in Quebec Hospital at high noon."

In point of fact, there were so many Fords (Glenn's father had thirteen brothers and sisters) that the town they lived in was named Glenford. Glenn tells me that he loved it. His grandmother spoiled him generally, his aunt Lucy let him play with her sacred stamp collection, and there were two cousins—Betty and Stewart—who were his own age. If I'm to believe what he's told me, Glenn's first seven years were spent almost entirely in the confinement of a happy home environment. When finally the Fords decided to strike out on their own—leaving Canada altogether—he was not prepared for what was to come.

Venice, California, in 1923, was still a fabulous, (Continued on page 106)

THEIRS WAS A STORY-BOOK ROMANCE, WITH A TRICK MEETING, A LONG SEPARATION, THEN A SUDDEN ELOPEMENT. ONLY THE LAST PAGES OF THE STORY ARE BLURRED—WITH JUNE HAVER'S TEARS

■ The phone rang. It was Al Delacorte calling from New York. I didn't give him a chance to open his mouth. "Brother, I know what you want," I said. "The Haver divorce story."

Who didn't? This was Tuesday, June 17th. The day before, a small bomb had popped among the biggies on page 1:

> "Screen star June Haver, 21, announced today that she had separated from her husband, Jimmy Zito, 23, and will file suit for divorce in the near future. Her only explanation was that 'things didn't work out.' The couple was married on March 2nd in Las Vegas, Nevada, and re-married in a church ceremony on March 27th in Los Angeles."

Three months and out! Who wouldn't want the story? But Al's reason was special. You'll find it in the June issue of Modern Screen—"Secret Heart," by Abigail Putnam—or, how a girl discovered she was in love. Now, mind you, Junie's elopement came as a shock. All you heard at the time was, "Who's Jimmy Zito? Why Zito?" Well, the Putnam gal answered a lot of those questions. Then boom! with the sound of wedding bells still in your ears, they're busted up . . .

I hauled out the magazine, re-read the details and called Abby Putnam.

"June Haver's divorcing Jimmy Zito," I blurted.

Came a silence so long, I was sure she'd dropped dead. Then: "I don't believe it."

"Okay, Wide-eyes. Read all about it in the papers—when you get 'em."

"But it can't be true. Last time I saw that kid, she (Continued on page 109)

This is the picture you saw in our June issue, showing June and Jimmy just after they were re-married in St. Timothy's Church. They saw little of each other in their 3-months marriage.

Dr. John Duzik (dancing here with June at the Stork Club) was her constant New York escort. It was he, rather than Jimmy, whom gossips predicted would be June's husband.

Before marriage, June was seen frequently in Hollywood with David Rose, described as a "family friend." Even he was surprised at the Haver-Zito elopement to Las Vegas.

three months and out!

by hedda hopper

the rabbit got away !

IT'S DOWNRIGHT DANGEROUS TO TAKE GAIL RUSSELL ALONG ON A RABBIT-HUNTING TRIP, SAYS GUY MADISON. WHY, SHE MIGHT GET SHOT, OR SOMETHING—BEING JUST ABOUT AS CUTE AS A BUNNY HERSELF

■ One of the major sports of Southern California is jack-rabbit hunting. It may never take the place of gin rummy, but it has its devotees.

These devotees sometimes lead you to suspect it's a cinch. They say you just need a rabbit (there are thousands of them), a car to get the rabbit in (everybody in California has a car), and something to brain the rabbit with after you get there (ditto).

This isn't as heartless as it sounds, because jacks are destructive, and diseased. But it isn't as easy as it sounds, either. Modern Screen went along with Gail Russell and Guy Madison recently, and found that out.

So here's some data for you sports (Continued on page 87)

➤Snake-proof boots are removed only during lunch. Gail (in Variety Girl) held on to Guy's (in Honeymoon) hip pocket while climbing up the slippery grass.

▲Though clambering up mountains is hard going, the view on top makes it worth while. Gail says it's like beating your head against a wall—feels so good when you stop!

Bergman,
he kept telling himself,
was just flesh and blood,
like any other woman.
Only every time
Sam Wanamaker looked at Ingrid,
he thought he heard
angels singing. . . .

Sonnet to a Lady

by Sam Wanamaker

■ The other day I talked to Ingrid Bergman on the phone.

"Who was it?" asked my wife idly. I told her. She went on with her book, and I picked up the script I'd been reading. Suddenly we looked at each other and started howling. The same thought had struck us both at the same moment. A year ago, if I'd said, "That was Ingrid Bergman on the phone," Charlotte would have drawled, "Just fancy. And I had tea with George the Sixth yesterday, the Queen couldn't come," or some such pleasantry.

Last year Bergman had been a name, to be breathed on bended knee. Between then and now we'd worked together for months as actress and director, as star and leading man. We'd exchanged oceans of words, we'd become friends. Yet I still think of her, and probably always will, as the lady with an aura.

The first time I saw her she was sitting in the middle of the stage, like a beautiful calm island, in a bolero skirt and yellow blouse. The others were off to one side, making light conversation from a distance and trying not to stare. For five days we'd been rehearsing with her understudy and now Miss Bergman was here from California.

I'd been girding myself and tightening my belt for this moment. Behind me were two Broadway shows and two years in the army. After my discharge, I'd appeared in This Too Shall Pass, which ran six weeks. Forgive me for saying that my notices were good, otherwise you'll wonder what brought me into the picture at all.

What brought me in first—for a fast two seconds—was my feeling about Bergman. Not only did I admire her talent as an actress; to me she was also the most beautiful woman in the world. I am not by nature the hero-worshipping type, yet I found myself seeing her with a halo round her head. To be in a play with her was something to dream about. I dreamed about it and went on working in radio.

Then the grapevine started buzzing. They couldn't find a leading man for Joan of Lorraine. For this reason or that, the actors they wanted weren't available and they were beginning to read unknowns. (Continued on page 67)

Harriet Parsons has had her producer's eye on Dana Andrews for years. But she never really cared—until that lovely moment he dared her to stand on her head!

by HARRIET PARSONS

"dana? that's my

Dana invites his boss home to meet his women folk—Cathy, 5, and wife Mary. The "boss" is Harriet Parsons (right), Louella's famous producer-daughter, for whom he's now finishing Memory of Love.

■ The gals of the Hollywood Women's Press Club were in a festive mood. It was their annual Christmas party, time to give the Golden Apples to the actor and actress who had been most helpful and cooperative during the year to writers who bring the stars' lives, loves, and scrapes to the pages of MODERN SCREEN and elsewhere. When I stopped writing for magazines and newspapers, the Press Club invited me to stay in the fold, which is how I happened to get in on this clambake.

How I happened to write this story about Dana Andrews is still another yarn. When my quiet mother (you know her as Louella Parsons of GOOD NEWS) was in New York, Al Delacorte asked her to write it. LOP said sure, she'd do it. (She had nothing else to while away her time aside from radio shows, columns, and 9,628 other things.)

She's very handy with the long distance telephone so she called me at RKO Studios, where I hold forth. My secretary, Margaret, told her I was off tending to some studio knitting and couldn't be reached. I called her back later and guess what? She (Continued on page 121) boy!

Louis finds picture-making in Hollywood more complicated than in his native country—especially the care taken in measuring camera distances.

■ It was in Nice, on the Riviera, that he met her. He was tall, and handsome; she was small, and blonde. The story of Louis Jourdan and his wife might have served as the background for a musical comedy, in some other year, at some other time.

In 1940—the month was June—the Germans marched into Paris; they were unsentimental about Paris in the spring. The whole country fell, soon after.

There was what the Germans called an armistice, and France was divided into occupied and unoccupied zones, and the shaking voice of Petain begged the people to cooperate.

The people cooperated, or did not cooperate, according to their natures, and beliefs, and opportunities, and life went on, and the French film industry was told that it might make movies, so long as the movies had no political significance.

Which is how Louis Jourdan, the popular young actor, happened to be in Nice, late in 1940. He was working on a picture.

One Sunday afternoon, some friends stopped by. "Come, Louis," they said. "There is a girl we want you to meet—"

The girl's name was Frederique, and she was incredibly thin, and brown, and blonde.

She was also incredibly unfriendly.

Louis and his friends discussed the matter that evening. "So small a girl," Louis said. "To be so large a snob. Is it because I am an actor?"

"She is always like that with men at first," one of the friends explained. "At first she always answers a man to push him away, if you follow me."

But in such an unlovely time, filled with such an abundance of misery, it was pleasant to have a small blonde girl to think about.

If the Riviera air was soft, and a man was young, there was nothing the Germans could do about that.

Louis saw (Continued on page 101)

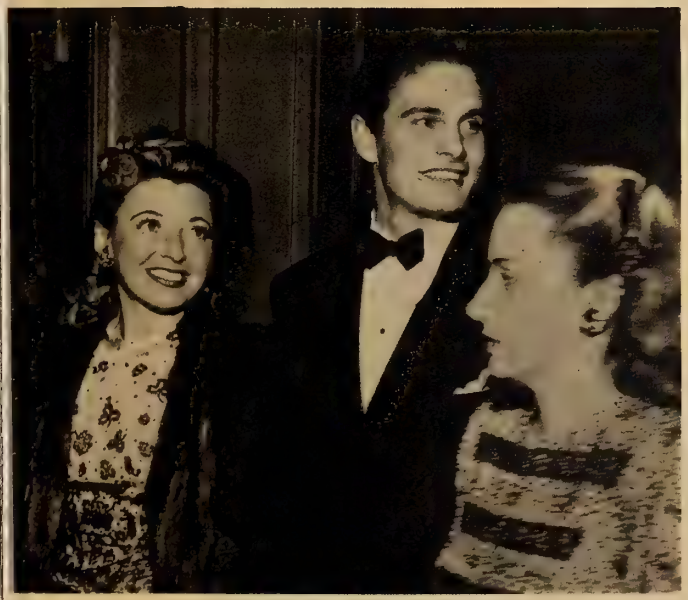
PARIS LABEL

"Imported from France"—as any woman knows, that spells romance. And even if Louis Jourdan's accent fades, he'll always bear a Paris label!

by Christopher Kane

Jean Pierre Aumont volunteered to teach his compatriot English, but Louis was so scandalized by Pierre's "Americanized French," he made him promise to practice up on those difficult French vowel sounds.



Described as a "Tyrone Power type," 26-year-old Louis Jourdan makes his American debut in The Paradine Case. Above, French-born Louis and his wife, "Quique" (left), enjoy their first Hollywood premiere.

The course of true love . . .

"Big Buff" fixes "Little Buff's" corsage just before the wedding. While Buffie's dress is new, the Brussels lace shawl she carried is two hundred years old, and was worn by her mother at her wedding.

Groom Bill Eythe wasn't nervous. Of course, he chain-smoked, nearly lost the rings, and paced a track in the carpet. Something he ate, no doubt—like those words about not marrying till 30! (He's 29.)

For months, Bill Eythe and Buff Cobb fought about silly things—like the color green. Till one day they agreed about the color for blossoms—orange.

BY VIRGINIA WILSON

■ On March 9, 1945, a girl with copper red hair, a pert nose and a neat assortment of curves, was having lunch with her grandmother. The place was the famous Pump Room in Chicago's Ambassador East, and the girl was little Buff Cobb. You called her little Buff automatically, not just because she was small but because of something childishly appealing about her.

That something was, at the moment, busy appealing to a handsome, dark-haired young man at the next table. He had been watching her ever since she came in.

"They certainly grow 'em pretty in Chicago," he observed now to the man with him.

The man turned. "I don't think much of her. Looks like a schoolgirl."

"You have no imagination. She's wonderful." Bill wasn't quite sure why she was wonderful. She just was. He had to say it.

Buff, who has phenomenal hearing, was taking in this conversation while she demurely ate a strawberry sundae. Her long lashes covered a side glance or two. Her grandmother, Mrs. Irvin S. Cobb, who never misses a trick, looked at her sharply.

"It's a good thing I'm with you," she said, "or you'd never make that train. Who is this young man you seem to fascinate? He looks familiar."

"His (Continued on following page)

Among those watching the bride and groom cut the cake was Major Frank Chapman, Buff's father, who's now married to opera star Gladys Swarthou name is William Eythe. I've seen him in lots of pictures," Buff said dreamily. She was feeling suddenly warm and sort of happy for the first time in months. Funny—and nice too, because maybe it meant that your life wasn't really over at eighteen, even though you were on your way to Las Vegas for a divorce. Maybe it meant that you hadn't really been so terribly in love with Greg Bautzer after all, and that some day you'd meet a man like this one with the sensitive, humorous face and intent dark eyes.

But it was almost train-time now, and daydreams were silly anyway, so off Buff went to Las Vegas. After the divorce came Hollywood, with a chance to get in pictures and no time to think about a luncheon in Chicago.

Then came the day Carl and Luci Schroeder gave the swimming party Buff sat in the dazzling California sun wearing a yellow sarong bathing su that showed off her tan. She wa dabbling scarlet-painted toenails in th pool when she glanced up at two ne arrivals who were saying hello to the hostess. She almost fell into the wate because one (Continued on page 96

Little Miss Knight—one of Buff's very junior miss friends—shakes hands with Big Mr. Mason. James, whom Bill met while making Meet Me At Dawn in England, is Buff's favorite actor.

The Eythes have it! Father and Mother Eythe and sister Ruth came in from Pennsylvania for the wedding. They arrived the day before, spent a hectic two days in New York, then hurried back home to tell Bill's Pa. friends all about the wedding.

"Yes, it's official now," smiles author Virginia Wilson. Before her marriage, Buff roomed with Virginny in N. Y., kept her awake nights talking about "that Bill Eythe."

The course of true love...

DYNAMITE!
In the most unusual story Modern Screen has ever printed, Hedy Lamarr tells why her marriage failed— and John Loder counters with a startling confession!
By FLORABEL MUIR

lady in the dark

Hedy's side:

■ There have been so many conflicting reports about the on-again, off-again marriage of beautiful Hedy Lamarr and handsome John Loder, the English actor, that I decided to get the truth straight from Hedy's lips. I asked her if it were true that she and John had reconciled.

"No," she said wearily. "He isn't living here. He left the show he was with in New York and came back here. We've had many talks but they haven't done any good. I'm very tired. I want a long rest."

Despite the fact that Hedy has become a very successful producer with her last picture, Strange Woman, clicking in a big way at the box office, she is as unhappy a girl as I've ever met. When I first saw her in 1941, right after she had married Gene Markey, successful Hollywood producer, she was so radiantly beautiful that she was a triple threat to every other girl in Hollywood. As I watched her one night at the Brown Derby, the thought never occurred to me that one day I would feel sorry for her. But as we talked about her marriage with Loder, I could see that she was very near the breaking point. Hard work, having two babies very close together, and facing an uncertain future in her marital relations has taken a great toll of her body and spirit. She is unhappy about another divorce. She hates the idea of not having been able to make a go of her marriages. There have been three of them and she had been pinning more faith in this last one than the others. But she has suddenly realized that she has three children to look out for—the oldest boy, seven-year-old Jamesie, she adopted while still Mrs. Markey—and deep in her heart she wonders if John will ever assume the obligations a husband and father should. In their talks she has written out certain things she would like to have him consider, but when I visited her, no understanding had been arrived at. Charming, lovable John isn't geared to keeping his nose to the grindstone, I'm afraid, and I think that is what frightens Hedy.

"I want to go away for a long rest," she told me. "I think I'll go to Lake Tahoe. I think I will be able to sleep better there. I'll take Jamesie along; he needs the security of being with me." (Continued on page 113)

John's side:

■ Here is John Loder's side of the ever widening breach between him and tempestuous Hedy Lamarr: "God knows I love my wife madly. I'd cut off my right hand if I knew it would make her happy," John told me.

He was obviously under a great strain, after weeks of chit-chatting with his wife in an attempt to iron out their grievances. "But there is nothing I can do," he continued. "She seems to be in the grip of some emotion that is stronger than our love. Mind you, I think she loves me as much as I love her. There isn't any one else in her life or in mine, and I'm hoping that some time we can get together again. I think if she went away for a long rest, away from any Hollywood influence, she would begin to realize that her happiness lies with me and in my arms.

"Ever since she began to take treatments from a psychoanalyst we have been in trouble. Right at the time when it looked as if we could iron things out, she had a dream about her father in which he beat her. This dream was interpreted by her psychoanalyst as fear of me. She told me she realized that she had been afraid of me ever since the children were born. I argued with her, reminding her that she had always told me her father had been wonderful to her and that it was her mother who had been so cruel. She then said recently she has come to realize that it was not her mother but her father who was cruel, and now she thinks that I am assuming the personality of her father in her eyes. You can see how difficult it is to battle with a dream. There isn't any reasoning I can bring to bear on that subject; there isn't any reasoning in it.

"In a talk with her attorney, Ronald Button, she admitted that I loved her; that I never came home drunk; that I never beat her or the children; that I loved them all dearly; that I never went about town making a public show of myself. These are the usual charges a woman makes against a man she wants to divorce. But she couldn't bring herself to charge me with any of them.

"There has been much talk lately of economics, and assertions that I was not holding up my share of the household expenses. For the first three and a half years of our marriage, I con- (Continued on page 123)

1. 1929: Jeanette first won screen success with Maurice Chevalier in The Love Parade, a gay, Continental comedy, typical of early screen musicals. Curiously, both staged triumphant comebacks this year.

2. 1935: Naughty Marietta marked the debut of Nelson Eddy—and the beginning of the most popular romantic singing team in movie history. Even today, fans still clamor for the return of the Eddy-MacDonald duo.

3. 1936: The following year, the Eddy-MacDonald team split up temporarily and Jeanette scored as a dramatic actress in the all-time hit, San Francisco, with Clark Gable. She also sang the famous title song.

4: 1937: By 1937, Jeanette had a brand new musical co-star in Allan Jones, whom many preferred to Nelson as Jeanette's leading man. In Rudolph Friml's colorful Firefly, they sang "Gianina Mia," "Sympathy."

5. 1941: Jeanette's favorite co-star—husband Gene Raymond—played her mad lover in the musical version of Smiling Through. A year later, Gene donned a lieutenant's uniform, and Jeanette retired from pictures.

6. 1947: In her "encore" film, The Birds and the Bees, Jeanette has a new screen mate—a pianist instead of a singer: Jose Iturbi. Their screen children are Mary Eleanor Donahue, Ann Todd and Jane Powell.

encore!

Out of sight, out of mind—that's the oldest Hollywood story. But Jeanette MacDonald's fans have written a different ending.
To them, she's never left home.

BY CAMERON SHIPP

■ Jeanette MacDonald's departure from Hollywood in 1944 was in the best tradition of light opera, romance, and red-heads.

Her renown was at concert pitch. Her high C's were liquid-clear and worth stacks of green, any time she cared to record them on sound film. Her pictures, from Love Parade to Naughty Marietta, to Rose Marie, San Francisco, and Cairo, to name only a tuneful handful, were world-famous.

Now she's back, a top star again at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and you'll see and hear her soon in The Birds and the Bees, accompanied by no less a virtuoso than the great Jose Iturbi. Why'd she leave? Where's she been?

She left Hollywood so suddenly that her own husband, Gene Raymond, didn't know her plans. This is how it happened:

The big airliner at the Burbank Airport was filling with passengers for Washington. In the waiting room, brigadier generals, sailors, WACS, WAVES and optimistic civilians jostled toward it.

"This is where we say good-bye, Bunko," said Gene. "Kiss me here. Forget the crowd."

"Oh, I can go farther than this," said Jeanette.

Gene was in uniform, a new uniform he had just donned after months of rigorous training as an intelligence officer. Like (Continued on page 111)

7. Gene and Jeanette relax at home in the peace and quiet of their swimming pool. Irregularly shaped, it's an engineering feat, the only one of its kind in Hollywood.

While in New York, Gene Tierney visited the local interior decoration and art galleries. Clever Gene selected cocoa damask draperies for her living room windows, which would beautify the room and also conceal an unattractive view.

Mr. Frederick House, of Saks' Fabric Salon, shows Gene (now in The Ghost And Mrs. Muir) material in her favorite color: white.

"It takes an awfully good husband," reads Gene's favorite quotation, "to make up for a life of independence." Which is why Miss Tierney regrets . . . but declines all proposals.

by ELIZABETH FARRINGTON

■ She was a very pretty girl, but her slip showed at least an inch. She wore an old felt hat jammed over her honey-colored hair, and not a bit of makeup. She was walking very fast up Second Avenue, but not fast enough to lose the group of kids behind her.

They were arguing loudly among themselves.

"I tell you it couldn't be her," one of them announced. "Didn't you ever see her in the movies? Gosh, she wears the grooviest clothes of anybody! She wouldn't be found dead with her slip showing and no lipstick."

Miss Tierney regrets...

Oleg Cassini, Gene's ex-husband, still designs her clothes. Here, Martha Matzner, dressmaker, studies Oleg's sketch for a new daytime dress.

When she was a little girl, children's clothes designers used to coax Mrs. Tierney to let Gene model. But Gene didn't have the patience she has now about fittings.

At the Parke Bernet Antique Galleries, Gene considered buying a Chinoiserie wall panel, made in France about 1830.

"It is, too, her," a pig-tailed blonde said stubbornly. "Nobody but Gene Tierney could look that pretty with her slip showing and no makeup!"

Gene, overhearing, was torn between amusement and annoyance. This little procession behind her was apt to spoil what had seemed like a good scheme.

For weeks now she had been haunting the Second and Third Avenue antique shops. She was decorating her mother's house in the country and an apartment in town for herself and her sister, Pat. It was great fun and she loved it, but there was a catch.

When you walk into an antique shop and are recognized as Gene Tierney of Hollywood, the prices jump like a kangaroo with a hotfoot. So a helpful friend suggested, "Go in disguise, Gene."

It had worked in the first shop she went to. She had gotten some lovely antiques at a reasonable price. Then she had run into the kids as they came out of school and they had immediately begun this "is you is or is you ain't" routine.

Gene stopped suddenly before a dingy window crammed with a mad assortment of what looked to the uninitiated eye like junk. That heavenly brass fender! She couldn't use it in the apartment—no fireplace—but it would be perfect for Mummy's place in the country.

A bald little man in shirt sleeves told her the price was forty dollars.

"I'll take it," Gene said. Then suddenly the old felt hat caught on a lampshade and fell off. From outside the shop came a long whoop of recognition. The kids stormed the door like an armored division going into battle.

"Hey, Gene Tierney, how about an autograph?" (Continued on page 71)

SENTIMENTAL Journey

SOMETIMES IT SCARES HIM, TO THINK HOW CLOSE HE CAME TO LOSING HIS "BEST INVESTMENT." BECAUSE NOW JOHN PAYNE KNOWS THAT'S WHAT MARRIAGE WITH GLORIA MEANS . . .

By GEORGE BENJAMIN

■ It was one of those nights. At eleven-thirty, when John and Gloria Payne came out of Ciro's, not even the glow from Los Angeles' 1600 neon-luminous square miles, sprawled glittering and breathtaking below Sunset Boulevard, could dim the moon. It was a full moon, and rain had washed the air clean; there was a breeze from the ocean.

"Where'll we go now?" he asked, after their car was driven up.

"I don't care. Let's just drive for awhile. It's a shame to waste a night like this."

"All right." He headed down wind-

The star of Miracle On 34 Street finds the behavior of his daughters another miracle. Kathleen, above, is still manageable, but Julie, 5, likes to invite strangers into the house—for daddy's autograph.

ing Sunset Boulevard, until the sea was on their left and Malibu and Santa Barbara ahead of them. "Feel better?" he asked.

"I've felt fine all day. I just wasn't in a night club mood."

"You seemed depressed. That's why I suggested Ciro's. Aren't things making out as they should at home?"

"So far as I can see, they are. Kathleen has a new expression."

"You mean one you can understand?" He pushed the cigarette lighter on the dash, found it wouldn't work, and used a match while Gloria held the wheel. "I had a fifteen-minute conversation with her last night and she didn't utter an intelligible sound. All nonsense syllables."

"Well, today something displeased her, and she said, 'Oh damn!' just as plain . . ."

John groaned. "That's just dandy. What did you do?"

"What could I do? If I made a fuss she'd think it was cute and keep right on saying it."

"Did she?"

"Well, as a matter of fact she did seem rather pleased with the phrase."

"Tomorrow I'll explain to her that it's pronounced 'darn,'" John decided.

"Will you be home tomorrow?"

"I'll be home for three or four days."

"John—I've an idea. Let's call the house from Malibu and just keep on up the coast. We could stop in Santa Barbara tonight, and make the Lodge at Pebble Beach tomorrow afternoon by cocktail time, and have Saturday night in San Francisco. Yes?"

"We haven't any luggage or clothes with us—not even a toothbrush."

"That's never stopped us before. We can pick up what we need in the morning, in Santa Barbara."

He took a deep breath. "Do you realize how (Continued on page 114)

we three

by Paul Brinkman

WHAT DO YOU DO WITH A WIFE WHO SITS ON CACTUS, SCOLDS FURNITURE, AND LAUGHS AT BABY BOOK RULES? IF SHE'S JEANNE CRAIN, YOU COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS . . .

■ One sunny day, three years ago, I was paddling in the Pacific Ocean with a certain girl I was pretty crazy about, named Jeanne Crain.

We waded through the waves into deep water, and I liked the touch of Jeanne's hand on my shoulder, swimming along. It was a good sign. Why else would a girl swim with her hand on your shoulder unless she kind of liked you?

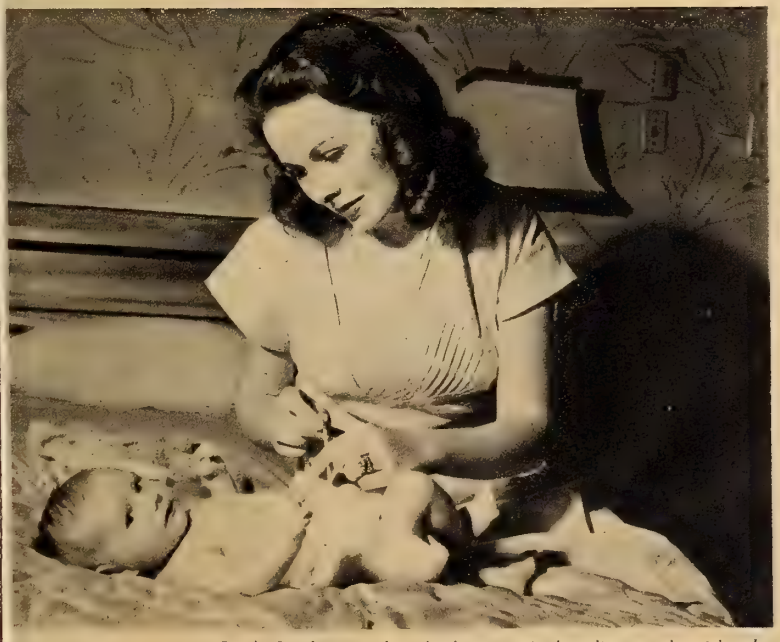
Just as I was patting myself on the back, I happened to look up at the sky. There, streaking south in perfect "V" formation, was the prettiest flight of geese I'd seen in a long time. I shot my arm up in the air and pointed excitedly as her hand slipped off. "Look, Jeanne," I yelled. "Wild geese!" I stared a few seconds, then turned around to catch Jeanne's expression.

There wasn't any. Jeanne had disappeared—sunk under the waves like a rock. I dived fast and grabbed her. "What happened?" I shouted. She just sputtered. "Can't you swim?" I asked, horrified.

"N-no," Jeanne gasped. We were several hundred feet out. I got her to shore all right, a little shaky but safe and sound. I started to teach her to swim that afternoon, you can bet, and a little later on I married the girl. Life with Jeannie has been packed with surprises ever since.

I chased Jeanne through Hollywood traffic—just like in the movies—to get her license number and find out who she was. That didn't work because the motor vehicle bureau wouldn't give me the name. So I had to wait for another coincidence, running across her among the millions in Los Angeles at—of all places—a pie counter at the Farmer's (Continued on page 117)

With a new house, new baby, and their respective careers, the day isn't long enough to discuss household affairs—so Paul and Jeanne talk things over during the dinner dishes.



Paul Brinkman, Jr., looks positively disgusted with the photographer. Can't a fellow have some privacy while he's dressing, huh? Ah, this life in a gold fish bowl . . .

▲ Her next film is The Flapper Age, but unlike the gals of the roarin' 20's, Jeanne has a talent for motherhood—whether it's bringing up Paul, Jr., or Terry, their wire-haired terrier.

It's the pixie in their souls that makes Maureen O'Hara play ball without a ball, and daughter Bronwyn end her "Hail Mary" with "had a little lamb . . ."

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

moments of maureen

■ The other pre-dawn, Maureen O'Hara opened her eyes on pandemonium. The room was tipping, and things were crashing to the floor in the dark. She looked over at her husband Will, who was not dropping a stitch of his sleep, and gave him a good shake.

"Will," she told him. "It's an earthquake!" Will Price hopped out of bed to investigate, and a minute later his face was peering at her through the door, and there was a smile on it.

"Sorry to rob you of the thrill, but that was no earthquake," he reported. "We're on a boat, remember? We just slipped anchor, and the boat is rolling up on the beach, or trying to. That crunching is the boat bottom grinding on the sand. The hull acts like a drum and amplifies it."

Maureen sat up in bed and giggled. "For heaven's sake, I'd forgotten about the boat. I thought we were home."

They went up on deck and looked around. They could see the riding lights of at least a dozen other boats anchored in the cove, but there wasn't a human visible. There was nothing to do but yodel for aid, since their Chris-Craft might spring itself open any moment. Between them they managed to wake everybody in the flotilla. The nearest boat came in for them and gave them a tow back to deep water, whereupon Maureen told Will that as the apprentice seaman aboard (after all, Will had been a major in the Marines and outranked her at sea) she would do a little swab duty.

Sunrise saw the job done, and Maureen sat in a chair blissfully re-living the (Continued on page 115)

Auburn-haired Maureen O'Hara (now in Homestretch) specializes in floppy-brimmed hats to shield her from the sun—even though husband Will Price says he "loves every freckle."

family man— western style

They seldom cry, the Roy Rogers children, even though the Lady of the House is gone. "Because," explains Cheryl gravely, "we don't want Daddy to feel bad."

By JEAN KINKEAD

■ If he were less of a guy he might be very bitter. His house in the Valley might be a quiet place where no child ever sang or laughed. As it is, the ranch house is still a happy spot where two little girls shout and play, and argue and makeup again; where a baby boy grows fat and healthy and grins at the whole world. For Roy Rogers is an extraordinary man. He hugs his sorrow close and burdens no one with it. He fills in the empty spaces his young wife's death has left in his life with hard work and good friends, with skylarking with his two pretty daughters, and of course with his little boy Dusty—after whose birth last fall Arlene died.

People ask Roy about the children. Are they lonesome and miserable? They're lonesome, naturally, but they are less concerned with themselves than with "poor daddy." They'd like to devote their every waking second to keeping him happy.

Evenings when Roy and Whitey (that's his stand-in and best friend) get home from the studio, Cheryl and Linda are on hand, a-quiver with plans.

"Let's go to the horse ranch and see Trigger." This is before the two men are even inside the door.

"I've just seen Trigger," (Continued on page 92)

He wouldn't take candy from babies, but Roy Rogers swipes their bike! With the star of Springtime In The Sierras are Linda, 4, Cheryl, 7, and Roy Jr., 10 months.

■ Lon McCallister swung his legs over the side of the couch and picked up the phone. He dialed and waited and then—"Hey, Coke," he said. (Coke is starlet Colleen Townsend.) "I'm putting the beach house up for sale. How's for painting the old joint red before some stuffed-shirt takes it over?" If you want to paint a place red, Coke's your gal. She's got more pep than a Marx Brother, and what's more she's a gorgeous thing.

It was a wonderful day. They swam and sang and ate clam chowder and talked the beautiful, incoherent and—for Lon—the almost-forgotten language of youth. And after he'd taken her home, Lon thought, "Say

(Continued on page 64)

don't get around much any more

No wonder Lon McCallister feels that life is passing him by. His ex-girl friends are raising families—and the current crop calls him "Pops!"

By JACK WADE

Before Lon tacked a "For Sale" sign on his Malibu beach house, he had a "last fling" at surf-and-sand sports. But that's no fun without a pretty mermaid, so Colleen Townsend (with him in Scudda Hoo, Scudda Hay) cheerfully obliged Lon beat Colleen at paddle tennis, so she tried to even the score by testing him at a more delicate skill—tying a draw-string blouse. You'll be seeing Colleen soon in Green Grass of Wyoming.

As a gag, they tried a musical duet. "Strictly from hunger," was their frank admission—which reminded Lon about the wonderful food at Tail O' The Cock, on Malibu pier (below). Colleen, on a diet, had only one sundae!

For an "old guy," Lon's still a good jitterbug—but luckless at fishing (below). So he sent Colleen into a shop, borrowed a "catch," and pretended he'd caught 'em while she was gone.

JUST IMAGINE! See them all together in one hilarious full-length picture!

There's Mortimer (Hayseed) Snerd vs. Donald (The Temper) Duck. Timber-r-r-r!

Edgar Bergen...Charlie McCarthy... Mickey Mouse...Mortimer Snerd... Donald Duck...plus three rollicking new Disney characters...all together in one of the funniest feature-length pictures you'll ever hope to see.

There's Mickey Mouse in his most hair-raising adventure.

There's Bongo, the famous circus bear who wants to get away from it all...

There's radio's favorite blockhead — Charlie (I'll mow 'em down) McCarthy.

Walt Disney's

FULL-LENGTH MUSICAL CARTOON FEATURE

"Fun and Fancy Free"

FEATURING

EDGAR BERGEN — DINAH SHORE

IN TECHNICOLOR

...and little Lulubelle, who causes Bongo plenty of heartaches.

There's the only Goofy, who is more confused than ever.

There's Jiminy Cricket, who's full of fun—and fancy free.

EDGAR BERGEN in the flesh with his radio pals Charlie McCarthy and Mortimer Snerd.

DINAH SHORE singing and narrating the tuneful story of Bongo—the little circus bear.

with

Donald Duck, Mickey Mouse and Goofy and introducing 3 lovable new Disney characters Bongo, Lulubelle, Willie the Giant.

Released through RKO Radio Pictures ©WDP

Parade of hit songs

"Fun and Fancy Free"
"Lazy Countryside"
"Too Good To Be True"
"Say It With a Slap" and others you'll be humming soon.

Some day Loretta
Young's retiring to Hawaii, where they call her La-hi
La-hi—"The Delicate One." Only right now this fragile flower is busy with her 75th movie!

by KIRTLEY BASKETTE

the Delicate one

Loretta (in The Bishop's Wife) and her husband Tom chortle over her success in "unglamorous" Farmer's Daughter role. Swedish dialect was taught her by Ruth Roberts, coach who "unlearned" Bergman's!

■ One day, a few weeks ago, the cast and crew of The Bishop's Wife at Goldwyn's were busy between takes riffling through a stack of ancient magazines for Loretta Young. Stars of today as they looked years ago were being snipped out by Loretta and her set pals, pasted on cardboards, and numbered.

It was a contest idea Loretta had to pep up a party she was planning. The idea: Whoever identified the stars of the dear, dead days would win.

Suddenly David Niven whooped, "I've got one!" He trotted over to Loretta with a flossy picture, definitely Miss Hollywood, circa 1928.

Loretta took a look and howled. "Wonderful!" she chuckled. "That's the prize, Davey. But, who in the world is it?"

David slipped his finger from the bottom of the clipping. The caption read, "Loretta Young."

You can't exactly blame Loretta Young for not knowing herself when she stared into her own growing girl face. She was 14 then, and Lon Chaney's leading lady in Laugh, Clown, Laugh. She said she was eighteen, fibbing, as she did all through those underage years. In fact, eighteen got to be such an automatic answer for Loretta that sometimes even today she slips. With the license of an old friend who knew her when, Doug Fairbanks asked her the other day, "Let's see, Loretta, just how old are you?"

"Eighteen," came back Loretta without even thinking.

Loretta Young, young as she is, could look back quite a spell if she wanted to. (Continued on page 89) ah, youth!

She eats lettuce to be slinky, like an actress—and banana splits to be sturdy, like a singer. Otherwise, tiny Bev Tyler might float away, on one of her high notes.

by JANE WILKIE

■ It was one of those hot California days that blister the heels, the kind of weather ignored by the Chamber of Commerce. Beverly Tyler, behind and under numerous packages, struggled through the door of a drugstore, deposited her bundles in a neat ring around the base of the soda fountain stool, and sat down wearily. An acquaintance occupying the neighboring stool was sipping a coke.

"Hi," said the friend.

"'Lo," said Bev.

"What'll you have?" asked the soda jerker.

"A cup of coffee," said Bev. "And a plate of lettuce."

"Waistline?" inquired the friend sympathetically.

"Well, sort of," said Bev. "You see, for movies, I have to keep slim, but for singing, I need some weight. Something to back me up, or I blow myself through a backdrop. So some days I eat banana splits and other days I eat lettuce, depending on whether I'm working at the (Continued on page 119)

Bev (of My Brother Who Talks to Horses) dances with Duff Whitney (debuting in Good News) at Old Vienna Gardens.

"Red Majesty

...PLEASES THAT LAD IN MY LIFE!"... says Mrs. ALAN LADD

...delightful wife of the dashing screen star

If you want your lips to be teasingly pleasing ...to look glamourous and amourous...to have that exciting, inviting glow that brings a warm glow in every man's heart...then do as so many Hollywood beauties do—for your very next lipstick, choose that terrific new Tangee hit-shade...Red Majesty!

CONSTANCE LUFT KUHN
Head of the House of Tangee and creator of Tangee Red Majesty Lipstick and Petal-Finish Cake Make-Up.

To lovely women, Tangee offers a complete line of matched beauty aids.

Red Majesty
NEW HIT SHADE BY Tangee

GAY-RED RED-RED MEDIUM-RED THEATRICAL-RED NATURAL

DON'T GET AROUND MUCH ANY MORE

(Continued from page 58)

maybe I'm not an old man after all. . ."

It was a nice thought, but a fleeting one. Ever since Lon came back from the war he's felt lost, and at least two million years old. His old gals are raising families now, and the new gals-about-town are strictly j.g. It puts a guy on the spot being an uncle to everyone. He wants to get back on the beam, have fun—but it's rugged.

Take the other night. Lon was lying around his apartment with his specs on, poring over a philosophy book, when Peggy Ann Garner called.

"How about coming over to my house tonight?" she invited. "I'm having some kids in for fun. That is, if you aren't doing anything."

Lon wasn't doing anything.

"I don't know, Peggy," he balked from force of habit. "I've got some reading I ought to do. I—"

"Come on, Pops!" razzed Peggy Ann. "Stir your stumps."

"Okay," laughed Lon. After all, it might be more fun than the serious reading he'd been wrapping himself up in of nights, listening alone to symphonies.

Lon stirred his stumps, with vague misgivings, and the minute he stepped inside, he knew it was a mistake.

Peggy Ann's party guests were Beverly Hills High School kids. They hopped around, chased and raced, jumped and jived. Lon sat like a bump on a log, trying to enter in and not doing so well! A couple of kids called him "Sir." He knew for sure they thought he was Old Man Mose, a square from Delaware, strictly passé and out of date. Pretty soon he sighed and gave up. He spent the rest of the evening talking to Peggy Ann's mother.

Since then Lon, who's just twenty-four, has had moments when he's dashed to the mirror to see if he's sprouted a long, gray beard. One such happened the other day when he called up his old sweetie-pal, Jeanne Crain. Jeanne and June Haver and Lon all started out together at Twentieth as stars-to-be in Home in Indiana. Lon's packed a soft spot in his heart for them both ever since. He took Jeanne around Hollywood a bit before he went off to war and she went off to matrimony. Lon got a whiff of nostalgia not long ago and gave her a ring. "Hi, Jeanne," he said, "It's Lon. Nothing special," he confessed. "Just thought I'd call up and talk about old times. How's everything?"

"Wonderful!" came back Jeannie. "Lon, you've just got to come out and see him sometime soon. Such a darling! The cutest thing! Listen to what he did the other morning. . ."

For a half-hour Lon listened, and Jeanne rattled on the whole time about her baby. When Lon hung up at last, his long, gray beard had sprouted another foot.

June Haver handed him more of the same mood right after that. June was making Scudda Hoo, Scudda Hay with Lon and they were on location just 15 miles over the hills from Lon's Malibu beach house. One day a flock of Lon's old high school gang, whom he still sees all the time, came to visit him and his stand-in pal, Ray Sperry, on location. "Say, June," suggested Lon, "some of the old gang's here and we're going over to the beach to whip up a supper and play some records. How about coming along?"

"It's a deal!" agreed June. So they drove over to Malibu, grilled steaks, danced and sang and had a gay time, with six guys busily beauing Junie. It was swell, until suddenly June looked at her wrist watch. "Gosh!" she said, "I told Jimmy I'd meet him at eleven. Gotta break it up." (This was before she and her husband, Jimmy Zito, separated.) Lon and the crew escorted June to the Trianon Ballroom where Jimmy was playing, and then they went on home dismally by themselves, leaving June with husband Jim. Lon aged a couple more years.

The other day, he got to counting on his fingers the girls he'd handed their first screen kisses—Jeanne Crain, June Haver, Peggy Ann Garner, Julie London, Allene Roberts, Marjorie Riordan—he stopped and dabbed a spot of cold sweat from his brow. Why, it sounded like Errol Flynn, or some such venerable screen lover.

He gets a touch of the lonesome bachelor blues, too, when something happens such as the other week when Sol Lesser's studio called Lon at home. "How'd you like to fly to Las Vegas tonight for some fun and glamor?" they asked. "The new Flamingo Club's opening and if you'll make an appearance, it's all free; there's no fee." That "fly" did it with Lon. Anywhere he can snag an air-ride, he's interested.

Well, who should show up at the airport but cute Allene Roberts, a Sol Lesser starlet. Allene played with Lon at Lesser's in The Red House and, he remembered, he'd practically discovered her after making twenty-odd tests with this and that girl.

Anyway, Lon and Allene flew up to the Nevada play-spot for the gala Flamingo opening. When Allene tripped inside on his arm, she squealed, "Oh—a night club! What do we do?" Lon grinned wanly. He could see Allene was thrilled to pieces and when he finally dragged her, still bright eyed and full of beans, out of the place, he was yawning like a ribbon clerk on his unaccustomed night out.

Lon realizes he's dropped a lot of his boyish interests since he's been back from the Air Corps, and replaced them with serious things like housing projects.

He realized after he came home that the Malibu beach house was too far for himself, working 35 miles away, and also too isolated for his mother and grandparents. And when he shut it up and moved into town he felt guilty because it stood vacant with so many people without a roof. So he got his dad, who's a real estate man, to find him a Hollywood apartment house, in the old, unfashionable, but handy part of Hollywood. That's where Lon lives today with his folks. He owns it and he's planning on taking the tiniest suite in the place and fixing it up for himself. Meanwhile, he's staying up nights drawing plans for a housing layout he wants to promote when his bank account grows up again. Lon's designing the houses himself—all small, modern ones with lots of glass and the latest efficiency gadgets.

well-dressed man . . .

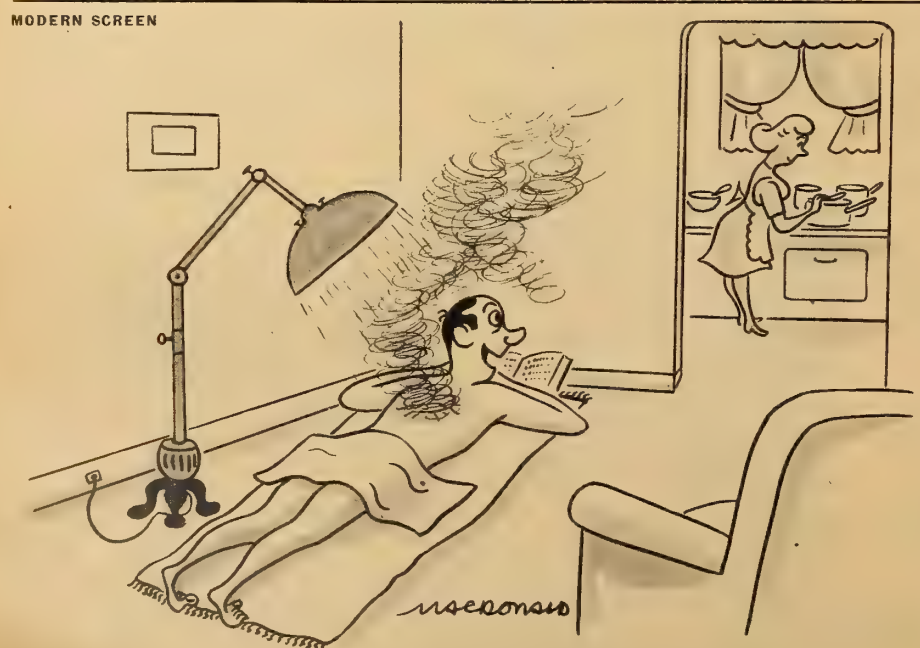
Lon even traded in his sporty looking coupé for a plain gray Ford sedan. He's bought all of two new suits in the two years he's been out of uniform. Hasn't any use for more—although his skimpy wardrobe lodged him into an embarrassing jam last fall in New York!

While he was in the Big Town, Darryl Zanuck premiered The Razor's Edge and Lon gathered that he was expected to show up. That put him on the spot: he deliberately didn't have a dinner jacket with him and it was strictly formal. He told the studio arrangers his self-imposed sad plight.

"We'll rent you one," they assured him, and they did.

Lon borrowed studs and cufflinks from a bellboy at the Gotham, where he was staying, and slipped into the tux—only to discover that it was a good two sizes too roomy. He covered up the best he could with his overcoat.

In front of a television mike at the entrance, Ben Grauer, the announcer whispered, "Take off your overcoat." Ben took one look at the fit of his tux and hissed quickly, "Good gosh, put the coat back on!" This on-again-off-again routine threw Lon off his stride and he wasn't exactly Mr. Television, 1947.



"M-M-M! Something smells good—What's cooking for dinner, dear?"

HE'LL COO LIKE A DOVE . . . HE'LL STOP, LOOK AND LOVE

IF YOU WEAR JERGENS

"Pink Frosting"

New Exciting Shade in Jergens Matchmates

LOVE BEGINS when you wear new Pink Frosting. Jergens just-down-from-heaven shade. Designed to take you to a Paradise for Two.

Pink Frosting Powder . . . instant charm of color on your skin. Is this you—this glowing, enticing woman, just ruining a man's peace of mind?

Pink Frosting Lipstick . . . sudden vivacity on your lips. Ah, don't blame him. Such ripe lips are made for kisses and—truly—this new you has bound his heart.

They're rapturous shade-mates. New powder—even newer lipstick—both velvetized to cling—but smoothly. Both yours—if you'll reach out for romance—in new Jergens Matchmates, $1.00 (plus tax). See new Matchmates in 6 other heart-snaring shade-pairs, too.

Try "Pink Frosting" Powder FREE Mail Coupon . . .

New Powder...New Lipstick shade-mated . . . both for $1.00 (plus tax)

1. Big boudoir box of Jergens new Powder
2. Full-size Jergens new Lipstick

Choose from 7 rapturous shade-pairs, including new "Look and Love" shade, Pink Frosting.

FREE POWDER KIT containing new Pink Frosting and 6 other heart-snaring shades in Jergens new velvetized Powder.

Mail coupon to: Box 37, Cincinnati 14, Ohio
(In Canada: The Andrew Jergens Co., Ltd., Perth, Ont.)
260

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

(Paste on penny postcard, if you wish).

Jergens Face Powder also in 25c and 10c "Try It" sizes. All 7 skin-glow shades!

At New York's smartest night clubs, eyes turn to lovely Lorraine. Her escort's thrilled! Yes, dreams come true when you have an exquisite SweetHeart complexion.

Lorraine Davies,
GLAMOROUS COVER GIRL, Says:

Beauty's My Business—

So I changed to the Gentle FLOATING LIFT of SWEETHEART SOAP'S Extra Lather!

Discover SweetHeart's Floating Lift Beauty Care! Night and morning, massage your face one minute with SweetHeart's extra lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Skin is cleansed . . . stimulated . . . more radiant!

• "A picture can't really show you how SweetHeart Care babies my skin," says Lorraine. "Artists say my complexion would make a wild rose jealous."

You, too, will glory in this beauty care! For pure, mild SweetHeart Soap gives up to twice as much lather as average beauty soaps. And this soft, rich lather has a gentle floating lift. Pictures taken through the microscope prove this astounding action.

Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off dirt and dry skin flakes . . . then simply float them away! Natural smoothness, natural radiance are revealed. Your skin's aglow with its true loveliness!

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

• For tub and shower, you can now also get the new, large bath size. SweetHeart's extra lather with its floating lift is simply marvelous!

The moths would just get fat, Lon suspects, if he kept any party rags around the house these days, the way he's dropped out of circulation. It's really not because he's old and cold and covered with mold, though. He's just got a lot of things now he likes to do better.

Lon's taking piano lessons, for instance, and studying voice. And if his next picture comes through at Lesser's with Ray Bolger, as it seems it will, he'll be taking dancing.

In New York City last winter, Lon and Ray looked up Don Taylor and his wife Phil, Ray Middleton and a lot of the gang he toured with in Winged Victory, and they had a terrific time doing the sights. And a very special sight for Lon McCallister was a girl named Eeta Linden.

She's a young New York actress he met when he was in Alaska during the war, and he hadn't seen her since she left the Deep Freeze. Eeta was on a U.S.O. tour in those days, doing something for the boys in rugged outposts. Lon was detailed to guide her troupe around Alaska. She's a small blonde girl with the sparkle of a dozen diamonds and loaded with talent, Lon believes. In fact, she's the first girl to qualify for the offer Katherine Cornell made Lon 'way back when they made Stage Door Canteen together. Then the incomparable Kit told him, "If you ever meet anyone who seems really talented and ambitious to you, let me know." After his Manhattan reunion with Eeta, Lon wrote Miss Cornell about her. When she returns from her road show, she promised, she'll look Eeta over, too. Meanwhile one of the top girls in Lon McCallister's date book is heading for Hollywood this summer on her vacation. Lon hopes the studios will see how good she is and that she won't go back. He says it's not love or anything like that—she's just a swell friend. But where have you heard that before?

no woman hater . . .

Of course, Lon buddies with all the girls he works with or runs around the country with, on those p.a. tours of his. Cathy Downs, Peggy Ann Garner and Allene Roberts. And both Lon and Ray Sperry had a ton of fun beauing cute Colleen Townsend, the new Twentieth Century-Fox starlet in Scudda Hoo.

But (says Lon) there really isn't any serious Hollywood heart interest for him. He still sees his old high school chums. They meet around at everybody's house, mostly Lon's beach place—it isn't sold yet—or his new apartment for bridge, poker and just plain old bull sessions. It's strictly stag except when they trail out to see the lone married member of the crew, Harvey Dack, and his wife, Jean Anne. There Lon gets a cozy picture of domestic bliss, because Harvey and Jean Anne are building a log cabin on a country plot in the San Fernando Valley. They put Lon and the bachelors to work burying electric wires and sanding floors while Jean ties on an apron and cooks up a feed for the bunch. So Lon knows what fun's in store for him, if and when he dicards that bachelor tag.

When you pin Lon down on that delicate subject, he grins frankly and says, "You're darned right I want to get married—some day. But I've got a lot of hard work to do first—and then—well, I'm not in love yet." When that happens, he's already got his dream trip picked out. He wants to fly back to Alaska, and revisit all the places he touched during the war—Fairbanks, Nome, Anchorage, Juneau, and White Horse in the Yukon. He wants first to look at the scenery next time, maybe catch up on fishing and loafing.

There's no doubt about it—that could certainly make a swell honeymoon tour for a guy who doesn't get around much any more.

SONNET TO A LADY

(Continued from page 34)

I called Victor Samrock, business manager of the Playwrights' Company. Was there any part for me? "No, Sam, I'm sorry. There's only one part and you're much too young to play it—"

Several weeks later came a phone call from Toni Ward of the William Morris Agency. In my book her name's written in capitals—gold ones. She literally shoved me into the part. I argued against wasting everyone's time and making an ass of myself. She said, "As a favor to me—"

Skipping a lot of detail, I finally took my fate in my hands and went down to read—not merely as a favor to Toni, don't kid yourself. As I came in, Maxwell Anderson, the author—a huge, bearlike man—was standing by the door. "What's he doing here?" he rumbled.

"Reading for the Jimmy Masters role."

"Jimmy Masters?!! Jimmy Masters is a 45-year-old character, and I've got a luncheon date." And off he went.

I read for the director. What arguments she used on Anderson I don't know, but the following Monday I was called down to read for him. When I got through, he pushed back his chair and walked out. A few minutes later he returned with Bob Sherwood and asked me to read again.

"But what about this age business?" Anderson asked.

Sherwood got up. "Put a moustache on him. That'll age him."

So the unbelievable happened. I got the part. Understand, it was just a two-week contract, subject to Miss Bergman's approval.

Which brings me to the day when I walked into the theater, rubber-legged, to meet the goddess of my fate.

The stage manager introduced us and left us together. We said howdyado, she looked at me in that pleasant way she has, and I tried to be nonchalant—a lousy performance.

stage-fright—offstage . . .

For one solid week I couldn't talk to the girl. Never in my life have I read so badly. Any day I expected to be canned. The director came over. "What's the matter with you, Sam?"

"The girl frightens me."

At the end of the week I realized that I'd have to do something drastic, or fade out. We were gathering for rehearsal. Without giving myself time to think, I pulled a chair up to hers and sat down. "I'm going to talk to you," I said. "I don't know what about, but I'm going to talk to you if it kills me."

She threw back her head and laughed. She said, "You have a little girl, too, don't you? Mine's eight. How old is yours?" Five, I told her. We talked about our children, then hopped to that child of another age, Joan of Arc. When she talks about Joan a light goes up inside. From the day she reached Hollywood, it's been her one great longing to play the part. As we talked, her cheeks flushed a deep rose and her blue eyes kindled; the contrast was startlingly beautiful. Later, I saw it happen many times: when she was especially happy or excited, when she'd had two glasses of champagne instead of one. But this was the first time, and I drew her on—from Joan to the play and its problems, acting in general, to the stage versus movies. By the time rehearsal was called, I knew I'd have no more trouble talking to Bergman. There was too much to talk about.

This thing I call an aura because I can't

Which Twin has the Toni?

(and which had her permanent at the beauty shop? See answer below.)

Jane Brown, of Chicago, the Toni twin, says, "I'm so pleased with my home permanent that it's Toni for me from now on." And her twin, Patricia, exclaims, "We'll be Toni twins because my next permanent is going to be a Toni, too."

Yes, you can give yourself a lovely TONI Home Permanent for your date tonight

The proof is in the picture! Yes, this photograph of the Brown twins shows you hat a Toni Home Permanent is every bit as lovely as an expensive beauty salon permanent. Beautiful waves, deep, soft, and natural-looking. The saving comes in giving yourself the Toni Permanent at home. And the Toni plastic curlers make it easier than ever. So convenient and comfortable, too. No waiting for appointments. No sitting under a hot dryer. In just 2 to 3 pleasant hours, Toni gives you a luxurious wave that's guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 permanent—or your money back. So try Toni today. Ask for the Toni Home Permanent Kit at any leading drug, notions or cosmetic counter. Jane, the twin at the right, has the Toni Home Permanent.

De Luxe Kit with re-usable plastic curlers	Regular Kit with handy fiber curlers	Refill Kit complete except for curlers
$2.00	$1.25	$1.00

All prices plus tax • Prices slightly higher in Canada

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

Toni

HOME PERMANENT

THE CREME COLD WAVE

Easy as rolling up your hair on curlers — but the wave stays in for months

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Yes, even finest soaps and soap shampoos hide the natural lustre of your hair with dulling soap film

● Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave dulling soap film! ● Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. ● Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! ● Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant! ● Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! ● Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! ● Buy Halo at any drug or cosmetic counter.

Reveals the Hidden Beauty of Your Hair!

find a better word—this universal tendency to put her on a pedestal—is tough to analyze. Certainly she does nothing to produce or encourage it, being the most natural person in the world. I think it's partly her beauty, partly a spiritual quality, partly her dignity and reserve.

Considering my own shakes when I first approached her, what happened later had its comical side. During the Washington run and before our Broadway opening, I was asked to take over the direction of the play. While I directed, the aura blanked itself out. Nothing mattered but to get the effect across. I treated her as I would any other player—"I don't believe you, Ingrid. It doesn't ring true—" The first time that happened, I was aware of a disapproving stir among the others.

"Look," I said to her later, "maybe I shouldn't correct you in front of the company. Maybe I should take you aside and tell you in private—"

"But that's crazy," laughed Ingrid. "We'd never get anywhere. And besides, what for? You're the director. Whatever you have to say, I want to be told. Right out loud, in front of everyone else."

On opening night she sent me a very kind wire, paraphrasing one of her speeches in the play. But the end was a small wail. "Oh tell me, please, what can I do about stage fright?"

When my makeup was on, I went down to her dressing room. There were flowers all over the place. Her husband, who'd come on for the occasion, was already out front . . .

"Nervous, Ingrid?" I asked.

"Oh no, not really. Are you?"

"Not a bit."

She looked up at me. "Oh Sam, what awful liars we are." But through the smile, her voice was shaking.

Before curtain time two things happened that broke the tension a little. One gave us a laugh. The other gave me a thrill. For the first scene, everyone's assembled on stage. Word had got around of this and that big name in the audience. When Ingrid appeared, seemingly calm except for the flame in her eyes, she gasped: "All those movie stars!" for all the world as if she weren't among the most dazzling herself. "Show me the hole in the curtain so I can see them!"

Then came that fearful, wonderful moment when the house lights dimmed and the curtain was about to rise. "Wait a minute," said Ingrid, startling everyone. "Hold the curtain a minute," and ran over and kissed me on the cheek. For luck.

reaction . . .

No one who's been part of a first night can possibly describe it, and I'm not going to try. When it was all over, the Andersons gave a party at the Dorset. Ingrid, a person of great self-control, told me later how she'd felt so strange and lonely at first that she slipped out to a little side room and broke into tears. It was a natural reaction to the climax of all the weeks of strain behind her, but you'd never have suspected that little interlude from her radiance as she danced in the arms of her husband. Dr. Lindstrom's what the British call a fine figger of a man, over six feet, and strikingly handsome. They look wonderful together and they love dancing together, especially the waltz.

Which reminds me of the time I saw Ingrid jitterbug. That was at the party she herself gave after the Washington opening. I don't remember who it was she stepped out with, but she gave it plenty of bounce, like a Swedish folk dance. You'd look at her feet and then up at her face, and they just didn't match. She seemed to be having the time of her life. . . .

Once we were settled in the play, she gave herself up to enjoying New York. She loved its stimulating quality, the speed and tempo most people complain about, and the cold. "Snow and the changing seasons," she told me once, "that's what I miss most in California." Like a kid, she couldn't wait for the snow to start—went out and bought herself fur coats which she didn't get to wear more than two or three times, we had so little snow. A hat she never wore. When it turned really cold, she'd pull on a hood—pull it on, pull it off, and her hair would fly and she'd look more enchanting than ever.

She thought the stage was a cinch. Of course with Bergman, her work is such a passion that she still sometimes catches her breath over the wonder of being allowed to act. "They pay me," she once said, "for doing something that I would pay them to let me do. If I had the money." She concedes, however, that ten hours a day at the studio is work. "But not this. Here you come to the theater for three hours and the rest of the time you have to yourself."

She took advantage of every minute. Concerts and art galleries and the ballet. Benefit performances of plays and matinees that didn't clash with our own. Motion pictures she couldn't get enough of. I'd come in and tell her about some foreign movie I'd seen, and next day she'd be there. One of her delights was to track down out-of-the-way restaurants for lunch —Chinese, Russian, Armenian. Before the show, she never ate very much, but when it was over she wanted a big steak. Once in a while she'd be in the mood for a nightclub, but not often.

walk like the wind . . .

But ask me what she liked best, and I think it was walking. Walking alone and getting the feel of the town. It's hard to say why, but people didn't gang up on her. My own theory is that she walked too fast for people to recognize her. Or else they were struck motionless for a moment and, before they recovered, Ingrid was out of sight. Her legs are not only prettier than most, but they're longer.

But the kids with the albums, even she couldn't escape. Every night she'd walk from 59th Street, where she lived at the Hampshire House, to the theater at 52nd. Every night the kids would be waiting at the door. No matter how often and patiently she told them, "I never sign autographs on the street. Write me a letter," they'd pop up anyway, mostly the same ones. She was always touched by the people who made no demands but went to endless trouble to do things they thought would please her—sending her portraits they'd painted of her, or tremendous scrapbooks on herself. "They don't even know me," she'd marvel. "What makes them so kind?" There'd be flowers and candy, which she'd bring out on stage and share with the company. But orchids —well, Ingrid's the rare woman who doesn't care for them particularly.

At Christmas time Pia came to spend the holidays with her mother. Twice she was allowed to watch the first act from the stage; then the nurse took her home. Ingrid didn't want her to see the second act. She felt the child wasn't old enough to accept her mother in that tragic, shattering situation without being more or less shattered herself. Pia wasn't overcome by the backstage glamor either. Interested, yes, but her eyes didn't pop. Remember that to her, Ingrid Bergman isn't some faraway princess or the face that launched a thousand ships, or even Ingrid Bergman —she's Mother. In which connection, I made a faux pas there's no excuse for—especially since I'm the husband of an actress myself.

NEW! Beauty on a fling!

Woodbury Fiesta

...powder, lipstick, rouge!

Warning! Not responsible for heads turned, hearts stolen by Fiesta—audacious new powder shade! Quick as winks, it gives your skin a new live look...snares all eyes with a vital young glow! Add the Woodbury plus of heavenly fragrance...color-freshness...lasting cling! Say yes to Fiesta today!

That enchanting rose sparkle? ...it's yours—with Woodbury Fiesta!

MARIE McDONALD featured in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "LIVING IN A BIG WAY"

Woodbury ITEM FINISH Powder

WOODBURY MATCHED MAKE-UP

With Fiesta Film-Finish Powder you also get Fiesta Lipstick and Rouge All 3 in the dollar powder box— ONLY $1.00

Fiesta and 8 other exciting shades come in Matched Make-up $1.00; "Purse" size Powder 25c and 10c. (All prices plus tax)

FREE! try Fiesta... FREE!

Seeing's believing! See Fiesta's sparkle on your skin. Send for free Woodbury Powder Sampler; get Fiesta, eight other flattering shades, plus Hollywood Make-up Chart. Print name, address clearly. Mail* to Box 45, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. (In Canada: John H. Woodbury, Ltd., Perth, Ontario) 366

NAME .....

STREET .....

CITY ..... STATE: .....

*Paste coupon on penny postcard if you wish.

Kiss-Winning Skin

His lips thrill to the smoothness of your skin—that silky-smoothness won with Jergens Face Cream! Only Jergens Cream contains Vitone—new, unsurpassed dry-skin smoother. Tests by leading skin specialists show: 8 out of 10 skins beautifully improved..."Softer, fresher, smoother"!

All-Purpose...plus Vitone

Four beauty treatments in the Jergens Face Cream jar! Vitone-rich Jergens cleanses...softens...helps smooth tiny dry-skin lines ...acts as clinging powder-base. Contains precious Vitone, yet Jergens costs no more than ordinary face creams. Used by lovely women everywhere. 10c to $1.25. (Plus tax)

VITONE: superlative skin-smoother; finer than lanolin

in JERGENS FACE CREAM

A Cleanser....
A Softener.....
A Dry-Skin Cream
A Powder Base...

Free! Prove to yourself at our expense what Vitone can do for your skin!

Please send me generous trial-size, free, of Jergens Vitone-enriched Face Cream.

MAIL TO: Box 57, Cincinnati 14, Ohio

430

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(Paste on penny postcard, if you wish. Sorry, sample offer good in U.S.A. only.)

I was showing Pia round the theater and took her downstairs, where the electricians had just finished fixing up some rows of bulbs that spelled out BERGMAN, to be used above the marquee. "There's your name," I told her.

She took a look, then lifted grave eyes to mine. "That's not my name. My name's Lindstrom—Pia Lindstrom." I felt properly reprimanded.

That Ingrid adores her daughter goes without saying, but she's not the kind to fuss or be over-demonstrative. She has definite ideas on bringing up youngsters, rooted in the conviction that they're humans and that you can rear them without trampling on their personalities. She believes in sending them to school at an early age, and in teaching them the value of money in the bank.

Coming from California, Ingrid had a little trouble adjusting to New York traffic regulations, broke a small one, and got a ticket. Pia's eyes went wide, but she sat very quiet till they drove on again. Then: "What was it, Mother?"

"I made a mistake, though I didn't mean to. It'll cost me five dollars."

"Five dollars! Oh my! Where will you get five dollars?!"

The final week of any good run is a sad one. You've lived with the play and with each other, and now you're breaking up. For Ingrid it held a special sadness, since in a special way she'd be parting with Joan. Each night as the house darkened and the curtain started up, she'd look out at the audience and murmur: "Just think. After this week I'll never do it again."

What took the edge off her blues was the knowledge that the screen version still lay ahead of her. Maxwell Anderson had been signed to write it. It was to be the straight story of Joan—not a play within a play, as on the stage. A day before Joan of Lorraine closed, I signed with Milton Sperling to make Ever the Beginning.

Ingrid was delighted for me—promised to give me pointers on Hollywood. But in the last-minute rush, we hadn't time to say much more than "Goodbye, see you in California." The following Monday found me at LaGuardia Airport with Charlotte and my daughter, Abby, who'd come to see me off and who were to join me within a couple of weeks. As we stood there talking, Charlotte broke off in the middle of a sentence. "Look!—Nobody walks like that but Ingrid—"

It was Ingrid, all right. Her plane left fifteen minutes ahead of mine. We waved goodbye to her. "I'm not superstitious," said my wife firmly. "But there's no law that says I can't call it a good omen—" that ingrid aura . . .

There's one more story I think belongs here. During the run of the play, Abby'd seen pictures of me with Bergman in magazines. They interested her. She was rather vague about what I did for a living, but she liked the pictures.

One day Charlotte brought her to the theater and, hearing she was there, Ingrid asked to meet her. We took her down.

"You know who this is don't you, Abby?"

"Yes, it's Miss Bergman. I always see her picture in the magazine."

Suddenly she dried up. Now my daughter's no bashful Bertha! She's not given to sticking her finger in her mouth or hanging her head. But so help me, that's exactly what she did. Ingrid, who knows how to talk to children, was charming with her. By all the rules, Abby should have chattered like a magpie. But Abby squirmed, shot adoring glances from downcast eyes, and couldn't utter a sound.

I suppose you're two jumps ahead of me on the pay-off. Yes, even my five-year-old daughter felt the aura.

MISS TIERNEY REGRETS

(Continued from page 49)

The bald little man stared at her and muttered to himself. By the time the kids had been disposed of, the price of the fender had gone up to $140.

"That's what I said all along," he insisted. And Gene, who doesn't like being robbed any more than the rest of us, walked indignantly out of the shop.

She never tried the disguise again, but she was fairly lucky after that in getting things for the apartment. A set of delicate blue Wedgwood. An inlaid Hepplewhite table. A pair of charming old lamps for the bedroom she is to share with Pat.

This sharing a bedroom doesn't always work too well with sisters as popular as Gene and Pat, who are usually dressing for their dates at the same time. But Gene has eliminated this hazard quite simply. The dressing table is seven feet long, with mirror to match, and two benches, one at either end. Plenty of drawer space, too.

prettily practical . . .

One reason Gene is such a good decorator is because she does have this combination of practicality and taste. Little Daria, Gene's four-year-old, has a bedroom that's a delightful Alice-in-Wonderland place of ruffled organdy and flowered wallpaper. It is also carefully situated where the child won't be disturbed if her mother and aunt entertain at home.

"Mother" and "aunt" seem strange words to use in describing Gene and Pat, who both look like schoolgirls. Gene has a quiet little air of dignity, of course, when she's in the public eye, but relaxing at home in the sweater and slacks she adores, she might be sixteen.

Not that she would want to be. She loves being twenty-five, with her newly acquired knowledge of the world and people. Some of this knowledge has come through tears and heart-ache, but you won't find Gene complaining about that.

"I had a happy marriage," she says soberly. "A really happy one. Not everyone has that. I'm sorry mine had to end, but I'm glad for what it taught me. I don't regret any of it. And it has given me Daria."

Daria is a small beauty who will one day be as lovely as her mother. The upper half of her face is like Gene's in its bone structure, the lower half like Oleg's.

Gene is a doting parent, but never to the point where it would be bad for Daria. She's happy that Daria can be in Connecticut now with Gene's brother's family. They have a little girl, Michele, who's almost the same age, and the two children

WE'VE A HANDFUL OF $5 BILLS

Yes, and we've got butterfingers, too. With a little persuasion, we could easily drop one of those bills in an envelope bearing your name. The way to persuade us, of course, is to mail us your "I Saw It Happen" anecdote. An anecdote—that's a short, interesting and TRUE story—about the time you bumped into a movie star in person. If we publish your tale (read the "Happen" boxes in this issue to get a clear idea of what we're looking for), we'll see that one of our $5 checks slips into your pocket. Mail all entries to the "I Saw It Happen" Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York City, 16.

play, battle and giggle merrily together by the hours.

Soon she will be old enough to do some of the things that Gene remembers from her own childhood in Connecticut. Picnics on the beach with the wind in your hair, the sun baking you Indian brown, and Mummy saying "Well, maybe one more hardboiled egg won't hurt you." Simple things, like Gene's simple tastes.

Actually, Gene's only expensive taste is clothes. She doesn't drink, so champagne leaves her cold. She dislikes orchid corsages—would much rather have flowers for her apartment. Particularly white flowers.

But she does like really elegant clothes. Elegant in the old-fashioned sense of the word, I mean. She buys good clothes—very good ones. Oleg Cassini still designs most of them.

clothes counsellor . . .

The whole family goes to Gene for advice on clothes and kindred matters. Pat, particularly, is influenced by her. Pat had been living with her mother in New York until last year, when Mrs. Tierney decided to send her out to Gene on the Coast. Pat needed to reduce, but all suggestions to that effect had been greeted with "Oh, mother, don't nag."

Just before Christmas, Pat arrived in Hollywood. The first evening, Gene looked at her sister and said,

"You know what I'm going to give you for Christmas? A reducing course at the smartest place in town. It will make all the difference in the world in the way you look and feel."

Pat took the reducing course and lost eighteen pounds. She emerged with a willowy figure which she wouldn't trade for all the diamond earrings in the world.

Gene and Pat get along well together, although they're quite different. Gene is romantic and a bit temperamental, like most good actresses. Pat is a solid, "feet-on-the-ground" type.

The girls double-date occasionally, but not often. The five years' difference in their ages shows up in the men they go around with more than in any other way. Pat's male friends seem a bit on the juvenile side to Gene.

One night they all went to an amusement park together. Ate popcorn, rode the ferris wheel, giggled through the "Fun House." They came at last to the roller coaster.

"Come on, Gene," one of the boys coaxed. "Ride with me on the coaster."

"Look." Gene spoke firmly. "When I was sixteen I had to go on a roller coaster to show I wasn't afraid. Now I've proved it and I don't ever have to go again. And I don't intend to."

Gene went to a debutante party with the younger set in Connecticut this summer, and was definitely a belle. She wasn't quite sure before she went whether it was a good idea or not.

"I hope they won't expect me to look all slinky and movie-star-ish," she told her mother worriedly. "Because I just don't." She was wearing pale blue chiffon and looked about the right age to be a debutante herself. Gene danced herself into tatters that night, and the younger set adored her.

One of the happiest times Gene has had since her divorce was when she went to Bermuda with Pat and an old school friend and her husband. The friend is Mary Louise Bromson, who lives in Denmark. She and Gene were in school together in Switzerland, and hadn't seen each other since. But the minute they got together again it was as if they had never been apart.

The Bromsons had rather a bad time during the war. They were working with the Danish Underground movement, and finally had to escape to Sweden in a small boat, just one jump ahead of the Nazis.

They went to stay with some friends in Sweden, and the third day they were there, something funny happened. The woman they were visiting was telling about an American movie she had seen.

"You must go, Mary Louise. It's very good. The name of it is Heaven Can Wait and there is a girl in it I think you will like. Her name is Gene Tierney."

"It never occurred to me that it might be you, though," she told Gene, that first night in New York. "We went to see the picture a few days later. Got there after it had begun and when we went in, you were on the screen. I've never been so excited!"

Gene hadn't been on a bicycle in years, but the day after their arrival in Bermuda, Mary Louise said, "Let's go bicycling. They tell me there's a beautiful path along the shore."

At first, Gene was skeptical about her inexperience.

As it turned out—and it's a tribute to the condition she keeps herself in—Gene had nothing worse than a few aching leg-muscles to show for the trip.

Gene loved the fishing, and had much better luck with it than Pat did. Pat would reel in her line and at the end of it would be a graceful thing of gold, striped in dark green, with fins like delicate green tissue paper.

"Pat, throw that beautiful fish back in the water this instant," Gene would command. "That's to be admired—not eaten."

the one that got away . . .

Reluctantly, Pat would let her prize swim away. And in a minute Gene would hook a nice, plump, utilitarian fish in a subdued shade of gray, strictly for eating—which they did!

One day on the ship going back to New York, Gene and Mary Louise were sitting on deck, talking about life and love and all the things girls do talk about when they are "best friends."

"Mary Louise, you're always so calm and happy," Gene said impulsively. "You've been that way ever since I've known you. Don't you lose your temper sometimes or get depressed?"

"No, I don't think I do. But I deserve no credit for it—it is the way I was born. I go along on a smooth, even plane. You, Gene, hit the depths occasionally but you also hit the heights."

It's true that Gene does get depressed sometimes. It was true during her marriage, and it has been true since her divorce. It still seems strange now and then to be single again. But it does have its advantages. There's a quotation that she found not long ago which she cut out of a magazine and stuck in the mirror over her dressing table. Something about "It takes an awfully good husband to make up for a life of independence."

That doesn't mean that she won't marry again—far from it. But it does mean that for now she's heart-whole (or as near it as one can be after the break-up of a happy marriage) and fancy-free, and saying "no" gently but firmly about marriage.

Right now she's concerned with her career and her daughter and her home, which is enough to keep even Gene busy. She was a victim for a long while of an absolute jinx in the maid problem.

Then one day she was lunching with Faye and Elliott Roosevelt at "21." They were all having a fine time, but the minute lunch was over, Gene prepared regretfully to leave.

"I've got to go home and do some plain and fancy vacuum cleaning," she apologized. "I'm maidless again."

"Gene, I'll help you get a good maid," Faye offered. And she went to work on it.

Gene was hardly back at her apartment when the telephone rang.

"Miss Tierney?" a brisk voice said. "This is Mrs. Roosevelt's secretary speaking. I understand you are looking for a maid. We'll send you one early on Thursday."

It wasn't a dream, either. The maid actually arrived and took over the household with brisk confidence. And Gene couldn't be more grateful.

Come fall, she'll be back on the Coast, of course, working on another picture to follow the very successful Ghost and Mrs. Muir. She'll leave Daria either with Howard's family, or with her mother, and the nurse. Pat works as Gene's secretary now, so she will go along.

Gene has bought a five-room cottage, practically in the back yard of the studio. It's a charming little place and much better suited to her needs than a large house would be. There's plenty of room for her and Pat and Butch.

Butch is a police dog the approximate size of a horse, and Gene has had him for years. George Jean Nathan gave him to her originally, and he was owned before that by Sidney Kingsley, the playwright.

Since she has had him, friends and relatives have occasionally ventured to suggest that perhaps Butch might not be one hundred percent thoroughbred police dog. Gene has always denied this indignantly.

But when she came East with Butch this time, she confided in her mother. "His father was a police dog, all right—a real champion, Mummy. But it's true—his mother was just an old dog that sort of hung around the stables. I don't even know what she was."

Mrs. Tierney laughed. "You've certainly stuck to your story for a long while."

"I was a snob," Gene said sadly. "But I've decided that a little proletarian blood mixed in with the thoroughbred makes dogs—and people too—a lot nicer to know."

All of which is a minor, but interesting, indication that Gene makes up her own mind these days, and it's strictly on the basis of common sense. She'll do all right!

Bambi Linn . . .

the golden-haired darling who danced in Oklahoma! and Carousel and who is currently wowing New York audiences as "Alice" in Alice in Wonderland.

In this issue, Bambi poses especially for you Modern Screen readers who are getting ready to go back to school. On the following pages she models the clothes we think you're most likely to succeed in next semester, at prices most likely to go easy on your budget.

For example—the fireman-red corduroy jumper and jacket opposite. We won't waste words on how they look—you can see for yourself—but we will hint that there's no end to the blouses and sweaters you can wear with the jumper—and we predict the jacket will rarely be off your back.

Jumper and jacket come in red, kelly, dark brown, dark green, wine, grey or black. In sizes 10-18. (A plaid shirt to match coat lining is also available.)

Jumper ..... About $7.95
Jacket ..... About $14.95

By Korday.

Pleated bosom rayon blouse, in many colors. Sizes 32-38.

Blouse by Adelaar $5.95

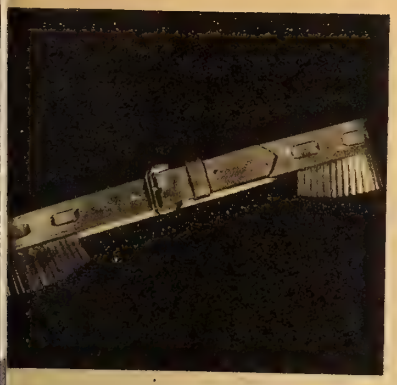
To find out where to buy these school fashions, turn to page 86.

modern screen fashions

OR WHERE TO BUY
urn to page 86

By Connie Bartel,
Fashion Editor

Middy sweater—with a collar just like a sailor's. 100% zephyr wool—in every color you love. Sweater by Ladyarn . . . about $6. All around pleated skirt, in Pacific wool crepe. Black, brown, green or grey. Sizes 12-18. Skirt by Leemor . . about $5.95.



Cowhide belt with braid and fringe trim. Red, green, and other colors. Cute with plaids! By Vogue, $2.

A large pure silk scarf that is shaded from beige to brown. Lots of other wonderful colors too. $3.

The fraternity pin dress—with a stripe meant just for your jewelry. Two piece wool jersey—with a nice swingy skirt which boasts two pockets. Luggage top with black skirt; black with red; beige with brown; royal with black. Comes in sizes 12-18. By Mayline . . . about $14.95. Both pages: Macy's, New York The Hecht Co., Washington, D. C.

Bambi Linn shows off a long-torso sweater - a long-torso dress

(for school, needless to say!)

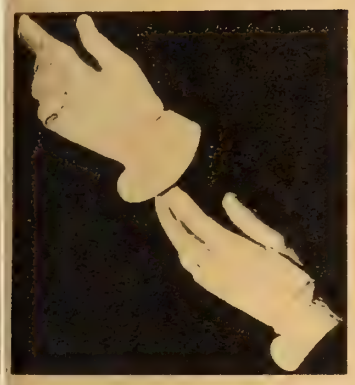
FOR WHERE TO BUY
Turn to page 86

Gold-finished chain and authentic-looking crested medal. By Coro. Chain $1, medallion $2, plus tax.

Side-pleated plaid skirt with a leather belt and a scarf to tie at the throat or around your head. All wool, with your choice of green, red or white background. Sizes 10-18.

By Sporteens . . . . about $7.95.

Featherknits wool sweater . . $3.98.



Washable shortie fabric gloves with flared hand-stitched cuffs. Black, brown, grey, chamois yellow. $3.

A gold-finished link bracelet with a dangling disc that tells your fortune. By Coro, $1, plus tax.

Two-piece wool plaid. Jumper top with new cuffed edge. Slightly flared skirt. Brown and blue; red and green; green, blue and black. Sizes 10 to 18. By Jack Schnittman. . . about $15.
Rayon crepe blouse, quilted Peter Pan collar and cuffs. Pastel and dark colors. 32-38. Adelaar blouse. . about $5.95.
Both pages: Macy's, New York
The Hecht Co., Washington, D. C.

Bambi Linn poses in plaid with scarf-plaid with tunic

(for school, as if you didn't know!)

a typical Carole King girl

"DATED UP"... Who else but you, when you wear this ever-so-slim Carole King Original in wool-and-rayon! Junior sizes 9 to 15. Under $15.00.

Exclusively at one fine store in your city.

Carole King

DRESSES FOR JUNIORS

FOR WHERE TO
Turn to page 86

Bambi Linn wears a medallion-print blouse

(bound to have the whole class talking!)

Strictly ooh and ah—a grey rayon challis blouse printed with bright colored medallions. Also on white ground. Sizes 32-38. Blouse by Adelaar . . about $5. Patch pocket corduroy skirt, bright or dark colors. Sizes 12-20. Skirt by Ann Marie . . about $5.98. Macy's, New York The Hecht Co., Washington, D. C.

R WHERE TO BUY
rn to page 86

Bambi Linn models a suit that's cute

(a girl's best friend in the classroom.)

Such a young suit—such a slick fit. The double-breasted jacket has this year's longer look. Grey or tan rayon worsted. In sizes 10-18.
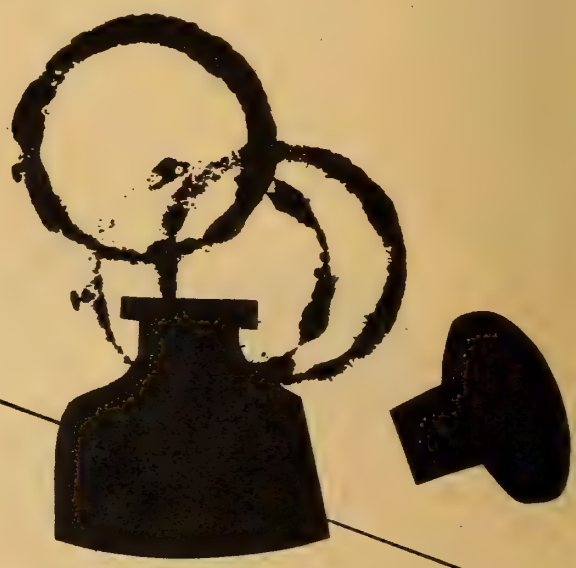
By Joselli. . . . about $25.
Macy's, New York
The Hecht Co., Washington, D. C.



Modern Screen shops for you

BY MAXINE FIRESTONE

This is just the trickiest hair comb ever! The gold-finished rhinestone bow-knot pin looks darling in your hair—and you can take it off the comb to wear on your dress. Gold or silver. By Ben Hur. About $3, plus tax. Bloomingdale's.

The perfect belt to wear to classes. It has a separate slide change purse to hold your knick-knacks. Made of plastic suede, comes in almost every color. By Etra Products—and guess what? It's yours for only $1. At Bloomingdale's, N. Y.

Gold-plated "Clinch" pin to keep shoulder bags from slipping. It's such a smooth looking pin that you won't want to take it off—bag or no. By Carol Barnes. About $3, plus tax. The monogramming is extra. At Bloomingdale's, N. Y.

DD

Look what DORIS DODSON did . . . ran rings around VARSITY... her newest-length "two-piecer" that broadens your shoulders, belittles your middle, accents the fluid swing of your skirt. Beloved rayon gabardine in green, banded in red and natural; black, with blue and white; or brown, with luggage and gold.
9 to 15. About $13.00

ELLIOT CLARKE

Doris Dodson
JUNIOR ORIGINALS

Write for the name of your local shop...Doris Dodson, St. Louis 1, Missouri

The sox you'll be wearing this season!
New styles, new colors at your favorite shops now!
35¢ to $1
Trimfit SOX
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
They're WearTested!
For nearest store, write:
Trimfit EMPIRE STATE BLDG., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

YOUR HAIR
romantic as the harvest moon

Cared-for hair is always the loveliest, the most lustrous—and the most alluring. Re-condition summer dried or faded hair with: RECONDITIONING OIL • LANOLIN CREME SHAMPOO • CREAM HAIR PACK • CREME SET.

At drug, dept. stores

Ogilvie Sisters
HAIR PREPARATIONS

Joan Leslie has such a fine complexion! She uses powder correctly.

no puffing!

Face powder must be applied correctly. It's so very important to glamor! Learn how Hollywood stars use face powder

By CAROL CARTER, BEAUTY EDITOR

■ Breathless puffing from a long stair climb isn't too important. But puffing powder on your nose every five minutes displeases your beau and that's very important! So let's check. Joan Leslie, Lauren Bacall and Lana Turner have petal-soft complexions, but their makeup is never a public performance. Correct application does away with unglamorous patchwork.

Powder should not absorb the oil of a makeup base—powder should simply rest in it lightly. So spare the foundation! Colored or colorless, it should be the barest overcoating for your skin, a light but firm foothold for powder.

Now literally saturate your puff with powder. Close your eyes and fluff it all over from hairline to base of throat. Never mind if you look like a circus clown. You can look forward to owning a complexion like Joan Leslie's.

With the puff free of powder, next pat firmly over your face (don't forget the nostril area). Rubbing the puff disturbs the even distribution of foundation, causes makeup to look splotchy.

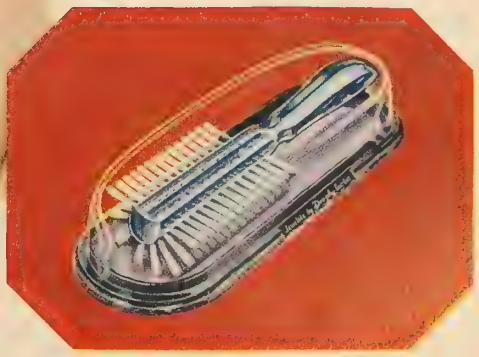
Finally, use the puff or a soft complexion brush to whisk off any excess powder. Clean brows and lashes. Such a good powdering job lasts a long time, calls for no repairs or public puffing . . . and looks simply beautiful!

A Wonderful New Brush by Pro-phy-lac-tic . . .

Jewelite INVIGORATOR

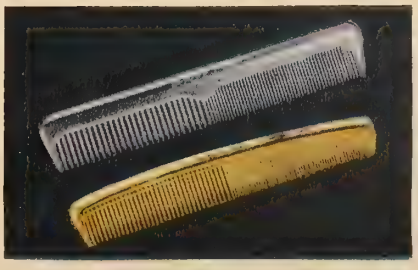
It's the newest creation of America's foremost maker of fine brushes! The unique Jewelite Invigorator provides extra-wide bristle area—a scientifically arranged half-circle of long, resilient Prolon bristles, to stimulate your scalp and bring shining new beauty to your hair. Jewelite Brushes, Combs and complete Dresser Sets are available at good brush departments in delicate shades of ruby or sapphire, or in diamond-clear crystal. Jewelite, styled in the loveliest of plastics, is made by the makers of the famous Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brush. Look for the name Jewelite on the box.

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH COMPANY
Florence, Mass.



The new Jewelite Invigorator Brush has more than 1000 individual Prolon bristles set in a wide-flaring pattern to provide maximum brushing efficiency. And it's easy to keep clean. Each Jewelite Invigorator comes packaged in its own miniature "showcase" with the new transparent dome top. $4.00.

Jewelite for men, too! This handsomely streamlined club brush and comb set is a new addition to the Jewelite line. Available in garnet or crystal. $4.50.



Jewelite Combs and other lovely Pro-phy-lac-tic Plastic Combs are designed for perfect combing. Available in a wide choice of styles and colors. 15¢ to 50¢.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

JEWELITE BY PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC

Can you tell which is which?

TEACHER can't tell them apart—twin or dress! For though one little frock cost $6.95 and the other over twice as much, both were laundered with LINIT* Starch. That means they are equally crisp, fresh and dainty.

LINIT is an easy, wonderful way to make everything washable look its best. It gives a smooth, soil-resisting finish that busy mothers appreciate. No white streaks on colored fabrics. No white spots. Easy directions are on the package.

The pink dress cost $14.95

*LINIT IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF CORN PRODUCTS REFINING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N. Y. ©C. P. R. CO., 1947

...ADDS THE "finishing touch"

INFORMATION DESK

by Beverly Linet

DICK WALSH, who was Teddy in Humoresque, and the young interne in Possessed, was born in Brooklyn, New York, 25 years ago. He is 6' 2" tall, has blue eyes, blond hair and is unmarried. Dick has no fan club, but would love one. Any would-be presidents or fans can write him at Warner's, Burbank, Calif.

JOAN LORRING was born in China, on April 17, 1926. Joan's 5' 3" tall, weighs 109 lbs., has reddish hair, hazel eyes and is unmarried. Next film is The Lost Moment. Sally Hubbell, 28 W. 54, Indianapolis, Indiana, has her fan club. Joan welcomes fan mail at Universal, Universal City, California.

Welcome back Farley Granger whose first post-war pic is Your Red Wagon, by writing to him at RKO, Hollywood. Farley was born in San Jose, Calif., on July 1, 1925. He's 6' tall, with brown hair and eyes, and is unmarried.

Mrs. Susan Sill, N. Y. C. Edna Skinner, this column's discovery, will soon be seen with Sinatra in The Kissing Bandit. Tommy Wonder, versatile actor-dancer, just completed This Time for Keeps, and Saramba. Both would love mail sent to them at M-G-M, Culver City. Handsome, blond, Michael Steele is still with RKO, no film set yet, but write him there for a photo.

Charles Lampert, B'klyn: La Feria de Las Flores, La China Mexicana, Jarabe Tapatio, Las Mananitas, Borrachito, El Zopolite, El Mosco, La Salida del Toro, La Diana, Cielo Andaluz, Chiclanera, Novillero, and Aaron Copland's composition, El Salon de Mexico, arranged for the picture as Fantasia Mexicana, were the musical pieces in Fiesta.

Ginnie Martin: Gladys Hanson, 212 N. W. 4th, Chisolm, Minn., has Lauren Bacall's Club; Betty Rowland, 4407 So. Peoria, Tulsa, Okla., has Jennifer Jones'; Cecelia Olsen, 142 Java, Brooklyn, N. Y., has Tommy Wonder's.

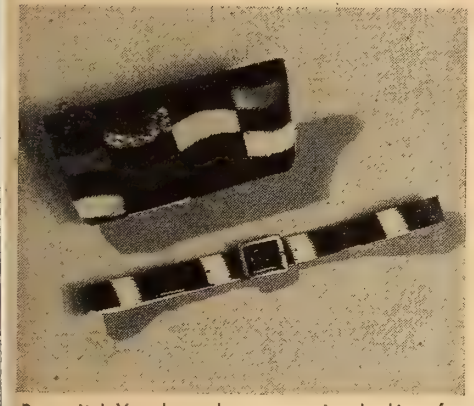
My request? QUESTIONS! My address? Beverly Linet, INFORMATION DESK, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y. Don't forget the self-addressed, stamped envelopes.

SPECIAL OFFER

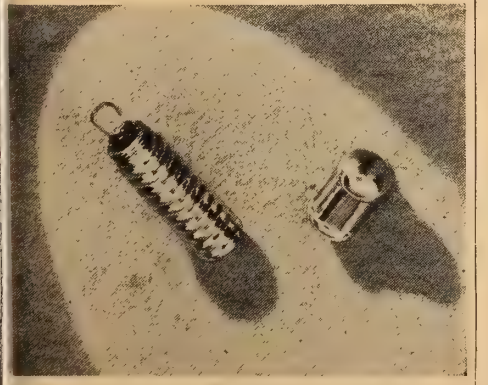
SUPER-STAR INFORMATION CHART—1946-'47 (10c)—A new edition of the chart that's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia of fascinating data on all your favorite stars. 100 additional names never before listed! Please send 10c in coin to Service Dept., MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

modern screen shops for you

There's date interest in this gold-finished link bracelet. Seven charms (for each day) to jot down dates or reminders. At week's end just wash 'em to start off with a clean slate. By Omar. About $2, plus tax. Saks 34th St., N.Y.



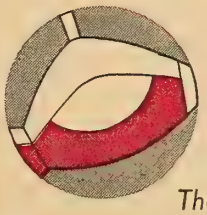
Pure ritz! You know how expensive looking fur is. You know the swank of suede. Imagine the wealthy look and feel of both together! Pony-skin and suede; black or brown. Elf Accessories Belt about $3; Bag, about $5. Mary Lewis, N.N.Y.



A perfume flask in lipstick size. Glass lined and leak proof. Comes with tiny funnel for easy filling. Nothing like a whiff of sweet smelling stuff for a pick-up! Gold, only $1, postpaid. Gift Clues, 302 E. 45th St., N. Y.

Write for FREE BOOK-LET on corset and brassiere fitting comfort. Address Ruth Stone— "Perma-lift" Stylist, 1143 W. Congress St., Chicago 7, Ill., Dept. 44

THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN



There's magic in your "Perma·lift" Bra—the magic of comfortable uplift. In a "Perma·lift" Bra, the specially constructed cushion insets at the base of the bra cups gently support your bust from below—never lose that support thru ever so many washings and wearings. Your favorite corsetiere has a "Perma·lift" Bra for you—smartly styled in lovely new fabrics—most styles 1.50 to 3.50. • For a real comfort thrill, you'll also enjoy a new "Perma·lift" Girdle. No Bones About It—Stays Up Without Stays.*

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. STEIN & COMPANY (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

What a wonderful way to look . . . while you wait!

DORIS DODSON makes you SLIM in an adjustable-waist dress with front skirt pleats. Grey, Copper Penny, or Aquaglint Band Box rayon flannel. 11 to 17. About $13.00.

Write for the name of your local shop... Doris Dodson, St. Louis 1, Missouri

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices on merchandise may vary throughout the country.)

Korday red corduroy jumper and matching plaid lined jacket worn by Bambi Linn in the full color photograph
(page 73)

New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Providence, R. I.—Gladding's, Inc., Sportswear, Third Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Adelaar blouse shown in the full color photograph
(page 73)

Chicago, Ill.—Carson, Pirie Scott & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Providence, R. I.—Gladding's, Inc., Sportswear, Third Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Ladyarn middy sweater with sailor collar
(page 74)

Detroit, Mich.—Ernst Kern Co., Sports Shop, Sixth Floor
Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous & Barr Co. Little New Yorker Shop, Fourth Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Leemor all around pleated skirt
(page 74)

Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's, Fashions, Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Mayline two piece fraternity pin dress
(page 75)

Boston, Mass.—Neal's, Inc.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Sporteens plaid skirt with matching scarf
(page 76)

Columbus, Ohio—Morehouse-Martens, Sportswear Dept., First Floor
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
St. Paul, Minn.—The Emporium, Sports Shop, Second Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Featherknit wool sweater
(page 76)

Cleveland, Ohio—The May Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Jack Schnittman plaid middy tunic top and skirt
(page 77)

Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's, Fashions, Second Floor
Cincinnati, Ohio—Mabley & Carew, Sportswear Dept., Third Floor
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Adelaar blouse with quilted collar and cuffs
(page 77)

Chicago, Ill.—Carson, Pirie Scott & Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Ann Marie corduroy patch pocket skirt
(page 79)

Baltimore, Md.—The May Co.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Adelaar shield print blouse
(page 79)

New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Joselli double breasted suit
(page 80)

Easton, Pa.—Bon Ton Dept. Store Ready-to-Wear, Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Company

Accessories shown on Pages 74 and 7

Coro medallion necklace and fortune telling bracelet

Baltimore, Md.—Hutzler Bros. Co., Jewelry Dept., First Floor
New York, N. Y.—Macy's

Handstitched cotton gloves

New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Seattle, Wash.—The Bon Marche, Stree Floor

Vogue cowhide belt

Atlanta, Ga.—Davison-Paxon Co., Accessories, Street Floor
Boston, Mass.—Filene's
New York, N. Y.—Macy's

Pure silk scarf

Baltimore, Md.—Hutzler Bros. Co., Fashion Accessory Shop, First Floor
New York, N. Y.—Macy's
Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothro

If no store in your city is listed write: Fashion Editor, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

THE RABBIT GOT AWAY

(Continued from page 33)

addicts. Proper equipment is essential.

Guy and Gail use bows and arrows themselves, but even if you prefer guns, you need the same clothing.

Heavy boots are important; there are snakes in the brushy, mountainous, rabbit country. Rough clothes, too, of course.

If you prefer to leave mountains alone, and admit you're middle-aged, you can hunt exclusively from the top of a car. The creeping car will flush the rabbits before it, and you can wham away.

Incidentally, lady archers who want to protect their delicate hands often wear finger guards.

Gail has some that Guy made her. A little leather sheath goes over each finger, and then each sheath is attached to the wrist by a rawhide thong. Turkey claws are set into the leather, too. They sound ugly, but they're awfully strong.

Guy also makes his own arrows, feathers them himself, and constructs the points. The arrows are cedar, the feathers are goose, and the points are dural.

But whether you use a dural-pointed, goose-feathered, cedar arrow, or an old 20-gauge shot-gun, a jack-rabbit will give you plenty of argument. They travel so fast they're only blurs, and a fifteen-foot broad jump is nothing more than a step in the right direction, to a rabbit.

The direction away from you, that is.

When you go off for the day on one of these hunting trips, you usually pack a lunch (there aren't any drive-ins in them thar hills) and you usually discover yourself eating it on bare rocks.

Gail's picnic lunches are like in the movies—fried chicken and cool drinks—and Guy pretends it's the only reason he takes her. "If I go by myself, I pack a chocolate bar. What's the percentage?"

In all fairness, we ought to report that the day Modern Screen went along, Madison was gallantry itself. He helped Gail up hills, through brush, and over rock. And now and then, when a lovely big ugly rabbit showed, he even let her shoot first. Which is why all the rabbits got away.

she's called "the threat" lizabeth scott and modern screen has captured her challenging, exciting beauty for our october cover on sale september 12

Merry-Go-Round encircles your bust with glamour—transforms a small bust into alluring, feminine curves—gives a full bosom youthful, firm contours. Circles of stitching support the bust—patented Circular Bias molds the bust. The secret's in the circle!

Merry-Go-Round* A PETER PAN BRA

* Only Peter Pan makes patented Merry-Go-Round. LOOK FOR THE LABEL!

▶ For FREE Booklet, "Your New Guide to Bustline Beauty," Write Dept. D-4

PETER PAN 116 EAST 27 ST., NEW YORK 16

In All White for WOMEN IN WHITE

In Red or Brown to WEAR AROUN' TOWN

The PATTY

Kickerinos

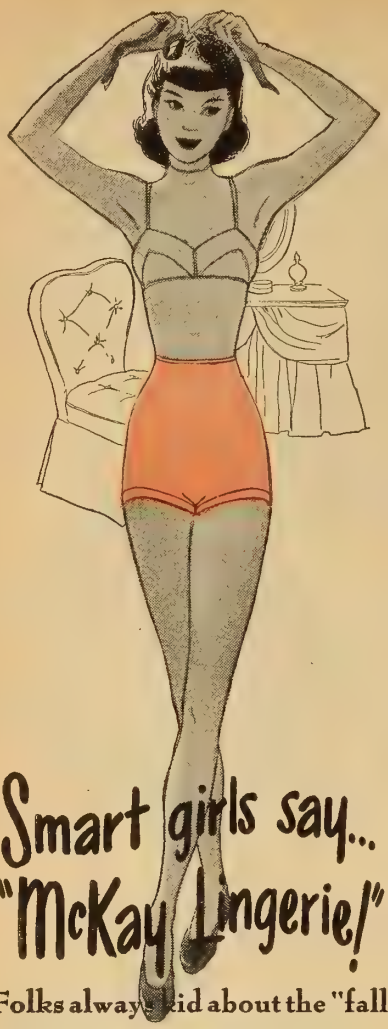
A GREAT NAME IN CASUAL FOOTWEAR

In Black, too, for WORK or PLAY

You'll love the heel-hugging fit and ankle-flattering smoothness of KICKERINOS. You will like KICKERINOS because they are arched to fit your feet and made in soft, comforting, luxurious leathers.

At Better Stores Everywhere. For One Nearest You, Write to

MARILYN SHOE CO., MILWAUKEE 5, WISCONSIN



Smart girls say... "McKay Lingerie!"

Folks always kid about the "fall guy". How about the fall gal? More and more girls in the know are falling for McKay Lingerie . . . winter, spring, summer and fall!

So many lovely styles . . . so free to wear . . . so easy to wash.

Truly — the lingerie with the perfect fit — at the perfect budget price!

To be found at S. S. Kresge Co. and S. H. Kress & Co.

Next time say, "McKay Lingerie"!

McK McKay LINGERIE

Empire State Bldg. New York

modern screen shops for you

A cardigan sweater called Stop and Go. The large squares are red and green, the back solid color. Bet that policemen's whistles aren't the only ones you get! All wool. By Featherknits. About $4. At Macy's, N. Y.

Another sweater that we're in love with. Long sleeves, long torso (the latest thing), ribbed waistband makes your waist look ridiculously small. Comes in heavenly color combinations. By Glamour Knit. About $3. Macy's.

A gal's best friend is a sweater. Narrow striped all wool honey to go with anything. See the new long torso, elbow length sleeves, and crew neck. Comes in wonderful colors. By Tish-U-Knit. About $5, Saks-34th St., N.Y.

Don't reach for that cookie but do reach for a Real-form Girdle or Panty Girdle! Raschel-Knitted of fashioned to fit Lastex with removable crotch. Can't run! $5.00.

REAL-FORM GIRDLE CO., 358 Fifth Ave., New York 1

Write for Free Illustrated Booklet, Dept. 4D

nationally famous

"GOOD BEHAVIOR." SLIP

style #100

Tall
Medium
Short
Junior

*Reg U S Pat Off.

Your best slip is back again with its famous swirl skirt that won't bunch, ride up, or twist. about $2.25

In a slip it's "Good Behavior" that counts

MOVIE STAR SLIPS • 159 MADISON AVE., N.Y.

THE DELICATE ONE

(Continued from page 61)

Just about as long as she can remember, she's been making movies. It was almost a matter of necessity back in her baby days, when her spunky mother, left with five kids to raise, had to make every nickel count. Loretta's uncle was business manager for George Melford, a silent era producer, and Loretta, Polly, Sally and all the younger Youngs showed up for a quick check every time a kiddie bit came along. A lot of her own early Hollywood memories are lost in the mists of childhood. She didn't even know how she got her name, "Loretta," until recently when Colleen Moore, one of Hollywood's great silent stars, told her.

They had needed a child for a bit part in one of Colleen's movies. "There's a little beauty over there," Colleen told director Mervyn LeRoy, "who could grow up and be a star some day. How about her?"

Mervyn took a look and agreed. He slipped the moppet into the part and asked her name. "Gretchen." That jarred, he thought. She'd need a smoother tag. That's when Colleen came up with the name of her favorite doll, named after a fairy princess, "Loreta." "Too foreign sounding," objected Mervyn. "Add a 't' and make it 'Loretta'," suggested Colleen. That's what happened, as Loretta learned only a few months ago.

Loretta's still "Gretch" to her family and old friends, but it's significant, maybe, that every name she's collected since her christening has been a tribute to Loretta's flower-petal loveliness. Last year Loretta and her husband, Tom Lewis, took a trip to Honolulu. Right away the Hawaiians christened her as they saw her, "La-hi La-hi," which means "The Delicate One."

perennial pet . . .

Her beauty isn't the main reason, by a long shot, that Loretta Young is playing today to a second generation audience, every bit as smitten with her as the jazz-age boys and girls when her fresh beauty first flashed on the silent screen in Laugh, Clown, Laugh.

As a star, Loretta's still Young, to pull a pun, because she's strictly professional. She knows her stuff as few Hollywood stars do. She's stayed "Gretch" Young as a person and Loretta Young as a movie star—and she's done all right in both departments.

Six years ago, Loretta became Mrs. Tom Lewis. Tom's a big, good looking radio executive, who, as an army Colonel, organized and bossed the Armed Forces Radio Services during the war. They met when Tom had Loretta on his Screen Guild air show. He called her. "This is Tom Lewis, Miss Young. I'd like you to be down at the studio at eleven o'clock Sunday for rehearsal."

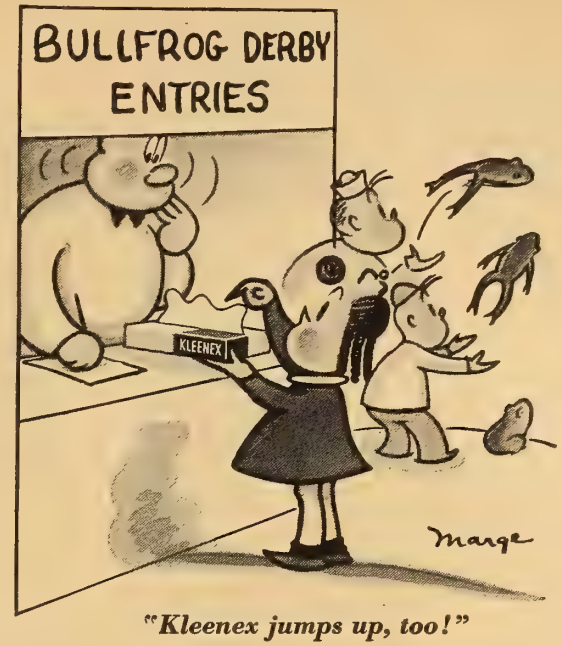
"I go to church at eleven on Sundays, Mr. Lewis," came back Loretta. "May I go to church with you?" he asked. He's been going to church with her ever since.

With both sides of the house active in show business careers, Loretta made a canny vow the minute she married to "hoard our private life." She's kept it, too, which isn't easy in Hollywood.

Loretta doesn't play hard-to-get as a screen star. She's easy to see; no closed sets, no acts, no poses. She isn't temperamental or headstrong, but she usually gets her way by being frank.

Henry Koster, directing The Bishop's Wife, said recently that Loretta's scenes were the easiest job he'd ever had. They're the result of a twenty-minute study each morning as Loretta's maid, Beatrice, drives

LITTLE LULU



"Kleenex jumps up, too!"

Little Lulu says...Compare tissues—compare boxes—and you'll see why 7 out of 10 tissue users like Kleenex* best! Soft! Strong! Pops Up! It's America's favorite tissue.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Lovely hair deserves fine care
...use Du Pont Combs
You're his lovely . . . if you keep your hair shining-neat with plastic Du Pont Combs. Scalp-kind, curl-careful . . . yet strong, strong, strong! Gay colors, so many styles you'll want a complete comb wardrobe. Du Pont quality. 10-50¢ . . . At all good stores.
DU PONT COMBS
DU PONT
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

her to work in the car. The point is—she knows her stuff, and she's not afraid to strut it in public when the occasion demands. On display, Loretta's level head tells her, a movie star owes it to the world to be glamorous.

Last year Loretta was invited to a cocktail party in New York. She understood it was definitely a dress-up affair. "Okay," she told herself. "I'll really dress." She dolled up tip to toe in her newest glamor rags and swept into the place. She heard a woman whisper, "My God—leave it to Hollywood!" That didn't bother Loretta.

Loretta's favorite dress for "Gretch" is a plain white sharkskin she bought to go to Mexico on her honeymoon. She's worn it constantly since. Oddly enough, this strictly "Gretch" dress betrayed her as Loretta Young the only time she attempted to fool her public!

She wore it one day on her honeymoon, in Chapultepec, Mexico, where Loretta and Tom were taking in Cortez' old palace with some Mexican friends. They warned her. "Don't admit you're Loretta Young. You might get caught in a mob."

So when the first little girl asked her, "Are you not Señorita Young?" she denied all. "No, no, I'm not." But the girl came back with the same question, and each time with more people. Pretty soon the mob Loretta was ducking hemmed her in. She couldn't understand it until Tom rescued her.

"Look at your dress," he suggested.

On each lapel, big as life, embroidered "L.Y.'s" gave her away all the time.

Loretta and Tom's children are a section of her life Loretta keeps securely sealed off from her life as a celebrity. She and Tom won't have pictures of their brood taken for publication, and neither Loretta's children nor their friends consider her anything extraordinary. In fact, Loretta pretty well proved to them she wasn't—around her home town, at least, in a slight embarrassment she had a while back.

The occasion was daughter Judy's 11th birthday. Tom and Loretta collected a swarm of neighborhood moppets and carted them off to the Westwood Village. After the show, Tom drove away with his load, and Loretta started to drive hers out of the parking lot when she realized she didn't happen to have any money with her.

She explained to the glowering attendant she was temporarily embarrassed for funds but that she'd be back and pay. "I'm Loretta Young," she said. The name meant nothing. "I don't care who you are, lady," he said, "I want my two-bits."

Loretta sighed, excused herself from the kids, and explained her predicament to the manager. He didn't glimmer a spark of recognition either. "Well," he said grudgingly, like someone granting coffee money to a panhandler, "I guess if you need a quarter, like you say, I can let you have it."

Loretta works overtime at being a good mother. Instead of giving her housekeeper and nurse one day off a week, she picks once a month, and dismisses them for five or six days in a row. That's her time to take over everything for the kids—even cooking, which she's admittedly pretty sad at. You can't be a good mother by remote control, she believes, movie star or not. Not a mother like her maternal ideal, her own mother, Mrs. Belser, who even today keeps her independence with a business of her own, a separate home and a personality that even her famous daughters can't shadow. The Youngs have always been a close clan all their lives, and Loretta reserves a special place in her heart for the three girls and the brother she grew up with. The happiest birthday party Loretta remembers was one right in her room at home. She came home, after working late one night, to find a tiny cake, candles and silver service set on a little table. A note read, "Dear Gretch. I waited up as long as I could. Wake me up when you get in. Happy Birthday!" She woke up sister Sally and they had a party at midnight. Loretta denies it but she's really sentimental as all get out. Last Christmas, Tom was called East on business. At the Lewis's, they ignored the calendar and saved Christmas, gifts and everything, until Tom got back—in February!

The Lewis's live in a white brick Normandy house. Loretta has packed it with antiques she's brought over from Europe, remodeled the downstairs for a view and fussed around generally—one domestic weakness she can't resist. Once Loretta dropped by to see an old friend of hers in Hollywood. "Make yourself at home," said the friend, running upstairs. "I'll be down in a minute." When she came down, Loretta had moved all the front room furniture around!

Loretta loves her own home and its life, particularly since she has a husband and family. Before she got married, she loved going out, the oftener the better, had a new dress and a spectacular hat every time she had a day off to shop. But her most glamorous outfits now are swap jobs.

Loretta and a good friend of hers showed up at a dinner party a few years ago in brand new gowns. "What a lovely dress!" marvelled the friend. "I think yours is gorgeous!" came back Loretta. The mutual admiration act went on until Loretta cracked, "I'll swap you even."

"Okay," laughed her friend.

Loretta Young has changed in a lot more ways than cutting down her clothes bill since she became Mrs. Tom Lewis—but in a lot of other ways she's still about as she was when she first faced a camera.

Loretta still wants a good nine hours sleep every night and usually dozes off in the twenty minutes it takes for Beatrice to drive her home from a day on the set.

oversized heart . . .

Loretta still packs an oversized heart, especially for her old pals. One of the gang who hung around the pretty Young girls, Billy Bakewell, now a victim of the housing panic, lives in Loretta's guest house today. Another, who dated all the daughters and ate Mrs. Belser's cooking, (which came in handy at the time, since he was a struggling young actor) is David Niven, who's starring with Loretta and Cary Grant right now in The Bishop's Wife. When the Texas City explosion disaster broke recently, a drive was made in Hollywood for star souvenirs to auction at benefits. Loretta brought in her newest evening gown, a Howard Greer number that set her back Heaven knows how many hundreds. A girl friend fell ill a few months ago, was homeless and needed help. Loretta brought her to her house where she stayed until she was completely recovered. That's her style.

Privately, Loretta Young has changed most with the changes a happy and successful marriage bring. Her home, her husband and her children are her life now. For fun, she likes evenings at home instead of stepping around, small dinner parties with her good friends, Irene Dunne and Frank Griffin, Claudette Colbert and Joel Pressman, the William Goetzes, Roz Russell and Freddie Brisson, Jennifer Holt and Bill Bakewell, David Niven, Lew Ayres, Josie Wayne (John Wayne's former wife) and members of her own family and in-laws.

Professionally, Loretta's changed, coincidentally, in the same solid way. Since The Farmer's Daughter particularly, Loretta's insisted on something to say and a character to play. "That's why I'm free-lancing from now on," she explained. If she doesn't like a part she says "No"—and that's that.

Sometimes Loretta and Tom Lewis talk of getting away from it all one day to their favorite spot, Hawaii but they both know they're just clicking their teeth—especially Loretta.

She was raised before a camera. Hollywood's deep in her blood and vice versa, and she loves everything about it. Loretta's a sucker particularly for all the new faces who bob up to rival established stars like herself. She admits she's simply nuts about Van Johnson and Pete Lawford, swoons for Lana Turner's beauty, and ever since she saw Jane Greer in Out of the Past, she's simply become a bit boring to her friends, press-agenting Jane's talents. "What pictures simply have to have all the time," she points out, "is young blood."

After all, Loretta's only thirty-three. And in spite of the twenty-odd service stripes on her dressing gown, she's still part of that young blood herself. It's the heart that counts.

"Leaving early today, aren't you, Miss Jones?"

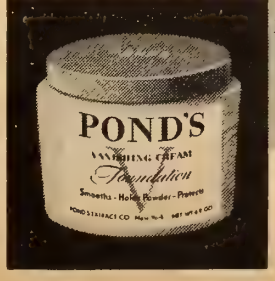
Mrs. Robert Bacon Whitney attends a members' reception at the Metropolitan Museum

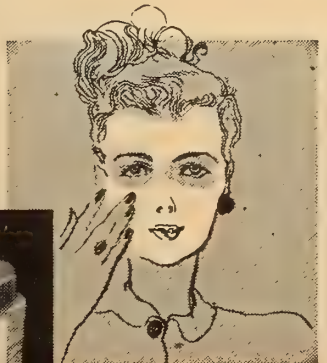
"Before I go out—always a 1-Minute Mask!"

In white mink, and snowy lace, Mrs. Robert Bacon Whitney has the fragile beauty of a Dresden figurine. Framed by its soft halo of golden hair, Mrs. Whitney's complexion glows with a smooth, translucent loveliness. "Before I go out, I always have a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream," says this charming Long Island society favorite.

"In just one minute—by the clock—the 1-Minute Mask gives my skin a new, fresher, smoother look—with clearer color, and a perfect finish for make-up!"

It's a lovely foundation cream, too





Every time you want to look your best, re-style your complexion with Mrs. Whitney's beloved beauty treatment—the 1-Minute Mask!

See how easy it is to make your evenings more glamorous

1. Give your tired "end of the day" complexion a quick beauty re-styling! Smooth a cool white Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream over your whole face, except eyes.

2. Right away—"keratolytic" action of the Cream starts to loosen and dissolve off little roughnesses that make skin look coarser, duller. After one minute, tissue off clean!

3. You're lovelier—all in one minute! Your complexion has a lighter, clearer, more wide-awake look—a so much smoother feel! You're ready for a wonderful evening—looking your very prettiest!

FAMILY MAN—WESTERN STYLE

(Continued from page 57)

Roy will explain patiently, loosening his tie.

"Well, then," Cheryl will proceed, "We'll entertain you at home." One time the entertainment consisted of bubble gum. Whitey, Roy and Linda Lou sat on the couch and watched Cheryl blow.

"A man could put up with a lot all day if he knew he was coming home to a fascinating gal like that at night," Whitey said —a grin in his voice and his eyes where Cheryl couldn't see.

"Darn right," said Roy, and he wasn't kidding. He's a gone duck where his kids are concerned.

Another night, the entertainment was ballet. Cheryl's just started taking lessons, and she's not bad. Roy watched her, transfigured. For his dough, Pavlova could now move over. Whitey was more casual about it. He tossed popcorn into his mouth and said,

"He-ey, the kid's gonna have Legs!"

Whitey's good for Roy. A fellow bringing up three youngsters alone could get sort of panicky, but not with Whitey around. He's their second father, and he shares all Roy's joys and worries.

"What do you do about discipline, Roy?" a fellow at Republic Studios asked him one day.

jest whop 'em . . .

Roy replied in words of one syllable. "We spank."

"We?" the man pursued.

"Sure—we. Whitey and I." "We" is a comfortable word.

The most recent spanking was over pills. Cheryl is a little bit anemic, and the doctor prescribed pills. They were very small. They were even candy-coated. But Cheryl could not swallow them. She said.

Roy wheedled. "Come on now, honey."

Whitey looked fierce. "Don't you want to get blood?"

Nothing cut any ice until Roy spanked. He didn't do it in anger. It was just a cool, well-placed smack, and Cheryl now eats pills without a murmur.

In spite of his methods, Roy's kids adore him, and they'd sooner see one of his movies than eat. Roy has a 16 mm. camera and prints of two of his old pictures, Navajo Trail and Don't Fence Me In—which the kids would like to see every night in the week. However, the present arrangement—far from satisfactory to the insatiable pair—is to show Navajo Trail on Tuesday and Don't Fence Me In on Thursday. Week in and week out. Says Whitey, who spells Roy at the projector, "I'm so sick of that Roy Rogers I could yell."

"You're sick of him," Roy shouts. "How'd you like to be the guy?"

The Roy Rogers comics are something else again. Roy took a bunch of them away from Cheryl one day when she was supposed to be doing some work for school. He happened to glance over them absentmindedly and actually found himself caring what happened next. He's been quite a fan ever since.

Both kids brag about pop unmercifully to the local small fry, and when the youngsters at Sherman Oaks—where Cheryl goes to school—didn't believe she was Roy Rogers' little girl, she insisted on wearing her cowboy suit, which is identical to one of Roy's, to school. To absolutely cinch things, she also distributed dozens of his pictures. As a result she couldn't be more popular, and Roy—who doesn't know about the pictures—is pleased as Punch. And Cheryl's too smart to tell.

"Got a way with the boys already," he gloated one night at dinner.

Whitey's attractive mom, Marian, who keeps house for them all, smiled gently. "She certainly has."

For her part, Cheryl only has eyes for Whitey. She's simply mad for him. Not long ago, Whitey began bringing Jane Frazee around quite a lot. (She's co-starring in Roy's latest picture.) For weeks, Cheryl ignored her, thinking that if she simply paid no attention, Janie might go away. The last time Jane was at the house, just before Whitey and Roy left for the East, Cheryl's jealousy got out of control. She sat between them on the ride to the horse ranch and stuck to them like glue in the interval before dinner. At the dinner-table, Whitey did manage to get in a word with Janie, whereupon Cheryl, tears in her voice, moaned, "Oh, Whitey, talk to me-ee."

Later on, Roy—sort of embarrassed over his daughter's overt affection, tried to talk to Whitey about it. "What the heck are you doing in this hornets' nest, slugger? A nice young guy trying to get along—"

Whitey looked at him as if he were nuts. "Darn it," he muttered. "I like it here."

In three and a half years of friendship, these two have never had a fight. They're two of a kind. Easy-going, straight-shooting, honest almost to a fault. Roy and his honesty are a press agent's nightmare. And aside from his honesty, he's devoid of vanity.

He and Republic's publicity representative, Evelyn Koleman, were having lunch with an interviewer one day, and Evelyn remarked as an icebreaker, "Roy just spent $6,000 for a new saddle for Trigger."

"4,800, Evelyn," Roy said dourly. Things went along pleasantly enough for a while, and then Evelyn said, "A youngster I know is so crazy about Roy that she wears her Roy Rogers cowboy suit to bed." Roy put down his fork and looked at Evelyn hard.

"Is that a true story?" he inquired. Fortunately, it was. That lad's a human lie-detector. As the interview was ending, Evelyn trotted out some pictures of Roy and Trigger. Roy shuffled through them and handed the interviewer a couple.

"What about these others?" Evelyn said. "You're a thousand times better-looking in the smiling ones."

"Maybe," Roy drawled. "But Trigger's got his eyes closed in these other ones."

The entire Rogers family, from Trigger to Dusty, gets fan mail. The studio handles most of it—including the 80,000 letters that come in for Roy in a month—but lately seven-year-old Cheryl wants to dictate her own replies. "That's all we need," Roy told her. "A mob of gals working on letters at the studio, Evelyn handling a bunch of them at the New York office, Marian doing the ones that come here—and now you want to get into the act." Cheryl hummed a small non-committal tune and studied her fingernails. Roy recently discovered that she's acquired a big box of "Cheryl Rogers" stationery, and is replying voluminously to her own admirers.

The most restful member of the group at this point is eight-months-old Dusty, who minds his own business and says nothing and has exquisite taste in ties For Father's Day, Linda and Cheryl went down town with Donna, Dusty's nurse, and selected ties for Roy. Linda's choice was loud and horsey. So was Cheryl's. Donna looked over the entire rack thoughtfully.

"I think Dusty would choose this one," she said. It was a soft wool plaid job. Very nice.

Roy was in New York on Father's Day for the Roy Rogers Thrill Circus, and he found the box of ties in his suitcase. "Look at these," he said to Whitey. Whitey slipped on his sun glasses.

"Lucky you," he said.

Then Roy opened Dusty's box, read the silly little card and beamed. "Say," he said softly, "It takes a man to pick one every time."

a kid's dream . . .

The Roy Rogers Thrill Circus opened that day at the Polo Grounds, and that opening was one of the top moments of Roy's life. As a little kid he'd always wanted to be in the circus, and here he was not only in one, he owned the thing. And this circus is really something. Everything under the sun goes on. A gal is shot out of a cannon, a guy rides a bicycle on a tight rope miles above the ground, another fellow sits on a chair a-top a swaying 180-foot pole. It's the sort of thing that has mom close to swooning, but that the kiddies adore. When Roy isn't doing his spectacular riding—on Trigger, of course—he's watching the show, as thrilled as any nine-year-old. Only bad feature of the deal is that for the five weeks that the circus is on tour, Roy won't see the kids. It's his own fault, actually. "We could be in it," Linda Lou had suggested wistfully. "I could ride Nip and Cheryl could ride Tuck." Each child has a pony, and Cheryl's a pretty good rider, but little Linda can just about stay on.

Roy, remembering his early dreams, had said, "Not this year, honey. Maybe when you're bigger . . ."

So now he's lonesome for the noise and the bubble gum and Alice-in-Wonderland interminably on the victrola. He misses braiding the kids' hair and burping Dusty and having his breakfast brought up to him at 6 a.m. by his two maddening, well-meaning daughters. Whitey looked at him moping in his hotel room the other day. "Smile, chum," he said. "You're the guy who always wanted to be in the circus."

"Shucks," Roy told him, "I guess I want everything."

He's such a darn nice guy, we kinda hope he gets it.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

While Esther Williams was down here making Fiesta, with her husband, Ben Gage, I saw her at the races. I asked her for her autograph and then, since I seemed to her to know a lot about the horses, she asked me who was going to win the next race. I said, "Number Seven." She thanked me and went to place her bet. Later, when Number Seven won, she called me over and said, "Thanks, honey. I told Ben I would win this race and he would lose—and that's just what happened."

Beverly Crump
Mexico City, Mexico

JOAN CRAWFORD

Star of Warner Bros.'
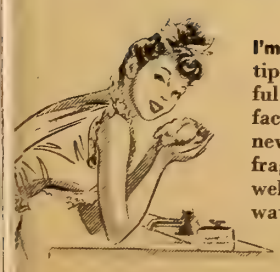
"POSSESSED"

"Be Lovelier Tonight!"

"My Beauty Facials leave skin softer, more appealing," says this lovely star



I'm taking Joan Crawford's tip! She says: "It's wonderful the way Lux Soap facials give skin fresh new beauty! Smooth the fragrant Active lather well in, rinse with warm water, then cold. Pat with a towel to dry."

Joan Crawford is right. Don't let neglect cheat you of Romance. Be lovelier tonight!

In recent tests of Lux Toilet Soap facials by skin specialists, actually 3 out of 4 complexions improved in a short time!

A product of
LEVER BROTHERS
COMPANY

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use Lux Toilet Soap— Lux Girls are Lovelier!

For new COMFORT—new POISE—
try MEDS!

Have a happy vacation—free from nagging worry! Pack a box of Meds tampons in your bag—be secure on "difficult" days!

Meds are so different—the famous "Safety-Well" for extra protection; soft, luxurious cotton for added comfort; tidy, compact applicators, so easy to use! Enjoy EVERY day! Say goodbye to pads and belts, binding and chafing!

Ask for Meds TODAY at your favorite store—or use the coupon below for trial package of REGULAR Meds—the absorbency most mature women need.

Slender MEDS with REGULAR absorbency in the light blue box • De Luxe MEDS with SUPER absorbency in the dark blue box

29¢ for 10 in applicators

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Martha Steele
Personal Products Corporation
Milltown, New Jersey
MS-9

Dear Martha Steele: I want to try REGULAR Meds. Please send, in plain wrapper, with full directions, trial package for which I enclose 10¢ (stamps or coin) to cover mailing.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Acceptable for advertising in the Journal of the American Medical Association

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION • SHIRLEY FROHLICH, DIRECTOR

SURPRISE FINISH: We've often referred to our MODERN SCREEN Trophy Cup Contest as a race, and after the surprise finish in the contest just completed, we're convinced that it's so. It was a race—and with a real movie ending, too! For just as League Three's disappointed runner-up club was about to tear up its ticket (figuratively speaking, natch)—whoosh! Down came the flag of the previously-announced winner (disqualified by mutual agreement) and up went the flag of the final and true winner in League Three: the Richard Jaeckel Club. The Fifth Semi-Annual M. S. Trophy Cup Competition is now officially over—and the staff is exceedingly happy with the results.

the toppers . . .

Now, of course, you want to know something about the winning clubs, so let's take 'em up individually:

The Nelson Eddy Music Club, co-prexied by Rita and Jo Mottola of Hempstead, L. I., won the League One Trophy with a total of 1450 points. They've recently celebrated their 12th Anniversary, and they're the proud sponsors of an adopted war orphan and the Nelson Eddy Music Club Scholarship, presented to the Juilliard Institute of Musical Art in Nelson's honor. They're also members of the Metropolitan Opera Guild and the Philharmonic Symphony Society of New York. Their journal is noted for its forums on serious music and the fascinating monthly questionnaire which Nelson fills out in his own hand. At present, the club ambition is to see its honorary starred in a screen biography of Chaliapin.

Loretta Verbin, president of the Jack Carson Club (winner of the League Two Cup) recently graduated from high school in San Francisco. Her graduation present was a visit with Jack in Hollywood. Her club is just over two years old, and its journal, Carson's Collections, is distinguished for the same bright humor that is characteristic of its honorary. The Carson Club chalked up 1500 points.

The Richard Jaeckel Club, League Three winner, is another two-year baby, piloted by Louise Warnes of Hamilton, N. Y. Its hectographed journals are neat as a pin, but the club is saving patiently for that mark of fan club success—a mimeograph machine. For most of the club's existence, Jake was in the Merchant Marine, but members did a great job of plugging for their boy. The club has just turned over $30 to the Red Cross, and its immediate ambition is to have Jake get the role of Robert in Miracle of the Bells. Every year the Jaeckel Club awards the title, Miss Jaeckel Times, to its prettiest member and this year the coveted title belongs to Marie Vranicar.

Runners-up, and all highly-recommended clubs: League One: Gene Autry F. C., Dick Haymes Associates, June (Allyson) Bugs, Ernest Tubb C., Binggang, Rex Allen C. and Bob Mitchum C. League Two: Dennis Morgan C. (where there's Carson, can Morgan be far behind?), Bob Crosby Bob-cats, Intern. Shirley Temple C., Ginger Rogers C., Charles Korvin C., Gene Kelly C., and (Rosemary) De-Campaigners. League Three: Sinatra C. (Wolfenstein), Vincent Price C., Bill Williams C. (Demers), Basil Rathbone C., Carole Landis C., Sinatra C. (Beattie), Joe Cotten C., and Sinatra C. (Chiappari).

starting line . . .

Sixth Semi-Annual Trophy Club Contest: This month marks the beginning of a completely new contest—and that means every club has a chance to win, even if it's never scored a point before. So that every club member will understand exactly how he or she can help his or her club to the top, we're going to explain in detail how our Contest works:

Once every six months, MODERN SCREEN awards one Trophy Cup to the best fan club in each of our Three Leagues. If your club has under 200 members, it belongs in League Three; if it has 200 to 499 members, it's in League Two and if it boasts 500 members or more, it's in League One. (Note that we've changed the minimum membership in League One to 500, in order to bring more real competition to that League.)

Your club competes for its League Cup on the basis of points awarded by MODERN SCREEN's editors in our series of monthly contests. In many cases, not only will you win points for your club, but if our editorial judges select your work, you'll also win a personal gift prize worth having. We're talking about lush stuff like POND's wonderful cosmetics, specially packaged for us; the handsome TANGEE Trip-Kit, fitted with Tangee preparations and perfect for travel; FABERGE's exciting Perfume and Cologne Combination Sets and FABERGE's Men's Cologne; subscriptions to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE, SCREEN ALBUM, and a variety of hair-raising DELL Mystery books. All yours—if you give it a fair try! Now here's a list of the monthly contests and the points awarded each winner:

"This Is My Best" Contest. Every month our editors select the six best articles and/or poems printed in your journals, 100 pts. each.

Candid Camera Contest. Every MSFCA member is eligible to submit amateur snap shots to our Candid Camera Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16. They need not be pics of movie stars; any interesting snap is eligible. Write your name, address and club on back of each photo. First prize, 100 pts. Five others, 50 pts. each.

Best Journal of the Month: One journal selected from each League, 500 pts. each.

Best Editors of the Month: One editor selected from each League, 250 pts. each.

Best Covers of the Month: One cover selected from each League, 250 pts. each.

Best Original Piece of Art Work: One award each month, 150 pts.

Most Worthwhile Activities of the Month: One selection from each League, 250 pts. each.

Greatest Percentage Increase in Membership Each Month: One (Continued on page 100)

—that Always-Fresh look...

"My skin sparkles fresh, smooth . . . after this clean, clean cleansing with Woodbury Cold Cream!" says Ann Blyth in "MORTAL COILS"

a Universal-International Picture

FOUR RICH OILS IN WOODBURY COLD CREAM

- Clean-cleansing oils float away make-up and clogging skin soil
- Rich softening oils smooth skin each cleansing

Ann's beauty-glow cleansing...with Woodbury Cold Cream

Looks luscious—that fresh-awake glow of Ann's skin! "Morning starts with my dewy cream-cleansing . . . always with Woodbury Cold Cream," says Ann. "This silken cream really freshens . . . leaves skin satiny!" Start your day with Woodbury!

Date with glamour! "But first, my 'pretty-making' date with Woodbury Cold Cream!" Ann tells you . . . "So rich—it smooths away that studio-tired look . . . leaves skin fresh-lovely!" Easy, girls, to keep your glamour a-glow . . . with Woodbury Cold Cream.

That "Always-Fresh" look

Clear-clean, silken-soft skin . . . for you! Woodbury Cold Cream is different . . . made with four rich oils that cleanse deep to pore-openings, whisk off make-up, grime . . . rich softening oils that soften dryness. See the velvet-fresh look Woodbury Cold Cream gives your skin!

No finer cream than Woodbury is made — at any price!

FOR SPECIAL SKIN PROBLEMS

Dry Skin: Woodbury Cream-cleanse. Soften with Woodbury Special Dry Skin Cream . . . rich in lanolin's benefits.

Oily Skin: Cleanse with Woodbury Liquefying Cleansing Cream. Leaves skin clearer.

Ann's Woodbury Beauty Nightcap! "Couldn't miss my bedtime Woodbury cleansing," confides Ann. "Then, a mist of this rich cream to soften all night through." By morning, skin's dewy! For that "Always-Fresh" look...it's Woodbury Cold Cream!

There's "Buried Treasure" in your HAIR!
Discover it with
COLORINSE
DON'T have drab, "colorless" hair one minute longer! Give your hair the lovely, glowing color that makes you look "alive." Thousands of women use Nestle Colorinse to discover the "buried treasure" in their hair. Colorinse is not a permanent dye or bleach . . . it rinses new beauty into your hair, enhances its natural color, fills it with sparkling highlights and lustrous sheen. Colorinse won't rub or brush off but it is easily removed with shampooing. Try it tonight—after you shampoo. Nestle Colorinse comes in 9 colors, to glorify every shade of hair.
10¢ and 25¢ at beauty counters everywhere
Nestle
COLORINSE
Nestle
COLORINSE

THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE

(Continued from page 42)

was her Chicago dream man, looking handsomer than ever.

Fate, that's what it was, Buff decided immediately, and she would make the most of it. So she pulled herself together, assumed a gracefully unconscious pose, and was gazing off into space when Lucia said, "Buff, I want you to meet Bill Eythe and Charley Russell."

Buff smiled sweetly, murmured, "How do you do?" and then ruined the effect by breaking into laughter at the expression on Bill's face.

"Say, could you possibly have been in the Pump Room in Chicago last March?" he demanded.

"I could. In fact, I was, between trains."

"Well, hello, Miss Prim! Charley, I practically threw crackers at this girl all through lunch one day and she never even looked at me."

The swimming party was a success for them from that moment, naturally. Bill and Charley took Buff on to dinner at the Players' and then drove her home.

A few days later Bill called and asked her to have lunch with him at the Twentieth Century-Fox Studio. Buff accepted and it was fun. Afterwards, they went over to the Beverly Hills Tropics and sat around for hours, absorbed in a very involved discussion about philosophy and education. They found that their minds worked the same way even when they disagreed violently. It was, somehow, a very exciting discovery.

Their next date was for the gala premiere of Captain Eddie. Buff spent the entire day getting ready for it. Hours at the hair-dresser acquiring a lacquered, upswept hair-do. More hours of bubble bath, sophisticated makeup and donning a dramatic, bottle-green evening gown, very decollette. She might be only eighteen, but she wasn't going to let anyone guess it tonight!

Unfortunately, when Bill arrived his reaction to all this grandeur wasn't quite what she had expected. He smiled politely, and escorted her out to the car without a word of comment on her appearance.

"How do you like my dress?" Buff inquired at last, trying to goad him into a compliment.

build-up to a let-down . . .

"I hate green," Bill said, unexpectedly and fiercely.

"Oh." Buff's tone was subdued.

"And I like your hair down, like a kid's," Bill added. "You don't look like yourself at all, this way."

After that evening they didn't see each other for a while. When Bill didn't call, Buff told herself firmly that she didn't care. That he was stuffy and opinionated and who did he think he was anyway? She started wearing her hair up all the while and going out with a different date every night and making all the columns.

In October, Buffie's grandmother gave a birthday party for her. Practically all of Hollywood was there—including William Eythe.

As Buff was blowing out the candles on her birthday cake, the pink tulle hat she was wearing suddenly caught fire. It flared up crazily, and everyone screamed. Everyone but Buff and Bill. Bill grabbed the hat off and stamped out the flame and Buff calmly said, "Thank you," and began to cut the cake.

"I guess," said Mr. Eythe to himself, "I may have had this girl wrong. She seems to have guts."

He never left her side the rest of the evening. Eventually, they went out into the patio and sat and held hands in the moonlight. Instead of talking like mad the way they usually did, they didn't say anything at all. Just smiled at each other and sat there, happy as clams.

From that day on, things were different. Bill was moving into a new house over in the Valley. Buff helped him get settled. This was a completely new Buff and Bill watched her in amazement. She scrubbed floors, painted shelves, cut out paper for drawers and generally made like a little housewife.

Someone came to interview him for a magazine in the midst of this welter of activity. Buff came down the stairs during the interview, carrying four of Bill's dirty shirts and a box of soap powder. She wore no makeup, dungarees rolled to the knees, a white sweater patterned in crimson paint, and her hair in pigtails.

miss pigtails of 1947 . . .

Bill looked at the interviewer with a wicked gleam in his eyes. "Do you know the glamorous Buff Cobb?" he inquired politely. He still claims the interviewer fainted dead away.

Bill was making Centennial Summer now, and Buff was working in Anna and the King of Siam. They lunched together on the lot every day and people automatically asked them to parties together.

By now they both knew they were in love. And it scared them almost to death. Bill had done a lot of thinking about marriage since he had been in Hollywood, and he was sure he wanted no part of it, at least as long as he was in pictures. Because when Bill got married, he wanted it to be for keeps. But Buff was such a kid in so many ways. Always riding off in seventeen different directions. She just wasn't grown-up.

Buff, too, after one unhappy experience with matrimony, had her doubts on the subject. Of course, she had been only seventeen then, and she and Greg hadn't known each other very long when they were married, and maybe this would be entirely different. Or maybe it wouldn't. How could you tell?

That spring Johnny Coy and Dorothy Babbs got married. They and Buff and Bill had been a frequent foursome for months. As you remember, Bill took charge of all the wedding arrangements. He and Buff came to New York with them, and fixed it for the kids to be married in the Little Church Around The Corner.

While Bill was in New York, he met Buff's family, and they clicked right from the start. Of course he had known her charming grandmother in California. Now he met "big Buff," who isn't any bigger than a minute but is "little Buff's" chic, brilliant mother. And Cobby, her half-brother. And Frank Chapman, her father, who is now married to Gladys Swarthout, the famous opera singer.

It was a wonderful two weeks, and then Bill had to sail for England to make a picture. He put Buff on a plane for the Coast before he left.

"Be a good girl and learn your job so you'll be a fine actress. And try to find out what the hell you want to make of your life." He kept his tone carefully casual.

Buff just couldn't. "Will you miss me, Willy?" She called him that sometimes when she loved him specially much.

"I'll miss you all right," he said and now

Are you really sure of your present deodorant? Test it against New Perfect Fresh
See if New Perfect Fresh isn't the most effective cream deodorant you have ever been able to buy

Never before in History!

But now* Fresh brings you a new fluffier, creamier deodorant . . . to give you carefree underarm protection *even on hottest days.

Only Fresh can give you this patented combination of amazing ingredients in a new deodorant that has never been made before.

New Fresh is the most effective cream deodorant you have ever tried . . . we think you'll agree! Yet dresses are perfectly safe from rotting . . . normal skin is perfectly safe from irritation.

New Fresh is delicately perfumed, delightful to smooth on. No gritty crystals or annoying hard particles and it doesn't dry out in the jar.

But don't take our word for it—test it. Test New Perfect Fresh today against your present deodorant—see if it isn't the most effective—the most pleasant cream deodorant you have ever been able to buy. Get your jar of New Perfect Fresh now—for carefree underarm protection even on hottest days. Available at all drug and toilet goods counters.

Be lovelier to love with new perfect Fresh

New Perfect Fresh comes to you at the same low pre-war prices . . . 10¢, 25¢, 43¢, and new 59¢ economy size.

(Advertisement)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

At the first blush of Womanhood

by
VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm—There is nothing "wrong" with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike—Don't take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid's exclusive formula. That's why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses—more men and women everywhere—use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself—You'll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don't be half-safe—During this "age of courtship," don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

his voice wasn't casual any more. He seized her and gave her a hard, quick kiss, and then she was on the plane and there wasn't anything ahead but loneliness.

Those were long months. Buff did stock at Laguna all summer, working hard and learning all she could. In the fall she was called East for a part in a play with Tallulah Bankhead. But Miss Bankhead decided not to do the play after all, so Buffie was out of luck. She thought she'd stay in New York anyway, and something else might turn up. She wanted a tiny apartment, and through her family she heard that I was going to rent part of mine. So she came to live with me, and we had a wonderful time talking pictures and people. Especially people named Bill.

It was November before he got back. But a cable finally came that said, "Have your brightest Monday morning smile on. The Elizabeth docks at eight."

The next week was a mad scramble of theater and "21" and dinner clothes every night and hearing Bill's marvelous stories about England. Then things gradually settled down a little. They spent Christmas with his family in Pennsylvania and the Eythes accepted Buff immediately as one of the family. She loved them all. His mother and father, and Dutch—his brother who used to be All-American, and Ruth, his sister, and her husband, Charles. It was a good Christmas, in the friendly, happy, small-town tradition.

When they got back to New York, things suddenly started happening to them both, professionally. Bill's agent called him to come back to the Coast on business. And Buff was offered a good part in a play called Darling, Darling, Darling.

Meanwhile, James Mason and his wife had arrived in New York and wanted to see Bill, whom they had met and liked in England. They also wanted to meet Buffie. So the night before Bill left for Hollywood, they all had dinner together.

"Buff was your number one fan in Hollywood," Bill told James. "She saw Hotel Reserve and went around telling everyone that you were going to make cinema history. Then she saw Man in Grey."

"And changed her mind," James suggested, with his sardonic smile.

"On the contrary. She called me up when she came out and said, 'Darling, you can drop dead. I'm in love with Mason.'" lovers' spat . . .

It was a gay evening and couldn't have been more fun. But when Bill was taking Buff home later, they had one of the silly, violent quarrels that come sometimes when you love each other very much. It started because Bill thought Buff had been in one of her "Hollywood states," as he calls them. Talking and laughing and screaming all over the place and making like an actress. You know.

Buff's feelings were hurt and she came home and stormed around, hating Eythe in seven different languages. Until he called her on the phone and things straightened out a little.

But the situation was still tense when Bill left the next day. Buff plunged into rehearsals for her play and didn't have time to think, talk or breathe.

The show opened, and closed in five days, without ever getting to Broadway. Buff's notices were good but it was a terrific disappointment not to have made Broadway. She took it quietly and well.

If anyone asked me my guess on the major factor in Bill's deciding marriage was for him in spite of all his previous doubts, I'd say it was the way Buff worked on that play and the way she took the disappointment. She wasn't a child any more. She was grown-up and definitely wife material.

On the evening of March 9, 1947, exactly two years to the day since that lunch at the Pump Room in Chicago, Buff came home and found a message in her box. Hollywood had been trying to call her. It was, of course, Bill.

"What I wanted to ask you," he said all in a rush, "was do you think maybe it would be nice if we got married? Or not."

This time Buff ignored the trailer. "I think it would be wonderful, Willy," she said. "Are you sure you want to?"

"I'm sure. Are you sure you want to?"

Buff gave a sudden, wild giggle. "This could go on for hours, Bill," she said, "I'm sure. But right now I'm sort of stunned. I love you, Willy."

"I love you, too. And I'm sort of stunned. Good-night, darling."

sweet cataclysm . . .

Buff sat on the bed a minute, hardly able to think. Then she came and knocked on my door. It was one a.m. but I hadn't gone to bed yet.

"Come on in," I said. Then I took another look.

"Buffie," I said, "are you sick?"

She stared at me like a sleepwalker. "Sick?" she whispered in a dazed voice. "No. I'm engaged!"

Well, you can imagine what the next couple of months were like. Bill was stuck out on the Coast for considerably longer than he had expected. As fast as they would make plans for the wedding, they would have to change them.

All of a sudden, after Bill arrived in New York, everything fell in place quite neatly. Ruth Ford agreed to rent them her apartment. They decided to be married right in New York by a judge who was a friend of Buff's father. There would be a big reception later that day.

So they had blood tests and they got the license, with Buff getting lost when they changed trains on the subway. Bill went on down to City Hall thinking she'd show up there, and she went on to the next station thinking he'd show up there.

"Lost, one about-to-be-bride," Bill said resignedly. By the time they got together again they just made it as the license bureau was closing. But now they were all set. Monday, June 2, was the day.

It was a beautiful day, with sunshine to bring luck to the bride. The ceremony was at two o'clock in the judge's chambers. You never saw two such calm people as Bill and Buff—on the surface.

Bill wasn't nervous. Certainly not! The fact that he went off and left the shower running so it flooded the room was nothing but a coincidence. He was doing fine. He had the rings with him, didn't he? Well, if he had them, where were they? He went through his pockets frantically.

Then he said with dreadful calm, "We can't get married. No rings."

Buff laughed. "Willy, you're wonderful. You gave them to me to keep so you wouldn't forget them. Here they are."

There was just the family at the wedding. Bill's and Buff's. However, everyone was at the reception. Society names, theatrical names, picture names. It was from five to seven, in the beautiful Fifth Avenue apartment of Herschel Williams, who wrote Janie. There was punch made from an old Cobb family recipe, and fifty kinds of sandwiches, and a wedding cake.

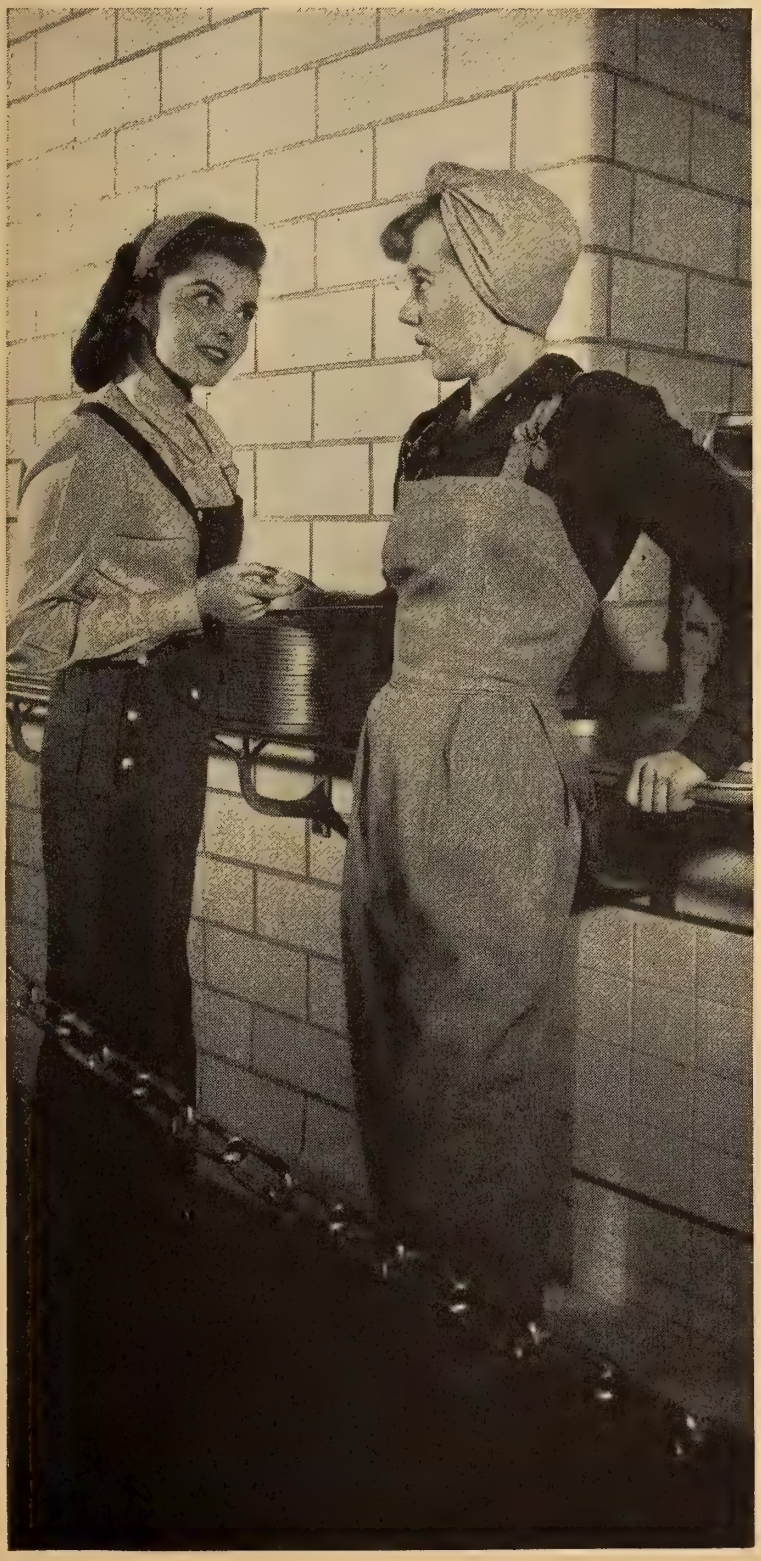
Just as Buff was about to cut the cake, some friends of Bill's whom she had never met, arrived. He greeted them happily.

"Come on over," he said. "I want to introduce you. This is Miss Cobb—"

Somebody giggled. It was Buff. "That was this morning," she said. "This evening I'm Mrs. Eythe."

I have a feeling she's going to stay Mrs. Eythe. And I couldn't be gladder for both!

The "Slacks Brigade" deals in facts—not fancies



Girls test new napkin—
84 out of 95 report no chafing with Free-Stride Modess!

Girls in the great, humming industrial plants of the land—girls to whom comfort is a "must"—recently found it pays to investigate.

Young women who had been annoyed by chafing with their regular napkin agreed to try out a new, improved napkin—Free-Stride Modess.

No girl was told its name or brand. She was simply asked to try this new napkin . . . to see if it gave her freedom from chafe.

The verdict? 84 out of 95 girls who help make industry's wheels turn reported no chafing with Free-Stride Modess!

The secret of the chafe-free comfort that so many women found in Free-Stride Modess lies in the clever fashioning of the napkin edges.

Free-Stride Modess has extra cotton on its edges—extra softness—right where the cause of chafe begins.

The extra cotton also acts to direct and retain moisture inside the napkin, keeping the edges dry and smooth longer. And dry, smooth edges don't chafe!

So safe, too! Free-Stride Modess' triple safety shield guards you against embarrassment—keeps you so carefree! And there are no telltale outlines with Free-Stride Modess—it's silhouette-proof!

Try it now—this luxury-comfortable, luxury-safe napkin. Free-Stride Modess is on sale everywhere.

Product of Personal Products Corporation.

Walk with comfort! Move with freedom!
Try the new Free-Stride Modess!

How to set a perfect table

Begin with these

The two blocks of sterling inlaid at back of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks. They make this silverplate stay lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

Copyright 1947, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

you DO NOT need to buy EXPENSIVE SHOES to safeguard your Toddler's feet

Why?

No shoes at any price are better than sensibly-priced WEE WALKERS for a toddler's normal feet. Cost less because they are made by America's largest exclusive baby shoe manufacturer, and sold through mass distribution stores. The best safeguard is to not let baby grow into and out of shoes. Buy the correct size NOW and change to a larger size IN TIME.

Ask your doctor about WEE WALKERS . . . see them . . . compare them . . . try them . . . in Infants' or shoe department of stores listed. Birth to size 8.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

W. T. Grant Co. S. S. Kresge Co. J. J. Newberry Co.
H. L. Green Co., Inc. I. Silver & Bros. Scott Stores
McCrory Stores Schulte-United Charles Stores Co.
Metropolitan Chain Stores, Inc. Kinney Shoe Stores
F. & W. Grand Grand Silver Co. McLellan Stores
Montgomery Ward & Co.

Smooth One-Piece Tongue:

Stops pressure on nerves, muscles, blood vessels caused by sewed-on tongue, still used on some shoes selling at top prices.

FREE: Pamphlet, "Look At Your Baby's Feet." Valuable information on foot care, and scale to measure size needed. Moran Shoe Co., Dept. M, Carlyle, Ill.

WEE WALKER Shoes
FOR Wee WALKERS

THE FANS

(Continued from page 94)

selection from each League, 100 pts. each.

Best MSFCA Correspondents of the Month: One selection from each League, 50 pts. each.

For each regular issue of journal, club receives 100 pts.

(Note: The editors reserve right to make no award when, in their considered judgment, no club or individual has qualified.)

And that's all there is to it! Study the rules carefully; write us if you have any questions—and then start working on that Trophy Cup. Remember, it takes the ACTIVE support of every member to win a Cup!

Club News: As this is written, the Hollywood Fan Club Convention is a few days off. Final program: Monday: Introductory Luncheon, Knickerbocker Hotel Lido Room. Tuesday: Business meeting for prexies and official reps only. Wednesday: Tour of city and studios via hired buses. Thursday: Breakfast at Tom Brenneman's (including broadcast). Lunch at Mona Lisa Restaurant, featuring Journalism Forum. Speakers: Tom Carlile, MODERN SCREEN's West Coast Editor: Erskine Johnson, syndicated columnist and radio commentator, and Eileen Mosely, U.P. correspondent. Evening: Buffet Supper, followed by dance and late supper at Ambassador's Cocoanut Grove. Friday, All-day Outing, Laguna Beach. Saturday: Tea at Cocoanut Grove. Awarding of MODERN SCREEN Trophy Cups. Sunday: Lunch at Lido Room, Knickerbocker Hotel. Fashion show and raffle drawings. Awarding of raffle proceeds to Damon Runyon Cancer Fund. Evening: Theater party, Skin Of Our Teeth. In addition, tickets to top radio shows will be available to delegates all week.

Aside to MPPDA: With Walter Winchell's blessings, a check for $1,000 is being turned over to the Damon Runyon Memorial Cancer Fund by the Hollywood Fan Club Convention. Gene Autry Friendship Club, the biggest contributor ($475) will receive a special cup. Runners-up are June Allyson Club ($325) and the Joan Crawford Club.

new york rodeo . . .

Gene Autry Club, incidentally, will have an Eastern Convention in New York, September 25-28, during Gene's Rodeo at the Garden . . . Sinatra Guild now has thirty clubs. Frank, who's long wanted his clubs to get together, is very happy . . . Joan Caulfield Club will turn entire proceeds of its Charity Raffle over to Braille Institute and Cancer Fund. Tickets are 25c, and prizes have been donated by Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Fredric March, Bette Davis and Joan, herself . . . Judy Spinner's Johnnie Johnston Club and Betty Petrie's Club Friendship are working on the Stamps For the Wounded Drive. All kinds of foreign stamps and stamp collectors' equipment are needed . . . Agnes Moorehead Club offering 150 free memberships. Write us for club address . . . Dan Duryea sends personal letter of welcome to new mems of Pat Maben's club . . . Louise Erickson Club sponsoring an essay contest, on "How to combat juvenile delinquency in our community" . . . Arthur Kennedy first journal solicited raves from our staff. Ditto: King James' (Mason) Court and Burt Lancaster News, also "firsts."

Sam Edwards Clubbers are still thrilling over their visit to the Edwards home. Sam played his records for the gang and the whole family joined in entertaining them. . . Prexy Lee Garber met her honorary, Mel Torme, at last—when he came East for a night club appearance. Disc jockey Freddy Robbins introduced them, and Lee was Mel's guest at his radio guest shots. . . . those partying Baritony Clubbers did it again—this time at the Broadway Hof-Brau. Two of the club's three honcraries, Jerry Cooper and Jimmy Farrell were on hand. Too bad Ray Heatherton couldn't make it! . . . Bill Vaughn, of 1723 N. Chestnut Street, Ottawa, Ill., has a novel idea in clubs. It's a "Scrap Club" and the idea is to exchange pics and clips you don't want for others that you do . . . closing night for Johnnie Johnston's show at the Capitol, N. Y., was a big event for Johnnie's Gay Notes. Backstage, afterwards, they presented a corsage to Johnnie's girl, Kathy Grayson . . . the Famous Kitchen, N. Y., Charles Korvin's favorite eaterie, was the scene of the recent Korvin Club soiree . . . Dolores Johnson's Jay Norris Clubbers are really going "social"—four meetings, a party, and a roller-skating shindig!

TROPHY CONTEST WINNERS for July (1st lap, Sixth Semi-Annual Competition): "This Is My Best" winners: Shirley Thayer, "Our New Lost Generation," Richard Jaeckel Times; Pat Harris, "Jimmy Durante, I Love You," Soliloquy (Sinatra, Ling); Gladys Hagblom, "Chat Chat," (Betty) Grable's Fables; Phil Markovich, "Nosey Nonsense," Larry Douglas Journal; Florence Kelley, "Let's Gossip with Greg Peck," Burt Lancaster News; Dorothy Whitman, "Fan Clubs," En-Gage-ingly Yours (Donald Gage). Candid Camera Contest Winners: 1st Prize, Ena Svedise, Joseph Calleia C. Others: Lois Carnahan, Barbara Hale C.; Lenore Larson, Danny Scholl C.; Narda Eyssen, Errol Flynn C., Jeanne Saltsman, Danny Kaye C.; Eileen Sinnott, Johnny Desmond C. Best Journals: 1. June's Journal (Allyson). 2. (Joan) Crawford News. 3. Arthur's Echoes (Kennedy). Best Editors: 1. Margaret and Joy Nicholin, Nelson Eddy Golden Notes (International C.). 2. Marilyn Boinski, Larry Douglas Journal. 3. Pat Maben, Merchant of Menace (Dan Duryea). Best Covers: 1. Shirley's Scoops (Temple). 2. Musical Notes (Jeanette MacDonald, Riley). 3. (tie) Soliloquy (Sinatra, Ling) and Voice Inquirer (Sinatra, Bush). Best Original Art Work: Jacki Jaacks, (Betty) Grable's Fables. Most Worthwhile Activities: 1. International Shirley Temple C. (Collected over 2,000 stamps for Veterans; also many records and books for Mountain Home Vets' Hospital). 2. Jeanette MacDonald C. (Farrington) (Contributed $55 for Non-denominational War Vets' Comm., on Jeanette's birthday). 3. Alan Ladd C. (Pearl) (Contributed 95 books, 300 mags to Jefferson Barrack's Vets' Hospital). Greatest Percentage Increases: 1. Intern. Shirley Temple C. 2. Bill Boyd C. 3. Dan Duryea C. (Grant). Best Correspondents: 1. Kit Pritchett, Dennis Morgan C. 2. Rita and Jo Mottola, Rise Stevens C. 3. Violet Theisen, Jimmy Morgan C. (Space prohibits listing all clubs credited with 100 pts. for journal. See rules above for other point awards, prizes.)

I SAW IT HAPPEN

It was the night that the 20th Century-Fox offices here in Panama gave a very gay party for Cesar Romero and Tyrone Power, who arrived in their plane, "Saludos, Amigos," for a three-day holiday. A group of Panamanian senoritas were performing the "Tamborito," our national dance. They were whirling away in their beautiful costumes to the tune of the gay music, when suddenly one of the girls invited Cesar Romero to join them. He certainly stole the show when he danced graciously and sang our music. Cesar Romero is the perfect "Good Will Ambassador."

Judith Parada Arias,
Panama, Rep. of Panama

PARIS LABEL

(Continued from page 38)

Frederique often, and she grew progressively more amiable.

He began to call her Quique—it was a pet name—and since he'd always had a passion for American songs, he could make up puns. "I Get a Keek Out of You," he would bellow, strolling home after their visits, and people in his path would retreat, sure that he was mad.

In 1941, Louis joined the Work For Youth Army, in Unoccupied France. It was simply military training, without guns.

While he was gone, Quique sent him cigarettes and candies.

Late in 1942, Louis was released, and went straight to his family, in Cannes.

Quique was with them, and after the greetings, Louis' mother took his hand. "I am troubled. They are sending all the young men to Germany to work—"

He kissed her. "Don't worry. There are methods—"

There was a method. It was with a theatrical troupe, going to Africa. The troupe was a pretense, but a good way to get young men out of the country.

They gave him his ticket. "November tenth" was printed on it.

The morning of November eighth—it was nine a.m., and Louis never expects to forget it—the radio, which had been playing, stopped.

He came out of his room to see what had happened, and his father was bent over the dial. "I have tried all the stations," he said. "They are all cut off."

"What can it be?" Louis said. "What can it be?"

dawn of hope . . .

His father straightened. "I think the Americans or the English have landed in Africa." The words were soft, but they seemed to fill the room.

He was right, and Louis swung his mother around the room wildly, while his two young brothers grinned.

It was a brief and lovely hysteria which ended quickly.

By January, 1943, the Nazis had occupied all France. Louis' father was arrested by the Gestapo, and the rest of the family fled to a town called Pierre De Bresse, taking Quique with them.

Quique has nightmares, even now. She wakes up moaning, and Louis is frightened. "What is it? You're shaking—"

"The Germans are coming back," she says wildly, and he has to pull her to a window, and point. "The moon, see? The stars. Nothing else; just quiet streets. This is another world—"

Sometimes Quique tries to tell an American about France in 1943. "On the walls of the prisons in Paris, there was writing in blood," she will say. And the American thinks she's using a flowery figure of speech, when all she means is that prisoners literally wrote defiant messages on the walls with their own blood.

Pierre De Bresse was quiet, after Paris. A little, sleepy place.

Louis worked for an underground newspaper, and waited hopefully for news of his father's release, and in March, he and Quique were married.

It was a very simple ceremony.

Quique had picked a few flowers from the garden for the table; she had a grey dress, and in one of her suitcases, she found a hat with a bird of Paradise.

Louis almost stumbled over her, sitting on the floor, stroking the long, bright feathers.

"I did not even (Continued on page 103)

—but where did she get the Fels-Naptha Soap?

When you are 'sunk' with washing work—try Fels-Naptha Soap. It's a real "Washday Life Saver."

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

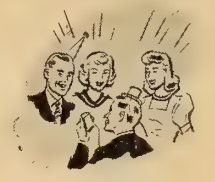
Mirrors of Memory

...for you and your loved ones

Faithfully recording familiar voices, famous events or happy occasions, RECORDIO DISCS become accurate sound memories of life's most pleasant and important moments.

HOME PARTIES

Capture the effervescent fun of these carefree parties for frequent future enjoyment.



RADIO PROGRAMS

Have a permanent record of history-in-the-making or build a "sound library" of favorite comedy and dramatic programs.

VOICE LETTERS

Send a "talking letter", filled with your own personality, to loved ones away from home.

SPEECH ANALYSIS

Make recordings of proposed speeches. Analyze recording for improvement in content, delivery, clarity and timing.

RECORDIO DISCS are smoothly coated with a special Wilcox-Gay finish for realistic reproduction and lasting clarity. Available in 6½", 8" or 10" sizes. Choose between economical Fiber-Base or durable Aluminum-Base discs. Ask for them at your nearest radio or record dealer.

Recordio Discs
AND Recordiopoints

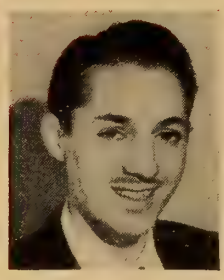
WILCOX-GAY CORPORATION • CHARLOTTE, MICH.

MANUFACTURERS OF
Recordio®
T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. 123M

...the World's Finest Home Recording Instrument

sweet and hot



By LEONARD FEATHER

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

POPULAR

JUST AN OLD LOVE OF MINE—*Billy Eckstine (MGM)

A promising M-G-M debut for one of the better baritones, singing the newest Peggy Lee-Dave Barbour song hit, with fine orchestral help from Sonny Burke, who led the band on Van Johnson's records.

LAZY MOOD—*Matt Dennis (Capitol), *Jimmy Dorsey (MGM), Frankie Carle (Columbia)

Written and played by saxman Eddie Miller in the old Bob Crosby band, this tune now has Johnny Mercer lyrics and a new lease on life.

PASSING BY (Vous Qui Passez Sans Me Voir)—*Jean Sablon (Victor); Jo Stafford (Capitol); Tony Martin (Victor)

PEG O' MY HEART—Harmonicats (Vitacoustic); Three Suns (Victor); Buddy Clark (Columbia); Glenn Miller (Decca); Clark Dennis (Capitol); Danny O'Neil (Majestic); Art Lund (M-G-M); etc.

If you aren't sick and tired of this one, listen to the Glenn Miller version for curiosity. It was made by a pick-up group a decade ago, before Glenn really had his own band. The Harmonicats' version, cut in Chicago as a private recording and released as an experiment, makes some very odd sounds, for better or for worse.

THAT'S LIFE, I GUESS—*Tommy Dorsey's Clambake Seven (Victor)

You'll be surprised by this side, featuring Hannah Williams, ex-Mrs. Jack Dempsey and musical comedy star, whose youthful, rhythmic voice has none of the Broadway affectations you might expect. Dorsey's accompaniment includes Charlie Shavers, Teddy Wilson and Billy Bauer.

HOT JAZZ

MERCER ELLINGTON—*You Name It (Sunrise)

A new label, a new band led by Duke's son, and a catchy bebop tune by pianist Luther Henderson.

ELLA FITZGERALD—Lady Be Good, Flying Home (Decca)

Ella's riff-singing in bebop style on this pairing is just amazing. Don't miss it!

ERROLL GARNER—*Gaslight; *Yesterdays (Signature)

DIZZY GILLESPIE ALBUM—*Eight Tunes (Musicraft)

Other albums: Louis Armstrong, Paris, 1934; Charlie Christian Memorial; Alec Wilder Octet, all on Vox; Piano Score of Four on Jewel.

HARRY JAMES—*Moten Swing, Parts I & II (Columbia)

Showing The Horn can still play good jazz; not to mention Willie Smith, Corky Corcoran and some swell Arnold Ross piano.

FROM THE MOVIES

COPACABANA—Je Vous Aime: Wayne King (Victor); Eddy Duchin (Columbia)

FABULOUS DORSEYS—Dorsey Concerto: *Tommy & Jimmy Dorsey with Louis Forbes Symphony Orch. (Victor)

An interesting work, though not at all in the jazz idiom that made the Dorseys fabulous.

FIESTA—Fantasia Mexicana: *Macklin Marrow & MGM Orchestra (MGM)

Johnny Green adapted this for piano and orchestra from Aaron Copland's El Salon de Mexico, and the scene in which it's played is the second best thing in the picture (yes, I'm an Esther Williams fan).

LOVE AND LEARN—Would You Believe Me: *Tony Martin (Mercury)

PERILS OF PAULINE—I Wish I Didn't Love You So: Vaughn Monroe (Victor)

VARIETY GIRL —Tallahassee: Woody Herman & Dinah Shore (Columbia); *Johnny Mercer & Pied Pipers (Capitol); Vaughn Monroe (Victor); Bing Crosby-Andrews Sisters (Decca)

(Continued from page 101) know I had it with me," she said. "My beautiful bird. Now it will be a splendid wedding."

They were married; Louis' father was released by the Gestapo, finally; and the days moved slowly toward the Liberation.

Word came at last, spreading through the countryside. Men were needed in Paris.

Louis and Quique made their way back by night, walking and hitch-hiking, and once in the city, Louis contacted his guild, to find out what his job would be.

It was an easy enough job—guarding a certain door—and the actual reasons for it are no longer important.

One morning Louis went off to his guard duty, and didn't come back.

As usual, he'd gone out with his gun in one inside coat pocket; his FFI ribbon in another. After he and a friend had stood guard for the required time, their relief took over. And that's when they were picked up by Germans.

The Germans never bothered to explain things much, but it wasn't hard to figure out that they were being taken to Headquarters for questioning. Three other young men were gathered en route.

At home, meanwhile, Quique waited. She waited a painfully long time and then, troubled, she made her way through the street mobs to the building.

She waved to the man on guard at Louis' station. "Where is Louis?"

He shrugged, his eyes warning.

"It's so hot." She tried again. "He was wearing his coat?"

The man shook his head.

"Then—would you give me his coat?"

her heart stood still . . .

When she walked away, the coat, with the FFI ribbons still in the pocket, hanging casually over her arm, she thought her chest would break with thumping.

Nazi Headquarters were in the Grand Hotel. It was there the police had taken Louis and his four companions, to be questioned and searched. In the end, the men with FFI ribbons were held; Louis was freed.

He got home, how he can't even remember, and there was Quique, trembling and he took her in his arms.

At 2 a.m., the radio reported briskly that the Americans had arrived.

It was an end, and a beginning.

The war over, Louis went back to picture-making, and Jenia Reissar, David Selznick's talent-scout-on-the-continent, sent word of him to Mr. Selznick. What was more concrete, she sent scenes.

Mr. Jourdan was thereafter sold, signed, and delivered.

"Maybe I'll be in a Hitchcock movie someday," he said to Quique. He'd seen three Hitchcock dramas, and was a devotee.

Quique held out a newspaper. "Look."

There was a paragraph which read: "Louis Jourdan is leaving for the United States to make The Paradine Case. It will be directed by Alfred Hitchcock." He couldn't believe it.

Twelve days later, he was in New York, and Mr. Selznick told him it was true.

He didn't start the picture for six months, and Quique didn't get to the United States for two months. There was some mix-up about her papers, and when she finally arrived, she went out and bought twelve pairs of shoes. She'd worn wooden ones for so long, the sight of plentiful, delicate leathers left her slightly demented.

"Wooden shoes, you know," she said to Louis, trotting away from the store—"it knocks in your head, wooden shoes."

Both the Jourdans speak English, but Louis is particularly magnificent, for which he credits popular songs. He always owned lots of American records, and even though he'd had only three or four years of school English as a boy, he could sing Crosby 23 Terrific Tunes!

IN 3 GREAT RCA VICTOR ALBUMS

"DREAMLAND SPECIAL" ALBUM!

Vaughn Monroe and his orchestra bring you smooth, sparkling arrangements of I'll See You in My Dreams, Drifting and Dreaming, My Isle of Golden Dreams, Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland, I've Got a Pocketful of Dreams, Did You Ever See a Dream Walking?, My Dreams Are Getting Better All the Time, Dream. Vocals by Vaughn, The Moon Maids and The Norton Sisters. P-160, $3.15.

NEW "TUXEDO JUNCTION" ALBUM!

Erskine Hawkins leads his famous band in eight great recordings. Every one is a famous Hawkins arrangement. Every one is an important collector's item. You'll hear Tuxedo Junction; Don't Cry, Baby; Tippin' In; I've Got a Right to Cry; After Hours; Cherry; Sweet Georgia Brown; Song of the Wanderer. RCA Victor Album P-181, $3.15.

NEW "STUDENT PRINCE" ALBUM!

Al Goodman conducts his orchestra in immortal melodies from the gay "Student Prince." The lilting lyrics are sung by Earl Wrightson, Frances Greer, Donald Dame, Mary Martha Briney and The Guild Choristers. They bring you the Overture; Just We Two; Golden Days; Serenade; Drinking Song; Deep in My Heart, Dear and the Students' March Song. RCA Victor Album P-180, $3.75.

. . . plus RCA Victor quality!

Two "exclusives"—Victor's billion-record skill... plus RCA's electronic wizardry—make music sound so true to life on RCA Victor Records! Hear them on a Victrola radio-phonograph.

"Victrola"—T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. All prices shown are suggested list prices, exclusive of taxes. Radio Corporation of America.

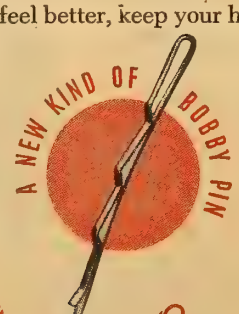
Hear Bob Merrill on the RCA Victor Program. Sundays, 2 p.m., EDT, over your NBC station.

THE STARS WHO MAKE THE HITS ARE ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS

RCA "HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

Holds 144% Better

At last — a bobby pin that really holds fully 144% better by unbiased certified test* . . . a totally new kind of bobby pin! You'll see the difference at once—these bobby pins look like lightning. You'll feel the difference at once, too. They're strong, yet flexible—gentle as a lover's embrace. Note, too, the invisible heads, rounded-for-safety ends, super-smooth finish. They stay more securely, feel better, keep your hair looking neater, smarter all day through.



Gayla SUPERGRIP

COPYRIGHT 1947 GAYLORD PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED CHICAGO 16, ILL.

*United States Testing Company, Inc. Test No. 75436, Nov. 25, 1946 numbers with the faintest accent.

Quique has never had a regular English lesson in her life, but she hates to be corrected when she talks. It enrages her. "Leave me my foolish English," she cries. "I'm not afraid if people are laughing."

She remembers once when people were glaring at her though.

It was her first Hollywood dinner party, and she was seated next to a gentleman who attempted to be charming. He started off with the weather, and continued with the state of the world, dwelt briefly on Truman, summed up Dewey, talked about his wife, and discussed capital punishment.

Quique hadn't the faintest idea how to answer him, so she never said one word through the whole dinner, and by the time it was over, the man was in pitiful shape.

The days passed, however, and Quique learned. First off, she learned "yes."

"You can say 'yes' with a hundred inflections, even sometimes it means 'no,'" she observed to Louis, profoundly, when a few weeks had passed.

"People will think you are completely silly," Louis said sternly. "More than 'yes' is needed."

Eight months after the original dinner party fiasco, another dinner party came up. The Jourdans were invited, and so was the pitiful gentleman.

"You," the hostess said to that long-suffering soul, "will sit next to Mrs. Jourdan."

He blanched, and marched grimly to the table, muttering savagely, "Mrs. Jourdan! Jourdan must keep her on the mantelpiece. Good for nothing else. Silent butler sort of woman!"

miss gabbo! . . .

He got more than he expected. Quique gabbed all through the meal.

When they were finished, he looked at her wonderingly. "Excuse me, Mrs. Jourdan—but has there been a change in me?"

She smiled at him, enchantingly. "I understood every word you said at the last dinner, but I didn't know how to answer."

When Quique enchants 'em, they stay enchanted. The poor man was saying "a thousand pardons, beautiful lady" in French, when they dragged him away.

A person who intrigues the Jourdans is Keenan Wynn, who can talk what sounds like beautiful French for five minutes straight without ever really saying one French word.

But Keenan is only one of the marvels of America to the Jourdans. There's their suite in the Miramar Hotel, at Santa Monica —the sea from your window, the beach at your fingertips. . .

There was the trip to New York, and Finian's Rainbow, and afterward, standing under the marquee for two hours in the pouring rain, while the reflections from the lights shivered in the puddles, and mink-coated women stepped into big cars.

Hollywood's pleasing, too. The Paradine Case (the first thing in which American fans will see Louis) is all wrapped up, and Mr. Selznick's anxiously awaiting audience reaction.

Louis plays a romantic menace (he's not the hero; Gregory Peck is) and he and Mr. Selznick brooded over twenty different outfits, trying to find some clothes that would be unattractive, and yet picturesque.

Friends who met Louis on the street would ask him where he'd been keeping himself lately, and he'd say, "Oh, in the costume company down on Melrose Avenue," with a perfectly straight face.

The studio's bought Rupert of Hentzau—the sequel to The Prisoner of Zenda—for Louis and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., has been steeping him in Fairbanks tradition.

"And living in the costume company again," Louis says philosophically. "I wonder if they ever serve hot meals."

DEMOCRACY ON THE SCREEN

(Continued from page 27)

carried by citizens who enjoy those rights and privileges. It is important for us at home to get a complete understanding of the great experiment which has been carried on here in the United States because today the world looks upon us as the leader among democratic nations.

Because of some of our failures, there is a question in many minds as to whether throughout our country we really understand our own democratic way of life. Democracy is based on the Christian religion, and so we must believe in the brotherhood of man. Discrimination, therefore, should not exist. Nevertheless it does!

Our form of government is a representative republican form of government; but it allows, we think, the maximum control to remain in the hands of the people.

If the screen could show the inception and growth of our government processes and the obligations that now lie upon us when our nation is at the peak of its power, the people would learn their lesson.

To retain our high standard of living, we must also recognize our obligation to other men in other parts of the world. Probably one of the most difficult tasks today outside of our own country, is to sell America as America really is. Certain types of movies have been shown in other countries which show us as a nation of bronco-busters, gangsters, movie stars and luxurious ladies and gentlemen of leisure.

The democracy of the farm, the mill, the industries, the thousands and thousands of people who are the backbone of this country, are little known to the millions who build up their countries in much the same way.

The qualities of mind and character which are needed to be good citizens are the same everywhere, but nowhere except in a democracy does a citizen have to concern himself so much with his duties as a citizen. This could be shown on the screen better than in any other way. For that reason I wish that a revolution could take place in Hollywood and that they would begin to educate our own people so that democracy became a living thing in our daily lives. Then the films which will soon be going to the European countries might give true pictures of the development of this country and of its present life. They might tell the real story of the great mass of our people who make us a strong and vital force in the world of today.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Dick Haymes was appearing in person at the Roxy Theater in New York when I saw a number of fans gathering at the stage door to see him. After a while, he came out and signed autographs. During the signing, a taxicab passed by. The tall, handsome blond fellow who was its passenger stuck his head out of the window and cried out in a mocking voice, "Oh, Dickie!" The fans turned around with murder in their collective eye to see who the "wise guy" was. To their surprise, it was Johnnie Johnston!

Estelle Angrist
Bronx, N. Y.

with this "oh-so-refreshing" talcum powder

KEEP FRESHER! After your bath, powder your body, bountifully, with Cashmere Bouquet Talc. Its cooling caress makes you feel fresh as a flower at dawn.

FEEL SMOOTHER! You'll love Cashmere Bouquet Talc for the satiny sheath it imparts to your skin — a protection against chafing.

STAY DAINTIER! To preserve bath-tub freshness use Cashmere Bouquet Talc often during the day. It points up your feminine appeal with the fragrance men love.

Ultra-luxurious is Cashmere Bouquet Dusting Powder . . . smartly packaged, with huge velour puff!

Cashmere Bouquet Talc

with the fragrance men love

BORDERLINE ANEMIA*

is no help to a happy marriage!

Thousands who are tired and pale may find renewed energy—restore healthy good looks—with Ironized Yeast Tablets

Do everyday tasks exhaust your energy and leave you fatigued and irritable? Do you look older than your years? Is your color poor? These signs often come from a blood condition. You may have a Borderline Anemia, resulting from a ferro-nutritional deficiency of the blood.

The red cells in your blood may be below-par in color and size—they may be too weak to transmit full energy to your body. Results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men and children—have this Borderline Anemia.

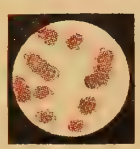
How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

And if this common blood condition is robbing you of your usual color and energy, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are formulated to help build up faded red blood cells. Of course, continuing tiredness and pallor may be due to other conditions—so consult your doctor regularly. But in this Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets to help build up your blood. Take them to start your energy shifting back into "high"—to help restore your natural color! Take them so you can enjoy life again!

Resulting from ferro-nutritional blood deficiency*

BORDERLINE ANEMIA
why it can make you
TIRED • PALE • LISTLESS

Energy-Building Blood. This is a microscopic view of blood rich in energy elements. Here are big, plentiful red cells that release energy to every muscle, limb, tissue.



Borderline Anemia. Many have blood like this; never know it. Cells are puny, faded. Blood like this can't release the energy you need to feel and look your best.

Improved, Concentrated Formula

Ironized Yeast

TABLETS

GLENN FORD

(Continued from page 29)

gaudy nightmare, a real estate promoter's dream that had no doubt occurred after he had viewed Turner's glowing canvas of the Grand Canal and had eaten spaghetti Tettrazini at midnight. As originally planned, California's Venice had canals instead of streets, and even more gondolas. Since health conditions were pretty lax, the canals became germ breeders, and had to go. But not until Glenn, who was seven when the family moved there, had rowed on them and even, on warm nights, gone swimming in them.

Glenn's father had always wanted to live in Southern California and he had always wanted to give up railroading for the building trade. Los Angeles, during those post-war years, was enjoying a period of boom, so it looked as if they were exchanging the deep still peace of Glenford for the hurly burly of a bonanza.

This was not quite the case. The Fords took a house on Park Avenue, which sounds grand enough—but actually, Park Avenue was situated in the toughest of Venice neighborhoods. They lived there three years, until Mr. Ford got on his feet. He was not too happy about the environment until he learned that Glenn would go to the Martha Washington Grammar School. (How could a school thus named be anything but a beneficial influence for his son?) The rest of the time Gwellyn could grow up under his mother's careful eye at home.

dangerous journey . . .

However, Newton Ford did not take into consideration the interval of space and time that existed between the school playground and the Ford front door. Glenn darned well took it into consideration on the first afternoon when he set out for home from school.

The little chap who was standing on the corner was wearing a sweater with holes in the elbows, overalls and a remarkable skull cap cut from the crown of a man's felt hat and adorned with vari-colored buttons. The boy's lower lip protruded, his brow was contorted into a scowl, and even the freckles on his snub nose looked belligerent.

Glenn walked past him. The boy stuck out a grimy bare foot.

When Glenn picked himself up, he faced the boy in astonishment. He said, somewhat inadequately, "Hey!"

"Wanna fight?" the boy said.

This, at least, made sense, as it would to any real boy of seven. Glenn made two fists and put 'em up. "Sure," he said.

The black eye Glenn brought home was the beginning of his adjustment to the rowdy environment of the neighborhood.

He was briefly, during this Venice interlude, enamored of the stage. The Martha Washington School, it appears, held a carnival every year in which the pupils performed. Glenn, who within a month of his arrival had discovered and fallen violently in love with a devastating blonde of nine years named Elaine Shaeffer, learned that she was to play Mae Murray in a little skit. Opposite her, some lucky lad would don a suit of tails and represent John Gilbert.

"That," Glenn promised himself, "is going to be me." He tried for the part, got it, and had prepared his parents and all his friends for the spectacle of his debut when it turned out that the main thing Gilbert and Murray did in the show was dance.

Glenn couldn't dance. So they gave his part to Vernon McGuire his rival for the fair Elaine's affections, who could, and as consolation made Glenn a clown. He was too young to know who Pagliacci was, but that was how he felt. His day dreams after that followed a familiar pattern; he was a knight at kind King Arthur's court, and with the regularity of clockwork he vanquished Vernon McGuire in the jousts, while Elaine looked on approvingly.

Santa Monica, where they moved three years later, was better. It had never tried to be anything but a simple California town on the edge of the sea, and as such it had a kind of municipal integrity; it evolved, unplanned, clean and casual and dedicated to the good living of its population rather than to the whim of an itinerant tourist trade. The Fords found a comfortable, unpretentious cottage on a winding road near the beach; they gave the front of the house an occasional coat of paint, and Glenn regularly mowed and watered the front lawn.

The Ford house was always clean and quiet; but in the Ford backyard there was life, albeit a secret life. Behind the garage a structure had risen, bit by bit, stone by brick by board, by such casual stages that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Ford were actually aware of its existence. It was of such a bizarre construction that if anyone other than its member occupants had ever been curious or determined enough to try to enter it, he would have been astounded at its impregnability. Here, in this club house, Glenn had his headquarters during his important adolescent, formative years.

Observe, if you will, an afternoon in the middle Twenties, with Glenn but half an hour home from school. He has had a peanut butter sandwich, and a glass of milk. He has, at his mother's urgent bequest, donned a sweater against the coming chill of the evening. He walks toward his shack, a lean, serious youngster with heavy dark eyebrows over knowing eyes and a chin that is strong and aggressive and stubborn.

through the keyhole . . .

He maneuvers sundry locks and mechanisms, and lets himself in. Two minutes later a complicated code is tapped on the door and he admits his two pals: Dave Beston and Herman Bloom.

Dave has a loosened tooth and his nose is swollen. It's been bleeding recently, too.

"Buster?" Glenn asks, certain of the reply.

"Yeah, Buster. Herman stopped in the drugstore to buy a Popsicle and Buster came along."

"We'll get him yet."

"Tomorrow. After school, by the hot dog stand."

"That's three on one."

"You can take care of him. We'll just watch. How about a smoke?"

"Your folks here?"

"No, they're in L.A." Glenn digs out a cigar box filled with bulky, newspaper wrapped objects; the fillers are cornsilk. Lingering illness, and death, lurk here—but these are astonishing kids, invulnerable. They light up.

After a moment Glenn coughs and looks green. "What's the matter?" Herman asks.

"I guess it's the tack."

"Tack?"

"I was chewing on a pen the other day and there was a tack in the end and I swallowed it. They sent me home from school and I've been eating practically nothing but bread ever since. Then last night I made some stuff with the chemical set and got a lot of sulphur fumes up my nose and I was pretty sick."

"Maybe you better not smoke any more of that cornsilk."

"Maybe."

His early years were like that, you see. A modern Tom Sawyer transplanted to California: a Penrod in the machine age.

A NEW BEAUTY TREATMENT FOR

SUN DAMAGED HAIR!

IT'S A NEW KIND OF HAIR BEAUTY

FROM A WORLD-FAMOUS COSMETIC HOUSE.

Try it! Then look for "LOVELIGHTS" in your hair

NOW COMES A SHAMPOO that really restores life and "lovelighted" radiance—even to dull, unmanageable, sun-split hair.

ENRICHED WITH REAL EGG! A luxurious shampoo and reconditioning treatment in one. Contains rich egg, nature's own aid in overcoming hair damage and lack of lustre.

YOU'LL THRILL at how quickly and thoroughly this new shampoo works. The creamy, egg-enriched liquid bathes your hair so luxuriously, even in the hardest water. Then rinses out instantly, thoroughly. Your hair "squeaks" clean.

NOT A SOAP. Not a drying, chemical shampoo. Richard Hudnut Egg Creme Shampoo is truly different in so many delightful ways!

P.S.

Introductory offer! A trial kit of the new 4-way Hair Beauty Ritual for only $1.00 (plus tax). Contains generous-size bottles of Egg Creme Shampoo, Creme Rinse, Dandruff Treatment and Creme Hair Dressing.

At your drug or department store, $1.00 for the big family size.

Don't miss Jean Sablon . . . every Sunday afternoon over Columbia Broadcasting System.

He had his first real fight when he was twelve, at the Madison Grammar School. He and a fellow named Mark were mixing it up during gym period, so the instructor put gloves on them, made the other boys form a ring, and got out a stopwatch. Glenn was slender for his age, but fast; Mark was big and not very light on his feet. The contest was a draw, but he and Mark emerged from it fast friends.

And there were the girls he knew. If you think I am one of those noble wives who say, "I don't want to know anything about your past, just so long as it's over," you're mistaken. I would not have wanted to marry a man who had never had any success with women before he met me.

Glenn's approach to girl friends was conditioned by the fact that he seldom had his father's car, and almost never had too much money. Glenn had a small allowance but when he needed a few dollars, he went down to the amusement pier and drove the little electric shuttle cars along the sidewalk from Santa Monica to Ocean Park and back. It paid 40c an hour, during the summers, but it had its drawbacks.

For one thing, the gangs from surrounding towns—even from as far as Boyle Heights—used to come to the beach and see how many free rides they could hook on Glenn's tram.

What I'm getting at is that he was in no position to get himself one steady girl, and fall in love with her, and date her regularly. This didn't trouble him. There were the fellows to run around with, and girls didn't seem important enough to cause an emotional crisis in his young life.

But those years were not without glamor and a kind of beauty. There were the long warm evenings on the beach, with the gang gathered around a fire and Castle Rock looming up against the Palisades behind them. There was a girl now and then who would put her head on his shoulder. In the firelight, it was easy to get in a romantic mood.

He had his books, averaging about forty a month, and he had his new interest, which was the stage. Way back when he was twelve he had been invited to play a part in the Christian Church production of Tom Thumb's Wedding. He hadn't much to do. With seven other boys he walked on stage at cue, sat down on a bench—he was third from the left—and was handed a dish of ice cream. He was required to eat this, and then get up and walk off again.

Something told him that he had found his calling. Later, in Lincoln Junior High, they gave him the role of Ben Gunn in Treasure Island. It was an important part because the whole play worked toward one magnificent moment when the gold was discovered: and it was Ben Gunn who walked on the stage carrying a sack of it.

On the night the play opened, Glenn stood in the wings waiting for his cue. When it came, he reached for his gunny sack of gold. It was not there. Wildly he looked about him. There was literally nothing in sight that even resembled a sack, or even a box. On stage, there was a waiting silence.

Out he strode, empty handed. From the other wings the drama teacher said three shocking words and prayed silently.

Then, in a moment of sheer genius, Glenn knew what to do. In the center of the stage loomed an enormous papier mache rock, put there for atmosphere. Glenn walked behind it.

Then he announced, in tones of delighted surprise, "Here's your gold!"

The entire cast played the rest of the scene behind the rock. It was not until a year later that the drama teacher would speak to Glenn; then, one afternoon she stopped him on the street and said, "I've had time enough to think about what you did that night, Gwellyn, and I do want to tell you that it was a brilliant bit of impromptu. Do you know, I believe you could be a really fine actor."

"Do you know, Mrs. Davies," Glenn said, "That's what I'd like to be. Anyway, I'm going to try."

(To be continued next month.)

I SAW IT HAPPEN

It was the last day of Danny Kaye's appearance at the Chicago Theater and he had already upset the schedule by stretching the thirty-minute stage show into an hour. Suddenly, he stopped right in the middle of a song and walked off the stage into the audience, leaving the bewildered band and bandleader staring after him. He sat down in a seat at the back of the theater and said, "I just wanted to see what it looks like from back here. Look at all the people! I've been up there for two weeks. Now, you entertain me!" We were very astonished to hear the band strike up a waltz and to see the very sedate bandleader, Lou Breeze, go into a tap dance. Danny applauded happily and went back to the stage, where he continued to work himself into a state of exhaustion.

Anita Hirsch,
Chicago, Illinois

AN ADVERTISEMENT OF PEPSI-COLA COMPANY

"I'll get the Pepsi — that will keep the boys around."

THREE MONTHS AND OUT

(Continued from page 30)

was in the clouds. It must be a gag."

"Look, they don't pay me to argue. Just thought you might give me a lead on what went on."

"Oh go away. I hate Hollywood," she moaned, and we both hung up.

Abby's the sensitive type. I'm tough. But with all my toughness, I knew exactly how she felt and, to a degree, felt the same way myself.

You can't know June Haver without warming up to her. First time I saw her was on the set of Home in Indiana, where she and Jeanne Crain were getting their first big break. They were both sweet kids, totally different in temperament—one shy and reserved, the other friendly as a kitten. It was June I fell for, and said so in the column next day.

Months later I threw a party for MODERN SCREEN's finds of the year. June didn't have to come, she'd been picked the year before, but one of the new boys asked her as his date and to give him moral support. Well, she sparked the evening for all of us. She was just so gay and co-operative, so ready to laugh and fall into the spirit of the silly games we played, that any constraint the others may have felt melted away like ice in a spring thaw.

"You're not Hollywood," I remember saying. "You might be the little girl next door."

I can still see her blue eyes crinkle as she answered, "I'm Rock Island, Illinois, Hedda, and I've been going to parties like this one all my life."

After that I'd bump into her here and there—Romanoff's, Adrian's, the Mocambo. She was always the same, always with the smile, with the "Hi, Hedda!"—always straight and aboveboard, never a thing to hide. Always ready to come to the phone, too, I recalled, as I pulled it over and got her number.

the lady will talk . . .

Mrs. Haver answered. I told her about my talk with Al, said I'd like to see June. She asked me to wait and was back in a minute or so. June wasn't going out, but if I'd come up to the house, she'd be glad to talk to me. Hmph, I thought, glad! Polite people, these Havers. . .

I found June alone in the little sitting-room where I'd seen her, a glowing bride, after her marriage. It wasn't the same girl. She looked like the wan little ghost of herself, pounds thinner, all the sparkle gone. Through the whole time I was there, she never once smiled. A stone would have ached for her. It was one of those rare occasions when I cursed my profession and its probing fingers. . .

But if she was crushed, she was also controlled. No dramatics, no self-pity. She talked quietly. Only once, when I pressed her for something, the tears sprang to her eyes, and I felt like a brute. But she wouldn't have it. "Don't apologize, Hedda, I'm terribly sorry for you. This is a tough assignment you've got on your hands." Well, what are you going to do with a girl like that?

Now if you expect to read anything here about "Jimmy played his trumpet too loud" or "I didn't know how to cook his favorite dishes"—just save your eyes and go on to the next story. Beyond her explanation that "things didn't work out," June's not elaborating. The decision to separate came by mutual agreement and they will try to have their marriage dissolved.

One columnist wrote: "It must have been a case of marry in haste, repent in haste." Which gives the wrong impression. June's

SCALP ODOR IS OFFENSIVE!

The Scalp Perspires . . . your hair collects and holds odors and dirt. Don't risk offending either in public, or personal "close-ups."

Remove Scalp Odors by using Fitch's Saponified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. This efficient cleanser "suds-up" into "mountains" of lather that float away dirt and scalp odors. Leaves your hair with a light, fresh scent, radiantly clean, soft and easy to arrange into your personal hair style.

Patented Rinsing Agent contained right in this shampoo eliminates need for special after rinses. No dull film remains on your hair. At drug counters or have professional applications at beauty shops.

Fitch's

SAPONIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

NOW meet

Exclusive Autographed Portraits Complete with Biographical Data

LAUREN BACALL
INGRID BERGMAN
RORY CALHOUN
PERRY COMO
LARRY PARKS
EVELYN KEYES
DANA ANDREWS
GLENN FORD
JUNE ALLYSON
BURT LANCASTER

and many, many more of your favorite stars

in the new FALL issue of

SCREEN ALBUM

"I can't find words enough to praise Tampax!"

You'll understand this enthusiasm some day — the day that you first use Tampax! How good it will feel to find yourself free from all external reminders that "it's sanitary-protection time"....Tampax is an internal absorbent and comes without belts, pins or outside pads. A dainty applicator makes insertion easy. After that, the Tampax is unseen and unfelt.

Now let your imagination carry you on! No chafing, of course. No odor. No disposal trouble. Your dresses will never show an edge-line from Tampax nor will there be twisting or bulging....Made of highly absorbent cotton, compressed by a patented process, Tampax was invented by a doctor. It is a serious product intended for full-time protection and by no means only for incidental use.

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

Millions of women are now buying Tampax—at drug stores and notion counters everywhere. Three different absorbencies (Regular, Super, Junior). Get it for "next time." Month's supply slips into your purse. Economy Box holds four months' average supply. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association an idealist. She'd seen lots of marriages hit the rocks. Each time she'd say, "That just won't happen to me. With me it's going to be once and for always."

Now ask me the $64 question. How could two people who'd known one another six years make such a mistake? Well, let's take the six years apart. At 15 and 17 respectively, they'd spent a summer with Ted FioRito's band. After that a few letters and phone calls, a few dates here and there between long stretches of silence. That was all till last winter.

Following her Rock Island trip last winter, she went to New York and saw Jimmy there. Rock Island had left her with memories—not only of the beautiful time they'd given her, but of the boys and girls she'd gone to school with. Many were married, some already had children. June had her work, which she loved. June had everything to make life rich and happy—except what the kids in small towns have—a husband and babies. She left Rock Island feeling a little wistful.

In New York, she saw Jimmy. They'd always had fun together. Music was a passion with both. They could listen and talk about it for hours on end. He seemed part of her old life, familiar and good. When he came to Hollywood in January to organize his own band, they started dating. He'd never made any secret of his love for her. Through the years, she'd felt a special affection for him. Now she found herself falling in love. There are those who'll say she was in the mood for love—that she went looking for it instead of waiting till it came to her.

Before two months had passed, she knew it was all wrong. They were making each other wretched.

June knew what a happy marriage ought to be like. Like her sister Dot's to Bill Flynn. Everything peaceful and wonderful, complete understanding, no clash of temperaments, so many things in common. (All she and Jimmy seemed to have in common was music.) Or like Evvie's. A month after June's wedding, Evvie married Jim McNamara, a student at USC. They were blissful as puppies, laughing, ribbing each other, having fun together—good pals as well as husband and wife.

from bad to worse . . .

As a last resort, June and her husband went down to Santa Ynez, thinking a week there alone might straighten them out. Instead, matters went from bad to worse. Soon after their return, Jimmy left to go on tour. June's original plan had been to join him in Salt Lake City when Scudda-hoo was finished. She knew now that she wouldn't join him. They'd discussed separation. But their marriage had been so recent, the dream had crumbled so fast, she could hardly believe it herself. What she needed more than anything else was quiet, to be alone, to give herself time to think.

At the studio June put up a brave front. But when you work with people every day, it's hard to fool them.

She just isn't the type to keep a secret very long. When the picture was finished, Lon McCallister came over to say goodbye. "You going to Salt Lake City, June?"

It took her by surprise. "No, I don't think so."

For a moment Lon was a very startled boy. Then he gave her hand an awkward little pat. "Well, I'm with you anyway."

What brought on the climax was her birthday party. Queer time for a party? Well, given the choice, Mrs. Haver wouldn't have picked it. But 21 years before on June 10, her second daughter had been born, and come fire or brimstone, the occasion was going to be celebrated. She took over the ballroom of the California Country Club, had it hung with gay bunting, hired an orchestra, ordered supper and a big ice-cream birthday cake, and invited June's friends. All things considered, it was a good party—even though at one point her mother found June in a hallway, crying like mad. She took the shaking bundle into her arms. "Pick up your chin, honey. You're only 21 once."

"Oh Mother, all the trouble you went to!"

"Because I love you, June. So do all the others out there."

For a heavy heart, love's the best medicine on the market. Besides, June hadn't worked for nothing for Georgie Jessel, the old-timer with his slogan of "The show must go on." She went back and smiled. At supper, John Payne made the toasting speech. When he said: "June's a girl with plenty of ideals. Whatever happens in life, she'll always carry them high," the tears came again.

the time is now . . .

Next day June had it out with herself. Where was the sense of sidling into this thing, letting people guess, waiting till the rumors caught up with you? That kind of stuff went against the grain with her. Her way had always been, when she made a mistake, to correct it as soon as she could. Well, she made a beaut. What was she waiting for?

"It's going to be awful," she admitted to herself steadily, "but I'd rather face it now and be done with it than have it glooming over me."

She called Jimmy in Salt Lake City, and they agreed on a statement to be made. That Sunday she couldn't eat or sleep.

Words of friendship and encouragement poured in. Evvie and Jim kept phoning from Catalina every hour. "You all right June?" "I'm fine."

At two a.m. the phone on her bed table rang. It was Dot. "I'm feeding the baby. Just thought I'd call so you wouldn't feel lonesome." Her beautiful family. She never let on that for the first time in days she'd been sleeping like a baby.

Once in the course of our talk, her blue eyes flashed with the spirit, if not with the gaiety, of the old June. How did she feel, I asked, about that Hollywood chestnut—"Though parting we're still the best of friends."

"If you're friends," she said, "you can stay married. We're not going to throw knives at each other, but I doubt if we'll get into each other's way. Where I come from girls don't go mingling around with their ex-husbands."

Right now June's staying within her own four walls, but not to brood. She reads, plays her beloved music, sees her intimates. She needs a lot of rest and to get more flesh on her bones before going off to Chicago and Detroit for personal appearances. It's a commitment 20th Century-Fox made long ago, timed for the opening of I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now.

"Entertainment's my business. Maybe a month ago I couldn't have done it. When the laughter's gone from inside, maybe you can't make other people laugh, though I'd certainly have tried. Now it will be that much easier."

All around town they're saying, "Poor June Haver." Pardon me if I'm different. The past is past. She's 21, with a long future ahead. She's beautiful, talented, launched on a dazzling career. Ah, yes, but she's gone through this dreadful experience.

I think that's too bad, but her courage and dignity in facing it don't call for pity. I think they call for a round of cheer myself. So here's Hopper yipping it up for you, honey, putting her dough on that pretty little nose of yours for a new and very happy beginning.

ENCORE!

(Continued from page 47)

most young lieutenants, he was conscious of regulations.

They went through the gate.

At the plane, Gene tried again.

"Honestly—" he said.

"I think I'll get in," said Jeanette.

She got in.

"Good-bye," said Lieutenant Raymond.

"Not at all," said Jeanette. "I've changed my mind. I'm going with you!"

Jeanette was air-sick all the way to Washington. Airplanes always make her ill. But that was how she left Hollywood in 1942, not to return for four years.

Actually, Jeanette's exit-laughing to spend five days in Washington with her husband, before he took off for overseas, was not precisely the whimsical, romantic gesture it appears. Ever since she could remember, the concert stage was her musical goal. Between pictures, she had already begun a series of limited tours. This was her first real chance since she was a small girl, aged 9, living at 5123 Arch Street, Philadelphia, where her father was a contractor. In those days, she used to make $10 every Sunday night singing at spiritualistic seances. She and her vocal teacher, at the piano, collaborated to help the medium get in touch with the spooks.

"Some day," Jeanette told her mother then, "I will be an opera and concert singer. You'll see!"

"And what will you do then?"

"I'll buy you a big gold bed," the child promised.

She never forgot that promise.

From Washington, after a romantic interlude, Jeanette covered the country, singing for fighting men. She sang in camps, in halls, out-of-doors, in impromptu theaters, scattering high notes and smiles and getting ovations.

When the war was over, she was the first American artist to appear on the concert stage in England. All the time, during this trans-continental and trans-atlantic song-fest, she hurried from place to place in jitterbug time, driving a number of helpful persons to the point of anxiety complexes.

the macdonald system . . .

She never prepares for a concert without experiencing pangs of remorse, unreasoning terror, attacks of self-consciousness, and temptations to flee to the hills. Jeanette, who is prey to more terrors than most singers, has a system. It is known as the Last-Minute-System, and consists, simply, of being in such a hurry just before a concert that she hasn't time to be frightened quite to the point of collapse. She is delighted, for instance, if her hair-do goes awry at the last minute.

In addition to excitement, she has contrived some routine devices as antidotes for fright. A walk in a local cemetery, she discovered, is very soothing to the vocal chords. This is followed by a nap, and then by the last-minute scramble to the theater. In Grand Rapids, she had explored the tombstones satisfactorily, and was napping comfortably with a "Do Not Disturb" sign on her door when she was awakened by a tremendous thumping.

"Miss MacDonald! Miss MacDonald!" cried a cracked voice.

Jeanette flung the door open. She was confronted by a tall youth whose voice was changing. In his hand was the "Do Not Disturb" sign.

"Would you autograph this for me?" he croaked.

Once when Jeanette was talking to when movies bring tears, avoid make-up smears . . .

to the rescue with SITROUX!

. . . say SIT-TRUE

THE BOX WITH THE BOW ON TOP

© 1947, Sitroux Inc.

$50 CASH FOR YOU
FOR SELLING 100 ASSORTMENTS
of 21 gorgeous CHRISTMAS CARDS worth 10c to 25c each. Sells $1.00—profit up to 50c. Sample box on approval. 75 money makers. Special Offers. WRITE TODAY.
FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.
HEDENKAMP & CO., 343 Broadway, Dept. S-9, New York 13, N. Y.

QUICK RELIEF FOR SUMMER TEETHING

EXPERIENCED Mothers know that summer teething must not be trifled with—that summer upsets due to teething may seriously interfere with Baby's progress.

Relieve your Baby's teething pains this summer by rubbing on Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion—the actual prescription of a famous Baby Specialist. It is effective and economical, and has been used and recommended by millions of Mothers. Your druggist has it.

DR. HAND'S TEETHING LOTION
Just rub it on the gums

2½ TONS LESS WORK FOR YOU with the PROCTOR NEVER-LIFT

Just think! Ordinary ironing means lifting 2½ tons in the average ironing day. The Never-Lift lifts itself! A touch of your finger and it stands on its own cool, sturdy legs. See it at Proctor Dealers now!

"No lift . . . No tilt . . . No twist"

It's new . . . it's exclusive . . . it's
PROCTOR

PROCTOR ELECTRIC COMPANY,
PHILADELPHIA 40, PA.

Reducing Specialist Says:

"Thanks to the Spot Reducer I lost four inches around the hips and three inches around the waistline. It's amazing." Mary Martin, Long Island City, N. Y.

LOSE WEIGHT

where it shows most

REDUCE

most any part of the body with

SPOT REDUCER

Like a magic wand, the "Spot Reducer" obeys your every wish. Most any part of your body where it is loose and flabby, wherever you have extra weight and inches, the "Spot Reducer" can aid you in acquiring a youthful, slender and graceful figure. The beauty of this scientifically designed Reducer is that the method is so simple and easy, the results quick, sure and harmless. No exercises or starvation diets. No steambaths, drugs or laxatives.

Miss Nancy Mace, Bronx, N. Y., says: "I went from size 16 dress to a size 12 with the use of the Spot Reducer. I am glad I used it."

Thousands have lost weight this way—in hips, abdomen, legs, arms, neck, buttocks, etc. The same method used by many stage, screen and radio personalities and leading reducing salons. The "Spot Reducer" can be used in your spare time, in the privacy of your own room. It breaks down fatty tissues, tones the muscles and flesh, and the increased, awakened blood circulation carries away waste fat. Two weeks after using the "Spot Reducer," look in the mirror and see a more glamorous, better, firmer, slimmer figure that will delight you. You have nothing to lose but weight for the "Spot Reducer" is sold on a

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE with a 10-DAY FREE TRIAL!

If the "Spot Reducer" doesn't do the wonders for you as it has for others, if you don't lose weight and inches where you want to lose it most, if you're not 100% delighted with the results, your money will be returned at once.

Marie Hammel, New York, N. Y., says: "I used to wear a size 20 dress, now I wear size 14, thanks to the Spot Reducer. It was fun and I enjoyed it."

MAIL COUPON NOW!

The "Spot Reducer" Co., Dept. DM-3, 871 Broad St., Newark, New Jersey.

Send me at once, for $2 cash, check or money order, the "Spot Reducer" and your famous Special Formula Body Massage Cream, postpaid. If I am not 100% satisfied, my money will be refunded.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Jascha Heifetz, the celebrated violinist, she came up with this observation: "I don't know why we put up with it," she said. "Concert tours mean bad, dirty hotels, bad food, bad hours, and they scare you to death. Why do we do it?"

Heifetz grinned at her.

"I know why," he said. "The house is sold out, isn't it?"

Jeanette grinned back at him.

In Chicago, she took 19 curtain calls. Jeanette's fan clubs were in the front row for that one, and wouldn't be satisfied.

Jeanette took her curtain calls for four years. Then one day she received a cablegram from Gene, now wearing the oak leaves of a major. He was on his way home.

Jeanette departed immediately for the stores. These were her chief purchases: milk, eggs, oranges, and nightgowns.

"If I ever leave you," Gene had said, "it will be for a cow."

Jeanette hurried to the hairdresser, humming the aria from One Hour with You. The dressmaker caught snatches of Naughty Marietta. The milkman enjoyed Love Me Tonight, and the guy at the fruitstand recognized "The Merry Widow Waltz."

This went on for a week. No further word from Gene. Evidently a snafu somewhere along the line. Orders changed, perhaps. "Arriving any minute," Jeanette muttered, pouring sour milk down the drain, tossing out wrinkled oranges, tucking back an auburn lock expensively hairdressed.

On the seventh day she rested, got up late, let her hair dangle, flung on a wrapper, and sat down to sip tasteless coffee and dry toast. That is when the doorbell rang. She flung it open, sleepy-eyed. There was Major Gene Raymond, sleek as a wash and polish job on a 1948 convertible.

Neither one remembers what was said. Gene is only sure of one thing. Her mouth was full of toast.

ain't gonna roam no more . . .

Now that the Gene Raymonds are back in Hollywood, comfortably ensconced in their Bel Air place, and with another big picture of Jeanette's due for release soon, they are probably the least travel-minded citizens of this peripatetic republic.

During the settling down period, following Gene's European adventure and Jeanette's concert tour, they experienced itchy feet one time only.

"Let's go somewhere," said Jeanette. "Let's go East."

So they headed for Arizona. In Hollywood, anything the other side of San Luis Obispo is firmly considered as "East."

They arrived by train at Flagstaff, which is 10,000 feet up, and was at that time under six inches of snow.

"Let's not buy this, Bunko," said Gene.

"Let's go down," said Bunko, shivering.

They went down to 3,500 feet, discovered they were still in red flannel territory, and more and worse than that, that there were a lot of horses about. Jeanette has an allergy to horses. She admires them, she thinks a horse is a fine, intelligent animal, excellent for transportation, but they give her sinus trouble. Escape was necessary.

" 'Tain't no way outen here 'cept by bus. Gitcha down to Phoenix," said the character who ran the horse place. They took the bus home.

"And that," concludes Gene, "is why we built the swimming pool.

"I said: 'Let's put in a pool and play in it, and stay home in our house and never go anywhere again.' " It suited Jeanette.

The swimming pool, the first irregular-shaped pool in town, was an engineering feat comparable to the erection of Boulder Dam. The Raymonds' house sits on tamped-down flat ground. The rest is a descent, plunging down like the set-backs of the Empire State Building. But Gene and Jeanette shored up a ravine, built retaining walls, and had themselves one of the prettiest pools outside of the ones Miss Esther Williams always swims in in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures.

Mr. Raymond's nerve and confidence were explicitly demonstrated when he first ventured into marriage and housekeeping, just ten years ago, June 18, 1937.

That astonishing man actually bought a house and furnished it completely without saying a word to his bride. On their wedding night, he let her look at it for the first time. He did that to a bride with red hair. It takes men like this to win wars.

However—there have been some changes made. Changes go on constantly—usually while Jeanette is away on a tour—comprising such adjustments as turning an upstairs bedroom into a sitting room, turning a downstairs entrance into a bar, re-doing the living room, and converting the stables into an office.

This summer, Gene himself attacked the outdoor furniture. Jeanette had misgivings but said nothing. It required several weeks and exacted innumerable blisters and backaches, but in the end the chairs and tables were sanded, painted and polished. Between bouts with the furniture and between pictures, Gene writes music.

Three of his songs have been published, and several of them, notably "Let Me Always Sing" and "Release," have been used by Jeanette on concert tours.

Occasionally, they run over one of Gene's pieces at the piano.

"Faster," says Jeanette.

"No, it goes slower," says Gene.

"It should be faster," says Jeanette.

"It should not be faster," says Gene. "Dear—I wrote this song."

"Faster," says Jeanette.

Gene regards these disagreements philosophically. After all, he points out, he is not and isn't supposed to be the musician his wife is.

Along the terraced walks of the Raymond-MacDonald place grow possibly every kind of fruit and flower that thrives in Southern California. Everything grows there save roses.

"We spent a little fortune on the non-growingest rose garden in the world," says

"Three quarts of milk, one sweet cream, and please put the morning paper back down where you found it. Thank you."

Gene. "There they are."—pointing to his bare rose bushes—"Then I discovered that you could buy roses for three dollars a dozen."

Jeanette works out three times a week with a voice coach, warming up on scales, then proceeding to new songs. She insists on that, holding that even a repertoire of three or four hundred well-learned songs isn't enough for audiences who pay their money.

She likes to quote Jose Iturbi, with whom she works in The Birds and the Bees, on the subject of the relentless toil professional musicians must endure.

"If I don't practice for just one day," he told Jeanette, "I notice it. If I don't practice for two days, the critics notice it. If I don't practice for three days, everybody notices it."

And like all singers, Jeanette lives in dread of catching cold. At the slightest sniffle, she pops into bed, eats lightly, and drinks citrus juice until the danger is past.

"It isn't that you can't sing over a cold," she explains. "Actually, a cold sometimes adds timbre to the voice. But you feel awful. So it's bed for singers with colds in the head. Still, I've never missed a concert, cold or no cold."

Jeanette is immensely pleased with her part in her return engagement, The Birds and the Bees, the first of her one-a-year deal which brings her back to Metro. She sings some well-remembered favorites: "Sweethearts," the waltz from Rosenkavalier, and "Spring Song." A number of these are done with J. Iturbi as accompanist—and no complaints about his being too slow.

Nelson Eddy, with whom Jeanette starred in so many of the celebrated films, remains a close friend. During their heyday together, there were constant rumors that they disputed on the set. They did. But the rest of the story was seldom included: Jeanette and Nelson almost invariably walked off to dinner together after arguing all day about who'd take the high note and who'd take the low note. Other old friends have also been faithful: in one of the most remarkable evidences of affection the fans have ever bestowed on a star, more than 3,000 admirers a month continued to write to Jeanette during the time she was off the screen.

Now she's back, apparently to stay, renewing the Hollywood concert as if she'd just stepped out for intermission.

"I had the fling," she says. "That was the 'big gold bed.' It's good to be home, and we feel as if we never want to leave it again. Still . . ."

Gene grinned.

"I'll remodel while you're away, Bunko," he said.

LADY IN THE DARK—(HEDY'S SIDE)

(Continued from page 45)

Through all her conversation runs the word "security." She is very much preoccupied with security.

"I want my children to have security," she told me. "That's something I missed in my childhood. I never had security. I haven't got it now. I can't relax. I have so many people dependent on me. It frightens me. What if I should get sick and couldn't work?"

Her romance with Loder started auspiciously on Christmas Day in 1942 at the Hollywood Canteen, where Hedy put in so many hours during the war. It ran into the first snag when she learned, four months after they were married, that John's ex-wife, Micheline Cheirel, had just obtained her final divorce decree. This put Hedy's marriage to the actor in a doubtful class. It seems it was all a misunderstanding. Judge Charles Griffin, of Beverly Hills, who had represented Miss Cheirel, explained it this way:

"Mr. Loder was so anxious to marry Miss Lamarr that he asked my client to get a divorce in Mexico, although she had already obtained her divorce in California, which wouldn't be final for a year. She did go to Juarez and got a divorce, but she wanted the property settlement clarified, so she asked me to get the second decree here, too. I'm sure they all acted in good faith."

Trouble like that at the beginning of a marriage is so much worse than when a couple have become adjusted. But Hedy and John were in love and everything was smoothed over at that time. However, the irresponsibility which got him involved in a marriage before he was legally divorced, is the thing that is now giving Hedy the heebie jeebies. There seems to be still another factor which pulls them apart.

"You know, one of the reasons, I think, for my failure to be happy is that I've always married men so much older than myself," Hedy explained. "I would like to be in love with someone my own age. I might have fun. Sometimes I wish I could do that before it is too late."

She dismisses her marriage to Markey as something that hardly happened. "First his mother and father died and then he had pneumonia," she said. "Our home life was so constantly interrupted with my work and his and outside happenings that the first thing we knew it was all over. I didn't understand much about Hollywood then. It's difficult to find kindness and friendship here. People act as if they get great pleasure in hurting others."

Hedy showed a lot of courage when she took the leap that ended her contract with M-G-M and launched herself as an independent producer with Hunt Stromberg. She explained:

"I wanted to be something more than a girl with a beautiful face. I wanted to be an actress. I want that more than anything else right now. I would like to play character roles just to prove to myself that I could do them."

Although Hedy seems—to those who know her—to be a lady very much in the dark these days, I think she'll think her way out of all her troubles. I believe her love for her children and her overwhelming urge to give them a good home and security will ultimately save her from despair, even though she and John have decided to go their separate ways.

There is one room in the house which is like nothing else I have seen in Hollywood. It is a large, sunny room where she and the children eat together, but it is also a playroom with gaily decorated walls and cabinets for toys. It is a place where the kids can feel happy and secure—as Hedy never has. Recently, Loder had a slight operation for the removal of a piece of metal imbedded in his flesh from a duelling sequence in a picture. The Hollywood press reported that Hedy had gone to the hospital to see him and taken him home. "That isn't true," she told me. "He isn't living here. We have had talks and I have written out some terms but he hasn't done anything about it yet. There must be a thorough understanding of each other's rights for a reconciliation. Now I doubt if we ever will. I'm afraid it's too late for anything but a divorce."

DO YOU WANT . . .

LONGER HAIR?

★THEN TRY THIS PROVEN EASY SYSTEM ON YOUR HAIR ★ ★ ★ ★

Helps Prevent Brittle Ends Breaking Off!

● Hair May Get Longer

when scalp and hair conditions are normal and the dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded by supplementing the natural hair oils, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Just try the easy JUELENE System 7 days and let your mirror prove results. Your money back if not delighted. See if Juelene's tendency to help your hair to become softer, silkier, more lustrous than it has been before—in just one short week helps your hair gain its normal beauty.

● BRUNETTES, BLONDES, TITIANS!

Just try this System on your HAIR seven days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of LONGER HAIR that so often captures Love and Romance for you.

● Send No Money!

Just mail the convenient introductory coupon. Take advantage of this Fully Guaranteed Introductory Offer today, and know at last the happiness of possessing really lovelier hair and be envied by so many.

JUEL COMPANY, 4727 N. Damen, Chicago 25, Illinois

Mail This INTRODUCTORY COUPON!

JUEL COMPANY, Dept. K-603
4727 North Damen, Chicago 25, Ill.

Yes, I want easy-to-manage, longer hair. I will try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. If my mirror doesn't show satisfactory results, I will ask for my money back.

☐ I am enclosing $1.00.
☐ Send C. O. D. plus postage.

JUELENE Comes in 2 Forms
☐ POMADE ☐ LIQUID

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE ____ STATE _____

Our Customers Participate in Gifts

VETO Colgate's Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Underarm Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant . . . Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness and to check underarm perspiration, stop odor safely.

OFFICIAL TESTED RETAIL LABORATORIES

DOUBLY PREFERRED! Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

Turn Spare Time into CASH

Sell These Gay CHRISTMAS CARDS

50 Personal Cards WITH NAME $1.00

Just show this gorgeous line of Personal Christmas Cards—with name imprinted. Customers have choice of 25 for $1 or 50 for $1. They sell on sight! You make excellent profit on each sale. No experience required. Get FREE samples created especially for this season, and take easy orders from friends, relatives and business people—either spare or full time!

Christmas Card Assortment 21 for $1

MAKE EXTRA MONEY ... with BOX Assortments Sell newest $1 Assortments—Religious, Christmas, Everyday Cards, others. Easy—dignified work—Quick Sales—Extra Cash. Splendid money-making plan for Churches, Clubs, Lodges.

SEND FOR Samples

WETMORE & SUGDEN, INC.
749 Monroe Ave., Dept. C-77, Rochester (2), N. Y.

CASE OF BIG Money Makers FREE

I'll send you this Big Assortment of Products in a carrying case FREE (your only expense is parcel post charges) to help you get started in a Good Money Making Business of your own. Thousands now making extra money each week this way.

BLAIR, Dept. 360-CS, Lynchburg, Va.

Don't be an Alice-Sit-By-The-Fire!

If periodic pains keep you home a day or two each month and prevent your doing the things you enjoy, Chi-Ches-Ters Pills may give you blessed relief. Unless there are underlying organic conditions, they tend to relax the muscular tension responsible for many discomforts of "difficult days".

MOST LEADING DRUGGISTS CARRY

CHI-CHES-TERS PILLS

DIAMOND BRAND

For relief from "periodic functional distress"
50 CENTS, AND LARGER ECONOMY BOXES.
FREE — Illustrated booklet of intimate facts every woman should know. Mailed in plain wrapper. Write: CHICHESTER CHEMICAL COMPANY, Dept. E-9, Philadelphia 46, Pa.

SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY

(Continued from page 51)

little I've seen of my own home in the last few months? I kind of thought . . ." Then he saw the look of disappointment in her eyes, the dying of her sudden, exuberant excitement at the idea of an impromptu trip. "All right," he said. "A trip'll be fun. Nina can take care of everything until we get back."

His reward was the radiance that returned to her face. He said, "I've been working so hard lately I haven't given much thought to how dull it must be for you, just hanging around the house coping with domestic problems."

"I'll have to admit I've not yet turned into the house-mouse type," she told him. "I'm not used to it, darling."

And this, he understood, was true. From the eminence of his thirty-two years he looked sideways and down—figuratively as well as literally—at the girl he had married: a golden girl, whose laughter when he met her was fresh, eighteen-year-old laughter; whose knowledge of the world, such as it was, had been conditioned and shaped by the sheltered life she had led.

So far as Gloria knew, disappointment was a seldom thing, tragedy a word applied to certain plays of Shakespeare's, and boredom the wait between phone calls or the delay before a favored swain rescued her from someone else on the dance floor. Until she married John, glamor had meant her cinderella ride to sudden stardom, via the Metro route—and all that went with it.

She had exchanged all this, gladly, for marriage because she had fallen overwhelmingly in love; and she had had his child, and taken over the responsibilities of his home. She could accomplish these things because she was a grown woman and intelligent.

it takes two . . .

But she could not be Mrs. John Payne happily and successfully, he had realized from the beginning, without his help. It was not as if she had married a simple, uninvolved personality of her own age. She had married an extremely complicated, sensitive adult who had lived a couple of ordinary lifetimes during the eleven years that separated them.

Now, as he guided the softly purring car along the almost deserted Coast highway, he allowed himself a few moments of introspection, of honest self-analysis. He considered the person he was today—possessed of a restless, nervous vitality that would long since have shaken him to pieces except that it was housed in an immensely healthy, rugged body . . . Moody, too aware of his environment and the people who inhabited it . . .

He was, heaven knew, a maze of contradictions. On the one side he was shrewd, disenchanted; a practical man who continued acting in pictures because it was the best way he knew to make a lot of money.

Yet this same man would spend hours with architect Lou Gould planning the perfect house to build on that Ranch above Malibu, when he should be considering its re-sale. He would knock himself out making a strange, unconventional fairy tale called Miracle on 34th Street, not because he could divine that it would be a hit, but because the story charmed and fascinated him.

He would shut himself away for hours, emerging at last with a four line bit of verse which brewed in his mind until it had forced its way out and onto paper.

He would sit all night long at the piano, improvising on a haunting little theme that had occurred to him in the midst of a business conference the day before. What did he want of marriage, and what was his share in it? He recalled suddenly the definition he had given a friend weeks before—a definition which in its very form was an expression, a kind of portrait of his own character.

"Marriage," he said, "should be an emotionally profitable business, and it should be run like a business. Two people have joined in a partnership, supposedly with equal investments of love and faith. To reap mutual benefits each partner has to continue to work, make the business pay off."

And he thought now, Gloria's given all of her time to just the one business, while I've had two. It's high time I protected this investment of mine.

"A penny," Gloria said.

"I was just thinking what a very lucky guy I am," he told her, his voice deep with his sincerity.

They were sitting, the next afternoon, in the patio of the Pine Inn at Carmel, sipping Vermouth Cassis and watching the townfolk and the Pebble Beach crowd and the people from nearby Monterey celebrate the mystic hour of five o'clock. Gloria was enchanted.

"That chap there," she whispered, "with the goatee and the beret and the flowing tie. An artist, d'you think, or would he be playing around with the local little theatah?"

"Probably sells nuts and bolts in the hardware store," John decided. "How about that lassie in the green sandals. How about that?"

"If you're going to keep staring at her—and I notice it isn't at the sandals, either—we'd better take a ride." She was teasing him, but he stood up and caught her hand.

Half an hour later he pulled the car up to a curb and gestured around him. "Look," he commanded.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

My 15-year-old daughter was critically ill and had been confined to her bed for six weeks. Her only pleasure during those weeks was listening to Andy Russell sing on records and radio. When Mr. Russell came to New York on a personal appearance tour, she was very morose because she would not be able to see him on the stage. I called Andy and told him about our problem and without hesitating, he offered to come up and see her. He came to our house the next day and sang to her for a full hour. My daughter recovered completely soon afterwards, and my doctor says seeing Andy did more for her than a cabinetful of medicine. The thing that warmed my heart most about this unselfish gesture is that Andy never tried to capitalize on it with cheap publicity. For, if you use this story, it will be the first time that it has been made public.

Mrs. Betty Shaktman,
Brooklyn, New York

Gloria was busy getting out a handkerchief to hold over her nose. "Phew! What's that awful smell?"

"Never mind the smell. What do you see?"

"I see a very beat-up Chinese grocery store, and a vacant lot, and a big shack made of corrugated tin, and—I think that's a Mexican asleep in the lot."

"Look across the street."

"'Biological Laboratory,'" she read slowly. Her eyes suddenly sparkled with recognition and delight. "Why, it's Steinbeck!" she laughed. "Of course. Just as he described it."

"This could be the last block in Cannery Row," John said.

He pointed to a large, ramshackle house on the long back porch of which six or seven pink silk slips fluttered in the breeze from a drying line.

"Now we'll do Tortilla Flat, and then the harbor." It was almost sundown by the time they reached the pier. In the small, natural harbor, the Monterey fishing fleet lay at anchor, its masts a hundred wooden fingers pointing to the sky; clouds of seagulls wheeled and fought and screeched over scraps of fish; housewives walked out along the pier and returned with crabs and fish and prawns wrapped in newspaper.

Gloria's arm was around John's waist, and she allowed her head to rest for a moment on his shoulder. "I don't know why this should do it," she said, "but I don't feel restless or depressed or cross any more. This is the life. Maybe instead of a plane we should have a little cruiser. We could spend days anchored in places like this."

"There isn't another Monterey," John said, "and besides, it would pall."

"Never! Not like Las Vegas, anyway. You said yourself, this is the real thing—it's here because it grew this way, it evolved because the harbor was here and there were fish out there and men wanted to catch the fish. That's a good elemental reason for being. But last fall when we were in Las Vegas, I had a feeling that any day someone would blow a whistle and a bunch of propmen would troupe in and take it all away in little pieces."

"I do believe you're moralizing," John said, amused. "Las Vegas, just like any other town, has its reason for being, you know. People like to have fun."

"You mean they like to get quick divorces."

John started to say something, and changed his mind. Instead, he took his wife in his arms and kissed her. A little later, when they were about to go, he said, "Take a good look, sweet, and I will, too. We should keep a picture of this harbor in our minds, to bring out and remember when we need it. Like a talisman, a charm. . ."

"Maybe we won't ever need it again," Gloria said.

With their new light heartedness, the magic of San Francisco next day was unalloyed delight. They had never laughed so much, nor so easily; they watched the city from the Top o' the Mark, and dined at John's Rendezvous, and saw a floor show in a cabaret. And the next day they drove back to Hollywood to find that Kathleen had learned, in their absence, the first three ballet positions from her nurse's daughter, who was studying dancing.

And there was news from another source. To promote an anti-tuberculosis campaign they were to fly down to Mexico together as the guests of the President. "Do you want to go?" John asked, and her answer wasn't really necessary because she looked like a very little girl who had just had a personal visit from Santa Claus himself.

"Are there any fishing harbors in Mexico?" she asked.

"Thousands," he said. . .

MOMENTS OF MAUREEN

(Continued from page 55)

preceding day. It had been the Prices' first vacation from home and studio and Bronwyn, their white-haired three-year-old (whom Maureen, with old world apprehension already refers to as "our youngest unmarried daughter") in a very long time. And it had been heaven. They'd cruised over to Catalina—Will at the wheel, Maureen under the special "anti-freckling" awning that Will had put up for her. They'd lunched. They'd fished. They'd dined that night ashore, to the tune of seventeen nickels that Will had thrown into the juke box. After which they'd cruised in the moonlight, and then anchored in Fisherman's Cove. The "earthquake" had followed, and even that had been fun in a frantic sort of way. And now this lovely quiet time. Maureen looked at the water and saw that it had quieted down and mirrored over. She wasn't sleepy at all, so she sat a while longer watching the richening sky.

That was a nice moment.

She remembered several tearful ones not long before. For instance, when she was leaving for her vacation in Ireland, to visit her mother and father for the first time in seven years, and Will drove her and Bronwyn and Eleanor to the airport. She had cried when she kissed Will goodbye, knowing she wouldn't see him for two months. Bronwyn hadn't cried. Bronwyn had waited until the plane took off and she realized that her daddy wasn't coming along. Then she had let loose.

To distract her, Maureen and Eleanor started to play an old game with Bronwyn —"Make believe" ball. They tossed a ball that wasn't there, back and forth, and everything went well until Bronwyn decided that she had dropped the ball and it had rolled under the chair of a dignified elderly passenger across the way. Maureen dropped to her knees and peered under the man's legs. He leaned over.

"Dropped the little girl's ball?" he asked. "Permit me to help you."

"Oh, please don't bother," she told him. "It really isn't here anyway."

She realized how queer that must have sounded when his eyebrows shot up.

A second later Maureen "found" the ball and tossed it back into the game. She saw the old gentleman sneak a look at them out of the corner of his eyes. When he saw nothing flying back and forth between them, he turned back suddenly and sat rigid. For the rest of the flight Maureen wavered between explaining, and letting things go as they were. Just before they landed in New York she started to talk to him but realized it was a mistake. He just closed his eyes tightly until she was through.

That was an odd moment.

It was to have been a two months' vacation in Ireland, but the studio started chopping off time. After she had been there a bare few weeks, the wires got hot with urgent summonses to come back and the tail end of the vacation was snipped off. And that was an unspeakable moment.

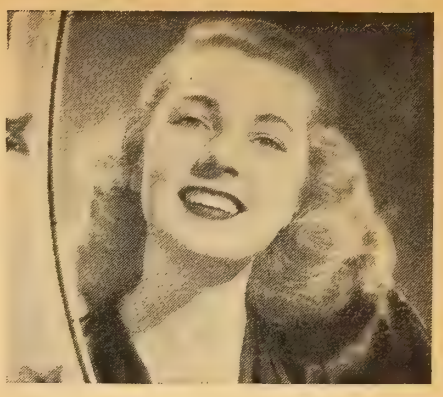
It was necessary for her to break away from her folks before there was a good time to renew family relationships prop-



GIRLS! Want quick curls?

WHAT girl doesn't want quick curls these days! Especially when that favorite fella gives you a call at the last minute. With New Wildroot Hair Set you can set that favorite hair-do in less time. It's absolutely tops for quick good grooming that's so important these days. New Wildroot Hair Set contains processed Lanolin. Leaves any texture of hair soft, natural-looking, and at its lovely best. Replaces old-fashioned thick gummy wave sets. Light bodied. Faster drying. Lets you style your favorite hair-do at home quickly, without fuss or disappointment.

NEW WILDROOT HAIR SET

EARN CASH NOW Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS

Make big money! Show sensational value Christmas Cards with NAME Imprinted, 50 for $1. Smartest designs, pre-war quality and size, low pre-war price. Also 25 for $1 and DeLuxe lines. For quick easy profits —just show free samples to friends, others.

50 With Name $1

MORE MONEY-MAKERS FOR YOU! Make EXTRA Earnings with largest line of 22 Box Assortments. 9 Christmas card; 8 Everyday card; 3 Gift Wrappings; 2 Notes Assortments. Unequalled values. Big sellers at 50c, 80c, 90c and $1.00 retail. No experience is necessary. Full or spare time. Send for FREE SAMPLE OUTFIT.

Also 22 Fast-Selling Assortments

GENERAL CARD CO., Dept. 103, 1300 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 7, Ill.

WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLES

Absorbine Jr. KILLS Athlete's Foot "Bugs" on contact—

Sell CHILTON Christmas Cards
Make BIG MONEY
50 for $1 WITH NAME
SAMPLES FREE
21 Card "PRIZE" CHRISTMAS BOX
25 for $1 WITH NAME

Show friends... neighbors these sensational bargain Christmas Cards. Everyone wants . . . buys. Just show samples — take orders — no risk. Come in beautiful new designs — rich colors — fine papers.

17 Smart Popular Assortments

Write for Samples

AMAZING LINE all fast sellers. 21-card "Prize" Christmas Cards, Religious, Fine Arts, Humorous, Everyday, Gift Wraps, retail $1.00. Get "Prize" Christmas assortment on approval. Write today!

CHILTON GREETINGS CO., Dept. 91-F,
147 ESSEX STREET • BOSTON, MASS.

BRUSH AWAY GRAY HAIR - and Look 10 Years Younger

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or

Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE

Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 299, COVINGTON, KY.

THE JOB AHEAD DEPENDS ON YOU!

Support the 1947
Red Cross Fund

MAKE MONEY FAST

Sell Big-Value Christmas Cards

Show leading line of greeting cards! Smartest designs, newest decorations . . . greatest values. Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards —50 and 25 for $1. Show 22 different superb Assortments. "Supercraft" 21-card Christmas, Religious, Humorous, Everyday, Stationery. Write today for 21-card assortment sent on approval and FREE samples.

50 FOR $1 WITH NAME
CHRISTMAS & EVERYDAY Assortments

Phillips Card Co., 837 Hunt St., Newton, Mass.

REPLICA DIAMOND Engagement Rings with matched wedding bands

Set #S-102—Flashing Replica Diamond in Solid Sterling Silver, with wedding band to match

Flashing replica diamond engagement rings chased wedding bands to match. Choice of any set in Sterling Silver, White or Yellow Gold Color Effect. SEND NO MONEY. Just name, address, ring size. Order by set number. Pay postman 97c plus postage or send $1 with order and we pay postage. GUARANTEE: If not pleased, return in 10 days for refund.

Only 97¢ FOR BOTH

Set #S-104—Flashing Replica Diamond, white gold color effect, with wedding band to match

Set #S-103—Flashing Replica Diamond, yellow gold color effect with wedding band to match.

Send All Orders To HAREM CO.
30 Church St., Dept. N-79
New York 7, N. Y.

erly and before she could look up all the old girl friends she had grown up with in Dublin. Even Bronwyn had to cut short an Irish romance with the little boy who lived just down the road from Maureen's old home. His name was Dermit and he had called every morning at nine, promptly, to play with Bronwyn. Bronwyn pronounced his name "Doormat," but he didn't seem to mind.

It was in Ireland, too, that Bronwyn had first learned to say her prayers; at her grandmother's knee. And there had been trouble at first because Bronwyn had taken to innocent ad libbing.

"Hail Mary," began her grandmother, and Bronwyn, who was to repeat word for word, had dutifully begun, "Hail Mary"—and then added, ". . . had a little lamb."

There were some mad moments in the scramble to get ready for the plane back to New York. Because of the shortage of finished products in Ireland, Maureen had decided to leave every bit of clothing she had brought from Hollywood and return only with what she had on her back.

When she showed up at Shannon airport, she wasn't carrying any bags or suitcases, but she did have an armful of Irish tweed and linens, plus two bottles of 25-year-old Irish whiskey, this last a present from her father to Will.

The American Airlines representative weighed the stuff and told Maureen that she would have to pay for excess weight.

"Oh, no, there can't possibly be an extra charge," she assured him. "I'm already paying full fare for my little girl who weighs hardly thirty pounds, while an adult passenger averages a hundred and fifty pounds. Wouldn't that be giving me a credit of about 120 pounds?"

"That's a technicality," the man returned, and figured he had Maureen there. But he was wrong again.

customer's always right . . .

"The hundred and twenty pounds of extra mail you are going to carry on the trip because my little girl only weighs thirty pounds isn't a technicality," Maureen replied. The man stared at her as if he wondered how she had ever found out about that. He found he had to clear his throat to gain time here. In the end, American Airlines bowed to Maureen—but without prejudice to its own stand—and permitted her to climb aboard the plane with her overload.

"There!" exclaimed Maureen as she and Eleanor and Bronwyn took their seats.

"But by the time you pay duty on all that stuff in America, won't you be the loser?" asked Eleanor.

With pencil and paper Maureen proved to Eleanor that even after paying import duty, her linens and tweed would be a bargain in California.

"How about the whiskey?" asked Eleanor.

"I'll just tell them it's a sentimental gift," replied Maureen. "I'm sure they will understand."

Which they didn't—but it was still sentimental, for all of that.

When they landed in New York Maureen learned that she was to do a picture in New York immediately, and that two others were all set to go when she got back to Hollywood.

Will flew in to New York to bring Bronwyn home because now Maureen had no moments left for anything—but work. Waiting for her in California was her sister Margot, now married to Major Harry Edwards of the U. S. Marines and stationed in San Diego. Maureen brought news about their two brothers, Charles and Jimmy. But Margot had news herself. When it was all incorporated into one story, it ran like this: all five of the O'Haras were likely to be in pictures soon—the beginning of a new family dynasty of the stage, perhaps!

That was a startling moment!

Florence, now married to Lee Clark, Canadian lumberman, had been a dancing teacher in Dublin and later made pictures in London (including one with James Mason). Now she was having contracts dangled at her by both RKO and 20th Century-Fox.

Margot, who had made a number of pictures for Rank in England, and whose last picture, starring Ann Todd, I Know Where I'm Going, was even then playing in Hollywood, was wanted by Mary Pickford for one of her productions, now in the writing stage, but scheduled to start production soon.

Charles, practicing law in Dublin, where he graduated from Dublin University at 19—the youngest grad in its history—and had to wait two years before he was admitted to the bar, had been tested by Warner Brothers. And when they tested Charles in Dublin, they also tested the youngest brother, Jimmy. Right after the tests were made, producers representing the Rank interests in England suddenly decided they wanted both boys for picture work!

It was just about at this point that Maureen had an inspirational moment—and she went right into action, in typical O'Hara fashion.

When she came to Hollywood seven years ago, she had been the first of her parents' children to leave home—excluding the oldest sister, Margaret Ann, who had entered a convent in Dublin. Now, the thought of her father and mother alone in the big house where they had all been raised, weighed heavily on her and she wanted to do something about it.

She wrote both of them that this was the time to come to California. She already has had a reply.

Her father wrote that the matter was entirely up to her mother. Her mother said it was up to him. Maureen knew the truth behind this evasion. Her father has his business in Dublin—he heads a chain of sports stores—and has no intention of retiring. Her mother also has a flourishing dress business. They both have someone very close to them who is never going to leave Dublin—their daughter, Margaret Ann.

That was an understanding—and poignant—moment.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Meeting and serving with Jimmy Stewart was perhaps one of my greatest experiences in the Air Force. I saw Jimmy first when he joined our Bomb Group in the States, and I was in the same outfit with him practically all during our stay in England. I can safely say he was the best liked and most admired officer on the field. One day, when three bombers from his squadron were missing, he came into the locker room to sweat it out. I served him a cup of coffee. He sat there very silently; didn't speak to anyone. His face was lined with sorrow. Yes, Stewart was that kind of guy—his men always came first. Hollywood can well be proud of him.

Joe Scaletta, Jr.
San Jose, Calif.

WE THREE

(Continued from page 53)

Market! Maybe the boldest venture of that campaign was walking up to Jeanne with that old tired line, "I know I've met you somewhere" (wish I really had, by the way) and asking, "May I have your telephone number?" But it worked. I got the number.

Our idea of fun may seem rather bizarre sometimes to other people, but that's just the way we are, and we like it that way. We took a lot of kidding, for instance, when we picked Death Valley for our wedding trip. "What a place for a honeymoon!" our friends razzed us. "The name's bad enough," they went on. "But of all the God-forsaken barren, empty stretches of nothing—" Maybe so—but Jeanne and I happened to be crazy about the place. We thought the desert scenery, the colors, the sun and shadows, the whole magnificent setting was wonderful. Nobody around for a hundred miles—just scenery, and us. We had the time of our lives, exploring old mine shafts, climbing mountains and watching sunsets. Okay, we're crazy.

looks are deceiving . . .

I had the first of those revelations about the new Mrs. Brinkman at Death Valley, incidentally. Before I married Jeanne, I pictured her as strictly the sweet type (and I still do), as fresh and fragile as the breath of spring. I've always been pretty much of an outdoor guy myself. I like hunting, fishing and hiking and all that. Well—we climbed up to Dante's View one day.

That's a mountain top over a mile straight up from Death Valley's floor. The floor's two hundred feet below sea level and hot enough to curl your hair. At Dante's it's over 6,000 feet and cold enough to freeze it. Jeanne wasn't even breathing hard with the climb or the quick temperature change. But what made me gasp was when she trotted right up to a cliff which dropped away a sheer six thousand feet—straight down—and looked nonchalantly over, just as if she were inspecting her shoelace!

We went quail-hunting another time during those honeymoon weeks. We hunted a rugged canyon that slashes up the mountains—a place where it's good to be a goat if you can arrange it—not a pretty girl like Jeanne. Shotguns are heavy and Jeanne wore new hunting boots, which is always a mistake in country like that. But although we hoisted our gear half way up San Jacinto Mountains, she didn't hang behind—except just once.

"Something keeps sticking me," complained Jeanne. I looked. Hanging to the seat of her hunting cords was a man sized cholla cactus. Just then she sat down for a rest. She got up again fast. We called time out while I picked out the needles. But even playing pincushion didn't stop Jeanne for long—although if you've ever sat on a cactus you'll know it wasn't fun.

Jeanne Crain's sweet-girl-graduate look is deceptive, believe me. She has a mind of her own as well as courage and a taste for obeying that impulse which sometimes makes people who don't know her as I do fall into a slight swoon. A case in point was that time out near Reno, Nevada, where Jeanne made her first picture after we were married, Margie. I just had to see the little woman in action so I played hookey from my manufacturing plant one week, and rode up. "How wonderful, darling," said Jeanne, giving me one of those irresistible hugs, "now we can go skiing and get some pictures for the book."

Maybe I'd better explain about the book. Jeanne's as sentimental as that gentleman from Georgia. We've had an anniversary every month since we've been married. She keeps everything—all her school report cards, dance programs, kodak snaps since the time she was in diapers, old hair ribbons, theater bills. When we were married, she started a photograph album. She pasted in the honeymoon pictures, the hotel bill with that brand new "Mr. and Mrs. Brinkman," our place cards, match covers, everything at the table. This was a chance for some snaps of our first vacation together.

I hadn't skiied for several years. Jeanne hadn't ever had a pair on. That didn't bother her. She bought a complete snow outfit and we headed for Mount Rose. There's one of those tricky ski lifts there stringing scarily up the mountainside, a balanced platform with a bar to hang on to. You're supposed to keep it even with your weights. But I weigh much more than Jeanne and halfway up it teetered to my side and off Jeanne plopped in the snow, which threw me off, too. They stopped the lift, of course. Was Jeannie dismayed?—not a bit! "Quick," she said, "hand me the camera. We've just got to have a picture of this for the scrapbook!" The impatient skiers above were howling bloody murder, but I got out the camera. You might know Jeanne. She got the pictures.

Jeanne startled most of her friends—but not me this time—when she asked me to buy her lion cub, Shah-Shah. I'm a little bit touched myself about animals and both Jeanne and I have dreamed ever since we met of making a gun and camera safari to Africa—the gun for me, the camera for Jeanne. After what happened about Shah, you'll know Jeanne could never kill anything bigger than a mosquito without suffering pangs of remorse. She didn't bang away at one quail on that rugged bird-shooting trip of ours and before we got back, she'd even made me promise never to shoot another deer. But about Shah.

come into my menagerie . . .

We went to a circus party in Hollywood—one of those lavish garden affairs with elephants, camels, seals—the whole menagerie scattered around. This little ten-day old cub was in a miniature cage and she was so cute, she stole the show. Too much so, Jeanne thought, as people picked up the cub, tossed her around and puffed cigarette smoke in her frightened face.

"Poor little thing," sighed Jeannie. "She's so skinny. I'd love to take her home, away from all this mauling, and fatten her up. Oh," she cried eagerly, "let's!"

We were calling ourselves the luckiest pair in the world at that point because we actually had an apartment at last. No children allowed. No pets. No anything—but still an apartment. "Wait a minute—" I protested.

Just then the cub reached up and licked Jeannie's hand. That did it. I knew I was just talking into the breeze. Never underestimate the power of a woman—especially if the woman's Jeanne Crain Brinkman. "Okay," I grinned helplessly.

We had to drive sixty-five miles to find the cub's owner. We had to talk an arm off to buy her. But we got Shah-Shah, and we brought her home. We sneaked her inside like smugglers and bedded her down in the laundry basket. When she started to make noises we piled on more laundry. When the landlady came around, we turned the record machine up loud. I

Avoid underarm irritation...

...use YODORA

the deodorant that is ACTUALLY SOOTHING

Wonderful! Yodora stops perspiration odor safely, quickly . . . yet is positively soothing to normal skin. Made with a face cream base, with no acid salts to cause irritation, Yodora actually helps soften your skin, like a face cream. No other known deodorant gives this PLUS protection. Try Yodora, the soothingest deodorant. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
yodora
an effective deodorant cream

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW and SENSATIONAL in CHRISTMAS CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

AMAZING "OILETTE" CARDS Like costly oil paintings. Designs never before offered. Amazing Value! Gets easy orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with name, 50 for $1 up. New features, clever ideas. Pays up to 100% cash profit. Also Stationery. 20 other money-making assortments sell at 60c to $1. Samples on Approval. Write today.

50 FOR $1 With Name

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 75L, St. Louis 3, Mo.

Be an ARTIST

LEARN AT HOME IN YOUR SPARE TIME

Trained artists are capable of earning $50, $60, $75 a week. By our practical method we teach you COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING and CARTOONING all in ONE course. FREE BOOK—"Art for Pleasure & Profit" describes training and opportunities in art. STATE AGE.

Approved for training under G.I. Bill

STUDIO 809 H, WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
1115—15th ST., N. W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

EASE TIRED EYES WITH EYE-GENE

You'll See, Feel The Difference In Seconds!

Just two drops of safe EYE-GENE in your eyes tired or bloodshot from overwork, wind, glare, late hours or over-indulgence—presto!—they will be rested, cleared, refreshed! Yes, EYE-GENE is positively SAFE. Use it every day. At all Drug stores in handy eye-dropper bottles—20¢, 60¢ and $1.00.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Ladies Earn UP TO $23 Weekly!

LOVELY DRESS GIVEN TO YOU!

Ladies, here's your chance to earn up to $23 weekly! And besides, take your pick of dozens of gorgeous Fall dresses—without a penny of cost. That's what we offer you for representing us in your spare time. Show our popular frocks to your friends, then send us their orders. Collect handsome cash commissions in advance. No canvassing or experience necessary. Get free details of this unusual offer and Portfolio of new styles. Everything furnished FREE. Rush name, address and dress size on postcard. Fashion Frocks, Inc., Dept. 53054, Cincinnati 25, O.

EARN MONEY Easy Way

SELL Christmas Cards

New Designs—New Ideas—New Big Values

Get EASY CASH with amazingly fast sellers. Show sparkling new 21 card $1.00 "Feature" assortment. You make up to 50c on every box you sell. Other popular assortments: Religious, Humorous, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, etc. Big value Christmas cards with SENDER'S NAME, 25 for only $1.00 up. Amazing profits. No experience necessary. Start earning now. Samples sent on approval.

CHRISTMAS CARDS With Name 25 FOR $1 Up

WRITE FOR SAMPLES TODAY

PROCESS CORP., Troy at 21st St. DEPT. L-8 CHICAGO 23, ILLINOIS

Relieve Misery of ITCH

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, pimples—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Quiets itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D.D.D. Prescription.

WANT TO EARN MORE MONEY?

Learn SILK SCREEN PROCESS At Home. FREE big illustrated Book explains how my training enables you to start your own successful business or train for a better job in this well paid, uncrowded Advertising Field. Learn and Earn in your spare time. Course includes complete Kit of Supplies. Write TODAY.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF SCREEN PROCESS
Dept. WG97, 3740 Overland Blvd., Los Angeles 34, Calif.

YOU MAKE $25 FOR SELLING FIFTY $1.00 BOXES

50 beautiful assorted Christmas cards sell for only $1.00, your profit 50c. Write today for free samples 50 and 25 for $1.00 and other boxes on approval. It costs nothing to try. CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-5, White Plains, N. Y.

WRITE FOR SAMPLES ON APPROVAL

QUICK!

Late for a date . . . darn that spot! . . . quick the Mufti bottle! Mufti gives you not 1, but 4 tested cleaning ingredients . . . cleans so many spots from so many fabrics—cleans in a jiffy!

MUFTI • SPOT REMOVER

imagine the neighbors wondered how come the Brinkmans managed to use up so many shirts and sheets and things.

We fed her every four hours with a strictly scientific formula and Shah's a pretty big girl now. In fact, she prowls around a special run with a high steel fence at our new house (luckily on a remote hill) and scares the daylights out of everybody who comes near, although she wouldn't hurt a flea. Eventually, of course, we'll have to part with Shah. But then Jeanne wants a panda and a penguin and a fawn! So do I. Yep, we're crazy all right—but I don't know who's crazier—Jeanne or I.

Since we've been Mr. and Mrs., we've had all kinds of mutual projects going—our house, new furniture, our baby. The evenings aren't long enough to talk them all over; usually I meet Jeanne for lunch when she's shooting. Always, I pick her up when her day's done. One noon when Jeanne was making Margie, I dropped by and we drove into Beverly Hills for lunch. Jeanne came right off the set where she was playing a 15-year-old girl, circa 1925. She had on a short little dress, long black stockings, and she wore pigtails. They did something to her. I locked up the car and when I turned around, Jeannie was skipping up the sidewalk. Everybody stared.

she got carried away . . .

"Wasn't that awful?" she said later. "I forgot I was me." She was thinking she was Margie, the schoolgirl. She's that way.

Myself, I think Jeanne Crain's a pretty swell actress; she goes through the most awful agonies when she sees herself on the screen. I took her to the premiere of Leave Her To Heaven—the first Hollywood premiere of one of her pictures Jeanne had a chance to take in. She says she's not superstitious, but—well—she had a brand new dress especially made for the event. She put it on—then took it off. "Uh-uh," decided Jeanne, snatching an old one off her closet rack. "This is better." It was a familiar one to me, a white brocade hoop-skirt deal with gold thread all through it. Jeannie wore that on our first big step-out date, to a New Year's Eve party.

We went to the premiere. All the way through I saw Jeanne duck her head down in her hands and sigh dismally. "Oh, my hair, my ears—see how awful I look!" she kept muttering. She looked swell, but you couldn't tell her that.

That night, incidentally, I learned about the narrow escape we'd both had when Jeanne made Leave Her To Heaven. We weren't married then but we were both pretty definitely in love. Jeanne went off to Bass Lake in the Sierras to shoot location scenes and I didn't want her out of my sight. One day I had plans all made to fly up there and surprise her. I sent her a wire saying I was coming. Then the plane ride I'd counted on fell through. "Oh, that's perfectly all right," said Jeanne. "What a wonderful disposition." I thought at the time.

Jeanne didn't tell me the story about that, wisely, until we were married.

"Was I glad you didn't show up on location that time when you wired you would!" she said.

"Glad!" I was a little sore.

"You bet," chuckled Jeanne. "That day I had to make love to Cornel all day long—and we'd just met. That made it hard enough. But when you said you were coming to watch! It's a wonder I ever got through the scene at all."

I'm glad I didn't go now, too. I might have got so furiously jealous I'd have jumped off a cliff or something. I know more about actors and actresses now, of course. But that was one narrow escape.

Jeanne doesn't bring her picture career home with her. She's got too many other things on her mind—mostly Paul, Junior, whose every move enchants her. She'll call me at the office—breathless. "Guess what just happened," she'll say. "Baby Paul ate cereal this morning—and he's only seven weeks old!"

Jeanne's a wonderful mother. She says it's pure instinct and I think she's right. "This baby," declares Jeanne firmly, "isn't going to be raised from any book." She has a mind of her own, as I said, and when it comes to instinct, she's practically psychic.

Last Christmas we included Paul in the presents with boy's toys. "Merry Christmas," Jeanne wrote on the cards, "to our baby boy." You see, he just couldn't have been anything else with all that Brinkman confidence ticking away.

Jeanne believes a new moon brings babies. Paul came with a new moon. She knew my birthday was April 10, and thought it would be nice for Paul Junior's to be the same. She did pretty well there, too. He was born April Sixth.

Jeanne's capable in a million ways you'd never suspect. She can cook; she can paint; she plays a dreamy piano. She can work all day and get up at 4:30 to feed Paul and still look fresh as a daisy.

Jeannie's foibles are every bit as fascinating to me as her virtues, because I'm a foible man myself. Like me, Jeanne can't pass by an ice cream parlor without going in for the works. She adores to read for hours sitting in a bubble bath (now we're back on Jeanne, not me!). When she shops for clothes, she goes alone, tries on different dresses, and weeds out all but three or four. Then, when I drop past to pick her up, she tries on these again, and only buys the ones she's sure I like. She gets furious at inanimate objects, like doors or chairs or anything she happens to bump into, and tells them right off in a loud voice. She adores Mozart, Liszt and Chopin, but she'll switch them off fast if someone comes in with an ancient jazz record. If she ever has more than two dollars in her purse it's a miracle, so she's always in some minor financial jam. She thinks she's thrifty, but she's the world's worst bargainer.

shop hound jeanne . . .

We had our eye on some old captain's chairs to help furnish our new house. It's modern—both Jeanne and I love modern things—and these chairs happened to fit in perfectly. Jeanne called me at the office. "I've found the chairs," she said, "and I'm buying them."

I asked how much. "A hundred and sixty-five dollars," said Jeanne. "That's what the man wants."

I said, "Hold everything," and raced down. We got them for a hundred.

But you can't expect an actress to be a horse trader, exactly, and I like Jeanne just as she is, which is just as she was when I first saw her. That doesn't mean she's run out of surprises; there's a new one for me every day, and nicer all the time, too. The one I appreciatad most arrived last spring on that red-letter date in our lives, Easter Sunday, April Sixth.

That's when I waited at the Queen of Angels Hospital for the anxious thrill that comes once in a lifetime, the first time a mere young man becomes a father.

"Take it easy, kid," one of the other pops-to-be told me, as I began chewing my nails in the waiting room. "I've been here thirty-six hours already."

Well, when I rushed out to send wires and make phone calls just a little later, the 36-hour guy was still sitting there. That's a surprise Jeanne handed me that I'll never forget, and I'll always be grateful for. I'm not at all sure I'd have lasted thirty-six rounds.

Sell Christmas Cards

For Those EXTRA DOLLARS You Want

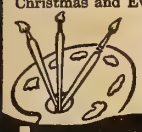
Show 5 NEW SERIES of Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, low as 50 for $1.00. Exclusive designs, big values! Your friends, neighbors order quickly from FREE samples we send you. Big cash profits easy.

50 for $1 WITH NAME

17 SMART ASSORTMENTS

Add to earnings with beautiful, "ARTISTS' AWARD" Christmas and Everyday Assortments. Pay you fine profits. Exclusive variety offers "21 Feature" Christmas Assortment, famous Matched Christmas and Everyday Gift Wrap Ensembles, Holiday Notes, Religious, Everyday, Humorous, 10 other money-makers.



Write Dept. P-10 today for Samples

JANES ART STUDIOS inc.
1225 Clifford Avenue, Rochester 5, New York

HOW ABOUT YOU?

The figures show that millions of Americans have realized this fact: there is no safer, surer way on earth to get the things you want than by buying U. S. Savings Bonds regularly.

They are the safest investment in the world. They pay you $4 for every $3 at the end of 10 years. And you can buy them automatically, almost painlessly today, through either of two plans:

If you are eligible for the Payroll Plan, for your own sake and your family's sake, get on it . . . and watch your savings mount up.

If you are not eligible for the Payroll Plan, but have a checking account, see your banker and get him to tell you about the new Bond-a-Month Plan.

SAVE THE EASY, AUTOMATIC WAY
—WITH U. S. SAVINGS BONDS

MAKE EXTRA MONEY EASY

SHOW Christmas CARDS

JUST SHOW friends our beautiful Christmas Cards. Astounding values in Name-Imprinted Christmas Folders, 50 for $1 and up. Gorgeous designs. Big money-makers. Easy to earn plenty cash taking orders.

GET FREE SAMPLE BOOK

of Artists' Reproductions . . . Oilette, Fiesta and other fast-selling $1 assortments; also Gift Wrappings and Stationery. Big money easy and quick! Send for our 21-card Christmas assortment on approval. WRITE TODAY.

FRIENDSHIP STUDIOS, INC.
732 Adams Street, ELMIRA, N. Y.

LEARN MILLINERY AT HOME

Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profitable business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.

LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 189, Chicago 1, Ill.

Please send me your FREE catalog describing your training course in professional millinery.

Print Name
Address

AH, YOUTH!

(Continued from page 62)

studio or taking a singing lesson."

"Gosh," said the girl. "What a life!"

When, a few hours later, Beverly arrived home in the Westwood apartment, her mother was in the kitchen. While Mrs. Saul vacillated between grapefruit or chocolate pie for dessert, Bev quietly tiptoed into her bedroom. Here she unwrapped a score of bundles and removed the price tags. When her mother's footsteps sounded in the hall, Bev scooped up the pile of price tags and shoved them under the rug.

"Well," said Mrs. Saul, "you've been shopping again."

Beverly grinned sheepishly. "Well, yes—but it's the first time in three months."

"Enough clothes to take care of a sorority," muttered Mrs. Saul. She picked up a cocktail dress. "This is attractive. How much did you pay for it?"

"I don't remember," said Beverly.

She spoke the truth. It was impossible to remember prices of the array of clothes strewn on the bed. When Miss Tyler sets out on a shopping tour, she goes temporarily berserk. Her conscience catches up with her on the way home, and to avoid domestic upheaval, she removes the price tags. Her parents are informed of her activities when the bills arrive in the mail, but then, of course, it's too late for anything save the monthly discussion on the value of money.

Other than this financial strain, Bev and her parents get along admirably. She considers herself fortunate to have been born to the kind of people who understand her so thoroughly. They have declined to set a curfew time for Beverly's dates, with the result that she arrives home, on her own, at sensible hours.

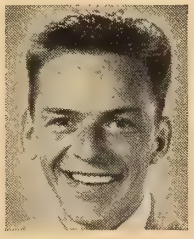
Her dates have been with a varied assortment of men, including Rory Calhoun, Mickey Rooney—and notably Tom Drake. She and Tom spend many hours in local music shops.

"You've got to hear this," says Tom. "It's a Pearl Bailey recording, and it's wonderful."

Beverly listens patiently until the record has finished and then says, "I'm sure you'd like Tchaikowsky, Tom. Listen to this concerto."

This has been going on for months, and they still haven't got together in their

I SAW IT HAPPEN



Not long ago, Frank Sinatra appeared here in Cleveland. Naturally, the audience was filled with loyal Sinatra fans. When Frank came on, they screamed and swooned so that it was impossible for the show to go on. Sinatra walked up to the mike and put his hand up. Suddenly, the auditorium was as quiet as a churchyard. All, except one little girl. She let out a terrific Frank-eeee scream. Frank looked around to see where the scream had come from. When he spotted the girl he said politely, "No solos, please. You gotta do it all together."

Donald Blaha
Cleveland, Ohio

SLICK TRICK with "SCOTCH" TAPE

MAKE re-sealing latch on envelopes for insurance policies, stamps, important papers by sticking two strips of "Scotch" Tape to envelope under flap. Then seal flap with another strip of tape, over first two, folding end back for a pull tab.

REG U.S. PAT. OFF. SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

25¢ at all drug, department, variety, stationery and hardware stores.

MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO.
THE 3M COMPANY
Saint Paul 6, Minn.

© 1947 3M CO.

EARN MONEY With Christmas Cards

Easy with gorgeous new line 25 for $1 & 25 for $1.95—name imprinted. Also big Album DeLuxe higher priced Personals. More money with Box Ass'ts—21-Card "Feature" Ass't only $1—profit up to 50c. Six other Christmas Ass'ts—plus year 'round Everyday Ass't. All big money-makers. Write for FREE Samples Personal Cards & "Feature" Box on approval.

Write FOR SAMPLES

Wallace Brown, Inc., 225 Fifth Ave.
Dept. U-79 New York 10, New York

HOLLYWOOD STUDIO STYLISTS USE Hair Mist

TO KEEP EVERY HAIR IN PLACE
NOT A LACQUER

• Hollywood stars set hair with Hair Mist. Just spray it on. Over 3½ million bottles sold. Insist on it at your beauty salon, drug or department stores.. or mail ($1.00 tax & postage paid) to 645 N. Martel Ave., Hollywood 36, Calif.

Exclusive plastic atomizer is the secret of perfect application . . allows you to spray invisible net over coiffure . . one with every bottle.

ANN MEREDITH'S
HAIR MIST

PULVEX "DDT" FLEA POWDER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Kills the fleas Quickly! Keeps others off for Days.

Either Kind 25¢ & 50¢

Pulvex also comes with ROTENONE, the original formula. BEST FOR CATS.

A NEW FACE —A NEW FUTURE!

How Plastic Surgery easily takes years off the prematurely aged face, quickly reshapes an ugly nose and corrects other facial blemishes is told and illustrated with 88 before-and-after pictures in fascinating book, YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, written by famous Plastic Surgeon. Yours, postpaid in plain wrapper—only 25¢

FRANKLIN HOUSE Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg. Philadelphia, Pa. Dept. 15-R

MAKE MONEY EASILY

Take easy, big profit orders from friends, others. Show Christmas Cards with name—6 big lines selling at 50 for $1.00 up. Amazing designs, gorgeous papers. FREE SAMPLES. Also sell $1.00 assortments of Christmas Cards, Gift Wrappings, Everyday Cards, Stationery. MAKE BIG MONEY QUICK—write today!

SOUTHERN GREETING CARD CO.
McCall Bldg., Dept. L-21, Memphis, Tenn.

Sell Name-Imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1 Also Assortments

FEET ACHE?

Try Electrosols FREE. Amazing new scientific principle. No pads, arches, or bulky insole construction. Relieves tired, aching feet, rheumatic-like leg pains, swollen ankles, backache, strain and fatigue from long hours on feet. "Amazing" writes Mrs. E. L. "Wouldn't take $20 for them," writes Mr. B. S. Electrosols are light, wafer-thin insoles. Fit all shoes comfortably. Guarantee relief without medication. Order NOW. SEND NO MONEY. Deposit only $3.98 with postman plus COD fee and postage. Or send $3.98 (check or money order) now and WE pay postage. Your money back within 30 days if relief is not instant and lasting. Rush name, address and shoe size to pat. pend.

TRICOS LABORATORIES, Inc., Dept. C
2078 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN 7, N. Y.

MAKE MONEY

SHOW SMART NEW Christmas Cards

Extra cash for you daily! Sell Christmas and Everyday Card Assortments for $1; also Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 for $1. No experience is necessary. Send today for samples on approval. Write

COLONIAL STUDIOS, Inc.
642 S. Summer St., Dept. 39-X, Holyoke, Mass.

COLOR YOUR HAIR THE MODERN WAY

Shampoo and color your hair at the same time with SHAMPO-KOLOR, quickly, easily, yourself, at home. Any shade, close to scalp. No dyed look. Will not rub off. Permits perm. wave. No experience needed. Caution: Use only as directed on label. Free Book. Valligny Prod., Inc., Dpt. 31-R. 254 W. 31 St., N.Y.

STAMMER?

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 2299, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

GET THIS FREE BOOK!

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo

FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 341, Hollywood, Calif.

musical taste. But Beverly has no objection to the disagreement, considering that it lends variety. The thing about Tom that does get her is his inability to remember things—plus his almost unfailing tardiness.

He was to have lunch one day with a studio publicist, and arranged to meet Beverly afterward. She arrived at the appointed meeting place at two o'clock and finally Tom hove into view.

"Hello," she said. "How was Dorothy?"

Tom looked blank. "Dorothy? Dorothy who?"

"You were supposed to have lunch at the studio with—"

His eyes widened. "Oh! Oh, ye gods! Excuse me a minute. I've got to get to a phone!"

And then there was the time Tom was invited to Beverly's home for dinner.

"What time shall I come?" he asked her over the phone.

"It doesn't matter," she said. "We'll have dinner about eight."

At 7:15 that evening, the doorbell rang. Beverly opened the door to find a huge box of flowers standing there, and behind the blooms, she saw Tom's right ear. His voice was breathless.

"I'm so sorry," he said. "I don't know how to apologize."

"Apologize for what?"

"Why, for being late. I'm terribly—"

"But you're not late," Bev informed him. "Dinner isn't anywhere near ready."

He peered around the flowers, disbelief written on his face. "I'm not late?" Then he grinned. "It must be the first time in my life."

The Tyler-Drake dates, with the exception of sojourns in music shops, consist for the most part in going to movies, and then ripping them afterward with criticism and praise. Beverly has great respect for Tom as an actor and, therefore, has implicit faith in his judgment where acting is concerned.

can't help singing . . .

Besides the acting end of her job, Beverly works hard with her voice which is, after all, the most important thing to her. When she was studying with Gita Alpar at the studio, Gita said that she never knew a girl who loved to sing so much, and that she often had trouble getting Beverly to leave. Things are changed now. Beverly studies with Arthur Rosenstein, who sets hourly appointments with stars who study voice. She has to leave when her time is up, and her only alternative is to go home and sing. Which, being B. Tyler, she does.

This does nothing for her mother's nervous system, as the Sauls live in a small apartment. They are currently looking for a house, whose prime requirement is a large and high-ceilinged living room, to allow space for Beverly's powerful voice to float through the room once—without bouncing back from the walls.

Once in a while, the neighbor's kids drop in for a visit, hoping that Bev will favor them with a selection. She often does because she happens to like kids. Especially, she befriends the youngsters at the studio. Beverly remembers her two years, between the ages of fourteen and sixteen, when M-G-M was preparing her for her first role, and in compliance with the rules of the Board of Education, she was always accompanied by her mother while on the lot. There were too many times when people passed them by and were too busy to speak to the small-town youngster.

Bev has a new car on order, and although anxious for its delivery, she sometimes considers the matter with considerable trepidation. Never having had a car, Beverly is on the nil side where driving is concerned and California traffic terrifies her. A year ago she learned the rudiments of driving, but only on a country road and within a space of two blocks. And then one day, she was home alone when the phone rang. It was a nurse calling from a downtown hospital, where one of Bev's dearest friends was quite ill.

"She's been asking for you, Miss Tyler. The doctor thinks if you will come down immediately, it may help."

Frantic, Bev phoned for a cab. There were none available within the next hour. The hospital was miles away, through Los Angeles' worst traffic districts, and a streetcar would take forever. Then she remembered that her parents' car was in the garage, the keys in the ignition. No, thought Beverly. I can't do it. But she did.

The drive was agonizing. She stalled at almost every stop sign and was the object of much impolite language from other drivers. By the time she arrived at the hospital she was almost paralyzed with fear. She stayed for hours, and finally the doctor suggested that she go home.

"I can't," she said.

"Why not?"

"Never mind why. Just let me stay a little longer."

Dusk arrived and when she realized darkness would cover the city within an hour, she made up her mind to leave. She had recounted the adventure to her friend, who had laughed for the first time in weeks, and hearing the hilarity from down the hall, the doctors smiled at each other. It was a good sign. They never knew how close they had come to having an additional patient.

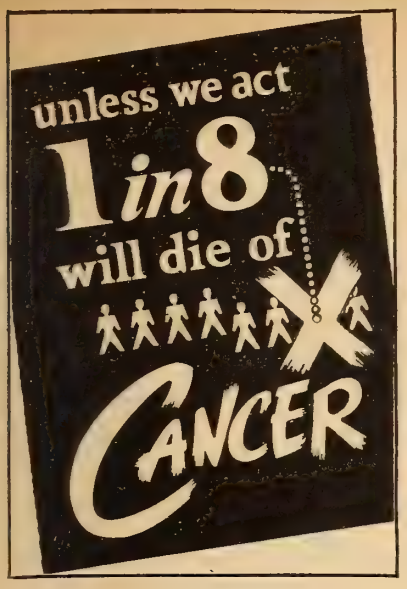
Bev and Tom occasionally get away from shop talk, such as the night in May when they went to the circus. The evening, at first, was a slight disappointment because they found that instead of seeing the circus, they were being seen at the circus. In the middle of the trapeze act, the trained seals and the man being shot from a cannon, they were approached by strangers seeking autographs. However, the best part came at the end of the show, when the ringmaster told them that the circus folk would like to see them "backstage." Tom and Bev went back to talk to the whole troupe, sitting around in their respective tents. The performers were so charmed with the young couple that they invited them to stay for dinner, between shows.

But Bev and Tom were even more excited. This was the first time either of them had been to the circus since they were kids, and now that they were grown up, they had a bond with these people, who carry on the oldest form of show business. And as anyone knows, particularly Bev and Tom, there's no business like show business.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

It happened in 1944, in the coffee shop of the Columbia Hotel in South Carolina. My brother, then in the army, and two of his buddies were just being seated when they noticed two navy lieutenants making their way to another table. My brother recognized one of the navy men as Tyrone Power, and being the bashful (?) type, he called out in his best German, "Wie gehts, mein lieutnant?" Imagine his amazement when Lt. Power turned and smilingly answered, "Sehr wohl, und sie?"

Esther Persiani
Arlington, Va.



NO ONE IS SAFE FROM CANCER

This year, 184,300 Americans will die of Cancer . . . one every three minutes.

YET . . . one in three could be saved thru early detection and prompt treatment.

PROTECT YOURSELF!
CANCER'S DANGER SIGNALS

1. Any sore that does not heal, particularly about the tongue, mouth or lips.
2. A painless lump or thickening, especially in the breast, lip or tongue.
3. Progressive change in the color or size of a wart or mole.
4. Persistent indigestion.
5. Persistent hoarseness, unexplained cough, or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Bloody discharge from the nipple or irregular bleeding from any of the natural body openings.
7. Any radical change in normal bowel habits.

GIVE to help win mankind's great war — the fight against cancer.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
47 Beaver Street
New York City

"DANA? THAT'S MY BOY!"

(Continued from page 36)

said if I was so busy that she couldn't even talk to me on the phone, how in the heck would I have time to give her an interview about Dana and that I could just do the story myself. Never argue with your mother, I always say. That's why I'm temporarily back at my former calling, slaving over a hot typewriter.

Well, let's get back to the Press Club (flashback fashion) and see what they're doing. They're drinking champagne, which was set up by Joan Crawford. Both she and Dana, who deservedly got the Golden Apples, were way down east, Joan in New York and Dana with his family in Stowe, Vermont, having the best years of his life roaring around the snow-packed hills on skis.

We'd arranged to call them and an amplifier hook-up was arranged so the Club could hear Dana and Joan accept the awards. Dana had traveled through towering snow drifts in the midst of a raging blizzard to talk to us. It was very exciting.

I'd had my eye on Dana for years, as far back as Swamp Water, The Ox-Bow Incident, even when he was an actor at the Pasadena Community Playhouse, and now I wanted him to star in my production Memory of Love. Wanting him for my picture was like wishing I'd been born with diamond-studded teeth, that I were 21 again, with Peck, Johnson, Lawford, Crosby, and, yes, Andrews, all bachelors and bombarding me with orchids, jewels, and invitations to go dancing at Mocambo. Pure stuff of dreams, all of it. Every producer in town wanted him for a picture. He's in demand, that boy.

Two months later I had a talk with the studio head, Dore Schary, and my executive producer, Jack Gross.

keep your fingers crossed . . .

Dore said, "Things look promising on the Andrews deal." It was a bright moment. I'd been going around with crossed fingers on both hands for months, hoping that would help land Dana in my picture.

"I'm seeing Dana at the Press Club luncheon today," I told Dore. (This was another luncheon.)

"Don't say anything to him yet. The contracts aren't signed," Dore said.

So when I found myself sitting next to Dana at lunch, I began obediently talking about everything but what was closest to my heart, when he said:

"By the way, Harriet, I just left Dore. I'm going to do your picture." Very casual like, he said it.

Rockets and twenty-one gun salutes started going off in my head. The 4th of July was a little early this year for me.

"Oh, did you?" I said in the same casual way. At least I think I said something. Maybe it was "What picture?" or "Who? YOU!" I wouldn't know. Oh, happy daze! Here was I, snaffling the hottest actor in Hollywood! I might as well sell my convertible because I'd be traveling on pink clouds from now on.

I came out of that roseate glow with a four-alarm alarm. Here were all these press gals and writers around. Miraculously, what went in the gals' ears didn't come out their typewriters. The story held and when the proper time came Louella (Scoop) Parsons broke it. I didn't tell her, either. I was too busy getting those crossed fingers pried apart.

When Dana and I got down to business, talking over the part (he's a young composer, blinded by an accident and very bitter) I said:

The Ideal Way to Reduce

LOSE FAT

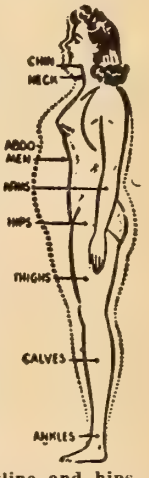
Lose Pounds Lose Inches

REDUCE

In the Privacy of Your Home

WONDER BATH

Helps you to relax while reducing. LOSE WEIGHT with this new, easy, pleasant, harmless method. No more tiring exercises, no more laxatives or drugs. No starvation diets. You just take a warm, soothing, comforting WONDER BATH, just rest and relax for 15 minutes this healthful, pleasant way. By following the WONDER BATH method, you will be amazed and delighted at the way your fat and bulges just seem to melt away. If you are normally overweight you can easily lose pounds and inches. The more you use the WONDER BATH method, the more weight you lose. This is the easy, pleasant, harmless way used by the most expensive and exclusive Reducing Salons. This is the way many New York and Hollywood stage, screen and radio people help to keep their figures slim, lovely and glamorous. You may now say goodbye to your heavy waistline and hips and those unnecessary, unsightly bulges at a trifling cost.



The WONDER BATH method is an amazing new way to reduce superfluous fatty tissues on most all parts of the body.

FREE A large size jar of Special Formula WONDER Body Cream and "FIGURE BEAUTY" will be included absolutely FREE with your order for WONDER BATH. To achieve best results, this Special Formula Body Cream should be used after each WONDER BATH.

10-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Use the WONDER BATH method for 10 days at our expense. If you are not truly delighted with your loss of weight, if you don't look and feel better—return the remaining contents and your money will be refunded in full.

ACADEMY VITA PRODUCTS CO., Dept. DM-9
Academy Building, Newark 2, N. J.

Please send me postpaid, 60-day supply of WONDER BATH and Free Special Formula WONDER Body Cream with "FIGURE BEAUTY." I enclose $5.00 cash, check or money order. If I am not 100% delighted, I may return the remaining contents within 10 days and my money will be promptly refunded.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

C.O.D. Orders. Send $1.00 deposit. Pay postman balance of $4.00 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. Same Money-Back Guarantee.

SELL LOW COST—HIGH PROFIT CHRISTMAS CARDS

Up to 100% for you. Show friends top quality 21-card $1.00 Christmas assortments. Currier & Ives, Jewel Etchtone, Oilettes, Gift Wrapping, Humorous boxes 30c up. Odd cards 2½c. Write today for FREE CATALOG and FREE SAMPLES 25 and 50 for $1.00 personals, stationery. Request special feature $1.00 assortment ON APPROVAL. Special offers. Cash bonus.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONALS

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, Box E, North Abington, Mass.

INVENTORS

Patent laws encourage the development of inventions. Our firm is registered to practice before the U. S. Patent Office. Write for further particulars as to patent protection and procedure and "Invention Record" form at once. No obligation.

McMORROW, BERMAN & DAVIDSON
Registered Patent Attorneys
290-A Victor Building, Washington 1, D. C.

High School Course at Home — Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. H614, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

FREE 24 PAGE CATALOG

STAMPED LINENS at ½ PRICE

Buy quality stamped goods direct from manufacturer—save one-half. Over 100 new items—scarves, pillow cases, tablecloths, bridge sets, towels, aprons, imported linens and novelties. Complete embroidering instructions free. It's easy. Write:

MERRIBEE ART EMBROIDERY CO.
Dept. 106 — 22 W. 21st St., New York 10, N. Y.

WE PAY YOU $25

EVERYONE BUYS CHRISTMAS CARDS

For Selling 50 $1 Assortments

YOU can cash in on this great seasonal demand.
21 CARDS—every card with hand-applied decorations.
They sell on sight. Immediate orders! You average 100% PROFIT
IT COSTS YOU NOTHING TO GET OUR SAMPLES.
START MAKING MONEY AT ONCE! WRITE TODAY!

FANMOUR PUBLISHING CORP. 21 Vandewater St., N. Y. 7, N. Y.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Use DERMOIL

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1938 LAKE LAB

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly, embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547 Northwestern Station, Dept. 9509, Detroit 4, Mich.

"Do you play the piano at all, Dana?"

"I did once," he said. "A long time ago." He looked dreamily amused.

"I was nine and mad for a little girl who was giving her first piano recital. Despite my charms, she wasn't impressed. So I told my music teacher she had to teach me a piece I'd decided on for the recital. She was very cold to the idea. According to her, it was way over my head. Well, I learned it, played it at the recital, and that's the story of my musical career to date."

I forgot momentarily, under the spell of the Andrews charm, that we weren't there to reminisce.

"You'll be able to manage this chore," I said, reading the line as if it were a flat statement, but meaning it as a question.

"Since I've been in pictures, I've learned to pole a boat in the Okefenokee Swamp, drive a team in Oregon, ride horseback in several states, tie sailor's knots—I think I can swing the piano," Dana said.

playing hookey . . .

Being a worrier, there were several new gray hairs in my head (don't tell my youthful mother) when pianist Max Rabinowitch, who was giving Dana daily lessons, told me his pupil was off for a weekend on his ketch, the "Vileehi." You know Andrews and his boats. Next to his family, he loves them best, with pictures running third. Yipe! Here he was polishing eighty feet of boat when he should be polishing the ivories.

The picture started. Dana sat down at the piano. Nobody laughed. Because that guy was doing a fine job of playing the very difficult concerto around which the story revolves. And that wasn't all. As a man who had lost his sight he had to: wear contact lenses that really blinded him, and play the piano, and speak dialogue, and come in right on both music and line cues. Sound complicated? It is. Very. I still don't know how he did it all, except that Dana is a very remarkable sort of fellow.

I watched him on the set. It wasn't an easy, gay, free, light-hearted chore. He may have been nervous, but he didn't show it.

"I can waltz, too," he flipped as he went through all the various pieces of business during rehearsal.

"Darn you, Harriet," he said to me later. "Do you realize I'm really going to have to learn this concerto?"

"Why?" I asked, as if I didn't know.

"Because all my friends are asking me to play it. And it's a beautiful piece of music and I want to learn it," he said.

He's right. It is a wonderful concerto, which brilliant young composer Leith Stevens wrote especially for Memory of Love. It's modern and melodic. Dana can hum it through from beginning to end. While we were shooting the Carnegie Hall sequence, Dana, Artur Rubinstein, Eugene Ormandy and Hoagy Carmichael formed a barber shop quartet. Their selection was the concerto. I expect there have been better quartets, but certainly none more expensive.

One of the questions often asked me, as a woman executive, is: "Do men like to work with you?" I probably will never know the real inside, but to the best of my knowledge most men don't particularly object to working with women. I have rules: Don't try to turn a business relationship with personable male stars into a social gathering; don't act coy, and never demand any concessions on account of being a woman. I guess it works.

When my favorite leading man has time to kill on the set between shots, watch out. He loves to talk. So do I. But I'm usually quite well pressed for time and don't have much opportunity for chit-chat.

Dana cornered me one day when I was bicycling between Memory of Love and I Remember Mama (plug for the picture George Stevens and I are doing). He knew I was in a hurry so he did everything he could to keep me there. All in fun, natch.

"How about a game of Klabriasch," he proposed. "If I win you stand on your head for five minutes. If I lose I'll stand on your head for five minutes." He's a joker, that boy.

In my college days at Wellesley, I was a champion at standing on my head. But I am also nobody's fool. (This is open for debate at any time.) I know when I'm beaten before I start. That tricky card game he plays is not well known, except by Dana and director William Wyler, who taught it to him. It's a diabolical form of pinochle which was invented and should only be played by Hungarians.

"Goodby now," I said. Fortunately, I had been paged and made my escape. It's always a good idea to have an out when Dana tries to trap you in a trap.

I wouldn't like to give the impression that Dana is always trying to be a card or a life-of-the-party type. That would be wrong. Fundamentally, he's well-informed, broad-minded, seriously intelligent. He's quick to grasp and help solve any problem that has to do with making a picture, production-wise or otherwise. That's why he'll be a good producer himself.

"So far, I haven't found a story I think enough of to want to produce," he says. "I don't care so much about the kind of story as I do about the quality." That's his personal crusade—and he feels the public will buy tickets to movies on any subject so long as they're good pictures. And I agree.

Those are the things I know about him as an actor. Now let's peer at him from a purely personal angle. He's home now, having a long, tall, cool one. I know, because I'm there, too. So are his wife, Mary, the kids—David, 13, Kathy, 5, and Stephen, 2. And the red Cocker, Michael, who sniffs inquisitively and seems to want to know how come I didn't bring my poodle along.

chivalry rides again . . .

David, over in the corner of the large den, said:

"Didn't I hear you on the radio when your mother was off the air?"

"Why, yes," I said, bridling prettily, "did you listen to the show?"

"Oh, just the last thirty seconds of it," he said, dampening my ego. "Buck Rogers came on after you. I turned on the radio so I wouldn't miss the beginning of it."

David had somehow managed to move across the room without seeming to and was twiddling with the dials on a complicated looking recording machine. "I'll put on a recording of the piece my Dad plays in this picture he's doing. You know he's a blind guy that plays the piano—"

"David," Mary broke in, "Miss Parsons is the producer of the picture. She knows all about it."

"Hey, kids," Dana called to Stephen and Kathy, "get out of that fireplace!" They both giggled, complied, and were piled on their father's lap within seconds.

"I fa' down," Stephen said, fingering an infinitesimal scratch on his knee. "I haf to have bandaids." The next minute he had buried himself under the pillows of the couch and was peeking out at us, grinning.

Kathy, the small, feminine, wistfully appealing spittin' image of her dad was busy drawing things on a scratch pad. Cats and clowns in fancy costumes. They're very good, too, for a five-year-old. Recognizable, and with a lot of humor.

Dana and Kathy exchanged a look of mutual adoration.

"It seems to me," Dana said, "my kids move faster than anybody's. One minute

KIDNEYS MUST REMOVE EXCESS ACIDS

Help 15 Miles of Kidney Tubes Flush Out Poisonous Waste

If you have an excess of acids in your blood, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may be over-worked. These tiny filters and tubes are working day and night to help Nature rid your system of excess acids and poisonous waste.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Kidneys may need help the same as bowels, so ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

ARE YOU PALE WEAK, TIRED

due to SIMPLE ANEMIA?

You girls and women who suffer so from simple anemia that you're pale, weak, "dragged out"—this may be due to lack of blood-iron. So try Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS—one of the best home ways to build up red blood—in such cases. Pinkham's Tablets are one of the greatest blood-iron tonics you can buy! Buy them at any drugstore. Worth trying!

Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS

FALSE TEETH

KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box.

© I. P. INC.

KLUTCH CO., Box 4787-I ELMIRA, N. Y.

UNWANTED HAIR

FOREVER with our proven method in the privacy of your own home. Send 10 cents in coin or stamps for booklet "New Beauty Awaits Within."

MAHLER'S, INC.
Dept. 36M, E. Providence 15, R.I.

Free Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.
NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan. Dept. 2366. Chicago 5

AMAZING! MAKE $25

selling 50 boxes 21 for $1 Xmas Cards. Also 50 and 25 for $1 embossed with name on. Samples on approval.

MERIT CARD CO.
70 WILLIAM ST., DEPT. A, NEWARK 2, N. J.

you don't know they're within miles. The next, they're right on top of you. We don't have a nurse now and I don't know how Mary can take it. Even so, they're the reason I'm not doing some of the things I should, like taking more active part in politics and civic affairs. I find my family practically irresistible." He was looking at Mary, the only member of his family present.

I found myself agreeing with him again. Matter of fact, it's hard not to agree with Dana.

That's the story of my first production with Dana Andrews. One of those rewarding experiences producers dream about between nightmares. So you can readily see why, when you're talking to people who have worked with him, his friends, press agents, and writers, they all get a kind of out of this world, possessive look and say, "Dana? That's my boy!"

LADY IN THE DARK— (JOHN'S SIDE)

(Continued from page 45)

tributed $45,000 to the upkeep of our home. I did twelve motion pictures and fifty two broadcasts in that time. In the last year and a half, idle times have come to me, as they do to all actors. I've been in the doldrums. I went to New York to do Laura and thought this play might be the springboard for a renewed demand for my talents in Hollywood. I quit the show when I heard that she was planning to divorce me. She wouldn't answer my letter, and I was in a turmoil, wondering what was going on. So I came home to see. The show wasn't going into New York and it had afforded me all the good I could get out of it, but yet she criticizes me for not sticking with the play.

When we lived in the little house on the hill in Benedict Canyon I could keep the place going. It cost us then about $800 per month. But since we moved into the big new house she bought in Beverly Hills it has been away beyond my means. The monthly upkeep runs about $2,000, and I don't make that kind of money. Yet when I thought it would make her happy I signed a promissory note to pay off the $20,000 I was in arrears in meeting the expenses. Then she came up with a demand that I pay my board at home when I wasn't working, even if I couldn't handle all the upkeep. I agreed to this, too. But I'm afraid I've just been playing the role of Chamberlain with the umbrella. As soon as I agree to one demand, there is another facing me.

She has become so engrossed with the subject of money lately, and seems to worry so much about it, that it has become almost a mania. Yet she has made lots of money with her pictures. In fact, she is a highly successful producer. She couldn't really ask for more success.

I am only in hopes that after she gets her divorce that she will think it over carefully, and when the year has ended, she will decide to come back to me. I pin my hopes on the knowledge that she really loves me. There was a time in the hospital when our last baby was born that she looked at me one day and said, "Pappy, I do love you so much!" and I know she meant it.

"I want to have equal custody of our children. Also I think she shouldn't insist that I meet that promissory note I signed if she is to have a divorce. I hope I can get to work again soon. I'll feel better when I am able to meet her more than half way financially."

Before and After

DO IT AT HOME IN 7 SHORT WEEKS!

These are actual photographs of Diana Parker of New York before and after taking the famous John Robert Powers Home Course, under the supervision of lovely Grace Eden. You too can acquire the poise, charm, and self-confidence of a Powers Model through figure control, make-up, hair styling—in only 7 weeks.

Edenized-Powers Girl training shows you how to make the best of yourself! Your friends will be amazed. Write today for "The Powers Way." It's free.

John Robert Powers Home Course
247 Park Avenue, Suite J-207, New York 17, New York

EASE TORTURE OF SIMPLE PILES

• Here's a single soothing medicine to speed relief from tortures of simple piles. It's amazing Pazo*. Acts at once to relieve pain and itching—soothes inflamed tissues—lubricates dry, hardened parts—helps prevent cracking and soreness—reduce swelling and check minor bleeding. The help you get is wonderful!

So, to speed relief from itching and pain of simple piles, get Pazo*. Your doctor can tell you about it. At all druggists' in tubes with perforated pile pipe for simple, thorough application—also tins and suppositories.

Pile Ointment and Suppositories.*

CORNS REMOVED BY MOSCO

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢ and 50¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.

Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

MOVIE STARS

300 HOME ADDRESSES

Also Producers, Directors, Writers, Feature Players, etc. Write direct, make sure your message is received. $1.00. LETTER GUILD, Box 71-A, Hyde Park Station, Los Angeles, Calif.

IMAGINE THIS! 5 GREAT MONEY-MAKING LINES PERSONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS

FREE SAMPLES PERSONAL STATIONERY

50 for $1 CHRISTMAS CARDS COST YOU AS LOW AS 45¢

Big line Christmas and Everyday assortments. Sell only 50c to $1.00—your profit, 25c to 55c per box. Extra bonus. Write today for free samples personal Christmas cards, stationery, and Leader 21-card Christmas, 16-card Feature All-Occasion assortments on approval. Special Offers.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 25 for $1.00 PERSONALS

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO., Dept. M236, Elmira, N. Y.

Be a Designer of Smart Fashions

Fascinating field. Originate your own distinctive clothes. Our basic training provides excellent starting point for career. Learn at home—spare time. Send for FREE booklet today.
NATIONAL SCHOOL OF DRESS DESIGN
1315 So. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2366, Chicago 5, Ill.

BE A Nurse

LEARN AT HOME

Practical nurses are needed in every community . . . doctors rely on them . . . patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 48th yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 239, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name _____
City _____ State _____ Age _____

MOVIE REVIEWS

(Continued from page 24)

There's a slight mix-up when Michael arrives in Glacier. Word has gotten around that the Kansas City Kid, a well-known gunman, is coming to town. He has been hired by Duke's rival, Plumber (Bill Goodwin) to dispose of Duke. When Michael shows up, everyone thinks he's the Kid. He can't understand the general tendency to duck into doorways when he appears on the street.

But it is Michael who rescues Duke from death at the hands of the real Kansas City Kid. Duke rewards him with a job. So far, so good. Michael now starts inquiring around for a minister's daughter and finds that Druscilla Wainwright (Jorja Curtright), the school teacher, is one . . .

Heaven only knows what will happen next!—U.A.

I WONDER WHO'S KISSING HER NOW

When Joe Howard wrote "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," motion pictures were just a gleam in some genius' eye. If you had told him that a picture would same day be made, with color and sound, based on his life, he would have put you in a straitjacket.

I don't know how much resemblance the plot bears to the actual facts but I doubt if it matters. There are lively tunes and beautiful girls and comedy and romance. There's Mark Stevens playing Joe, and June Haver as the girl who loves him from the time she's fourteen. And a couple of sirens, too.

It starts when Joe sells a song he's written to Lulu Madison (Martha Stewart), who sings at the Bowery Theater. He takes little Katie (June Haver), whom he looks on as a kid sister, along to hear Lulu sing it. Lulu is impressed by Joe's curly hair, gay smile and six feet of muscular manhood. He's just the type she's searching for to play the piano. He can even play the piano. So he gets off on tour with Lulu, leaving Katie behind in New Jersey.

Not that she stays behind long. She makes up a heart-rending story about how her uncle has died, and she's alone in the world except for Joe. He accepts the responsibility and insists on Lulu taking her along for the rest of the tour. It's an arrangement which Lulu fails to appreciate.

In the next couple of years, Katie grows up. She manages to prove to Joe that Lulu is double-crossing him, and gets him to leave and start a new act with Katie as his partner. They're doing pretty well when menace number two turns up. It's another singer—Fritzi (Lenore Aubert), who is well known to Broadway.

She too goes for curly haired composer-piano players, and this time Katie doesn't have much luck sabotaging the romance. But fortunately Fritzi knows exactly what she wants out of life, and it isn't Joe. Even then, it takes some maneuvering to prove to Joe that what he really wants is Katie.—20th-Fox

DESERT FURY

Imagine if your only trouble was having to decide between John Hodiak and Burt Lancaster! We should all have troubles like that. The girl in this predicament is Paula Haller (Lizabeth Scott), whose mother, Fritzi (Mary Astor) "runs" the desert town of Chuckawalla. Fritzi has kept her daughter safe in boarding school for years but now Paula has rebelled. She's going to stay right in Chuckawalla.

Maybe Tom Hanson (Burt Lancaster) has something to do with her decision. Tom's the sheriff. He's an ex-broncho buster who ought to try some of that technique on Paula. It's just what she needs. As it is, he's far too sweet to her, and her attention quickly wanders to big, good-looking Eddie Bendix (John Hodiak) who has just come back to town.

Three years ago Eddie left, when his wife was killed in an auto accident. Now he and his saturnine pal, Johnny (Wendell Corey) have rented a ranch near Chuckawalla. He plays roulette at the Purple Sage club which Fritzi owns, and he obviously likes the looks of Fritzi's daughter.

Paula gets plenty of warnings about Eddie. "I'm not sure that accident where his wife was killed was an accident," Tom tells her soberly. "Keep away from him, Paula."

Fritzi, used to being obeyed, says tersely "Lay off Bendix." And then is surprised when her daughter is too much like her to take orders.

Johnny warns Paula, when she comes out to the ranch. "This is no place for you, kid."

Even Eddie himself says "I'm trouble, baby. Watch out." But Paula likes trouble—or thinks she does. It takes a while for her to find out what trouble really means.—Par.

REPEAT PERFORMANCE

If you could live a year of your life over again, could you avoid making the same mistakes? Or would Destiny, and your own weakness, trap you once more?

That's the problem which actress Sheila Page (Joan Leslie) faces. 1946 ended tragically, with her shooting her husband, Barney (Louis Hayward). Suddenly a miracle happens. Instead of being New Year's, 1947, she finds herself back at New Year's, 1946, with the year to live over again. Barney is still alive. Bitter, unhappy over his failure as a playwright, drinking too much—but alive. Now if she can only keep him from the affair with Paula Costello (Virginia Field) which ruined him last year! It should be easy, since he doesn't know Paula yet.

But Sheila underrates Destiny. That very night she and Barney give a party, and a beautiful blonde girl gets off at their floor by mistake. Barney immediately invites her to come and join the party—and of course she is Paula Costello.

Sheila decides the only solution is to get him away from New York. She persuades him to go to California with her. For six weeks they lead a quiet, fairly happy life. Then John Friday (Tom Conway), Sheila's producer, arrives with a new play for her to do—by Paula Costello.

So Fate twines them in the old net once more. Sheila is busy with the play, and Barney and Paula are seen everywhere together. Sheila's best friend, William Williams (Richard Basehart), who would do anything in the world for her, is committed to an insane asylum. That happened last year, too.

Then comes a break in the pattern. Barney falls from a balcony, and injures his spine, and may never walk again. This didn't happen last year, so perhaps it means that Sheila has a chance. But Fate laughs . . .

This is a synthetic little drama, with no conviction except in the acting of Richard Basehart, an importation from Broadway.—Eagle-Lion.

I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now: Mark Stevens plays the famous songwriter, Joe Howard, and June Haver, his adopted "Sis," who chooses a hotel lobby to show him she'd make a good partner.

The top of Your Face is important, too!

Look what happens when you stop with half a make-up. In contrast to those red lips, the eyes seem a bit dull and blank, don't they? Now see what a few soft touches of Maybelline Mascara, Eyebrow Pencil and Eye Shadow can do.

With darker, longer-looking lashes . . . gracefully tapered eyebrows . . . and just a whisper of eye shadow on the lids to accentuate the color of your eyes, your entire face is more attractive.

Add Maybelline to your regular make-up today and see what a thrilling difference it makes!

NORMA CHRISTOPHER
Queen of the 1947
Tournament of Roses

MAYBELLINE CAKE MASCARA in new red and gold-tone metal vanity, $1. Refills, 50c. Shades: Black, Brown, Blue. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.)

MAYBELLINE CREAM MASCARA (applied without water) comes in handy leatherette case. $1. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.) Shades: Black and Brown.

MAYBELLINE EYEBROW PENCIL soft, smooth quality, fine point—so easy to use! Black or Brown.

MAYBELLINE EYE SHADOW in subtle shades of Blue, Brown, Blue-gray, Green, Violet, Gray.

Natural color photographs by Carlyle Blackwell, Jr., Hollywood

Maybelline

WORLD'S FAVORITE EYE MAKE-UP

ALWAYS BUY CHESTERFIELD

A Always Milder
B Better Tasting
C Cooler Smoking

The Sum Total of Smoking Pleasure

Copyright 1947, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

OCT 15¢

modern screen

©C18 97319

LIZABETH SCOTT

Joan Leslie discovers New Improved Drene

So new! Different!

The Miracle Shampoo that lets your hair Shine like the Stars!

It's new, new, new! It's a better-than-ever Drene that means shining hair for Joan Leslie . . . and for you! Truly a miracle shampoo that now lets your hair shine like the stars.

As Joan Leslie says, "It's marvelous the way new Drene keeps hair shining!" For this wonder-working shampoo now makes quicker, richer, more active lather. Brings out ALL the sheen now hidden by dulling soap film. Far more sheen—by actual test—than you get with any soap shampoo.

Drying to hair? Never! Instead, new improved Drene actually helps avoid dryness from shampooing. Yes, leaves your hair softer—smoother—far easier to set, curl, and arrange. Begin now to use this miracle shampoo of shining stars in Hollywood. Ask for new Drene today.

Joan Leslie

Star of Eagle-Lion's "REPEAT PERFORMANCE" says:

"I simply adore new Drene—it brings out more sheen in my hair than I ever believed possible!"

First Shampoo ever to bring you ALL of these Beauty Miracles

- ★ Reveals ALL the sheen in your hair
- ★ Never dries out your hair
- ★ Leaves hair far easier to manage
- ★ Marvelous hair conditioning action
- ★ Luxurious instant lather
- ★ Removes unsightly dandruff
- ★ No acid after-rinses needed
- ★ Flower-fresh fragrance

Now! Better for ALL Types of Hair

New improved Drene is at your dealer's now in the familiar blue-and-yellow package.

©C18 97319

Mrs. John A. Roosevelt attends a Hollywood première

"Before I go out— always a 1-Minute Mask!"

In a class by itself is the 1-Minute Mask Mrs. Roosevelt uses. Unlike the stiff, smothery masks of old, it's delightfully feather-light on your skin. Cool, fragrant, infinitely refreshing. And you have no twenty-minutes' wait for results! Pond's 1-Minute Mask re-styles your face in one minute!

MRS. JOHN A. ROOSEVELT, lovely wife of the youngest son of America's best-known family, has charmed West Coast society with her honey-blonde beauty. Like many distinguished young social favorites, Mrs. Roosevelt is devoted to the 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream.

"It's marvelous to have a really infallible way to brighten up your complexion at a moment's notice!" Mrs. Roosevelt says. "Right away, after a 1-Minute Mask, my skin looks finer-textured and clearer. And it feels wonderful! Smoother all over! Make-up goes on perfectly."

Have a 1-Minute Mask surely whenever you want to look your prettiest. Send to Pond's, Dept. 9-K Clinton, Connecticut, for free sample—enough for a full 1-Minute Mask!

For more glamorous evenings— this quick, easy Beauty re-make

1. Give your tired "end of the day" complexion a quick beauty re-styling! Smooth a cool white Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream over your whole face, except eyes.
2. Quick work! "Keratolytic" action of the Cream loosens and dissolves off little roughnesses that make skin look coarser-duller. After one minute, tissue off.
3. You're lovelier—all in one minute! Your skin looks lighter, clearer, more wide-awake—feels much smoother! You're ready for a wonderful evening—looking your sweetest!

A LOVELY FOUNDATION CREAM, TOO

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S

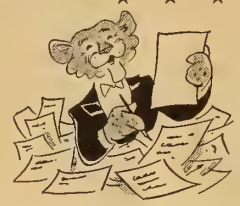
LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

Every few years we get the Ten Best craze. You know—What ten books would you like to take to a desert island? What ten films? What ten girls?

★ ★ ★ ★



The last time we had it was when "Mrs. Miniver" was released. Everybody sent in his or her ten-best list.

★ ★ ★

Now we've got it again. We've seen M-G-M's "Song of Love" and we're going to tell you about it. In turn, when you've seen it, we want you to tell us.

★ ★ ★ ★

We want you to list the TEN BEST LOVE STORIES EVER PRODUCED. And then we want to see where you classify "Song of Love".

★ ★ ★ ★

To us, "Song of Love" is the ten most exciting love stories melted into one. It's almost the story of love itself—the kind of love that sings in the heart.

★ ★ ★

Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker are in it. Katharine plays a gifted piano virtuosa; Paul and Robert are two young composers. For her ears both wrote immortal music; for her heart both would have given their lives.

★ ★ ★

M-G-M has caught the tenderness and the joy, the inspiration and the intimate details of their three-way friendship. Caught them, and set them to unforgettable music.

★ ★ ★ ★

There's a wonderful supporting cast: Leo G. Carroll, Henry Daniell, Henry Stephenson, and others.

★ ★ ★ ★

Clarence Brown, who brightened your life with "National Velvet" and "The Yearling", is both director and producer. Ivan Tors, Irmgard Von Cube, Allen Vincent and Robert Ardrey did the screenplay.

★ ★ ★ ★

You're invited to send in your list of love stories to Leo, c/o M-G-M, 1540 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. We want to hear from you—whether you include "Song of Love" or not.

★ ★ ★ ★

We think you will.

—Leo

P.S.: A few titles to get your "Song of Love" started:

A Farewell to Arms	Jane Eyre
A Guy Named Joe	Kitty Foyle
Camille	Mrs. Miniver
Cavalcade	Random Harvest
Dark Victory	Rebecca
Flesh and the Devil	San Francisco
Gaslight	Seventh Heaven
Gone With The Wind	The Philadelphia Story
It Happened One Night	White Cliffs of Dover

OCTOBER, 1947

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

ARE RUSSELL AND MADISON MARRIED? (Gail Russell-Guy Madison) by Valerie Sloan 24
LADY IN RETIREMENT (Greer Garson) by Virginia McPherson 27
MEMO ON A MADMAN (Bob Mitchum) by Christopher Kane 28
THE SINATRA SET (Frank Sinatra) by Irene Greengard 30
ON A NOTE OF TRIUMPH (Rita Hayworth) by Lola Leighter 32
"COOP" (Gary Cooper) by Hedda Hopper 34
WEEKEND AT THE LADDS (Alan Ladd) by Christopher Kane 36
MY WIFE'S HUSBAND (June Allyson-Dick Powell) by Dick Powell 40
THE CASE OF AUTRY VS. ROGERS by Carl Schroeder 42
GLENN FORD LIFE STORY (Conclusion) by Eleanor Powell 44
THE AWKWARD AGE (Peggy Ann Garner) by Keith Monroe 46
SIERRA MADRE (Humphrey Bogart) by Kirtley Baskette 48
MIRACLE ON MAIN STREET (Lizabeth Scott) by David Charnay 50
EVERYTHING HAPPENS TO JOAN (Joan Leslie) by Nancy Winslow Squire 54
DEVOTION (Susan Peters) by Howard Sharpe 56
A YOUNG MAN'S FANCY (Frank Latimore) by Virginia Wilson 58
EVERYTHING WITH A KISS (Cary Grant) by Cameron Shipp 60
VISION IN WHITE (Barbara Lawrence) by George Benjamin 62

features

GOOD NEWS by Louella Parsons 4
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty" selected by Dorothy Kilgallen 14

departments

REVIEWS by Virginia Wilson 16
INFORMATION DESK by Beverly Linet 63
BEAUTY: "Glorify Your Hair!" by Carol Carter 66
FASHION by Constance Bartel 74
FAN CLUBS by Shirley Frohlich 96
MUSIC: "Sweet And Hot" by Leonard Feather 98

COVER PORTRAIT OF LIZABETH SCOTT (Hal Wallis star) BY NICKOLAS MURAY

DESIGNED BY LESTER BEALL

Miss Scott's suede ensemble by Sills & Co. at Seidenbach's, Tulsa, Oklahoma

TOM CARLILE, western manager

SHIRLEY FROHLICH, associate editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
BEVERLY LINET, information desk
CHARLES SAXON, cartoon editor
ROMA BURTON, western editor
GUS GALE, staff photographer
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
DON ORNITZ, staff photographer
CARL SCHROEDER, editorial consultant
LAYNG MARTINE, promotion director
JEAN KINKEAD, contributing editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 35, No. 5, October, 1947. Copyright, 1947, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office, Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

They're playing that "10 BEST" game again!

Everyone's listing the Screen's Most Exciting Love Stories! Try it! It's fun!

We think SONG OF LOVE will be on your list when you've seen it! Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker are its romantic stars. It tells the story of a mad genius and the woman who gave him her love. Set to magnificent music that will sing in your heart. Many will say it's the 10 Most Exciting Love Stories rolled into one!

★ To help get your list started, here are some all-time great love stories from M-G-M:

"THE GREAT ZIEGFELD"

"SAN FRANCISCO"

"GONE WITH THE WIND"

"THE PHILADELPHIA STORY"

"MRS. MINIVER"

"RANDOM HARVEST"

"A GUY NAMED JOE"

"WHITE CLIFFS OF DOVER"

"GASLIGHT"

Yes! We could go on . . . but you get the idea! Get up your list of 10 favorite Love Stories . . . and send it to M-G-M, 1540 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. We want to hear from you!

M-G-M presents

KATHARINE HEPBURN · PAUL HENREID · ROBERT WALKER

Song of Love

A CLARENCE BROWN PRODUCTION with LEO G. CARROLL • HENRY DANIELL • HENRY STEPHENSON

Screen Play by IVAN TORS, IRMGARD VON CUBE & ALLEN VINCENT & ROBERT ARDREY • Produced and Directed by CLARENCE BROWN A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

At the premiere of Arthur Rank's British import, Black Narcissus, Dinah Shore and George Montgomery ("expecting" in December) teased the Edgar Bergens about Ed's amorous mortician role in I Remember Mama.

John Payne and Glo De Haven were squelching divorce rumors again at the Narcissus opening. Most effective "squelcher" was the pair of diamond-and-pearl earrings Glo is wearing—a birthday gift from John.

After the premiere, invited guests, including Cornel and Pat Wilde, reassembled at the Chanteclair Restaurant, to honor producer Rank. Soon after, the Wildes separated—"for reasons beyond their control."

The star of Black Narcissus, Deborah Kerr, and her husband, Tony Barfley, sat with the Bill Doziers (Joan Fontaine). Joan has asked a mere $350,000 to make Victoria Grandolet, but Mike Curtis said "no."

louella parsons' good news

■ The plight of Judy Garland has deeply touched the heart of Hollywood, where many tragedies occur, but few as sad as her story, which seems so unnecessary.

Only yesterday, she was a little girl singing and dancing up the ladder of fame with Mickey Rooney.

Today, she is fighting desperately to get back her health and happiness—a victim of the sleeping pill habit, caused by nerve-racking insomnia.

Judy has never been a physically strong girl and the endless "white nights" proved too much for her. She completed The Pirate with Gene Kelly, and then collapsed.

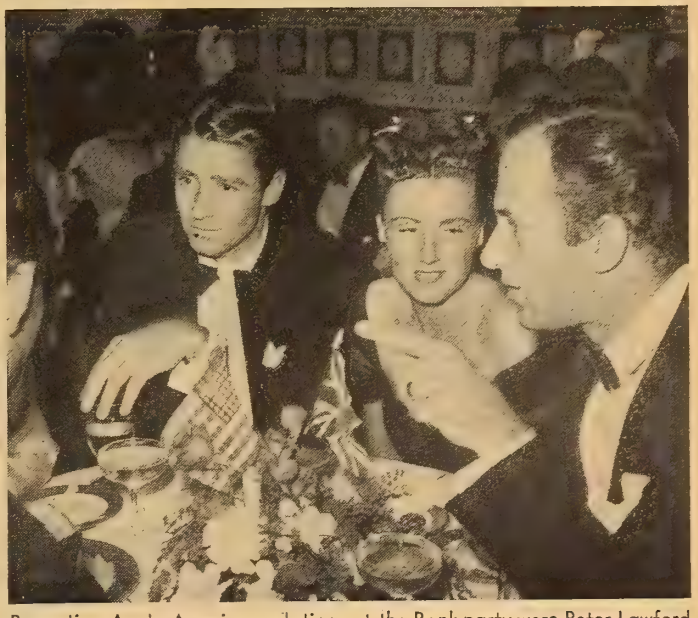
From the beginning of that picture, the Evie and Van Johnson, who rarely miss an opening, arrived early. Sentimentalists, they're already planning to postpone the birth of their baby (by Caesarian) until January 25, their wedding anniversary.

The Walter Wangers came "en famille"—permitting our photogs a rare shot of the beautiful Bennett daughters—Melinda and Diana. Didja know it was Joan who started the craze for diamond-studded glasses?

It's Durante, the well-dressed man, who lures all the gals. That's Marjorie Little on the left (gossips say she'll be Mrs. Jimmy), and the gorgeous distractions are Janet Blair and Esther Williams.



Promoting Anglo-American relations at the Rank party were Peter Lawford (who split his toe playing tennis), Jean Coyne, and Keenan Wynn. Keenan's enthusiastic about playing Porthos in the new version of Three Musketeers.

people working with her knew something was wrong. She had spells that lasted from five minutes to an hour. The climax came with an overdose of sleeping tablets—not intentional, but in a heartbreaking struggle for rest and sleep.

For awhile, it was believed that Judy might not make another picture, ever again. But reports are so encouraging no one still believes that.

Vincente Minnelli, her director-husband, has been a lamb throughout her trouble. He told me, personally, the only rifts they had ever had were due to her poor health.

Now everyone is hoping that when she is completely well it will solve her marriage problems, and that Judy, Vince and the baby will be happy together.

Get well soon, Judy. We're pulling for you with strings straight from the heart.

* * *

The same month that brings sad news about one former child actress, brings glad news about another. Shirley Temple is going to have a baby!

If you happen to be over twenty-five, this may make your bones creak. But it is the most wonderful thing in the world to Shirley and that good-looking young husband of hers, John Agar.

I'm delighted for the youngsters—but I'm still wondering why, just a few weeks before the Agars made the news official—Shirley's mother almost hit the ceiling when I asked her if it were true.

Mrs. Temple said it was absolutely false, that Shirley had a very full picture-making schedule, and that the Stork wasn't anywhere in the plans. The next time I think I'll believe my pipeline, which was certainly correct in this case. But I'm not fussing. I'm too happy for Shirley.

She is already at work knitting pink and blue things. She says she wants the very first things her baby wears to be made by herself. The nursery will be pink AND blue, which certainly takes care of the boy (?)-girl (?) problem.

louella parsons' Good news

Virginia Mayo and Michael O'Shea were married on July 5, at the Little Church of the Flowers. Virginia's gown was grey chiffon over pink satin.

Following the reception for a few intimate friends, the newlyweds spent a one-day honeymoon in their remodelled home in the San Fernando Valley.

Here, old friends Cathy O'Donnell and Farley Granger propose a toast as Virginia's mother (Martha Jones) smiles approval. The bridal couple met four years ago while working together in Jack London.

The girl in Mark Stevens' life is loudly rumored as Hedy Lamarr.

Ever since Mark separated from his wife he has had eyes only for Hedy, and I'm telling you, this news-some two-some is more serious than most people think.

Hedy's divorce from John Loder is very recent, too, which is probably the best reason Hedy and Mark tried to be so secretive about their dates. For awhile they patronized only the quietest corners in the quietest beach cafés.

I hope, if Hedy is really in love with Mark, that this will be the solution to the blue funk she's been in for the past year.

If ever there was an unhappy glamor girl, it was Hedy. She couldn't seem to snap out of feeling sorry for herself or thinking that her troubles were the woes of the world.

Maybe Mark will change all that. She's too beautiful, and has too many things to be thankful for, to be on the verge of melancholia.

* * *

All right, so I'm a traitor to my sex. Men host the best parties! I don't know what the secret is, but everytime I've attended a Hollywood party given by men, it's been a whale of a fun night.

History repeated itself in a recent grand affair tossed by two gentlemen of distinction, Fefi Ferri, the well known agent and man about the world, and "Prince" Mike Romanoff, who gets around a bit, himself.

At one time, Fefi owned the Monte Carlo Casino, so he should know how to stage a good party. He furnished the birthday, and Mike furnished the house and adjoining tent.

I sat at the same table with Lizabeth Scott, more familiarly known as Liz, and I was amazed at the change in her. She glittered and sparkled conversationally and sartorially.

When she first landed here, she was so frightened, so jittery and so nervous I thought we would both have a nervous breakdown before I could get an interview out of her. But success has brought Liz poise and a nice salty humor. (She knows some cute stories!)

Cary Grant came along, which seems to be a good old habit with him, lately. Why am I saying "good"? When a man is as attractive as Cary, this is a bad habit.

Mrs. Darryl Zanuck (Continued on page 8) maddening kisses-stopping her cries-stopping her breath!

Too much between them for anger!
Too much between them for love!
Emotion as violent as the era that spawned them!

The pages of a best-seller pour their violence and excitement onto the screen!

The Foxes of Harrow

20th CENTURY-FOX

Starring REX HARRISON · MAUREEN O'HARA

with RICHARD HAYDN · VANESSA BROWN · VICTOR McLAGLEN · PATRICIA MEDINA

GENE LOCKHART · CHARLES IRWIN · HUGO HAAS · DENNIS HOEY

Directed by JOHN M. STAHL · Produced by WILLIAM A. BACHER · Screen Play by Wanda Tuchock Based on the Novel by Frank Yerby

I Hate Wimmin!

WISH I HATED 'EM! THEN THIS FREEZE-OUT YOUR SISTER'S HANDING ME WOULDN'T HIT ME SO HARD!
I'M IN BAD WITH SIS, TOO. SHE WANTS YOU TO SEE YOUR DENTIST ABOUT BAD BREATH. BUT WHEN I SAID I'D TELL YOU— SHE JUMPED ALL OVER ME!
TO COMBAT BAD BREATH, I RECOMMEND COLGATE DENTAL CREAM! FOR SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE THAT IN 7 OUT OF 10 CASES, COLGATE'S INSTANTLY STOPS BAD BREATH THAT ORIGINATES IN THE MOUTH!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

louella parsons' Good news

Red Skelton and Ed Gardner took cover after doing their bit at Music For The Wounded Benefit at Hollywood Bowl.

Jimmy Durante, Ed Gardner, Frank Sinatra and Danny Kaye joined the veterans on the sidelines after the Bowl benefit.

had a dress out of this world—black lace, very tight fitting, sort of like the dresses worn by our grandmothers—and underneath she wore tight fitting pantalettes trimmed with green ribbons. The bodice was laced with tiny green ribbons—the whole effect cuter than the proverbial bug's ear.

It was a night for the Rex Harrisons to be unusually gay. Sometimes, they seem to sit in corners without mixing in much——but this wasn't such an occasion. Rex told me he was in the mood to celebrate because he had just finished Foxes of Harrow and he and Lilli would soon be heading for England and home, where he will make Escape.

What is Norma Shearer's secret formula for staying young and beautiful? It's a shame she can't make up her mind to return to the screen. She was wearing a gown with what looked like a gingham bodice. On her it looked good—but I can't imagine anyone else wearing it.

That fascinatin' Frenchman, Louis Jourdan, was the center of attraction. If I may be so bold, and I shall be so bold, I would say he is our next big star.

His boss, David Selznick, was in an animated conversation with his estranged wife, Irene. I noticed Jennifer Jones was not there.

Two ladies huddling all evening were Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks and Mrs. Van Johnson—both expectant mothers. Van is so happy and adoring these days. I used to think parties bored him, but he really seems to have a good time now with Evie by his side.

Immediately after dinner Lana Turner said, "I've got to go home. I'm working, and I have to get eight hours' sleep." I can well remember when Lana didn't feel that way—but Tyrone Power has certainly changed my little Lana. She is really in love and "minds" Ty with her heart in her eyes. For a girl who used to be so thoroughly independent with her beaux, Lana is a revelation. I'm betting strong on this romance to end in marriage when Tyrone is free.

I came home with the Sam Goldwyns and showed them my new projection room. It was completely dark getting there—but Sam was a good sport. He was very interested in our new set-up for seeing pictures to tell you fans about.

* * *

Don't let anybody kid you that Joan Crawford will ever forgive Don "Red" Barry, the cowboy star, for loading her down with gifts of diamonds and furs—most of them unpaid for.

Soon after I broke my exclusive story about this romantic (Continued on page 10)

WARNER BROS. PRESENTS

America's Most Beloved Comedy

Clarence Day's

LIFE WITH FATHER

ON THE SCREEN IN TECHNICOLOR!

starring

WILLIAM POWELL ★ IRENE DUNNE

with

ELIZABETH TAYLOR

EDMUND GWENN · ZASU PITTS

Directed by

MICHAEL CURTIZ

From the original play by

HOWARD LINDSAY & RUSSEL CROUSE

Screen Play by Donald Ogden Stewart

From Oscar Serlin's Stage Production

Music by Max Steiner

Produced by

ROBERT BUCKNER

WB

A Feminine Weapon

In emergency, DeLong Bob Pins have been used as letter-openers . . . door keys . . . paper clips—but that's not why women buy so many of them. Smart women who pride themselves on being value-conscious and well-groomed, know there's nothing like the DeLong Bob Pin, with its Stronger Grip, for keeping your hair-do neat from morning 'til night . . . They've learned that it's foolish to buy poorly made bob pins that slip out, when they can get the extra-strong, extra-snappy DeLong product everywhere. Just remember—

Stronger Grip

Won't Slip Out

Quality Manufacturers for Over 50 Years

BOB PINS HAIR PINS SAFETY PINS
HOOKS & EYES HOOK & EYE TAPES
SNAPS PINS SANITARY BELTS

Errol Flynn (here at Ciro's with wife Nora) may have to undergo a foot operation as a result of a tennis accident. When he's on his feet again, he'll build a hotel in Jamaica, West Indies.

louella parsons' Good news debacle, another commentator aired the "news" that this romance was still on. Nonsense.

It was too humiliating an experience for a girl of Joan's prestige for her to easily forgive and forget. I take my hat off to Joan, though, for refusing to be the "fall girl" and for returning the gifts to the merchants to whom they belonged.

Joan told me, "Later I decided I wanted some of them, and decided to buy and pay for them myself!"

I bet one she got back for herself is that beautiful diamond necklace.

* * *

Everybody went summer-theater nutz this year.

Little theaters, with ocean splashing through the dialogue, sprang up like freckles in Laguna, La Jolla and other vacation spots.

Gregory Peck had his sleeves rolled up most of the summer launching his pride and pet, the La Jolla Playhouse. It didn't bother him in the least that an audience of ice-cream-cone eaters usually had their heads stuck backstage during rehearsals.

Greg didn't happen to direct Dear Ruth—but it was a big hit with Diana Lynn and Guy Madison. Guy is much improved over his last summer's stock performances.

* * *

Close-up of Linda Darnell: She bruises easily. Heroes, kissing her in love scenes, have to be careful . . . Her last movie Forever Amber is not her favorite role. Her first, Hotel For Women is . . . She has a brunette, dusky personality but prefers herself as a blonde . . . She talks her native Texas out of a face by Rubens . . . She sounds off and pops off and loves a hot argument . . . Her studio pals are not the other stars. Usually her dressing room is crowded during lunch time with hairdressers, prop boys, electricians and wardrobe women airing the latest studio "gripes" . . . She thinks her husband, Pev Marley, has one of the most interesting male faces she has ever seen, and is constantly sketching him. She's an uncommonly good artist . . . She used to have an inferiority complex. But not anymore—she's a queen now and she knows it . . . She puts on weight if she is caught in the same room with a piece of pastry. But taking off weight too fast made her very ill . . . Her pet of all pets was a chicken named "Weedy." Weedy had the run of the house until she died . . . When she reconciled with Pev after a six months' separation, she swore they would never be parted again. But when vacation time rolled around and he was working on another movie, Linda took off for Europe, alone . . . She's a postcard sender and marks the spots in hotels where her room is . . . She's also a gum-chewer, a Coke drinker, a foot tapper, a doodler and an all around swell gal.

* * *

British movie magnate, J. Arthur Rank, may be Hollywood's (Continued on page 12)

OH-OH-OH WHAT A GAL!

What a Man! What a Musical! What a Mix-up!

...When two hungry showfolks get a seven billion dollar bite on the U.S. Mint...and can't let go of it!

RKO PRESENTS

EDDIE CANTOR · JOAN DAVIS in

"If you knew Susie"

with ALLYN JOSLYN

CHARLES DINGLE · BOBBY DRISCOLL

Produced by EDDIE CANTOR · Directed by GORDON M. DOUGLAS Original Screen Play by Warren Wilson and Oscar Brodney

Hear these Song Hits!

"If You Knew Susie"
"What Do I Want with Money"
"We're Living the Life We Love"
"My, How the Time Goes By"
"My Brooklyn Love Song"

RKO RADIO

VIRGINIA
MAYO
What a heavenly body... coming to you...
OUT OF THE BLUE
Eagle-Lion Films presents
GEORGE BRENT • VIRGINIA MAYO
TURHAN BEY • ANN DVORAK
CAROLE LANDIS in VERA CASPARY'S
"OUT OF THE BLUE"
with ELIZABETH PATTERSON • JULIA DEAN • RICHARD LANE • CHARLIE SMITH
Produced by Isadore G. Goldsmith • Directed by Leigh Jason
BRYAN FOY in Charge of Production

louella parsons' Good news

Laurence Olivier, with his hair dyed for Hamlet, leaves Buckingham Palace with wife, Vivien Leigh, immediately after he was knighted by the king.

"It's MODERN SCREEN's Fan Club Trophy—and it's ours!" Kathryn Smith explained proudly to her honorary, Nelson Eddy, at the Fan Convention.

greatest movie competition, but you would never have guessed it the way the red carpet was rolled out for him.

He even got in on a typical Hollywood premiere—for one of his own pictures, Black Narcissus. It's a beautiful picture, but I don't care for the theme.

Be that as it may—after the big affair at the theatre, Hollywood, en masse, moved on to the Chanteclair, the new night spot on the famous Sunset Strip, where the Ranks were guests of honor.

Roz Russell not only looked lovely in rose colored chiffon, but she was one of the lucky ones who was able to get a choice seat. There were more guests than the Chanteclair or any other average café could possibly accommodate—and it was something to see the top stars waiting around for a place to sit!

Deborah Kerr, the British beauty J. Arthur would give his eyeteeth to get back, was the only woman at the Rank table. Which put no one's nose out of joint because she's the star of Black Narcissus. She's also a charming person. Deborah told me she had changed her mind about going back to England to await the birth of her baby. Of course, at the last minute, she may change her mind again. Her husband is the only son of Lord Bartley, and family pressure may prove too strong.

Ida Lupino, who is expected to marry Collier Young, Warner literary editor, as soon as his divorce is final, was with him, natch. Ida is one of the most vivacious actresses in town and I think she's getting better looking all the time. A few nights previous, I had seen Ida and Collier at this same place, chatting affably with her ex, Louis Hayward, and Louis' new wife, Peggy.

Greer Garson made just a brief appearance with her flame red hair because she was leaving immediately for Pebble Beach where she has her summer home. It seems pretty definite now that Greer and Richard Ney will not reconcile. Several times he's gone with her to Pebble Beach, but these trips never seemed to help.

Claudette Colbert came with the William Goetzes—who were the host and hostess of the party. It was almost Claudette's swan

(Continued on page 83)

HEAVEN

SO GREAT... SO HAPPY... IT'S Heaven!

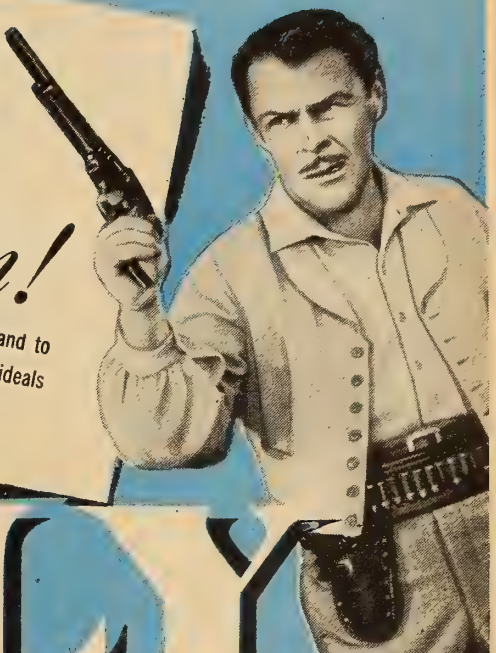
Your heart will glow to the wonder of this story . . . and to "Mr. Mike"—that wonderful man with the heavenly ideals . . . but some very down-to-earth ideas!



ONLY

Seymour Nebenzal presents

ROBERT CUMMINGS · BRIAN DONLEVY

in

"Heaven Only Knows"

with

MARJORIE REYNOLDS and Bill Goodwin • Edgar Kennedy
Stuart Erwin • John Litel

Screenplay by Art Arthur and Rowland Leigh

and JORJA CURTRIGHT

Produced by SEYMOUR NEBENZAL • Directed by ALBERT S. ROGELL • Released thru UNITED ARTISTS

THE PICTURE WITH AN EXTRA SOMETHING!
...SOMETHING THAT WILL MAKE YOU FEEL GOOD ALL OVER—ESPECIALLY AROUND YOUR HEART!

KNOWS

Danny, as Walter Mitty, dreams he's a dashing sea-captain.

In another sequence, he's Maestro Mitty, a great musician.

Here he imagines himself as Kit Mitty, hero of the Wild West.

A quick flight of fancy, and he's a French hat-designer.

dorothy kilgallen selects "the secret life of walter mitty"

■ Samuel Goldwyn, an extraordinarily talented fellow with a length of Technicolor, has taken a sad, funny, wistful, satiric little story of James Thurber's, pumped it full of lavish blondes, additional scenes, orchestrations, expensive sets and Danny Kaye, and achieved a veritable confection in the department of screen musicals. This is The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, and while, unquestionably, it is somewhat more rococo than what Mr. Thurber had in mind when he wrote the innocent tale of a Milquetoast with bravura dreams, it is nevertheless a dazzling bonanza for moviegoers, and in its expanded and bedizened form, a perfect showcase for the Kaye versatility.

It gives the star an opportunity to play around with characterizations of a terribly brave, frightfully casual RAF ace, a genius of a surgeon, a dauntless sea-captain, a hard-riding, hard-fighting, fast-shooting cowboy and a gallant, nerveless Mississippi gambler—and yet remain Walter Mitty, timid and meek as an Easter bunny. The male creature who goes through life on tiptoe is, I suspect, the favorite character of Danny Kaye.

Virginia Mayo, who looks like a great big peach ice cream soda with whipped cream, and seems to have been destined at birth to appear in Technicolor pictures, is becoming to Danny Kaye what Dorothy Lamour is to Bob Hope—a trademark, and indispensable. So, naturally, she is the girl of Walter (Continued on page 116)

TORRENTS OF EXCITEMENT
ROARING OUT OF THIS VALLEY OF VIOLENCE!!
A kiss from a stranger led to strange dangers! Here's adventure to thrill ---and love to enthrall!
IDA LUPINO
DEEP IN LOVE!
DANE CLARK
DEEPER IN DANGER!
WAYNE MORRIS
BORN FOR VENGEANCE!
Warner Bros. Present
"DEEP VALLEY"
WITH FAY BAINTER • HENRY HULL
DIRECTED BY JEAN NEGULESCO
PRODUCED BY HENRY BLANKE
SCREEN PLAY BY SALKA VIERTEL AND STEPHEN MOREHOUSE AVERY FROM THE NOVEL BY DAN TOTHEROH • MUSIC BY MAX STEINER

High school graduate Betty Grable first meets song-and-dance man Dan Dailey when she attends a San Francisco show with girl friends Anabel Shaw and Vanessa Brown. On a dare she takes a job with the show.

In time, Betty becomes Dan's partner and wife. Daughter Connie Marshall is proud of her folks, but Mona Freeman is ashamed of their vaudeville background—for she's fallen in love with a society boy.

movie reviews

by Virginia Wilson

MOTHER WORE TIGHTS

At least one Betty Grable musical in Technicolor should be buried in a cornerstone of our civilization. And if that's going to be done, my vote goes to Mother Wore Tights. Its gay good humor and easy melodies are a perfect example of America's favorite type of entertainment.

Its heroine is Myrtle McKinley (Betty Grable), who graduates from Oakland High School in 1900. Myrtle plays the dancing lead in the school musical, and exposes a good two inches of leg doing it. Grandma (Sara Allgood), with whom she lives, is considerably shocked, but Grandpa (George Cleveland) is heard to mutter something about "them that has 'em shows 'em."

Myrtle is supposed to go to business school after graduation. Instead, she gets a job as chorine in a San Francisco revue house. One of the performers on the same bill is Frank Burt (Dan Dailey). It doesn't take Myrtle long to decide that she is going to be Mrs. Frank Burt, but it does take her quite a while to sell Frank the same idea.

The average male, exposed to those gams, and love besides, would have leaped at the chance. Not Frank. He's been around a long while, and he isn't planning on getting married, hardly at all. He even lets Myrtle go off to Los Angeles without admitting he's in love with her. But she weakens and comes back, and before he can remember not to show how glad he is to see her, they're married.

Myrtle retires to have a couple of babies—Iris and Mikie. She has no intention of going back on the stage. But Frank needs a partner, and Grandma has some caustic things to say about any wife who would let her husband tour the country with a peroxide blonde. So the old team of Burt and McKinley return to vaudeville, with the McKinley legs in their blue sequin tights more beautiful than ever.

It isn't until Iris (Mona Freeman) and Mikie (Connie Marshall) are growing up that Myrtle realizes the problems created by a mother who wears tights.—20th-Fox

"Be Lovelier Tonight!"

JUNE HAVER

star of 20th Century-Fox's technicolor picture
"SUMMER LIGHTNING"

"You try my Beauty Facials—they give skin fresh new Loveliness!" says this famous star

"Before your big date, treat your skin to a gentle Lux Soap facial," says charming June Haver. "Just work the fragrant Active lather well in. Then rinse with warm water, splash with cold. As you pat gently with a soft towel to dry, skin takes on fresh new beauty!"

Don't let neglect cheat you of Romance! June Haver's beauty care will make you lovelier tonight!

In recent tests of Lux Toilet Soap facials by skin specialists actually 3 out of 4 complexions improved in a short time!

Another fine LEVER product

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use it—

—that Always-Fresh look says JANET LEIGH, co-starring with Van Johnson in "ROMANCE OF ROSY RIDGE" a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture

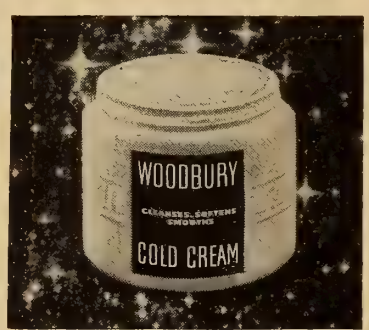
"My beauty-glow cleansing

"For skin that's fresh-lovely, silken-soft... try my clean, clean cleansing... with Woodbury Cold Cream! Smooth it on... and quick, your skin glows beauty-clean!" Woodbury contains rich oils! It's really deep-cleansing... frees skin of clogging make-up. Girls, it's Woodbury Cold Cream... for that "Always-Fresh" look!



Janet's glamour hits a high! "Woodbury is my fresh-up magic! It's rich cleansing smooths my studio-dry skin... brings back fresh sparkle!" Yes, Woodbury's four special softening ingredients smooth skin wondrously. Right! For satin-glow skin... try Woodbury Cold Cream.

—with Woodbury Cold Cream"

WOODBURY CREAMS FOR PROBLEM SKINS

DRY SKIN. First, cleanse with WOODBURY COLD CREAM. Soften with WOODBURY Special DRY SKIN CREAM — rich in lanolin's beautifying benefits. Skin looks dewy-fresh, younger!

OILY SKIN. Cleanse with WOODBURY Liquefying CLEANSING CREAM. It melts — takes off surface oils, grime, for clearer skin!

Deep Valley: Lonely, neurotic Ida Lupino falls in love with an escaped killer, Dane Clark.

DEEP VALLEY

How much you like Deep Valley will depend upon how believable you find the two main characters, played with somber conviction by Ida Lupino and Dane Clark. The theme is tragic, the story suspenseful. Libby Saul (Ida Lupino) is a strange girl in strange surroundings. She lives with her mother (Fay Bainter) and her father (Henry Hull) in an out-of-the-way cabin in the California mountains. Mr. and Mrs. Saul haven't spoken to each other for years. Libby, as the go-between of bitterness, has developed a psychotic stammer, a terror of people, and a love for the deep and silent woods.

A new coastal highway is under construction now, not far from the Saul cabin. Jeff Backer (Wayne Morris) is in charge, and one of the convicts working on the project is Barry Burnett (Dane Clark). Jeff meets Libby and finds the frightened, neurotic girl curiously attractive. Libby has no interest in him, but she is fascinated by Barry whom she has seen just once. The unhappiness and rebellion on his face strike an answering note in her own heart.

When she hears that Barry has escaped from the camp, she is secretly glad. And when they meet in the dim, shadowed woods, she is not afraid, although she knows he is supposed to be a killer. He is suspicious of her offer to help him until he learns what her own life has been like. Then, quite suddenly, he knows that he loves her—loves her as part of himself. Libby, happy for the first time in her life, loses her stammer. They begin plans for their future.

The first thing is to get Barry some other clothes, then get him away over the mountains. Even now, a sheriff's posse is searching the woods, but Libby is sure she can hide him temporarily in her father's barn. It is only his violence she is afraid of—not against her, but against what threatens their happiness. He has killed once. Driven to the wall, he will kill again. And Barry, even as he promises her he is through with violence, knows in his heart that he cannot keep that promise.—War.

BODY AND SOUL

You've seen "punchy" prizefighters, haven't you? Stumble-bums, they call them when they've reached that stage, and they aren't very pretty. Here's the story of a fighter who comes close to ending just that way.

When Charley Davis (John Garfield) is just a big-muscled kid, he wins a fight in a lower east side political club. He meets a girl that same night named Peg (Lilli Palmer). A nice girl. That should have been a good omen, but things happen in a funny way sometimes. Especially to guys like Charley, who let other people do their thinking for them.

He hooks up with a small promoter, Quinn (William Conrad). Anything to get in the fight racket. Anything to make money. Charley wants money for his mother (Anne Revere), but she'd rather see him dead than a fighter. He wants money for Peg, but she cares only for him, not money. He wants money for himself, but when he gets it through "fixed" fights, he doesn't like himself any more.

Still he goes on. Lets Quinn decide things for him. After Quinn, a big-time promoter named Roberts (Lloyd Goff). Same kind of deal. Bigger fights, bigger box-office, but about the same average of fixes. Only now they're coming Charley's way, because he is the Champ. He has a new girl—a Broadway type. Alice (Hazel Brooks) tells him he's terrific, and yells "Kill him, Charley!" at the ringside during the fights.

Peg never yelled "Kill him, Charley!" She used to bury her face in her hands. What kind of girl was that for a fighter? He's lucky to be rid of her. Only he can't forget her. There are other people, too, whom he can't forget. Shorty (Joseph Pevney) who was his best friend. It wasn't Charley's fault if the guy got run over by a truck one night, was it? Just because he was mad at Charley, and wasn't looking where he was going?

Then there's Ben (Canada Lee), who got hurt in a fight. Hurt bad—at Robert's orders. Ben's going to die soon, but what the hell, everybody's got to die sometime. Haven't they? If only Charley could go back and talk things over with Peg. If only she would understand.—U.A.

Body and Soul: Canada Lee can't talk money-mad John Garfield into quitting the ring.

That's a bright girl! You'll never let it be said that fun and romance pass you by because you fail to guard your charm . . . because you didn't stay nice to be near.

Remember, your bath takes care of past perspiration—but Mum prevents risk of future underarm odor.

Be a safety-first girl with

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safe for charm . Mum checks perspiration odor, keeps underarms dainty all day or evening.

Mum safe for skin — No irritating crystals. Snow-white Mum is gentle, harmless to skin.

Mum safe for clothes — No harsh ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

Joan Bennett tells how to Encourage Love

"First move toward romance," says Joan Bennett, "he holds your hand. Is it a nice soft hand – very feminine? Then he's thrilled – and encouraged. Such sweet, soft hands are no problem for you with Jergens Lotion hand care."

JOAN BENNETT STARRING IN THE DIANA PRODUCTION
"SECRET BEYOND THE DOOR"—A UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL RELEASE

Two guesses —what hand care does Joan Bennett use? Of course... she's sure of darling hands—she uses Jergens Lotion.

And the other Stars —7 to 1, they, too, use Jergens Lotion hand care.

You, too —be happy with even softer, smoother hands today. Lovely! Jergens Lotion is finer than ever now, thanks to recent research. More protective, too. Contains two ingredients, so tops for skin-care that many doctors use them. 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax) for this even-finer hand care. No oiliness; no stickiness.

For the softest, love-inviting Hands, use

JERGENS LOTION

Free:
Try-it Bottle of this finer hand care the Stars use.

Mail coupon now to Box 27, Cincinnati 14, Ohio
(Paste on penny postcard if you wish.)

211

*Your Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(Please print name, address, plainly . . . Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only.)

Something in the Wind: Donald O'Connor murders a song for disc jockey Deanna Durbin.

SOMETHING IN THE WIND

If you could get paid a million dollars to stop doing something you weren't doing anyway, would you take it? That sounds a little confused. Maybe I'd better explain.

Here's Mary Collins (Deanna Durbin), a girl disc jockey, minding her own business and earning an honest living. Arrives Donald Read (John Dall), a very stuffy young man, who thinks she's had an affair with his millionaire Uncle Henry, now deceased, and wants to keep her from suing the estate. As if Mary would have an affair with anyone's Uncle Henry! Of course she hotly denies the whole thing.

But the Read family are hard to convince. They make it a policy to think the worst of everyone, especially people who are likely to cost them money. And someone named Mary Collins was definitely the love of Uncle Henry's life.

Young Charley Read (Donald O'Connor) isn't a bad guy. He takes Mary aside and tells her it might teach the family a lesson if she took them over for a million or so. Also, it would be nice if she broke up Donald's dull romance with a gal named Clarissa (Helena Carter) whom Charley would like to marry himself.

Mary thinks it over. It would be amusing to unstuff the stuffy Donald. So she inveigles him to a fashion show where she manages to give everyone, including Clarissa, the impression he is buying her a complete and expensive wardrobe. She sings love songs to him. She even kisses him. By the time she gets through, not only is Donald in love with her, but she is in love with Donald. That's the kind of thing that can happen to a girl if she doesn't watch out!

For a while Mary even thinks she's going to marry Donald herself. But Grandma Read (Margaret Wycherly) disposes of that idea. And if there hadn't happened to be a black sheep (Charles Winninger) in the Read family, love's young dream would have ended right there!—Univ.

OUT OF THE BLUE

I've never thought of George Brent as a hen-pecked type, but in Out Of The Blue he certainly gives a good imitation of a Caspar Milquetoast husband. You know—the kind who isn't allowed to smoke in the house.

His name, of course, isn't really Milquetoast, even in the picture. It's Arthur Earthleigh, and his wife is Mae (Carole Landis). She is forever nagging at Arthur. Right now the argument is about a dog belonging to the artist (Turhan Bey) who has the neighboring terrace. The pooch, Rabelais, has, it seems, jumped over the fence and committed a slight indiscretion on Mae's immaculate floor.

Mae is going away over the weekend to visit a sick sister, and she wants to be sure Arthur will "take steps" about Rabelais while she's gone. "That David Ridges and his dog, and the parade of women going in and out of his apartment!" she says malevolently. "They ought all to be thrown out."

"They're very beautiful girls." Arthur's tone is slightly wistful. "And he says they're his models." Mae gives him an indignant stare.

When he finally gets her off on her train, Arthur drops into a bar near home for a quick one. Through circumstances beyond his control (he keeps telling himself), he has some drinks with a woman he meets there. Her name is Olive (Ann Dvorak), she's very drunk and she comes home with Arthur, in spite of his protests.

Meanwhile, David, next door, is in a fury. He's had a letter from Arthur's attorney saying Rabelais must be sent to a kennel. Also he's having trouble with his favorite model, Deborah (Virginia Mayo), who admits she's in love with him, but refuses to do anything about it.

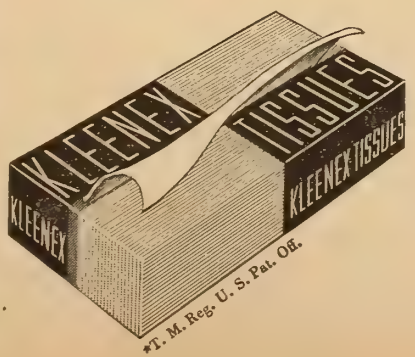
When Arthur puts what is, apparently, Olive's "corpse" over on David's terrace, the artist reaches the boiling point. For the next few days that's the most active "corpse" you ever heard of, and almost everyone lands in jail on account of it.

You'll find this amusing, if not startlingly original.—Eagle-Lion

Out of the Blue: Turhan Bey surprises model Ginny Mayo and G. Brent with a corpse.

Your eyes tell you... what your skin has always known

There is only one Kleenex



Hold a Kleenex* Tissue up to a light! You won't find lumps, or weak spots. You'll see Kleenex quality come smiling through! Each tissue always the same . . . with that special quality of softness . . . strength . . . you depend on in Kleenex, your favorite of all tissues.

And only Kleenex gives you the Serv-a-Tissue Box. You pull a Kleenex Tissue, and up pops another!

America's Favorite Tissue

Liked best in a nation-wide survey by 7 out of 10 tissue users.

Two-piece beauty in the new longer length. The dress that puts you in the center of the stage—and gives you the confidence to walk away with the show. Expensively made of sleek rayon faille. Double-breasted and double-buttoned, with a full peplum that puts allure into your every move. White cuffs on the sleeves and sweeping white revers highlight your face into loveliness. In Mink Brown, Forest Green, Royal Blue, Deep Purple, or Magic Black. Sizes 9-11-13-15 or17. All this is yours, an exceptional value, for a mere $7.98!

ORDER BY MAIL! • RUSH THE COUPON!

Preview Fashions

275 SEVENTH AVE., NEW YORK CITY Retail Shop, 19th Floor

SEND NO MONEY

PREVIEW FASHIONS, Dept. MS-10
275 Seventh Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.

Send this lovely dress on approval. I'll pay postman $7.98 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. If not delighted, I may return dress for refund within ten days. If prepaid, we pay postage. In New York City add 2% Sales Tax.

Size	First Color Choice	Second Color Choice	DY

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE_____ STATE_____

SENT ON APPROVAL

Wild Harvest: Alan Ladd has a new "racket"—farming! It sounds tame, but with pals Lloyd Nolan and Bob Preston, he runs into plenty of trouble!

WILD HARVEST

I'll bet you never thought you'd see the day Alan Ladd would be playing a farmer! Of course, he isn't exactly a farmer in Wild Harvest, but he's head of a crew who harvest wheat for the farmers.

It's a new racket for Madigan (Alan Ladd) and right now he's stuck down in Texas with a freight bill due on the machines he uses. His Army pal, Davis (Robert Preston), comes to the rescue with enough dough to start them off again. But Texas seems to have them hoodooed. They run into a wheat-field fire which comes close to finishing all their problems—and them, too.

They have competition in the form of a gang, run by Alperson (Will Wright), who's had more experience than Madigan. Alperson offers to buy them out, but Madigan isn't selling. He has a feeling he's really got something here, if he can learn to manage it right.

They move on to Kansas, sending ahead a young farm kid, Mark (Dick Erdman), to do a salesman's job. By the time the slow moving trucks and "combines" get there, he has plenty of work lined up for them. It's more bad luck that the first farm they work on should have a beautiful farmer's daughter, Fay (Dorothy Lamour), just waiting to cause trouble.

She makes a play for Madigan, first. He isn't immune by any means, but he makes it clear that when he moves on he won't be taking Fay with him. That isn't the way she wants it. Her main idea is to get out of the home town. So she switches her attentions to Davis. Between trips to town for a few drinks, fights with Alperson's crew who have followed them to Kansas, and Fay's not too subtle lure, Davis hasn't much time for work.

Madigan would like to throw him out. But Davis marries Fay and says, "Here we are, what are you going to do about it?" There isn't much Madigan can do about it. Davis' money is in the venture, and Davis is an expert mechanic whom they need badly.

Fay continues to make trouble. And then, like most women of her type, is very, very surprised when it comes home to roost.—Par.

THE LONG NIGHT

Barbara Bel Geddes comes from Broadway to play opposite Henry Fonda in The Long Night. The girl can act—she even steals a scene or two from Vincent Price, which is expert stealing.

The story is told in a series of flashbacks, so it opens when Joe Adams (Henry Fonda) shoots a magician known as Maximilian (Vincent Price). We learn the reason for the shooting from the flashbacks. . . .

Joe is a worker in a steel factory, when he meets a pretty little florist's assistant named Jo Ann (Barbara Bel Geddes). Falling in love is, for Joe, a simple, instinctive process that occurs on almost the first date he has with her. Jo Ann is so small and sweet and appealing. He finds himself wanting to take care of her, to marry her.

It's a shock to him to find that she herself is not so certain. That there is another man in her life. "I'm not really in love with him, Joe," she explains breathlessly. "Just sort of fascinated. The way he talks, and everything. You know."

Joe does know. Because by now he has seen Maximilian, the magician. Has listened to his golden voice mesmerize a whole audience. Has seen his long, white fingers touch Jo Ann's arms in an intimate gesture that makes Joe want to break him in two.

He has heard about Maximilian, too, from Charlene (Ann Dvorak), who was part of the magician's act for years. "When he gives with that fancy double-talk, you believe anything!" Charlene explains. "But I'm out from under the spell now, baby. What I want is a nice, simple guy like you."

Charlene is like that. Direct. Probably, Joe would be better off with her than with a crazy, dreaming kid like Jo Ann. But love makes up its own mind, not waiting for instructions. And Joe is already on the path which is to lead him to murder.—RKO

Merton of the Movies: Skeets Gallagher assures Red Skelton nobody will laugh at his dramatics.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES

Did you ever hear of a would-be actor who wanted to be a comedian? Certainly not! They all want to play Hamlet, or anyway, Henry the Fifth. And that's the way it is with Merton Gill (Red Skelton).

Merton lives in Tinkerton, Kansas, and he works for a general store during the day and as a movie usher at night. This is the era of silent pictures—of epics, starring Lawrence Ruppert (Leon Ames) and Beulah Baxter (Gloria Grahame). Merton has just finished a correspondence course in acting and spends the long winter evenings trying to make like Ruppert.

Comes the night—ah, fatal night—when Ruppert's train breaks down while passing through Tinkerton. Merton happens to be at the station so he meets his idol. In fact, he is allowed to supply him with a glass of gingerale, into which the great man empties the contents of his silver flask.

"Medicine," he explains kindly to Merton, who is dope enough to believe him. Merton even believes him when Ruppert, fractured to the eyebrows, says, "You must look me up in Hollywood some time."

Six weeks later. Merton is now in Hollywood. Has been for a month, without being able to contact Ruppert or convince the picture industry that it needs some new faces, especially his.

If it hadn't been for Phyllis Montague (Virginia O'Brien), he probably would have quietly starved to death. Phyllis has been a trouper since she was five, and she recognizes the symptoms of frustrated genius and malnutrition. She gets Merton some "extra" work.

Something strange happens. Merton can do the most serious scenes in the world and people die laughing. But he can't stand being laughed at so he quits. It's only when Phyllis and producer Baird (Charles Brown) pull a very fast one on him that Merton becomes really "of the movies."—M-G-M

VARIETY GIRL

Paramount has taken a dime size plot, and put every star on the lot to dancing on it. The result is a slightly confused but merry melange of comedy and music. For me, the

(Continued on page 123)

For lovely hair all men adore!

How sweetly feminine is the appeal of a woman's lovely hair to men. Hair gleaming with natural highlights—sparkling with silken softness—inviting with clean fragrance. For though your hair-style be formal or free as the wind, it's your natural hair-appeal men love. And more and more women are learning that Lustre-Creme Shampoo brings out the fullest natural glory of their hair . . . quickly (no special rinse) . . . easily . . . inexpensively. Not a soap, not a liquid, Lustre-Creme Shampoo is an amazing new dainty cream that lathers luxuriously in hard or soft water, and sweeps dullness away. Out of her wealth of cosmetic lore, Kay Daumit blended gentle lanolin with special secret ingredients to achieve this almost-magic cream that offers new glamour, wonderful obedience, to your hair! Try Lustre-Creme—The Cream Shampoo for The Hair Men Love. At all cosmetic counters.

The cream shampoo for true hair loveliness

Four ounces, $1.00
Family 1 lb., $3.50
Also 30¢ and 55¢ sizes.

See how a fingertipful of Lustre-Creme Shampoo bursts into heaps of fragrant lather. See how tempting it leaves your hair! Not dried—not dulled—not unruly—but silken soft, responsive, sparkling as if you'd given it a hard brushing.

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor), 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ARE RUSSELL AND MADISON MARRIED?

Guy and Gail (above, at the Little Theater production of Skin Of Our Teeth) won't confirm they're married. But here's a clue: Guy's bought a house—unfurnished. He and his brother Wayne are living in it—and sleep on the floor!

GAIL AND GUY WON'T TALK . . .

BUT WOULD HE SWIPE HER CIGARETTES, AND WOO

HER WITH A BEAT-UP ROSE—IF

THEY WERE ONLY GOING STEADY?

by Valerie Sloan special Modern Screen reporter

■ For weeks now, various interested (this is another word for nosey) parties have been calling up the Paramount publicity department.

"Is Gail Russell married to Guy Madison?" they demand.

You can almost hear the Paramount publicists shrugging on the other end of the phone. "Ask Gail Russell," they say, muttering under their breath, "Not that she'll tell you."

They're so right. Ask Gail Russell, and she leers engagingly. "It's a free country; believe what you please."

All she'll admit is that she isn't disinterested, and that's not exactly news.

There are certain facts from which you can draw your own conclusions, however.

There's a picture of Guy in Gail's room. "Procrastination is the thief of time," it says.

Procrastination?

And Guy has a picture of Gail with the legend: "From this day forward—" (Continued on page 73)

Very personally yours

You answer appraising eyes with a smile. With complete composure: always one of your charms, and very personally yours wherever you are . . . whatever the time of the month. Of course. For you're so confident that no one will know, because the special flat pressed ends of Kotex prevent revealing outlines.

Nor will you know one moment's discomfort, with Kotex to befriend you . . . to stay soft while you wear it. To give you the extra protection of an exclusive safety center. And to offer you the freedom of choice that only Kotex provides, with Regular, Junior and Super Kotex.

Yes, with Kotex for your ally you can meet trying moments, assured. As gaily as you doff your mask, you can laugh off care with a peace-of-mind that's very personally yours.

More women choose Kotex* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

✓ To make the most of the comfort Kotex gives, you'll want a new Kotex Belt—adjustable—snug fitting—all-elastic.

"I'm thrilled with the new Cashmere Bouquet with make-up sponge right in the case!"

Beau Cake

—says fascinating

Joan Bennett

Star of
Ernest Hemingway's
THE MACOMBER AFFAIR
A Benedict Bogeaus Production
Released thru United Artists

"With Beau Cake, the make-up sponge is in my compact—not loose in my purse."

"With Beau Cake it's easier—quicker—simpler than ever to apply cake make-up."

All Hollywood agrees! The new sensation in cake make-up is Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake. Different—because it has its own make-up sponge right in a moisture-proof compartment. As clever Joan Bennett says: "It's a honey! As soon as I open Beau Cake—the sponge is ready for action." Let Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake impart glamorous, smooth-as-silk finish to your skin; give it radiant, young color. Tiny blemishes fade from sight, and the finish lasts for hours and hours. No wonder Hollywood stars rave over Cashmere Bouquet Beau Cake.

Cashmere Bouquet

Beau Cake $1.50 PLUS TAX

Gay new cake make-up with sponge compartment right in the case

Lady in Retirement

For months Greer Garson hid in seclusion, refusing to discuss her tottering marriage. Now, for the first time, she explains what happened to her in those desperate weeks.

BY VIRGINIA McPHERSON

■ "I've pulled myself out of the dumps—completely. I'm a new woman now. My troubles are all solved—well, almost all—and nothing is ever going to worry me again."

Greer Garson talking. A brand new Greer—happy and vivacious. Far different from the melancholy girl who dropped out of circulation when her separation from Richard Ney made front page headlines last year. It was her first interview in months, and she skipped . . . not walked . . . down the winding stairs of her English-style Bel Air home to greet me.

"Hello, Virginia," she said, fluttering a white hand through her red curls. "Lunch will be ready in a minute. Come and pick some water cress with me in the creek."

Since last February, Greer has been living a quiet life of semi-retirement. She had packed some clothes in a bag, scooped up her poodles, hopped into her shiny Lincoln, and driven up the (Continued on page 69)

CHRISTOPHER KANE

HOLLYWOOD · CALIFORNIA

Memo on a madman!

Dear Al and Henry:

I quit. I've lost my faith in men as a form of life. I spent the whole afternoon on Republic's "The Red Pony" location with Robert Mitchum, and all I got was a blister on my heel so big it's going to have little blisters any minute now, and a story you can't possibly use.

Not unless somebody goes out with an axe, and hacks Mitchum's tongue loose from his cheek.

The first glimpse I got of Mr. M., he was sitting on a mess of hay, chewing a straw, and looking insolent. The straw-chewing is part of his characterization for the picture. The looking insolent comes natural to him. He looks insolent something wonderful.

"I'm from Modern Screen," I said meekly.

He contemplated me for a minute or two, and then (continued on page 64)

Bob and Peter Miles are pals his favorite pastime

the sinatra set

Frank learned how to do an acrobatic dance and handspring for The Kissing Bandit, his latest costume picture. Little Nancy isn't impressed, but Bobby Burns, his manager and pal, is interested.

Hank Sanicola (left) used to bang out songs for Frank, and even financed his wedding. Later, Frank staked his music business, and now everybody, including Toots Shor, is happy.

Frank's going to write a book with Carroll Carroll titled, "Boys and Girls Together," urging tolerance among kids. Here, he looks over a new tune with his arranger and bandleader, Axel Stordahl.

"We're not ashamed to love him," his pals say about Sinatra—and really mean it. Because, for Frank, they'd even give up their ulcers!

By IRENE GREENGARD

The joke's on Jimmy (Schnozzle) Durante, but he seems to be enjoying it. Phil Silvers, Frank and Danny Thomas are the guys behind those imitations.

■ Phil Silvers had been studying the funny little patches of sunlight on the rug, and when he heard footsteps, he looked up dully.

Frank was standing in the doorway. "I've been chasing all over after you," he was saying. "I've been thinking about you and Rags opening in New York next week, and boy, how I envy you bums!"

Then he noticed the greyness in the man's face, and put out his hand. "Rags'll be all right, Pappy—"

Phil Silvers moved his foot from one patch to another. "He's dead," he said, and got out of the chair like a tired old man.

After a while, he began to talk. "There was an act we used to do in burlesque—" The words trailed off. "We were a pretty good team—"

Later, it was Frank who talked Phil into going on alone; it was Frank who went to New York with him, and appeared with him that opening night at the Copacabana.

They did the "My Buddy" number Phil and Rags had always done, and took their bows, and then Phil went out alone for the last one, and spoke to the wild, cheering house, in a quiet voice.

"I'd like to take this bow for Rags," he said, and over in the corner, his and Frank's friend, Bobby Burns, was sitting with Toots Shor, and the tears were streaming down Toots' wide, red face, and the room was so quiet you could hear the people crying.

A month later, Phil Silvers showed up at Frank's house, and stuck a tiny package into Frank's hand. "For you," he said shortly.

The package had a cigarette lighter in it. There were the first few notes of "My Buddy" (Continued on page 119) on a note of triumph

"From the moment
you spoke, you had us all at your command," said
Anthony Eden to Rita Hayworth . . . and from Brussels to Paris to Prague, school-girls and statesmen re-echoed his tribute.

by lola leighter

as told to john powers

■ Rita Hayworth and I stood at the deck rail and giggled. "I'll never believe it," Rita gasped. "I shall never believe it. Two weeks ago I was a landlubber thinking of everyday things like marketing and motherhood responsibilities—and now, bing! I'm a sailor!"

"Bing! Me too," I said. "And isn't it fun?"

This incredible business had started one bright spring morning in Hollywood. I was minding my own business out in the garden, when the phone rang, and it was Rita.

"Hold the phone, Lola," she said. "I'm having a brainstorm." I held the phone and—knowing Rita very well indeed—I held my breath too.

"Let's go to Europe—now!"

I said, "Sure, sure," the way you do, and we both laughed like idiots. Even when Rita had talked it all over with the studio, even when we were both packing like mad, I don't think either of us really thought it (Con't on page 110)

In Brussels, Rita was a guest of honor at the International Film Festival, where films from all nations were shown. The Mayor himself introduced her to foreign dignitaries!

The man who happily awaits Rita's autograph is no less a personage than M. Vermeylen, president of the Film Festival, Belgian Minister of the Interior—and Hayworth fan!

It's an old Brussels custom (as well as a smart idea) for the Mayor of the Town to kiss a charming visitor. Rita liked it fine, too!

Maybe he was built for open skies, instead of stuffy drawing-rooms. But for Rocky, Gary Cooper would balance the daintiest teacup—and like it!

"COOP"

by Hedda Hopper

The star of The Unconquered escorts his women-folk to the St. Martin's Charity Fair. Twelve-year-old Maria is fortunate enough to look like both Rocky and Gary.

■ I couldn't understand why everybody was laughing. It was one night during the war and I had a real scoop movie star on the stage at the Hollywood Canteen. Gary Cooper had balked when I first asked him to appear. Shy and embarrassed as always, he'd protested, "Those GI guys don't want to see me, Hedda. They want some pretty gals. What in the world can I do?"

"Now, Coop," I soothed, "leave it to me. I'll just ask a few questions and you follow my lead. They'll love it."

I'm not exactly Bob Hope and Coop's a plenty tough subject. I did my best but what Gary mumbled back was short and not designed to lay anyone in the aisles, either. That's why I couldn't understand it when that gang of boys began to snicker, then laugh and then roar out loud. I was wearing a big hat with a long feather in it, and I remember shaking it, puzzled at the panic we were handing that audience.

I wound up and turned around just in time to see Coop spit out a mouthful of feathers, while the Canteen rocked. My poor hat was as bare as a plucked chicken. All the time I'd been knocking myself out for laughs, Gary had quietly stolen the show by nibbling the feathers right off my best bonnet!

I'd never in the world have guessed Gary Cooper would come up with a natural bit of sly comedy like that. It was worthy of Victor Moore or Jack Benny. It doubled me up—and that's something in the face of a ruined hat, you can bet!

Charles Laughton once called Gary Cooper the greatest actor in Hollywood. "Because," explained Charlie shrewdly, "he acts from inside." Sometimes it's buried marrow-deep, and you'd never in a million years suspect what goes on. But then—out it comes. And you like it.

What makes me sore at (Continued on page 101)

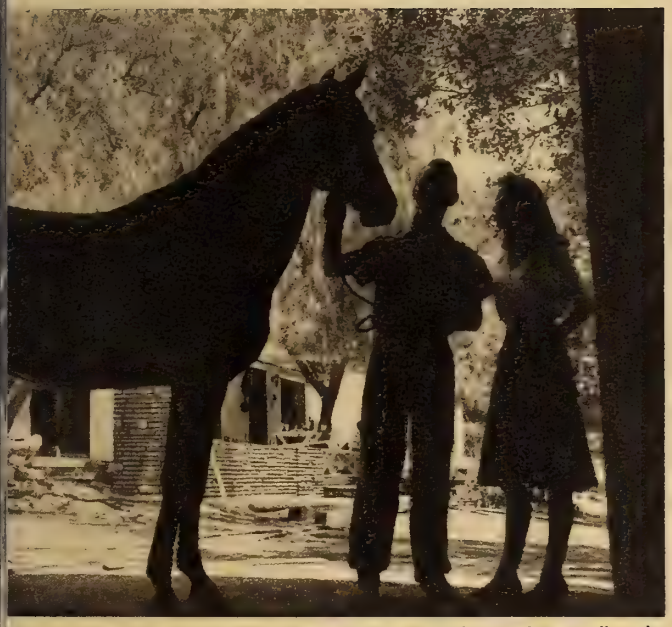
LIFE HAS LOST ITS CHARM FOR MODERN SCREEN REPORTER CHRIS KANE. BECAUSE AFTER A WEEK-END WITH THOSE HAPPY-GO-LUCKY LADDS— WHAT'S LEFT WORTH LIVING FOR?

By Christopher Kane



This is the nearest Chris got to a horse, but really, she loves 'em. Later, she got much closer to the feed-board (right) where fried ham, biscuits and meringue pie waited.

WEEKEND AT THE LADD'S

■ "Listen," I said to Al and Henry firmly. "Never mind with all that stuff."

They'd been telling me about the Alan Ladds' brand of gracious hospitality, and I was cynical. (Being born in Brooklyn is what does it.)

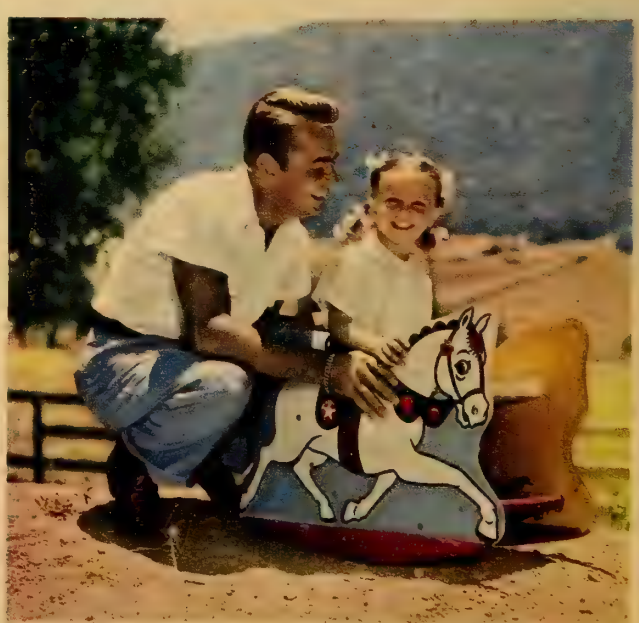
"You've been invited for a weekend," Al went on. "You'll find out for yourself."

Henry only glared. "And please keep your shoes on at the table. They've always thought well of MODERN SCREEN."

"Hmph," I said. "The way you talk, their red carpet must look tattle-tale grey from being rolled out so much."

I forget who threw the ink bottle at me, but I left. I know when I'm not wanted. (Continued on next page)

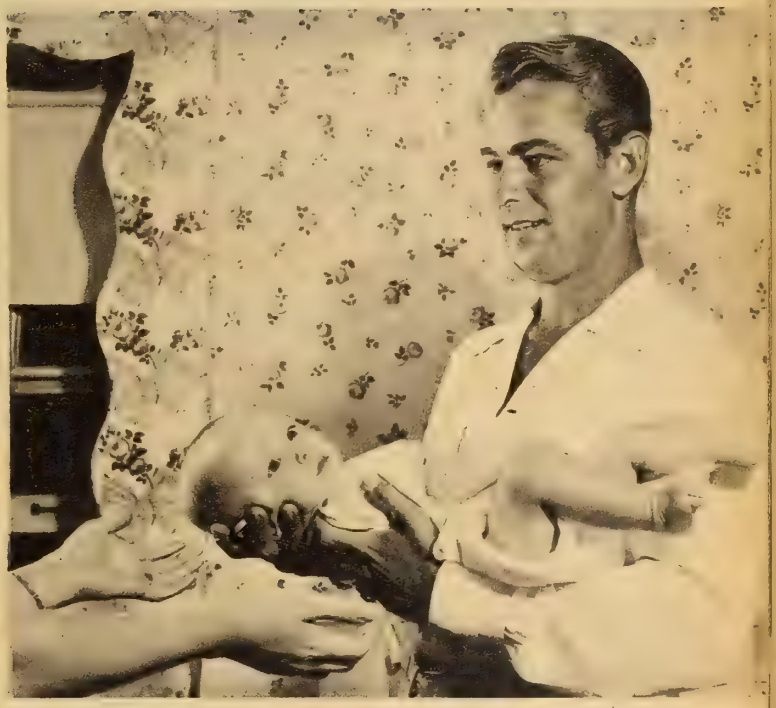
Four-year-old Lonnie sticks like glue to her colt's saddle. But her Mom was afraid she'd topple off the upper deck of the bed, so she got the lower, while Chris took her chances.



Alana has a yellow cat and three large sheepdogs for playmates. Her favorite, though, is a colt named Jimmy, so the hobby horse is really kid stuff to Lonnie, who's being nice to the photog.

WEEKEND AT THE LADD'S

Chris' host showed her plans for a new three-room house the Ladds are building to take care of their enlarged family. Meanwhile, baby David and nurse are living in the town house.



Alan wanted a boy, and he got almost nine pounds of one when David was born. Lonnie nicknamed him Butch, but maybe if he becomes an actor like Dad (in Wild Harvest) he'll change it.

(Continued from preceding page) And here I am publicly apologizing. Because I spent a weekend at the Ladd ranch, and I never had more fun. Every good thing movie magazines say about the Ladds, you can double and underscore in purple ink.

Their ranch is in a place called Hidden Valley, and two rows of pepper trees edge the drive up to it.

Alan, who was having a brief interlude between Saigon and The Long Grey Line, met me beyond the pepper trees, and took my bag. He has a smile that would melt a heart of solid rock, and mine is only gravel, to begin with.

I was thinking to myself, "Hmm, good," (just like the Campbell's soup ad) when a small blonde child came up with a yellow cat in her arms.

The small blonde child was Alana Ladd, more commonly known as Lonnie.

"Hello," she said, stretching the yellow cat a little.

"Hello," I said back. "What's the cat's name?" (I have a theory that children like to answer questions, and it never works, but I go right on pushing it.)

Lonnie gave me a scornful glance. "This cat has no name," she said. "This cat is just kitty-cat."

"I beg your pardon," I said feverishly. "I hardly know any cats. I'm a stranger—"

Which was when I heard this soft-pitched laugh. I turned around, and a dark-haired girl with huge eyes and a heart-shaped face was standing beside me, looking amused. It was Susie Ladd, and she's so much prettier than her pictures that I must confess, I stared.

"Maybe you prefer ducks," she said. "We've got some over here."

I followed her across the grounds and near a haystack, we found a duck, a drake, and six babies, all making various duck noises.

"One of them got sick the other day," Susie said. "And I nursed it so carefully. But it died. I even pried open its little bill and tried to force it to eat hard boiled egg with pepper."

"Did it ever occur to you that hard boiled egg and pepper may have killed it?" Alan interrupted. "Poor little (Continued on page 116)

"Only 100 pounds, June is fine for carrying over thresholds. Three times and I'm not even tired yet."

"This is my favorite picture of my wife. I'm looking for a place to hang it."

"The neighbors may make complaints about my singing in the shower, but June doesn't."

IT'S FIFTY-FIFTY WITH THE POWELLS. SO DICK CHOPS DOWN EVERY OTHER TREE, BORROWS ONLY HALF OF JUNE'S ALLOWANCE—AND NEVER STARTS AN ARGUMENT SHE CAN'T FINISH

MY WIFE'S HUSBAND

BY DICK POWELL

■ A while back I suffered a passing slander in a magazine called MODERN SCREEN. In cold type, surrounded by quotes, was the statement that I had a pointed head. "Bless his little pointed head," I think was the line.

The only reason I didn't run to the telephone, call my attorney, and tell him to start going round and round with the publisher, is that it was my wife who made the remark. It would have been necessary for me to sue her, too, and due to the community property laws in California, I would have had to pay off half of whatever I won in the case.

Besides, when you get through with a lawsuit, the lawyers buy a home in Bel Air. For the time being, I forgot about the insult and bought a home in Bel Air, myself.

Despite some good arguments to the contrary, I'm nobody's fool but my own, and I can prove it.

Take the time when I and my wife, whose name by the way is June Allyson, kept all our money separate. I was being pretty wise and cagey (Continued on page 85)

the case of autry VS. rogers

THERE ARE TWO SIDES TO EVERY CASE—EXCEPT THE AUTRY-ROGERS FEUD. 'CAUSE GENE AND ROY ARE SLUGGING IT OUT COWBOY-STYLE—AGAINST THE GOSSIP-MONGERS.

by Carl Schroeder

There's always a nurse and vet on the set of The Last Roundup for Champ, Jr., Gene told author Carl Schroeder.

■ Gene Autry and I were sitting on a fence one hot afternoon, on a ranch outside Newhall, California.

I was wearing one of Gene's sombreros, furnished by the wardrobe department.

This made me feel like a character out of the Old West, so I said, "Podner, what is this here all now about the bitter feud between you and Roy Rogers, podner, you-all?"

Gene gazed out over three ranges of mountains. In his eyes was a look of infinite indulgence. Also a vague suggestion of irritation.

He said, "If you leave out the accent you picked up from a 1918 version of a Western script-writer, pardner, I would like to know about that feud myself."

I looked out into the cornfield and felt like one of the pumpkin heads lying there.

"You know," I went on, "all this stuff about you and Roy battling it out to find out who is really King of the Cowboys. I want to know about that. Do you and Roy skulk around the corner of Hollywood and Vine nights, with six shooters half drawn, waiting to mow each other down? On Hallowe'en will you sneak into (Continued on page 114)

glenn ford life story

The first time he saw Eleanor, all he could manage was a half-shaky "hello." Then, one beautiful day, she found he could say brilliant things, like "Let's get married." • (Conclusion)

Peter and his Dad aren't sissies, but if the rag dolls in Pete's room get thirsty, the least a guy can do is give 'em water.

Among other things, Glenn's a whiz at target practice. Here, he and his pet cocker spaniel take time out on a hunting trip to view the timber and enjoy a snack.

Glenn (Man From Colorado) collects rare stamps and records, but he enjoys fishing best, especially casting for salmon.

by eleanor powell

■ "King Arthur and His Knights?" Glenn's mother asked. "You mean you're in another school play?"

"No, I'm producing this one myself," Glenn replied. "A matinee out back in the barn. David's going to play his clarinet."

"I wouldn't miss it for the world," she said. Then she added thoughtfully, "Did they have clarinets in King Arthur's time?"

"What difference does it make? We have to have music between the acts."

King Arthur—as it was written, produced and directed by Glenn in the Ford's leaky old barn—was a masterpiece of improvisions. The costumes—the medieval suits of armor, that is—were fashioned from the household's kitchen utensils. The setting was built from old apricot crates. In fact, everything was make-shift, except David's clarinet.

Mrs. Ford just had to go to the performance which went along pretty smoothly until a climactic point in the second act, when King Arthur's Castle was subjected to siege. Right on cue, David, clarinet in hand, dashed to the top of the set, and began to blow the charge signal on his horn. Then it happened. With a splintering crash, the set collapsed, and David, blowing a sour off-key toot as he fell, pulled Glenn and the rest of the cast down into the wreckage with him.

Fortunately none of the cast was hurt. But David's clarinet ended up in four pieces. The audience got up from their seats—buckets and boxes dragged in for the occasion—and went home convinced that they had seen the season's most unorthodox presentation of medieval life. The cast went home with David to help him explain to his mother about the clarinet.

That ended the barn theater. And for a while, Glenn did not immediately get any recurrent ambitions to be an actor. Among other things, there was his running feud with a neighborhood boy, named Grant, who lived across the alley. Fighting with Grant was no new thing. It had started a number of years before, when for lack of something better to do, the two boys picked the figs off the trees in Glenn's back yard and plastered them at each other. When figs were out of season, they progressed to clods. Then (Continued on page 104)

the awkward age

■ Mrs. Garner was explaining to visitors about the restrictions on her daughter's social life. "After all, Peggy Ann is only fifteen," she went on, "and we simply don't believe she's old enough to be going out on solo dates. But we live near Beverly Hills High School, and she's allowed to go to all the school games and school dances."

Mrs. Garner sounded like any mother of a fifteen-year-old—and Peggy Ann sounded like any girl her age, as she began a fervent rebuttal, winding up with "Probably when I'm a hundred and two years old, you'll finally say, 'All right, Peggy Ann, you're old enough to have dates now.'" Her voice rose to a falsetto squeak on the last sentence.

In spite of their disagreements on that subject, the two are great pals, and Mrs. Garner goes out of her way to make sure that Peggy Ann has plenty of social jollifications. Every Friday night is open house at the Garners' pleasant middle-sized home, and the neighborhood kids pour in for parties that bend the walls. Sandwiches, cokes, games, phonographs, the radio, and furious dancing keep everybody busy.

A few youngsters from the movie studios occasionally turn up (Continued on page 99)

Peggy's mother thinks she's still too young for solo dates, but Friday night is open-house and the walls bend . . . especially when Roddy McDowall does imitations of Carmen Miranda and Tallulah.

THE WALLS ROCK, THE RADIO ROARS AND PEGGY ANN'S MOTHER REELS, BECAUSE THAT GARNER GAL'S STOMPING THROUGH THE AWKWARD AGE—ON HIGH-HEELED SHOES.

by Keith Monroe

Scotty Beckett provides music for the agony chorus. Barbara Whiting, Betty Sullivan, Carol Klingstedt and George Shelton join Peggy in singing all the latest hit-paraders.

Peggy wants to go to Northwestern U with her best pal, Barbara (under the bridge with George) of Junior Miss fame. Harry Macy clasps Peggy's hands to make a sturdy arch.

Peggy can memorize her lines almost at a glance, and never forgets them. Before she goes to bed she studies her script for the next day's shooting of Daisy Kenyon.

Sierra madre

The romance . . . the charm of old Mexico—ideal for the Bogarts' second honeymoon. Until Bogey stopped the bull-fight, knives started flying and Betty left him—for a donkey!

BY KIRTLEY BASKETTE

■ Inside the Balboa Yacht Club, a baffled crew of Bogie Bogart's and Lauren Bacall's California sailing pals puzzled over a cryptic wire from Mexico:

"REGRETTING FROM HONOLULU RACE I WITHDRAW MORE TIME EXPECTED THAN PICTURE TAKING MEXICO TREASURE SIERRA MADRE. HASTA LA VISTA AMIGOS. BOGIE"

"It's scrambled like an egg," one said at last, "but I get the idea. Bogie can't sail. That's tough. He had his heart set on this race." They headed gloomily for the bar.

Down in San Jose Purua, Mexico, Humphrey had sent the telegram off with a few pesos and a prayer. All messages from the United States, he knew, had to be translated into Spanish, switched back to English, and butchered by interpreters all along the line before they reached him. He knew it was vice-versa, too. "I hope the boys understand," he sighed to Lauren. "What a swell crew we had! I'd give something important, like a bottle of Scotch, to be hauling anchor on that one." He grinned crookedly.

"This is better," Betty said.

"For you, yes," kidded her old man. "I work all day—you sleep all day. Muy bueno, no?" Betty ducked.

They hadn't planned to be making a movie in Mexico—The Treasure of the Sierra Madre—when they started overhauling the boat away back (Continued on page 107)

Crew of Treasure of Sierra Madre lunch together, around a pail of soda pop. Here's Bogey, hairdresser Betty Lou Delmont, Walt Huston and Tim Holt. Wives Lauren Bacall and Evelyn Keyes (Mrs. John Huston) went along, too.

A. Bogey made "aficionados" (that's Spanish for "fans") by the score, on location in San Jose Purua, Mexico.

B. The Mexican urchins would delight Bogart by rat-tatting imaginary guns at him, announcing gleefully, "You're dead!"

C. Bogey is made up to look like a tough Sierra Madre Mountain gold-miner, while Director John Huston explains the shot.

D. Ever try to get a stubborn burro to drink water? After hours of coaxing, the donkey wasn't thirsty, but Bogey was!

MIRACLE ON MAIN STREET

by David Charnay

■ This is the story of Emma Matzo. A girl whom you know better as Lizabeth Scott. We have told it simply, by merely printing the hasty notes of N. Y. Daily News reporter, David Charnay, exactly as he jotted them down. We have preserved this simple form so that you could share with us, the editors, our thrill in watching a great reporter at work—unlocking a secret that had been kept until David Charnay went to Scranton. It is the secret of an obscure girl, daughter of foreign-born parents, who carved herself a big hunk of fame before she was 25. Perhaps as much as anything we have read, Emma Matzo's story reaffirms the perennial magic of American opportunity . . . the miracle on Main Street. Hers is a story told sometimes with high pride—and sometimes grudgingly. In either case, it is a story we Americans never tire of hearing!—THE EDITORS.

■ 9:30 a.m. Just got into Scranton. Stopping briefly for gas and directions to 1001 Capouse Ave. where Liz Scott's family lives. This is a big, sprawling, dusty town, and there's a familiarity about it even though you've never been here before. The bare-legged gals in red shoes and ballet slippers and loafers, the small boys with comic books and ice cream cones. The noise and laughter in the streets. This is Big Town, U. S. A. Gives you a good feeling to know that a kid can be born on the wrong side of the tracks in a town like this and grow up to be somebody.

9:40. This is the house—a two-story brick job on a quiet street. Doesn't look as if it harbors a mystery, and yet it does. There've been so many conflicting stories about Emma Matzo's (that was Lizabeth's name) background. Was she a hat-check girl, a debutante, a coal-miner's daughter? The real story's been so hushed up, you begin to suspect something sinister in her past. That's what I'm here to find out about.

10:30. Something screwy here. A friendly tow-headed (Con't on next pg.)

Sister Justine, 19, shown here with Mrs. Matzo, looks like Liz, is a student of Syracuse U. The mahogany piano is one of Liz's generous gifts.

Author David Charnay (right), spoke to Liz's cousin, Mike Munhak, in his own café, next door to his father's undertaking parlor. "She was a good kid. Lots of fun. I'll buy her a drink any time," he said.

In this modest, two-story house in Scranton, Emma Matzo (now Lizabeth Scott, star of Hal Wallis' Desert Fury) grew up. The store facing the street, neighbors reported, was once her father's grocery.

Harry Spiegel, district manager, Commerford-Publix Theaters, threw some light on why Liz didn't attend the Scranton premiere of You Came Along.

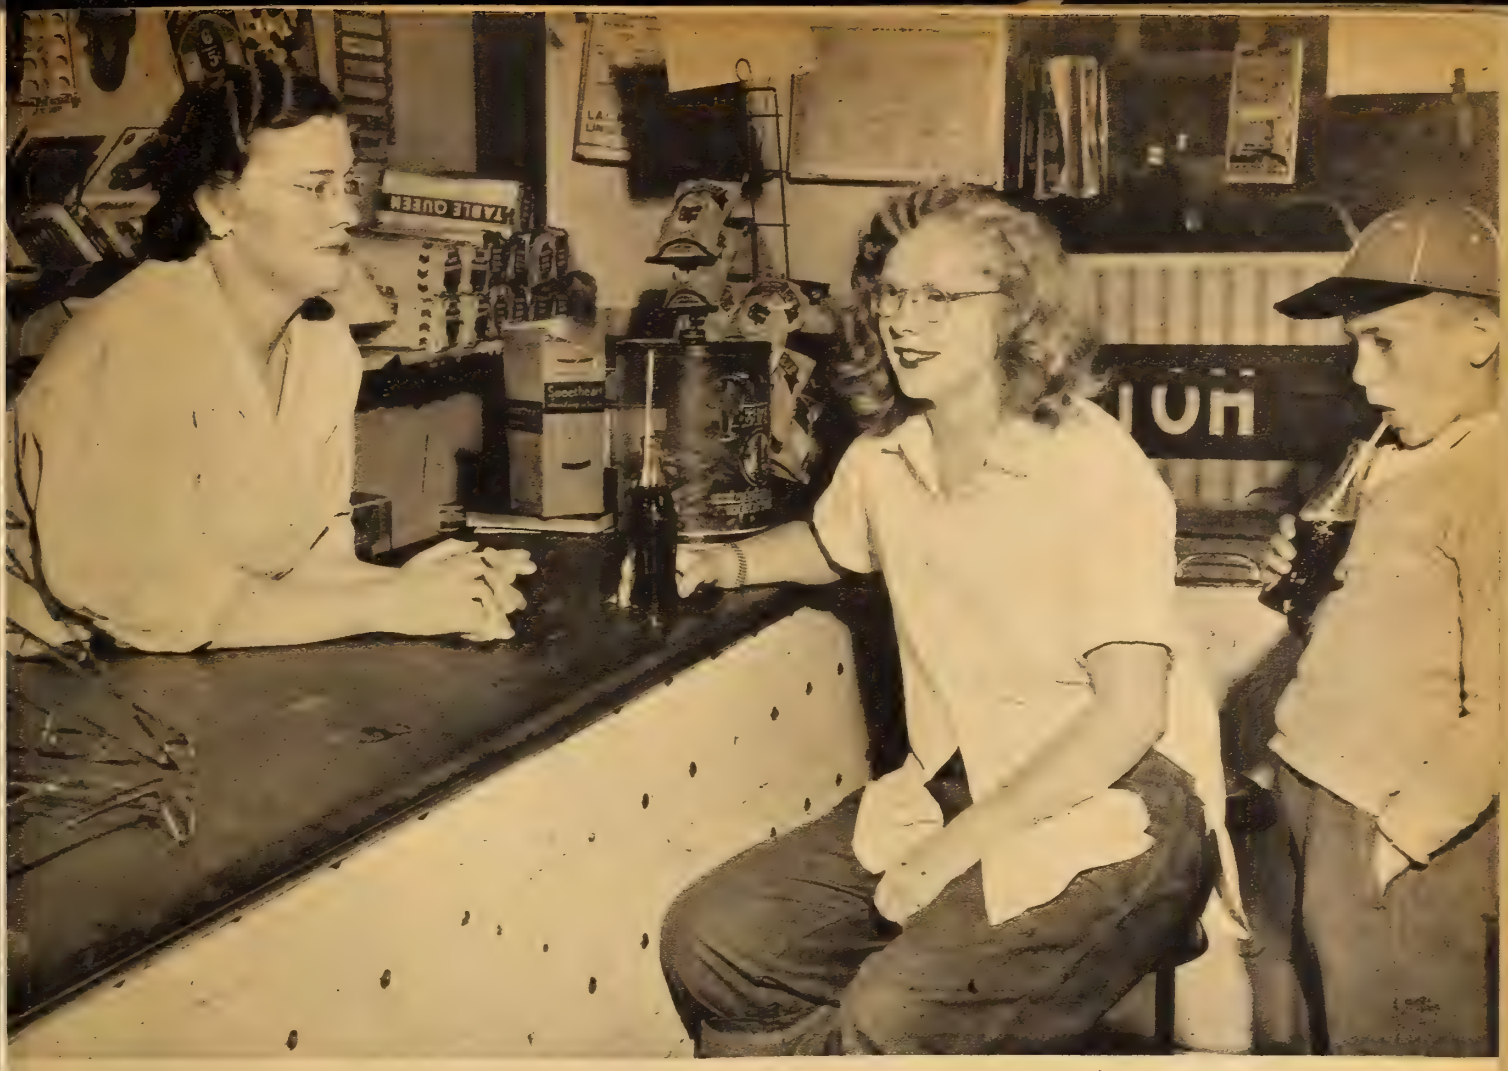
Mrs. Irene Golden, Liz's school chum, remembers her as a quiet girl—always acting. "Why doesn't she come home?" she queried our photographer.

(Continued from preceding page) boy answered the door and called for his mom. When she appeared, my first impression was of a kind-faced, motherly woman. Second look showed steely, executive eyes, an unsmiling mouth, strong Slavic features. I told her I was a reporter and she barred the door with a sturdy arm. Hands obviously work-worn. Happened to mention I'd heard that Mr. Matzo was a coal-miner. She lowered her arm immediately. Said, "You come in here. I would like to explain a few things." I followed her into the house.

I studied the living-room for clues to Liz's past. No pictures of her as a child. No family-type photos at all. Just two glamor shots, one bearing her height, weight, waist, hip and bust measurements, as of August, 1944. Good mahogany piano stood out like a sore thumb among modest furnishings. Liz's sister Justine joined us. Tall, stunning blonde, studying journalism at Syracuse University. Got a chance to jot down information Mrs. M. gave me while she went upstairs to change her dress before we photographed her. "My husband was never a miner," she told me. "We have lived in this corner building ever since Emma—Lizabeth—was a little girl of two. We live upstairs, but downstairs on the Ash Street side, my husband for many years owned a grocery store. He retired a few months ago. His health is not so good." (Continued on page 94)

At 7, Emma (Liz) went to John Adams Public School and started dancing and elocution lessons. She performed regularly in school plays.

By the time she was old enough for high school, Liz knew she wanted an acting career. At night, she'd rehearse for hours, strengthening, perfecting her unusual voice. "I won't play unless I'm a star," she'd insist to girl friends.



(Top) Mrs. M. Dean, of Kelly's Corner, and daughter Zita recalled that Liz once worked in her dad's grocery. John McColligan, 14, goes to school with Liz's youngest brother.

Above, the bare exterior of Wolfgang's Bakery, where Liz's dad now drives a delivery truck. Mr. Matso disappeared mysteriously when Modern Screen's reporter showed up.

MIRACLE ON MAIN STREET

everything happens to joan!

Joan looked chic and confident, as she and Maggi McNellis ran through the script of Maggi's radio show, broadcast from New York's Latin Quarter. Actually, mikes scare her.

"Nothing ever happens to me," moans Joan Leslie, who goes to Coney with New York's Mayor, wears a lily pad for a hat, and has a season pass to Ebbets Field!

By NANCY WINSLOW SQUIRE

■ "No," the producer said firmly, settling back in his chair. "There's no sense in your reading for that part; you couldn't play that part—"

It was an argument Joan Leslie was weary of. If you came to Hollywood when you were fifteen, and you never bothered to put on purple nail polish and tight skirts, you stayed fifteen to everyone.

Here she was twenty, and the only roles they threw at her were sweet, shy jobs. She wanted a change of pace.

She wanted, in short, to test for the dramatic part of Bessie Watty, the cockney tramp in The Corn Is Green.

All the producer wanted was for her to go away and not make him laugh. "Why, I've seen you ride past on a bicycle with an apple in your mouth—" he said.

She grimaced. "You make me sound like a roasted pig—and I'll sell the bicycle. Only give me a chance—"

He gave her nothing, so she went away, but she came back a couple of days later, dripping cockney accent.

"It's good," he said finally. "But Joanie, baby —" Short pause: "This girl steals purses, and she flirts!"

A little bitter, a little amused, Joanie baby went home to mother. "I was supposed to recoil in horror," she said. "What kind of a prissy young stuffed shirt do they think I am in this town? Maybe I've been sweet (Continued on page 118)

Wise Maggi led her radio guest through the back door—to avoid the crowds. When a member of the audience asked, "Is your hair naturally red?" Joan snapped, "Yes, and I have the temper that goes with it."

The fashion show the Latin Quarter staged that afternoon was sheer joy to Joan, who wanted clothes advice from the models. The models wanted—her autograph!

Getting into the spirit of things, Joan applauded John Frederics' latest "creation"—a Good Luck hat for Maggi, to launch her first luncheon show over WJZ from the stage of the famous night club.

In the dressing-room, Joan, who's just started Northwest Stampede, watched the models dress up. "I've always wanted a feather duster hat," she confided to them.

Courage Susan Peters had. But for her kind of victory, she needed something more: Timothy's teething pains, a stranger's kindness, and—above all—the strength of Dick's love.

DEVOTION

by howard sharpe

■ In the too-small living room of their too-small apartment, the young Richard Quines were attempting to work, and in work to forget the housing shortage. Susan, ensconced in her glistening chrome wheel chair, thumbed earnestly through a pile of scripts. Dick pecked angrily away at a small portable typewriter which he held on his lap.

In a corner cluttered with toys, Timothy, aged sixteen months, ran a small red motor car with rubber tires up and down the spine of Thunder, the family Great Dane, who could have swallowed his little master in one gulp.

After a while, Thunder stood up, stretched, went over to Dick and put both enormous paws on his shoulders. Dick, chair and typewriter went over backwards under Thunder's 135 pounds.

The Dane was amused. He washed Dick's face with a tongue like a side of beef, whereupon Dick swore quietly.

"Why Dick!" Susan said. "You haven't used words like that since . . ."

"It's enough," he shouted, disentangling himself. "We're going for a drive. What do you want to wear?"

Meekly, she told him. While he was fetching a jacket and an extra lap robe, she collected purse and cigarettes from a table. Then, picking her up lightly, he carried her down the outside flight of steps to the car.

A woman, watching from the window of her apartment in the adjoining building, turned to a companion. "I can't understand why the Quines live in that tiny apartment. And upstairs! How many times must he have to carry her up and down those steps every day?"

"Several, I should imagine. But don't forget there's a housing shortage, dear!"

The woman's eyes snapped. "I'm going to do something about that." She watched them get into the car. (Continued on page 91)

A young man's fancy

Visiting in Conn., Frank dropped in at the Ox Ridge Hunt Club. Members Lorna Mickle and Adele Baehr—on horseback—added a new twist to autograph hunting.

Frank lends a helping hand to Virginia Mickle as she sights Long Island Sound. They're on the landing of the Yacht Club in Darien, where he spends his week-ends.

Frank likes to do his thinking down near the water. Sometimes he gets a good idea . . . like the one about buying a house in New York. His friends can hardly believe it, but he located an old brownstone and is going to decorate it himself.

One of the reasons Frank trots home to Conn. so often is his fondness for home-cooking. Here, his mother presides at the waffle iron, while his step-dad rates "seconds." Frank's sister, passing the plate, had a baby the next day.

If you don't have a stage handy, just drop to the living room floor. That's what Frank is doing, as his mother plays leading lady and his sister directs the scene. He's writing an original screen play with his best friend, Mike De Vincent.

Frank Latimore's fancy turns to many things like houses, writing and naturally—love. All of which leaves him broke, sleepless—but happy!

by Virginia Wilson

■ Being in pictures is fine. When you love acting as Frank Latimore does, it comes right out of your heart, and you couldn't stop it if you wanted to. But you have to plan your life ahead. There are gaps between pictures and it's no good just sitting around with nothing to do. Which is one reason why Frank decided to be a part-time writer. Meeting up with Mike De Vincent is the other reason.

Mike is a character straight out of Saroyan whom Frank met in Hollywood last year, when they were both playing in To The Living, at the Actors' Lab there.

One evening after a rehearsal, Frank and Danny, the director of the Lab, were sitting in a restaurant around the corner. A thin man with black hair and a black mustache came in and threw himself gloomily into the other chair at the table.

"Danny," he said dramatically, "I haven't a roof over my head. Not even half a roof. I'll have to sleep in the Park tonight."

"Is that so?" Danny, unimpressed, went on stirring his coffee. "Frank, this is Mike De Vincent—Frank Latimore."

"Hello," Frank said with his shy smile. "I've seen you around the Lab."

"Yeah. Danny, I guess I'll sleep at the Lab tonight."

"You could come home with me," Frank suggested diffidently. "But it's way out at the beach. It might not be very convenient for you."

Mike howled like a banshee. "Convenient, he says. He rescues me from the gutter and asks if it's convenient for me!"

So Mike came to stay at the beach house, and they've been together ever since. The house used to belong to Al Jolson, and was all done up like a Christmas tree in July. Mike's room was red, white and blue and he said it made him feel sacrilegious, as if he were sleeping on the American flag. Frank's was like a boat's cabin, with portholes and a feeling of built-in sea-sickness. When Frank moved into town, Mike (Continued on page 70)

Everything with a Kiss

Cary Grant would give the shirt off his back to anyone who needed it—but first, he'd make sure it was the right color.

By Cameron Shipp

■ Modelling would be a lot easier than this, Meg Cole, messenger, thought, as she hurried across RKO's back lot with another adrenalin-charged memorandum from an executive.

Her feet hurt. And she was a long way from Cary Grant's ice box, where the kids had stashed the cokes. If there were any more school teacher tourists today, she decided, she would steer them onto the Grant set and grab a cool drink while they goggled.

Really a nice guy, she thought as (Continued on page 86)

New Cutex – longest-wearing Cutex ever – stops traffic with "Pretty Gay!"

Just how ravishing-red can red get? Just how wonderful can your hands look? You'll know when you see "Pretty Gay."

It's the shade to make a man's eyes go Blink, Blink! Make his heart go Thump, Thump! Make him stop . . . look . . . and love it!

And all new Cutex polish is so wondrously improved.

Now! Cutex wears longer than even high-priced polishes. A new miracle ingredient, found only in new Cutex, defies chipping and peeling. Dries extra-fast, too!

Try "Pretty Gay" polish for prettiness' sake. Try all the other exquisite Cutex hand-care products too, for the same attractive reason.

Another New! 5 Cutex Lipsticks created to harmonize with all polish shades.

Now—so easy to choose your lipstick and polish "go-togethers."

Cutex Blue Pink lipstick makes sweet harmony with any cool pinkish shade. Clear Red "clicks" with any bright true red. Blue Red lipstick is lovely with any of the many blue-toned red polishes on the market. Try it with the new Cutex "Pretty Gay" polish—pretty devastating."

All Cutex lipstick is so creamy sm-o-o-oth, too. Stays put—stays radiantly lustrous for hours. And—surprise—only 49¢ for this luxury lipstick. At your favorite cosmetic counter. Northam Warren, New York. Plus Federal Tax.

Mr. and Mrs. Fontaine seal it with a kiss at the Beverly Hills Presbyterian church where they were married by Dr. Kenneth Roberts.

Did you ever see a vision walking? Well, Johnnie did. Her name was Barbara Lawrence . . . Until he changed it to Fontaine

BY GEORGE BENJAMIN

VISION IN HITE

Babs and John greet Dan Dailey, who is starred with her in Give My Regards To Broadway.

Barbara is one gal who has her cake and eats it, too . . . at her reception in the Rodeo Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel.

■ All brides are beautiful, they say, but the new Mrs. John Fontaine (Barbara Lawrence) just plain took your breath away—her tan young skin glowing against the pure white of her wedding gown, her eyes soft with happiness. There wasn't one of us at the Beverly Hills Presbyterian Church that June night who didn't gasp a little when she came in on her father's arm. (He's Morris Lawrence, and he flew in from Oklahoma to give her away.) Her dress was classically simple, white lace with long puff sleeves and a sweetheart neckline, and the halo hat trimmed with lilies of the valley was (Continued on page 112)

MEMO OF A MADMAN by Christopher Kane

(Continued from page 29)

he spoke. "I hate other people's women," he said. "They're no good to me. Now, have you ever scrambled me so much as an egg?"

"Mr. Mitchum," I said severely, "I have come to do a story. Now, the story will be this way. The story will be that although you've always been given tight-lipped roles, you're really a warm, human man, and this animal picture is wonderful for you—and—"

"Why don't you go home and write it, honey?" he said. "You've got it all figured out; I don't see what you need me for. Reminds me of the time a guy comes up and says, 'We're going to do a story on what you owe your wife,' Know what I told the guy, honey? I told him it was none of his damn business what I owed my wife—"

I was beginning to get scared. "Mr. Mitchum," I said, "wasn't there something interesting about the way you got this part? I mean, didn't a lot of people think you couldn't play this part, and you showed them?"

He looked bored. "Kid, at six o'clock one night, I was given two scripts, and I was supposed to pick one by noon the next day, and I picked this one."

Desperately, I pursued the animal tack. "You were raised on a farm, weren't you? You had animals, didn't you?"

Now that I look back on it, I realize he was trying to shock me so I'd go away. "I had a dog," he said cheerfully. "Had to shoot it through the head; it was eating chickens."

He chewed a little harder on his straw. "I can take animals or leave 'em alone. I don't see why people don't spend their energy on children, or other people, or promoting the peace. Hell, why clutter up your life with Pomeranians?"

"Down with Pomeranians," I cried hysterically, trying to curry favor with this madman. "And do your children have any pets?"

I guess I was running the thing into the ground, but I swear, I didn't know what to say next.

"Eight cats, a dog, and four guinea pigs," he said. "Seven of the cats have never been out from under the front porch; they're half-blind, and wild." He leered at me evilly. "Have to steam 'em out with cyanide some day."

Suddenly, I got it. He was having himself a ball. Some nut comes up and asks you a lot of damn-fool questions, so you give 'em back a lot of damn-fool answers, was his attitude. And like I said before, his tongue was so far in his cheek, it looked like mumps.

After that, I just gave up asking questions. I figured as long as I was already out there on the location, I'd simply stick around and observe the habits of the man.

It was absorbing.

He sings while the make-up man is putting on his grease-paint, for one thing.

He and the makeup man had a classy duel going that day. Something about, "Where shall I go, when I go, where I go—" all's Welles that ends Welles . . .

They also had a tepid sort of argument about Orson Welles. The makeup man was anti; Bob was pro.

It ended in a draw, and they dropped it.

"You still working so hard?" the make-up guy said. "Weren't you doing three pictures all at once a while ago?"

Mitchum laughed bitterly. "With a slight case of pneumonia, besides. You know, I finally took off for Catalina one day, and I was sitting in the middle of some water, staring at the bottom of the boat, because I didn't really believe I was there, and by God, some little boat pulls up next to me and says, 'You're Mitchum, aren't you? You'd better get back; the studio's got a call out for you.'"

He sighed. "Last night, a guy phones me. 'Got a swell picture,' he says. 'You'll love it.'

"'When?' I say.

"'Laid in Oregon,' he says. 'Beautiful location. You can hunt and fish—'

"'When?' I say.

"'Studio'll send a car for you, too,' he says. 'Get you a house. You can take your family—'

"I'm a patient guy. I'm still sitting there saying, 'When?'

"'Loretta Young, too,' he says.

"I blow up. 'When?'

"'The day you finish Red Pony,' he says."

Mitchum got out of the makeup chair.

"What'd you tell the guy?" the makeup man said.

"I told him plenty," Bob said very brightly.

He walked out of the fake ranch house where production planning and makeup were housed. He was singing, "Don't you wish your baby had big fat legs like mine?"

The little boy, Peter Miles, who's playing John Steinbeck's child hero, Tom, in The Red Pony, came running up to him.

Mitch (who of course plays Billy Buck, the ranch-hand who was "half-horse, and the horses knew it") broke a switch off a nearby tree with an easy sweep of his long arm. Then, staring at Peter, he began to whittle on the wood.

"What are you doing?" Peter asked politely.

"I'm getting this in shape to beat little boys with," Bob said seriously. "I beat my own sons every day."

Peter laughed uproariously, and I had to grin, too. Apparently, it wasn't only interviewers who got the tease technique. And a little child shall show them how to take it, at that.

"I met Josh," Peter said. "He doesn't look like you beat him."

"I make him wear long pants," Bob said, "to cover up the scars."

Josh had been out on the location one day, and somebody'd wanted to take a picture of him on the red pony, but he'd turned the offer down brusquely.

"Naw," he'd said. "I'd rather stick around and watch the kid work—"

"The kid" (Peter) is nine, and Josh is six, but Josh is a Mitchum, which ought to explain it.

Josh also thought the red pony looked an awful lot like Bill Boyd. "All that white hair," he said.

competition for Lassie . . .

I made the acquaintance of the red pony myself. His real name is Flash, but he's Gabilan, in the picture, and he may be a bigger star than Lassie, before he gets through.

I also met his stand-in, an almost white pony, and Bob advised me not to get too close.

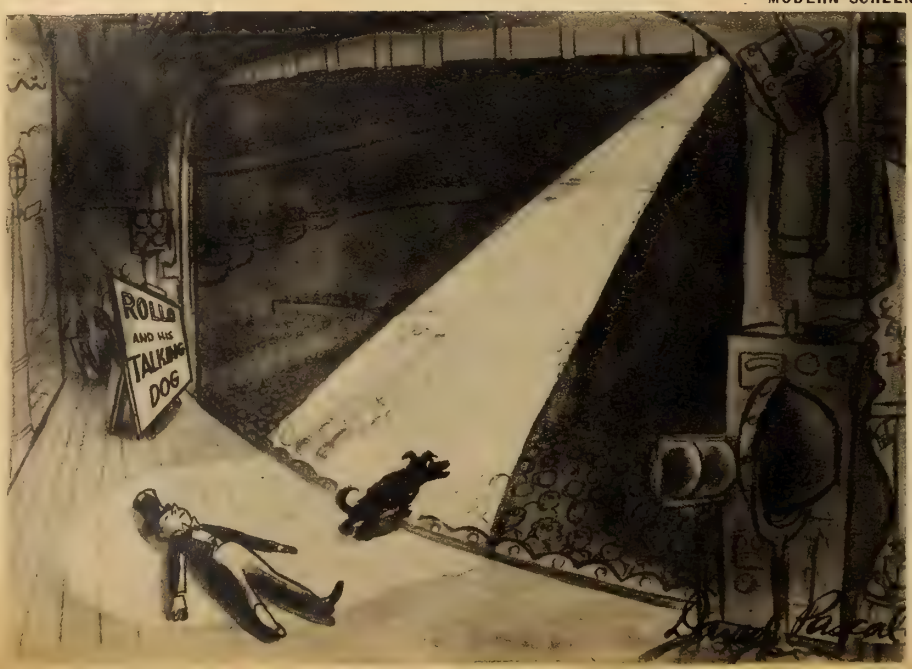
"Killed two men last week," he said sadly. For about two and a half seconds, I even believed that.

Finally, it was time for me to go home, and I set my face determinedly, and said, "Please, Mr. Mitchum, just answer me one thing straight. What are you anxious to do after this picture winds up? What about your future?"

"Okay," he said, "I'll tell you. I haven't had a vacation for seven years; I haven't had a day off since before I went into the army. I haven't been any place where a phone couldn't reach me at four o'clock in the morning.

"What would I like to do when this picture winds up? I'd like to go to jail, and sit down for a week!"

So you see, fellas, why I haven't got a story? Couldn't you have asked me to interview Director Milestone? Or Myrna Loy? Or the makeup man? Or even the darn pony? Anybody but that big, muscular, loud-singing, crazy Mitchum.



INFORMATION DESK

by Beverly Linet

Welcome back Don Taylor (above with ye Info Desk), who just signed a Mark Hellinger contract and draws the lead in The Naked City. Don (the memorable Pinky of Winged Victory) was born in Freeport, Pa., Dec. 13, 1920. He's 6'1½" tall, weighs 175 lbs., and has brown eyes and sandy hair. Write to him at Universal, Universal City, Calif., for a picture, and if you'd like a story on him, vote for him on our poll. You'll also see him in Song of the Thin Man.

ANNE SARGENT debuts as Don's wife in Naked City. She was born in Pittston, Pa., on Nov. 18, 1924. Is 5'4" tall, and has hazel eyes and brown hair. Scored on the N. Y. stage opposite handsome John Heath in Boy Who Loved Twice. Is unattached. Can also be reached at Universal.

You loved HOWARD DUFF as Soldier in Brute Force, you'll see him next in Naked City, and you can hear him in the lead on "The Adventures of Sam Spade." Howard was born in Bremerton, Wash., on Nov. 24, 1917. Is 6' tall, weighs 175 lbs., and has blue eyes and brown hair. Unmarried. Lots of mail sent to him at Universal will help give him the stardom he deserves.

ROBERT KENDALL was Hassen in Song of Scheherazade, and this cute 18-year-old newcomer was born in Battle Creek, Mich. He's 5'7", and has dark hair and eyes. Welcomes fan mail at Universal, and Joan Eucker, 3915 Carpenter Avenue, Bronx, N. Y., has his fan club.

You have the questions! I have the answers! Let's get together. It's Beverly Linet, INFORMATION DESK, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Don't forget the self-addressed stamped envelope.

Oh, His Helpless Heart...when you wear Jergens

Pink Frosting

New Fatal Love Shade in Jergens Matchmates

Are you cruel enough to look so luscious! New Pink Frosting exaggerates your charm — but dangerously.

Pink Frosting Powder — a new thrill of delicious color on your skin.

Pink Frosting Lipstick — a maddening ripeness on your lips.

They're shade-mates in new Jergens Matchmates. Just achingly lovely together — on you. Fragrant new powder — even newer lipstick — velvetized for closest cling. Both yours (if you dare) in Matchmates, for $1.00 (plus tax). See Matchmates — in 6 other rapturous shade-pairs, too.

New Powder
New Lipstick
shade-mated
both for $1.00
(plus tax)

1. Big boudoir box of new Jergens Powder
2. Full-size new Jergens Lipstick

See Matchmates — choice of 7 rapturous shade-pairs, including new Pink Frosting.

JERGENS FACE POWDER
also in 25c and 10c "compact sizes".
(All 7 heart-break shades.)

FREE POWDER KIT. Try new "Pink Frosting" and Jergens 6 other heart-break powder shades! All free!

Mail Coupon to: Box 37, Cincinnati, Ohio
(In Canada: The Andrew Jergens Co., Ltd., Perth, Ontario.)
265

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Paste coupon on penny postcard, if you wish.)

with this fragrant, luxurious talcum powder

KEEP FRESHER! Bathe, then soothe every curve of your body with lots of Cashmere Bouquet Talc. Instantly your skin feels gloriously, fragrantly fresher.

FEEL SMOOTHER! For chafable spots, use extra Cashmere Bouquet Talc, a satin-smooth sheath of protection. Girdles slip on like magic!

STAY DAINTIER! Prolong bathtub freshness by using Cashmere Bouquet Talc generously and often. It gives your whole person the fragrance men love!

Ultra-luxurious is Cashmere Bouquet Dusting Powder . . . smartly packaged, with huge velour puff!

Cashmere Bouquet Talc

66 . with the fragrance men love

GLORIFY YOUR HAIR

How to flatter your newest hair-style by keeping your tresses as sparkling as a movie star's!

By Carol Carter, Beauty Editor

■ Movie girls have new hair styles with each picture, and only healthy tresses can take these studio demands. Joan (Northwest Stampede) Leslie keeps her red-gold hair always shining. It's professionally dressed when she's doing a picture; otherwise she cares for it at home. Washes her own locks and "marvellous," says she, is the way her new miracle shampoo keeps hair in condition. You have no studio demands, but re-styling is fun. Like Joan's, your hair should be in condition. Begin with the right shampoo, such as the new liquid one that cleans in a jiffy and shines hair like a Hollywood star's.

Before: Brush, brush, brush. Twist your wrist so that hair is swept outwards. Often wipe the brush on a towel to remove excess dust. When scalp is a-tingle, begin a warm oil treatment. Apply the oil with a pad of cotton to scalp and hair ends, and massage until your arms call "quits." Wrap your head in a towel and read for an hour while the lubrication gets in its good work.

For fast sudsing, wet your hair before applying shampoo. Use both hands for a vigorous "suds scrub." To clean the ends, add a drop or two of fresh shampoo and squeeze the suds through the strands as you would through a piece of cloth. Now rinse until every trace of suds vanishes down the drain.

After: Remove all possible moisture by towel-drying your hair. If it needs the lubrication of brilliantine or hair cream because of an unusual amount of "fly," now, while hair is still damp, is the time to apply it. After the toweling, everyone should brush hair almost dry.

Roll curls in even strands and carefully pin them in the shape of a cinnamon bun. While they set, tie your head in a pretty net. The new hair-do will soon be ready, made very glamorous by the texture and sheen of your hair!

Revlon's NEW "Fashion plate"

The only cream wafer face make-up in the world!

Not a cake!

Non-drying!

No sponge!

Beauty ideal of all time... Today's goddess wears the make-up of tomorrow . . . Revlon's new "Fashion Plate"! Like a wonderful hat, it brings instant change. Cream Wafer needs no water, no sponge . . . makes everything else old-fashioned! Your own fingertips . . . magic with "Fashion Plate" . . . quickly stroke on the radiant illusion of poreless-as-porcelain perfection! 12 Revlon Genius-Colors, including the very latest, "Cinderella's Pumpkin."

Revlon... creators of world-famous originals in make-up for hands and face.

Touch it...
Feel the difference!
Stroke it on...
See the difference!

PAINTING PHOTOGRAPH • JEWELS, JOHN PUBLIC
COPYRIGHT 1947, REVLON PRODUCTS CORPORATION

The Jack of Hearts Stole some Tarts...

Cookies and Tarts! They taste so wonderful my Dad says they take every trick in the deck. My Mom says of course it's the KARO* Syrup in them. I've noticed myself that KARO does something pretty special to everything you use it in. How are things at your house? Anybody hungry for some extra special cookies?

THE KARO KID

CURRANT LEMON TARTS

1 recipe pastry

2 teaspoons corn starch
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 egg, slightly beaten
½ cup KARO Syrup, Red Label
2 teaspoons grated lemon rind
⅓ cup melted butter or margarine
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 cup currants or raisins

For large dessert tarts, roll pastry ⅛ inch thick. Line tart pans with pastry rounds, cut to extend ½ inch up side of pan, making a shallow shell. Mix corn starch, sugar and salt; add egg and blend well. Add remaining ingredients, mixing well. Fill tart shells with this mixture. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 20 minutes; reduce heat to moderate (350° F.) and bake 15 minutes longer. Remove tarts quickly, while hot. Makes six 4-inch tarts.

For tea tarts, as shown in photograph, follow same recipe, but cut pastry in 3-inch rounds. Line muffin pans; extend pastry ¼ inch up side of pan. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 20 minutes. Makes 30.

© C. P. R. Co. 1947

DATE AND NUT CHEWS

2 eggs
¾ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon almond extract
½ cup sugar
½ cup KARO Syrup, Red or Blue Label
1 cup dates, finely cut
1 cup chopped nut meats
¾ cup sifted all-purpose flour
⅓ cup confectioners' sugar

Place eggs in large bowl. Add salt and almond extract. Beat until light. Gradually beat in sugar and KARO Syrup. Add dates and nut meats and mix well. Fold in sifted flour. Pour into 2 greased 8-inch layer cake pans. Bake in moderate oven (375° F.) 20 to 25 minutes. Remove from oven and while still hot, cut into 1½-inch squares. Shape at once into small balls. Roll in confectioners' sugar. Makes 3 dozen.

These cookies keep remarkably well when stored in tightly covered box or jar.

*KARO is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Company, New York, N. Y.

NUT DROP COOKIES

1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup shortening
½ cup brown sugar
2 eggs
½ cup KARO Syrup, Red or Blue Label
½ teaspoon vanilla
¾ cup coarsely chopped nut meats

Sift together flour and salt. Cream shortening; add sugar; cream until fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each. Add KARO; beat well. Stir in vanilla, nut meats and sifted dry ingredients. Drop by teaspoonfuls on greased baking sheet. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 10 to 12 minutes. Remove from pan at once. Makes 4 dozen.

If desired, place ½ pecan on each cookie before baking.

LADY IN RETIREMENT

(Continued from page 27)

winding coast highway to her tiny little house in Del Monte Forest, overlooking the Blue Pacific. And there she has spent most of her time, preferring not to talk to anyone. She has insisted on working out her problems in the quiet beach town where the people mind their own business, and treat her as a neighbor instead of a star.

It was quite a problem to reach Greer. There's no phone in her house in the woods. When she has to call Hollywood, she climbs out of her bathing suit, and into tailored slacks and blouse, hikes down to the phone in the corner drug store, and stands patiently in the booth while $1.70 in nickels, dimes and quarters make a symphony of chimes as the coins clink into the box. It was on that phone that I finally reached her, via one secretary and umpteen calls, and she agreed to talk with me for MODERN SCREEN, when she came back to Hollywood.

Two days later, sitting in her comfortable, luxurious drawing room, and looking slim and cool in a dazzling white suit, Greer was radiant about her new happiness. It was enough almost to confirm those rumors that she and Dick are reconciling.

"Well, I don't know, Virginia," Greer said with just a suggestion of a twinkle. "Discussing something you're trying to work out is bad, at least until you've reached a decision."

But Greer's eyes were twinkling. Sitting in the living room with warm California sunshine turning her titian hair to fire, she looked like a little girl dreaming about a bright new toy, which she was afraid to touch for fear it might not be there when she reached out her hands.

"I feel wonderful," Greer laughed, ruffling the top-knot on the small, black French poodle, and sinking back into a sea-green couch. "Up in the country, I've been rusticating—taking long walks, gardening, climbing rocks, driving along the craggy coastline—and thinking a lot."

At this point, Joseph, her white-coated butler, announced luncheon, and we continued our talk over scrambled eggs, sliced tomatoes, and hot biscuits.

"Other than that," she said, as we were sitting down, "I've taken up horseback riding again, which required a rare kind of mental courage with me, because I'm frightened to death of horses. But now I can spend two hours on horseback without tiring. I have taken my first fall, too, so I am not so scared any more. Yes, I practice in the ring, but I enjoy more the ride up through the forest. No, I'm not up to jumping yet."

The rustication was almost a complete retreat. For the first couple of months, while she was recovering her health, Greer spent almost every morning sitting under the umbrella chairs on her porch.

After she began to feel stronger, she swam and then took up horseback riding, wearing a brown riding outfit. Only once or twice a week did she go into town.

Back in Hollywood, Greer was seen occasionally with a group of friends that included Richard Ney. The gossip columnists pounced on the possibilities of a reconciliation. But then Greer had just tossed her bright curls and said nothing. "You know," Greer said, momentarily forgetting the delicious food on her plate, and with a brooding look in her eye for a minute, "about the separation, I felt as if it weren't anybody's concern but Dick's and mine. When one of the columnists phoned me, I returned her call because she was a friend of mine. But I didn't want to. I didn't think it was any of her business. But later, my business manager said, 'Yes, it is, Greer. It IS her business.' And I guess he was right, at that. So I gave out the story."

Her admission of a rift in the Garson-Ney household was brief and dignified. Her statement to the press read:

"This is not an easy or a hasty decision. But like many other married couples, we have had personal problems and difficulties. Unfortunately—at this time—they seem to make continuation impossible."

That was all. But, although the newspapers were anxious to print any item referring to her private troubles, and several spurious "quotes" were printed, they didn't get any facts from Greer herself.

"People would send me clippings of little squibs and hints in the papers about us," Greer admitted over a tasty dessert of fruit cup. "I used to feel a quick stab of dismay in my tummy. Things like that bothered me terribly at first. But after all these months up there by the ocean, where life is calm and peaceful, I've worked out a new philosophy. Now, when I hear about those items in the gossip columns, I just chuckle. I don't get upset any more. And I'll probably live a lot longer."

All during this personal struggle, Greer's professional life hasn't been running any too smoothly, either. Her less considerate critics used columns of space to point out that after one bad picture, Adventure, Miss Garson was having script trouble with her next. They picked a familiar phrase to harp on: "There's nothing wrong with Greer Garson that a good picture won't cure."

"It's certainly true, isn't it?" said Greer, with a chuckle. "What I went through on A Woman of My Own was really something. First, we worked three weeks and then they switched leading men. I was doubtful about doing the picture, but yielded. Then the director was ill for weeks; the censors changed the story around until the basic plot was weakened. During a location trip, I was almost swept out to sea in an accident that ruined my health for six months; and, finally, when we previewed the results . . . well . . . .!!"

Director George Cukor admitted ruefully to her that the people in the theater weren't "emotionally involved."

"If you mean they laughed in the wrong place," Greer grinned, "you're quite right!"

The studio bosses, who had threatened, pleaded, argued and finally ordered her to make the picture in the beginning, allowed that her original fears had been justified and said they'd make amends.

"It had turned out just as badly as I said it would in the first place," Greer sighed. "But we made it over—and now it's much better. We had another preview and the audience liked it. That's one of the reasons I'm happier. Another is that I have my health back."

Another trial has been the so-called "feud" between Greer and the new British star, Deborah Kerr, which is supposed to exist. Greer still hasn't figured out who dreamed that up out of the blue.

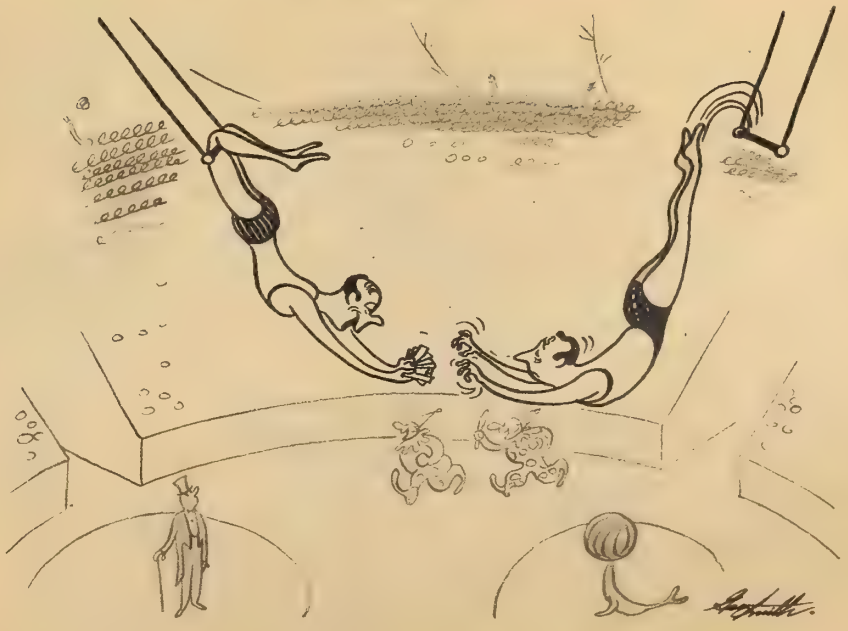
"I've never feuded with anyone, either privately or professionally. Why should I be feuding with Deborah?" she demanded, her blue eyes ablaze. "She's my fellow countrywoman. She's also a very fine actress and a nice girl. But that's no reason for me to get huffy. Heavens! M-G-M's big enough for both of us!

"One can't expect a masterpiece every year. No one can hit 100 per cent all the time. I'm really very lucky. I had a lot of good breaks for a long time.

"I don't know what's ahead in any department," Greer added, "but I know this, I'm not going to waste an hour of any lovely day in worry or negative thought. I'm not looking back. I'm looking ahead."

Just as I was leaving, Greer had a phone call. After a brief—but intimate—conversation in hushed and excited mumblings, she returned to walk me down the graveled driveway to my car.

She looked like a girl who had just received her first bid to a prom. Her cheeks were pink and her eyes sparkled. I drove away thinking there might be something to the rumors of her reconciliation with Dick. Who knows?



"Pick a card—any card."

A YOUNG MAN'S FANCY

(Continued from page 59)

came along.

The new house was charming, in its individual fashion. It had a huge living room with a fireplace the size of a neanderthal cave stretching all across one end. There was a balcony along two sides of the room and the bedrooms opened off that. Only thing was, the stairs were outside.

Mike surveyed it dubiously. "I can see I gotta stay sober, if I'm gonna live here."

Frank, who only drinks "cokes," merely grinned. "Good for you to stay sober."

They soon found that the enormous fireplace, while decorative, simply devoured wood. One cold night the wood ran out and they sat there shivering for awhile. Then Frank went to the door and stared out reflectively. It was a moonlit night with everything silhouetted neatly against the sky.

Gradually, Frank got the look of bright mischief on his face that only his very best friends have seen.

Mike groaned in alarm. "Now, Frank, take it easy. Not that picket fence next door—she'll have you arrested!"

But Frank said, "I've always thought those pickets were too close together. They'd look a lot better a little farther apart." And he vanished out the door.

He was back in half an hour with enough wood to last the rest of the evening. And the lady next door apparently never even noticed that her fence pickets were spaced differently next day.

It was while they lived here that Frank and Mike began work on the picture script which is so important to them both. Mike had written a short sketch about a character who fascinated him. The guy was strictly a grifter. The kind who goes into a restaurant alone and broke, and comes out with a free five-course dinner inside him and a blonde hanging onto his arm. A smooth talker and a fastworker and no good for anything or anybody.

Mike had thought the piece might do as a script for a short. But he hadn't gotten around to doing anything definite about it, and one day he put it in a heap with some other stuff he was going to ship East to get out of the way.

"What's this?" Frank asked, leafing through it idly.

Mike explained, but Frank wasn't listening. He was reading, and when he'd finished, he said seriously, "Mike, this is terrific. Why don't you really go to work on it and make it into a picture script?"

"Will you help?" They had written a radio sketch not long before, so Mike knew Frank could write.

"Sure. I'll bet we could really make something out of this. Let's start tonight."

That was the beginning. Gradually the original idea was expanded, and changed and hopped up till it was hardly recognizable as the little character sketch. Frank would lie awake at night, thinking about it. At three or four in the morning he would suddenly jump out of bed and run into Mike's room.

"Mike, wake up! I've got an idea!"

Mike would open one eye. "Listen, kid, have your ideas in the daytime."

"Oh, get up, will you? This is important!"

For the next couple of hours they would go over and over the thing, brooding about angles, arguing approaches, with Mike, by now as enthusiastic as Frank, acting it out.

Finally Frank would say, "Let's call Greg in New York and see what he thinks."

"Greg" is Frank Gregory who works for Twentieth Century-Fox in New York. He never gets excited, which is why he's such a good critic for the other two. He gives his honest opinion, good or bad, and Frank accepts it with respect for Greg's judgment. They are very good pals those two, having been through a few adventures together. When Greg first got out of the Army, he came to see Frank in Hollywood, a gleam in his eye.

"You've got a car, and I've got some saved-up cash burning a hole in the pocket of this nice, new civilian suit. Let's take a trip to San Francisco."

They left that night. The jalopy creaked and groaned, but it did all right for the first thirty miles. Then tires started blowing out with the regularity of machine-gun fire. Fortunately, it was a bright, moonlight night but even so, changing tires got a little monotonous.

"We ought to have some of that seasick medicine your mother fed you on the boat that time," Greg said, grinning. "Remember—she's always telling about it?"

It's one of the Latimore family's favorite stories. When Frank was about five years old his mother took him to Europe with her. She was afraid the boy would be sea-sick so she took along some medicine which a friend recommended very highly.

"They give it to mountain climbers for altitude sickness," the friend said, "and it's wonderful for sea-sickness too. One pill three times a day."

That was fine. But little Frank, exploring their cabin the first day out, found the bottle and thought those pink tablets looked just like candy. Down the hatch they went, the whole bottle of them, and his mother almost died of fright when she found out about it. She got the ship doctor, and he said Frank would have to work them off by doing mountain climbing, to counterbalance the effects. Of course there aren't any mountains on ships, so five-year-old Frankie was set to work climbing around the cabin. Up on chairs, climbed Frank, over the bed, chinning himself on the bureau, getting rid of the excess energy generated by the pills. And they certainly would have been a fine thing to have along for stimulation in changing tires!

cross country trek . . .

After the boys left San Francisco, they drove cross-country for about five hundred miles. How the car held together through that is the mystery of all time. They found an old deserted mine on the top of a mountain when they were exploring a country road, and had a fine time wandering through its labyrinths.

When they came out of the mine, they sat and sunbathed in the nude to get a complete tan, secure in the belief that they were twenty miles or so from civilization. It was a considerable shock when they got their clothes back on and walked half a dozen yards in the other direction to find a farmer's wife placidly hanging out clothes on a back porch which they had thought was part of the abandoned mine!

Frank's next adventure after that trip was falling in love. He's only twenty-one and while he had had plenty of girls, he'd never been serious about any of them before. This girl was attractive and charming and—well, they fell in love or thought they did. Long telephone calls, dates almost every night, that warm happy feeling when they knew they were going to see each other—the works!

But then Frank had to go to Canada to makes scenes for 13 Rue Madeleine, and somehow things looked different. Oh, for a while he spent most of his time and all his money on the long distance telephone, trying to persuade the girl to come and meet him in New York and get married. Fortunately she wouldn't, and it was just as well. Because in a couple of months they had both decided that maybe that moonlight and roses feeling wasn't the lasting kind—that it had been fun, but there were a lot of other people in the world they wanted to meet before they settled down to any one of them.

A few months ago, Frank was called "Would you mind repeating that complaint to Mr. Jones? Mr. Jones is our trouble shooter."

"You'll know on sight - it's right"

JANIS PAIGE

Right from the start, "The Silver Service of the Stars" gives your table the right Hollywood setting. More pieces . . . more beauty . . . more quality—extra weight and an extra overlay of pure silver at wear point. See your jeweler. Choose your pattern in the service that gives you MORE FOR YOUR "SILVER" DOLLAR. Complete services start at $34.75. Or, you may start with 5-piece Place Settings at $4.50. (No Federal Tax)

JANIS PAIGE
Starring in WALLFLOWER
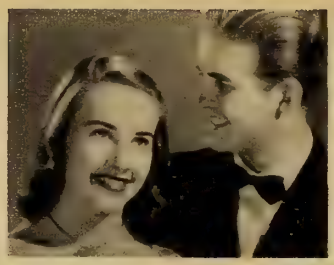
A Warner Bros. Prod.

1881
ROGERS
silverplate
by ONEIDA LTD.
silversmiths

Capri
Del Mar
Surf Crest

Fame and fortune! Thrilling dates! "I'm a lucky girl," says Jeanne. "But it's really my SweetHeart complexion that brings me all this happiness."



Jeanne Decker,
ENTRANCING COVER GIRL, Says

Beauty's My Business—

So I changed to the Gentle FLOATING LIFT of SWEETHEART SOAP'S Extra Lather!

Discover SweetHeart's Floating Lift Beauty Care! Night and morning, massage your face one minute with SweetHeart's extra lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Skin is cleansed . . . stimulated . . . more radiant!

• "It pays me to choose truly helpful complexion care," says beautiful Jeanne Decker. "And this amazing SweetHeart Care is simply divine. It leaves my skin soft, smooth, and radiant."

You, too, will rave about this beauty care! For pure, mild SweetHeart Soap gives up to twice as much lather as average beauty soaps. And this soft, billowing lather has a floating lift. Pictures taken through the microscope prove this amazing, gentle action on the skin.

Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings...lift off—float away—dirt and rough skin flakes. Your complexion looks smoother, fresher, lovelier—for its true beauty is revealed!

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

• For tub and shower, you can now also get the new, large bath size. SweetHeart's extra lather with its floating lift is simply marvelous!

East to consider a part in Bathsheba, the James Mason play. Mike, whose wife and baby were staying with her family in Brooklyn, decided to come along and get a job in New York.

"Not an acting job, an eating job," he explained. "I can't get my family out of that three meals a day habit, and acting doesn't seem to be paying me very well these days."

The Bathsheba deal fell through, but there were various other things in the offing to keep Frank in New York. He took a room in a hotel and weekends he went out to Darien where his mother and step-father live. He had gone to school in Darien and there were plenty of his old friends around.

He used to take walks along the sandy shore of the Sound. It was good to be by yourself sometimes and think about what you wanted to do with your life.

just a cheap little house . . .

It was during one of those walks that Frank decided to buy a house in New York. A cheap house. And when the boy makes up his mind to something, he is pretty definite about it. He only grinned at his sister Trista when she said he was crazy, that there was no such thing as a cheap house in New York. Strangely enough it was through her, actually, that he found a house at last.

"Why don't you go and see Charles Hopkins at Pease and Elliman," she suggested. "He's an ex-actor, you know, and a very nice guy."

Pease and Elliman are one of the biggest real estate firms in New York. Frank could imagine the shudder of horror with which they would greet his announcement of the low price he wanted to pay.

"Thanks," he told Trista, "but I guess I'll look around for awhile myself." And that's what he set out to do.

The "looking around," was conspicuously unsuccessful. At last, in desperation, Frank paid a call on the imposing offices of Pease and Elliman.

Mr. Hopkins turned out to be a pleasant gentleman with a ready smile and a sympathetic ear for Frank's tale of woe and despair.

Amazingly, incredibly, the first house he showed him was The House. Oh, not that it was any dream home! Just an old brownstone in an unfashionable neighborhood on West 95th Street.

But the house itself was solidly built, and managed somehow to have a quality of dignity about it that appealed to Frank. He could visualize it with some of the partitions removed to make bigger rooms. With one big, wide window across the front on each floor. With a combined living room and work room and "little theater" all in one. There were four floors all together—plenty of room for Mike and his family, too.

his best girl . . .

Frank is crazy about Mike's little four-year-old Carol Ann. She interrupts their work, and demands to be taken to her uncle's ice cream parlor for chocolate cones, and just as the flame of genius is burning bright, Carol Ann is likely to decide she wants to sit on Frank's lap. But she's a cutie, that one. She is convinced that Frank's last name is Ratamorgue, and nothing will keep her from calling him that. With an elfin smile that never fails to enchant him.

One of these days he'll probably meet a girl and it will really be love and they'll marry and have some little Carol Anns of their own. Meanwhile, you can go on dreaming about him, because he's heart-whole and fancy-free, and the best looking twenty-one-year-old male you ever saw in all your life!

ARE RUSSELL AND MADISON MARRIED?

(Continued from page 24)

What day?

Furthermore, Gail used to be a moody, strange character who'd cry at the drop of a hat, and if you didn't drop the hat, she'd cry anyhow.

Suddenly, she's warmer, and more friendly, and a lot more hilarious.

Guy seems more relaxed lately, too.

Besides which, they act happier together. No more battles, no more walking out on each other. Peace, it's wonderful. Is it permanent?

Guy and Gail date every night; that much is known. They've reconciled all minor habits of taste which might make trouble. He likes to dine early; she can't stand the sight of a lamb-chop until half-past eight.

"You don't live a healthy life," he used to say.

She'd stare at him. "Don't be dull." And that would be the signal for an argument.

repeat performance . . .

Now he eats at four in the afternoon, and then again at nine with her, and they couldn't be more delighted with the arrangement.

"You drink too much coffee," he used to tell her.

"I like too much coffee," she'd say.

Now she's cut down on coffee terrifically. "Just leave me enough to keep my pesky eyes pried open," she begs, and that much he leaves her, and she struggles along on it as best she can.

Once he was the most tardy man in town.

Now, if he stops to have his shoes shined, he's on the phone apologizing. And if he's out on studio business at night, he calls Gail every fifteen minutes to describe the atmosphere, the surroundings, and his personal opinion of how long it can possibly last.

And Gail, who always refused to be caught dead or even half-dead at any social function she didn't crave to be caught at, now listens when Guy says, "You really should, you know," and they go to the thing together, arm-in-arm, smiling through clenched teeth.

He's been wonderful for her that way. "So you're bored," he'd say. "They're paying you good money to be bored."

"Okay, Moe," she'd say. "Okay."

There are small tendernesses between them that friends seem to feel are fraught with meaning.

They remember the last Academy Awards, and Gail mentioning to Guy that

STARDUST—$5 WORTH

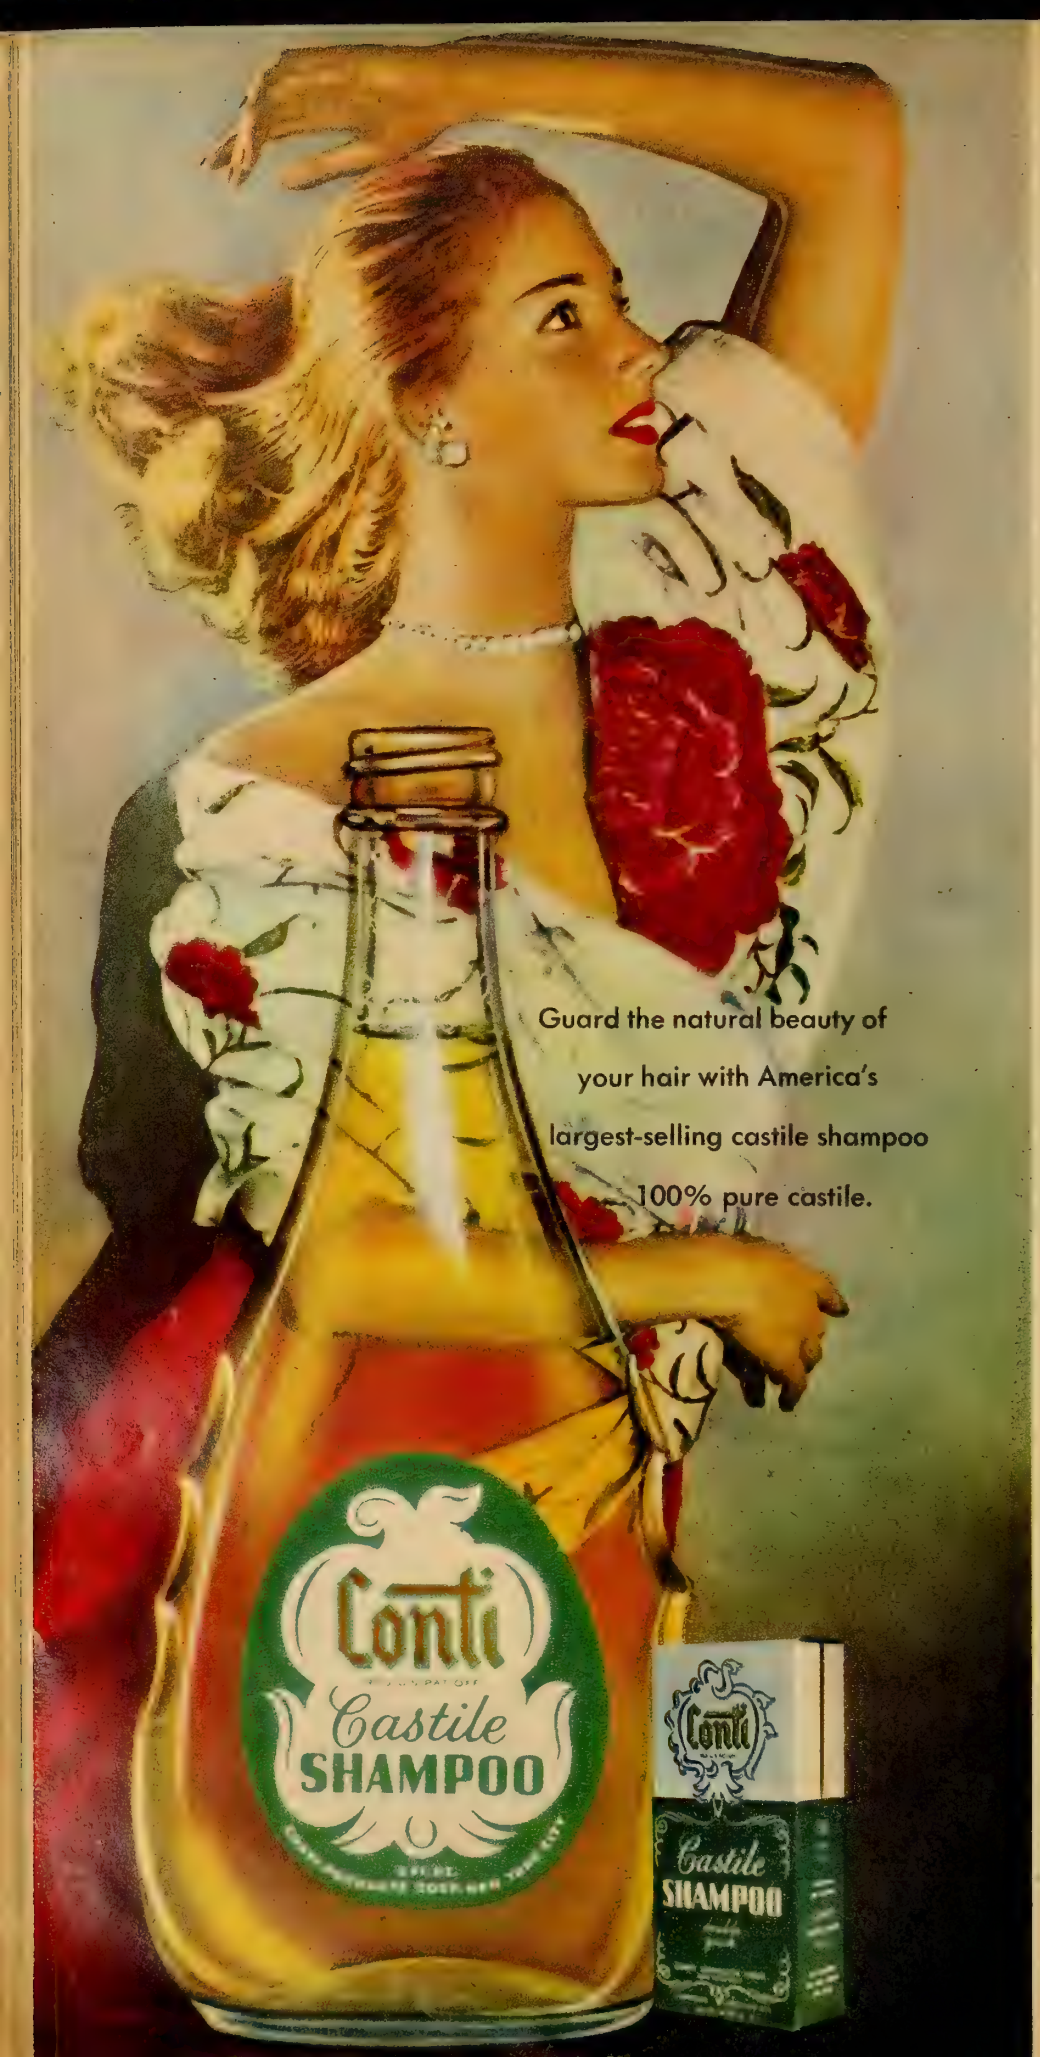
Starry October skies are beautiful, we admit. But the walking stars of Hollywood cast a glow all their own—wherever they go. If you've seen one in your town, we'd like to hear about it, but only if they do more than twinkle. You'll know what we mean if you glance through our "I Saw It Happen" boxes, because there the stars walk and talk just for you. We'll toss a handful of stardust your way for every short, amusing and true anecdote we use. Five dollars, that is, if the stars are with you. Send your anecdote to the "I Saw It Happen," Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York. Star gazing? How about giving us a peek?

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Yes, even finest soaps and soap shampoos hide the natural lustre of your hair with dulling soap film

● Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave dulling soap film! ● Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. ● Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! ● Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant! ● Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! ● Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! ● Buy Halo at any drug or cosmetic counter.

Reveals the Hidden Beauty of Your Hair!



she'd never won anything. "Not in my whole life," she said mournfully digging one toe in the carpet.

Shortly thereafter, he brought her a tiny gold Oscar, delicately engraved. "For Having a Heart," it said.

She must have bawled for half an hour, and loved every minute of it.

Guy worries about her health, and makes her drink water, and swipes cigarettes out of her hands, and brings her one old beat-up rose every night. "We gotta save money, honey—"

This is to tease her, because she used to complain when he came in with armloads of expensive flowers.

But whether they're saving money because they're busy being a responsible married couple, nobody knows with any degree of certainty.

It's peculiar how mysterious situations like this one originate. In the beginning, when Guy and Gail started being serious, there was trouble with their respective studios.

protection . . .

It wasn't anybody's fault. Studios have to protect their own interests, and while the romance was good publicity for both Paramount and Selznick, a marriage would not have been. At least, that's the way the studios had it figured, and they're fairly good at figuring.

They feel until young stars are very firmly established, they're better box-office if they're single.

Then some fairly ugly rumors broke. "Guy's going around with Gail to grab space in columns."

The same thing was said about Gail.

It wasn't conducive to mutual trust and affection.

Afterwards, the stories came out about their being engaged, and there were more embarrassing repercussions, and for a while, Gail and Guy just stopped seeing each other.

Now they're back together again, obviously in love, and possibly married. If they are married, it may be they feel they're protecting themselves and their marriage by keeping it secret. They've had too many big fusses, and flashy newspaper stories, and bad feelings to risk getting hurt again.

So there you are, and where are you? You can safely say Guy Madison and Gail Russell are an extra-handsome young couple, crazy about each other, and having a wonderful time. But if you want to do any guessing beyond that, you're strictly on your own.

Ava Gardner . . .

soon to be seen in MGM's important picture The Hucksters. When we lined up beautiful Ava for a fashion shot, we couldn't make up our mind whether to photograph her with up-hair or down-hair—she looked so ravishing both ways.

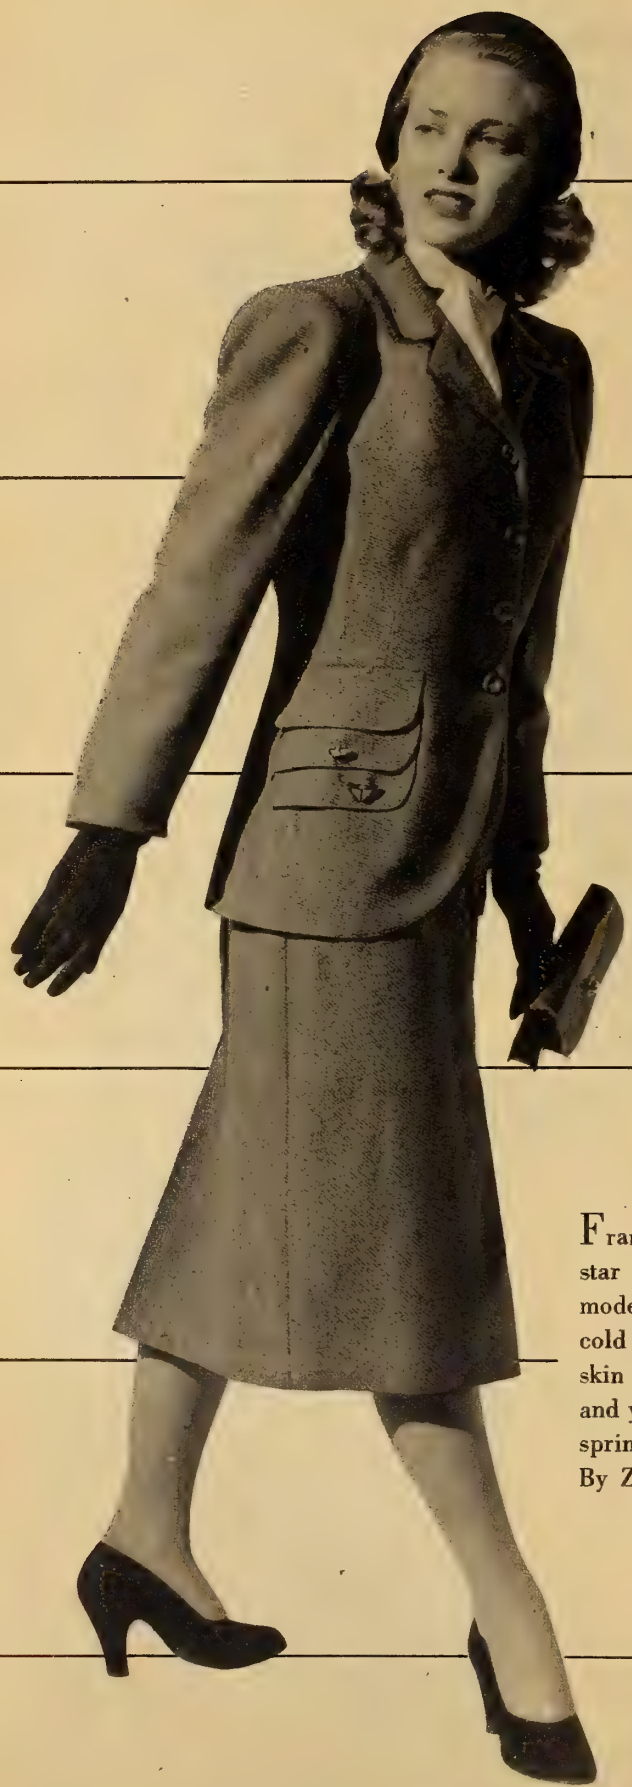
But we had no trouble at all deciding the suit Ava was to wear. Naturally, we chose the heavenly royal blue with the silver nailheads—cut, as anyone can see, to say awfully nice things about your figure.

It's 100% Pacific wool. Also in grey, forest green, or black. Comes in sizes 10 to 18.

A Colleen Original About $25

To find out where to buy this suit, please turn to page 88.

modern screen fashions



When leaves fall

By Connie Bartel, Fashion Editor

Frances Rafferty, Eagle-Lion star soon to appear in Kenny, models a suit to meet the first cold snap. It's a crisp wool shark-skin with a trio of pocket flaps—and you'll love it from now until spring. Grey or tan. Sizes 10-18. By Zimco About $20

FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 88

you want a new suit

Eagle-Lion's Frances Rafferty poses in a sophisticated cutaway suit with a double march of gold buttons, and a general air of ready money. In that smart and beautiful fabric—all wool flannel. Black, brown, grey, teal, others. It comes in sizes 10-18. By Joselli About $30

When leaves turn vivid

Teen-agers, you never had it so good! Who else can wear a glad plaid like this—tricked up with velvet collar, cuffs, weskit peplum? Red and navy; black-green; brown-blue, in Deering Milliken's wool mixture. 8-16. A Teentimer OHriginal $8.98

Teen-agers, you never had it so easy! Who else can wear a gad-about gabardine like this—decked with a silver chatelaine? Red, grey, royal, kelly, teal, aqua, in Labtex rayon. Sizes 8-16. Designed for teens by the teens' own Grace Norman. A Teentimer OHriginal $8.98

you want a bright dress

FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 88

The knitted suit is news

Frances Rafferty, Eagle-Lion star, models a suit that's knitted —big fashion news for fall. Fits dreamy, never wrinkles, has a gold pocket—what more can you ask of a suit? Rose, wine, green or brown wool. Sizes 9-15; 10-18. By Lofties · About $25

FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 88

DD
SOPHISTICATE... a wonder of a draped dress by the inimitable Doris Dodson!
Sophisticate... YOU at your "party prettiest" in Mallinson's Whirlaway rayon crepe;
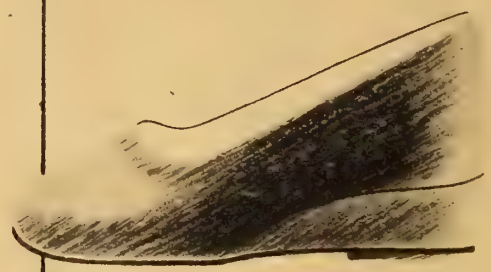
China Gold, Victorian Lilac, Tropic Aqua,
Black. Junior sizes 9 to 15. About $15.00.
Write for the name of your local shop...
Doris Dodson, St. Louis 1, Missouri
Doris Dodson
JUNIOR ORIGINALS
ELLIOT CLARKE

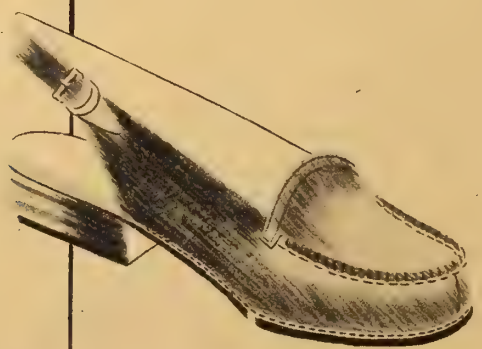
Love to be in your shoes

• Love the glint of gold piping on your open-work pumps. Black, brown, green. Suede or calf. Open or closed back. Styl-Eez by Selby About $9.95



• Love your flats—crazy about platforms. Closed heel-and-toe runabouts—in green, blue, grey, black or brown suede. By Sandler of Boston About $7.50

• Love that graceful lattice vamp—never saw your legs look so pretty. Wine green, brown or black suede. By Carmelletes About $8.95



• Love the comfort of moccasins—plus the oomph of a slingback. Black suede or brown calf with cute white stitching. A Connie Shoe About $6

FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 88

GOOD NEWS

(Continued from page 12)

song socially for the next two weeks. Right after this she came down with a bad attack of old-fashioned hay fever which, in Hollywood, we swankily call an allergy.

But then as I told you, everyone was there—the young generation of stars, too. I spotted Peter Lawford who seems to go out socially more than any other young man I know; June Allyson, cute as a button, was with her Dick Powell. How she loves him, and I must say he returns it. How could he help it, she's so adorable. I think that Dick is glad that Joan Blondell, his ex-wife, married Mike Todd. Joan has been so unhappy over this romance (hers and Mike's, I mean) and we are all glad to see her bright and happy again.

* * *

One reason Bette Davis and her husband, Sherry (William Grant Sherry, to be exact) are so happy is because Bette is just as interested in his career as he is in hers.

When Sherry was just about ready to exhibit some of his best paintings at the Laguna Art Show, it was Bette who selected appropriate frames, and then did the job of framing them, herself. Believe me, everyone was interested in seeing them.

Say what you will, there's nobody like Clark Gable. With his charm, it will be a long time before the King is displaced. Younger men have come along to dazzle the gals, but none has yet hit with the force of a Gable.

Oh, sure—there have been times when Clark has miffed me, and long periods would go by when we didn't see one another. But it is impossible to be in his company more than a split second, and not fall under his fascinating spell again.

Not long ago, he came to see me and we had a grand time drinking coffee in the garden and talking over old times, and new ones.

When he raved about Ava Gardner in The Hucksters I accused him of having a weakness for the girl. "Nope," he denied. "If I fell in love with every girl I admired, I wouldn't have time for fishing and hunting. Those are my two real loves, Louella."

I believed him. And sad though the word may be, I think Clark will never marry again. There's an unforgettable shrine in his heart, marked CAROLE LOMBARD, that goes too deep.

* * *

And now it is time to say "That's all" again this month—but I never feel I lose contact with you because your letters are so interesting. Let me know if you are as enthusiastic about Louis Jourdan as I am—after you see him in The Paradine Case. Or—do you think Larry Parks has slipped since The Jolson Story? How do you like Burt Lancaster in his he-man portrayals in such movies as The Killers? Too realistic—or just right? I'll have a close up on Burt for you next month. Until then—So long.

FLORIDA GLAMOUR FOR YOU—BY MAIL

florida fashions

$3.98 each

JUNIOR SIZES 9 TO 15

"Highland Lass"

FOR SCHOOL
FOR DATING
AT HOME
AT WORK

A slick trick that looks like a two-piecer but isn't! The peplum is flip, the collar prim. Made of expensive-looking, jewel-toned plaid cotton with a rich mercerized luster. Front pleat slims the hips, adds width to the dancing full skirt. Bright buttoned, pique trimmed. Washable.

Write for FREE Style Folder
SEND NO MONEY • WE MAIL ON APPROVAL
Full satisfaction or money back

florida fashions
SANFORD 466 FLORIDA

Send on approval ..... "Highland Lass." I will pay postman $3.98 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. I may return purchase within ten days for full refund if not completely satisfied. (You save C.O.D. fee by enclosing purchase price plus 20c for postage; same refund privilege.)

Circle Size: 9 11 13 15
Circle Color: RED Plaid BLUE Plaid

Name .....
Address .....
City & State .....

There's Something about a Bali

THE Bali BRA REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

The bra designed with you in mind

BALI BRASSIERE CO., INC.
New York • Chicago • Los Angeles

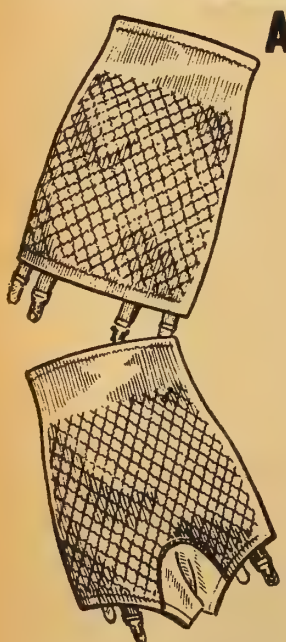
Restrain Yourself... in Real-form

Don't reach for that cookie but do reach for a Real-form Girdle or Panty Girdle! Raschel-Knitted of fashioned to fit Lastex with removable crotch. Can't run! $5.00.

REAL-FORM GIRDLE CO., 358 Fifth Ave., New York 1
Write for Free Illustrated Booklet, Dept. 4D

Lovely JOAN MURRAY, selected as Miss Stardust of 1947, now a Walter Thornton Pin-Up Girl.

★ Stardust Life-Insured Blouses are tailored for fit perfection, in beautifully washable white, pink and blue acetate rayon crepe. Long or short sleeved classic, convertible collar; sizes 32 to 38. Guaranteed for a whole year's wear. Made by Stardust, Inc., Empire State Building, N. Y. 1



AMAZING FREE TRIAL OFFER

NEW NYLON 2-way stretch GIRDLE

WASHES "LIKE A DREAM"

Here's the new 2-way stretch girdle everyone is talking about . . . chock-full of sturdy built-in elastic, covered with that wonder-material Du Pont Nylon! You'll be thrilled by this fine-denier fabric that washes and dries so miraculously fast . . . never seems to wear out. And you'll be enchanted by the form-hug design that gently molds and controls embarrassing bulges. Makes you look slimmer, taller, feel better. Choose your NEVER-SHRINK NYLON girdle from two lovely styles . . . panty girdle with removable snap button NYLON crotch and removable garter straps, or the beautifully styled regular type. Three fashionable colors, nude, white, and blue.

ENJOY THESE AMAZING FEATURES

- Nylon Fabric
- Non-shrinking
- Dries in Minutes
- Long Wearing
- Form-hug Design
- Low Cost
- 2 Thrilling Styles

10 DAY FREE TRIAL—SEND NO MONEY

Examine and wear this soft, comfortable, slenderizing NYLON girdle for 10 days without risk. You must be convinced that this is the biggest bargain in 2-way stretch girdles you have ever worn, or it costs you absolutely nothing. Send no money . . . just the coupon, NOW!

ANNETTE FASHIONS CO., Dept. K-100
45 E. 17th St., New York 3, N. Y.

☐ Rush_____NYLON girdles ☐ Panty, ☐ Regular. I will pay postman only $3.98 each plus postage. Send_____extra crotches at 49c each C. O. D. plus postage. If not completely satisfied I may return within 10 days for full purchase price refund.

Check size: ☐ Small, ☐ Medium, ☐ Large
Check color: ☐ Nude, ☐ White, ☐ Blue

☐ Check here if you enclose money now. We pay postage. Same refund guarantee.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____STATE_____

BY MAXINE FIRESTONE

Music is charms! Pixie Platter charm bracelet has eight perfect miniature record albums. This is a real collectors item and we're betting you find your favorite—could it be Frankie? $1, plus tax, Saks 34th St., N. Y.

Silver or gold-plated pin with a door knocker that really knocks. Raps for attention on bags, belts, scarfs! Your choice of name or initials. $2.95 covers all cost including tax and postage. Art Colony Industries, 69 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 3.

Button, button, who has the button? La Mode has plenty of them for you to make charm bracelets, necklaces, headbands — even sew them on bobby-socks. These are part of a Sherlock Homes set. 75c ea. A. & S., Bklyn.

MY WIFE'S HUSBAND

(Continued from page 41)

at the time, figuring that this would prevent arguments, even though my wife kept insisting that everything we earned, borrowed or swiped in the way of things like hotel towels, should be shared and shared alike.

I finally gave in.

"Okay," I said. "We'll lump it all together, but from now on in, young woman, you are going to live on a strict allowance of $25 a week, and don't let me hear about needing more, because you asked for this."

June Powell (I am going to drop the Allyson billing, even if she is the most important star on the Metro lot) looked at me with that great big liquid stare and murmured, "I promise."

That was all very well and good. Except that every day or so June would come barging in and exclaim, "Honey, let me have a dollar, will you? The man is here about the faddif turner and I have misplaced my purse."

So I would shell out the dollar or the fifty cents or whatever; because even great, great grandpa Powell back in Arkansas was never a heel about his small change.

I. O. U. plenty . . .

So there came a day.

I was alone in my home, surrounded by knotty pine, and the books I intend to read some day, when the doorbell rang. A man wanted $125 for a couple of cans of movie film the master of the house had ordered. But the master of the house had no money. So he went to the secret panel, twirled the combination and looked inside.

There, neatly stacked in envelopes, each containing $25 in untouched bills, was my wife's complete allowance. I, who after all am Mrs. Powell's husband, share and share alike, took out the necessary $125, paid the man, and put in an I.O.U. for the amount I had borrowed.

When Mrs. Powell returned home that evening, I told her about the I.O.U.

And, oh brother, did I catch hell!

Well, maybe for a family journal it was just the dickens. Anyway, Mrs. Powell looked so cute standing there and dressing me down, that I forgot all about how she had been tapping me for fifty cents here and a dollar there all this time. I could do nothing but take my bawling out gracefully. Then I turned Mrs. Powell over my knee and spanked her, and that was that.

Except that I don't dip into those envelopes any more.

There are just under a thousand reasons why a fellow like me married a girl like June Allyson whose latest picture is Virtuous, with Van Johnson, and a very good one, too. One reason that is very good goes like this—

Mrs. Powell says to Mr. Powell, "Tell the folks why you are glad you married me."

Mr. Powell says to Mrs. Powell, "I'm glad I married you because you always wake up smiling."

Then, some cynic who is well aware that a paralysis sets in on the smiling muscles of the average bride after a few months says, "Does she go to sleep smiling, too?"

She does. As an author of this piece, and the only known living authority on the subject, she does.

Sometimes, in a pensive mood, I get to thinking what a narrow escape I had. But for one exceedingly brilliant thought, I might never have been a part of this long-term matrimonial deal with Mrs. Powell.

About three years ago, I was dating this

(Continued on page 122)

"Fringed Flatterer"

$6.95

A dress to catch any man's fancy! Tailored of full-bodied Spun Rayon with contrasting wool and cotton fringe on shoulder tabs, pocket flaps and cuffs. Has a snug set-in belt, push up sleeves and softly pleated skirt. Gay gilt metal buttons. Sizes 9 to 17.

Colors:
Brown with Green Fringe
Aqua with Brown Fringe
Grey with Red Fringe
Red with Royal Fringe

Dixie Shops
275 SEVENTH AVE., N. Y.

SEND NO MONEY!

DIXIE SHOPS . . . 275 Seventh Ave., New York 1, N. Y. . . . Dept. MS2

Send me the "Fringed Flatterer" Dress. On arrival I'll pay the postman $6.95 plus postage.
SIZE—9 ☐ 11 ☐ 13 ☐ 15 ☐ 17 ☐
Indicate 1st and 2nd color choice
Brown ☐ Aqua ☐ Grey ☐ Red ☐

NAME_____ (Print)
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ STATE_____

MONEY BACK GUARANTEED IF RETURNED IN 10 DAYS

Stardust Knit Undies are fashioned from long-wearing, washable Spun-lo rayon. Full elastic-waist bands, in smooth-fitting cuffed and shorty styles. Made by Stardust, Inc., Empire State Building, New York 1.

Lovely JOAN MURRAY, selected as Miss Stardust of 1947, now a Walter Thornton Pin-Up Girl.

Exquisite Form
BRASSIERES

Tearose Broadcloth
Style 562

B cup — sizes 34 to 44
C cup — sizes 34 to 46

About $2.25

Exquisite-Form Brassiere, Inc.
373 4th Ave., N.Y. 16 • 850 B'way, Los Angeles

WE PAY YOU $25
EVERYONE BUYS CHRISTMAS CARDS
For Selling 50 $1 Assortments

You can cash in on this great seasonal demand. 21 CARDS—every card with hand applied decorations. They sell on sight. Immediate orders! You average 100% PROFIT. Start making money at once!
COSTS NOTHING • GET OUR SAMPLES. WRITE TODAY!
FANMOUR PUBLISHING CORP. 21 Vandewater St., N. Y. 7, N. Y.

For little feet only
Women all over the world turn to us, America's only shoe specialist in small sizes . . .
SIZES 1 to 5
exclusively!
Send for illustrated CATALOG D then order by mail
Cinderella of Boston
59 TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON 11, MASS.

EVERYTHING WITH A KISS

(Continued from page 60)

she hurried on past Stage 10, really a guy. Funny how absent-minded he was about some things—had to give the keys to his Ford to his stand-in, because he'd be sure to lose 'em. And the dinner party, that must have been a four-alarm riot for laughs. Special guests for dinner, and Mr. Grant forgot to tell the cook. They say he called a restaurant, though, and had food sent over, and the people thought it was charming, and had a very wonderful time. Just like him.

"Hi, Mary," she said.

Mary Wise, best friend, fell in beside her.

"Almost six o'clock, Meg. We'll have to hurry and eat to get to the theater. Night and Day. Ought to be good. With MISTER Grant!"

The girls hurried, punched the time clock for messenger girls, and emerged on Gower Street, wondering which would be the best way to get to the theater, and if there would be a soda fountain near by, well supplied with snacks and malteds.

"Trick or treat?" said a familiar voice.

"Hello, Mr. Grant," said Meg, reverently.

"Ride?" asked Mr. Grant.

"The Lincoln Continental today. Wow!"

"We're going to try to get into line for—"

"Hop in. Don't tell me you're going to that opening?" (Grant never goes to premieres, especially his own.)

"Oh, sure."

"You're a bit early. Where are you eating?"

"Well, we don't know."

The Lincoln Continental took off with the smooth roar of a great French train.

"Tell you what. Have dinner with me."

"OH! We couldn't!" Both girls indicated their sweaters and short skirts. "Besides," said Meg, "you have a date."

Cary looked at them slant-wise. It has always been a matter of abiding mystery to him how everybody in Hollywood seems to know when he has a date, with whom, and why.

"Why, yes, but that's okay. Come on."

bobby-sockers' heaven . . .

Romanoff's was jampacked with directors trying to impress producers, actors trying to impress directors, actresses trying to impress actresses, and everybody trying to impress waiters.

Miss Betty Hensel, the St. Louis girl, who has apparently impressed Cary Grant, thought it was perfectly natural for Cary to bring two messenger girls in sweaters. She was friendly and relaxed, and the girls finally descended from Cloud Seven to approximately Cloud Three, and ate their dinner. They had nine things Meg had never heard of.

Then they drove to the theater, where Grant dropped them off among the arc lights pencilling into the sky, the bleachers, and the autograph hounds, and they descended from the Lincoln Continental, and walked in on the red carpet, with Grant's tickets.

Cary Grant is no enigma to Meg, and there is no particular reason why he should be to anybody.

He became thoroughly acquainted with the messenger girls, the telephone operators, the gatemen and the rest of the so-called "little people" on the RKO lot, not through any conscious affectation of democracy, or even by deliberately setting out to make friends and influence back lots. During the war, Cary had no telephone.

When the great folk at the studio sug-

(Continued on page 89)

dressing for junior

■ If you're a junior mother-to-be, all agog at junior's expected arrival—you're fashion's pet. When a designer bends over her drawing board to whip up a young maternity dress—she has a gleam in her eye like a doting aunt. And she remembers that you still take a junior size—and want a junior style—even if your waist isn't getting any slimmer.

The big thing about junior maternity clothes is that they've got zing—snap—pep. They're styled just like your usual clothes—with plenty of fashion and plenty of appeal. The only difference is that naturally they have room for expansion—and they usually make a point of calling attention to your happy face. But the expansion feature is so cagily concealed that more than once an unsuspecting gal has actually tried to buy a maternity dress without even being eligible. They're that cute.

A junior-sized Infadorable maternity dress in black with blue, brown with aqua, or taupe with gold. Crepe. Sizes 11-17. By Doris Dodson $14.95
Stores on page 88.

So if you're counting the days until the big adventure—you can spend the day with the girls—and have dates with your husband—looking your usual pretty self. Right up until you take off for the hospital. The soft-shouldered, bow-brightened Infadorable above is a perfect example of what we mean—a maternity dress to make you look like somebody—instead of just somebody's mother-to-be.

—Connie Bartel

NO BONES ABOUT IT

Stays up without stays!

Enjoy the comfort of this slimming "Perma·lift"* Pantie Girdle. All elastic leg sections comfortably control hips and thighs. Best of all, this wonderful pantie won't ride up. Deftly styled—the magic inset prevents rolling over, wrinkling, entirely eliminates the annoying discomfort of bones. Yes, it STAYS UP WITHOUT STAYS. "Perma·lift" Panties, Girdles, and Foundations—at your favorite corset department—most styles $5 95 to $12.50.

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. Stein & Company. (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Write for Free Booklet on corset and brassiere fitting comfort. Address Ruth Stone—"Perma·lift" Stylist, 1143 W. Congress Street, Chicago 7, Ill.—Dept. 44

ORDER BY MAIL

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

DAINTY LACE YOKE BLOUSE

A most flattering, feminine style. Gracefully designed for lasting beauty and long wear. A classic design that features a full-blown, ¾ length push-up sleeve. Made of rich textured Rayon Crepe with a soft, silky finish. Waistline is tapered for stay-in smoothness. Very washable.

WHITE ONLY $4.99
Sizes 32 to 38
Sizes 40 to 46 $5.99

Send check or money order to
INA MAE of Hollywood
5884 W. Olympic Blvd., Dept. No. 3F
Hollywood 36, California
Please specify size. Add 15c for handling and mailing. C.O.D. orders accepted.
GUARANTEE: Every Ina Mae blouse is guaranteed to satisfy or your money back. No refund if worn.
SEND FOR FREE CATALOG

The sox you'll be wearing this season!

New styles, new colors at your favorite shops now!

35¢ to $1

They're Wear-Tested!

For nearest store, write: Trimfit EMPIRE STATE BLDG., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

Save Five Dollars Today! send for "SUGAR PLAID" wear the newer longer look for only $9.95

Sugar Plaid . . . a 1948 Junior Cover Girl classic . . . sports the newer, longer, fuller skirt with bias panels at each side. Extravagantly handsome belt . . . deep side pockets . . . push-up bracelet sleeves . . . a really fine quality wool and rayon fabric in white ground plaids—blue or red predominating. Sizes 9-11-13-15. Immediate delivery. And your money back if you don't agree it's worth every penny of fifteen dollars.

CHECK, MONEY ORDER, OR C.O.D. SEND NO CASH

JUNIOR COVER GIRL
45 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK

Please send me the SUGAR PLAID in the color and size checked:

	9	11	13	15
Red plaid
Blue plaid

☐ Check enclosed (We pay postage)
☐ Money order enclosed (We pay postage)
☐ C. O. D. (You pay postage) M

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices on merchandise may vary throughout the country)

Gladdy Colleen suit with silver nailheads worn by Ava Gardner in the full color photograph
(Page 75)

Atlanta, Ga.—Rich's, Inc., Third Floor
Boston, Mass.—Jay's, Inc.
Denver, Colo.—The Denver Dry Goods Co., Ready-to-Wear, Second Floor
Indianapolis, Ind.—The Wm. H. Block Co., Budget Shop, Second Floor.
Kansas City, Mo.—Emery, Bird, Thayer Co., Gown Shop, Third Floor
Los Angeles, Calif.—J. W. Robinson Co., Town and Country Dresses, Fourth Floor
Minneapolis, Minn.—Powers Dry Goods Co., Dress Department, Second Floor
Philadelphia, Pa.—B. F. Dewees, Inc., Cosmopolitan Court, Fourth Floor
Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothrop, Misses' Dresses, Third Floor, Main Building
Youngstown, Ohio—Strouss-Hirshberg Co., Dresses, Second Floor

Maben bag, about $3, shown in the full color photograph
(Page 75)

Newark, N. J.—L. Bamberger & Co., Handbag Department, First Floor
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's Basement Accessories
Atlanta, Ga.—Rich's, Inc., Basement

Zimco sharkskin suit with pocket flaps worn by Frances Rafferty
(Page 76)

Atlanta, Ga.—Rich's, Inc., Misses' Sportswear Department, Basement
Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's
New Orleans, La.—Maison Blanche Co., Annex
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, Subway Fashion Floor
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Sportslane, Basement

Joselli gold buttoned cutaway suit worn by Frances Rafferty
(Page 77)

Chicago, Ill.—Chas. A. Stevens & Co., Budget Shop
New York, N. Y.—Franklin Simon

Madcaps hat, $5, shown with suit
(Page 77)

New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's

Both Garay bags, $5 each, shown with suits
(Pages 76 and 77)

New York, N. Y.—Wanamaker's, Handbags, Street Floor

Teentimer OHriginal plaid dress with velvet peplum and collar and cuffs
(Page 78)

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Wm. Hengerer Co.
New Orleans, La.—D. H. Holmes Co., Ltd., High School Shop, Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, High School Shop, Fifth Floor
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Hi School Shop, Fifth Floor

Teentimer OHriginal silver chatelaine dress
(Page 79)

Columbus, Ohio—Morehouse-Martens Co., High School Shop, Fourth Floor
Hartford, Conn.—Sage, Allen & Co., Teen Shop, Second Floor
Indianapolis, Ind.—The Wm. H. Block Co., High School Shop, Third Floor
Minneapolis, Minn.—Powers Dry Goods Co., Younger Crowd Shop, Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, High School Shop, Fifth Floor
Wilmington, Delaware—Crosby & Hill Co., Teentimer Department, Second Floor

Lofties knitted suit with the gold pocket worn by Frances Rafferty
(Page 80)

New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, Sportswear Department, Third Floor
Scranton, Pa.—Rice's, Sport Shop, Main Floor
Vallejo, Calif.—Rosee Bonderow, Sportswear, Main Floor

Madcap hat $5, shown with knitted suit
(Page 80)

New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's

Garay bag, $5, shown with knitted suit
(Page 80)

New York, N. Y.—Wanamaker's, Handbags, Street Floor

Connie shoe with white stitching
(Page 82)

Ashtabula, Ohio—Carlisle Allen Co.
Baltimore, Md.—Stewart & Co., Downstairs Store
Fort Worth, Texas—Meacham's, Budget Shop
Memphis, Tenn.—J. Goldsmith & Sons, Downstairs Shoe Department

Sandler of Boston shoe with closed toe and heel
(Page 82)

Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh, Shoes, Fourth Floor
Los Angeles, Calif.—C. H. Baker Shoe Co.
New York, N. Y.—I Miller & Sons

Styl-Eez by Selby shoe with gold piping
(Page 82)

Baltimore, Md.—Wm. Hahn & Co., First Floor
Boston, Mass.—Filene's, Misses' Shoe Salon, Fifth Floor
New York, N. Y.—Selby Fifth Avenue
Philadelphia, Pa.—Gimbels, Shoe Salon, First Floor
Washington, D. C.—Wm. Hahn & Co., Second Floor
Same shoe with platform $11.95

Carmelletes Shoe with lattice vamp
(Page 82)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Namm's
Same shoe with platform $10.95

Infadorable maternity dress with bright bow shown in the Shopping Column
(Page 85)

Baltimore, Md.—Stewart & Co.
Little Rock, Ark.—The M. M. Cohn Co.
New Orleans, La.—Maison Blanche Co., Junior Shop, Second Floor
St. Louis, Mo.—Stix, Baer & Fuller

If no store in your city is listed write: Fashion Editor, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y

(Continued from page 86)

gested that a bit of influence might get him one, Cary thankfully declined. And since there was no way to reach him at home, he had to report to the studio daily to see whether he worked or not. Being interested in every phase of production, Cary hung around, asked questions, kidded the people, and made friends. There is probably not an actor in Hollywood, save perhaps James Cagney, who knows more technicians, second-assistant makeup men, hairdressers, and errand-runners by their first names.

These ladies and gentlemen do not find Cary hard to understand. In fact, they have some precise information about him. For instance:

Cary doesn't like to eat at regular hours. He is convinced that the time to eat is when you are hungry, whenever that is, and as often.

He is a neat man, known as an ash-tray emptier and pillow plumper-upper.

He deplores bad manners. He is courteous, and expects other people to be courteous.

He is extremely afraid of hurting other persons' feelings. And he's ultra-thoughtful.

There was the time, last Christmas, when one of the studio girls was away for the holidays, and Cary overlooked getting her a gift. He was enormously embarrassed when he saw her several weeks later, assured her that he would get something for her.

Several days later, when the California climate was coming down by the tub-ful, in walked Grant, lugging an armful of hard-to-get records. He had gone to the trouble of learning that this girl had just acquired a new record changer.

the Grant hotel . . .

Cary lives in one room of a handsome house in Bel Air, next door to Charles Brackett, the producer. He lives in one room for several reasons.

"It's a sort of boarding house," he says. "I never know who'll be occupying the bedrooms. What with the housing shortage, people in New York who have friends coming out, tell them, 'Don't worry about a hotel, just drop in on Cary, he has a house and he's a bachelor.' So the bedrooms are usually full."

"I like to sleep down here."

Down here is his den, or study, a large room decorated with pictures of horses and seascapes, mostly by Boudin. At night, Cary pulls out a Hollywood bed and piles in.

"Saves going upstairs," he grins.

His own enormous bedroom, with its dressing rooms large enough for a studio wardrobe department, seems never to have been used. Barbara Hutton Grant's bedroom, next to this, also has an un-lived in look, spanking new and shining with the tasteful decorative scheme, mostly black and white, which he ordered just before the separation.

The upstairs of that large house would be a lonely place for a bachelor at that. Perhaps that is why Cary sleeps downstairs.

His house is immaculate, tended by three servants under the supervision of a quiet, efficient Englishman called Dudley, who has been with Grant for five years, and before that, was with Frederick Lonsdale, the British writer, a close friend of Cary's. In the study there are only three photographs: one of Freddie Lonsdale, one of Barbara, and one of Lance, her son. Cary was very fond of the boy, and the two are still firm friends. He will say this much:

"Barbara is a wonderful girl, and most misunderstood. Our only differences lay in our two ways of life. She loved travel and

Perhaps you saw GERTRUDE LAWRENCE in *LADY IN THE DARK . . . PYGMALION . . . PRIVATE LIVES. Did you watch her hands? They're like white flowers in a summer wind . . . Eloquent, feminine, utterly alluring.

"I'm positive that CREAM is the thing for your hands, just as it is for your face!" says GERTRUDE LAWRENCE

PACQUINS is the hand cream of this flawlessly groomed star. She prefers it to all other hand preparations of all types!

HAVEN'T you noticed how many chic women everywhere are changing to cream for hand care? And how many more use Pacquins than any other hand cream?

Miss Lawrence advises: "Every woman who wants smooth, lovely hands should cream, cream, CREAM! Pacquins, I mean."

Smooth on a dab of snowy-white, flower-fragrant, quick-vanishing Pacquins. You can feel the dry roughness of your skin respond! You can see your hands change! Sticky? No! Greasy? Never! A 12-second Pacquin hand massage morning and night is all your hands need.

Change to Pacquins cream! Ah, how quickly you'll notice the difference.

VIRGINIA KENT, R. N.: "I wash my hands thirty to forty times a day. That's murder! So, it's Pacquins for me!" (Pacquins Hand Cream was originally created for nurses and doctors.)

for "dream" hands—cream your hands with Pacquins HAND CREAM

Never sticky or greasy!

AT ANY DRUG, DEPARTMENT, OR TEN-CENT STORE.

Glamorous Hair Invites Romance

Glamorous Alice Faye Starred on "Fitch Bandwagon"

VELVETY SOFT HAIR that sparkles with radiant highlights will catch his eye . . . stir his heart. Bring out the natural loveliness in YOUR hair with Fitch's Saponified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. Made from mild cocoanut and pure vegetable oils, this efficient shampoo does not "dry" the hair. Delightfully fragrant, it "suds-up" into a rich, billowy lather that completely removes all scalp odor. Fitch's Saponified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo contains its own patented rinsing agent, so only an ordinary water rinse is needed. No dull film remains. Buy it at drug or toilet goods counters . . . or have professional applications at beauty shops.

Fitch's

SAPONIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO

The novel that made RUDOLPH VALENTINO famous!

THE SHEIK by E. M. Hull

. . . one of the most powerful love stories ever written

Look for this famous DELL ROMANCE

On Sale Everywhere—only 25c

Quick FOOT RELIEF

Protects Feet and Toes Wherever Shoes Painfully Rub or Pinch. Helps Prevent "Breaking-In" Torture

For quick relief from corns, sore toes, callouses, bunions, chafed heels, tender spots and instep ridges—use Dr. Scholl's Kurotex. This downy-soft, soothing, cushioning, protective, flesh color foot plaster instantly stops tormenting shoe friction; lifts painful pressure. Helps prevent blisters and "breaking-in" discomfort of new or tight shoes.

Cut Dr. Scholl's Kurotex to any shape or size and apply it. Does not come off in the bath. This superior type of moleskin is also splendid for preventing blisters on hands of Golfers, Tennis and Baseball players. Economical! At Drug, Shoe, Department and 10¢ Stores. FREE sample—write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Dept. K, Chicago.

Dr Scholl's KUROTEX

I'm sedentary, now."

In Dudley's quarters, off the butler's pantry, is an autographed picture of Barbara and Cary on their wedding trip. Those are the only photographs in the house, with the exception of a large pile in the basement.

In Cary's library are books about the history and the appreciation of art, books which he almost conceals, because he modestly avoids the impression of going highbrow.

His dining room is superb in dark wood, but Dudley has a word about that:

"You notice the white rug and the white seat coverings on the chairs? That was the ex-Mrs. Grant's idea. She gave the house a lot of its touches."

plans for one world . . .

Cary's plans today are explicit. He has just completed The Bishop's Wife, in which he plays the part of an angel—a difficult part to make believable, playing it straight—and his Bachelor and the Bobbysoxer, with Shirley Temple and Myrna Loy, is doing happy business all over the country. His next serious move, following a trip to England to confer with Sir Alexander Korda, will be to make a series of pictures in an attempt to sell Americanism to the rest of the world.

"People in foreign lands look on America with wonder and awe," he explains. "But they don't understand us. Americans fail to appreciate the age-old customs and traditions of other countries.

"I want to make a series of pictures about an average American—that'll be me—and his adventures in different countries. His efforts to understand the customs will get laughs, I hope, and make Europeans like Americans better."

For the information of the would-be well-dressed, Cary Grant's tailor is De'Gez, and his address is 544 Fifth Avenue, New York City. De'Gez is an expensive tailor, catering to society folk and a few theatrical people. He makes all of Cary's clothes—and regards his celebrated client with a rolling and distressed eye.

Mr. Grant does not wear suspenders or a belt, because those things are nuisances. He has the trousers made so that they will stay up, his waist-line being good enough for that. He does not wear garters, he does not wear undershirts, and he does not wear hats.

"Feller was out here the other day to interview me about clothes," said Cary, grinning happily. "I told him those things and he departed in disgust. No story. I've been getting rid of surplus garments for years. Damn nuisance, aren't they?"

You going to make an enigma out of a feller like that?

I SAW IT HAPPEN

As I was waiting to enter a reception given for Peter Lawford, I noticed a tall young man with a pipe clamped between his teeth, struggling through the crowd. He stopped suddenly, faced a young girl, and stretched out his hand to remove a cigarette from her lips. Then to her surprise, he exclaimed, "This isn't for young folks but only for old people like me." Leaving the girl open-mouthed with amazement, he walked away. The man with the pipe was the one and only Keenan Wynn.

Charlotte Minsky,
Jackson Heights, New York

DEVOTION

(Continued from page 56)

"Heavens," she murmured, "isn't she lovely."

"You know," her companion told her, "she's Susan Peters, the movie star who was hurt in that hunting accident a long time ago. . ."

It happened on New Year's Day, 1945, and a dozen versions of the accident have been told, but never—until now—have the full details been revealed.

The Quines were duck-hunting with Dick's cousin and his wife at Lake Cuyamaca (about 60 miles from San Diego), having a heavenly time and a lot of luck. Especially Susie, who had bagged more ducks than any of them. At one point during the day, Dick's cousin and Susie decided to go into the woods after doves. The cousin broke the .22 caliber rifle he'd been using for target practice and hid it under a bush, meaning to pick it up later. Apparently, he made a mistake and shoved another shell into the breech.

the hidden rifle . . .

Both he and Susie completely forgot the rifle until they were all on their way home. They went back and the cousin searched the bushes without success. Dick and Susan climbed out of the car to help. A couple of minutes later Susan shouted gaily, "I've got it," and Dick turned in time to hear the small, whispered report of the .22. Susan toppled to the ground, and Dick was beside her in an instant. "I'm shot," she told him, and her voice was quite calm. He pulled off her skirt, found her bleeding very slightly from a wound under the right breast, and from the small amount of bleeding he knew she must be hemorrhaging internally. He put her into the car, held her on his lap as his cousin drove like lightning toward San Diego. On the way, Susan mentioned that she had no feeling in her legs, and Dick figured then that her spine must be injured. They stopped at the first town they came to, and Dick's cousin dashed into a drugstore to see if there were any doctors around, but the doc, of course, was out of town. The druggist, however, phoned on ahead to San Diego's Mercy Hospital, told them they were on their way in. A police car was dispatched their way, and it met the party half way to San Diego. Susan and Dick transferred to the police car, which was equipped with a two-way radio. They talked to doctors at the hospital who suggested possible first-aid, and listening to descriptions of Susan's reactions, they were able to prepare the operating room so that 1½ hours after the accident, Susan was in Mercy Hospital receiving plasma.

She was in the San Diego hospital for one month, then hospitalized in Los Angeles for five more, and somehow, through it all, she hung on to her sense of humor. She could even kid about the accident, and when Dick brought her a book called "How to Shoot Ducks," she howled. Did I say sense of humor? That was sheer guts.

But getting back to Los Angeles and the housing shortage, the woman who had observed the young Quines from the window got busy and that same evening, Dick had a call from his manager. "Guess what?" he said, a note of wonder in his voice, "I think you may have an apartment coming up. It's still being built, but it'll be finished in about a month, and if you'll go over to this address on Olympic Boulevard. . ."

Dick, looking over the unfinished apartment the next afternoon, turned to the woman who owned the building (the same, of course, who had been at her window

NEW BEAUTY FOR

SUN-DAMAGED HAIR!

A new Hair Beauty Treatment by a world-famous Cosmetic House

Use it tonight. Have "LOVELIGHTED" hair tomorrow!

A MARVELOUS NEW shampoo-treatment for lifeless, summer-dulled hair. Brings back natural softness and romantic "lovelights"—even to split-at-the-ends, problem hair!

A BEAUTY BATH with real egg! Generations of beautiful women have used egg for natural hair loveliness. Now the egg is right IN the shampoo.

YOU'LL LOVE THE WAY this distinctly finer shampoo goes to work on your hair. See how that egg-enriched liquid creme caresses the split ends, coaxes your hair back to soft, natural radiance.

NOT A SOAP. Non-drying. Instead, Richard Hudnut Egg Creme Shampoo is a soft, gentle liquid creme that rinses out quickly, thoroughly, and is a delight to use.

P.S.

Dollar Special! A trial kit of the new Richard Hudnut Hair Beauty Ritual is yours for only $1.00 (plus tax). Contains generous-size bottles of Egg Creme Shampoo, Creme Rinse, Dandruff Treatment and Creme Hair Dressing.

At your drug or department store, $1.00 for the big family size.

Exclamation points

JUNE PREISSER, now starring in Monogram's "Teen Agers" musical "SARGE GOES TO COLLEGE".

Exotic, brilliantly accented nails . . . perhaps he won't notice them, but he'll see that your hands look lovelier when you wear Dr. Ellis Nail Polish. See the exciting new shades-of-the-season at 5 & 10's and drugstores . . . only 10¢ plus tax.

Dr. Ellis nail polish the day before) and said regretfully, "It's just what we wanted—on the ground floor and all—but you see it just isn't big enough. Only two bedrooms. With Susan and me, and the maid, and Timothy and his nurse, we just have to have more space. We'd need the equivalent of both these apartments on this floor, and since that's out of the question—"

"Why is it?" the woman asked. "You can have both of them. The one next door has only one bedroom, but with the living and dining space that would be enough. We'll knock doors between the two and use the other living room as a nursery. Besides, that way you'd have another kitchen and bath, so you could keep the child's food separate."

Dick stood staring at her, mouth agape. "You'd do that?"

"I can think of nothing that would make me happier."

He was telling Susan about it that night, at dinner. "You wouldn't believe it," he said. "I didn't. In Los Angeles, one of the worst housing spots in the country, this angel of mercy appears of her own volition and offers us the works. Have you been saying your prayers lately, or something?"

The maid came in. "A Mrs. Ackerson to see you, Ma'am." Their new landlady, carrying a great roll of blueprints in her arms, looked flustered. "I didn't know you were still at dinner," she said, "but I was looking over the designs for the building and I thought—"

"We'll all have coffee in the living room," Susan told her. "I adore looking at blueprints."

And then she said it, this miracle woman. "I thought," she said, "that since you're going to live in the building you might not care for some of the structural design and would want to make some changes. There's still time."

There was that, for them to remember to their dying day; and there was the morning when she telephoned early to say, "The painters are here. What color would you like?"

"We've already decided on our colors and hired our own decorators," Dick said. "They'll do the painting themselves."

"I'm not talking about your apartments," she said. "I mean, what color do you want on the outside of the building?"

There was the afternoon when she came over with her very newest idea. "Children of Timothy's age must have plenty of sun, and room for outdoor play. Besides, there's Thunder to think about. So I've decided to fence off that nice wide space between the garages and the building, and that will be Timothy's own private play yard!"

The next day she was back. "I've been thinking about that play-yard of Timothy's. You'll be out there a great deal with him, and there's a balcony from that rear second-story apartment that overlooks the yard. So you had better choose the people who will move there. Or, if there's someone you particularly like who needs an apartment . . ."

And again, "I noticed how much brass and copper you use in your decorative scheme—all the trays and boxes and so on—so I took the liberty of having them take out all that brushed chromium hardware and replace it with brass," and, "What are your favorite flowers? Shall I have the landscape man call on you, or do you want to tell me what varieties you like, and where they should be planted?"

About the rent: "The OPA decided how much I should charge and I think it's outrageous. I'm really so sorry. But we'll make it up some way."

Finally, "Now you children run right along. I know you have things to do, and it's so tedious waiting for people to arrive with furniture and all. I haven't a thing to do and I'll just wait here and let them in when they come."

Thus was the housing shortage of the Richard Quines solved for them, and joy and peace reigned in their household. As much joy and peace, that is, as can reign in any house containing a baby, a Great Dane, and two restless young moderns.

It is amazing how little that hunting accident has interfered with the plans Susan and Dick had made for their life together. Timothy, of course, was the first consideration.

After that, there was the business of getting back to work. Naturally, any picture Susan made would have to cast her as a girl in a wheelchair; and when she announced she was well enough to make a picture again, the scripts began pouring in.

All of them had one particular fault. The heroine was in a wheelchair all right, but it was perfectly obvious that she had

"Fresh!"

I SAW IT HAPPEN

The hotel dining-room was nearly deserted when three elderly gentlemen entered quietly. They took a little table in the corner, across from mine. One of the men, recognized as Lauritz Melchior, wore his makeup, including a long white beard, as he was going to make his appearance on the stage of the opera very soon. As they were ordering dinner, two women entered the dining-room with a child of about three. Although the three men were almost inconspicuous in that corner of the room, the little girl ran over to their table and cried, "Look, Mommy, Santa Claus came back!"

Louise Joyal
West Warwick, R. I.

been stuck there to accommodate the role to Susan, not because she would naturally be in a wheelchair.

Until one day someone called and said, "Have you read 'Sign of the Ram'?" She was not half way through it before she realized that she had her story, if a studio could be persuaded to buy it. In the original story, the main character was a wheelchair murderess. The script, which Susan thinks is an improvement on the book, makes some changes in this, and apparently, Susan does not really murder anyone. But the evolution of plot hinges on the fact that the lady is confined to her chair; and there is nothing phony about it.

Producer Irving Cummings who owned the picture rights, felt Susan was so right for the part that she and Dick became partners in the venture which will come to the screen by way of Columbia Pictures.

Susan was crooning tenderly over the final script of Sign of the Ram one evening when Dick, who's been doing a lot of writing recently, looked up from a sheaf of scribbled notes and said, "I think this brainstorm of mine has worked itself out. I'd like to produce it as a screenplay."

"Produce your own picture?"

"Why not, everyone's doing it."

"But there's no room in that story for either of us," she wailed. "I should think it'd be apparent to the meanest intelligence that the Quines should be their own stars."

"Darling, if this one works, we'll star in twenty of them."

Their plans for the future are magnificent, you see. Twenty screen-plays and a new house and more children, among other things. Susan is learning to walk in braces as the paraplegics at Burlingham Hospital do, and their house will be designed so that she'll be able to cook and take care of Timothy and get around well by herself. It's going to be a dream house, and life will be beautiful.

For the present, life's beautiful enough, filled as it is with work and excitement and small arguments and large reconciliations. Life on miraculous Olympic Boulevard is made up of little things: the long hours of pacing and the intermittent minutes of frantic typing in Dick's room, until five o'clock in the morning, night after night. The arrival of Timothy's teeth, one by one, accompanied by fretful squalls and the crash of milk mugs on the floor. And the giving of presents and love and laughter and a kind of beauty.

There are all these things comprising the good and full life, and for the Quines, at least, heaven can wait.

All in favor say...
FELS-NAPTHA!

When it's a choice of laundry soap, millions of families vote the straight Fels-Naptha 'ticket'.

For work clothes and play clothes; white shirts, linens and towels; for delicate underthings—and of course for Baby's things that must be extra clean and soft—there is nothing like the thorough cleaning action of gentle Fels-Naptha Soap.

Fels-Naptha's blend of good, mild soap and active naptha assures whiter washes with less work. Be sure to mark your shopping 'ballot' Fels-Naptha—Bar and Chips.

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

WHETHER you are in front of the camera or behind it, you will enjoy the refreshing flavor of Beech-Nut Gum.
Everywhere it goes the assurance of Beech-Nut for fine flavor goes with it.
Beech-Nut Gum
PEPPERMINT FLAVORED
BEECH-NUT BRAND
CHEWING GUM
ALWAYS REFRESHING
BEECH-NUT GUM
The yellow package with the red oval

MIRACLE ON MAIN STREET

(Continued from page 52)

(Must check this. It sounds odd, somehow. No sign of husband.) She gave this account of her daughter's career.

"Emma was always fond of make-believe. Even as a little child, she was always imagining things and leading the other children. She would make each one take part in little plays she got up, or in acting out stories they'd heard or read. After she started at John Adams Public School, I had her begin taking dancing and elocution lessons. Singing and piano lessons, too. I felt that she had great talent, even at 7.

"She took part in Christmas recitals both at John Adams and Central High School. I thought she was good, but others did not recognize her talent then. After high school, she went to Marywood Seminary here a while, and then to New York.

"In New York, she studied at the Alviene School of the Theater. Peggy Ann Garner and Fred Astaire went there, too."

She mentioned briefly Liz's career as a model, then trouping in a road company of Hellzapoppin', understudying Tallulah Bankhead in The Skin of Our Teeth, landing the lead in the same show in Boston, and finally Hollywood.

stranger in the house . . .

Extremely reluctant to talk about her other children. Hesitated before giving their names and ages. Gave Emma's age as 23. (Contradicting Paramount's biography which says she'll be 25, September 29.) John, Jr., is 22, an engineer, just back from the Navy. Marcia is 21. Justine, 19. When I asked her about the youngster who opened the door, she said hastily, "Oh, he's just a boy we took in to live with us." (This is odd. Will look into it.)

Flustered, when I asked when Lizabeth had been home last. Couldn't seem to remember. About four years ago. (How come? Why wasn't she at Scranton's world premiere of You Came Along? What's behind her reluctance to visit her home town?) Most of mom's replies to questions delivered with a poker face, but a couple of times warmth and affection were there between the lines. Like when she said, "Emma phoned last week that she had just made a new picture, Desert Fury. She said, 'Mom, you'll love it.' She told me, 'I'm working mighty hard. I get up at 5 a.m. to go to the studio.' Then she said, joking, 'Mom, why don't you tell me to take care of my health? I haven't been drinking enough milk lately; why don't you tell me to drink more?' I said, 'I don't have to tell you such things now. You're a big girl and able to take good care of yourself.'" Another time, Mrs. M. spoke in that same warm tone. "Emma's brought us a lot of happiness, and she's very nice to us. She phones once a week wherever she is, and she writes, but not too often." Wistfully, she said, "Last time I saw her was in April at the Gotham Hotel. I spent the week with her and had a wonderful time."

Before we left, got Mrs. M. to talk about her relatives, hoping there'd be some in the locality that I could interview. Discovered that the family came from Ungvar, Czechoslovakia, and that among Mrs. Matzo's own relatives are a sister, Helen, teaching in Cleveland; another sister, Barbara, a music supervisor in Cleveland; and a brother, Joseph, a priest of the Greek Orthodox Church in Barnesboro, Pa. Lizabeth's Scranton kin include Mrs. Anna Munchak, a sister of Mr. Matzo. Anna's husband, John, has an undertaking establishment at 406 South Washington Avenue, and the family lives overhead. Next door at 402, is Munchak's Café, run by the Munchaks' son, Mike.

12:10—Stopped at Kelly's Confectionery for a soda before tackling the Munchak family. Tried to collect my impressions of my visit with the Matzos. They are all hiding something. You can see it in their guarded sentences, their wary eyes. Is it something about the father, or the little boy, or Lizabeth herself? Eager to get on to the Munchaks, but delayed briefly, chatting with people at Kelly's. I asked a youngster next to me, who identified himself as John McColligan, 14, if he knew Lizabeth Scott. "Sure," he said, "I know her little brother, Augustin. He's in the seventh grade and I play with him all the time." (So the lad who let me in was Lizabeth's brother.)

Mrs. Margaret Dean, large and friendly, was running the store during Uncle Tom Kelly's vacation. "I knew Lizabeth Scott from her childhood," she said. "We bought our groceries at her father's store, and Lizabeth helped wait on the trade. She had a lovely speaking voice and was always trying it on the customers.

"Everybody around here knows the Matzos. There's Lizabeth, John, Jr., Marcia, Justine, Helen and Augustin. We're all very proud of Lizabeth, though she hasn't been in town in a long while." A girl at the end of the counter piped up, "I remember when Emma was a little girl, she said she was going to be in pictures. She said she wouldn't play, either, until she was a star. We all thought she was crazy."

Mrs. Dean went on, "I know she used to practice a lot nights. We could hear her rehearsing, testing and strengthening her voice. We didn't know why then, but look what it led to!"

Someone said, "Yes—but it hasn't changed things much around here. Did you know that her father drives a bakery truck?" I asked for the name and address of the bakery company and jotted them down. As we were leaving, Mrs. Dean asked, "Why don't you interview Lizabeth's sister Helen on the way? She's a schoolmate of my daughter's, and she's working for the summer as a salesgirl at Lerner's."

the mystery deepens . . .

This really throws me. Why the secrecy about the two youngest kids, Augustin and Helen? And why the fake steer on Mr. M.'s job?

12:45—Off to Lerner's to see Helen.

No soap. "Helen Matzo was just called home by her mother," the store manager told us. On to Wolfgang's Bakery and met Miss Janet Wolfgang, manager. Mr. Matzo, we learned, had likewise been called home. Miss Wolfgang told us that Liz's pop had been driving for the firm four years. "He's an even-tempered, handsome, very likable man. We don't talk about his daughter."

1:30—One more stop before proceeding to Munchaks'. Almost forgot to make the phone call to Marywood Seminary. No one in the office of this fashionable school could remember the actress as a former student. By either name.

2:00—On to the Flats, Scranton's Polish-American colony. Liz's aunt, Anna Munchak, was home over the funeral parlor, and she repeated the story of Liz's schooldays in an accent stronger than Mom's. So many questions I wanted to ask her, but you've got to be careful. One false move and you shut someone like that up like a clam. You could see the aunt was crazy about Lizabeth. She'd hung around there a lot as a child. After a while, she said to me, "You go down to the café and see my son, Mike. He'll tell you about her."

3:05—One look at Mike, and you know he's a guy who'll give it to you straight. He's a big, genial chap with a baseball cap on sideways, a sport shirt and paint-spattered pants. He look's like a bartender in a movie. I told him who I was, and he began to talk right away.

First, he named the Matzo family—six children, not four—and then he spoke of Lizabeth. "She was a good kid. Lots of fun. We used to see her at our house a lot. She's doing good for her family now, shooting dough into it. She's doing good where she is. If she don't want to come home, that's her business. I'll buy her a drink any time."

She sends money home—I'm glad of that. Now if someone can explain to me why she didn't show up for that world premiere, I'll feel a whole lot better. Decide to talk to Scranton's chief movie exhibitors, the Comerford Publix Theaters Amusement Corp.

4:40—Byron Lynn, publicity director, and Harry Spiegel, district manager of Scranton theaters, throw some light on things. Seems the world premiere of You Came Along was held jointly in Scranton and St. Louis. L. was told to attend the St. Louis opening. She sent a transcription to the Scranton affair, apologizing that she couldn't show up, and talking of her school days in Scranton. Lynn said, "I'd say her pictures did a little better than average here, but we never hold them over like some other films. It seems there are two crowds here—those that don't care where she came from, and the I-knew-her-when crowd. The last has been picking on her. Wondering why she never comes back here like Scranton's other celebrities, Gloria Jean and Allan Jones."

Spiegel put in, "Her family has been strangely uncooperative. The mother refused to accept tickets to the premiere. She refused to give us any information for publicity releases."

the last clew . . .

Going around in circles after my talk with the movie chaps, but gradually a solution to this thing is forming in my mind. One more person to see. Wonder if what she tells me will jibe with my idea.

5:15—The last interviewee was Mrs. Irene Golden, wife of Walter Golden, a reporter on the Scranton Times. She's 25 and the mother of a seven-month-old child. Speaking of Lizabeth, she said:

"She was a quiet girl, but there was something in her manner that always made you feel she was acting. She's a big mystery in this town, today, partly because she never comes home, I guess.

"What surprises me most is her family, who should be so proud to talk of her success. Instead, they go around close-mouthed, like some other folks would act if they were trying to hush up a scandal."

It all adds up. When I have time to sort out all the evidence, I'm sure it will make perfectly good sense.

10:00—Home again, to re-read my notes, to re-live this day. Dusk was settling over the anthracite country as we rode out of Scranton. Vague, black outlines of tipples and plants slipped by. But I kept seeing a girl with a glorious shock of pale, tawny hair, smouldering eyes and THAT VOICE.

A girl of stardust. Girl of dreams. Girl of rare gifts. Girl going places. Make-believe girl with the practicality and drive to make make-believe come true.

A girl blessed, too, with a mother who believed in her, who saved up her pin-money for Lizabeth's early lessons in dancing, elocution and music, and who staked her for the big New York venture. A mother still trying rather confusedly to help a star who's already arrived.

(Continued on page 97)

I want to make a point . . .

"RC tastes best!"

says

LIZABETH SCOTT

Starring in

"DESERT FURY"

A Hal Wallis Production in Technicolor

A Paramount Release

"The taste-test proved it!" says Lizabeth. "I tried leading colas and picked R C best-tasting!" Try it! Say "R C for me!" That's the quick way to get a quick-up with Royal Crown Cola—best by taste-test!

LIZABETH TAKING THE FAMOUS TASTE-TEST

"SAD" DAYS
CAN BE GLAD DAYS

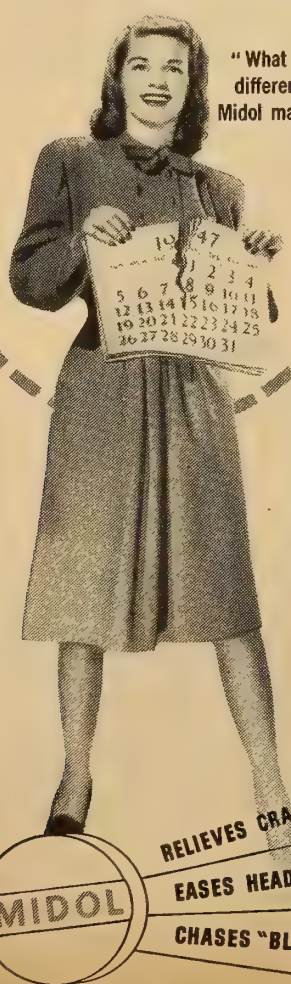
MIDOL

RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL
PERIODIC PAIN
CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"



RELIEVES CRAMPS
EASES HEADACHE
CHASES "BLUES"
MIDOL

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION • SHIRLEY FROHLICH, DIRECTOR

EDITORIAL: Reports keep pouring in from all sources on the results of the Fan Club Convention and the unanimous opinion is that, considering the unfavorable circumstances under which that highly selective group of fan club representatives met and carried out their Hollywood mission, the clubbers have scored a smashing victory for their side. We salute all those who worked so hard for the success of the Convention—and particularly those stars who supported the clubs in defiance of powerful opposition: Nelson Eddy, Janis Paige, Gale Storm, Gene Autry, Charles Korvin, Farley Granger, Ross Hunter, Jack Carson, Dave Willock, Eddie Ryan, Harry Lewis, John Ridgely, Richard Travis, Marshall Reed, Marilyn Maxwell, Joel McCrea, Joseph Calleia, Charles Bickford, Reno Brown, Robert Scott, Alan Ladd, David Street and Keenan Wynn. We have a feeling that there's going to be a Convention next year, too—and that the list of stars will be too long to print.

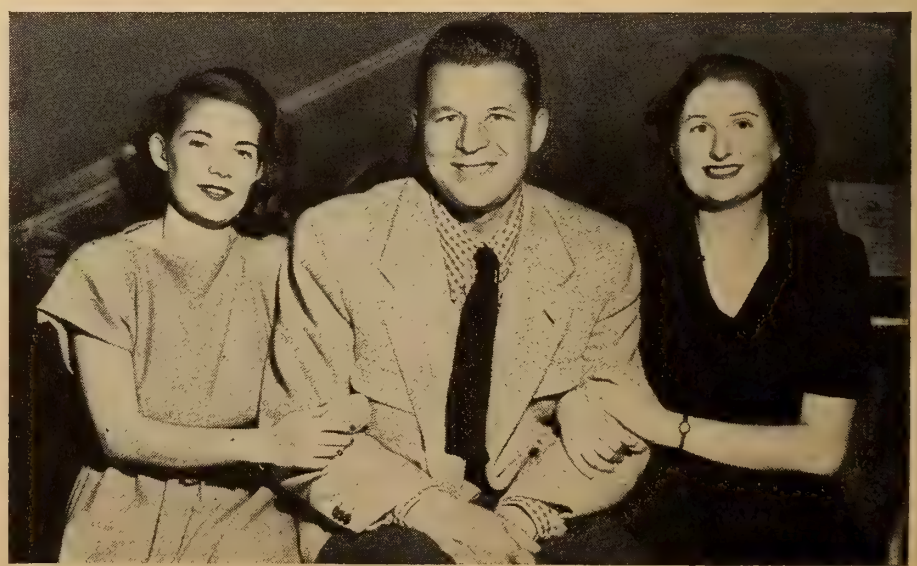
WORDS TO THE WISE: A club membership expires not at the end of the year, but only after the member has received all the journals, pics, pins, cards, etc., you prexies so generously promised when the member sent in his dues. If the member has received every club benefit due him at the end of one year, then it's time to renew. BUT, if he's received only one journal—and you promised three—that dollar has a long way to go. 2. Be guided by this rule: if you've a four-issues-a-year club, each copy of your journal should cost no more than 25 per cent of each member's annual dues. If your mimeographer is charging more than 25 cents per 15-page journal, (some do a grand job for less), you're being cheated! (Continued on page 121)

TROPHY CONTEST WINNERS

Second Lap: (The following results are based on jounrals, reports, other data received at our offices between June 16 and July 15.) Individual prizes: Each winner in THIS IS MY BEST Contest receives a glamorous gift combination of FABERGE Perfume and Cologne. Best editors receive a generous, specially selected package of POND's beauty preparations. Winning artist receives a handsome, practical TANGEE Trip Kit for Travel. First prize winner, Candid Camera Contest, receives a year's subscription to FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE, year's sub. to SCREEN ALBUM and four Dell Mysteries. Other Candid Camera winners, surprise package of four Dell Mysteries. (Suitable prizes are substituted for male winners.)

"This Is My Best" Contest Winners: Mary Jo Young, McDowall Magazine (Roddy); Glee Engel, Pete's Paper (Cookson); Martrice Johns, Fulton's Frolic (Joan); Jo Rampino, Bouncin' With Lombardy (Al); Pat Massa, Keenan's Klippings (Wynn); Mrs. Ellen Wolf, Billetin (Bill Williams, Chandler). Candid Camera Contest: First prize, Alice Meyers, Ken Curtis C. Others: Amena Peacock, Vincent Price C.; Bev Bush, Sinatra C.; Irene Ashcroft, Ronald Reagan C.; Vera Savenko, Betty Grable C.; Myron Welge, Movieland Fan C. Best Journals: 1. Reagan Record (Ronald); 2. Jive; 3. (tie) Corvinus (Charles Korvin); Dan's Diary (Duryea, Grant), Lon's Party Line (MCallister, Becker). Best Editors: 1. Anna Hreha, Jane's Journal (Wyman); 2. Annette Russell, Three Stars Review; 3. (tie) Ginger Bagnall, The Whistler (Jack Berch), Helen Norbeck, Sirocco (Errol Flynn). Best club artist: Tessa Piper, Jeanette MacDonald C. (Farrington). Best covers: 1. Shooting Star (Nelson Eddy Music C.); 2. Jive; 3. (tie) Aladdin's Lamp (Ladd, Kee), P. L. Post (Peter Lawford, Cohen), Don's Doings (Richards), Ginni's Journal (Field), Talking To Teddy (Walters). Worthwhile Activities: 1. Gene Autry C. $400 to Cancer Fund); 2. Jeanette MacDonald C. (Riley; $25 to Children's Village on Jeanette's birthday); 3. Edward Ashley C. (Sent food, clothing to their adopted French orphan). Membership Increases: 1. Alan Ladd C. (Spungin); 2. Bill Boyd C.; 3. Barbara Lawrence C. Best correspondents: 1. Lorraine Rutkowski, Ronald Reagan C.; 2. Mary Susan Leonard, Intern. Shirley Temple C.; 3. Betty Petrie, Charles Korvin C. (Also, 100 pts. for each regular edition of club journal received between June 16 and July 15.)

Leading so far: League 1: R. Reagan C., 700 pts.; June Allyson C., 600; Nelson Eddy International C., 450. League 2: Bob Crosby C., 850; Temple Intern., 750; Joan Crawford C., J. MacDonald C. (Riley), 600. League 3: Charles Korvin C., 750; Dan Duryea C. (Grant), 700; Arthur Kennedy C., Lon McCallister C., 600.



Those smiles mean only one thing: the Jack Carson Club is the winner of the MODERN SCREEN Fan Club Assn. Trophy, League 2. They belong to Jeanne Morgan, v.p., Jack and Lorry Verbin, prexy.

(Continued from page 95)

I have seen Lizabeth's home and her family, her neighbors and her school chums. And one thing, at least, is evident. There is nothing sinister in her background. There is no scandal. Why then the mystery? There can be just one answer and it is this. The price Lizabeth Scott has had to pay for fame is high, for it has apparently meant the complete renunciation of Emma Matzo. A well-meaning studio has deemed it wise to keep Liz's humble origin from being known, and so a devoted mother must seal her lips, lest she injure her daughter's career. She must refuse tickets to a world premiere, lest photographers ferret her out, and the photos not measure up to her talented and beautiful first-born. She must even deny that she is the mother of six children, large families being supposedly unglamorous. And Lizabeth, for her part, must see her mother in New York City, rather than risk the undesirable publicity attendant upon a visit home to the unsuitable surroundings of Scranton's Flats.

pride and prejudice . . .

About the secrecy surrounding Mr. M.'s job, one can but surmise. His present job with Wolfgang's Bakery is probably considered unsuitable for publicity purposes, so poor Mrs. Matzo must keep that a secret, too. Why he continues to work hard and his wife, too, with Liz in the chips, is something else again. It is largely, I suspect, a matter of pride. Mike Munchak said that Liz gives her family money. The beautiful and expensive-looking piano, that good-looking blue suit Mom posed in, Justine's college education, reaffirm that fact, and yet her parents continue to work. Why? Because they are people of integrity, who would consider it outrageous to be supported by a prosperous daughter, as long as they themselves were capable of earning their own bread and butter.

There, then, is the solution to the riddle, and the whole thing makes you stop and think. Maybe there was a time when the American public liked to be kidded about the background of its stars, and to believe they sprang from exotic surroundings far different from the everyday scene. But we're more mature now. We want the truth—the whole truth.

There's a greater lesson and inspiration for every ambitious youngster in the true story—which we're glad to present—of Lizabeth Scott's self-sparked rise from the grocery at Capouse and Ash, with Mom's backing, than in a thousand deceptive biographies dreamed up in studio press offices. The story of Emma Matzo is the story of American democracy.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

A busy afternoon at the Veterans Administration was disturbed by an exclamation from my friend, Flo. She had hit the jackpot—Alan Ladd's insurance payment. Flo wrote his receipt with great precision and as an afterthought, she wrote her own name into a corner and sent the case through. Then, much later, when the incident had almost been forgotten, Flo was called to the timekeeper's desk and was handed a package. It was a picture of Alan Ladd and on it he had written: "To Flo. Lots of Luck. Alan Ladd."

Dorothy Simenson
Brooklyn, New York

Look! Philco Quality in an Automatic Radio-Phonograph Console . . . only $159.95*
Sensational value. Full, rich tone on radio and records. Automatic record changer. Handsome Walnut console. See the new Philco 1262 at your dealer.
*Price slightly higher Denver and West
PHILCO
Famous for Quality the World Over

Stay Sweet with
Autumn time is football time... action and excitement fill the air. But LEAF Gum time is all the time... 'cause LEAF's delicious minty flavor is longer lasting.
LEAF SPEARMINT CHEWING GUM
LEAF LEAFMINT PEPPERMINT GUM LEAF CHEWING GUM
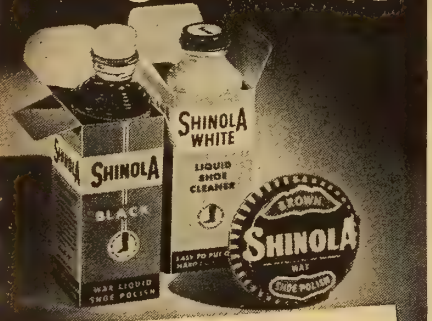
THE FLAVOR LINGERS LONGER

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA



1 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. For good grooming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1.

HOLLYWOOD STUDIO STYLISTS USE Hair Mist

TO KEEP EVERY HAIR IN PLACE

NOT A LACQUER

• Hollywood stars set hair with Hair Mist. Just spray it on. Over 3½ million bottles sold. Insist on it at your beauty salon, drug or department stores.. or mail ($1.00 tax & postage paid) to 645 N. Martel Ave., Hollywood 36, Calif.

Exclusive plastic atomizer is the secret of perfect application . . allows you to spray invisible net over coiffure . . one with every bottle.

ANN MEREDITH'S

HAIR MIST

sweet and hot

By LEONARD FEATHER

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

POPULAR

ALL MY LOVE—*Andy Russell (Capitol), Dinah Shore (Columbia), Guy Lombardo (Decca), Al Jolson (Decca)

APPLE BLOSSOM WEDDING—*Buddy Clark (Columbia), *Hal Derwin (Capitol), *Joe Dosh (Continental), Eddy Howard (Majestic), Sammy Kaye (Victor)
Compare the way different singers handle this tune (lyrics written by England's ace songwriter, Jimmy Kennedy). Maybe you'll agree with me that some of the less famous singers put more feeling into a song than some of the big names who become stale through making too many records. Or is it my imagination?

CLASSICS IN BLUE—*Lena Horne Album (Black & White)
Two blues, two spirituals, a Phil Moore original, and Gershwin's My Man's Gone from Porgy and Bess, all well done by Lena (who just re-signed with M-G-M), but the highspot is the two-sided dramatized version of Frankie and Johnny, which sounds like a movie sound-track.

BING CROSBY, DICK HAYMES & THE ANDREWS SISTERS—Show Business, *Anything You Can Do (Decca)
Unfazed by the idea of giving a competitive crooner a break on the same disc with him, Bing teams with Haymes for a triple-threater that takes Decca's two star-combining policy a step further. All I want now is a record featuring Crosby, Jolson, Haymes, Astaire, the Mills Brothers, the Andrews Sisters and the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING NEW YEAR'S EVE?—*Kay Kyser (Columbia), Art Lund (M-G-M), Margaret Whiting (Capitol)

HOT JAZZ

CHARLIE BARNET—Darktown Strutters' Ball (Apollo)
A hilarious satire on corny Dixieland jazz. Great!

KING COLE—*That's What (Capitol)
After Ella Fitzgerald's conversion to bebop singing comes Nat Cole with something in the same Gillespie-inspired vein. Best Cole disc in a year.

DUKE ELLINGTON—*Blues Album (Victor)

BENNY GOODMAN—*Tattle Tale (Capitol)

BILLIE HOLIDAY—*Album (Columbia)

FROM THE MOVIES

DEAR RUTH—Fine Thing: *Les Brown (Columbia)

HUCKSTERS—Don't Tell Me: *Tony Martin (Victor); *Les Brown (Columbia); Helen Forrest (M-G-M); Margaret Whiting (Capitol)

LIFE WITH FATHER—Sweet Marie: Jack Smith (Capitol)

MOTHER WORE TIGHTS—You Do: *Vic Damone (Mercury); *Georgia Gibbs (Majestic); Dinah Shore (Columbia); Margaret Whiting (Capitol); Vaughn Monroe (Victor); Larry Douglas (Signature); *Bing Crosby-Carmen Cavallaro (Decca). Kokomo, Indiana: *Bing Crosby & Skylarks (Decca); Vaughn Monroe (Victor); Dinah Shore (Columbia); Victor Lombardo (Majestic)
Vic Damone is a very promising 18-year-old—catch his Saturday night air show and this good wax debut. Victor Lombardo's band sounds exactly like brother Guy's, which means millions will like it, present company excepted.

ON THE OLD SPANISH TRAIL—Title Song: *Andy Russell (Capitol); *Kay Kyser (Columbia); Eddy Howard (Majestic); Art Lund (M-G-M)

ROSE OF THE RANCHO—If I Should Lose You: June Christy (Capitol)
Very disappointing solo record bow by the pretty blonde ex-Stan Kenton songstress. Shouldn't have been released.

SOMETHING IN THE WIND—The Turntable Song: Andrews Sisters (Decca); Jack Smith (Capitol)

THE AWKWARD AGE

(Continued from page 46)

at these sessions, too. Roddy McDowall is one of the great favorites. "He used to be very, very quiet," Peggy Ann says, "but you should see him now! A one-man riot. He does imitations of Carmen Miranda and Tallulah Bankhead. He ties us in knots, we laugh so hard." Others who drop in range from striplings like Claude Jarman, to oldsters such as Marshall Thompson, Peggy Ryan and Donald O'Connor. "You should see those two dance," Peggy Ann says of the latter two. "Wow! As for me, I stick to standard steps like the Stanford Stomp and the Crestline."

Peggy Ann's bosom friend, Barbara Whiting, of Junior Miss fame, entertains at her own home every Saturday evening, and Peggy Ann is usually on hand. "Did you know," asks Peggy, "that George Seaton, the director of Junior Miss, discovered Barbara at one of her parties? He went because he was planning this production, and wanted to hear how school girls talk. Barbara was the perfect example."

Lon McCallister, who gives Peggy Ann her first screen kiss in Bob, Son of Battle, is another pal of hers. "Quiet, but nice," is the way she sums him up. "He and Barbara and I have a lot in common—we all like classical music. He took us to the Ocean Park amusement pier and we went on the rides. It was wonderful." She gave a squeal of laughter. "Wonderful for him, too—Barbara sat on his glasses. But nothing bothers Lon. When we were on location in Utah, we put a lot of salt in his bed. He just laughed—and the next night we found some water in ours."

peggy ann—movie fan . . .

Whenever she is with acquaintances who seem interested in hearing about movie stars, Peggy Ann will chatter endlessly about them. "Dick Haymes? Sometimes I think I like him best of all. He's loads of fun. Once he took Barbara and me to the circus, with dinner at Romanoff's first. At the circus, we were watching one of the side shows when two small boys saw Dick. Their eyes got as big as baseballs. One of them nudged the other and said, 'Look—there's Bing Crosby!'"

Peggy Ann is usually escorted to parties and dances by Beverly Hills boys who have no connection with the movie industry. Sometimes, however, she goes with young actors, and of these she remembers Marshall Thompson most vividly. "What a character," she giggles. "I met him at a party once, and he asked me if I'd like to go to another party at a friend's house on the 29th. I said I would. But he never called up to make any arrangements, and on the 29th he didn't show up. I saw him a few weeks later, and he went on with a long story about how he'd had to go to Catalina on short notice, and didn't have a chance to call me. He's sort of nice."

The fact that Peggy Ann wasn't even irritated about being stood up is a good clue to her character.

Nothing really irks her but her school work. "Other kids ask me where I go to school, and I say 'The studio school at Twentieth Century-Fox,'" she says. "Then when they ask me how long I'm in school every day, and I tell them three hours, they say 'Gee, what a cinch!' But it isn't a cinch at all. Remember, we don't have any gym, or any study periods. We just sit and work like fiends for three solid hours without stopping.

"It's pretty lonesome, too," she adds wistfully. "There are only two of us in the school, Connie Marshall and I. And the

"Here's the RCA VICTOR RECORD ROUND-UP for September!"

FREDDY MARTIN'S "CONCERTOS FOR DANCING"

You get the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto, Grieg Piano Concerto, Intermezzo, Warsaw Concerto, Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 2, others. It's Album P-169, $3.15.

TOMMY DORSEY'S "ALL TIME HITS"

Includes Hawaiian War Chant, Somewhere a Voice Is Calling (with Frank Sinatra), Chicago, After You've Gone, Boogie Woogie, Opus No. 1, others. P-163, $3.15.

NEW ALBUM BY THE THREE SUNS

"Three Suns Week" starts Sept. 22nd! Celebrate with their new album, "The Three Suns Present"—Twilight Time, When Day Is Done, Deep Purple, Dardanella, The Breeze and I, Sunrise Serenade, Hindustan. P-185, $3.15.

Hear "Witchery"—Charlie Spivak's newest hit record! It's dedicated to Primrose House "Witchery" Perfume. Vocal by Tommy Mercer. On the other side: Stardreams, Charlie's famous theme. Record 20-2373, 60¢.

Eddy Arnold and his Tennessee Plowboys: It's a Sin and I Couldn't Believe It Was True. Record 20-2241, 60¢.

Maurice Chevalier: "Maurice Chevalier Returns." Album includes Place Pigalle, Weeping Willie, Quai de Bercy, Valentine, Vingt Ans. With Henri René and his Orchestra. S-51, $3.75.

Bill Johnson and his Musical Notes: Don't You Think I Oughta Know (vocal by Gus Gordon and Quartet) and Shorty's Got to Go (vocal by Bill Johnson and Quartet). Record 20-2225, 60¢.

Freddy Martin and his Orchestra: The Lady from 29 Palms (vocal by The Martin Men) and Cumana (Barclay Allen at the piano). 20-2347, 60¢.

Prices are suggested list prices, exclusive of taxes.

Read "In the Groove" every month. News and pictures of your favorite bands and singers, the latest records! Get yours from your RCA Victor dealer.

What!—No phonograph?—You're missing hours of fun! Hear the new Victrola radio-phonograph with the "Golden Throat." Victrola—T.M. Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. Radio Corporation of America.

THE STARS WHO MAKE THE HITS ARE ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Quick Tips on Home Decoration!

Royledge
SHELVING
9 feet
7¢

1. I enjoy a "new" kitchen monthly by changing to new Royledge patterns on shelves, cupboards, etc. For a penny a day, my kitchen always sings with color!
2. I put color harmony in closets, decorating shelves with gay Royledge patterns that match room colors and sparkle up the room.
3. I make old lamps look new, trimming with lovely "left-over" Royledge designs. So easy, such fun.

See exciting new Royledge colors and patterns now! Doubl-edge Royledge is shelf lining paper and edging all-in-one—place on shelf and fold. At 5-and-10's, naborhood, hardware, dept. stores.

CORN BAD?
FEEL SAD?
GET GLAD!

BLUE-JAY with Nupercaine* RELIEVES 3 WAYS:

Stops shoe pressure—its soft Dura-felt pad relieves pain instantly! Curbs surface pain, thanks to Blue-Jay's exclusive anesthetic Nupercaine! Loosens hard "core" with gentle medication—you just lift it out in a few days! For greater relief get Blue-Jay. "America's Largest Selling Corn Plaster."

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by Ciba

BLUE JAY Corn Plasters — NOW IN 2 SIZES: STANDARD AND LITTLE TOE

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company
Chicago 16

MAKE MONEY SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS

With Biggest Line of Money-Saving Fast Sellers

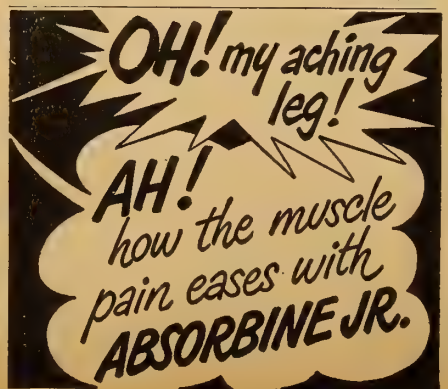
Start Earning Now—Full or Spare time. Show greatest value Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 for only $1. Rich colorful designs, glorious papers, finest quality at this low price. Others at 25 for $1.00 and DeLuxe line. No experience. Also make big money with 22 Big Value Assortments! Smashing sellers in Christmas & Everyday Boxes. Many Economy Assortments to sell at 50c retail. Gift Wrappings to sell for 90c. 12 new $1.00 assortments. Earn cash NOW! Send for samples FREE today.

50 Christmas Cards WITH NAME $1

FREE SAMPLES

BEST VALUES EVER SHOWN!

GENERAL CARD COMPANY
1300 W. Jackson Blvd., Dept. 123, CHICAGO 7, ILL.



final examinations! Oh, they're horrible. All the pupils from the different studios go down to the Board of Education building in Los Angeles, and we take one long exam that lasts from eight o'clock in the morning to four o'clock in the afternoon!"

In spite of the horror which exams hold for Peggy Ann, she does well at school, and has almost invariably gotten straight A grades. She is what theatrical people call a "quick study"—one who can memorize almost at a glance, and she has never been known to forget a line on a set.

Her favorite subjects are English and History, and Latin her worst bugaboo.

Peggy Ann is looking forward eagerly to the time when she'll be ready for college. "Oh boy, I'm going to a coeducational college, I'll tell you that right now," she predicts, emphatically. "Northwestern University, I hope!"

One milestone on the road to adulthood has just been passed. Peggy Ann has now acquired her driver's license, and at last is allowed to drive the family car—a newly-purchased, black Buick. Already the typical problems, about who gets the car when, are stirring up the typical family debates. Mrs. Garner says ruefully, "I seem to have the car about two days a week. . . . Oh well, maybe we'll be able to get another car as a gift for Peggy Ann next Christmas, and we'll have some peace in the family then, I hope."

Peggy Ann's father, William G. H. Garner, is a former government attorney who was a captain in Army Intelligence during the war. Consequently, his wife and daughter didn't see him often, and his visits home were gala events. (This was before Mr. and Mrs. Garner were divorced.) One visit had colorful consequences, due partly to Peggy Ann.

After coming home to spend the Christmas holidays with the family, he was recalled suddenly on the evening of New Year's Day. His return to camp caused considerable comment—because his face was covered with bandages, and one arm was in a splint. "Hmmm—must have been a dilly of a New Year's Eve," his comrades remarked. They guffawed when he insisted that he had received his injuries by falling off a bicycle. Yet, that is what happened, as Peggy Ann will swear.

"Barbara and I wanted to go bicycling on New Year's Day," she relates. "And Daddy decided he would come cycling, too, just to look after us. Well, he seemed to enjoy it a lot. Pretty soon he got going fast, and I couldn't keep up with him, and after a while I came to the top of a hill and looked down, and there were Daddy and the bicycle at the bottom, tangled together, and covered with blood. Makes you wonder, sometimes, just who is at the awkward age around here!"

I SAW IT HAPPEN

While in Valogna, France, shortly after the invasion, I had the pleasure of seeing Bing Crosby in a U.S.O. show. During the performance, a low flying airplane zoomed towards us. Both the actors and the audience were scared, for enemy planes were numerous. "Worried, Bing?" queried the stooge. "Yes," Bing replied, "It might be the stork again." Hundreds of voices roaring with laughter dispelled all fear.

James Kennedy
Dayton, Ohio.

"COOP"

(Continued from page 34)

myself is, I ought to know by now that Gary's as full of surprises as a Christmas stocking. I've known him almost since the world began, it seems. I played in the second picture he ever made—Children of Divorce—in which Gary's job was an All-American high in Hollywood miscasting.

The set was my swank Park Avenue apartment. The characters were super-sophisticated Manhattan youths merrily going to Hell. Gary was a New York man-about-town, the script said. And only a few months before he'd been riding the range in Montana!

Even in that miscast part, his scenes revealed something so terrific that they fairly shouted, "star stuff!" You couldn't put your finger on what it was—and I suppose you can't now. It's pure inner power that Coop has. I heard a director who ought to know—C. B. DeMille, no less say, "If Gary ever let loose all the power inside him, he'd blow up the screen!"

young in heart . . .

Coop let some of it escape later on, and it made unforgettably real roles for the screen, like Sergeant York, Lou Gehrig and Mr. Deeds. In person, though, he holds it in with a boyish shyness which he's never capitalized on in his acting, as Jimmy Stewart has, for instance. I can't help thinking of Coop as still a boy. even though he's in his middle forties.

I was walking down the street in Beverly Hills not long ago, when I heard a shout. "Hey, Hedda—look what I just got!" I thought it must be a letter from the President or something equally sensational. Gary stuck out his wrist. He had a new watch, one of those waterproof, shockproof, everything proof kind that tells when it's going to rain and practically all the saints' days. Gary could buy one, if he wanted to, I'm sure, every day in the week. But he'd run across the street like a kid with a new B-B gun to show me his prize. He stopped traffic for me another time, right on Hollywood Boulevard—and he hates a scene with a crowd—just to glow over a new buggy he'd bought. I remember not long ago when a foreign automobile, one of those sleek hand-made English jobs, broke up a perfectly good party at Merle Oberon's house. A British pal of Merle's rolled up in it and from that minute on us gals—including Rocky, Gary's pretty wife—sat in the house and twiddled our thumbs. Gary kept his head poked under the hood all day investigating the works.

Gary wasn't exactly fresh off the range when his wife, Rocky, met and married him. He'd had the rough ranch edges rounded off by Clara Bow and Lupe Velez, the Countess Di Frasso and his other bachelor-day girl friends. Come to think of it, darned if I didn't promote Gary's first date with Clara! Gary liked fun girls. Lupe Velez, bless her memory, was as gay a personality package as Hollywood ever knew. Gary unlaxed and let go around her. But he always remained at heart the wild West kid he'd been. He used to give all his best girls animals.

Lupe got an eagle—a wild one Coop had caught. It flapped dismally around her big house for months and she thought she knew why it had the blues. "'Eee needs a mate, Gay-ree," she explained. "Get one."

Gary got one, all right. I've forgotten how many scratches it cost his sun-tanned hide, scrambling over the cactus-spiked hills of Catalina Island to do it. But he got that eagle.

Gary presented Dorothy Di Frasso with

Are you really sure of your present deodorant? Test it against Fresh
See for yourself why more and more women are switching to Fresh—the new cream deodorant they find the most effective and so gentle

Use FRESH and be lovelier to love

Lovely to know . . . that you can really rely on Fresh. Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-stopping ingredient known to science!

Lovely to use . . . creamy Fresh stays smooth . . . never greasy, gritty or sticky . . . doesn't dry out.

And gentle . . . Fresh contains a patented ingredient that makes it gentle to skin, safe for fabrics.

No wonder . . . more and more women are switching to Fresh.

FRESH
CREAM DEODORANT
STOPS PERSPIRATION
FRESH is approved by the American Medical Association for advertising in their publications.

© 1947, The Pharma-Craft Corporation, Inc.

a dog. The countess was the girl friend who introduced Gary to the smart set, rubbed off the last rough corral edges before Gary married Veronica Balfe.

Gary was a school-girl crush of Rocky Balfe's. She lived in the East, but luckily, she had two uncles in Hollywood, Cedric Gibbons, Dolores Del Rio's ex-husband now married to Hazel Brooks, and Elliott Gibbons, a screen writer who's married today to Irene, M-G-M's famous dress designer. Rocky had visits to Hollywood, even as a girl, and on those visits she saw her dream man in the flesh and knew what she wanted.

I remember Rocky as a teen-ager. She used to come out to Hollywood with her mother. They stayed at the old Hollywood Hotel and many days she'd play around the Hollywood Hotel pool with my boy, Bill. She's always been poised and pretty, a little on the elegant side, the type of girl boys dream about when they read King Arthur and his Knights, a princess—just a little aloof and unattainable. Rocky has a finely chiseled profile, big dark eyes, a queenly air. She's Gary's queen and he loves pleasing her slightest whim. It's a marriage that's been perfect from the start—and that I'll confess began as one of those G. Cooper surprises for me, too. Why would a Western guy with sagebrush sticking out of his hair fall for a polished Eastern pearl like Rocky—and vice versa?

They met back East once when Gary was fancy free, and pretty soon Rocky was out on another Hollywood visit—but this time set to stay a while. They said she had plans for a Hollywood career herself: her step-dad, Paul Shields, a Wall Street financier, had some tie-up with a studio and Rocky rated a contract try. I don't think she came out to be an actress. She came out to marry Gary—and that's what she did.

They had a swank Park Avenue wedding with all the social trimmings. Then they took a trip to Bermuda and came back with the idea for the house they've lived in ever since. They even had coral roofing shingles and bricks freighted up by boat from that island. But the house, tasteful, unique and gem-like as it is, fits Rocky, not Gary. There's just one touch of Coop in the front room, for instance, a zebra rug, made from the skin of a trophy he bagged on his bachelor African safari. In a little sitting room off his bedroom, Coop racks the guns and outdoor tackle he's so crazy about. The rest of the house is a woman's, filled with gorgeous antiques and rich furnishings. The baseboard in the bedroom is a running mirror, the draperies are super exquisite.

When Gary's house was robbed sometime ago, the thieves piled up all the silver and Rocky's jewels on the bed, tied their haul up in the bedspread and departed. What they used for a loot bag was a custom-woven, crushed plush bedspread, so rich and rare that it took Rocky six months to replace it.

Gary has fitted himself into this sophisticated setting perfectly and without a kick, as he has into the life his wife likes—the top-drawer, smart, Hollywood life of unending parties and quiet, luxury living. Rocky's a social spark-plug and there's always something for the Coopers to do with their friends, Mary Jane and Doug Fairbanks, Merle Oberon and Lucian Ballard, Tyrone Power, Virginia and Darryl Zanuck, Van Johnson and Evie Wynn, Clark Gable, and scads more of Hollywood's social elite.

Gary and Rocky make an annual pilgrimage back to Southampton, Long Island, to visit her mother, Mrs. Paul Shields, and to keep in touch with the Eastern non-Hollywood upper crust. Last year they took back Clark Gable as an added attraction. He met Millicent Rogers, a friend of Rocky's, and they were a handsome foursome for quite a while.

This sort of high life is not really Gary Cooper's natural style. He's not a party boy or greeter; he's shy, built for open skies and a saddle, not drawing rooms and Hepplewhite chairs. Gary has never cared about cocktails. He hates like fury to dance. Small talk and clever conversation aren't his strong points. Fluttery, flirtatious society girls scare him to death. Yet he likes it—because Rocky does. He's completely devoted and happy to be wherever she is, doing what she likes.

He's a born gentleman and I'm sure it's as instinctive for him to want to please Rocky or anyone he loves as it is to take off his hat to a lady. He loves his wife and is completely under her spell. But every woman close to Gary always gets the same devoted attention. I've always admired Gary for the sweet way he's treated his wonderful mother and his late dad, Judge Cooper. Despite his success and fame, Gary was never anything but their kid around them. That's one department where I know he never grew up.

Mrs. Cooper belongs to the Hollywood Mothers' Club and I'm a member myself. I remember when Judge and Mrs. Cooper celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, all of us Hollywood maws were invited to their sweet little house in Hollywood. Gary was busy with a picture and about the last person I expected to see there. But in the midst of the gathering he stalked shyly in, greeting all the mothers separately, shaking their hands to make them glow, and kissing his own mom warmly as he handed her his golden roses and gold gifts of all kinds for the golden wedding day.

He's every bit as kind and courtly to

ADVERTISEMENT

"Our very latest model. Built-in, roller-bearing case for Pepsi-Cola."

his daughter, Maria, a big girl of twelve, smart, pretty and talented. Maria's a perfect fifty-fifty combination of Gary and Rocky and Gary's simply wild about her. She goes to Marymount, a convent school nearby the Cooper house, and because she wanted to be raised as a Catholic, Gary and Rocky, who were married in the Episcopal church, took Catholic instruction.

I hope I haven't given the impression that Gary and Rocky Cooper's marriage is one-sided, because that's not the truth. I'd say Rocky's the domestic boss of the team, but since becoming Mrs. Cooper, she's learned to enjoy the things Gary likes, and she's darned good at them, too.

They're forever taking trips, that pair, because Gary loves trips. Sun Valley's the favorite spot, and if they don't fly they roll up in the deluxe station wagon Henry Ford II had made for Gary. Gary loves hunting better than anything, and next to that, plain skeet shooting. Rocky's taken up both, so now, half the time, she beats her old man. The only time I had any trouble pinning Gary down to doing something I wanted was when I nabbed him in the middle of a hunting expedition.

He was up near Sun Valley with Rocky and Ernest Hemingway and his then new bride, Martha Gelhorn, and I wanted to make a short movie subject of the dove and jackrabbit hunt they were on. As usual, when I wired Coop, he replied "Sure, Hedda, anything for you." The cameraman I sent up had to track him down like a coyote to pull him away from those doves and rabbits. But when he finally did, Gary delivered not only himself but the elusive Mr. Hemingway who'd said, "No," at first. It made a wonderful film, with those two expert hunters and celebrities and it was just one of the many favors Gary has done me through the years.

the master at work . . .

Sometimes, when I haven't seen Coop for a long time I suddenly get the urge to check up on him in person. The other day I spied Rocky at a luncheon party.

"What's Gary up to?" I asked.

"He's painting," smiled Rocky. "Why don't you come see the master at work?"

I hurried right over the next day. Rocky led me through Gary's abandoned gun room and outside. "In here," she indicated.

"Why," I gasped. "It's the doghouse!"

"It was," grinned Rocky. "But it's Gary's studio now. He's off on a new project."

Inside I found the same gangling Gary I knew years ago—maybe a touch of gray and a line or two—and a familiar bell rang in my memory. The last thing he looks like is an artist, but before he landed in the movies, Gary traveled around, door to door, selling his own Western sketches to keep himself alive in Hollywood. "Hi, Hedda," he said, daubing busily away. "What color's a nasturtium?"

"Red," I said, trying not to look too surprised, "some are yellow, some orange."

"I've tried mixing 'em," he sighed. "And all I seem to get is a nasty brown."

True enough, it wasn't Cézanne on the canvas, but it was his first try at oils. "I'm going to lick this," swore Gary, hitching up his Levis, "if it takes all summer." Well, summer's almost over and I haven't seen Coop's masterpieces yet. I don't expect them to be any Rembrandts for a lot of reasons, including the fact that Gary's been busy with Good Sam, his next film.

But I'm staking out a spot on my wall to hang one—to remind me always of my April fool favorite star—and I'll bet it's good. I've watched Gary leap up the ladder from the awkward cowboy to an Oscar-owning actor who's worth $500,000 for every movie he makes. I'd bet on Gary Cooper to travel far in any direction he picks. He's got mighty long legs.

BORDERLINE ANEMIA*

leaves girls listless and lonesome!

How thousands who are pale and tired because of this blood deficiency may find renewed energy with Ironized Yeast Tablets

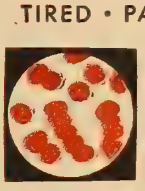
LISTLESS girls — girls who are low on pep and "personality", color and charm — often may blame a blood condition. They may have a Borderline Anemia, due to a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency. Yes, if you're pale and weary your red blood cells may be to blame. They may be too puny and faded to transmit full energy to your body. Results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined — many men and children — have this Borderline Anemia.

How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

Take Ironized Yeast Tablets if this Borderline Anemia is sapping your strength and stealing the blush from your cheek. They are formulated to help build up faded red blood cells to healthy color and size — to help restore your usual vigor and good looks. Of course, continuing tiredness and pallor may be due to other conditions—so consult your doctor regularly. But in this Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets to help build up your blood. Take them to start your energy shifting back into "high", to help restore your natural color! Take them so you really can enjoy life again! Ask your druggist for the big economy size.

Resulting from ferro-nutritional blood deficiency*

BORDERLINE ANEMIA
why it can make you
TIRED • PALE • LISTLESS



Energy-Building Blood. This is a microscopic view of blood rich in energy elements. Here are big, plentiful red cells that release energy to every muscle, limb, tissue.

Borderline Anemia. Many have blood like this; never know it. Cells are puny, faded. Blood like this can't release the energy you need to feel and look your best.

Improved, Concentrated Formula

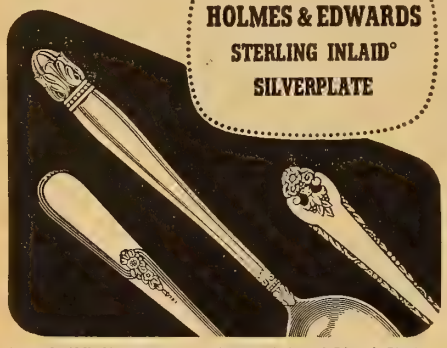
Ironized Yeast
TABLETS

"I know the one I'd take!"

the one with these

The two blocks of sterling inlaid at back of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks. They make this silver-plate stay lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID°
SILVERPLATE



Copyright 1947, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

you DO NOT need to buy EXPENSIVE SHOES to safeguard your Toddler's feet Why?

No shoes at any price are better than sensibly-priced WEE WALKERS for a toddler's normal feet. Cost less because they are made by America's largest exclusive baby shoe manufacturer, and sold through mass distribution stores. The best safeguard is to not let baby grow into and out of shoes. Buy the correct size NOW and change to a larger size IN TIME.

Ask your doctor about WEE WALKERS . . . see them . . . compare them . . . try them . . . in Infants' or shoe department of stores listed. Birth to size 8.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE

W. T. Grant Co. S. S. Kresge Co. J. J. Newberry Co.
H. L. Green Co., Inc. I. Silver & Bros. Scott Stores
McCrory Stores Schulte-United Charles Stores Co.
Metropolitan Chain Stores, Inc. Kinney Shoe Stores
F. & W. Grand Grand Silver Co. McLellan Stores
Montgomery Ward & Co.

Smooth One-Piece Tongue:

Stops pressure on nerves, muscles, blood vessels caused by sewed-on tongue, still used on some shoes selling at top prices.

FREE: Pamphlet, "Look At Your Baby's Feet." Valuable information on foot care, and scale to measure size needed. Moran Shoe Co., Dept. M, Carlyle, Ill.

WEE WALKER Shoes
FOR Wee WALKERS

GLENN FORD LIFE STORY

(Continued from page 45)

finally one Christmas, Grant turned up with a new weapon . . . an air rifle.

Glenn wasn't made aware of this new development in their armament race until one afternoon a few days later when he was working on his tree house. Suddenly, he heard a splat and looked down to find a B-B pellet in the limb he was sitting on.

"Hey, what do you think you're doing?" he yelled.

"Shooting," Grant yelled back. "Some gun, huh!"

Then he shot again, and the next B-B hit Glenn on the forehead, where he still has the scar. Glenn was furious. He chased Grant across the backyard, into his house, and then into his bedroom, where he proceeded to beat the daylights out of him. Then he broke Grant's B-B gun and went home. And that ended his fighting with Grant. Fists and clods were O.K., but that gun did it.

Then things became pretty placid in Glenn's life. He concentrated on his studies at Santa Monica High School, and managed to sandwich in an appearance in the Junior Class play, The Thirteenth Chair. He graduated into the midst of the depression—it was 1934—and discovered that he hadn't made any definite plans about what to do with his life.

For a while he thought teaching might be okay. Then he gave some thought to the diplomatic service. Lots of traveling, see faraway places, meet interesting people. It sounded like a good thing.

Then an idea hit him. What's wrong with acting? Certainly every play didn't have to be staged in a leaky barn, with settings built out of box wood. But when he presented the idea to his parents, they didn't seem to be burning with the same combustible burst of enthusiasm.

"We don't want to tell you what you must do," Glenn's father said. "But isn't acting a pretty risky business?"

"I guess anything's a gamble these days," Glenn replied, logically enough.

"But do you really want to be an actor?"

Glenn frowned seriously for a moment, then smiled, "Yes sir. I'd like that just fine." And that was the end of teaching, and of adventures in far-away places with the diplomatic service.

Santa Monica's current little theater group was then holding forth in the basement of the Public Library, and the group's director, Harold Clifton, gave Glenn a chance to read, was impressed, and cast him in a comparatively minor part. Then began a friendly association that has lasted until today. Harold is now dialogue director at Columbia Studios and works on all of Glenn's pictures, the most recent being Man From Colorado.

As it must to all such ventures, death came to the Basement Players. But Harold and Glenn went from one little theater to the next. Some 100-odd plays later—in which Glenn's roles were mostly small—Harold began to size Glenn up.

"You've been around long enough," he said. "It's about time I gave you a good part." Glenn smiled, and for the first time began to feel that his perseverance was paying off.

Then, after a session of fairly good roles in everything from June Moon to the sombre Hamlet, Glenn got a call from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for an interview. He talked to Oliver Hinsdell, then the studio's dramatic coach, who motioned Glenn into a chair and sat looking him over in silence.

"You're certainly not the pretty boy type," he finally said, with a smile.

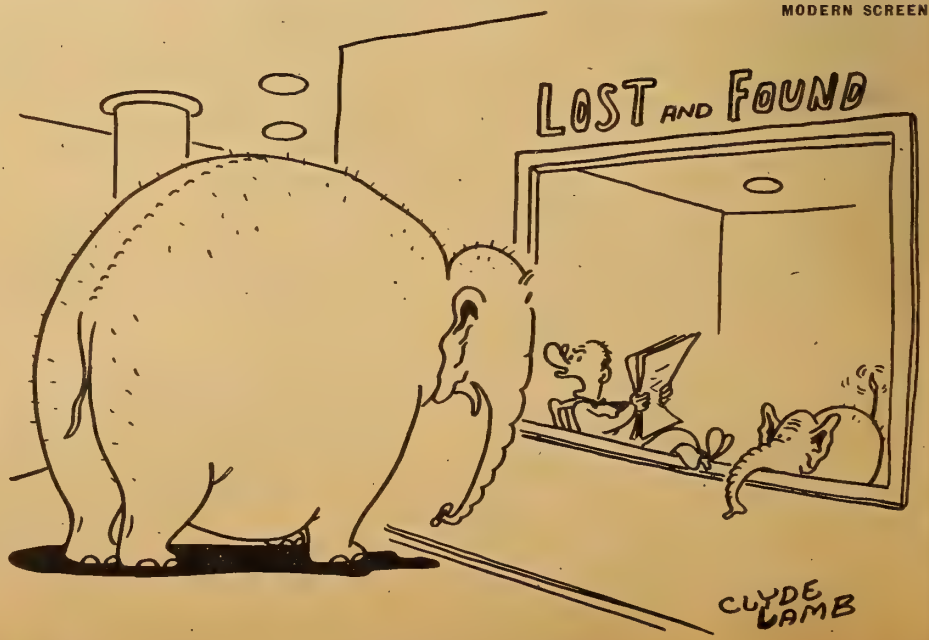
Glenn smiled back. "No, sir. I hope not."

"Maybe that's just as well," said Hinsdell. "But right now, we're looking for pretty boys." Glenn's stomach did a loop, then a dive.

"However, I'll see what I can do for you," Hinsdell went on, "I'll keep in touch with you."

While waiting for "the touch," Glenn went back into the Santa Monica Community Players. Then, one night, when he was playing the lead in Journey's End, a Paramount talent scout spotted him. He called Glenn the next day and offered him a small role as the M.C. in a short subject entitled Manhattan Serenade.

"You have a tuxedo, of course," the scout mentioned matter-of-factly.



"Well—what do you want?"

"Oh, sure," said Glenn, enthusiastically, but untruthfully.

"Fine, then. Come by the studio tomorrow and pick up the script."

By borrowing a little here and there, Glenn managed to scrape up thirty-five dollars, the cost of renting one.

The picture was shot on Easter Sunday, and of course, except for the stern policemen at the gate, Paramount Studios was deserted. But even the silence impressed Glenn. Because all important production was stopped for the day, Glenn was assigned to a star's dressing room.

When the day's shooting ended at six o'clock, Glenn walked off the sound stage into the dark and roamed aimlessly around the lot until nine-thirty. He went home with the firm resolve to become an important movie star.

But came the dawn . . . and the facing of cold facts. He had torn the rented tuxedo, and with the repair bill, the outfit had cost him fifty dollars. And his paycheck for the one day's work totaled only twenty-five.

For the next few days, Glenn more or less forgot acting, read some new novels and swam at the beach. Then one morning, he dashed down to breakfast, gulped his coffee and headed out the door.

"What now?" his mother called after him.

Over his shoulder he yelled back, "Casting a new show in L.A. See you tonight."

Such were the first days of Glenn's struggle for a chance. A lot of time passed, Glenn was doing Parnell again in one of Santa Monica's little theaters, when fate moved in again. This time it was personified by Tom Moore, an old silent star who was now working as the talent scout for Twentieth Century-Fox. He believed that Glenn was not only a good actor, but potentially a valuable studio property. He risked his job and his own career to prove it.

that first test . . .

The first test Tom arranged was a corny affair. In it, Glenn opened a door, sat on a couch, kissed a girl, lit a cigarette, and then walked out of the room. And, of course, the makeup men had dabbed Glenn with the lipstick, eye-shadow and pancake makeup then favored by the standard pretty boys.

When the studio executives saw the test, there was a lot of coughing and uncomfortable moving about. When it was over, one of the top men turned to Tom Moore with a glum look, and exploded, "You're hired by this studio to find talent. If he's your idea of talent, you better start looking for another job."

"I think the kid can act," Tom said stubbornly.

"So what?" the executive replied. "He looks like everybody else. No sex appeal."

"But he has an interesting face," Tom answered. "Besides, since he can act, he can look like any character he has to portray. What's wrong with that?"

"You'll find out," the man boomed back, "if you don't start doing a better job."

Tom didn't give up, however. After seeing Glenn playing in Reunion in Vienna, he tried to sell him to the studio again, without much better luck. Then, just before Glenn was about to leave for New York to do a small role with Tallulah Bankhead, Tom called him.

"I've got another test for you," he exclaimed.

"Thanks a lot," Glenn said. "But I've almost cost you your job twice. Let's forget it."

"Glenn, make this test. It might be different."

"Okay. But let me wear some old clothes and no makeup. I'm not an Arrow Collar man and don't want to look like one."

"PRESS DOWN? Not with my NEW BISSELL*!"

New "Bisco-Matic"* Brush Action sweeps clean without any pressure on the handle!

Yes—even under tables and beds! Just glide the sweeper. This new feature adjusts the brush automatically to any rug, *any*where!

"Bisco-Matic" Bissells are available now in limited quantities at Bissell dealers only—complete with exclusive "Sta-up" Handle, and easy "Flip-O" Empty.

NEW BISSELL SWEEPERS

with patented "Bisco-Matic" Brush Action

*REG. U. S. PATENT OFF.

BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO., GRAND RAPIDS 2, MICH.

The BEST screen stories of 1947

Now you can read

MIRACLE ON 34th STREET

THE HUCKSTERS

ARCH OF TRIUMPH

PERILS OF PAULINE

CROSSFIRE

IT'S A WONDERFUL LIFE and 14 other hits!

Over 100 Photographs —All in this Great Annual

Only 25¢ On Sale Everywhere

the best screen stories of 1947
MIRACLE ON 34th STREET
MAUREEN O'HARA - JOHN PAYNE plus 19 OTHER GREAT STORIES OF THE YEAR'S HIT PARADE FILMS!

Advertisement

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

At the first blush of Womanhood

by
VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm—There is nothing "wrong" with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike—Don't take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid's exclusive formula. That's why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses—more men and women everywhere—use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself—You'll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don't be half-safe—During this "age of courtship," don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

The test brought a role in a picture called Heaven with a Barbed Wire Fence. The picture, to put it politely, was a choice flop. It almost made him quit movies for good.

Then Columbia saw something they liked about Glenn, and signed him to a contract. At last, he was on his way.

My part in Glenn's story started one evening in 1942, when my mother and I went to see a Dietrich picture at our neighborhood theater. When it was over, the title of a Penny Singleton film flashed on. There was a fellow named Glenn Ford in it. He had a quality that was intriguing. Sincerity, I guess you would call it. On the way out, I said to mother, "We'll have to watch that boy." I married him in October of 1943.

But it wasn't as simple as that. Pat O'Brien was largely the reason we did meet. He had been trying to make a twosome of us for some time, and finally introduced us at a swimming party.

Our initial conversation wasn't exactly electrifying. It went something like this:

Said I, "I think you have the makings of a fine actor."

Said Glenn, "Thank you. And I've always enjoyed your dancing so much."

I smiled, and that was that. Or so I thought, until about two weeks later when Glenn called me up and asked me to have dinner with him.

"Why not come over to the house," I said. "We've a wonderful cook and the refrigerator's full of food."

He came, and brought a healthy appetite.

It wasn't long before we were married. We had ten days for our honeymoon before Glenn was transferred to Camp Pendleton, near San Diego, and I was almost simultaneously offered a chance to earn $40,000 at the Radio City Music Hall. I was faced with a big decision . . . whether to follow my career or my husband. Suddenly, it wasn't a problem. I went to La Jolla."

For $60 a month, we rented the servants' quarters over the garage of an enormous beachside estate. I marketed, cooked meals in a rush, and grabbed every fleeting moment I could with Glenn. I loved it.

Glenn and I learned a lot about each other during those first few weeks together: that we had fantastically different standards, but that basically we were the same. That we both displayed our nervous energy and that we were both innately active people. In short, we built the basis for happiness during those rushed days.

And there you are. Glenn, for my money, is the most lovable guy in Hollywood. And the best looking. And certainly a great actor. And—as for his status as husband and father—you don't hear me complaining, do you?

What more can a gal ask out of life?

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Who are your favorite stars? We'd like to know, so that we can feature them in future issues of MODERN SCREEN. The first 500 of you who answer the questionnaire below will receive a three-months' subscription to MODERN SCREEN absolutely free. So hurry up, and be among the lucky 500 who'll get the November, December and January issues as a gift from us to you.

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our October issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd and 3rd CHOICES.

Are Russell and Madison Married? (Gail Russell, Guy Madison) ☐
Lady In Retirement (Greer Garson) ☐
Memo On A Madman (Bob Mitchum) ☐
Weekend At The Ladds (Alan Ladd) ☐
Sierra Madre (Humphrey Bogart) ☐
The Sinatra Set (Frank Sinatra) ☐
"Coop" (Gary Cooper) by Hedda Hopper ☐
The Case of Autry Vs. Rogers (Gene Autry, Roy Rogers) ☐
My Wife's Husband (June Allyson, Dick Powell) ☐
The Awkward Age (Peggy Ann Garner) ☐
On A Note Of Triumph (Rita Hayworth) ☐
Glenn Ford Life Story (Conclusion) ☐
Miracle On Main Street (Lizabeth Scott) ☐
Everything Happens To Joan (Joan Leslie) ☐
Devotion (Susan Peters) ☐
A Young Man's Fancy (Frank Latimore) ☐
Everything With A Kiss (Cary Grant) ☐
Vision In White (Barbara Lawrence) ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST?.....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference .....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them , 1, 2, 3, in order of preference .....

.....

My name is.....

My address is .....

City..... Zone..... State..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

SIERRA MADRE

(Continued from page 49)

when Bogie and Betty (as he calls her) were making Dark Passage together. Their plans were more on the sentimental side then. "For a second anniversary comes up a second honeymoon, Baby," suggested Bogie. "It's only right and natural. What do you say we celebrate with a spin to Honolulu in the Cup race?" Bogie has been boat-happy since his Navy days in World War I. He'd dreamed about the Cup race since coming to Hollywood.

The bills added up to $6,000 before they got the "Santana" in racing trim. Caulk this and sand that, paint that and polish this. Bogie and Betty rode their prize hobby furiously for the Big Event and counted the weeks.

Then up came an event that was even bigger. It was another one Bogie had planned away back—five years ago, to be exact, when Director John Huston handed him a book, "Treasure of the Sierra Madre." The story was about hidden gold in the Mexican mountains, and about desperate men who went after it—and what that gold did to them. It was crammed with action—strictly male struggle, fights, hairy chests and jaws, dirt, sweat, muscle and blood—the dramatic stuff Bogie loves. He stayed up all night to read it. The next morning he told John, "That's for me."

So now, on the eve of his second honeymoon cruise, came up the production he couldn't miss. He told Lauren the bad news. "It's Mexico for me and back to the grind," he said. "No cruise, no anniversary, no second honeymoon."

"I'm going with you," she said. "We'll have it down there."

"This is strictly stag. No place for a lady," vetoed Humphrey.

the look . . .

Betty's lower lip slid out stubbornly and she gave him the look. "Careful what you call me," she grinned, "but remember, if you ever want me—just whistle." Bogie has worn a silver whistle on his key chain ever since To Have and Have Not. He gave it a toot. "Okay," he said, "but you won't like it."

"Maybe yes, maybe no," drawled Betty Bacall, "but what's an anniversary without a husband?"

They took off for Mexico City in a DC-4—all the cast principals herded together in the big plane—Humphrey Bogart, Walter Huston, Bruce Bennett, Tim Holt, Barton MacLean, Director John Huston and a couple of wives—Evelyn Keyes, John's bride, and Lauren Bacall. By the time they landed, Lauren began to think maybe Bogie was right.

It was 3:30 a.m. when they roared in over Mexico City, after eight hours in the air from Hollywood. The field below was inky, blacked out by mist. They made five passes, swooping and zooming up again while the safety whistles wailed eerily. There's a law in Mexico: after forty-five minutes circling a field you move on. They got the signal, "Try Vera Cruz." They had trouble there, too, fighting soup over the mountains clear down to the coast. "Maybe with this picture the fade-out comes first," cracked Bogie grimly when the gas got down to 20 gallons and there still wasn't a hole to see land. They found one just in time. Bogie hopped out and kissed the ground. "Viva Mexico!" he said.

"Viva terra firma," added Betty fervently. "I'll never leave it." But she did pronto. After coffee and gas for the ship they hopped off in the daylight to the City.

How much freedom can a career girl enjoy?

102 OUT OF 127 MODELS, ARTISTS, WRITERS REPORT NO CHAFING WITH FREE-STRIDE MODESS

Bright young careerists—girls to whom freedom of action means so much—have made a smart discovery for you!

Girls who had suffered chafe with their regular napkin tested a new, improved napkin, Free-Stride Modess. Object: To see if it gave freedom from chafe.

The answer: 102 out of 127 reported no chafing with Free-Stride Modess!

The secret of the chafe-free comfort so many girls found in Free-Stride Modess lies in the clever fashioning of the napkin edges.

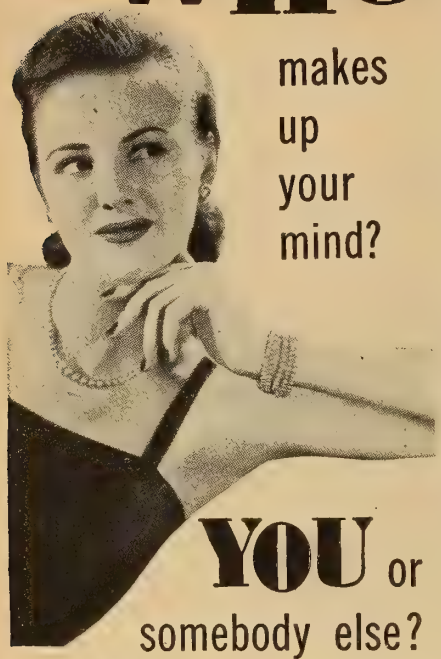
Free-Stride Modess has extra cotton on its edges—extra softness—right where the cause of chafe begins.

The extra cotton also acts to direct and retain moisture inside the napkin, keeping the edges dry and smooth longer. And dry, smooth edges don't chafe!

So safe, too! Free-Stride Modess has a triple safety shield to keep you confident—chase those accident fears. On sale everywhere now. Product of Personal Products Corporation.

Walk with comfort! Try the new Free-stride Modess!

WHO



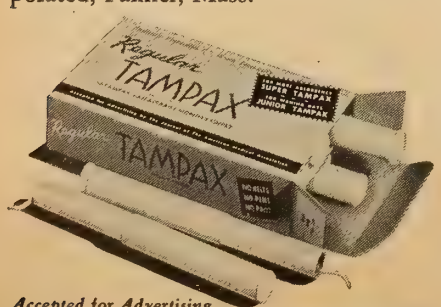
makes up your mind?

YOU or somebody else?

Every woman who discovers Tampax through this advertisement will probably be very glad she acted for herself instead of waiting for other women to lead the way.... Make up your own mind! Start right now to use this Tampax method of sanitary protection, which does away with belts, pins and external pads.... Tampax is a simple internal absorbent, invented by a doctor. When in place, it is neither seen nor felt!

Tampax is intended for use on every one of those "less pleasant" days of the month—and the difference it makes is real. No bulk to hamper you or show an edge-line under dresses. No extra warmth in overheated or crowded rooms. No worry about odor because odor cannot form.... Made of pure absorbent cotton, each Tampax is compressed in an applicator for easy insertion. Quick to change; and so small it is discreetly managed in restrooms; readily disposed of.

Get Tampax this very month. At drug and notion counters in 3 absorbencies (Regular, Super, Junior). Month's supply slips into your purse. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.



Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

The news had spread by then and they got a real South of the Border welcome—with vaqueros, gardenia girls and a band right at the airport, before they piled into the Reforma Hotel and put out the "Don't disturb" sign—in Spanish.

Two days later they were winding over the green tropical spine of Mexico, whizzing across gorges and skittering along cliffs down to San Jose Purua, the mountain spa John Huston had picked for his Sierra scenes. But before they left the Reforma, Bogie and Betty had their first battle with Spanish—and they lost.

Before he headed South of the Border, Bogie boned up on the tourista Spanish he figured he'd need. First he mastered the strictly set lingo. (In Mexico a Hollywood company, by law, has to hire a complete crew, man for man, to match Hollywood's labor imports.) But he and Lauren didn't stop there; they craved to fling their English-Spanish dictionary lore around a little more.

They were having dinner at the hotel the night before the location departure. A waiter poured Lauren some coffee and, flashing her new accomplishment, she said, "Basta!" The way her book read, that meant "enough." But pretty soon they saw the waiter over in the corner beating his breast and shedding tears to the head waiter. In a minute, the dinner captain bustled over.

too much . . .

"Is something wrong?" he asked Bogie.

The Bogarts shook their heads. "Heavens no!" replied Betty. "I just had enough coffee so I said 'enough'—'basta,'" she added proudly.

That made the captain swat his brow "'Basta' means 'enough,' all right," he explained, "but in a way you don't like. Like 'Get the heck out of here!' or 'Scram!'"

Humphrey Bogart's such a favorite below the border that he couldn't get by with any privacy in Mexico City. The day he stepped outside the door of the Reforma, a little kid bounced up with a stick and gave the uh-uh-uh-uh-machine gun rattle that kids all over the world love. "You're dead!" he announced. Crowds of aficionados (that's Mexican for "fan") followed Bogie and Betty around wherever they went in the capital, and even the taxi drivers raced Bogie around extra recklessly when he climbed in their hacks, just to show off. Later on, Bogie met many Mexico City officials, and before he came home to Hollywood he was thoroughly impressed and in love with our busy Southern neighbor. But this first week of work he wasn't so sure. There were some things he had to get acclimated to at San Jose Purua—such as snakes, machete-swinging Indians and burros—particularly burros.

San Jose's a picturesque hot springs set in the state of Michoacan—a Mexican beauty spot where upper crusters go for the baths. There's a huge 200-room hotel there, gardens, fountains and all the luxuries of a pleasure resort. There's a swimming pool, a bar, a billiard room (and Lauren's a pool shark), even a bowling alley to work out on at night, where Bogie made six straight strikes the first time he tried it. But only a few miles away at the Treasure of the Sierra Madre location, it was a different story.

The first set was on a rocky hillside tangled with green jungle growth. When he stepped into his scenes, Bogie spotted a squad of native Indians padding around on the shadowy perimeter of the lights, swatting the bushes. For his first scene he had to squat on a rock. He started to sit down. The Indians leapt forward and whacked all around him furiously. "Wait, Señor," said one, "the snakes."

"The what!"

"The cascabels, the corals, Señor," the Indian explained. "The rattlesnakes, the monsters—they like the rocks. You seet down—wheez—you daid. A moment, pleez." And he whacked around with his long knife.

Bogie's no sissy, exactly, but he felt the chills creep up his spine. He got more used to them after he'd seen Indian machete's lop their heads off right and left a few times. He never did get used to the burros, however.

He had a scene where he led his jack to a stream for water. The burro was supposed to drink thirstily but—well, you know that old gag about horses; it's the same with donkeys. "I know," said Bogie at last, "we'll trot him up and down the trail until he's so darned thirsty he'll have to drink!" Bogie dragged his partner up and down for an hour. It wasn't such a terrific idea. At the end the jackass was cool, collected and still definitely not interested in water. Bogie was dying with thirst and had to call time out for a beer!

Betty's idea to make the burro wake up and live was strictly a feminine trick. After Bogie had tugged away most of one morning, she said, "Why don't you run a lady burro up ahead of him? He'll follow." When they tried that, Humphrey's donkey only yawned and dug in his hooves. "They aren't human," decided Bogie. The only time he and Lauren came near a lovers' quarrel on their Mexican second honeymoon was when Betty fell in love with one mouse-gray, rag-eared little jenny. "I want to take her home, Bogie," she said. "Please buy her." Bogie was firm. "Buy all the silver, baskets, pottery, dresses, jewelry—whatever you like," he decreed, "anything except burros. That's where I put it down—the foot!"

Even Bogie's crusty heart melted, though, the day he took Betty to a bull fight. It wasn't exactly a big league event, just a dusty little ring in a tiny nearby town called Zitquaro, and the "bulls" were not much more than half-grown calves. This trip was the first in Mexico for both Humphrey and Lauren and like all tenderfoot Mexican tourists, they had to see at least one bullfight. Zitquaro rallied to stage one for the Hollywood company. They dedicated a bull to the Bogarts—that's quite an honor—but seeing the first one killed was enough for Bogie. When "his" bull came up for the knockout, he stopped the fight. "Hey," yelled Bogie, "I pardon the bull! Let him go!" He bought him and gave him away to some hungry citizens.

suckers for kids . . .

What got to Bogie and Betty Bacall's hearts most in Mexico, even more than burros and bulls, were the appealing little waifs who tagged around after them, barefooted and ragged. One little guy from Jungapeo got himself a job carrying cokes and beer to the bunch at San Jose Purua and became the pet of the camp. Bogie bought him a pair of shoes and Betty stuffed him with goodies every time she saw him. He was an orphan with a rugged time growing up behind him, but so sunny and attractive that John Huston's and Evvie Keyes' hearts grabbed on to him for keeps. When they left, they brought Pablo—his name was Pablo Alvarron—back to Hollywood with them to raise and educate.

Lauren surprised even herself with a rash of domesticity down in Mexico. They all ate at the San Jose Purua hotel, which proudly boasted a Viennese chef, but pretty soon the Americanos got sick of fancy sauces, pastries and fluff. "I'm getting cream-puffed to death," groaned Bogie one night. "Can't somebody show this guy how to make something simple like corned beef hash and beans for a change?"

"Sure," said Betty. "I can." She waltzed out into the kitchen and then and there took over, after a noisy second battle of Vienna. She was never too sure how the other guests appreciated her effort but she knew what Bogie and the Hollywood gang thought. They cinched her position as supervising chef for the rest of the stay. Another job she took on was nurse assistant to the camp medico, Dr. Raoul Herrera, a saint-like Mexican physician, who's devoting his life to caring for the rural Indian people. Another homeless waif, a pin-boy at the bowling alley, got his leg smashed and infected with a ball. Dr. Herrera had to operate on the spot in San Jose, and Betty stayed up all night to help pull him through.

When Bogie and Lauren's wedding date rolled around at last, the Sierra Madre location scenes were almost finished and John Huston had a surprise to hand them. "You're through, Bogie," he said. "We'll stick around here another couple of weeks and shoot patch-up stuff. But for you, school's out." That night the crew whipped up an anniversary party to end all parties with a native mariachi band, guitar players serenading Bogie and Betty all around the hotel grounds, a feast and dance, polished off with tequila toasts and presents for the anniversary pair. Next morning Bogie and Betty roared off in a hired buggy on their second honeymoon tour.

couple of tourists . . .

They covered the beauty spots of Mexico—Tuxpan, Acapulco, Fortin, Garci-Crespa, the silver mines of Taxco, the palaces at Cuernevaca. They did all the first time tourist tricks, and visited at least a thousand (Bogie swears) Mexican bazaars to judge from all the loot Lauren shipped home to their Beverly Hills shack. One of the best times they had was a ride on a Mexican bus in the country, with Betty holding babies on her lap and Bogie riding with a chicken perched on his shoulder. The proudest accomplishment Humphrey collected was the ability to pronounce one town, Chichimiquillas, so that even the natives knew what he meant. And the only regrettable habit he latched on to was a taste for barbecued goat!

Otherwise, and all in all, there isn't much the Bogarts would trade their anniversary in Mexico for, the way it worked out. They came back to Hollywood with mahogany tans, a carload of souvenirs, The Treasure of Sierra Madre in the can for Bogie, and memories of a pleasant, hospitable land they can't wait to hurry back to.

Before his third anniversary rolls around, Humphrey Bogart plans to have another picture finished—the first one after all these years that he'll produce himself in collaboration with Mark Hellinger. It might be Fifty Grand, the Ernest Hemingway thriller.

For that third anniversary event they're already plotting the racing cruise they had to skip this time—a crack in the "Santana" at the Honolulu Cup, and down on the boat, where they hurried the minute they landed back in Hollywood, the cabin's already littered with navigation charts of the Great Circle route and such nautical lore. When any visitor sticks his head down the hatch these days to interrupt the relaxing Bogarts, he gets a strange greeting from Bogie in a foreign tongue—and unless he's hep to his Spanish it's baffling. But the tone is not.

Barks Bogie, when he's escaping Hollywood and such a rude interruption occurs, "Dejame en paz!" Liberally translated, Humphrey Bogart-wise, that means, "Beat it—I'm busy!"

Love-quiz ... For Married Folks Only

WHY IS HE WRITING TO ANOTHER WOMAN?

A. Her husband's cooling love ... his apparent disloyalty ... may be largely her fault. She may have become neglectful of proper feminine hygiene.

Q. Can such neglect affect married happiness?

A. Doctors say many wives kill romance this way ... stress that intimate daintiness demands effective douching. For this, you can depend on "Lysol" brand disinfectant.

Q. How does "Lysol" rate among other disinfectants?

A. Less "Lysol" is more effective than many other, weaker antiseptics. "Lysol," a proved germ and odor killer, is effective not only in the test tube but in contact with organic matter.

Q. How about homemade solutions—like salt, or soda?

A. No weak, makeshift solution can compare with "Lysol" for cleansing effectively.

ALWAYS USE "LYSOL" in the douche. See what a difference complete daintiness makes in renewed charm and married romance.

Check these facts with your doctor

Many doctors recommend "Lysol," in the proper solution, for Feminine Hygiene. Non-caustic, "Lysol" is non-injurious to delicate membrane. Its clean, antiseptic odor quickly disappears. Highly concentrated, "Lysol" is economical in solution. Follow easy directions for correct douching solution.

For Feminine Hygiene—always use

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

FREE BOOKLET! Learn the truth about intimate hygiene and its important role in married happiness. Mail this coupon to Lehn & Fink, Dept. D4710, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J., for frankly informing FREE booklet.

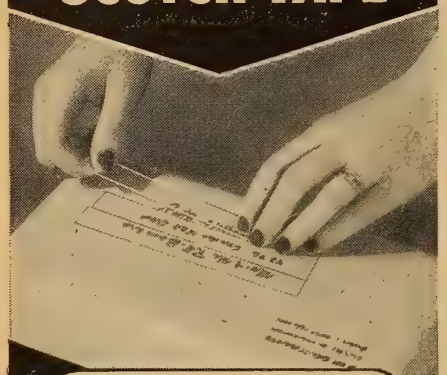
NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Copr., 1947 by Lehn & Fink Products Corp.

SLICK TRICK with "SCOTCH" TAPE



KEEP addresses on packages from getting blurred or smeared by covering them with transparent "Scotch" Tape.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. SCOTCH Cellulose TAPE BRAND

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

25¢ at all drug, department, variety, stationery and hardware stores.

Scads of "Scotch" Tape ideas in the new free "Slick Tricks" booklet. Send for yours today . . . and if you have some clever hunches on how you use "Scotch" Tape, let us hear from you! Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. 955 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.

© 1947 3M CO.

Here's QUICK MONEY for YOU

Sell Christmas Cards

Friends and others order quickly—you pocket big cash profit! Easy money for you showing amazing Personal Christmas Card values. FREE Samples of FIVE different lines.

25 WITH NAME $1

Also Assortments

Extra profits with 20 gorgeous assortments of Christmas and Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, and Stationery—60c and $1 retail. You make up to 50c a box. No experience is necessary. 21-card Assortment sent on approval.

PROCESS CORP., Troy at 21st Street
Dept. M-8 - CHICAGO 23, ILLINOIS

REPLICA DIAMOND Engagement Rings with matched wedding bands

Set #S-102—Flashing Replica Diamond in Solid Sterling Silver, with wedding band to match

Flashing replica diamond engagement rings chased wedding bands to match. Choice of any set in Sterling Silver, White or Yellow Gold Color Effect. SEND NO MONEY. Just name, address, ring size. Order by set number. Pay postman 97c plus postage or send $1 with order and we pay postage. GUARANTEE: If not pleased, return in 10 days for refund.

Only 97¢ FOR BOTH

Set #S-104—Flashing Replica Diamond, white gold color effect, with wedding band to match

Flashing Replica Diamond, yellow gold color effect with wedding band to match. →

Set #S-103—

Send All Orders To HAREM CO.
30 Church St., Dept. N-101
New York 7, N. Y.

ON A NOTE OF TRIUMPH

(Continued from page 33)

would happen. And now we were aboard the S.S. Veendam, watching the tugs shoving us away from the pier, watching the upturned faces at the dock growing smaller and smaller.

Rita turned to me with a complacent smile. "And the best part of it all is that almost everyone on this boat is Dutch, and no one will pay any attention to us."

She'd hardly mouthed the words when a small towhead approached her timidly, autograph book in hand. "Please, Miss Hayworth," he said, proffering the book.

"But where's your pencil?" Rita asked him. At that instant, the youngster grabbed her hand, his self-consciousness completely forgotten.

"Hey, Miss Hayworth," he cried. "Look at the Statue of Liberty!" Whereupon he dashed off to get a better look. The group at the rail overheard the conversation, and in just about ought minutes the amateur photographers were begging her to pose with the New York skyline as a backdrop. When the excitement subsided I started to ease Rita down to our stateroom muttering, " 'No one will pay any attention to us,' she says. I'm laughing."

Rita didn't say anything. She looked preoccupied. "You know," she said finally. "The Statue of Liberty really meant something to that little fellow who wanted my autograph. Did you see the look on his face?" She was so impressed by the Dutch child's obvious devotion to our country that she fetched a pencil and tracked him down, so that she could put her name in his book.

After that one flurry, the passengers took Rita in their stride, and we had a really heavenly voyage, playing deck tennis and shuffle board, reading (Eric Sevareid's "Not So Wild a Dream" and Arthur Koestler's "Thieves in the Night") and sleeping. What made everything absolutely perfect was when Captain Peter Legaay, the gracious septuagenarian skipper of the ship, broke his precedent of not fussing over shipboard dignataries by honoring Rita with a cocktail party! After it was over, she said to me, "If Holland is anything like its people, I'm going to be mad for it!"

tulip time . . .

We did love it, too. Loved every second of our too-brief four-day stay. We arrived on Tulip Day, which is the first Sunday after the first bloom of tulips, and driving from Rotterdam to Der Haag, we felt as if we were riding through tulip fields: all the cars, wagons, bicycles—even people—we passed on the road were bedecked with multicolored tulips. We stopped for a look at Scheveningen, the famous Dutch sea resort, then on to Der Haag for lunch. That night, Rita attended a birthday dinner for U.S. Ambassador Herman Baruch. It was a small formal party with several Dutch Parliamentarians, the head of the Dutch Red Cross and Baruch's aides. Before the main course, with an apologetic bow to Rita, the Ambassador announced the guest of honor. Whereupon a succulent turkey was ushered onto a side table by two chefs who promptly carved and served it.

Next day we headed for Volendam, a small fishing village not far from Amsterdam. All tourists are directed to this village, which is painstakingly kept picturesque by the Dutch Tourist Bureau. Here we busied ourselves photographing the tidy brick houses along the dike, and the inhabitants in their Dutch costumes, all of whom seemed to be old hands at striking postcard-like poses. Later on, we lunched at a wharfside restaurant, watching the small fishing boats, lulled by the lap of the water.

"The peace of this place," Rita marvelled. "Not a bobby-socker for miles around." Our pretty young waitress appeared then with a great bowl of boiled potatoes (Holland's national dish). She took one look at Rita, put down the dish with a clatter and whipped out an autograph book from her starched white apron. Rita signed it with a straight face, but when we were alone again, we guffawed into our napkins. There are apparently bobby-sockers in every language!

Our biggest sightseeing thrill was Amsterdam, that fabulous city laced with canals. Rita was being guided through the city museums, some three-century-old houses and other points of interest, when she learned of a hospital for wounded men of the Dutch underground. She asked to visit them provided she could do so alone and without fanfare. That was her only public appearance in the Netherlands, spent in Koal with forty Dutch heroes.

what's new with grable? . . .

Rita listened intently to their reminiscences of war. She was impressed by the serious-eyed boy who hoped that America, by continuing to play a strong role in world affairs, could prevent the development of another war. And she was touched by the smiling youngster with a battered face who wanted news of Betty Grable!

After the quiet of the Netherlands, France was very, very exciting indeed, and I don't suppose that either of us will ever forget the welcome Rita's Parisian fans gave her. When we stepped off the train at the Gare du Nord Station, three thousand of them, as excitable as if they were watching a close finish of a bicycle race, brushed the gatemen aside and swarmed down the platform to greet her. The police tried to hold them back, but somehow I, too, was carried off in the surging crowd. Believe me, it was a terrifying experience, and when I finally arrived at Rita's suite at the George Fifth Hotel, I was cut and torn and minus my best cigarette case. "Rita," I practically wept, "let's hope this never happens again." Fortunately, it didn't.

Our second morning in Paris, Rita sprang a surprise on me. "Lola," she announced, "I've got to buy some clothes."

"But heavens," I protested, waving vaguely at her trunk and three suitcases. "What about all those?" She was sort of embarrassed opening them up to show me, and I did a double-take when I saw that most of the space was taken up by bags of sugar and flour, and cans of every sort of food. "How come?" I asked her.

"It's for the hungry kids over here," she said quietly.

The shopping spree was fun and netted Rita seven stunning day dresses and two Christian Dior and Jacques Costet. The next couple of weeks were hectic for Rita. While I scooted around seeing all the sights, she was involved in press conferences—conducted through an interpreter from Columbia Pictures—and picture sittings.

"Can you imagine it, Lola," she said to me one evening. "Paris in the spring and I haven't seen a bit of it. Not even the Louvre. Gosh, everyone sees the Louvre!"

Eventually we escaped to a wee hotel at Beaulieu-sur-Mer on the French Riviera, where for ten beautiful days we played tennis and swam in the warm blue Mediterranean. We'd almost forgotten she was a famous movie star by the time we started back to Paris, and then a waitress at the inn where we stopped for lunch reminded us.

In French she whispered to Rita, "Mademoiselle Hayworth, I have something to show you." She took Rita upstairs, and there on the wall of her bedroom was a faded Hayworth glamour photo, which she asked Rita to sign.

Back in Paris once more, there was the gala premiere of Gilda and then we set off for the film festival at Brussels.

Brussels was such fun! It is actually the gayest city in Europe today, and it was in holiday mood for the film festival. All along the flag-bedecked Boulevard Marche Aux Herbes (Brussels' great white way) various theaters were showing the outstanding international films of the year. There was a party for each visiting film star, and Rita's party was the daddy of them all.

an official request . . .

Something funny and rather cute happened during her guided tour through the town hall. After the stately burgomeister, who was her guide, had proudly pointed out the works of old Flemish masters, tapestries, and heraldic emblems of the long dead past, a reporter asked him if he had any request to make of her, thinking perhaps that the dignified old fellow might like an autograph. Instead, with a twinkle in his eye, he said, "I wish only that she place a kiss on my cheek." Whereupon Rita promptly bussed him.

Rita's next scheduled stop was Zurich, in Switzerland, and after a brief rest in Paris we motored there. Like most tourists, we were charmed by the neat picturesqueness of Swiss towns and countryside.

We both longed to spend more than four days in Switzerland, but Rita had promised Major General A. R. Bolling to visit the American Occupied Zone in Germany. In our ten days in Germany, we travelled through most of Bavaria, taking in the cities of Nurnberg and Frankfort; with Rita sleeping upon Army cots, eating with GI's and officers, appearing at numerous camp shows, and playing soft ball. When I asked her for a brief description of her activities during those days when I didn't see her she replied, "Mostly I'm in and out of jeeps."

July sixth, following a mammoth Fourth of July celebration with out-of-this-world fireworks, we left for a week in Prague. Gosh, what a beautiful city, with its baroque buildings and the great Hradcany Castle.

Rita's public appearances were few. She visited Czech film studios and attended a dinner given in her honor by Ambassador Steinhardt. Her press conferences with Czecholslovak journalists was probably the most unique she had yet encountered. Instead of the usual queries on her reactions to Europe, life in Hollywood and what she ate for breakfast, they quizzed her on political matters. What did she think of the Truman Doctrine? Would Congress support the Marshall Plan? etc., etc. Rita parried the questions with finesse and got the interviewers talking about politics in Czechoslovakia!

At the end of the week, we boarded the famed Orient Express train for Paris hoping to get a good night's rest. No such luck, between requests for our bread tickets, our railroad tickets, and other credentials. Finally, in the small hours of the morning we were both dozing off beautifully when there came a loud knock on the door. It was two GI's of the American Border Patrol.

"Everything okay?" they inquired sheepishly. Rita nodded sleepily and smiled. The smile evidently did it, for instantly they were pushing two autograph books at her to sign. At three o'clock in the morning, no less.

"Now we never will get to sleep," I wailed, after the soldiers had gone. No answer. "Will we?" I said. No answer. My glamorous chum was dead to the world.

We packed our bags in Paris and were off for England the very next day, accompanied by Dennis Lyons of Columbia's London office and our two maids—annexed in Paris. At least we thought we were accompanied by our maids. We sent them on to the station with the luggage, after extracting their solemn promise to report to us before train time. We'd barely boarded The Golden Arrow—the boat train between Paris and London, when it started to pull out of the station. Rita hastily looked into the next compartment to see that the maids were comfortably settled—and there wasn't a sign of them! Nor of the luggage. Dennis was frantic at the thought of Rita en route to the biggest opening of her European trip (the premiere of Down to Earth in London) minus her wardrobe, knowing that there was no hope of replacements in clothes-hungry England. But the thing struck Rita and me as being terribly funny. We laughed till we cried, to the consternation of poor Dennis. At length he decided to search the baggage car in the hope that the maids might have gotten it aboard. Off he went, and in a few minutes he was back with our maids, Argnille and Anita, in tow. He'd found them a few cars forward chatting gaily with two French gentlemen. When he scolded them for disappearing they both went into screaming hysterics, and it took hours for Rita and me to cajole them back to sanity.

We arrived in London that afternoon, and the days that followed were filled with sight-seeing and theater-going. We saw the Tower of London and Buckingham Palace. One day we watched the ground being broken in Grosvenor Square for the Roosevelt Memorial, and another day we saw Princess Elizabeth.

one of the bunch . . .

I think perhaps the most amusing place we saw was a Cockney hangout called Dirty Dick's. We went in a bit apprehensively, lest the patrons think we were slumming and resent us. We needn't have worried. The standees at the bar couldn't have been friendlier. "Hello, Rita—glad t'see ya!" they greeted her cheerfully. Then they went back to their pints of beer and their dart boards. After a while one of the patrons edged his way over to Rita.

"Did you ever know George Thompson?" he inquired. "'E was a GI who spent part of the war 'ere at Dirty Dick's."

He was crushed when Rita said she didn't know him. "If you run into him," he said then, "tell 'im 'is buddy at Dirty Dick's was asking for 'im."

"I'll do that," Rita promised. And don't think she won't.

The opening of Down to Earth was a benefit for limbless ex-servicemen, and a large reception was held before it, attended by Ambassador Lewis Douglass, Anthony Eden, the Duke of Gloucester and others. Six city blocks were roped off to car traffic, so Rita—like the rest of the party—walked to the theater, where an estimated crowd of five thousand people were milling about.

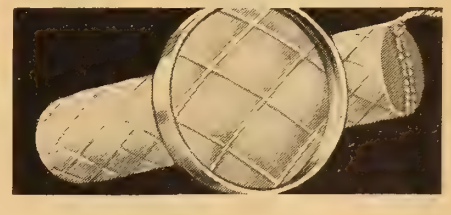
At the end of the movie, the crowd gave Rita an ovation, and she stepped up on the stage to thank them for it. It was a warm little speech, and the crowd loved her for it. When she returned to her seat next to Anthony Eden, he leaned over and whispered to her:

"The minute you started speaking, you had us all at your command."

Which, from my observation, just about makes it unanimous.

Rounded end like this

One glance at that gently rounded end — and you know insertion can be really comfortable with Fibs. Try Fibs next month and you'll agree — it's the easy-to-use tampon.



and FIBS are quilted!

For comfort—You scarcely know you're wearing Fibs—because quilting makes this tampon really comfortable. You see, quilting keeps Fibs from fluffing up too much... to an uncomfortable size which could cause pressure, irritation, difficult removal.

For safety—Quilting is a Fibs safeguard women always appreciate . . . because it helps prevent cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal tissues. See how safe, secure you feel with Fibs. Next month, switch to Fibs.

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

TEETH should show in your smile
NEVER in your HAIR-DO

Teeth never show
with Goody*
KANT-SLIP* COMBS
Because only Kant-Slip Combs have CONCEALED Tight-Gripping Teeth
Only Goody Kant-Slip Combs have this overlapping patented construction making the teeth invisible in your hair

ONLY 10c
Available in a variety of popular sizes at leading 5 and 10c stores and notion counters.
*REG. TRADEMARK
FOR BETTER HAIR AIDS
BETTER REACH FOR GOODY

BRUSH AWAY
GRAY HAIR
...AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or
Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE
Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 290, COVINGTON, KY.

AMAZING! MAKE $25
selling 50 boxes 21 for $1 Xmas Cards. Also 50 and 25 for $1 embossed with name on. Samples on approval.
MERIT CARD CO.
70 WILLIAM ST., DEPT. A, NEWARK 2, N. J.

LEARN
MILLINERY
AT HOME
Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profitable business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.
LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 1810. Chicago 1, Ill.
Please send me your FREE catalog describing your training course in professional millinery.
Print
Name
Address

VISION IN WHITE

(Continued from page 63)

perfect for her cute little-girl features.

Her maid of honor was her cousin, Martha Crawford, and the bridesmaids—in aqua faille—were Lynn Carroll, Diana Herbert (daughter of F. Hugh Herbert who wrote Margie, the movie that gave Barbara her first real break, and Vivian Eton, a Howard Greer model. (Oh, to be an usher in a wedding like that!) The very good-looking groom, 23-year-old Johnny Fontaine, had for his best man, his brother Bill who'd flown up from his studies at the University of Texas.

an intimate reception . . .

After Dr. William E. Roberts performed the ever-beautiful marriage ceremony, we went on to the reception at the Rodeo Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel. And the reception, like the wedding, was refreshingly un-Hollywood. Of the 150 guests, only a handful—like Rory Calhoun and the Dan Daileys—were movie stars; the rest were non-professional friends of Barbara's and Johnny's from their pre-movie days.

Everybody there looked happy in that gay, excited, party way, but I couldn't help noticing the really deep-lying happiness in Barbara's mother's face. It was plain as could be that she had all the confidence in the world in the two youngsters. "After all," she told me, "Barbara is a very mature young person, and she and Johnny have known each other for a long while . . ."

Barbara met Johnny at one of the gang get-togethers. They were at somebody's house, catching a little Sunday sun around the swimming pool, and everybody was there—Rory Calhoun, Cathy Downs, Jane Nye, Henry Willson, Bob Cornell, Greg Juarez, Barry Jonas, Conrad Janis . . .

And this new fellow. He came out of the house in trunks, looking like a full-color, full-page advertisement for the trunks. He was six-three, tanned the color of a seal, and when he dived into the pool there was no splash. He swam the length of the pool a couple of times, like a seal.

"Who," Barbara asked Cathy with elaborate carelessness, "is that?"

"Johnny Fontaine, of course, silly," Cathy told her. "He's at Selznick's."

"I haven't seen him in anything."

"He's been there only four or five months. Truth of the matter is, he's Rory's type of man—doesn't look like him, of course, except that he's tall and dark and romantic. So when a part comes up calling for that kind of a man, it goes to Rory. After all, Rory's been there longer, they've got a lot invested in him, and you know how it is."

There was no one in the pool at the moment except Johnny, floating lazily.

Barbara stood at the edge of the pool a minute in her brief white shorts and bra. She saw Johnny looking at her.

Then she dived in.

Later, sprawled beside her on the grass, he said, "I've seen a lot of stills of you, but I can't remember you in a picture except just a bit in Diamond Horseshoe. Where've they been keeping you?"

"In school," she said. "For ages. But now there's Margie, and I hear it's a sleeper, and I've got the second feminine lead."

"It only takes one like that," Johnny told her, enviously. They talked for another half hour—shop talk, Hollywood talk—and then Conrad came back from a trip for more cokes, and claimed her. She was his girl for the day.

But that evening, when the party was breaking up, Johnny caught her for a moment alone and said, "We ought to get together again. May I call you?"

"Yes," said Barbara, very casual once more, "if you like . . ."

He did not call. For a week she jumped for the phone every time it rang, until Bernice finally said, very quietly, "He must be quite a lad."

Barbara was completely candid. "He is," she said. "Wait'll you see him!"

"How can I see him if he doesn't call?"

"He'll call," Barbara said firmly.

At the next party she waited patiently during the early part of the evening, dancing with one and another of the fellows, chatting amiably, allowing herself to glance toward the door only once every five minutes. She had nearly given him up when he came in, at ten o'clock, looking handsomer than she had remembered. She could relax then, give her full attention to the boy sitting beside her—because she knew that eventually he would come and ask her to dance.

It took him all of five minutes to make his greetings and reach the sofa where she was sitting.

This time, young Miss Lawrence made no mistake. When she went home that night it was secure in the knowledge that he would call her tomorrow, although she had given no hint that she expected ever to see him again. But the ways of a sixteen-year-old girl, especially when she is beautiful, are mysterious and wonderful.

He rang at five o'clock, and by eight they were dining cozily at Jay's in Santa Monica Canyon, a tiny, intimate restaurant with superb food and dim lights.

path of a starlet . . .

She was telling him, then, because he asked, that she had been born in Carnegie, Oklahoma, but had moved to Kansas City when she was three; how her picture had appeared in a magazine over the caption, "Recommended for Hollywood," when she was only five; and how, at eleven, she came West with Bernice to visit an aunt.

"I just refused to go home," she told Johnny. "Mother took a job here, and I started to model for magazines and billboards and things."

"At eleven?"

"At twelve. You may have noticed I'm quite grown-up for my age. Well, then, after that it was simple. The modeling agency said one day that Twentieth was auditioning chorus girls for Diamond Horseshoe and we might as well try for it. I went along as a kind of gag, and I was wearing a sweater and skirt and bobby socks. Everyone else was gussied to the ears in their mothers' dresses and high heels and furs.

"So the director said, 'What're you all so dressed up for?' and sent them all away. I was going with them but Mr. LeMaire called me back and said, 'Wait . . .' I made a test, and then there I was."

"Let's say, 'Here we are,'" Johnny said.

She stared at her filet mignon for a moment, not seeing it, aware suddenly that she had won, and that this was It. She laughed. "Most people hear a tune, or catch a breath of perfume, and remember a special moment. But my nostalgic moment will have to be a steak. How do you like that?"

"Well," he said, "I'm partial to steaks."

Mrs. Lawrence was still up, reading on her chaise longue, when she heard the sound of laughter in the street below. She glanced at her watch. Eleven o'clock. They didn't stop for hamburgers, then, she thought absently, and stood up and went to the window of her bedroom.

Then she returned to the chaise and picked up her book. Barbara would be tapping on the door in a moment and Bernice Lawrence did not want her daughter to catch her making like a mother. She certainly did not look like the mother of a sixteen-year-old girl; Bernice was only thirty-six herself, and slim and lovely with a mane of reddish brown hair and big gentle eyes.

When Barbara knocked, a few minutes later, Bernice said, "Come in, darling," and marked her place in the book.

She observed the girl who came in with a certain detachment. Well, Bernice thought, I've done a pretty good job. Barbara was authentically beautiful.

Her hair was ash blonde by the grace of God and not hydrogen peroxide. She had the figure of an angel addicted to jitterbugging. Her eyes were bright with health and the pleasure of that evening.

"We went to Jay's" she said, "and then stopped by Jane's apartment. She has some terrific new records—Charles Trenet. You pronounce it Sharl, as in Boyer. He's a sort of combination of Jean Sablon and Chevalier, only he writes the things Sablon sings."

Quite suddenly, Bernice felt tired. She thought, "The child's escaped me. Yesterday she was a baby. Today——"

She said, "Barbara darling, have you done your homework?"

Barbara raised her eyebrows. "I batted it out while the others were having cokes this afternoon. Why?"

"I don't know. It strikes me as odd, occasionally—this thing of your sitting for so many hours every afternoon at a school desk, learning algebra as if you were in pigtails, and then trotting out in the evening to places like Jay's and Ciro's."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean perhaps you're growing up too soon, too fast."

"Oh, darling," Barbara said, immensely amused. "I daresay your mother thought the same thing when you were sixteen. After all, this is 1946."

"Yes," Bernice said softly, "it's 1946. Well, off to bed. You've an early call."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

We were stationed at Camp Han, California, enroute to the Far East. One Saturday night we decided to paint the town red for the last time before leaving. Five of us went to a Hollywood night club where we saw gorgeous Lana Turner dancing. Sam Kilse, one of the boys in our group, boasted that he could get a dance with Lana. "Ah, don't give us that," said the rest of us. "How much will you bet?" "Five dollars," we chorused. "Okay," he said. "It's a deal!" He stood up and walked a little uncertainly to the dance floor. As Lana Turner and her partner danced by Sam stepped forward, missed the escort but managed to tap Miss Turner on her shoulder. When she turned around, Sam bowed as gracefully as possible and asked, "May I cut in, please?" Naturally, we expected her to say no, but Miss Turner smiled and said, "Sure, soldier!" We stood amazed as Sam winked at us and danced into the crowd.

Lt. J. Chinen,
San Francisco, Cal.

Long after Barbara had gone she sat on the chaise, thinking.

By the time she went to bed herself she had made up her mind. The next day she wrote several letters and mailed them herself, airmail special delivery. She called Twentieth Century-Fox and checked Barbara's schedule for the summer. A few days later, after she had heard from Kansas City, she told Barbara her news.

"You've been working hard and long," she said. "Now it's time for a little fun. You're going back home to visit."

"Back home?" Barbara said. "But this is home. You mean back to Missouri?"

"You'll visit Aunt Elsie and Uncle Frank, dear, and all your old friends will be around—Kitty Walter and Buddy Sandwall and Jimmy Hawes and Joan Elberg . . ."

Barbara's face lighted up. "I haven't seen those kids in five or six years. We can do Kansas City backwards and forwards."

"That you can," Bernice nodded; but her smile had a secret amusement. Being sixteen in Missouri was not like being sixteen in show business. Barbara would have a chance to be her age, for a change.

they were swell—but kids . . .

The breach between Barbara and her old friends was apparent immediately. The kids were swell, just as she had remembered them to be, but they were still kids. The girls wore what teen agers were wearing that summer; the boys had jalopies, or their fathers' cars; and Barbara saw Kansas City, all right, but not as she had expected to. She realized, finally, what her mother had meant that night when she had come home from dancing at Ciro's. She had grown up too soon.

Back in California, Johnny Fontaine was still unattached, still hadn't forgotten her, and in the next months they used the state they lived in as it was meant to be used: as a resort, a fun place. They drove Barbara's new Buick convertible to Arrowhead, and slid down the long slope of sleek pine needles under the trees on the North Shore. They swam at Malibu and Laguna and Catalina. They sailed off Newport and Balboa and Santa Monica. They played tennis in Santa Barbara and La Jolla.

Until finally one evening, Barbara came home and said to Bernice, "I've two pieces of news for you. Hold onto your ears. I'm to play Louisa in Captain from Castille, and Johnny has asked me to marry him."

"Congratulations on both," Bernice said. "Johnny's a sweetheart and I couldn't be happier to have him for a son. But — —"

"We're too young, you're going to say?"

"It could be."

"He's twenty-two. And I—you said yourself, that evening . . ."

Bernice sighed. "I know. Of course, I could be a typical mother and say I won't give my consent until you're eighteen, but I think I'll put it this way. It would please me very much if you'd wait until your eighteenth birthday."

The two women looked at each other in silence for a long moment. Then, like the obedient and very young girl that she really is, she answered, "All right, mother."

It was a few months later that Barbara brought up the subject again.

"I made you a promise, mother, to wait until I was eighteen—" she began.

"Yes." Bernice knew what was coming. She had watched the youngsters together, had grown increasingly devoted to Johnny, and she knew what question Barbara was about to ask, and she knew very well what her answer would be.

"I know I'm only seventeen, but mom, I'm so very sure. Mom, please—"

And so they were married, and from the look of them as they set off on a wedding trip to Carmel and San Francisco, they'll live happily ever after!

THANK GOODNESS FOR THIS HELP!

MAKE THIS EASY 7 DAY TEST

☆LONGER HAIR DRESSES BETTER IN LATEST STYLES

DO YOU WANT...

LONGER HAIR?

★THEN TRY THIS PROVEN EASY SYSTEM ON YOUR HAIR ★★★★

Helps Prevent Brittle Ends Breaking Off!

● Hair May Get Longer

when scalp and hair conditions are normal and the dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded by supplementing the natural hair oils, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Just try the easy JUELENE System 7 days and let your mirror prove results. Your money back if not delighted. See if Juelene's tendency to help your hair to become softer, silkier, more lustrous than it has been before—in just one short week helps your hair gain its normal beauty.

● BRUNETTES, BLONDES, TITIANS!

Just try this System on your HAIR seven days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of LONGER HAIR that so often captures Love and Romance for you.

● Send No Money!

Just mail the convenient introductory coupon. Take advantage of this Fully Guaranteed Introductory Offer today, and know at last the happiness of possessing really lovelier hair and be envied by so many.

JUEL COMPANY, 4727 N. Damen, Chicago 25, Illinois

Mail This INTRODUCTORY COUPON!

JUEL COMPANY, Dept. L-603
4727 North Damen, Chicago 25, Ill.

Yes, I want easy-to-manage, longer hair. I will try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. If my mirror doesn't show satisfactory results, I will ask for my money back.

☐ I am enclosing $1.00.
☐ Send C. O. D. plus postage.

JUELENE Comes in 2 Forms
☐ POMADE ☐ LIQUID

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE____ STATE_____

Our Customers Participate in Gifts

NO DULL DRAB HAIR

When You Use This Amazing

4 Purpose Rinse

LOVALON, simple and quick to use after a shampoo, does these 4 things to give YOUR hair glamour and beauty:

1. Brings out lustrous highlights.
2. Adds a rich, natural tint to hair.
3. Rinses away shampoo or soap film.
4. Leaves hair soft, easy to manage.

LOVALON does not permanently dye or bleach — merely tints the hair as it rinses. Comes in 12 flattering shades. Try Lovalon.

At stores which sell toilet goods

25¢ and 10¢ sizes

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Class Pins and Rings

Artistic pins, rings and emblems. Finest quality. Reasonable prices from 30c up. Write today. Dept. Z, Metal Arts Co., Rochester, N. Y.

FREE Catalog

Amazing! POCKET OR PURSE SIZE New RADIO

WORLD'S SMALLEST RADIO KNOWN! Wt. only ¼ lb. Beautiful Silver Black plastic case. Has Inductive Slide Tuner—W4 Crystal Diode—NO TUBES, BATTERIES OR ELECTRIC "PLUG IN" NEEDED! Should last for years!

GUARANTEED TO PLAY on local stations if complete instructions sent are followed. Use it at home, in bed, in many offices, hotels, cabins—most anywhere! HUNDREDS OF SATISFIED CUSTOMERS ALL OVER THE WORLD!

NEW 1948 MODEL

SEND ONLY $1.00 (Cash, M.O. Check) and pay postman $2.99 plus delivery fees on arrival or send $3.99 for Post Paid delivery. Complete as shown—ready to play with self contained personal phone. WONDERFUL GIFTS FOR CHILDREN! Order now at this low bargain price—Prompt shipment on orders sent now—today! Be the first to get YOUR Pakette Radio! (All foreign orders $5.00 U. S. cash with order).

Pa-Kette Radio Co., Inc. Dept. MM-10 Kearney, Nebr.

STOP Scratching It May Cause Infection

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, pimples—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Calms itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D. D. D. Prescription.

EXTRA MONEY QUICK!

Show Friends CHRISTMAS CARDS

Make easy cash profits with big value Christmas Cards. Show gorgeous Name-Imprinted folders, 50 for $1.00. Amazing quality . . . easy sellers . . . BIG PROFIT. Extra dollars for you showing 23 splendid Assortments and 6 NAME-IMPRINTED lines. You get actual free samples of eight assortments: Artists Reproductions, Oilette, Fiesta, Mellotone, Gift Cards, and Handi-Notes; also Personal Christmas Cards and Stationery. Write for 21-card assortment on approval and FREE Imprint Samples.

Sell 50 CHRISTMAS FOLDERS WITH NAME $1

ARTISTIC CARD CO., INC. 654 WAY STREET • ELMIRA, N.Y.

THE CASE OF AUTRY VS. ROGERS

(Continued from page 43)

each other's corrals and set bear traps? How are things—?"

"In Gloccamora?" Gene interrupted gently. "I'm afraid," he said, "that there's no feud at all."

I'd suspected as much, but here for the record—is how the rumor began.

A few years back, Roy Rogers was so small he was a nothing, surrounded by prop sagebush. But he stood out among all the other handsome hopefuls at Republic, because he didn't think of himself as a little man in a world of big people. The big man, Gene Autry, wasn't swaggering around clinking his spurs. He was friendly with everybody, particularly Leonard Slye, who was to become Roy Rogers.

Still, something was bothering Autry. His bosses were paying him a slim $5,000 per picture for a total of eight, or $40,000 a year. He was earning more than that from radio and other activities. Despite the front office warnings that he'd get into trouble, Gene went on strike for $10,000 a picture.

Abruptly, Leonard Slye became a new cowboy actor named Dick Weston. He went to work in pictures that had been planned for Gene Autry, and the star went stumping around the country, visiting his many friends among the exhibitors, to find out just how he stood.

Exhibitors everywhere wanted Autry pictures and no substitutes. Gene came back to Hollywood, convinced that his stand was correct. There were no personal feelings involved, for this was a matter of a man determining his own worth, and deciding he be paid accordingly.

There was one dramatic episode during this strike of Gene's, which was enough to test the steel of any man. What happened was nothing designed by Autry, but it was a humiliation a lesser man than Rogers would have carried around for years as a revenge motive.

the walk-out . . .

One day, on a sound stage at Republic studios, there occurred a dramatic scene which has never before nor since been equaled. Some 300 exhibitors and exchange managers were called to a convention. At an appropriate moment, with considerable speech-making and fanfare, a studio spokesman rose and said, "And now, Gentlemen, I want you to meet Republic's newest cowboy star—Roy Rogers!"

There was no applause. Almost to a man, the three hundred assembled business guests rose and walked out.

Roy Rogers stood there dumfounded.

In another part of Hollywood, Gene Autry sat in his office, idly speculating what would be going on at the studio convention. Wondering how many of the men whose business it was to sell his pictures to theater owners, would go to bat for his return. He didn't know the ordeal through which the young man, whose name is now Roy Rogers, had just suffered.

He did know, soon, that he had won his strike. A studio emissary arrived to say he could have $10,000 a picture.

Gene said, "The price is now $12,500."

He got it.

Abruptly, all plans for making Roy Rogers the top cowboy star of the lot were shelved. Roy took this bad break as a part of the game, but at the time, he didn't know that certain factions had recommended that he be dropped entirely from the studio payroll.

That didn't happen, and for a very good reason. When the plan to let Roy go reached Gene Autry's attention, he said quietly, "If you let the lad out, you may have another strike on your hands. I insist that he be kept on."

Because Gene went to bat for Roy, the latter became the second star on the lot, and the story moved on to another chapter.

Roy was a father. Gene was not. Gene's draft board labeled him 1-A, and he made up his mind to enlist, despite urging that he might get a deferment. This decision, and other factors that had been brewing for a long time, led to the court battle in which Gene won his freedom, and subsequently signed a deal to do pictures for Columbia release.

one man's opinion . . .

"Does Roy Rogers dislike Gene Autry?" a friend of both exclaimed, "Why, he ought to kneel every night and give thanks that there is an Autry."

That may be carrying things a little too far. A man of Rogers calibre certainly would have made the grade sooner or later. Success came sooner as a result of Autry's emphatic behavior.

Today, Roy Rogers is hotter than a smoking forty-five. He's solid with the public and his pictures are big money-makers. Still, a close comparison is not fully possible. Gene Autry has moved on up to become almost as much an institution as was Will Rogers in an earlier day.

But getting back to that fence Gene and I were sitting on. Since the feud was out, I changed the subject to horses.

"Where did I learn to ride a horse?" Gene thought that one over. "I only know that I didn't learn to ride in Hollywood. It must have been on a ranch outside of Tioga, Texas. I think I could walk before I could climb into a saddle, but I'm not sure. All I know is that I climbed up the spokes of a wagon wheel and slid onto the horse from there."

"Then you really were a cowboy?"

Gene gave me a look which will last you five days in Nevada, puncture you in Oklahoma and petrify you in Texas. His horse, Champion, standing three feet away, also gave me a look.

I shut up for awhile. Then Gene spoke.

"You don't have to get nervous. A horse can't understand what you say. He works by the tone of your voice. This is not the original Champion. He died at the age of seventeen. Nothing wrong with him. Just died. I've known this Champion since he was a baby on a ranch outside Burwin, Oklahoma—that's the place that was later named Gene Autry, about the nicest compliment I've ever been paid."

Gene picked up a lunge whip as a little weatherbeaten man walked by.

"Hold it, Agee," Gene said.

Agee stood still. Gene's right arm went back lazily. The snaky whip lash soared out, and there was a sharp spat, like a police positive exploding. The ends of the whip sailed around Agee until his arms were three times bound to his sides.

Agee shivered a little. "Never could get used to that," he said, as he unwound himself and shuffled away.

"Know who he is?" Autry asked. "That's the man who knows more about horses than horses know about themselves. He used to be Equestrian Master for Ringling Brothers Circus for years. Then he was with Tom Mix. I couldn't do without him."

Autry can't do without his friends, nor they without him. When he earns a friend, he keeps him.

There was something about Gene that inspires intense loyalty from anyone who comes to know him at all well. Obviously, this is because the soft spoken Texan does not consider loyalty a one way street. He talks easily about his half dozen successful enterprises, but a fuse blows out in his cranium when he is nudged for memories which might be classified under the heading of an actor talking about himself.

The one great love of his life is typical.

During the course of a whole day, I prodded him at odd moments, urging him to tell me the intimate facts concerning his courtship and marriage. At length, he blushed a little under his Cinecolor makeup, and broke out the story.

In 1931, Gene went to visit his old friend, Jimmy Long, in Springfield, Missouri. It was Jimmy who had taught Gene, at eighteen, most of the tricks of railroad telegraphy and who, with his wife, introduced him to the future Mrs. Autry. She was Ina Mae Spivey, a beautiful, dark-eyed girl attending teacher's college.

Some months later, while out walking with Ina, Gene said, conversationally, "It's understood, isn't it?"

On April first of that year, at ten o'clock in the evening, they were wed in St. Louis by a Lutheran minister.

The ceremony proceeded normally until the minister asked Gene if he took Ina to have and to hold from this day forward. With unconscious western logic, Gene replied, "It's understood."

I have known Gene off and on for some years, and invariably, any anecdote of a personal nature he has to tell, is one that gently pokes fun at himself.

My favorite is his flight during the war from Newark to Dallas in a cargo ship loaded with army equipment and six nurses. Gene was Flight Officer at the time, and Capt. Hal Murray the pilot.

The minute they were off the ground they were in trouble. The weather couldn't have been worse. Before an hour was out the de-icers were loaded. They hadn't anticipated coming into Dallas on the heels of a hurricane, but they did.

As they circled the field, Gene picked up the microphone and talked urgently to the control tower. There was no answer. He called the field again, then turned to Capt. Murray with a hopeless gesture.

Despite the urgency of the situation, Murray grinned. "Take it easy, Gene, old boy," he said. "Just put down that G.I. flashlight and pick up the microphone."

On another occasion, Gene had flown Champion into Chicago for a rodeo. He was met by Leslie Atlas, vice president of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Atlas suggested that he load Champion into a trailer and bed the horse down for the night at his suburban ranch home. Gene liked the idea. When they arrived, young Atlas Junior, age six, was on hand to greet them. He insisted that his idol, Gene, ride Champion and take him over a few hurdles.

Gene saddled up and started to put Champion through his paces. The great horse, weary and jittery from the long plane ride, refused the second jump. Gene shot over Champion's head and slid face first into the dirt.

Young Master Atlas considered the situation. Then, with the appraisal that comes only from a child said, "Mr. Autry, I don't think you can sing so good either."

I doubt that anyone could count on an index finger the number of movie stars who would consistently tell such stories on themselves.

Watching Gene do a love scene with Gloria Henry for Strawberry Roan, the newest of his Cinecolor releases, reminded me of something.

Gene still does not kiss his leading ladies.

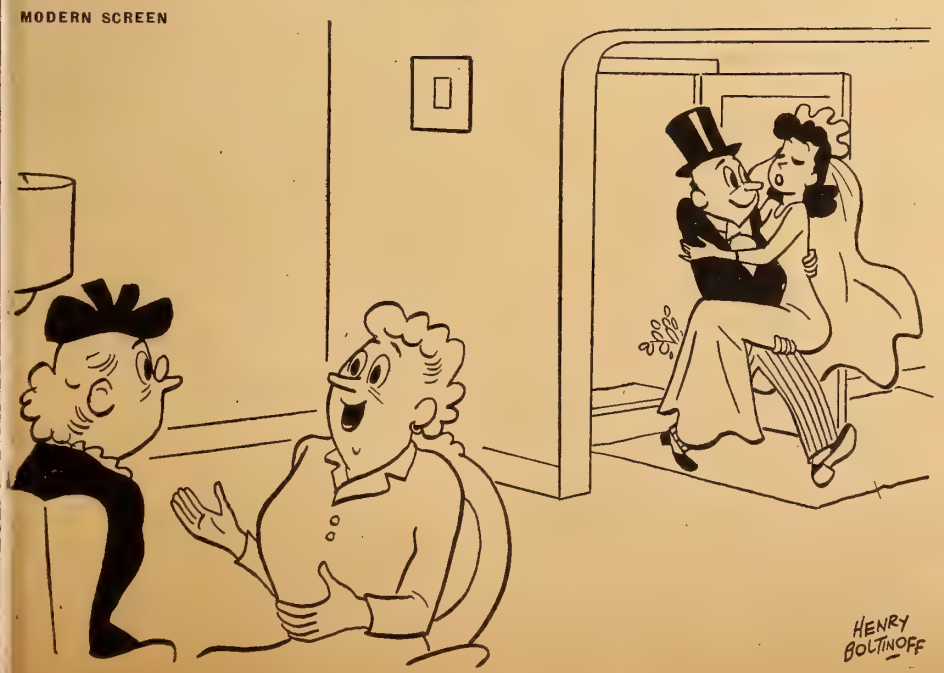
This rule seemed a little ridiculous to a dark eyed young lady of my acquaintance, when she worked with him some years ago. Her name was Marjorie Weaver, and at the big moment before the cameras, she relaxed on Gene's broad shoulders, exclaiming, "What's the matter, Mr. Autry, you're not afraid to kiss me, are you?"

"I'll tell you what," he said, "if you'll walk with me around behind this backdrop, we'll see whether I'm afraid."

Marjorie dropped the subject.

I am certain that Mrs. Autry will not disapprove of that anecdote. Charming matron of his 360-acre ranch near Newhall, California, she is rated as one of the most gracious hostesses in the entire West. But she is more than a homebody. She flies with Gene on trips to supervise their 112,000-acre ranch near Winslow, Arizona, where 3500 head of cattle are now grazing.

And she collaborated with Gene concerning the sentiment to be lettered last April first, on a huge Anniversary cake. The inscription, below the words Fifteen Years, read: "When we said it, we meant it."



"My husband is a card. I never know what he'll do next."

The Ideal Way to Reduce

LOSE FAT

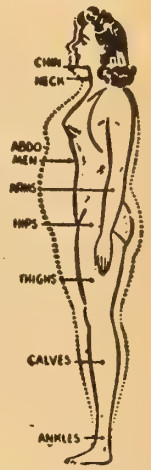
Lose Pounds
Lose Inches

REDUCE

In the Privacy of Your Home

WONDER BATH

Helps you to relax while reducing. LOSE WEIGHT with this new, easy, pleasant, harmless method. No more tiring exercises, no more laxatives or drugs. No starvation diets. You just take a warm, soothing, comforting WONDER BATH, just rest and relax for 15 minutes this healthful, pleasant way. By following the WONDER BATH method, you will be amazed and delighted at the way your fat and bulges just seem to melt away. If you are normally overweight you can easily lose pounds and inches. The more you use the WONDER BATH method, the more weight you lose. This is the easy, pleasant, harmless way used by the most expensive and exclusive Reducing Salons. This is the way many New York and Hollywood stage, screen and radio people help to keep their figures slim, lovely and glamorous. You may now say goodbye to your heavy waistline and hips and those unnecessary, unsightly bulges at a trifling cost.



The WONDER BATH method is an amazing new way to reduce superfluous fatty tissues on most all parts of the body.

FREE A large size jar of Special Formula WONDER Body Cream and "FIGURE BEAUTY" will be included absolutely FREE with your order for WONDER BATH. To achieve best results, this Special Formula Body Cream should be used after each WONDER BATH.

10-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Use the WONDER BATH method for 10 days at our expense. If you are not truly delighted with your loss of weight, if you don't look and feel better—return the remaining contents and your money will be refunded in full.

ACADEMY VITA PRODUCTS CO., Dept. DM-10
Academy Building, Newark 2, N. J.
Please send me postpaid, 60-day supply of WONDER BATH and Free Special Formula WONDER Body Cream with "FIGURE BEAUTY." I enclose $5.00 cash, check or money order. If I am not 100% delighted, I may return the remaining contents within 10 days and my money will be promptly refunded.

NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
CITY.....STATE.....

C.O.D. Orders. Send $1.00 deposit. Pay postman balance of $4.00 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. Same Money-Back Guarantee.

BUYS OF A LIFETIME- FOR A LIFETIME

SWISS WRIST WATCHES

AT BIG SAVINGS

Bargain prices include Federal tax. Smart, accurate timepieces, made by Swiss master watchmakers. Latest styles. Written money-back guarantee. Delivery by return mail. Please order by number Each watch individually gift wrapped

Reliable Men's Wristwatch
Expensive looking metal case, leather strap.
No. 101 only $3.95
No. 101S (sweep second hand) $4.95
No. 101R (radium dial) $5.45

Smart Ladies' Wristwatch
Neat, dependable, with accurate jewelled movement Polished chrome case Stainless Steel expansion band.
No. 201 A find at $8.45

Dependable Men's 7 Jewel Watch
Handsomely designed. Luminous dial, sweep second hand. Has chrome case, stainless steel back. Pigskin strap.
No. 170. only $9.95

Dainty 7 Jewel Ladies' Watch
Adorably styled. Accurate timekeeper. Genuine gold-filled top Stainless steel back. Adjustable cord bracelet.
No. 270 only $14.95

Waterproof 15 Jewel Men's Watch
Super-accurate 15 jewel movement. Radium dial. Sweep second hand. Stainless steel screw-back case Stainless Steel expansion bracelet
No. 190 Special price $14.95

Deluxe 15 Jewel Ladies' Watch
Exquisitely styled in square modern case. Optical crystal Heavy silk adjustable cord.
No 290 A rare buy at $16.95

Send remittance and we pay postage. Or pay postman C O.D. plus a few cents postage.
Send for Complete Catalog
R. W. SUMMERS, LTD., 516 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. 18, N. Y.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1935 LAKE LAB

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547, Northwestern Station, Dept. 9609, Detroit 4, Mich.

MAKE $25 in Cash EASY

21-CARD CHRISTMAS Assortment

EVERYDAY CARD Assortments

SELL ONLY 50 BOXES OF CARDS
Show amazing bargains! New smart designs in Christmas, Religious, Humorous, Gift Wrappings, Everyday Cards, Stationery. 22 different box assortments, retail 60c to $1. Personal Christmas Cards, 50 for $1 Extra sales with Name-Imprinted wonder values—50 and 25 for $1. Get Free Samples and 21-card box on approval at once! Write
PHILLIPS CARD COMPANY
855 HUNT STREET - NEWTON, MASS.

LONGER LASTING GRIP
FOR REPEATED USE.
SMOOTH FINISH INSIDE AND OUT!

Scoldy Lox BOB and HAIR PINS
NEVER LET YOUR HAIR DOWN

DOROTHY KILGALLEN SELECTS "WALTER MITTY"

(Continued from page 14)

Mitty's dreams, the object of his rescues, the recipient of his chivalry, the star-eyed admirer of his modesty, and eventually—in the genuine adventure that comes to puzzle him further—his real-life heroine. The fact that in one scene Miss Mayo appears in a black lace slip will not, I imagine, cause any male members of the community to avoid the picture.

The plot which has been superimposed on the Thurber tale is a slam-bang nobody's-asking-you-to-believe it affair full of international jewel thieves, knock-out drops and beautiful Goldwyn girls. Its improbabilities are flexible enough to allow Danny to quiver and quake, hang on window ledges à la Harold Lloyd, chase a corset for a whole reel, run from a large and nasty set of crooks including that veteran menace of the screen, Boris Karloff, and in the end, turn—as all worms hope to do—into a big successful fellow.

Complementing the blonde dazzle of Miss Mayo, there is a brunette décor supplied by Ann Rutherford as Walter Mitty's irksome suburban fiancée, and a lady named Florence Bates gives a frighteningly fine performance as a mother-in-law-to-be, guaranteed to paralyze any prospective bridegroom. Fay Bainter is excellent as Walter's mother (the character transposed from the wife in the original story) and Thurston Hall as Walter's boss contributes some scenes that may cause several magazine editors of my acquaintance to pale with recognition.

All kinds of people are going to like The Secret Life Of Walter Mitty, for it contains as many subtleties as pratt falls and as much glamour as humor. Take mom, take dad, take Dream Boat, take the kiddies.

WEEKEND AT THE LADDS

(Continued from page 39)

duck probably died of acute indigestion—"

"Well, anyway, it was brave of me," Susie said. "I was scared by a bird when I was a kid, and I'd never touched one since."

Alan turned to me, laughing. "Sonny Tufts gave us the big duck and drake. He just brought 'em to our house in town, and set 'em down in the living room. The first thing we knew, the cook was screaming so loud they must have heard her in San Francisco, and the neighbors thought the house was being robbed, and these two ducks were scuttling across the floor. Sonny? Sonny'd left—"

I felt a small hand clutching at my skirt, and looked down. It was Lonnie, and she was grinning. "Do you want me to ride Jimmy?"

"Depends on how Jimmy feels about it," I said, not committing myself. "Who is Jimmy?"

Once again, she leveled a scornful gaze at me. "My horse!" she said.

Alan nodded. "Let's all ride!"

I think maybe I was hit on the head with a horse when I was a child. I'm scared. "Let's you all ride," I quavered. "I'd ever so much rather watch, and pick up a few pieces—I mean—pointers—"

"You," Alan said, "remind me of Billy De Wolfe. He was up here for dinner one night, and he'd never been on a horse, so we decided to train him. We went out to the barn to get a few horses ready, and a horse named Jonesie was kicking hell out of the barn door. Broke it right down.

"Billy looks at the performance from a distance. 'Heh heh heh,' he says. 'Spirited horse. Now, which one am I going to ride?'

"'Jonesie,' I tell him, straight-faced. And do you know, he got on Jonesie and rode him?"

I was stymied. Could I admit I was a bigger coward than Billy De Wolfe? Indeed I could. But just then Lonnie went roaring by on a horse, and Alan inclined his head. "Jimmy," he said. "She's mad about that colt—"

Could I admit I was a bigger coward than a teentsy-weentsy four-year-old kid?

I was saved the trouble. Everyone knew. Alan pointed out a beautiful horse, now, big, reddish, and sort of wild, running down in the field. "That's Blaze," he said. "What an animal! He's Susie's."

Susie chuckled. "I came home one night and told Alan I'd bought a horse, and he got all green and anguished looking, and said, 'You take it right back. I'm not thinking of starting a glue factory, and any horse you'd buy—why you don't know *any*thing about horses—'"

He had to apologize when he saw Blaze, though. Blaze is magnificent. As a matter of fact, Alan and Sue are so sold on horses now that they have put the ranch on a paying basis by buying some brood mares, and going into horse-raising.

Besides horses and cats and ducks and chickens, they've got three Australian sheepdogs named Tippy, Tardy and Dinky. Unfortunately, they haven't any sheep.

"Come on," Susie said to me, after a while, "you haven't even seen the house yet. Big doings there."

We strolled up a little incline, and there was this white house, all green-shuttered and flagstone-terraced. Workmen were building an additional room (it's going to be a big dining-living place, so that on rainy days the Ladds won't stumble over one another) and we stood and watched the activity for a few minutes.

The way the house is now, there are just three rooms, and while they love it, the family has outgrown it.

Up on a slope in back of this house is the framework for a new little three-room house which is going to have two bedrooms and a living-play-room in the middle. Once that's completed, Alan and Sue will be able to move the new baby, David, and his nurse out to the ranch, so they're rushing it as fast as they can.

"It's funny," Sue was saying, "as crazy as I am about this place, I begrudge a day or two out here, when I can't see the baby—"

"I'd like to see David, myself," I ventured.

She nodded. "We'll drive into town Sunday. You can get a look at him then. He's so much the image of Lonnie, it seems like the same baby to me."

Alan, who'd been talking to a man named Cliff about floor plans and redwood and white pine and flagstone and cement, came back to us, and Sue said, "Why don't you go pick some corn for lunch? I've got to start the other things."

"Right out of the field?" I gasped.

"Sure, honey," Susie said. "We hardly ever grow that kind in the house."

Alan and Lonnie and I went down to the garden, and Lonnie picked herself an ear of corn, and brought it to her father for approval.

"Corn, Daddy—"

"But that's too young, Lonnie," he said. "It's no good yet; it's too new—"

"Who wants old corn?" said Lonnie, turning on her heel, offended.

We got several ears of delectable-looking corn, and went back up to the house whence issued unearthly fragrances.

Fried ham, to mention one. Potatoes and onions, to mention another. And a chocolate meringue pie that you eat while it's still hot, and it makes you want to go out and shoot yourself, because you know nothing will ever be that good again.

Ah, those foods. We ate outside, under a pepper tree, and a lot of flies tried to share things, but there wasn't enough left over for even a one-armed fly with a small appetite.

"They told me about you," I said to Sue. "But they didn't tell me this!"

"Why, I just threw some things together," she said in surprise. "Have some more corn, and a little butter, and a hot biscuit—"

"We'll go for a swim after lunch," Alan said.

"Not me," I cried somewhat rudely, I fear. "I'd sink like a hunk of cement. I'd sink like a stuffed, stabbed grouse; I'd sink—"

I was on my way to being good and lyrical, but he cut me short. "Okay, I'll go for a swim after lunch."

"It's all very well for you," I sniffed. "You eat like a bird."

Lonnie's the one who really eats like a bird. All through the meal, her mother and father have to urge her to taste this, or have a bite of that, and she looks at them unhappily. "No more. Please, Mom, no more."

The only way they can get her to eat is to go in and turn her bed down, and let her see it's turned down. "Now if you don't eat," they say, "you go directly to bed."

Like any little kid anywhere, that reaches her. She stows the vitamins away with bad grace and much haste.

Well, I finally got through making a pig of myself, and Lonnie got through her picking, and we all started over to look at the pool. The way the grounds are, there's the main house, and then a bare site next to it where the Ladds may some day build a big house, and then beyond that, there's a white fence, like a corral fence. This is kept closed so that Lonnie won't go investigating the pool by herself.

Inside the fence is an oval pool with incredibly blue water (I imagine that's reflection from the blue tiles, but I'm unmechanical) and all around the pool, on the bright green grass there are chairs and tables and striped umbrellas and beach rolls.

Off to one side, there's a bath-house, and next to that a fabulous barbecue set-up.

The way the barbecue got started is funny.

For Christmas, Tay Garnett, director of Wild Harvest had given Alan and Sue a refrigerator.

"We'll put it down by the pool," Alan said. "Keep cool drinks in it."

"Let's set it in a wooden cabinet or something," Sue suggested.

By the time they got through, the refrigerator was in a wooden cabinet, and they'd built a whole structure around it, with two barbecue pits, and shelves for plates and cups, and a flagstone flooring for dancing, and a sloping roof set on pillars, for when it rains.

"Most expensive darn present we ever got," they tell you.

Near the steps to the barbecue, there are two little trees. A man named George Berthelon sent them to the Ladds when David was born. "It's an old French custom," he explained. "The idea is that the child will grow and flourish with the tree."

a-settin' in the sun . . .

Eventually, everyone got into bathing suits, and I found myself a chair in the good hot sun, and sank down and breathed the sweet air. Behind me, the mountains stretched, and the valley sprawled. Beside me, Susie Ladd knitted on a pink wool dress.

On the diving-board, Alan was practicing, and someone on a radio in the background was playing a gay, foolish Danny Kaye record very softly.

It was a lovely day.

After supper, Lonnie and I went to look over our beds. We were sharing a double-decker, and she wanted to sleep on top.

"But you never sleep on top," Susie said hopelessly.

We settled it by letting her play on top for twenty minutes, and then she was willing to come down to sleep. She looked so angelic in her long white gown, I had trouble remembering the demon child who'd been racing around on Jimmy a couple of hours earlier.

As for me, I fell asleep so fast I'm still not sure what hit me. Fresh air is undoubtedly fatal to city people in some cases.

So the week-end wore away, to my regret, and Sunday came, and we drove into town. Susie was getting gayer by the minute. "We'll be seeing David soon—"

And when I got to see David, I knew what she'd meant. He was the usual sort of baby, but people have a tendency to forget how appealing just plain baby-ness is. He was pink, and mostly bald, and very sweet-smelling, and when you held him in your arms, you got to feeling very mellow, and thinking about spring.

Perhaps he wasn't a usual sort of baby, at that. Perhaps he was irregular as anything. All I know is he fits into the rest of the family fine, and that's the best thing I can say for him. It's a good bunch to get mixed up with.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

This happened at Lecco, Italy, when beautiful Jinx Falkenburg was entertaining the GIs of the Fifth Army. For over an hour, Miss Falkenburg and her troupe danced and sang for the boys. Then, for a finale, she came out on the stage in a tennis outfit and called upon a young GI to help her with her act. Miss Falkenburg demonstrated the various tennis strokes, as her helper chased the balls all over the stage. When she finished, she thanked the GI and said, "As a reward, I'll let you have anything that you wish. Just ask for it." "Ask for a kiss, Joe!" "Get a date!" "Hubba! Hubba!" the crowd shouted. The young GI blushed and remained speechless. Miss Falkenburg leaned towards him and asked sweetly, "Isn't there anything?" The GI finally replied, "May I—may I—have one of the tennis balls?"

George Chinen,
Honolulu, Hawaii

He loves her natural-looking

Golden Blonde Hair

YOU can be a beautiful blonde, too, when you use Nestle Lite . . . the revolutionary, new hair lightener with golden conditioning oil. This special patented formula oil actually makes hair softer and more lustrous as it lightens it . . . unlike other products which tend to leave hair dry and brittle.

Delicately scented, easy and pleasant to use. Wonderful, too, for making dark hairs on arms, legs and face practically invisible.

At all drug and dept. stores, $1.00. Made by Nestle—originators of permanent waving—Meriden, Conn.

Nestle Lite

When Constipation "Gets You Down"

Here's the way to "be yourself" again!

When constipation takes all the joy out of life, do what millions are doing all over America! Next time you need a laxative, take Ex-Lax!

Ex-Lax gets results easily, comfortably. It isn't violent or upsetting like some laxatives are. When you take Ex-Lax, you hardly know you have used a laxative, except for the satisfying relief you get.

Yet, gentle as it is, you can depend on Ex-Lax for thorough relief. It is biologically tested for effective action. Many doctors use Ex-Lax in their practice.

Ex-Lax is equally good for children and grown-ups. And because it tastes like delicious chocolate, everyone enjoys taking it. No wonder Ex-Lax is America's No. 1 laxative . . . over 40 million boxes sold annually!

Take Ex-Lax yourself and as a precaution use only as directed. Still only 10¢. Economy size, 25¢.

When Nature "forgets"...remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

NEW creamy, odorless LOTION safely REMOVES HAIR

1. Safe—doesn't irritate normal skin. Painless.
2. No clinging depilatory odor—a pleasant white lotion.
3. Not messy. Quick—rinses off easily with lukewarm water.
4. No razor stubble. Keeps legs hair-free longer. Economical!
5. Removes hair close to skin, leaving skin soft, smooth and alluring.

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair

NAIR 59¢ plus tax

"Country's Largest Seller"

Marvel

$3.50 WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women

At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Free Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

INVENTORS

Patent laws encourage the development of inventions. Our firm is registered to practice before the U. S. Patent Office. Write for further particulars as to patent protection and procedure and "Invention Record" form at once. No obligation.

McMORROW, BERMAN & DAVIDSON
Registered Patent Attorneys
290-B Victor Building, Washington 1, D. C.

HOW ABOUT YOU?

Of all the ways of saving up a tidy sum of money, one of the easiest and safest ways is to invest your money in U. S. Bonds.

You can buy Bonds either through the Payroll Savings Plan at your place of business—or if the Payroll Plan is not available to you, but you do have a checking account, through the Bond-a-Month Plan at your local bank.

Both ways repay you $4 for every $3 you save, by the time your Bonds mature.

SAVE THE EASY, AUTOMATIC WAY
—WITH U. S. SAVINGS BONDS

EVERYTHING HAPPENS TO JOAN

(Continued from page 54)

sixteen long enough; maybe I ought to let 'em know I wear high heels and go out with real live boys—"

It was the beginning of a radical change that continued through her trouble with Warners, and the year she was out of work. She took college courses in psychology and literature; maturity, she realized, was a state one reached after slow and painful progress, and every college course would help.

The workless year over, Eagle-Lion offered her the lead in a picture called Repeat Performance. Louis Hayward was to be her co-star; the film also had Richard Basehart, the young stage actor who'd won the New York Drama Critics award for his playing in The Hasty Heart.

It sounded like heaven to Joan.

"Imagine," she said to her family. "No more Pollyanna. In this, I'm a successful dramatic actress married to a has-been playwright—"

"Imagine," the family said, chuckling with pleasure.

Every night Joan went home in a blissful fog. She couldn't even hear people through it.

"If you'd only listen," her mother said once, plaintively, in the tone of a woman who has been talking to herself for half an hour, "here's a letter that came—"

"Thanks," Joan said. She opened the letter absently, and then she yipped. "Mummy! The Junior Chamber of Commerce—I've been chosen queen of the convention—"

"Why, Greer," Mummy said. "Lower your voice, dear."

You can't get big-headed in that house.

invitation from "dem bums" . . .

The Chamber of Commerce convention was at Long Beach, California, and the queen got a present from every state in the Union. A season's ticket to Ebbets Field; a box for the Kentucky Derby; apples and snowshoes from Maine; silver dollars set in dice from Nevada; a bottle of water from Florida.

The Florida delegates showed up covered to the necks in raincoats, however.

"Some gag," said the queen. "Did you ever see a bluer sky?"

The Florida group pulled its slickers even tighter.

"In a minute," the queen announced to the conference at large, "they'll open up those coats and let out their horrid Florida mosquitoes."

Florida was crushed.

Some time afterward, the queen actually got a chance to use her Ebbets Field pass, because once Repeat Performance was finished, Joan and her mother came to New York. They stayed at the Sherry-Netherland, but not very much.

First off, Joan had to see Happy Birthday. Helen Hayes is next to cleanliness, with her.

They thought Brigadoon was beautiful, too, and they had dinner with the Earl Wilsons at the Copacabana, and Joan and Earl discussed the merits of the respective chorus girls with clinical detachment.

"I think that one's prettiest," she'd say.

He'd sneer. "That one? That one's knock-kneed—"

Mrs. Wilson, who tried to keep things on a higher plane, mentioned that she had a new Buick, which reminded Joan that she had a new Town and Country convertible. "My first car, but I've been driving for a year and a half."

"You drive yourself?" Earl cried. "No chauffeur? That's pretty middle class."

"It's all right," Joan said. "I hire a lot of little boys to run after the car and yell. Footmen, you know."

"Well, that's different," Wilson said. "For a minute, I was afraid you weren't our sort."

"Oh, I speak French and everything," Joan said smugly.

Two days later, she and her mother were in a restaurant, and the headwaiter came over and said something innocent, like, "Bonjour, Mesdames—"

"Oh, he speaks French, Joanie," said Mrs. Brodel. "Joanie, speak to him in French."

Joanie claims that being told to speak to anybody in French is like being told to be beautiful or intelligent.

She compromised on "bonjour," slipped in a "vichysoisse" or two, and an "au revoir," and considered the evening a raging success.

One of the New York evenings that was not a raging success was taken up by Joan's first radio appearance. Scared wasn't the word for her. And around a radio station, the performers act overcasual. They're elaborately half-dead.

"Just be natural," they say, stifling their yawns with their elbows. Joan was set to be natural, but the huge clock kept ticking away in front of her, and when they said, "Fifteen seconds to go," her stomach started ticking on its own.

Bill Leonard boomed out: "This is New York—" and Joan's tongue froze to her teeth.

"You did fine," they told her eventually, but she didn't believe them.

She felt all alone in an alien world until the kids caught up with her on the sidewalk outside the broadcasting studio.

She signed the books tenderly. "Little do they know I'm a hopeless failure," she was thinking.

There was another time when Joan came out of a theater to find a whole border patrol of fans waiting for her. She signed gladly, and was about to take off in a cab, when a small girl piped up.

"Miss Leslie, did you know Miss Rosemary De Camp was in town?" (They're always quite formal.)

MODERN SCREEN

AUTOMA

"Really?" Joan said. "I must phone her."

"She's right across the street, in Sardi's," said the small girl. "Why don't you stop in and say hello?"

The upshot of it was that the small girl rushed across to Sardi's, and led Rosemary De Camp out onto the pavement.

Then she stood back with an air of having righted the universe, while Joan and Rosemary exchanged embarrassed pleasantries.

The kids are amazing. There was the boy who came up to Joan and said, "You're gonna meet the mayor over at Loew's State, ain't you?" and caused Joan some astonishment. (Actually, she and Mayor O'Dwyer were going to Steeplechase Park, in Coney Island, to sell the first tickets to a charity outing.)

"How do you know?" she said. "I just found out myself five minutes ago—"

"Oh, I delivered the message to your hotel," he said. "I woik at Loew's State."

She wanted to tell him not to fall down any open manholes while reading other people's messages, but he was cute, so she resisted.

What she couldn't resist was shopping. There's a store called Schwarz' which has the most fabulous collection of toys in the United States, and Joan almost went mad trying to decide what to get Rusty, her sister Mary's child.

If in doubt about a cowboy suit or an Indian suit, why not get both, is the way her mind works.

With herself, she wasn't so generous. She did a bit of clothes shopping, but cautiously. Last time she came to town, she bought two beautiful expensive suits that were absolutely no good in California, and she resolved that this trip, she'd say no ten times before she said yes once.

There was a Carnegie print, though—brilliant chartreuse, with blue and pink horses. She said no ten times very fast, and then one howling yes, as they wrapped the dress up.

Speaking of clothes in connection with that last New York visit, Joan had a funny experience at Lily Daché's. It was about five years ago, and the Mark Twain picture was being publicized. Warners, which had flooded the country with "leaping frog bean-bags," decided that Joan should have a leaping frog hat.

Lily Daché agreed to design one, and some time later, Joan went over to her establishment to pick it up.

It was a magnificent hat. A pink sweep of velvet, a huge, jeweled clip—

"Only what has it got to do with a leaping frog?" Joan asked, troubled.

The assistant smiled tolerantly. "Miss Daché gave the matter some thought. This hat is the lily pad!"

Tads, pads, as long as you're healthy.

Joan's going to make an Eagle-Lion picture called Northwest Stampede next, and that's a joyful thought because it's being shot on the Prince of Wales' ranch in Canada. The place has never been photographed before, and it's lousy with glorious scenery, and the picture has a white horse in it, and the whole thing is in Technicolor.

After that comes a possible trip to London (a J. Arthur Rank deal) and happiness is just a thing called Joan.

THE SINATRA SET

(Continued from page 31)

worked out in diamonds on it, and a legend, also in diamonds, which read: "I'm not ashamed of my love for this boy."

There are a lot of guys who feel that way.

In a manner of speaking, these guys make up the Sinatra set, clique—whatever you want to call it. The fact is that Frank's got a group of friends who would willingly take any rap for him, and he returns the compliment.

If you go back, to when Frank was beginning, you find Hank Sanacola.

Hank worked in a music publishing company, and this skinny young singer would come around and ask for copies of songs all the time.

Hank liked the kid, and he'd bang out the songs on the piano, while the kid ran through them. He learned them so fast it was amazing.

One day Frank showed up looking determined. "You want to lend me some money?" he said, coming to the point. "I want to get married."

Hank grinned. "Dear me, poor Nancy—" and took out his wallet. "What's Hank's is Frank's, I'm afraid—"

Hank Sanacola's a music publisher himself, now, and Frankie staked him at the start. "What's Frank's is Hank's, I'm afraid," he said. "Remember?"

In 1939, in Chicago, Frank was hired by Tommy Dorsey, and while he was with Dorsey, he met Bobby Burns, Axel Stordahl, Sammy Cahn and Julie Styne, all future members of the Sinatra set.

Bobby was Tommy Dorsey's manager at the time Frank went with the band, but after he got out of the army in 1941, he went to work for Frank.

Axel was Tommy's arranger. He's now Frank's arranger.

Julie and Sammy were a couple of songwriters who used to hang around the Dorsey band, and when Frank was going out on his own, he approached them. "Write me some stuff, huh, fellas?"

They wrote him some stuff then, and they're still doing it, though Julie sometimes wonders why. "I got a bad stomach," he says. "Why don't I retire?"

There's Manny Sacks, vice-president of Columbia Records, who signed Frank up when he left Dorsey, and who got Frank on the radio for CBS.

There's George Evans, Frank's press agent, about whom everyone knows.

There's a man named Al Levy, who used to manage Frank, and among the movie people there's Jimmy Durante, and Bill Goodwin, and Gene Kelly. And also, there's Walter Winchell.

At any given time, you can find a bunch of Sinatra's pals sitting around playing cards and moaning softly, "Ooh, that crazy jerk, what's he done now?" when Frank's name comes up. But let any outsider breathe a slur, and there's suddenly blood all over the floor. The outsider's, that is.

Frank is always traveling, and usually, a couple of the guys go with him. The ones who stay home alternate taking Nancy out to dinner, and keeping a close check on her and the kids' health.

Those trips of Frank's, incidentally, are good for plenty of stories.

One time, Frank was going from New York to Chicago with Bobby Burns and Julie Styne, and they were sitting in the dining-car over an after-dinner cigarette. The train was pausing briefly at the station in Harrisburg, Pa., when Frank got a scintillating idea.

He called the waiter over. "Look," he said, "when you close up here, how about fixing us a tray of food—you know, sandwiches, olives, milk, gingerale—we'll be back in our car playing cards."

BLONDES!

Bring that radiant golden look back to your hair!

• Remember, when you were younger, how sunny your hair looked . . . and how it fairly glistened with gold?

You can recapture that dazzling golden gleam — and keep it, too — with Marchand's Golden Hair Wash!

Whether you are a blonde, brunette or redhead, you can lighten your hair just a little or make it several shades blonder. The new improved Marchand's Golden Hair Wash actually lets you control the lightness!

Even if your hair is streaked and faded, you can make it enchantingly golden again — in one simple treatment at home!

Perfected by experts in hair care, Marchand's Golden Hair Wash is not a bleach, not an expensive "treatment." It's complete in one package and easier than ever to use yourself. Try it, too, for lightening arm and leg hair.

MARCHAND'S Golden Hair Wash

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo

FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 354, Hollywood, Calif.

$50 CASH FOR YOU
FOR SELLING 100 ASSORTMENTS
of 21 gorgeous CHRISTMAS CARDS worth 10c to 25c each. Sells $1.00—profit up to 50c. Sample box on approval. 75 money makers. Special Offers. WRITE TODAY.
FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.
HEDENKAMP & CO., 343 Broadway, Dept. O-9, New York 13, N. Y.

Guy Madison

FREE PHOTO
LARGE SIZE of your favorite
MOVIE STAR
Direct from Hollywood
INTRODUCTORY OFFER
Also FREE list decorated with all the latest stars and poses.
Send name of YOUR FAVORITE with ten cents to cover handling and mailing.
HOLLYWOOD SCREEN EXCHANGE
Box 1150—Dept. P-2
Hollywood 28, Calif., U. S. A.

MAKE MONEY EASY-
Sell CHILTON Cards

21 Card "PRIZE" CHRISTMAS BOX

Sell Chilton Christmas and Everyday cards to your friends, others. Superb quality . . . low prices . . . big profits. Experience is not needed. Show "Prize" 21 Christmas cards, Fine Arts, Religious, Birthday, Notes, Gift Wrappings . . . $1.00 leaders. Also Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 and 25 for $1. "Prize" Samples sent on approval.

50 for $1 WITH NAME
25 for $1 FREE SAMPLES

CHILTON GREETINGS CO.
147 Essex, Dept. 91-G, Boston, Mass.

Develop a Glamorous Bust Line!

For irresistible figure-beauty, follow BONOMO RITUAL for Beautiful Bust Contour—Complete, improved and revised 6-week Course shows how to develop alluring bust contour so important to romance. Features exclusive home techniques created by Joe Bonomo, famous beauty authority, publisher BEAUTY FAIR magazine. 8½" x 11", 124 diagrams, charts, and illustrations of special exercises, bust control methods; diet, food analysis; tables of weight and correct proportions, etc. Money back if not delighted. Sent C.O.D. for 98c plus postage or send 98c and we pay postage.

BONOMO CULTURE INSTITUTE
Dept. B1710
1841 Broadway, New York 23, N.Y.

IMAGINE THIS! 5 GREAT MONEY-MAKING LINES PERSONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS

FREE SAMPLES PERSONAL STATIONERY

50 for $1 CHRISTMAS CARDS COST YOU AS LOW AS 45¢

Big line Christmas and Everyday assortments. Sell only 50c to $1.00—your profit, 25c to 55c per box. Extra bonus. Write today for free samples personal Christmas cards, stationery, and Leader 21-card Christmas, 16-card Feature All-Occasion assortments on approval. Special Offers.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 25 for $1.00 PERSONALS

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO., Dept. M246, Elmira, N. Y.

High School Course at Home Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. H714, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

Be an ARTIST

LEARN AT HOME IN YOUR SPARE TIME

Trained artists are capable of earning $50, $60, $75 a week. By our practical method we teach you COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING and CARTOONING all in ONE course. FREE BOOK—"Art for Pleasure & Profit" describes training and opportunities in art. STATE AGE. Training available under "G.I." Bill

STUDIO 8010 H, WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
1115—15th ST., N.W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

YOUR HOROSCOPE FREE

HANDWRITING ANALYZED $1

Know yourself as others do. Learn your good points and bad ones. Be a Success. Knowledge is Power. Send $1 for expert analysis plus free horoscope, while they last.
GRAEHAM OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. J
444 N. Camden Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif.

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS

EASY TO LEARN

Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.
NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan, Dept. 2367. Chicago 5

YOU MAKE $25 FOR SELLING FIFTY $1.00 BOXES

50 beautiful assorted Christmas cards sell for only $1.00, your profit 50c. Write today for free samples 50 and 25 for $1.00 and other boxes on approval. It costs nothing to try. CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-6, White Plains, N. Y.

WRITE FOR SAMPLES ON APPROVAL

UNWANTED HAIR

FOREVER with our proven method in the privacy of your own home. Send 10 cents in coin or stamps for booklet "New Beauty Awaits Within."

MAHLER'S, INC.
Dept. 36N, Riverside, R. I.

"That reminds me," Bobby said. "We moved from one end of the train to the other before, and I left my coat back there."

"Me too," Julie said. "Let's go get 'em."

They decided they'd walk the length of the train outside, instead of stepping over a million feet, and Frank watched interestedly from the window.

They'd walked maybe half of one car's length, when the train started to move.

They stood there shivering for a couple of minutes, coatless, hatless and miserable. "Listen," Bobby said, "we gotta get another train—"

Julie moaned. "I gotta get to a restaurant and get some warm milk for my stomach—"

Bobby was too impatient. "Here's a train just pulled in. Let's hop it."

They hopped it, and were feeling a little more cheerful, when the conductor came by. "Where'd you fellas aim to go?" he said.

"Chicago." They beamed at him.

He beamed right back. "You're on your way to St. Louis."

Julie clutched his stomach in a spasm of despair.

Broadway beat . . .

When Frank's in New York, he covers the Broadway beat with Walter Winchell. They work up from the Bowery, stopping in every bar, restaurant and police station along the way. They never finish till six a.m., but they like it that way.

The hours Sinatra is neither patroling nor working, you can usually find him in Toots Shor's.

Once Toots and Frankie went with Phil and Rags to visit President Roosevelt, and the President, who was a bow-tie devotee himself, broke the ice by grinning at Frankie's neck-wear.

"That's a beauty," he said admiringly.

This was back in the middle of the meat shortage, and Toots, who'd been sizing up the President, felt called upon to make a speech. "Prez," he said expansively, "stop in my joint, when you're in New York—I'll see that you get a good steak!"

Another time during the war, Frank got an invitation to the President's inaugural ceremonies, and he and George Evans set out four days early, because of traveling conditions. Still, they never got to Washington. They were bumped off planes about six times.

bumps-a-daisy . . .

"A couple more bumps, and I can go into burlesque," Frank said, pathetically.

And George got severely called down by a little man at one airport when he, George, happened to observe, "We've been here four hours. We have to get to Washington—"

"You're squawking," the little man said bitterly. "I been here two weeks. I gotta get to Cincinnati."

Shifting back to the subject of New York, though, Frank's fondness for the place stems partly from the fact that he and his pals never know exactly what's going to happen there."

When Gene Kelly was in the Navy, Frank was broadcasting from New York, and Gene had agreed to guest-star on the show one night.

Gene and Frank and Bobby Burns drove over to CBS, and there were seventeen cops on horseback, and a hundred other cops on foot, and a panting, surging mob all around the place.

Kelly got a little pale. "Must have been an accident—"

"Not yet," Bobby said. "But we can work one up, if we play our cards right—"

Frank and Bobby were used to crowds by that time, and they snaked in the door. Gene, who hadn't learned how to duck in the Navy, was trapped by some of the kids. "Lemme go, lemme go, or I'll tell the horse to step on you—" he shrieked.

Gene made it okay, but Bobby, who's a natural worrier, lost another half pound.

Bobby is with Frank almost constantly. They were together when both the small Sinatras were born, and Bobby had to be a pillar of strength.

The way it happened the first time, Big Nancy was in the hospital in Jersey waiting patiently, and Frank and Bobby (who were with Dorsey then) had a late rehearsal.

Nothing was supposed to happen that night, so the boys worked till four or so. Then they made their way to their hotel (Frank's house in Jersey seemed so empty without Nancy that they hadn't felt like staying there) and they literally fell into the lovely clean hotel beds.

At about eight-thirty, Bobby heard a horrible ringing in his ears. He lay there pondering. "Phone," he said to himself.

Then he heard Frank saying, "Yup, yup, yup—" and then there was the sound of the phone being put down.

Bobby turned over, cursing happily.

I'm a father, hey . . .

Three minutes later, Frank burst in with the biggest double-take in history plastered all over his face. "Hey, kid," he cried, "did you hear that? I'm a father. Give me a blazor rade, and I'll save myshelf—"

When the second baby was born, Frank was in Hollywood, and Nancy was in New York, and once again, Frank was notified by phone at his hotel. George Evans was calling from the hospital. "You're a father again," he said. "This one's a boy."

Sinatra showed up at his rehearsal that night with a cigar stuck in his face, and triumph written all over his shoulder pads. "Treat me gently, fellas," he said. "Treat me with respect—"

"You got a case," said Bobby sadly. "Son, you got a case."

"And nothing to put in it, either," Julie Styne chimed in with relish. "Ever since he sold that violin—"

"I got it stuffed with lousy memories," Frankie told them. "All about my low-class friends—"

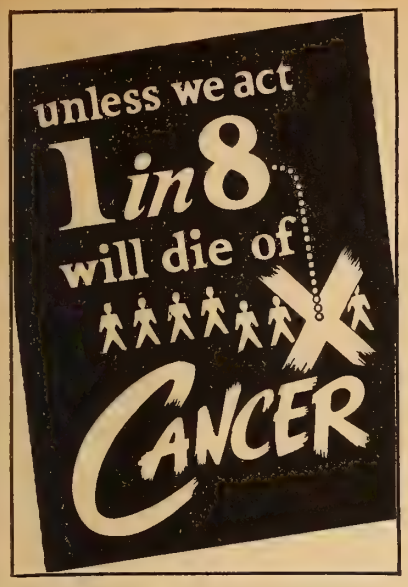
"Sweetheart," said Julie tenderly, "for you, I'd even give up my ulcers."

The kid has got some real fine pals, and he knows it.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

During the war I served with the Ninth Air Forces overseas and while we were in England Bob Hope came to entertain us. We all crowded around the improvised platform as the hour for his entertainment drew near. Some of the crew had not yet arrived and I happened to be standing quite close to Bob as we waited. Finally, we saw a jeep careening down the road, hitting the bumps and almost knocking down several of the boys. The driver yelled, "Look out, we haven't any brakes." We all jumped out of the way, and the jeep stopped within an inch of Bob and the platform. "Whew, boys," Bob flashed. "That's a heck of a way to get into the act." The tension was relieved and we were all laughing as we settled down to enjoy the show.

Bill Toles
Colorado Springs, Col.



NO ONE IS SAFE FROM CANCER

This year, 184,300 Americans will die of Cancer . . . one every three minutes.

YET . . . one in three could be saved thru early detection and prompt treatment.

PROTECT YOURSELF!
CANCER'S DANGER SIGNALS

1. Any sore that does not heal, particularly about the tongue, mouth or lips.
2. A painless lump or thickening, especially in the breast lip or tongue.
3. Progressive change in the color or size of a wart or mole.
4. Persistent indigestion.
5. Persistent hoarseness, unexplained cough, or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Bloody discharges from the nipple or irregular bleeding from any of the natural body openings.
7. Any radical change in normal bowel habits.

GIVE to help win mankind's great war — the fight against cancer.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
47 Beaver Street
New York City

THE FANS

(Continued from page 96)

3. Each MSFCA club is provided with monthly Report Sheets which should be filled out and mailed in to us at the close of each month. The data that may earn your Trophy cup points is transcribed and tabulated from these reports, so if you want your worthwhile activity or your membership increase to reach the attention of our judges, that's the place to record it.

4. Snap news: if you order sufficiently in advance, and aren't in a rush, we'll have 4 x 5 snaps made for you at 2½ cents per snap, plus postage charges. Irving Klaw, the most famous name in fan photos, has made this astounding offer to accredited MSFCA clubs only, and you must order a minimum of 10 prints. You MUST place your order through the MSFCA.

Club Banter: Gloria Jean Club, under superb management of Maryon Jenson, celebrating its seventh anniversary! . . . Charles Korvin Club's Correspondents' Assistants' Plan is a hit! Each mem is assigned to a CA, who relays news, gossip between club and mem . . . Sondra Schreier's Sid Caesar Club is working with the Good Neighbors Group, to build a Teen Canteen . . . Don Casanove Club offering free memberships to first two applicants from each of 48 states. Write us for address . . . Charles Turk's Smithereens of Winnipeg, Canada, persuaded its local station to start a special "Jack Smith Show" . . . Marion Lee Hall, prexy of the Tennessee Slim and Tex Ann Fan Clubs, is a feature writer for the National Hillbilly News. Gives her honoraries plenty of publicity, too . . . Adeline Gushin's clubbers threw a welcome home party for their star, John Tyers, who just returned from the successful London run of Gypsy Lady . . . Anne Anderson was official hostess at the Jack Smith Clubs Party at CBS. Jack did his late Coast show "live" (instead of transcribed), especially for the party... Louise Adamo's club will see their honorary, Clyde Burke and his wife, thrush Sally Stuart, off to Hollywood with a swanky dinner party . . . Bill Cunningham's Robert Lowery Club of Montreal, is doing a real job of entertaining disabled war vets with the Bob Lowery Club 1947 Revue . . . Saw prexy Mary Jane Grootenboer in Sardi's, lunching with her honorary, Nina Foch . . . Desi Arnaz threw a "coke" party in his Chicago Theater dressing-room for 15 of his local clubbers . . . Kay McKewen expects to have her radio program, "Fan Club Journal of the Air," on the air shortly over a coast-to-coast hook-up . . . Prexy Gerry Kee, Rita Wilkes, Bev Montalban and David Caldwell were invited to Alsulana Acres (that's Alan Ladd's ranch, as if you didn't know) for lunch . . . Joan Travnicek's Perry Como Club celebrated his birthday with a picnic and two cakes: one for Perry, one for the club . . . Prexy Lauren Chase dined with Janis Carter, his honorary, when she revisited her home town . . . Detroit's Frank Keys (Bennett-Stathakis, prexies) have challenged the Russell Sprouts to a baseball game . . . Doris Anderson, Joel Pacillo and Ann Ling, three other Sinatra prexies who visited Hollywood for the Convention, had lunch with Frank at M-G-M, and spent the afternoon watching him emote in The Kissing Bandit . . . Dolores McMullen's Sinatra Club is continuing its four-year tradition: an annual party on the occasion of the club's anniversary . . . and the Sleepy Hollow Gang, Lorraine Paxton, ranch boss, held their annual club outing at Sleepy Hollow Ranch, Pa. That's something we're sorry we missed!

VETO Colgate's Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Underarm Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant . . . Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness —and to check underarm perspiration, stop odor safely.

DOUBLY PREFERRED!

Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

NEED CASH? SELL Christmas Cards WITH NAME 50 for $1

Easy Money Plan

Puts cash in your pocket daily. Show our amazing Christmas Card values—50 for $1 Name-Imprinted. Also smart $1.00 assortments of Christmas, Religious, Humorous, Everyday Cards. Get samples now. Special plan for churches, lodges, clubs; just write

WETMORE & SUGDEN
749 Monroe Avenue
Dept. D-77, Rochester 2, N.Y.

CHRISTMAS AND EVERYDAY Assortments

SMART, SIMULATED
DIAMOND RINGS

Beautiful wedding and engagement rings set with sparkling simulated diamonds. Genuine gold plate on sterling silver. Send no money! Pay postman on delivery plus C. O. D. charges. Save charges: send remittance with order. Send ring size.

$1.95 each or both for $3.50 Tax Included

VOGUE JEWELERS, Dept. DM-10, 1003 Locust, St. Louis, Mo.

Shows How to Win and Hold Love of Your Husband or Sweetheart . . . Regain Lost Love . . . Marry the Man of Your Choice!

Dr. J. Howard Crum, famous New York specialist, has compressed in this fascinating book 40 years' experience in counseling women on their most intimate love problems. In "HOW TO MAKE A MAN LOVE YOU," you will learn how other women have enjoyed a more complete and satisfying love life. It is packed from cover to cover with safe and sane advice on the art of winning love and influencing men. This advice includes:

- How to discover and supply a man's needs for fuller, richer, love life
- What attracts men to women—how homely girls often win love of handsome men
- What men look for in female companionship
- Factors that influence a woman in choosing a mate —what a woman expects in different stages of her love life
- Why marriage between physically attractive men and women often fail—how love can survive after sex appeal has worn off
- What men don't like in women
- How to regain lost love of husband or sweetheart—the causes and how to remove them
- Why husbands stray and how they can be brought back—how to solve the mistress problem

The book is written with rare good taste and delicacy and with a deep understanding of the feminine heart and mind. It has proved a godsend to thousands of women, both single and married, helping them to find enduring love and happiness. It can do the same for you. Send only 25c for your copy. Money refunded promptly if you are not delighted.

25¢ How to Make A Man Love You

MERIT PUBLICATIONS
Dept. 910, 215 Fourth Avenue
New York 3, N. Y.

Are You Satisfied With
YOUR NOSE?

Nobody today need go through life handicapped by a badly shaped nose, disfigured features or blemishes. In YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, a famous Plastic Surgeon shows how simple corrections "remodel" the unbeautiful nose, take years off the prematurely aged face. Book is sent, postpaid, in plain wrapper—only 25c

FRANKLIN HOUSE, Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg., Phila., Pa. Dept. 16-R

BUILD UP RED BLOOD TO GET MORE STRENGTH
If your blood LACKS IRON!

You girls and women who suffer so from simple anemia that you're pale, weak, "dragged out"—this may be due to lack of blood-iron. So try Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS—one of the best home ways to build up red blood—in such cases. Pinkham's Tablets are one of the greatest blood-iron tonics you can buy! Buy them at any drugstore. Worth trying!

Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS

DEVELOP NATURAL
FIGURE LOVELINESS

Bust-Aid, a simple mechanical device, develops and firms your bust . . . naturally! No embarrassing pads or messy creams. Physician endorsed and recommended . . . Proven at New York's Charm Clinic. Bust-Aid Exerciser plus Chart plus Manual of Bust Care . . . all for only $5.95. Money Back Guarantee!

The CHARM CLINIC
Dept. D, 210 Fifth Avenue
New York 10, N. Y.

MAKE MONEY EASILY

Take easy, big profit orders from friends, others. Show Christmas Cards with name—6 big lines selling at 60 for $1.00 up. Amazing designs, gorgeous papers. FREE SAMPLES. Also sell $1.00 assortments of Christmas Cards, Gift Wrappings, Everyday Cards, Stationery. MAKE BIG MONEY QUICK—write today!

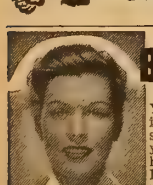
SOUTHERN GREETING CARD CO.
McCallBldg.,Dept. L-21,Memphis,Tenn.

Sell Name-Imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1 Also Assortments

CASE OF BIG Money Makers FREE

I'll send you this Big Assortment of Products in a carrying case FREE f.o.b. factory to help you get started in a Good Money Making Business of your own. Thousands now making extra money each week this way.

BLAIR, Dept.360-CT Lynchburg, Va.



BE A Nurse
MAKE $30-$40 A WEEK

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. 48th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan. Write today.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 2310, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name
City State Age

MY WIFE'S HUSBAND

(Continued from page 85)

girl, June Allyson. I was quite fond of her. I also had the idea that a man shouldn't be too eager to get married.

One night, as I was driving her home from a movie, Miss Allyson said, "Richard, I'll be frank with you. Either this is going to add up to something, or we are wasting each other's time."

I, who can be uncannily canny at times, kept my mouth shut. I drove back to my own house. When I got there, I picked up the telephone, dialed Miss Allyson's number and said, "Please don't go to bed, yet. I have something important to say."

Then I jumped into my car and went back to see Miss Allyson.

Of course, I never got around to saying what I thought I was going to say, and probably am one of the few men in the world who escaped without proposing. In any event, I collected a pleasing amount of lipstick that night, sitting with June in my car under a street lamp, oblivious of the passersby.

And I went home knowing where I was going.

After August 19th, 1945, there was no doubt about it.

It took us Powells quite a while to get settled in a family home out in Brentwood. We spent about a year fixing up the house, which was not a lean-to when we started. We planned everything carefully from the beginning, which is the way to do things. It gives you such satisfaction, particularly when you realize, after the work is all done, and the bills have stopped coming in, that the place is too darned small, because some day you are going to multiply into a larger family.

It is my opinion that the only good husband is a neat husband, and June follows me around all the time to prove it. However, I notice that although she can tell like a bird dog where I have dropped something, she can't find her glasses.

Now we have this new house on Avenue Copa de Ora in Bel Air where we can pick up after each other, and two fine people named Taru and Tak Watanabi can pick up after both of us. Taru and Tak are quite happy, I think. Taru spent considerable time in a Japanese concentration camp during the war, and Tak was on General MacArthur's staff. Their American names are June and Dick, but we all got together on a change. Otherwise, the confusion would have been considerable.

wall-pusher Powell . . .

But as I was saying, we are fixing up the new house. Now, I know that I'm quite a husband, after all. I never get nasty, for example, when my friend, Jimmy Cagney, makes cracks to June about my being a wall-pusher. It's my idea that if you don't like a wall in a certain place you move it over a few feet. This provides a certain feeling that the house is really yours no matter who lived in it before. It also prevents you from bumping into filled in space at night and breaking your big toe.

However, when a friend starts giving you the business about being a wall-pusher, and your wife complains that you are chopping down every tree on the place, you sometimes wonder whether it's worth it.

A few minutes ago, I was in the garden.

June went to work on me as follows: "Dick, you have chopped down those trees on the south side. Now we are exposed to our neighbors and vice versa."

"But June," I retorted, "we can now see Catalina bay on a clear day. Furthermore, if I don't forget to pull my shades at night, the neighbors won't be able to notice how long the studio has made me let the hair on the back of my neck grow for my cowboy role in Stations West."

She said, "When are you leaving for location?"

"Tomorrow night at seven o'clock."

"Darling," she said, trying to reach up and kiss me on the beak and hitting my chin, "I am going to miss you terribly, but think how many trees we'll save."

raising the roof . . .

So we strolled around to the north side of the house. I pointed out that the vines had been allowed to grow under the eaves, and that in a little while, the eaves would fall off. Not only that, but the same vines had grown up under the shingles. If something weren't done we would lose a roof, and stare up nightly at the stars.

"Why, Richard," Mrs. Powell said, "what a perfectly romantic idea. Not only that, but if you chop these vines down I am not going to move in."

I had an answer for that, and the scars where I bit my tongue prove it.

As everyone knows in Hollywood, and in Hollywood everybody knows, it is a mistake for a husband to tell his wife anything about her work. She resents this no end, and if such a thing goes on the husband discovers that his coffee is tasting bitter. A little later he is put under the ground without benefit of an autopsy.

To illustrate, awhile back I noticed that when June sang, she had the habit of sticking out her elbows, and swinging her arms like a blues singer under a spotlight in a society café. After watching her do this in a couple of movies, I told her discreetly that it looked like the devil.

She said, "Indeed it does."

Now she doesn't swing her arms when she sings, and she looks like an angel.

So, a little later, after watching me in a couple of my operas, she said, "You know, sometimes you act too facetious, as though you don't mean what you're doing."

I said, "Now look here, June, you run your business and I'll run mine. Where did you, and so on, get the idea et cetera?"

She was abashed. After that, I looked out for the business of being too facetious.

Things like this have led me to stop moving walls and tearing out trees. All the walls have been moved anyway, and the trees are just the way I want them—almost.

Like the other day, June took a look at the door to my dressing room. "How perfectly beautiful that natural pine is," she exclaimed. "When did you get the new door?"

"It's the same old door," I replied. "I just took off that heavy coat of paint."

"Why, Richard," she chortled, "how amazingly clever of you."

A man appreciates a reaction like that Still, when I try to talk to her about the two trees that still ought to come off the grounds of our new place, she is completely unreasonable. After a brief argument on this subject the other day, I told her about a letter I'd read in a magazine

A woman wrote to the editor as follows: "Frankly, I think it's too late to do anything with the male race."

"Sure," Mrs. Powell replied. "I see what you mean. Women might as well let men do what they please, because there's no curing them."

Then she left another bright splotch of lipstick on my profile.

Just as frankly, I think it's too late to do anything about the female race, so the trees are still standing there.

Isn't it wonderful?

IS PSORIASIS A SKIN DISEASE?

After years of research, many noted medical scientists have reached the opinion that Psoriasis results from certain internal disorders. A number of physicians have for the last five years been reporting satisfactory treatment of this malady with a new formula called LIPAN—taken internally, Lipan, a combination of glandular substances and vitamins, attacks what is now believed to be the internal cause of Psoriasis, and tends to aid in the digestion and assimilation of foods. Lipan is harmless, non-habit forming, and can be taken with confidence by both young and old. Physician inquiries are invited. Ask your druggist for Lipan or write us direct for free booklet. Or, order a month's supply of Lipan—bottle containing 180 tablets—at once, enclosing check or money order for $8.50.

Miss Mabel Millot says: I was afflicted with Psoriasis for 9 years on face and back. Two and one-half months after I began to take Lipan, my skin was completely clear.

Spirt & Co. Dept. D-10
Waterbury, Conn.

FAST RELIEF FROM PAIN OF SIMPLE PILES

● Here's a single soothing medicine to speed relief from tortures of simple piles. It's amazing Pazo*. Acts at once to relieve pain and itching—soothes inflamed tissues—lubricates dry, hardened parts—helps prevent cracking and soreness—reduce swelling and check minor bleeding. The help you get is wonderful!

So, to speed relief from itching and pain of simple piles, get Pazo*. Your doctor can tell you about it. At all druggists' in tubes with perforated pile pipe for simple, thorough application—also tins and suppositories.

Pile Ointment and Suppositories.*

EXTRA MONEY NOW TO CHRISTMAS

Selling CHRISTMAS CARDS

A PERSONAL MESSAGE FROM C. L. EVANS

Up to 100% profit. Show top quality 21-card $1.00 Christmas assortments. Currier & Ives, Oilettes, Gift Wrappings, Humorous boxes 30c up. Write today for FREE CATALOG and FREE SAMPLES 25 and 50 for $1.00 personals, stationery and special feature $1.00 assortment ON APPROVAL. Special offers. Cash bonus for you.

FREE SAMPLES 50 FOR $1.00 PERSONALS

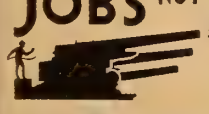
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
Box E, North Abington, Mass.

STAMMER?

GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 7700, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

JOBS NOT BOMBS for AMERICANS



RAILWAY POSTAL CLERK · MAIL CARRIER · POST OFFICE CLERK · MANY OTHER JOBS

WORK FOR "UNCLE SAM"

START

$1756 to $3021 Year

Men—Women

Prepare Now for Next Examinations. Veterans Get Special Preference. Mail Coupon Today.

COUPON

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
Dept. M108, Rochester 4, N.Y.
Sirs: Rush to me without charge (1) 32-page book with list of many U. S. Government Big Pay Jobs. (2) Tell me how to prepare for one of these jobs.
Name.....
Address.....Vet?

MOVIE REVIEWS

(Continued from page 23)

high spot was a surreptitious studio golf game between Crosby and Hope. For you, it may be Alan Ladd pulling a phony stick-up, or Johnny Coy in a startling dance routine.

The title stems from the "Variety Club" of show business, which adopts hundreds of babies and sees that they get a chance in life. The first of these, adopted eighteen years ago, is Catherine Brown (Mary Thatcher). When Catherine grows up it's natural that she should want to get into pictures. She heads for Hollywood, and a Paramount official in New York (one of the heads of the Variety Club) phones the studio to give her a screen test.

But Catherine changes her name to Amber LeVonne (that's her idea of a good name for pictures). A blonde (Olga San Juan) who has more nerve than a test pilot, appropriates both the name and Catherine's room reservation. What with the confusion about names, it's the blonde who gets the screen test. Catherine doesn't even know one has been arranged. She wanders around the studio wide-eyed, while the brassy Amber is emoting all over the place.

Paramount, at this point, wants no part of either of them. Amber is the world's worst actress, and Catherine, by sheer bad luck, has managed to dunk O'Connell (Frank Ferguson), the head of the studio, in his own swimming pool. However, through Bing Crosby, she does get an audition for her lovely singing voice. It's going fine when O'Connell recognizes her and orders her thrown off the lot.

Fortunately, a handsome young man in the talent department (De Forest Kelley) is in love with her by now. That, plus a sudden change of heart on the part of the blonde Amber, gives Catherine her chance at the big Variety show of the year.

Mary Thatcher is one of Paramount's better discoveries. You'll see more of her.—Par.

the "golden girl"
lana turner
more dazzling than ever on modern screen's november cover . . . on sale october 10

TIRED EYES LOVE EYE-GENE

Tired, Dull one minute . . . Rested, Cleared the next!

SAFE RELIEF NOW IN SECONDS!

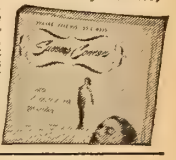
That's how fast just two drops of safe, gentle EYE-GENE acts to relieve your eyes tired from glare, wind, smoke or overwork. You feel its soothing effect in seconds! And EYE-GENE is positively harmless. Economical, too. 20¢, 60¢, $1 bottles at Druggists. Try it!

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

NOW, BE GLAMOROUS, ALLURING!

This famous SUCCESS COURSE shows you how!

Now in only few minutes a day at home you can apply glamourizing techniques made famous by Joe Bonomo as personal consultant to Hollywood stars. Publisher of BEAUTY FAIR magazine. BONOMO ORIGINAL HOLLYWOOD SUCCESS COURSE teaches you how to dramatize your face, figure, clothes, make-up, hair-do, voice; how to dress better, save money; how to control weight. 7-week Complete Course, 8½" x 11", 103 illustrations. Money back if not delighted. Sent C.O.D. for 98c plus postage or send 98c and we pay postage. Send for a copy today.



BONOMO CULTURE INSTITUTE
Dept. S1710
1841 Broadway, New York 23, N.Y.

LADIES! GIRLS! BOYS!

Premiums GIVEN! Send No Money NOW!

Send name and address—Ladies! Girls! Boys! Dainty wrist watches, pocket watches, alarm clocks, flashlights, ovenware sets, blankets—other premiums or Cash Commission easily yours. SIMPLY GIVE colorful art pictures with White CLOVERINE Brand SALVE for chaps and mild burns, sold to friends at 25 cents a box (with popular picture) and remit amounts stated for premium wanted as explained in catalog sent with order postage paid by us. Our 52nd year. Write now for trial order of SALVE and Pictures on trust to start.
WILSON CHEM. CO., Dept. 10-57A, TYRONE, PA.

PULVEX "DDT" FLEA POWDER

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF DEFECTIVE OR NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Kills the fleas Quickly! Keeps others off for Days.

Pulvex also comes with ROTENONE, the original formula. BEST FOR CATS.

Either Kind 25¢ & 50¢

Help yourself to BEAUTIFUL FINGERNAILS

Don't be embarrassed by short, broken, thin nails. It's so easy to cover unsightly nails with NU-NAILS. Applied in a jiffy, they bring you long, lovely nails that everyone admires. Can be worn any length and polished any shade. Help you overcome nail biting habit. Set of 10 only 20c at all 5c-10c stores . . . and at Sears.

NU-NAILS ARTIFICIAL FINGERNAILS
5251 West Harrison Street
Dept. 15-M Chicago 44, Illinois

SONG OF LOVE

Katharine Hepburn and Paul Henreid play the leading roles in as warm and shining a love story as you've seen in years. Robert Walker makes it a triangle, but not in the least the kind that the word implies. The music is Schumann, mixed with some Brahms and Liszt, and is superb.

Robert Schumann (Paul Henreid) is a genius, but, as frequently happens to geniuses, the world doesn't realize it until after he is dead. When he wants to marry Clara Wiecke (Katharine Hepburn), her father forbids it and calls him a failure. Clara, herself, is a brilliant concert pianist with a great future before her. But she chooses to give up her career, marry Schumann in defiance of her parents, and become simply a wife and mother. He gets a meagre job as a music teacher, and between them they produce seven children.

Then a "playing guest" joins the household. He is Johannes Brahms (Robert Walker) and he's there to study music. At least, theoretically, he's there for study. Actually, he spends most of his time taking care of the seven children, washing dishes and helping Clara in any way he can.

It is perhaps inevitable that he should fall in love with Clara. Her gaiety, her competence, her courage, her beauty—she is altogether a magnificent woman. But Johannes worships Schumann as a man, as well as an artist. When his love becomes too much for him to conceal, he finally leaves the household.

Schumann is changing now. He has violent headaches, and when he plays, a sinister off-key A sounds shrilly in his ears. Clara gradually realizes his condition, but there is little to be done about it. In those days insanity, its cause and cure, were as much a secret as black magic.

I don't know whether you'll consider the ending of Song of Love a happy one or not. But it has a ring of true sincerity.—M-G-M

BLACK NARCISSUS

Deborah Kerr plays a nun in the Technicolor Black Narcissus, which is quite a switch from her role in The Hucksters. She handles it with her usual calm competence.

Life in a convent may not sound like exciting picture material, but this is a very unusual convent. It's in a former palace, high on a peak of the Himalayas. The palace's owner, General Toda Rai (Esmond Knight), has given it to an Anglo-Catholic group of nuns, who are to open a combined school and hospital for the natives.

When the Sister Superior, Sister Clodagh (Deborah Kerr), arrives, she finds there will be more difficulties than she had realized. The General's agent, Dean (David Farrar), is a cynical but attractive gentleman, who obviously has little use for nuns. He predicts the convent won't last six months.

Dean has his advantages, however. For one thing he's an expert plumber and doesn't mind working on the palace's decrepit pipes. But he's a disturbing element while he's there. He takes a malicious pleasure in reminding the Sisters that the palace was once used for the General's father's harem.

Sister Ruth (Kathleen Byron), always emotionally unstable, falls in love with Dean although he gives her no encouragement. Even serene, beautiful Sister Clodagh begins to dream of the man she loved back in Ireland before she entered the Sisterhood.

All the Sisters act peculiarly by the time they have been in the palace a few months. Practical Sister Philippa (Flora Robson) suddenly plants the whole garden in flowers instead of the vegetables they had counted on. Sister Honey lets her love for children betray her into treating a very sick baby, which dies. The natives blame the Sisters and refuse to come there any more.

The General has sent his young son (Sabu) to the convent to school, but the boy runs away with a pretty native girl, Kanchi (Jean Simmons). Events move swiftly then to a climax, which solves nothing.—Univ.

Black Narcissus: Convents are quiet places—usually. But Deborah Kerr's peace is disrupted by natives Jean Simmons and David Farrar.

Song of the Thin Man: It's murder with music for Powell & Loy—provided by Keenan Wynn.

SONG OF THE THIN MAN

The Thin Man's song turns out to be jive, on the beat, reet, and ready to fly. Nick Charles (William Powell) and his lovely Nora (Myrna Loy) are, as usual, involved in murder. It happens to be the murder of a band leader named Drake (Philip Reed) which sets them down among a crowd of hepsters set to take off.

It's Nora, who is responsible for the whole thing, really. She persuades Nick to take her to a charity dance on board the gambling ship of Phil Brant (Bruce Cowling). They meet an old friend there, Janet Thayer (Jayne Meadows). It seems that Janet is going to marry Brant, although the idea throws her father (Ralph Morgan) into an eighteen-carat wing-ding.

On the bandstand, things are happening, too. Fran (Gloria Grahame), the singer, is in love with the band leader. For him, she has given a fast brush to young Buddy Hollis (Don Taylor), top reed player in the band. Buddy has blown his top and is ready to send Drake right out of this world—and I don't mean with music.

Drake is shot and Buddy disappears. No one knows whether he did the murder or not. Since Brant is also a suspect, Janet Thayer asks Nick to take over. His first move is to get Brant clapped into jail—for Brant's own safety, actually, although both Brant and Janet fail to appreciate his motives.

Next, Nick and Nora persuade Clinker (Keenan Wynn), another member of the band, to take them on a round of the jam sessions in search of Buddy. They don't find him, but they emerge with Nora talking in terms of hot licks, pump men, bakes and squares.

When Fran is found murdered, Nick decides to follow a clue to Poughkeepsie. Nora insists on going along. When they get back they find that little Nick Jr. (Dean Stockwell) has disappeared, presumably kidnapped by a gangster named Amboy (William Bishop), who is also involved in the case.

Nick adds two and two and gets an even dozen, solving the whole thing with a flick of the wrist. P.S. Asta is still around—my favorite screen actor.—M-G-M

A Sensational Offer to New Members of the Dollar Book Club

the $145,000 prize novel
BEFORE THE SUN GOES DOWN
Yours
FOR JUST A 3¢ Stamp
WHEN YOU JOIN THE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB
WINNER OF BOTH THE M-G-M AND DOUBLEDAY PRIZE CONTESTS
Before the Sun Goes Down
The Best-Seller that Combines the Warmth and Humanity of A TREE GROWS IN BROOKLYN with the Outspoken Truth of KINGS ROW
HOWARD

He Knew the Whole Town's Secrets —yet hid a burning secret of his own!

DOCTOR Dan Field knew everything that went on in Willowspring—the whispered scandals and the love affairs, the hopes and the sordid regrets. But no one knew that within Dan Field's lonely great house—in the bedroom where no woman ever had slept—he kept a huge white bride's bed, reserved for the wife of another man!

Was it because Dan wanted so desperately to cross the line of professional and moral ethics that kept him from Pris Albright that he delighted in watching the social barriers of Willowspring crumble? For Dan served everybody, the people across the tracks in Mudtown as well as the royal families of the town. The Mudtown children couldn't play with the Albright and Sargeant youngsters—yet Dan knew that the penned-up little darlings of society had a way of sneaking over to Mudtown to learn the facts of life first-hand. . . .

This great prize-winning novel combines an extraordinary love story with a lusty, living picture of a small town . . . the Nice People and the Not-So-Goods. It is filled with characters who are so astonishingly real that you will never forget the events in their lives. BEFORE THE SUN GOES DOWN was awarded two of the country's greatest literary prizes—the publisher's $20,000 award and the M-G-M annual novel award of $125,000. And you may have it for just a 3 cent stamp with membership in the Dollar Book Club!

Dollar Book Club Membership Is FREE!

THE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB is the only book club that brings you newly printed, current books by outstanding authors for only $1.00 each. This represents a saving to you of 50 to 75 per cent from the established retail price. Every Dollar Book Club selection is a handsome, full-sized library edition, well printed and bound in a format exclusively for members. You are privileged to purchase as many Club books as you wish at the special price of $1.00 each.

Although one outstanding book is chosen each month for exclusive distribution to members at $1.00 each, you do not have to accept a book every month; only the purchase of six a year is necessary. In fact, for convenience, most members prefer to have shipped and pay for books every other month.

The Economical, Systematic Way to Build a Library of Good Books

Dollar Book Club selections are from the best modern books submitted by the leading publishers. Outstanding new best-sellers by such popular authors as Mary Roberts Rinehart, Louis Bromfield, W. Somerset Maugham and Kenneth Roberts have been received by members at $1.00 each, while the public was paying from $2.50 to $3.00 for the publisher's edition at retail. A membership of more than 600,000 enables the Club to offer book values unequaled by any other method of book buying.

Choose Your First Selection from These Best-Sellers

Upon receipt of the attached coupon with a 3c stamp you will be sent a copy of Before the Sun Goes Down. You will also receive as your first selection for $1.00 your choice of any of the following four best-sellers:

- This Side of Innocence by Taylor Caldwell. The story of a girl who had to choose between a loveless marriage and a lawless love!
- In a Dark Garden by Frank G. Slaughter. If you enjoyed Gone With the Wind, you'll LOVE this new romance of Civil War.
- The Foxes of Harrow by Frank Yerby. The 1,000,000-copy best-seller of the man who parlayed a jewel and a gambler's ruthless cunning into power and a Creole plantation dynasty.
- The Strange Woman by Ben Ames Williams. The unforgettable story of "A Maine Cleopatra," by the author of "Leave Her to Heaven."

Every other month you will receive the descriptive folder called The Bulletin, which is sent exclusively to members of the Club. The Bulletin describes the forthcoming two months' book selections and reviews about ten or more titles (in the original publishers' editions selling at retail for $2.50 or more) available to members at only $1.00 each. If you do not wish to purchase either or both of the two new selections for $1.00 each, you may notify the Club, so that the books will not be sent to you. In any case, you may purchase any of the other titles offered for $1.00 each. There are no dues or membership fees at any time.

Send No Money—Mail Coupon with 3c Stamp

When you see Before the Sun Goes Down and your first selection and consider that these books are typical of the values you will receive for only $1.00, you will realize the great advantages of free membership in this popular Club. Don't miss this wonderful offer. Mail the coupon now!

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB
Garden City, New York

MAIL THIS COUPON

"Before the Sun Goes Down" for 3c stamp!

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB
Dept. 10MM, Garden City, New York

Please enroll me free as a Dollar Book Club subscriber and send me at once "Before the Sun Goes Down" for the enclosed 3c stamp. Also send me as my first selection for $1.00 the book I have checked below:

☐ This Side of Innocence ☐ In a Dark Garden
☐ The Foxes of Harrow ☐ The Strange Woman

With these books will come my first issue of the free descriptive folder called "The Bulletin" telling about the two new forthcoming one-dollar bargain book selections and several additional bargains which are offered for $1.00★ each to members only. I am to have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish either of the following months' selections and whether or not I wish to purchase any of the other bargains at the Special Club price of $1.00 each. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six during the year to fulfill my membership requirement. I pay nothing except $1.00 for each selection received plus a few cents handling and shipping cost.

Mr.
Mrs.
Miss.....
(PLEASE PRINT)

St. and No.....

City..... Zone No. (if any).....

State.....

Occupation..... If under 21, Age please.....

★Same Price in Canada: 105 Bond St., Toronto 2, Canada

"Experience is the best teacher... in playing table tennis or choosing a cigarette,"
says
Mary Reilly
INTERNATIONAL TABLE-TENNIS STAR
I SMOKED MANY DIFFERENT BRANDS DURING THE WARTIME SHORTAGE. CAMELS SUIT ME BEST!

More people are smoking Camels than ever before

● Experience? Yes, that wartime cigarette shortage was a revealing experience to smokers everywhere.

You smoked one brand one day . . . a different brand the next . . . whatever was available. Naturally, you compared brands. That's how millions learned the meaning of the phrase, "Camels suit me to a 'T'!"

And, now that you can get any brand of cigarettes you ask for, more people are smoking Camels than ever before. Try Camels yourself. And, when you smoke them, remember this fact: Only choice tobaccos, properly aged, and blended in the time-honored Camel way, are used in Camels.

CAMEL
CHOICE QUALITY
TURKISH & DOMESTIC BLEND CIGARETTES
Your "T-ZONE" will tell you...
T FOR TASTE...
T FOR THROAT...
that's your proving ground for any cigarette. See if Camels don't suit your "T-Zone" to a "T."

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.
Winston-Salem, N. C.

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS

than any other cigarette

● Three nationally known independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors to name the cigarette they smoked. More doctors named Camel than any other brand.

OCT -7 1947

©CLB 99806

nov. 15¢

modern screen

NOV 14 1947
SERIALS DIVISION

PER.

GAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE • GAZINE

NA TURNER

Your Skin is Smoother, Softer, too, with just One Cake of Camay!

You're the object of attentions and affections when your skin is soft and lovely! So isn't it wonderful that just one cake of Camay can give your skin a softer, smoother look. Put aside careless cleansing—go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet! Follow directions on the Camay wrapper and watch your beauty bloom!

MRS. WILLIAM ALBERT TRISCHETT
the former Dorothy Bertuch of Mt. Vernon, N. Y. bridal portrait painted by Dorwart

MEET THE TRISCHETTS

Back at Dartmouth after a long tour overseas, Bill asked Dorothy, his high school sweetheart, to the Winter Carnival. Then and there they decided their romance was real! Dorothy set a date.

Now Bill gives
Dorothy golf lessons near their Hanover home. He's helped her game. And her beauty tip can help your complexion:—"Go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet for a softer skin!"

©CIB 99806

"You make a lovely couple, Pet!"

GIRL: Me and the Falls, you mean?

CUPID: Who else? Funny thing, though, some girls come here with husbands. Honeymooning, I think they call it. But, of course, they're girls with sparkling smiles.

GIRL: Listen, my fine feathered fiend, if I could coax a little sparkle into my smile, I would, believe me! I brush my teeth regularly, but all I get is—

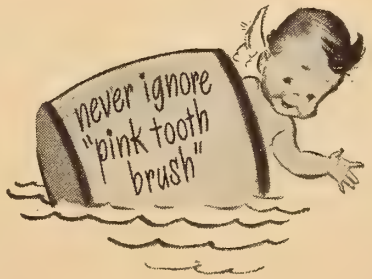
CUPID: Maybe some "pink" on your tooth brush?

GIRL: Bright, aren't you . . . and what's a little "pink" in my young life?

CUPID: Grow up, youngster. "Pink" is a sign to see your dentist. He'll tell you what's behind it. And if it turns out to be simply a case of soft foods robbing your gums of exercise, like as not he'll suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

GIRL: Fine, fine . . . but by what higher mathematics does all this add up to one big, bright smile?

CUPID: Elementary, my dear witless. Sparkling smiles depend largely on firm, healthy gums. And Ipana's designed not only to clean teeth but, with gentle massage, to help gums. So if your dentist advises massage with Ipana . . . go to it, gal, for your smile's sake. You'll stop mooning and start honeymooning!



For the Smile of Beauty—

Ipana and Massage

Product of Bristol-Myers

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

This month we're roaring about one of the most dramatic and Technicolorfully beautiful movies that we've ever had the pleasure of roaring about.

★ ★ ★ ★

Now we do sound a little adjective-y. You know what we mean. Whenever you hear the phrase "One of the most" you sort of know the etcetera.

★ ★ ★ ★

Instead we're going to take a different stance. We're going to tell you what the picture is called and who's in it. Then see if you don't agree that this one is different.

★ ★ ★ ★

Very good. The title is "The Unfinished Dance." The producer is Joseph Pasternak. The director is Henry Koster.

★ ★ ★ ★

They are responsible for many memorable musicals. But while "The Unfinished Dance" is not strictly a musical, it is a dramatic story that deals with dancers.

★ ★ ★ ★

The star is Margaret O'Brien—the biggest little star on the screen. (Adjectives again!)

★ ★ ★

The leading girls are Cyd Charisse, a poem on legs, and Karin Booth, ditto.

★ ★ ★ ★

A new personality, Danny Thomas, seen on many a stage, is introduced in this—may we say unusual—picture.

★ ★ ★ ★

Myles Connolly's screen play is based on the story by Paul Morand.

★ ★ ★ ★

Now you know the facts. But what you don't know is this:

★ ★ ★ ★

Little Margaret—in one sense of the word—plays a heavy.

★ ★ ★ ★

At a rehearsal of the most wonderful eye-filling ballet (those adjectives again!) she pulls a certain backstage switch.

★ ★ ★

Her heart makes her do it—her love makes her do it. But did she commit a crime? Did she end the career of a person she would later grow to love?

★ ★ ★ ★

What a great part does Conscience—the inner thing—play in this adjective-worthy film.

★ ★ ★

One could go on. But 'tis better p'raps to leave the column "unfinished" . . .

★ ★ ★

For you will surely see "The Unfinished Dance."

—Leo

NOVEMBER, 1947

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

VACATION FROM MARRIAGE (Cornel Wilde-Pat Knight) ..... by Dick Hyland 12
IF HE DIDN'T CARE (Dane Clark) ..... by Louis Pollock 14
OUT OF UNHAPPINESS (Hedy Lamarr-Mark Stevens) ..... by Florabel Muir 24
GOLDEN GIRL (Lana Turner) ..... by Kaaren Pieck 27
TEE FOR TWO (Clark Gable) ..... by Ed Sullivan 32
LOVE THAT MAN! (Bing Crosby) ..... by Eddie Condon 34
THEY WON'T FORGET (Larry Parks-Betty Garrett) ..... by Ida Zeitlin 36
HOLIDAY IN MEXICO (Anne Baxter-John Hodiak) ..... by Christopher Kane 38
BREAKDOWN (Judy Garland) ..... by Hedda Hopper 40
GENTLE HEEL (Robert Ryan) ..... by Lynn Bowers 42
"THE PLAY'S THE THING" (Gregory Peck-Guy Madison-Diana Lynn) 44
SOUTH AMERICA, TAKE IT AWAY (Bob Hope) ..... by Bill Graffis 48
SHE NEVER HAD IT SO GOOD (Diana Lynn) ..... by Irene Greengard 50
"HIMSELF" (Spencer Tracy) ..... by Pat O'Brien 52
OF G-STRINGS AND APRON STRINGS (Dan Dailey) ..... by Carl Schroeder 54
BIRTH OF A BABY (Barbara Hale-Bill Williams) ..... by Jane Wilkie 56
ED SULLIVAN'S HOLLYWOOD DIARY 58
DADDY (Walter Pidgeon) ..... by Edna Pidgeon Aitkens 62
INNOCENT ABROAD (Linda Darnell) ..... by Margot Grubb 64
THE UNCLEAN (Edgar Bergen) ..... by Lauren Tracy 66

features

GOOD NEWS ..... by Louella Parsons 4

departments

REVIEWS ..... by Virginia Wilson 16
FASHION ..... by Constance Bartel 81
INFORMATION DESK ..... by Beverly Linet 92
BEAUTY: "Aim for a Beautiful Complexion!" ..... by Carol Carter 100
FAN CLUBS ..... by Shirley Frohlich 110
MUSIC: "Sweet And Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 114

COVER PORTRAIT OF LANA TURNER BY NICKOLAS MURAY

DESIGNED BY LESTER BEALL

Gown by Maurice Rentner

ALBERT P. DELACORTE, Executive Editor HENRY P. MALMGREEN, Editor

TOM CARLILE, western manager
CHRISTOPHER KANE, story editor

SHIRLEY FROHLICH, associate editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
BEVERLY LINET, research editor
CHARLES SAXON, cartoon editor

ROMA BURTON, western editor
GUS GALE, staff photographer
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
DON ORNITZ, staff photographer
CARL SCHROEDER, editorial consultant
LAYNG MARTINE, promotion director
JEAN KINKEAD, contributing editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 35, No. 6, November, 1947. Copyright, 1947, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 149 Madison Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year, elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office, Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No 301778

TREMENDOUS as its Earthquake!

SPECTACULAR as its Tidal Wave!

MAGNIFICENT as its Love Affair!

From the pulsating pages of M-G-M's Prize Novel—enjoyed by 20 million readers—comes the thrilling story of a fiery girl who dares the dangers of the sea and a savage land . . . to fight for the love of a bold adventurer.

GREEN DOLPHIN STREET

Lana
TURNER

VAN HEFLIN · DONNA REED · RICHARD HART

Frank MORGAN · Edmund GWENN · Dame May WHITTY
Reginald OWEN · Gladys COOPER

Screen Play by Samson Raphaelson • Based on the Novel by Elizabeth Goudge • Directed by Victor Saville • Produced by Carey Wilson

A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER HIT!

LOUELLA PARSONS'

Good news

■ If it's any consolation to you readers, all Hollywood is just as confused as you with the on-again-off-again marriage antics of June Haver and her spouse, Jimmy Zito.

First, you remember, they were married in a civil ceremony, and separated almost immediately, only to be remarried in a couple of weeks in a church service. On the heels of that came June's announcement that she would seek to have the marriage annulled.

So what happened next? June "disappeared" from her home, and not even her studio bosses knew where she was or could find any trace of her. Naturally, they were burned up plenty at their golden haired baby, and more than a little worried.

My own sleuths were the first to locate June, and guess where she was? Staying at the same West Los Angeles motor court where Jimmy was residing! What's more, they had been dining ever so cosy-like every night!

I don't know what June has been trying to prove, and frankly, I don't much care, because that's not my idea of the way to treat any marriage.

* * *

Cornel Wilde could give the Boy Scout oath and swear by his ancestors, but he could never make me believe that HIS career came between him and the wife he loves almost to the point of distraction, Pat Knight.

At the time of their surprising separation, Cornel said, gentleman-fashion, "Going from picture to picture with little time to rest or to devote to my family is responsible for our troubles." Oh, yeah!

Hollywood's great turned out en masse to catch Charles Laughton's opening in a new play, Galileo, at the Coronet Theater. Charles and wife Oona Chaplin found the press photographers in an amiable mood—and vice versa.

Charles Boyer hoped to be in Paris for the première of Arch of Triumph, but he'll work, instead. Maybe Pat and he will be free to go back for a while next year, when they celebrate their 14th wedding anniversary.

Frances and Van Heflin had a very special interest in the play. Van's sister, whose name is also Frances, played opposite Laughton. Those who've seen Van in Green Dolphin Street, say it's his best role yet.

Gayest twosome in the audience were Ingrid Bergman and her handsome neurologist-husband, Peter Lindstrom. Ingrid's wearing her Joan of Lorraine hair-do, and will take that Broadway hit on tour for a year.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Conte got a great kick out of Galileo, because they're both admirers of Laughton. Dick, himself, is well on the way up—as 20th Century-Fox finally discovered, after lending him out.

Gene's nose is as good as new—now that the operation deal is over. It never needed an uplift, but was injured in an accident. He and the charming Mrs. Kelly (Betsy Blair) came to the opening informal-like.

LOUELLA PARSONS' Good news

Rumors of a separation between Glo de Haven and John Payne were further thwarted when they appeared hand in hand at the première.

Swathed in smiles and white was Jane Powell, who's flooded with proposals, at 17. But she's playing the field. Here, it's Tom Batten.

Bob Mitchum, the star of Red Pony, wants to see what this Red Stallion picture is like. Before going in, he obliges with his name.

As I see it, the real trouble is this: Cornel is almost obsessed with ambition for his wife's career and he is intensely jealous of her. On the other hand, Pat is obsessed with ambition for her OWN career. She has been spoiled and indulged by her husband's devotion, and perhaps she has been subconsciously resentful of his jealousy.

Everyone thought their problems might be solved when she got her first real break in a movie for Sol Wurtzel, Roses Are Red. But instead of solving the problem, the job served merely to bring things to a head.

During the making of the picture, Cornel was constantly at the studio and on the set, offering advice and suggestions about lighting Pat to the cameramen, and dressing her to the wardrobe department. He was determined to see that she clicked big in her screen debut. Of course, it was inspired by love and pride. But you just can't do that in Hollywood.

The whole thing blew up right after the picture was finished, when Pat and Cornel went on a weekend to Catalina Island.

That Helmut Dantine happened to be there at the same time turned out to be unfortunate, for his name was mixed up in the highly dramatic events that followed.

The whisper was that Cornel swam out an alarming distance from the shore and refused to be picked up by a rescue boat. Pat's explanation is that she sent the boat after her husband when she became worried about him and thought he might be exhausted. Cornel says he was just taking a swim, felt no exhaustion, and refused the rescue offer because he didn't need it.

When asked what, if anything, he knew about these carryings-on, Helmut said he was completely confused by the whole thing, and was highly indignant at the intimation that he had been the cause of the break-up. Nevertheless, a short time later, when the Wildes' trouble was at its peak, Helmut was glimpsed dining very tête-à-tête with Pat at a small and intimate Hungarian restaurant, called the Little Gypsy.

Since the "incident" in Catalina, the Wildes dined together several times, attended the theater twice, and then reconciled when they went to Del Monte for a second honeymoon. Whether the reconciliation will "take," I don't know. Perhaps it will, since Pat's own career is picking up and now looks more promising. Her career problems, I am sure, played a big part in their marital difficulties.

* * *

I love Cara Williams' honesty when she admitted she was just crazy about Keenan Wynn. "But I don't know whether he's crazy about me or not."

Kinda cute when you and I always think of pretty little movie girls as being sought after and spoiled by the men they know.

* * *

After being separated from him for months, Greer Garson finally filed her suit for divorce from Richard Ney.

Greer's friends have felt for a long time that a reconciliation was impossible, but Greer chose to wait until she was absolutely

(Continued on page 8)

Number Three... Number Four...

Number Two...

Number Five...

Number One...

Number Six...

Darryl F. Zanuck
presents

Forever Amber

Color by
TECHNICOLOR

Starring LINDA DARNELL · CORNEL WILDE · RICHARD GREENE
GEORGE SANDERS ..as King Charles II with GLENN LANGAN · RICHARD HAYDN · JESSICA TANDY · ANNE REVERE · JOHN RUSSELL

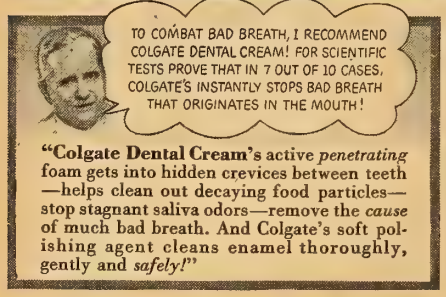
Directed by OTTO PREMINGER · Produced by WILLIAM PERLBERG · From the Novel by KATHLEEN WINSOR

Screen Play by Philip Dunne and Ring Lardner, Jr. · Adaptation by Jerome Cady

A 20th CENTURY-FOX Achievement

But He Cuts No Ice With Her!

WELL! SEEMS YOUR SISTER DOESN'T GO FOR MY ACT—OR FOR ME! HOW COME, CHUM? WHAT'S HER REASON?
SIS THINKS BAD BREATH IS A DARN GOOD REASON, PAL! SO, IF YOU'RE INTERESTED IN HER, BETTER HEAD FOR YOUR DENTIST'S, DICK!



TO COMBAT BAD BREATH, I RECOMMEND COLGATE DENTAL CREAM! FOR SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE THAT IN 7 OUT OF 10 CASES, COLGATE'S INSTANTLY STOPS BAD BREATH THAT ORIGINATES IN THE MOUTH!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles— stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!
COLGATE
RIBBON DENTAL CREAM
Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date!

The tribute dinner for Walter Winchell, at Mocambo drew many celebs, including Nora and Errol Flynn, Frank Sinatra (Louella's "date") and Leonard Lyons.

Marie McDonald's black hair attracted lots of attention at the Winchell dinner. Harry Karl, Marie's fiance, likes it fine. Do you?

LOUELLA PARSONS' Good news

sure the marriage could not be saved before she took the final step. Too, it was her second divorce, and the idea was doubly unpleasant to her for that reason.

While she was staying very much to herself, there was no particular reason for Greer to change her legal status. But once she started going out dining and dancing with male friends, I knew she soon would clarify her position. She always has been a great stickler for propriety, and she did not feel it looked right to be beaued around town by other men while she was still Mrs. Ney. Her latest dates were with Greg Bautzer and George Sanders, but romantically, it doesn't mean a thing, I'm sure.

I feel very sorry for Richard, who was so in love with Greer, but maybe it will be best for him. He's now keeping socialite Jane Hollingsworth's phone busy but plenty. Ironically, she is torching for her "ex."

* * *

I often wonder why some people will persist in denying a thing they know is true.

For instance, I mentioned on the air and in my column that Jane Greer was going to marry Edward Lasker who is the son of Albert Lasker, one of the ten richest men in America. Jane, you know, was formerly married to Rudy Vallee and made plenty of headlines when she finally divorced him. Well, I knew she was going to marry Lasker because she told me so herself, but the next day after I announced it, he called me and denied the story emphatically. He went out with many girls, he said. Exactly three weeks later he and Jane eloped to Las Vegas. Deliberate doings like that aren't respected in or out of Hollywood.

* * *

Very sad to me is the case of Alan Marshal who seems to have been afraid to tackle a new picture since his nervous breakdown of some time ago. Remember, he was one of the top stars with a brilliant future ahead, when his illness struck. The thing that is so tragic to me is that Mrs. Marshal, who stuck loyally with him all through his long illness, now is divorcing him. Mrs. Marshal, incidentally, is another who definitely told me she had no intention of leaving her husband just two days before she filed her suit for divorce. I try to keep my faith in people of this sort, but it's very hard at times.

(Continued on page 10)

SHE WAS SOLD TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER!

GARY COOPER · PAULETTE GODDARD

Cecil B. DeMille's

UNCONQUERED

Color by TECHNICOLOR

with HOWARD DA SILVA · BORIS KARLOFF · CECIL KELLAWAY · WARD BOND

Produced and Directed by Cecil B. DeMille

A Heart As Fiery As Her Crimson Tresses... The Most Desirable Prize In All This Fabulous Continent... Bought By The Most Dangerous Man Of Those Dangerous Times!

Screenplay by Charles Bennett, Fredric M. Frank and Jesse Lasky, Jr. • Based on the novel by Neil H. Swanson • A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

A Feminine Weapon

In emergency, DeLong Bob Pins have been used as letter-openers . . . door keys . . . paper clips—but that's not why women buy so many of them. Smart women who pride themselves on being value-conscious and well-groomed, know there's nothing like the DeLong Bob Pin, with its Stronger Grip, for keeping your hair-do neat from morning 'til night . . . They've learned that it's foolish to buy poorly made bob pins that slip out, when they can get the extra-strong, extra-snappy DeLong product everywhere. Just remember—

Stronger Grip

Won't Slip Out

Quality Manufacturers for Over 50 Years

BOB PINS HAIR PINS SAFETY PINS
HOOKS & EYES HOOK & EYE TAPES
SNAPS PINS SANITARY BELTS

Frank Sinatra arrived at the Frank Borzage Golf Tournament by helicopter. The charity match netted the Runyon Cancer Fund $7,500.

Jack Carson, playing in the Actors' Division, scored 89, a sprained wrist and several callouses. Wayne Morris was no fool—he spectated.

LOUELLA PARSONS' Good news

Well, you're going to be plenty jealous of me this month when I tell you I went to a party with Frank Sinatra! Yes, Frankie picked me up at the house and then escorted me to the Walter Winchell tribute dinner at the swank Mocambo.

Before we took off for the big night, Frankie and Nancy came in and had a chat with my husband, who has been ill. Doctor brought out all his old prize fight pictures and Nancy and I cooled our heels while the men talked the prize fight business. Frank's one star who is not hepped to the point of boredom on his singing-acting career. That boy can talk about sports, painting (his newest hobby) and juvenile delinquency problems with the best of them.

But, finally, we were on our way and as we walked in the door of the Mocambo, Nancy and I were handed leis of orchids that had been flown in from Honolulu for the ladies just that day. All my life I have wanted to wear that many orchids. These were little tiny pink ones and so cute.

Frankie was on the entertainment committee, so Nancy and I made our way to the flower-bedecked table to wait for him. Sitting near us were Postmaster General Robert Hannegan, his wife, and their attractive daughter, Pat. Pat was completely wide-eyed over all the stars and Walter Winchell took her around and introduced her to each one.

Errol Flynn, who came with the fabulous Mike Romanoff, sat with the Reginald Gardiners and it seemed to me that Errol was in one of his snippy moods. Why, I wouldn't be knowing.

Joan Caulfield, who I say is not only one of the prettiest girls in Hollywood but in the wide world, was escorted by Harry Koernitz.

Bob Hope was there with the striking Dolores, and when they did a hot rhumba together, everybody accused them of showing off their South American training. That Hope was in great form and kidded everybody.

Frankie, of course, sang—so did Tony Martin—and both of them really "sent" the crowd. Tony was with Cyd Charisse, who seems to be his favorite date these days and nights. But you know Tony. His affections are subject to change without notice.

Marie McDonald looked so different with her dark hair, I didn't recognize her at first. The change is attractive—but Marie is a "blonde personality" if I ever saw one. What do you bet she doesn't go back to being blonde?

The entertainment was a "surprise" and perfectly wonderful. Lauritz Melchior sang "Because," Jose Iturbi played the piano as only he can play, and Jimmy Durante clowned all over the place—and what a lovable, sweet clown he is.

Myrna Loy is so slender these days you would hardly know her. Herbert Marshall and his bride looked very happy. She wore a very beautiful trousseau gown, black trimmed in pink, and her hair fluffy around her head. "Boots" usually wears it in a tight knot—but I liked the new coiffure much better. Take Hollywood alphabetically and you'll have the list of celebs who showed up to pay tribute to Walter's wonderful work in raising money for the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund.

P.S. Jack Dempsey brought a very pretty girl named Felice Ingersoll, whom he has been escorting regularly. And I ran into Bob Hutton and his beautiful Cleatus, late in the evening. The Huttons tell me they have just bought a new house in Beverly Hills

(Continued on page 70)

THERE WAS A THREAT HE HAD TO DO SOMETHING ABOUT..
There was a threat he had to hide – and a girl he had to seek!...He was the hunted turned hunter – defying the dangers of numberless nights to keep his promise to return!
HUMPHREY BOGART
and LAUREN
BACALL
From the spectacular SATURDAY EVENING POST serial comes this great entertainment from WARNER BROS.
DARK PASSAGE

WITH
BRUCE BENNETT · AGNES MOOREHEAD · TOM D'ANDREA

DIRECTED BY DELMER DAVES

PRODUCED BY JERRY WALD

Screen Play by Delmer Daves • From the Novel by David Goodis • Music by Franz Waxman

In a way, it was fun—quiet dates at corner tables, flowers for Pat's hair, and the Wildes recapturing something that was never really lost.

By Dick Hyland

Vacation from marriage

■ One warm evening this summer, a lovely blonde woman escorted by a dark young man with an athletic step, entered LaRue's, the fashionable restaurant on the Sunset Strip. They stopped at the cloakroom and he removed the wrap from her tanned shoulders. It was evident that he had performed the same service many times before.

The brunette girl in the cloakroom took the coat, flashed the couple a professional smile, and turned to the girl who worked with her. "What do you know? The Cornel Wildes!" Her partner nodded.

The couple was led into the dining room and seated at a side table for two. The room's soft lighting flattered her blondness and his strong masculine face. They were a pair that any artist might have put together. They were gay.

"What will you have, dear?" he asked.

"I don't know. What looks good to you?"

He raised his eyes from the menu. "You do, Patricia," he said, suddenly serious. "You look very good to me."

Their tenth wedding anniversary (Sept. 21) was a few days away as they deliberated over their choice of food. For ten years, Cornel Wilde had been saying that same thing to Patricia Knight, his wife.

(Continued on page 87)

BETRAYED... By Men of Evil for a Handful of Silver!

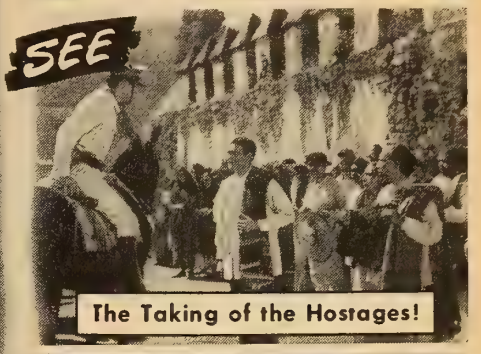
BEFRIENDED... By a Woman, Who Alone Dared Shield Him from Doom!

The Sacking of the Village!

The Betrayer's Treachery!

The Executioner's Reckoning!

The Pursuer's Challenge!



The Taking of the Hostages!

The Dance at the Inn!

JOHN FORD and MERIAN COOPER present
ARGOSY PICTURES'

THE FUGITIVE

co-starring

HENRY FONDA
DOLORES DEL RIO
PEDRO ARMENDARIZ

with J. CARROL NAISH • LEO CARRILLO • WARD BOND
ROBERT ARMSTRONG • JOHN QUALEN

Screenplay by DUDLEY NICHOLS

Directed by JOHN FORD

Released through RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

You'll Remember These
JOHN FORD Directed Hits

★ THE INFORMER
THE HURRICANE STAGECOACH
★ GRAPES OF WRATH
THE LONG VOYAGE HOME
★ HOW GREEN WAS MY VALLEY
THEY WERE EXPENDABLE

★ ACADEMY AWARD WINNER

if he didn't care...

He likes to talk about Margot—how she turned a stable into a home, and a rough guy into a perfect host—and would Dane act this remembering way, if he didn't care?

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

Dane and Margot used to relax by writing songs. A few months after this picture was taken they sold one called, "This Is Real." Now, they're deciding if it really is. After he finishes Whiplash, they'll go for a cruise because Dane says, "Water is soothing."

■ "That guy?" asked Freddie Steele, former world's middleweight champion, who does the big fight scene in Whiplash with Dane. "I hit him so hard once he should'a come apart at the ankles. Instead he bounces right back and bends me my bridgework!"

"Who, Dane?" retorted Dan Beasely, Warner Brothers cameraman. "He's always kidding you into something, and then, all of a sudden, you find out he isn't kidding at all!"

"Oh, him!" muttered Hank Norvil, the studio garage attendant, as a puzzled look came over his face. "I ast him why he don't get himself a big car like all the big shots and he said he'd rather be a little guy in a little car than a little guy in a big car!"

"Who, Dane?" queried Mushy Callahan, studio trainer, in an Avenue B accent that brings tears to the eyes of lonesome New Yorkers. "He's refreshing, honest. Like a week in the Catskills. And one of these linguists, too. I like it when he orders spaghetti in Italian—and the waiter brings ravioli."

"Dane Clark?" asked the casting director. "Sure, I remember when he used to come around the office looking for movie work. I'd tell him there was nothing doing and not to come back for a week. And the next morning he'd be right there again, saying he had forgotten a book or a package or something. It took me a long time to figure out that all the "forgetting" was just a racket to get right back into my office again. But, by then, it was too late—we had already signed him up!"

"Who, me?" asked Dane, himself, as he leaned over a Romanoff chef's salad, which he was mowing nicely flat. "Sounds like a lot of loose talk."

"You deny it?"

A look of pain crossed his face. "Please (Continued on page 131)

—that Always-Fresh look...

"My skin's really beauty-clean, smooth . . . after fresh-cleansing with Woodbury Cold Cream! says Jane Greer co-starring in R.K.O. Radio's "OUT OF THE PAST"

DEEP-CLEANSING RICH-SOFTENING WOODBURY COLD CREAM

- Rich, deep-cleansing oils float away make-up, clogging skin soil
- Four special softening ingredients smooth dry skin

Jane's beauty-glow cleansing...with Woodbury Cold Cream

Fresh-up! "And when skin needs a fresh-up, always . . . my Woodbury Cold Cream!" says Jane. Yes! This satin-smooth cream brings satin-glow skin. Take Woodbury, girls, for your smoothing-cleansing...keep that Woodbury "Always-Fresh" look!

On-the-glow! Jane's skin looks new bloom, after busy studio day. "A dinner date means first—my date with Woodbury!...to cleanse and soften that tired dry-skin feeling! In a second, skin looks silky. A fresh film for my powder base . . . and make-up glows!"

That "Always-Fresh" look

Clear-clean, silken-soft skin—for you! Woodbury Cold Cream is different. Rich oils cleanse deep...free your skin of clinging make-up, grime. Woodbury's four special softening ingredients smooth dry skin—each cleansing! See the velvet-fresh look Woodbury gives.

No finer cream than Woodbury is made — at any price!

FOR SPECIAL SKIN PROBLEMS

Dry Skin: Woodbury Cream-cleanse. Soften with Woodbury Special Dry Skin Cream . . . rich in lanolin's benefits.

Oily Skin: Cleanse with Woodbury Liquefying Cleansing Cream. Leaves skin clearer.

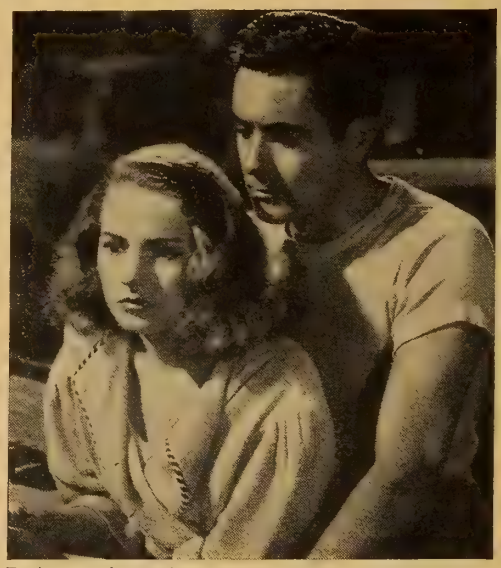
Beautiful Good Night! "Have to think of morning beauty," says Jane. "So I Woodbury-cream-cleanse . . . for baby-clean skin. Then smooth on a fresh veil . . . for rich skin-softening all night through." Try it, girls...get beautifying Woodbury Cold Cream.

Movie reviews

by virginia wilson

Ty Power, a carnival barker, who wants to be a big time "mentalist," spiels to the crowd about Coleen Gray, the Girl Who Defies Electricity.

Joan Blondell, for whom Ty has been making a play in order to get the secret code she once used in a mind-reading act, learns that he's in love with Coleen, and taunts him before the others.



Ty learns the code, marries Coleen, and together they go to Chicago, where the act is successful and the two flourish—until their fraud is exposed!

NIGHTMARE ALLEY

Tyrone Power plays a strange, almost frightening character in Nightmare Alley. A man who can sway everyone but himself. A man who is ruthless and cold and clever, until at last he meets someone as ruthless as he is and far more clever.

The people of Nightmare Alley aren't much like people you are apt to meet. They are "carnie" people, that is, they work in traveling carnivals, and they have their own customs and ideas.

Take Stan Carlisle (Tyrone Power). He's new in the business, but already he's as adept a barker as you'll find in any side show. His show is Zeena's mind-reading act. Zeena (Joan Blondell) and her husband, Pete (Ian Keith), used to be in the big time. Now they're just part of the "carnie" crowd. But because she goes for Stan's easy magnetism and laughing eyes, she begins to teach him the things that she and Pete once used to do together.

It isn't long afterward that Pete dies from drinking the wood alcohol he thought was whiskey. Stan knows how it happened but he certainly isn't going to tell. He's going to get out of carnivals and into the profession of "mentalist."

When Stan leaves the carnival, however, it isn't Zeena he takes with him, but Molly (Coleen Gray). She's a pretty girl, and young, which Zeena isn't. She's been in love with Stan for a long while. The wedding is practically a shot-gun affair, but what does it matter? They're going to be so happy together!

A year later, Stan is "The Great Stanton," appearing with Molly as his partner at the Sherman House in Chicago. He's doing fine, and he has ideas for a couple of things that should make them really rich. Crooked? Well, maybe, but Stan doesn't care, and if Molly does, she knows that she can always get out.

Then he meets a woman psychiatrist named Lilith (Helen Walker) and finds out he doesn't know all the answers after all.—20th-Fox

Are you in the know?

What's this paper doll trying to do?

- ☐ Get into print
- ☐ Scoop the news
- ☐ A slight-of-hand trick

Ma Nature gave this little girl a great big hand. Outsize paws seem smaller if you make them less conspicuous. With one hand, practice crumpling a sheet of newspaper into a ball. That's a trick to limber hands, lend them grace (a confidence builder!). At "those" times, too, you can gain self-assurance—with Kotex, and that exclusive safety center. Because it gives extra protection, it's a can't-miss for confidence.

Which type calls for this neckline?

- ☐ Pudge
- ☐ Pee-wee
- ☐ TNT

Scarves are neckline news again. Top 'em off with a fancy stickpin — maybe made from your own sorority pin. But mind you — chin-chucking scarves are not for the short or chubby. It's the TNT gal (tall 'n' terrific) who can best wear the style shown here. And by the way, it's smart to know Kotex comes in sizes! 3 of 'em! So — from Regular, Junior and Super you can choose the napkin suited to you.

What the lonesome lass lacks is—

- ☐ Goldilocks
- ☐ Good standing
- ☐ Gorgeous gams

It takes more than honey-hued tresses and trim pegs to make an impression. Avoid that Leaning Tower look. Since it comes from toting textbooks on one favored side — shift the ballast! Good standing improves your poise. Of course, poise is yours for the asking on difficult days — when you've asked for Kotex. Naturally! Because Kotex is the napkin with flat pressed ends that prevent telltale outlines.

Will you score with your stadium squire, if you're

- ☐ Cheer-happy
- ☐ Sweet and silent
- ☐ A quiz kid

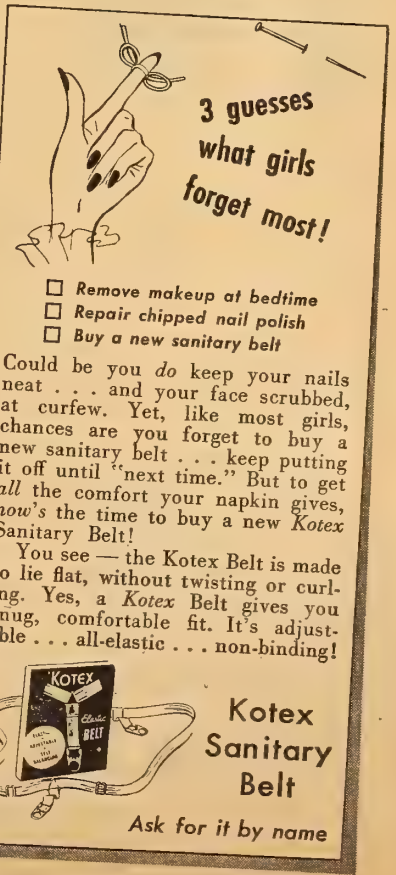
Gals should know football! — squires complain. Block that "kick"— by boning up, beforehand. Then get with the game! Have fun! Better to cheer your head off than be sweetly mute or a question-box And don't let calendar interference faze you. Just depend on Kotex: it's made to stay soft while you wear it. And teamed with a Kotex Sanitary Belt (all-elastic — snug-fitting — adjustable!) Kotex keeps you in blissful comfort, from kickoff to final whistle!



3 guesses what girls forget most!
☐ Remove makeup at bedtime
☐ Repair chipped nail polish
☐ Buy a new sanitary belt
Could be you do keep your nails neat . . . and your face scrubbed, at curfew. Yet, like most girls, chances are you forget to buy a new sanitary belt . . . keep putting it off until "next time." But to get all the comfort your napkin gives, now's the time to buy a new Kotex Sanitary Belt!
You see — the Kotex Belt is made to lie flat, without twisting or curling. Yes, a Kotex Belt gives you snug, comfortable fit. It's adjustable . . . all-elastic . . . non-binding!
KOTEX
Elastic BELT
Kotex Sanitary Belt
Ask for it by name

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S PAT. OFF.

Important Event

TWO PIECE SUIT!

New Longer Length

only $7.98

Here it is—your loveliest, most important suit, to invite the loveliest, most important events in your life! New, longer jacket, flaring out at the hips in a full, flirtatious, double peplum. The top tier of the peplum and the jaunty collar smartly match the skirt. New, longer skirt with zipper closing. Superbly tailored of sleek, rich rayon faille. In enchanting colors:

Kelly Green and Black; Royal Blue and Black; Scarlet Red and Black; Kelly Green and Brown. Sizes 9-11-13-15-17.

COME IN OR MAIL COUPON

Preview Fashions

275 SEVENTH AVE., NEW YORK CITY
Retail Shop, 19th Floor

SEND NO MONEY — SENT ON APPROVAL

PREVIEW FASHIONS, Dept. D111
275 Seventh Avenue, New York 1, N.Y.

Send this lovely dress on approval. I'll pay postman $7.98 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. If not delighted, I may return dress for refund within ten days. If prepaid, we pay postage. In New York City add 2% Sales Tax.

Size	First Color Choice	Second Color Choice	IE

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE_____ STATE_____

The Birds and the Bees: Jeanette MacDonald can take only so much from a boorish ex-husband, a career and three lively daughters (Ann Todd, Jane Powell and Mary E. Donahue). But J. Iturbi helps.

THE BIRDS AND THE BEES

You'll be perfectly safe in taking your kid sister, whose education hasn't progressed beyond the birds and the bees, to this one. Sex never once rears its ugly head, although two marriages and three children constitute a vital part of the plot. The romantic interest is supplied by Jeanette MacDonald and Jose Iturbi.

The children are pleasant youngsters, and the oldest, played by Jane Powell, sings like the well known nightingale. What happens goes something like this:

Louise Morgan (Jeanette MacDonald) career woman, faints from overwork, and her doctor solicitously recommends a long cruise. "By yourself," he adds emphatically, having had some experience with the three daughters. They are, he admits, very sweet, but not exactly restful.

So he breaks the news to Tess (Jane Powell), Ilka (Ann Todd), and Alix (Mary Eleanor Donahue) that their mother has had a nervous breakdown and must go away for a while. They are angelic about it.

But no sooner does Mummy get off on the cruise than the little dears start cooking up a scheme to "bring Daddy back." It seems that Mummy has divorced Daddy when they were all very small, and they think of him as a combined Sir Galahad and General Eisenhower. Actually, he was a louse of the first water and Mummy couldn't have been gladder to get rid of him, but she's never told them that.

Meanwhile, Mummy is on the high seas, being wooed with red roses and champagne by none other than Jose Iturbi. In Cuba, she agrees to marry him, and after a quick ceremony, they fly back to surprise the kiddies. The kiddies, of course, are all ready to surprise Mummy with Daddy! It gets pretty involved, as you can imagine.

The music is lovely.—M-G-M

THE FLAME

Why is it that on the screen one brother is always very, very good, while the other is very, very bad? You'd think that at least that would make it easier for the beautiful heroine to pick the good one. Unfortunately, she always falls in love with the bad one, first.

That's not at all a bright idea in the case of brothers George (John Carroll) and Barry (Robert Paige) MacAllister. Carlotta (Vera Ralston) should know that a man like George, who could deliberately plan her marriage to his dying brother in the hope of cashing in on her inheritance as a widow, is hardly a desirable character. But love is blind, and apparently a little deaf, too, so she goes ahead with the scheme.

She takes a position as nurse to Barry, who has no idea that she has so much as met his brother. Barry has a bad heart, and the doctor (Henry Travers) gives him only a couple of months to live. Carlotta, lovely to look at, and following George's Machiavellian plans, has no trouble making Barry propose to her.

The trouble starts afterward. Because Carlotta finds that her new husband is tender and understanding and faithful—in fact, all the things that George is not. Before long, she is in love with him and realizes that what she felt for George was a crazy infatuation with no real foundation. She even tries to tell Barry the whole truth, but he stops her gently. "Your past is your own, Carlotta. The future is ours—however little of it there may be."

Actually, Barry is stronger, healthier since his marriage. It begins to seem quite possible that he won't die, after all. It is George who is miserable now. He has not only lost Carlotta but is being blackmailed by a nasty specimen named Ernie (Broderick Crawford).

It seems Ernie and George share a girl friend, Helene (Constance Dowling), and now Ernie plans on their sharing the MacAllister fortune.

The solution to this dilemma comes from a sudden and not very consistent change in character. I doubt if you'll be convinced. I wasn't.—Rep.

(Continued on page 20)

Which Twin has the Toni?

(And which had her permanent at a beauty shop? No one could tell the Ring twins' permanents apart — can you? See the answer below!)

See how easy it is to give yourself a lovely TONI Home Permanent for your date tonight

Soft, smooth, natural-looking curls and waves. Yes a Toni is truly lovely. But, before you try TONI, you will want to know —

Will TONI work on my hair?
Yes, Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?
Easy as rolling your hair up on curlers. That's why every hour of the day another thousand women use Toni.

Will TONI save me time?
Definitely. The actual waving time is only 2 to 3 hours. And during that time you are free to do whatever you want.

How long will my TONI wave last?
Your Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 beauty shop permanent — or your money back.

Why is TONI a creme?
Because Toni Creme Waving Lotion waves the hair gently — leaves it soft as silk with no frizziness, no dried-out brittleness even on the first day.

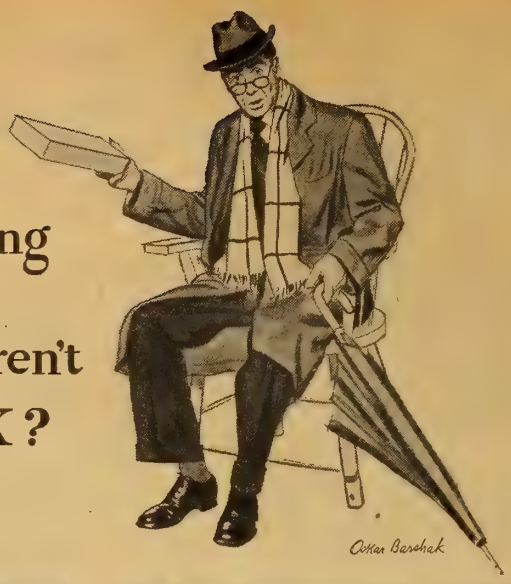
How much will I save with TONI?
The Toni Home Permanent Kit with reusable plastic curlers costs only $2 . . . with handy fiber curlers only $1.25. The Toni Refill Kit complete except for curlers is just $1. (All prices plus tax. Prices slightly higher in Canada.)

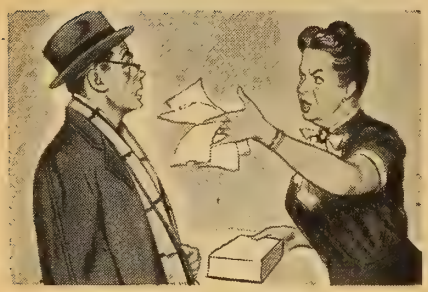
Which is the TONI Twin?
Kathleene, at the right, has the TONI. Ask for Toni today. On sale at all leading drug, notions or cosmetic counters.

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

Toni
HOME PERMANENT
THE CREME COLD WAVE

Are you trying to tell me All tissues aren't KLEENEX?





Homer, how can a mind like yours get so confused? — chided my wife. I've always told you Kleenex and ordinary tissues aren't the same! Why, even the Kleenex box is different. It serves up tissues — saves time and trouble. I want Kleenex — there's no other like it!

PreCISELY! echoed Dean Doolittle. My dear colleague, Kleenex is one species of tissue — not a term for tissues as a group! Indeed, I find Kleenex most soothing for that (ahem!) sniffling condition which accompanies a cold. In short, there is only one Kleenex!

Brain Boy, you're slipping! my sister admonished me. I'm a teacher, too, but in my book — Kleenex means just one brand of tissues. Nice, soft tissues — to remove my face cream gently! But do you remember to ask for Kleenex? No. You mumble "tissues." As if my skin wouldn't know the difference!

Why be a guesser, Professor? said my nephew. Just hold this Kleenex tissue to a light. See any lumps, or weak spots? Ixnay! You see Kleenex quality smilin' through — always the same — so you're sure Kleenex must be a softie, but tough enough for any Joe Blow! Your eyes tell you there's only one Kleenex!

Lucky I learned...There is only one KLEENEX

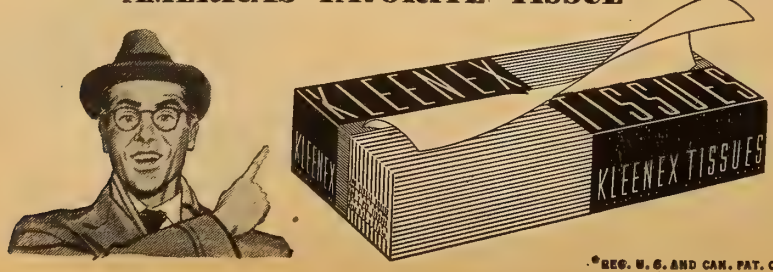
AMERICA'S FAVORITE TISSUE



*REG. U. S. AND CAN. PAT. OFF.

Secret Beyond The Door: M. Redgrave won't give J. Bennett the key to the seventh room.

THE SECRET BEYOND THE DOOR

You meet a man; you fall in love with him, you marry him. You know his name, his business, what he likes to eat and drink. But although he's your husband, he's a stranger.

That, at least, is the way it happens to Celia Barrett (Joan Bennett). When her brother, Rick, dies, she goes to Mexico with some friends. Anything to start a new life for herself, since she has no family left.

She sees Mark Lamphere (Michael Redgrave) first during a Mexican alley fight. Somehow, when their eyes meet, she knows he has recognized the crazy, primitive feeling that grips her during the fight. They meet later in a cafe and she seems to be under a curious spell. She has thought she was in love before, but it never felt like this. Nothing in all the world ever felt like this . . .

So Celia and Mark are married. Instead of living in New York as Celia had expected, they go to a small town on the Hudson where the Lamphere family has always lived. Mark stops off on business in New York, so Celia sees Lamphere House first alone. Oh, accompanied, of course, by Carrie (Anne Revere), Mark's sister, but that is hardly the same thing. Carrie is almost ghost-like in some ways.

When Mark arrives, he, too, seems changed. Moody, black with anger or despair half the time over some trifle, he isn't anything like the charming man she married. The scent of lilacs or the sound of a key turning in a lock is enough to throw him into a rage.

Then, there is his collection of six secret rooms—each one an exact copy of a room where a murder took place. And the seventh room, she finds, one day, is the eeriest of all.—Univ.-Int.

BLACK GOLD

You've seen plenty of American Indians on the screen. Usually, they've been all done up in warpaint by the Westmore brothers, and have been scalping people like crazy. Now, for a change, we have an Indian who may bear some faint resemblance to the real thing. He is Charley Eagle (Anthony Quinn). The time is the 1920's, which may explain why there are no tomahawks around.

Charley is off on one of his periodic hunting trips, when he finds a small Chinese boy, Davey (Ducky Louie), cowering behind a bush near the Mexican border. It seems that Davey's father has just been shot, after being smuggled into this country, and Davey is expecting the same fate.

Black Gold: Kate De Mille tells Anthony Quinn of the problems their adopted son must face.

Charley takes the boy home with him to his mission-trained wife, Sarah (Katherine De Mille). Young Davey isn't quite sure how he'll be received, but Charley has no doubts. "Indian wife do as husband say," is his theory, and it seems to work.

Anyway, Sarah welcomes Davey cordially to her trim white cottage and neat garden. When he has difficulty at school with boys who yell, "Chink, chink, chinaman!" in the traditional manner, Charley and Sarah adopt him. That gives him confidence enough to fight when necessary, to ride a horse, to do anything his new parents want him to.

Charley Eagle has one passionate interest—horses. His mare, Black Hope, is the joy of his life. When an oil well comes in on his property, the first thing Charley does is breed Black Hope to an expensive stallion. The resulting colt, Black Gold, is entered in the Kentucky Derby.

But Charley has been hurt in an accident and will never live to see the Derby. He hires a trainer for the colt, and asks him also to teach young Davey to become a jockey. It is a matter of racing history that a colt named Black Gold won the Kentucky Derby in 1924. The rest may not be history, but it makes an interesting picture, in Cinecolor.—Mono.

MAGIC TOWN

If you believe in magic, you may believe in Magic Town. You will certainly believe in Jimmy Stewart as Rip Smith, ex-army captain and famous basketball player.

Rip, it seems, hasn't been doing so well since he got out of the army. He's been running a poll-taking service, but public opinion polls are tricky things, and Rip's results have been inaccurate.

Then something happens. Rip hears of a little town called Grandview where, for some crazy reason, the opinions of the townspeople coincide to the last decimal with the national polls. It's a gold mine for a guy like Rip, if he can keep anyone from finding out about it. Instead of knocking his brains

You've picked a perfect silent partner, Honey. Mum not only protects your work-a-day charm, but keeps you sweet and dainty after hours, too.

It's foolish for any girl to take chances with underarm odor. A bath washes away past perspiration, but Mum prevents risk of future offense.

Be a safety-first girl with

MUM
BRISTOL-MYERS CO. NEW YORK, N.Y.
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safe for charm — Mum checks perspiration odor, keeps underarms dainty all day or evening.

Mum safe for skin — No irritating crystals. Snow-white Mum is gentle, harmless to skin.

Mum safe for clothes — No harsh ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

"When Acid Indigestion sets me all a-twitter, Tums set me right"

Says BILLIE BURKE — Beloved Hollywood Actress

"Fluttery stomach and a smooth performance just don't go together. So when I suffer acid indigestion, I reach for Tums. Their relief is sweet—and fast!"

When acid indigestion hits you, get almost instant relief with Tums. And when it won't let you sleep, don't count sheep—count on Tums for a refreshing night's rest. There's nothing surer, nothing faster! Tums not only neutralize excess acid almost instantly — Tums coat the stomach with protective medication, so relief is more prolonged. Tums sweeten sour stomach. Relieve that bloated feeling, gas and heartburn jiffy-quick. Tums contain no soda—no raw, harsh alkali—so Tums won't overalkalize and irritate your delicate stomach. Tums are handy, too—no mixing, no water needed. Never overalkalize, always neutralize excess acidity with Tums. Get Tums today — genuine Tums for the tummy!

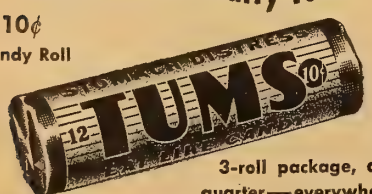
Night and day, at home or away, always carry Tums!

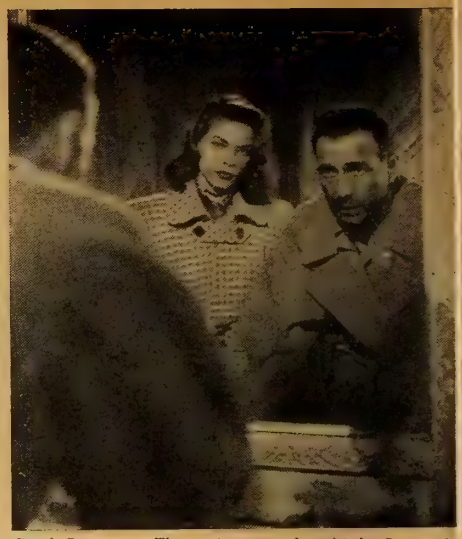
10¢ Handy Roll



3-roll package, a quarter—everywhere

TUMS ARE ANTACID—not a laxative. For a laxative, use mild, dependable, all-vegetable NR (Nature's Remedy). Caution: Take only as directed. Get a 25c box today.

Magic Town: Maybe he can impress the whole town, but Jim Stewart can't fool Jane Wyman.



Dark Passage: The only one who thinks Bogart's innocent of murder is the mysterious Bacall.

out asking questions all over the country, he only has to find out what Grandview thinks.

So he and his assistants, Ike (Ned Sparks) and Mr. Twiddle (Donald Meek), come to Grandview, pretending to be insurance agents. Only to find that a girl named Mary Peterman (Jane Wyman) is trying to make the town over. Yes, sir! Wants them to build a new school and a hospital and heaven knows what all, in the name of progress.

Rip sees immediately that this would be apt to change several decimal points in his new undertaking. He makes a charming, sentimental speech to the city council, all about their ideal American town, and what a bad thing change is for a community. To Mary's disgust, they go for it and her plan is thrown out.

Rip does everything he can, including coaching the High School basketball team, to become a respected citizen. Then Mary finds out his real identity, and the story of Grandview as the poll spot of the country hits the papers. What happens after that will surprise you.—RKO

DARK PASSAGE

Bogart and Bacall are together again, in as exciting a tale of murder as you'll find on any screen. It begins when Vincent Parry (Humphrey Bogart) escapes from San Quentin prison, where he is serving a life sentence for the murder of his wife. His chance of getting away is about one in a hundred and he knows it. What he doesn't know is that a blonde girl with a wide, beautiful mouth and a mind of her own, is going to supply that chance.

Irene Jansen (Lauren Bacall) doesn't know Parry, but she attended his trial and she's sure he's innocent of murder. It's half Fate and half telepathy that makes her come driving along just in time to get Parry into San Francisco through the police barriers.

She takes him to her apartment, brings him new clothes. She tells him he can stay there safely, but Parry insists on going to his best friend, George (Rory Mallinson). He isn't sure whether he can really trust this long-eyed blonde, in spite of her protestations. After all, she admits, herself, that she knows Madge Rapp (Agnes Moorehead) who was the chief witness against Parry at his trial.

So, at midnight, the man whom half of San Francisco is searching for, hails a taxi. And thereby becomes another man entirely. Because the taxi driver recognizes him, but instead of turning him over to the police, takes him to a plastic surgeon. When Parry emerges, swathed in bandages, his face is completely changed. Only the eyes, and the deadly purpose behind them, are the same. That purpose is to find the person who really murdered his wife.

Parry starts once more for George's. But now he is too late. Murder has flamed again through the night, and this time the police are convinced he's guilty. Everyone is, except one girl—Irene.—War.

UNFINISHED DANCE

If you are a devotee of the ballet, or of Margaret O'Brien, you will probably be charmed with Unfinished Dance. It is staged in the expensive M-G-M tradition, with Cyd Charisse doing most of the professional ballet work.

Little Meg Merlin (Margaret O'Brien) is so crazy about the ballet that sometimes she even forgets to go to ballet school. That sounds like a contradiction in terms, but it really isn't. The reason she forgets is because she's busy watching Mlle. Bouchet (Cyd Charisse), première ballerina of the company. Mlle. Bouchet is aware of, and rather amused by, the child's adoration. She doesn't take it seriously but then, she doesn't take anything seriously.

Even her career isn't as vital to her as it is to most ballerinas. There is Fred (Charles Bradstreet), who wants her to marry him—and Fred has a great deal of money. It would mean security and pleasure and no more work and worrying.

Just the same, Mlle. Bouchet is furious when word gets around that La Darina (Karen Booth), one of the greatest ballerinas in the world, is to be brought to the company for

(Continued on page 95)

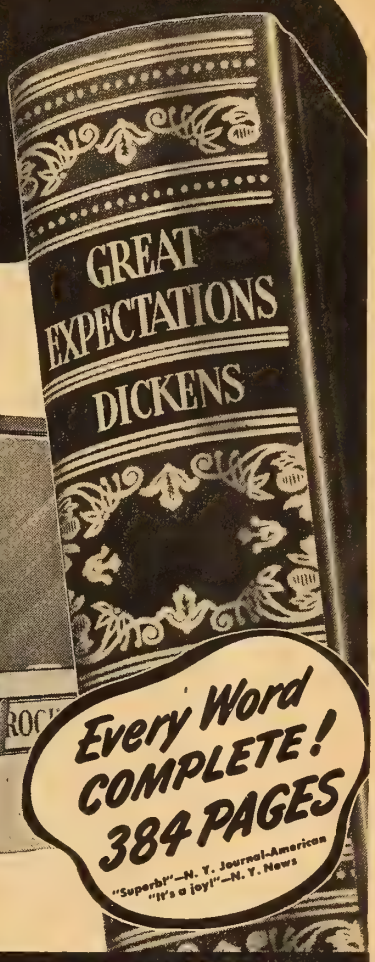
FOR ONLY 10¢

YOU MAY HAVE THIS GREAT NEW MOVIE-HIT NOVEL!

It's True! JUST SEND A DIME TO HELP COVER SHIPPING COSTS! NOTHING TO JOIN! NO OBLIGATION OF ANY KIND! BOOK IS YOURS TO KEEP!



To Show You How Easily You Can Get More Out of Your Movie-Going—

LET US SEND YOU "GREAT EXPECTATIONS"—THE HEART-WARMING NOVEL NOW A SMASH-HIT MOTION PICTURE FROM COAST-TO-COAST!

HERE is one of the most exciting characters ever to come from the gifted pen of CHARLES DICKENS — the penniless orphan Pip, whose mysterious benefactor made him the richest young gentleman in London!

Pip's fantastic adventures began—unexpectedly enough—on a dank and foggy marsh, where the grim figure of Magwitch, the convict, suddenly loomed out of the mist and grabbed the terrorized boy! It was a meeting which scared Pip out of his wits—but it also was the beginning of a drama which only the genius of Dickens could have conceived.

Millions have been thrilled by this intensely human story—millions more are right now enjoying the motion picture version which critics are raving about!

The N. Y. Times calls it "Perfect"! The N. Y. Herald Tribune says: "Irresistible entertainment!" "Superb, brilliant, delightful, enchanting!" raves the N. Y. News. Read below how YOU may have a copy of Great Expectations free, with no strings attached!

Scenes from film, Great Expectations, starring John Mills, Valerie Hobson. A J. Arthur Rank presentation; a Universal-International release.

Every Word COMPLETE! 384 PAGES

"Superb!"—N. Y. Journal-American
"It's a joy!"—N. Y. News

Why You Are Offered "GREAT EXPECTATIONS" to Keep as an Outright Gift

WE want to GIVE YOU a freshly-printed copy of "Great Expectations" — without any obligation on your part to buy or join anything. We merely want you to know how you can get more out of your movie-going by reading the nationally-popular books upon which many motion picture hits are based.

You get this splendid movie-hit novel of romantic adventure in return for nothing more than your name and address . . . so that we can mail to you some literature about an amazing TWO-WAY family entertainment plan now being offered by one of the nation's leading Book Clubs, which we represent.

You Get the WHOLE STORY in a Book!

As a movie-goer, how many times have you felt that the limitations of the screen have made it IMPOSSIBLE for the picture producer to tell the whole story — as the author wrote it? Maybe you have felt that the movie version lacked something—was somehow incomplete and expurgated. How many times you have heard your friends say of a movie: "It was good—but the book was better!"

We want to make it possible for you to get these famous books at substantial savings, while (and even before) they are screen hits!

You are NOT Obligated in Any Way!

That's why you are being offered "Great Expectations" FREE! With this fine novel—which recently was released as a major screen hit with a sensational premiere at New York's Radio City Music Hall—we will mail descriptive literature about the Book Club, which you may join IF YOU WANT TO. HOWEVER, it is distinctly understood that you will be under absolutely NO OBLIGATION to join, unless you so desire. The free copy of "Great Expectations" is YOURS TO KEEP, whatever your decision may be.

Send for FREE BOOK Now

To get your free book, just send us your name and address on the coupon at right—and enclose only 10c to help cover part of the actual costs of packing, handling and shipping "Great Expectations" to you. BOOK CLUB ASSOCIATES, Dept. MM-11, Garden City, N. Y.

Accept This Book FREE!
You Do Not Obligate Yourself IN ANY WAY
Mail This Coupon Now!

Mail Coupon to:
BOOK CLUB ASSOCIATES,
Dept. MM-11, Garden City, N. Y.

YES . . . I would like to have a copy of "Great Expectations" FREE! I understand that all you ask me to enclose with this coupon is ten cents to help cover part of the actual costs of packing, handling, and shipping this big, 384-page book to me.

With my free book, you will send me literature describing a nationally-famous Book Club which I may join if I want to—and thus be privileged to receive OTHER nationally popular novels which are enjoyed by millions of movie-goers.

HOWEVER, I am under absolutely no obligation to join, and "Great Expectations" is mine to keep in any event.

MR. }
MRS. } .....
MISS }
(Please Print Plainly)

ADDRESS.....

Zone No.
(if any)..... STATE.....

Age, please
Occupation.....if under 21.....

(Please wrap your 10c coin enclosure in a piece of paper.)

out of unhappiness . . .

A lonely woman, lost—that was Hedy. Tired of her beauty. But Mark showed her a whole new world, where people laughed, and danced, and fell in love . . .

by florabel muir

special modern screen reporter

■ You've never seen anything like the change a few short months have made in Hedy Lamarr. Only time will tell for sure whether it's a new romance which has brought about this happy result, because neither Hedy nor Mark Stevens is saying anything definite. They can't, naturally. For, though Hedy has won her freedom from John Loder, the separation of Mark and Annelle Stevens is still so new that Hollywood tongues haven't yet ceased wagging about its cause and origin.

All I know is that it looks and sounds like the romance both Hedy and Mark have been waiting for. Not only are they two very nice and pleasant people, but they've had their flings at trial and error in marriage. It isn't always easy to maintain poise under the glare that focuses on Hollywood romances. These two are facing that difficult situation with dignity and frankness. Hedy tells you honestly that she feels she's just begun to live again. Mark is more guarded, as is only natural under the circumstances.

However, the fact that he spent every possible moment with Hedy, while he was busy with a trying role in 20th Century-Fox's The Snake Pit is actually all the answer one needs. Whenever he was free, he rushed up to Lake Tahoe (Continued on page 77)

10,000 Times More Beautiful Than Lipstick!

THIS WONDERFUL NEW WAY TO COLOR LIPS

Not Greasy—Not Dry

Nothing on Your Lips at All But

Lovely, Smooth Color

SOMETHING very different and heavenly has been created! A completely new, much more attractive kind of beauty for your lips—beauty so exquisite, so perfect, there has never been anything like it and you'll never again be content with anything less eye-catching, less flattering. I have worked seven long years to perfect my LIPCOLOR principle of lip make-up. Now it is ready for you to enjoy.

So Very Different from 'Lipstick'

It looks like lipstick and you apply it like lipstick, but oh! how beautifully different it is! Imagine! With my LIPCOLORS your lips will no longer wear a thick, pasty coating. They will wear nothing but concentrated color that stays and stays and STAYS, never piling up, never caking—never, never, NEVER deserting your lips in patches. Just sheer, flattering beauty, and every minute of every hour—right thru cocktails—right thru dinner—your lips will look and feel very well dressed, and much softer, much smoother than ever before!

How to Discover Your Most Flattering Lipcolor

I have fashioned my 'LIPCOLORS' in seven really breath-taking shades. Read about them here, then ask to see the Lady Esther Lipcolor card at your favorite department or drug store. This card shows exactly how each Lady Esther Lipcolor will look on your own lips.

$1
TAX EXTRA

Lipcolors by Lady Esther

lovelier, by far, than lipstick

There are Seven Heavenly LIPCOLORS . . . STARDUST—For night only—startlingly beautiful on anyone under electric light... REDDER THAN—So clear, so very red! Oh, so provocative... STAR RUBY—An exquisite gem ruby hue sprinkled with the blue from sapphires . . . CRIMSON BRONZE—A quietly racey brown red that sings clearly but softly . . . BRIDAL PINK—The freshest, rosiest pink ever... MOONDUST—A soft fuchsia that gathers golden glamour under nighttime lights... COY SIREN—An audacious scarlet—with a disarming aire.

©1947 Lady Esther

It's cleaner, brighter Taste means cleaner, brighter teeth!

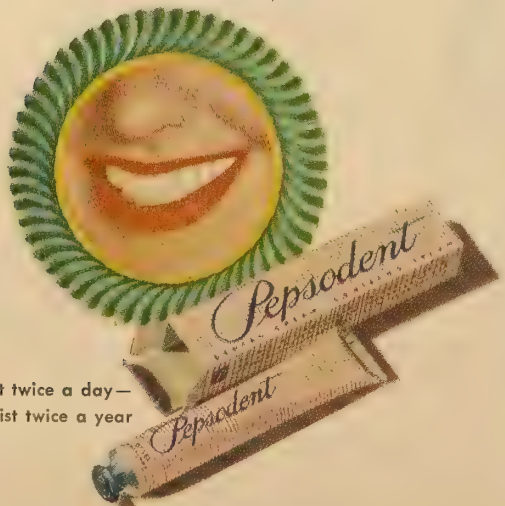
New Pepsodent,

the only tooth paste containing Irium, removes the film that makes your teeth look dull — uncovers the natural brilliance of your smile!



Use Pepsodent twice a day—
see your dentist twice a year

A Product of Lever Brothers Company

This is the story of a girl who got hers on a platter— the jewels, the flowers, the iced champagne . . . This is the story of a pocket Venus, with too many shoes, and not enough time, and hair as bright as the sun. Here is Lana, queen of an era!

GOLDEN GIRL

by kaaren pieck

In the magic world of America, where royalty often comes from Idaho, there appears once every era or so, a phenomenon known as the super-star.

This phenomenon is always dazzlingly beautiful. It is always female. And it is usually blonde.

A long time ago, before cheesecake took its place on the billboard and in our national life, it was a velvet-eyed darling with long, golden curls and ruffled petticoats.

That was Mary Pickford.

In the jazz age, it was a gay flapper with a wind-blown bob, knee-length skirts, and a voice like a tenor saxophone moaning the blues.

That was Clara Bow.

Later, it was a white-hot blonde with a Kansas City-British accent, a body as lush as a tropic night, and an aura of sex that could have been felt through a brick wall.

That was Jean Harlow.

Now, it is a voluptuous adolescent girl grown into a bold-eyed mature woman. A versatile Venus with hair that is blonde like wheat today, blonde like molasses taffy tomorrow

That is Lana Turner.

In a generation crowded with screen

(Continued on page 29)

Mervyn Leroy discovered Lana sipping a soda at Schwabs, while she was a Hollywood High senior. He gave her the role of the student in They Won't Forget, the film which made her the "Sweater Girl."

In 1938, Love found Andy Hardy, and Lana found that, like many othe stars (including Esther Williams, Donna Reed, Kathryn Grayson), this early Mickey Rooney film was a stepping stone to her key spot at Metro Lana's first chance at a dramatic role came with Ziegfeld Girl, opposite Jimmy Stewart. At the sneak preview, fans protested Lana's death so violently, a happier ending had to be substituted later.

"TNT" was how the studio hawked Turner 'n Taylor in Johnny Eager. The picture followed Ziegfeld Girl on Lana's 1941 schedule, and proved again that Lana had the makings of a fine actress. Van Heflin was in it, too!

The Gable-Turner combination was more box-office magic. Somewhere I'll Find You (with Bob Sterling, right) was a result of the success of Honkeytonk and Boomtown. They'll be reunited in Homecoming.

For The Postman Always Rings Twice (1946), Lana dyed her hair platinum, wore either all-white or all-black costumes. Her torrid beach scenes with John Garfield were too hot for the censors and had to be cut.

GOLDEN GIRL

GLAMOR: Lana's one of the few stars who knows exactly what's wanted of her in a portrait sitting. This well-known shot in the maribou negligee is a Turner cheese-cake classic.

CLOTHES: Lana's clothes play an important part in her career. Here, she consults with producer Carey Wilson, designers Walter Plunkett and Irene, on the 32 gowns she'll wear in Green Dolphin Street.

MOTHERHOOD: Daughter Cheryl has been the one abiding love in Lana's life. Once, on a New York vacation, Lana became so lonesome for her, she flew home to bring her back.

beauties, Lana Turner is the real queen of Hollywood. She is not the highest paid actress, nor even, by her own admission, the most competent. She has never won an Academy Award. She is not, by critical standards, the most beautiful. Yet, since she was first discovered sitting on a Hollywood malt shop stool, Lana Turner has completely personified glamor.

It is not merely her good looks, nor her torrid screen personality, nor her frank personal sex appeal that have brought Lana to her present position of glory. Rather, it is a combination of all these things—her entire effect as a woman, both on the (Continued on page 31)

Lana's marriage to second husband Steve Crane ended in 1944. Only happy result of that stormy union was daughter Cheryl, now 4, whom Lana actually spoils.

Lana's first. They say no girl has ever made bandleader Artie Shaw happy—and Lana was no exception. They continued dating, even after their divorce.

After Crane, Lana fell hard for Turhan Bey. Though she wore his ring, she hated to be photographed with him because usually he just sat and stared at her!

GOLDEN GIRL

From the first, Lana (hair much darker than today) was a party girl. One of her early dates was Henry Willson, Selznick exec.

Lana started going out with Bob Hutton shortly after his separation from Natalie Thompson, his first wife. Winchell called him "Lana's biggest thrill yet," but the romance soon died.

Tony Martin, who followed Greg Bautzer on Lana's heart-parade, was ultimately supplanted by Vic Mature. Curiously, both Vic and Tony later fell in love with Rita Hayworth.

Lana's always been an independent gal with her various escorts. George Raft, one of Hollywood's most popular swains, had one date with Lana—and never got another.

Something new has been added—a man who dominates Lana and makes her love it. That's why insiders are betting that this time Lana really means it when she says she loves Ty Power.

screen and off. It is the way she enters a room; the way she styles her hair, and the way she looks on a dance floor in a man's arms.

Lana has never disappointed her fans, nor Hollywood itself by failing to look the way a movie star is expected to look.

She's electric.

One afternoon in Seattle, when she was helping the sale of war bonds by kissing the purchasers, a young man bought a $1,500 bond, kissed Lana soundly, wahooed wildly and ran across the street to enlist in the U. S. Army. Many men, seeing Lana for the first time in a night club, in a preview crowd, have experienced (Continued on page 113)

tee for two

Golfing with a guy, you find out things; you take the measure of a man. And according to our Ed, Gable's a gent, a scholar, and a heck of a fellow with a hole in one!

Clark's getting tired of dressing-robe scenes and wants to do something rugged. He may get his chance in Homecoming. Meanwhile, he keeps in trim by playing below par golf with Bing Crosby and Ed Sullivan.

by ed sullivan

■ "Sure, it's been lonely for me," agreed Clark Gable. "Losing Carole left a gap in my life 1,000 miles wide; it was as though the best part of me died. It's been pretty tough since then."

He sipped at his Tom Collins.

"They say it never rains but it pours. On the plane with Carole was a very close friend of ours, Otto Winkler, who was assigned as my publicity man at M-G-M. I liked him tremendously, relied upon his advice and perception. He died with her. Then I had another friend, Harry Fleischmann. We used to go on fishing trips together. A few months later, he died, so there were three deaths within a space of a few months that wiped out the core of my existence. It hasn't been easy to reconstruct it, but I've done the best I knew how."

(Continued on page 123)

Ace guitarist Eddie Condon, the author of this story, backs Bing (of The Emperor Waltz) in a hot platter version of "After You've Gone."

■ It was a good blue and gold day in October, ideal for golf, and I called the Waldorf to put the bee on Crosby.

"Listen, fella," I said. "Today's the day, in case you've forgotten."

"Forgotten!" he bleated. "I'm sitting here memorizing the whole business in Latin, that's all; and reading up on the lives of the Saints into the bargain."

"Okay," I said. "See you later." Our second daughter, name of Liza, was being christened that afternoon, and Bing was to be her godfather. The christening hour approached, and Liza was done up fit to kill—and no Crosby.

"Nothing would do," Phil (that's my wife) was muttering. "You would have him for the godfather. All the charm in the world, that man, but no idea of time."

"He'll be here," I said. (Continued on page 121)

He almost didn't make it—because the doorman mistook him for an exterminator in that outfit—but Bing acted as godfather to Eddie's Liza, now 2. Mrs. Condon is on the left.

Photo by Jack Rollo

Love that man!

SINGING— THAT'S JUST A SIDE LINE WITH BING, WHO MAKES A CAREER OF HELPING GUYS WITH THE GOODS TO A HUNK OF THAT CROSBY STARDUST.

by Eddie Condon

Photo by Gjon Mili

The Condons' older daughter Maggie, who's 4, tried to give Bing some advice on phrasing a tune. He autographed this photo: "To my dear friend, Maggie. Keep my littlest boy in mind for later."

At Eddie Condon's Club, in Greenwich Village, restaurant man John Boggiano, Johnny Mercer, the host, and Bing recall the not-so-lush days of jazz. With Tom Sugrue, Eddie's written a book: "I Played Rhythm."

they won't forget

■ Larry Parks looked out over the tiers of faces, and said what he had to say.

"I especially wanted to be here tonight. This is something very close to my heart. My mother died of cancer. I want to do whatever I can to help."

It was Jo Stafford Day at Long Beach. Jo was putting on her broadcast for the Junior Chambers of Commerce, in convention assembled, and something

No one who was there that day will forget Larry's words: "I'm here because my mother died of cancer." Least of all, perhaps, Betty, who shares with him the memory of a gallant lady . . .

BY IDA ZEITLIN

At the age of one, Larry showed a marked talent for the use of "props"—like this straw hat. A new star of that day was Al Jolson.

Frank Parks hoped for a medical career for his only son. When he died in the mid-thirties, Larry was beating his fists against Broadway's closed doors.

Though ill, Mrs. Leona Parks encouraged Larry during the darkest days of The Jolson Story. She loved watching him work, and lived to see the finished picture. After her death last January, Larry plunged right into Down to Earth and The Swordsman.

new had been added. A show to raise money for the Runyon Memorial Cancer Fund. They'd asked Betty Garrett, Larry's wife, to sing. They'd asked Larry to make an appearance, say hello or something.

This was June. His mother had died in January. The wound was fresh, and he's not a guy to wear his heart on his sleeve. Saying hello or something would have been easy, but what good would it do? To lots of these people, cancer was something the other fellow got, it had never touched them—and Larry Parks was the guy who'd made The Jolson Story. If he could tell them his real reason for coming, it might drive the point home. Even one extra contribution would mean that he'd helped.

So he went out and told them. "I'm here because my mother died of cancer." And it helped.

His mother lived long enough to see The Jolson Story in a projection room at Columbia. They had to carry her upstairs, but illness didn't keep her from sitting enthralled to the end, nor from writing to Betty next day: "Oh, honey, are you going to be proud of your fella!"

That was a (Continued on page 72)

Anne clutched at John. "Darling," she said, "the engine fell out."

"Cutest little cockroach you ever saw."

The boatman had to hit it forty times with a baseball bat to kill it.

Holiday in Mexico

It's really fun here," she said. "I've convinced myself."

SOME FINE VACATION! THE HODIAKS RODE IN A TAXI WITHOUT A MOTOR, SWAM IN A POOL WITHOUT ANY WATER—AND NEARLY DROWNED IN A CAN OF FLIT!

By Christopher Kane

■ "Guaymas," John said with relish, stabbing at the map. "Ah, the fishing in Guaymas."

His wife gazed at him thoughtfully. "You don't know the first thing about Guaymas."

"I know there's good fishing," he cried. "Striped marlin—" He stopped. "That's swordfish, dear."

Dear sniffed. "Don't you patronize me!"

They were bickering amiably, because the prospect of a vacation together was almost too good, and they didn't quite trust it, and they were playing with it a little, tossing it up in the air, and worrying it.

John was through with Love From a Stranger; Anne had finished Blaze of Noon, and for once, there was time on their hands.

"Okay," she said. "Guaymas. "What do I wear in Mexico?"

"Not much," he said helpfully, lost in his map.

Five of them took off for Mexico together. There were Charles Wendling (Anne's agent) and his wife, Pat, and Keough Gleason, a set designer, (Continued on page 127)

"So help me, they're draining the pool!"

BREAKDOWN

While the Minnellis' personal plans remain indefinite, Judy's now well enough to make a movie. She collapsed during final days of The Pirate.

They whisper about Judy's collapse, but the story is simple. It is the story of a girl who climbed too far, too fast, and of a child without a childhood, and of a woman who is being born again.

by Hedda Hopper

■ The air is full of half-truths about Judy Garland.

They all started early in the summer when Judy very quietly slipped away from Hollywood, from her husband, Vincente Minnelli, and her baby daughter, Liza. Questions arose which stirred up a poisonous cloud of answers, most of them low, wide and on the far outside of the true story. They were questions you still hear today:

Where did she go?
What's the matter with her?
How could she stay away from her baby so long?
What about her husband?
What about her pictures?

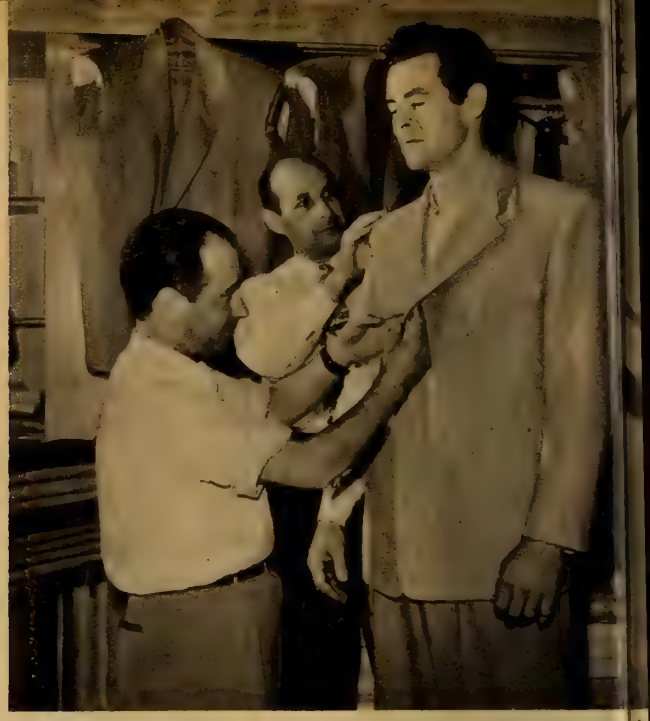
Well, the answers are simple enough, but they don't tell the whole story. In order to understand, you have to use the heart, as well as the ears.

Judy Garland left Hollywood because she was not only worn out physically; she was on the thin edge, emotionally. She knew that without proper (Continued on page 101)

Bob Ryan kept thinking of the kind of world he wanted for Jessica and Tim. And then, because he knew the answer, this gentle guy risked his own fame—to play a heel . . .

BY LYNN BOWERS

gentle heel



1. Bob got pretty excited when he learned he was being sent to Europe for Berlin Express, where he'll star opposite Merle Oberon. Two men rushed the job of completing his wardrobe.

4. The next stop before Europe was a drive-in, where Bob ate a hamburger with one eye on the clock. Then he was off to the studio to finish the last scene of Return of the Badmen.

■ Ryan made his way uncertainly down the main street of the studio lot. He'd had several too many. Shots, that is. For typhoid, for diphtheria, malaria, small pox. They were mixing merrily in his blood stream, but he was far from merry.

He was beat! Alongside of him a marble would look sharp.

He shook his head to clear it. He was due at the doctor's for a physical check-up. He had to see Publicity. And every so often, a little man popped out at him from behind a rock. He mustn't be startled—it was only Wardrobe fitting him for another outfit.

He had to buy clothes. He had to pack.

It was very exciting, except when one of those sickening pale grey waves of nausea hit him.

He left the lot to get his check-up. On the way he stopped for a hamburger, and eyed it tentatively, with a mixture of optimism and distaste.

"It is not," he remarked to the hamburger, "a good idea to start a trip to

2. Maybe Bob wouldn't have been in such a hurry to get to the doctor's office if he'd known what was waiting for him there. Shots! One after another until he began to feel like a Swiss cheese special.

3. Dr. Gourson waited for his heart to beat normally again before he began to listen. Bob looks a little apprehensive, but it seems he has a heart, after all, and plenty of space for it to expand in that Ryan chest.

5. At home, packing was made less of a problem by Bob's wife Jessica, but their 14-month-old son, Timothy, just wouldn't cooperate. He was all set to go along with his Dad—in a trunk.

6. Finally, Bob had to say goodbye to the bare-foot boy and Mrs. Ryan. He'll be gone only three months, but maybe when he gets back, Jessica will have started another mystery story and Timothy will be wearing shoes.

Europe on an empty stomach."

The next day he was to fly to New York, and from there to board the Queen Elizabeth, sailing for Southampton, and thereafter to proceed on the double for Berlin and RKO's Berlin Express.

Meanwhile, he wasn't exactly idle. He'd been mixing it with Randy Scott in some rugged fight scenes for Return of the Badmen, and he was going to have to strangle Anne Jeffreys before sundown.

"If," he thought, with due regard to the niceties, "I can just get a nap before I finish her off."

The European trip was to be something of a milestone for Robert and Jessica Ryan. Bob had rather diffidently broken the news that they'd be separated for three months.

"But it means a good part," he told her. "I'm going to be a very nice character in the picture."

Jess brightened. It hadn't been setting very well with her to see her gentle, rather shy, (Continued on page 111)

Gail Russell didn't mind at a bit when she learned her pal Diana Lynn would star opposite Guy Madison in La Jolla's Dear Ruth

"the play's the thing"

Peck, Madison, Lynn—big stars shine in today's little theaters. For kleig lights were never so warm as the sound of live laughter, or muffled tears.

■ People have some funny ideas about Little Theater.

If it's straw-hat, summer circuit stuff, they've got it figured that you go sit on a piece of splintered board, and snicker when the flats fall on the actors, who are all poor incompetent creatures left over from a rummage sale at the Ladies' Aid.

If it's stock company stuff, they've got it figured that the leading man is eighty years old, pure ham, and corn-fed. Corn whiskey.

But kids, those days are gone. Stock troupes and summer theaters are responsible for some of the finest experimental work being done on the stage today. They use new authors, new ideas that Broadway isn't willing to spend money testing. And in California, they're big business.

At Laguna Beach, an hour and a half out of Hollywood, there's a group called the Gryphon Players, headed by John Meredyth Lucas. He's a very fussy fellow, and he spends half his time saying "no" to people who offer him dollars in exchange for parts.

The Playhouse at Laguna wasn't the Music Hall, but there were any number of anxious young drama students glad to pay for the privilege of scrubbing the floors, and painting the walls, so it's looking good these days. (Continued on page 109)

"Hey, look," Diana smiles at her co-star. "We're legitimate thea-tah actors!" Guy prepared for his role by watching every available stock company.

At lunch, Guy talks over a scene with director Mel Ferrer. The Playhouse at La Jolla is really the high school auditorium, taken over by The Actors' Co.

In order to enjoy the benefits of the sun, rehearsals are held on the beach. Below, Diana and Guy wind up the scene on the stage of the auditorium.

(more pictures on following page)

1

2

3

4

"the play's the thing"

1. At the Coronet Theater, Hurd Hatfield and Carol Stone revived Skin of Our Teeth, which starred Fred March and Tallulah Bankhead on Broadway.

2. The Gryphon Players opened their gala Laguna Playhouse season with Ruth Hussey and Don DeFore in Dream Girl. Betty Hutton's in the movie version.

3. Another Laguna production was Of Mice and Men. It had Barbara Reed and Lon Chaney, Jr., in his famous Lenny role. Dane Clark starred as George.

4. Charles Korvin and Janis Paige do the "bundling" scene from Pursuit of Happiness. During rehearsal week, Janis worked as usher for the Gryphons.

5. Janis, a good joe, spent part of each day with the apprentices. College drama grads, they do the dirty work, seldom get more than a walk-on role.

6. Keenan Wynn and Hurd Hatfield applied their own makeup for Skin of Our Teeth. Two enthusiasts in the audience were Mr. and Mrs. Van Johnson!

7. Most of the students live together at a boarding house near the beach. They bring their lunch, as room and board are not included in the tuition.

8. Mel Ferrer and Greg Peck, two La Jolla Players execs, go over seating plans with Dick Whorf, who directed the company's opener, Night Must Fall.

9. For the third act of Skin, Jane Wyatt was lowered into the cellar, from which she emerged through a trap door. She always took a lantern with her.

10. Dotty McGuire, of Gentleman's Agreement, asked director Alf Hitchcock for advice on possible plays. His daughter, Pat, appeared in Dear Ruth.

11. Every morning, before the rest of the Pursuit of Happiness cast assembled, Charles and Janis would run through their lines on the beach.

South America—take it away!

"THEY LOVE ME DOWN THERE," CRACKS BOB HOPE. "THEY LET ME PLAY GOLF WITH THE MONKEYS, MY WIFE GETS ALL THE ENCORES, AND MY GAGS PULL YAKS— FOR THE INTERPRETER!"

by Bill Graffis

Jerry Colonna watches Bob whittle away the time on the Paleface set. Hope plays the role of a dentist, but he wasn't very helpful the first day of work, when he had to have a tooth yanked.

Linda and Tony are on the look-out for their Mom at the Rio de Janeiro Airport. Bob and Fred Myron, his interpreter, bring up the rear. They flew to Buenos Aires, where they celebrated July 4th.

Tony, Dolores, Linda and Bob look cozy here, tho for a while it appeared as though Hope's future career would be confined to the Brazilian jungle. But, when transportation failed on the return trip, the Navy came to their rescue.

Back in New York, Bob tried to convince the customs' agent that he whipped up this little alligator number himself, from something he caught in the tropical swamps, but he had to pay duty, anyway—and not in toothpaste.

■ Hope smiled at his wife, Dolores, and son Tony, patted his daughter, Linda, reassuringly on the arm, and sank back in his plane seat, relaxed.

This trip to South America, a five-week, 20,000-mile tour of Puerto Rico, Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, Chile, Pêru, Colombia, Panama, and the Canal Zone—it was different from the million miles he'd traveled to entertain troops. It was a rest, for one thing. And Tony and Linda were bug-eyed and excited about the whole venture.

The plane droned on, and Bob slept until they reached a spot just off the coast of South America. Then, an air-pocket jarred him awake. He came to in time to see the captain of the ship chasing Tony down the aisle, trying to retrieve his cap. Tony had borrowed it from the pilot's compartment to play with.

Hope is still looking for the gentleman on the plane who warned him against stopping at Belem. He said the town's best hotel was so lousy that its cockroaches lived somewhere else.

But what he couldn't tell the Hopes was that the entire town of Belem had staged a big celebration in their honor. The mayor, the district governor, the various members of the legations were lined up in the public square waiting for the Hopes. Even jungle Indians had sailed their boats, loaded with snake skins, orchids, diamonds and miscellaneous gifts, down the Amazon to Belem.

"I wanted to punt myself over the nearest palm," claims Bob. "When the kids discovered my big mistake, I heard Linda tell Tony, 'Daddy really blew that deal.'"

About an hour before their plane landed in Rio, a little man staggered up the aisle to where Bob was sitting and asked, "Would you go on the Rio radio for me?"

"I sized this guy up," says Bob, "for a huckster, and told him he was off his bonnet. I was resting."

When the plane landed at Rio, a tremendous crowd was at the airport. A military guard of honor was lined up along the field, and the members of Brazil's finest band were blowing their lungs out.

Hope stepped out, and blew a tremendous kiss at the (Continued on page 105)

■ Last fall, she was in a mood like this: she didn't want to meet anybody.

She'd been working, and dating, and getting too tired, and after all, what for? The rings on the merry-go-round are only brass.

Mona and Pat Nerney called her up. "There's a cute boy from Texas—name's Neal—"

"Thank you," she said. "I don't want to meet anybody."

She gave so many people that routine, they were thinking of getting together and putting it to music.

Then she went to a John Frederics show with Stella Roach, the Paramount fashion lady.

When they came out, Stella said, "My feet hurt. How about a cup of tea at Romanoff's?"

They were sitting in one of the little curved booths, when a friend approached. "Diana, there's a boy over here who wants to meet you."

The boy came forward, and the friend made the introduction. "Miss Lynn, Mr. Neal."

Miss Lynn batted her big blue eyes. "Not the Mr. Neal, of Texas, about whom I've heard so much?"

He saw right through her. That was the first shock. She wasn't going to make a fool of him. "Would you like to have dinner with me?" he said shortly.

"No," she said, even more shortly.

He went away, and Stella said dreamily, "He's awful cute."

"You have dinner with him," said Diana meanly.

The next time she saw Neal, (Continued on page 118)

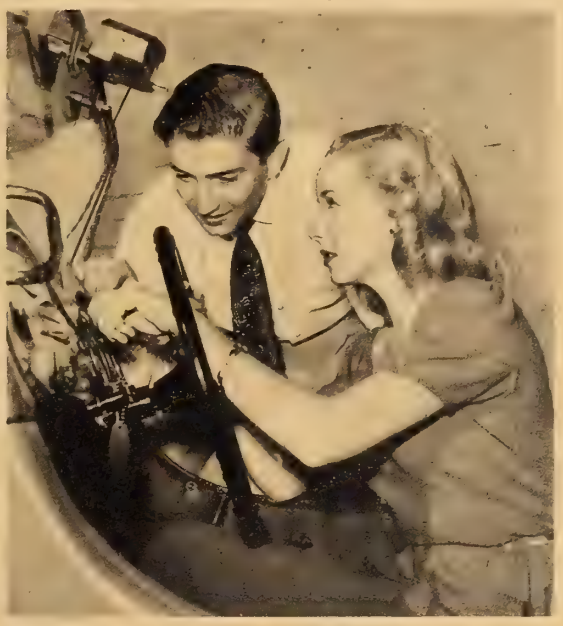
she never had it so good

Texan Bob Neal hides her third finger—so it's still guesswork about their engagement. But after she finishes Variety Girl and Prelude To Night, Diana might talk.

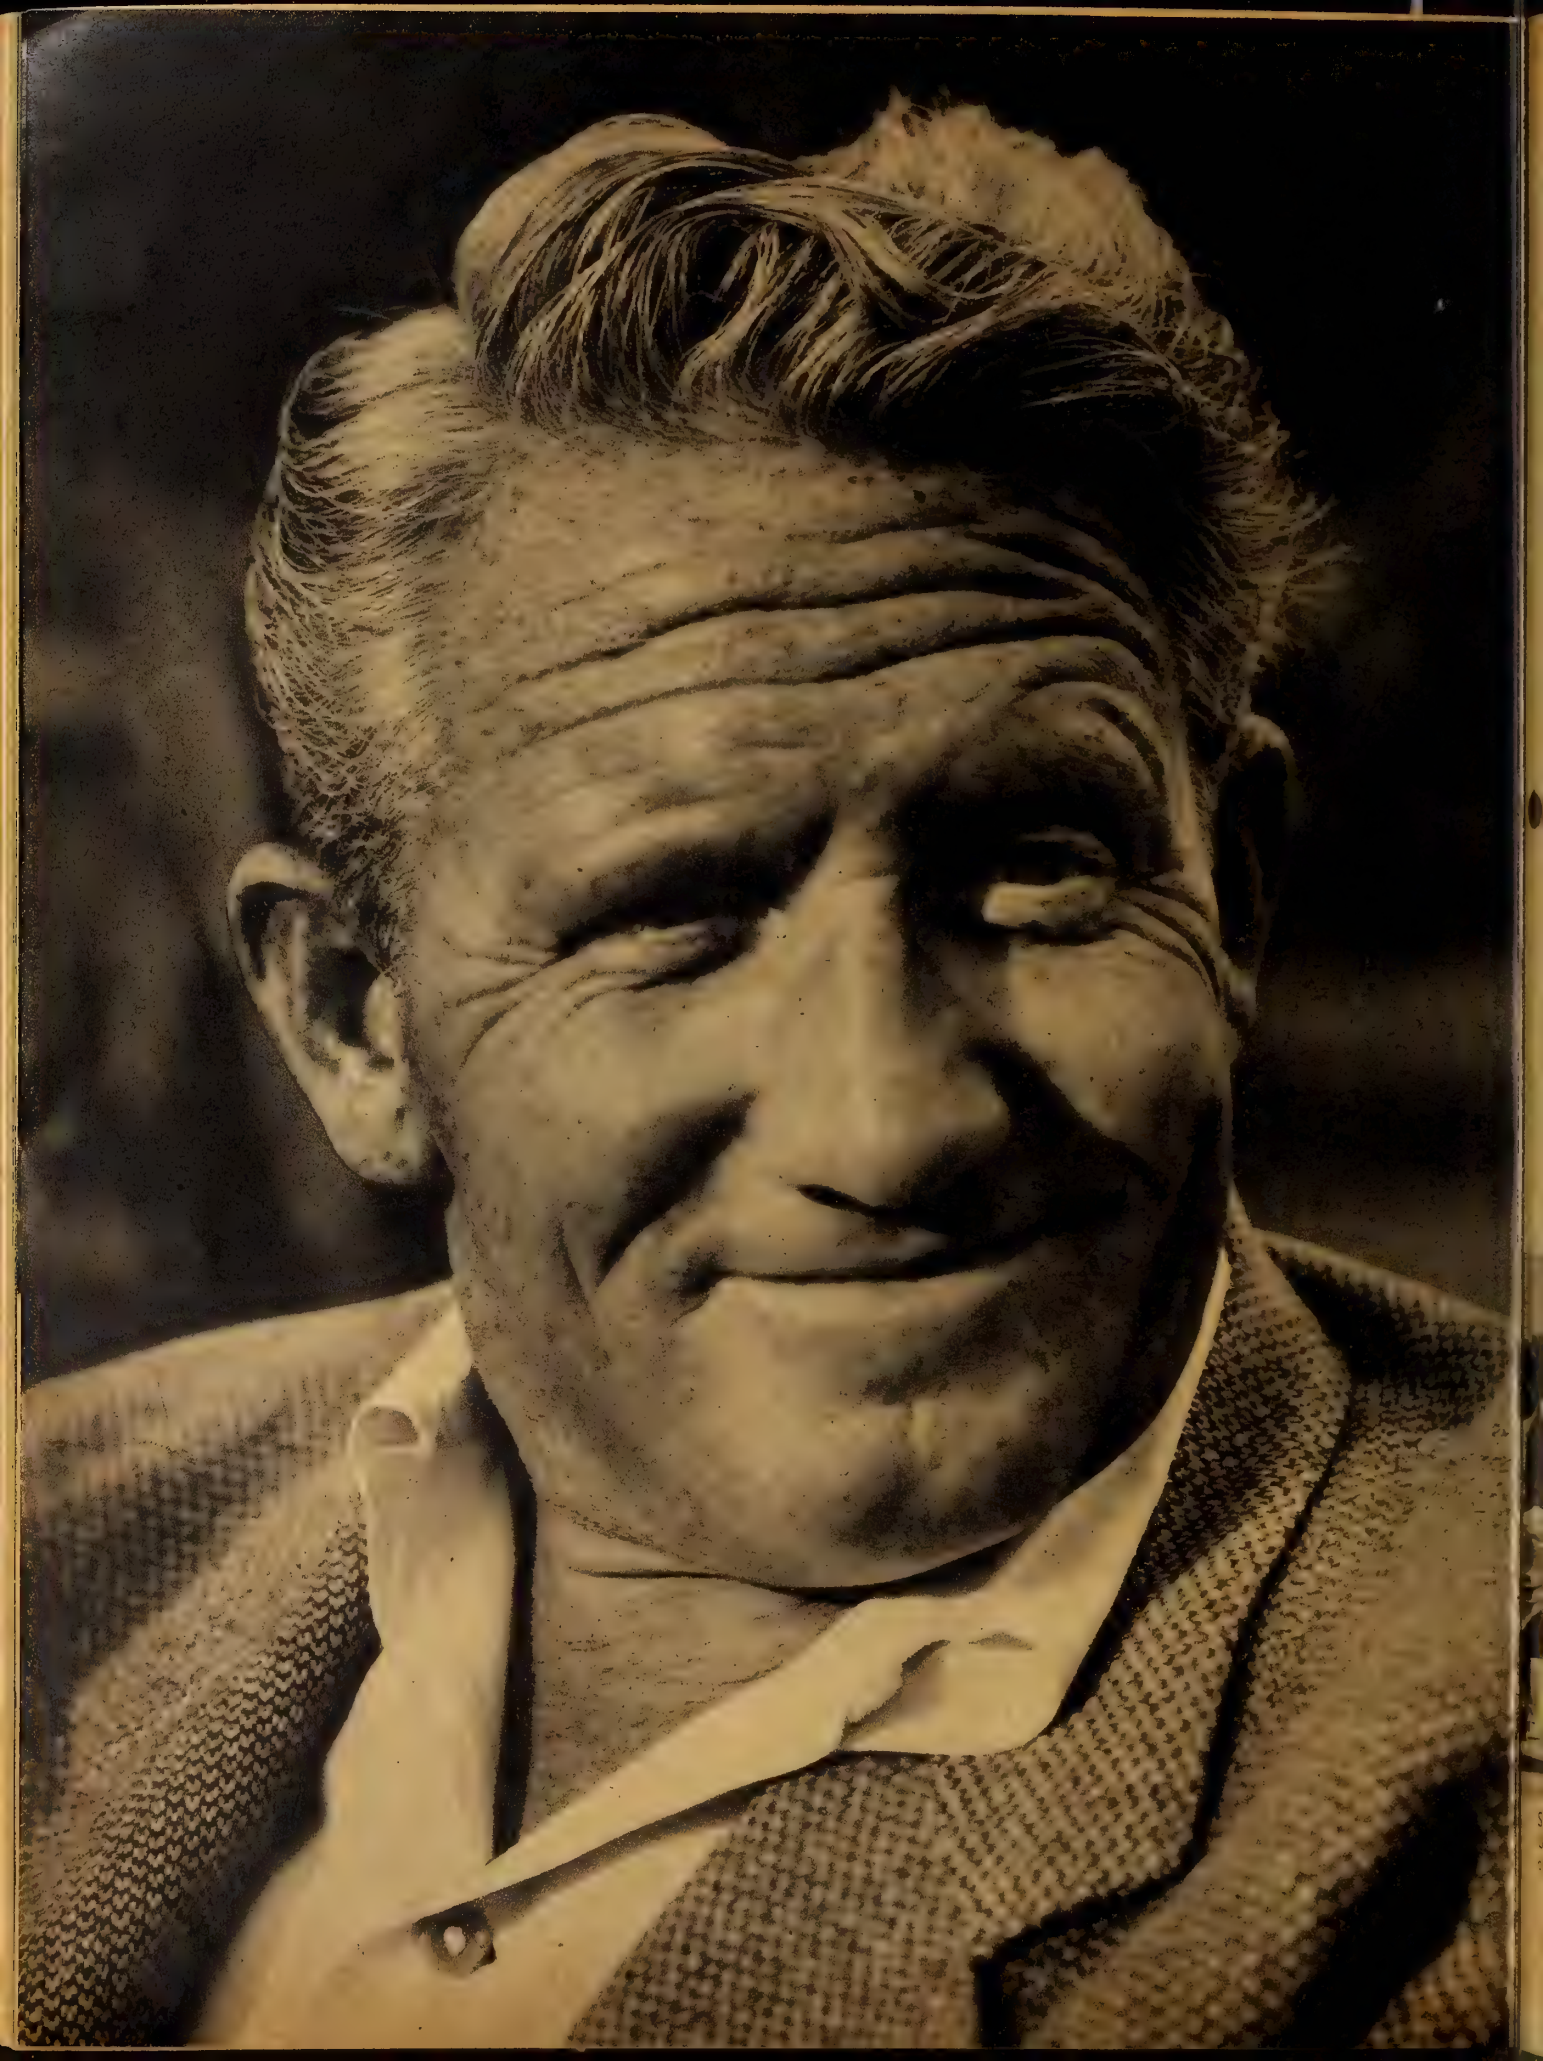
Diana's a terror at the wheel—sometimes forgets she's behind it! She whizzes around the Paramount lot on a motor scooter. But Bob's knee-high Singer frightens her.



Bonita Granville and her producer-husband Jack Wrather are old friends of Diana's. The foursome spend Sundays in Bonita's home and the gals talk about school-days.

DIANA LYNN THOUGHT LOVE WAS A MERRY-GO-ROUND— 'TIL BOB NEAL JUMPED ON BESIDE HER. AND THEN THE BRASS RINGS TURNED TO GOLD . . .

By Irene Greengard



Sure, 'tis a sad thing when an Irishman can't express a few sentiments about a friend like Tracy— without fear of a shillelagh in the small of his back!

by Pat O'Brien

"HIMSELF"

Spence and Lana Turner got practically a free tour of the U.S.A. when they made Cass Timberlane. Locations included Minnesota, Idaho, Fla. and (above) downtown L.A.

■ When that grand publication MODERN SCREEN commissioned me to write up a very intellectual piece about me old pal Spencer Tracy, I wrapped a fist around a shillelagh and hurried out to Glocca Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to see himself.

Himself was enacting a scene when I arrived, a bit of drama from a book called "Cass McTimberlane" by me fellow-writer, Sinclair O'Lewis. Ah, but himself was intense! There is a slip of a lass in this cinema, a colleen much admired by the lads, who goes under the lovely name of Lana McTurner, and himself, who plays the part of a judge, is much in love with the trim little lady.

It minded me of the old days of West End and Ninety-Eighth Street, New York, these twenty years ago. It was a kind of quiet authority with women the lad had, even then; and when the rest of us were knocking out our addled brains trying to amuse some lovely thing, Tracy would say nothing a-tall and walk off with her.

"And why do yez allow great oafs and bums like this on me set?" he inquires when the scene is done and over.

"And 'twas easy to find ye, at that, Mister Tracy," I says. "'Twas by following a trail of candy bar wrappers a foot thick that (Continued on page 96)

He stood under a small spot, a big guy in a checked suit, while the girls in rhinestones glittered past.

But his mother was in the front row, and it made Dan feel like Hamlet!

of g-strings and apron strings

June Lockhart waits at the wheel, as Liz Dailey kisses Dan goodbye at Lake Arrowhead. He's become a water-ski fan, but he's better at the singing and dancing he does in Give My Regards To Broadway.

■ "I never send my laundry out until the booker sees the act."

So goes the direct and immortal quotation from Dan Dailey, as he bows his six feet four inches in the direction of the burlesque theater which gave him his early training.

One bow for the glittering g-strings, symbol of a dead art. "When the young ladies had left the stage, I'd come on in my straw hat and checked suit," Dan recalls. "That was the signal for the audience to yell, 'Throw the bum out, and bring back the girls!' "

Dining out with his agent and a pretty lady, Dan quipped, "If my wife knew . . ." but Liz still talks to him and laughs at his jokes.

And perhaps a bow for the apron-strings, symbol of his mother. Dan Dailey, the elder, didn't want Dan Dailey, the younger, to be an actor. He'd seen too much struggle, during his years in the hotel business. "No," he said flatly.

So young Dan got out. Things would have been impossible, except for the angel who was his mother, and who often came up with a buck.

Ah, that lady. Five feet eight, and blue-eyed, and a face with the map of Ireland on it. She could outlast him then, and she can outlast him now. A show, shopping, dinner, and she's still looking eager, after Dan's fallen apart.

He remembers the day he was hustling his corn at the Eltinge Burlesque, and he thought he saw a familiar face in the audience. "When the curtain came down, I beat it out, and watched the crowd leave. Pretty soon I saw Mom. She'd been coming around to see me work! My mom, at a burlesque show. One little woman in the middle of all those bald heads and paunches, and she never even flinched.

"That's pretty funny. That's (Continued on page 103)

Birth of a Baby
by Jane Wilkie

They're just kids themselves—Barbi and Bill, but already they've had a hand in a miracle. The plain, ordinary, wonderful miracle of Barbara Willa Johanna Williams—otherwise known as Jody.

Barb and Bill cut the baby's name down to size—call her "Jody." She was born July 25, so is still too young to see Ma and Pa in A Likely Story.

Bill is pretty calm as he decides that Jody looks just like her old man. The night before, though, he gave a swell performance as expectant father. Five more were planned, but he doesn't think he'll be able to take it like Barb.

■ He was in the waiting-room, with two men even more nervous than he, when a nurse said he could go to Barbara's room.

Barbara smiled up at him. "Would you like to read to me? There are some magazines—"

"Sure," he said. "Sure, I'll read to you. But what am I doing here? How about the baby?"

"It'll be a while," she said.

He read until the nurse asked him to leave again, and then he went out and smoked until four-thirty (they'd arrived at the hospital at midnight) and finally a doctor came out and said he'd just given Barbara a spinal injection. "Will you come see her now?"

They found Barbara looking calm and happy.

"Are you all (Continued on page 125)

" 'Let me bruise yuh good,' said my pal Jimmy. 'The Sullivan law don't bother me. My schnozz ain't no concealed weapon. It's a legal instroomeht.' "

■ "Sullivan is a name-dropper," wrote my ulcerous colleague, Westbrook Pegler, when my defense of Frank Sinatra aroused the bile of that distinguished mental-case of American journalism. Just how a columnist in my field could write without "dropping names" is the $64 question of the season, because if I tell you of my recent five-week trip to Hollywood, without ranging from Gable to Kaye, MODERN SCREEN would not print it and additionally, Mr. Delacorte, either Senior or Junior, would not issue the check which I have counted on to repair my Hollywood golf damages.

"Get around and see people while you're in Hollywood," suggested the MODERN SCREEN people.

I saw them, not on studio lots, but on golf courses, at parties and in restaurants. Even (Continued on page 69)

" 'Remember this, Ed?' asked Ty, and brought out the crown I'd awarded him in 1938, when a national newspaper poll voted him King of the Movies. Queen, that year, was Jeanette MacDonald."

ed sullivan's hollywood diary

My 16-year-old daughter Betty, who wants to be a writer, interviewed ter Lawford in his dressing room. I was supposed to look puzzled at r technique, but I looked more like Boris Karloff after a bad night."

"'Get a load of the poor man's Dennis Day,' Jeanette MacDonald cracked to Gene Raymond, as we harmonized Sweet Adeline at their home. Jeanette's my dream-thrush and Gene plays piano elegantly."

'Out here,' Barbara Stanwyck told me, 'we'll have the garage. The house e're going to build will look as if it's been lived in for years. No fancy uff, not even a lawn—it costs too darn much to keep well-groomed.'"

"'You look like a big sissy,' Joan Crawford said. I've always dreamed of being alone with Joan, but so help me, I never pictured myself handcuffed by skeins of wool. It just ain't fair."

hollywood diary

"If Van Johnson looks more at home in the saddle of a bike, remember that he was graduated from bikes more recently than Sullivan—who didn't even suffer a fracture!"

"So Sullivan isn't an actor? This bit of pantomime should get me some sort of Academy Award, or there'll be professional jealousy afoot. This shot of Danny Kaye and me doesn't need explaining at all."

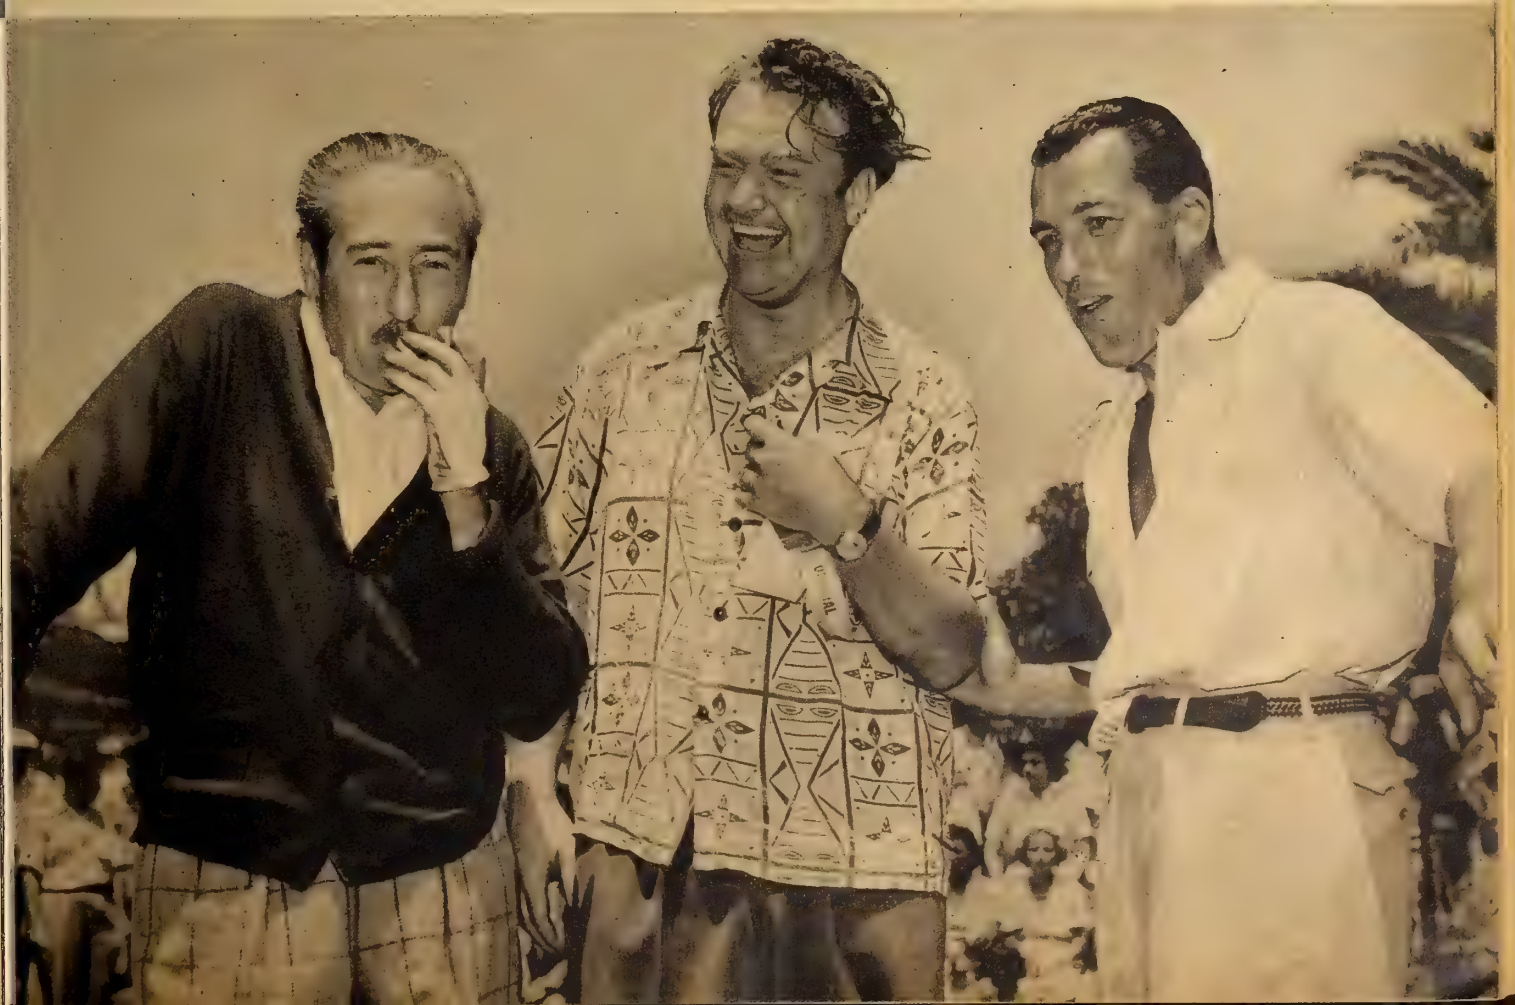
"'You know who Mr. Sullivan is,' the photog coaxed Butch Jenkins. 'Sure,' said Butch, 'he's the Broadway columnist.' He winked, 'I know those beat-up vaudeville gags, too!'"

"Mary Benny stares at the kitchen ceiling to express her well-bred contempt for two icebox thieves. 'Imagine Mary getting sore,' chuckled Jack Benny, 'just because we're helping ourselves to something to eat.'"

"This is what drives you mad,' moaned Dana Andrews, 'posing for still pictures.' Having finished Daisy Kenyon, he and Joan Crawford posed for some stills later.

"The only girl I kissed in Hollywood was Linda Hope. Her brother, Tony, watched with Mom and Dad. Upstairs were tiny Kelly and Norah. 'Kelly's teeth are coming in, mine are falling out,' said Bob."

"This was snapped at the California Country Club, where Adolphe Menjou, Red Skelton and I played in the Borzage Tournament for the Runyon Cancer Fund."



Edna and her Dad are co-workers at M-G-M. She's an assistant in the camera room of the animated cartoon department. He's finishing If Winter Comes.

DADDY

by Edna Pidgeon Aitkens

■ Like many fathers, Walter Pidgeon has occasion to talk straight words to his daughter, in this case me, saying, among other things, "I'm your daddy, young lady, and don't you forget it!"

It would take an awful lot of forgetting. There's his baritone booming around corners at you unexpectedly, or his backgammon heckling when he's winning, or, maybe, the fearful swishing going on throughout the house as he experiments with a new racket to see if the old forehand is still there. Add a hundred other ways he has of letting the world know he's home and enjoying life from the bottom of his soles to the other end of him, which is 75 inches higher. Add seeing him come in of an afternoon, the perfectly dressed gentleman, and then sighting him messing about in the garden a half hour later in the droopiest pair of shorts this side of China. Add catching him shaving wit his hat on—some old felt of a thing— because he wants to keep his just combed hair from curling. Or, since w are talking about forgetting (and jus to get personal) add all the awfu things that almost happen because h is the world's greatest forgetter. An on and on, so that whatever it is tha causes a person to get bored, it ha absolutely no chance of developin nder the same roof with him.

That's the Walter Pidgeon I look for n the screen but don't see there very often. Maybe it is a very good idea o put that part of him down in print. For instance, there was one real-life performance that I'll never forget. He presented it for my benefit and, brother, benefited.

That was the evening, years ago, that he walked me (Continued on page 128)

He plays tennis in the living room and shaves with his hat on, but Edna doesn't complain. Because to her, Walter Pidgeon's a pal, a storybook hero—and her ever-lovin' Dad.

Innocent abroad

The decorative fountain is typical of Zurich, Switzerland, where Linda vacationed for three months. But the hot weather—106°—was not.

The bandana never came off because Linda's hair took a terrific beating during Forever Amber, from the twice-weekly peroxide washes.

Linda and M.S. reporter Margot Grubb ate on the terrace of the Grand Hotel Dolder. Linda stayed in her suite most of the time, but she went mad over the architecture and wanted to take a whole house back to the States with her.

PEOPLE KIBITZ WHILE YOU PAINT; SO SHE DIDN'T PAINT; PEOPLE TALK IN FRENCH, SO SHE COULDN'T TALK. AND TRAVEL IS BROADENING, BUT LINDA WAS ON A DIET!

By Margot Grubb

■ "I'm going to Paris," I said buoyantly. "Where women are beautiful and everything smells good—"

"Stop smelling," Al said. "For just a minute. It happens that Linda Darnell is in Europe, and it happens we're interested in Linda Darnell, and if you should find her in Paris, we'd maybe even pay you—"

So I went to Paris in a new hat, and I started looking for Miss Darnell. She'd been, and gone. I chased her through Brussels, and tracked her down to Zurich, the biggest city in Switzerland.

She was at the Grand Hotel Dolder (very swank) and she was having lunch, but that didn't deter me. Fortunately, she was lonely. "You look almost as good to me as Macy's Basement," she said.

That's it, I guess. Why doesn't anyone ever say I look like Bergdorf's window?

Anyhow, I asked Linda about this vacation, and she told me.

She'd worked in Forever Amber for 128 days, in a thirty-five pound costume, with a British accent. A horrid set of circumstances.

"Pev was born in England," she said. (That's her husband.) "And he hates phony accents. If I said ahsk when I got home at night, it upset him so he couldn't eat his dinner."

When Amber was finally finished, Linda had a problem. Should she vacation in New Mexico, which would involve building a house there? Or should she take a trip to Europe?

"Europe," Pev said. "You're too tired to build a house."

She left LaGuardia Field at 2:30, on a June afternoon, and four hours later, she was watching the sun set over Gander, Newfoundland.

In the morning, she hit Shannon, Ireland, and four hours after that, she was in Paris.

She wandered around Paris, falling in love. The awnings, the sun-umbrellas on the shops, the sidewalk cafes. All the usual trite, charming things that people remember about Paris.

The Arc de Triomphe, the Louvre, Notre Dame, a little darker than she'd expected, a (Continued on page 120)

She's Romantic ! He's Rugged ! Together they're DYNAMITE !

Against the violent backdrop of blasting tunnels . . . raging floods in the world's biggest setting, moves the titanic struggle of a man fighting for money to buy the woman of luxury who entered his brawling world

JOHN WAYNE • LARAINE DAY
in
TYCOON
IN COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR
with
SIR CEDRIC HARDWICKE • JUDITH ANDERSON
JAMES GLEASON • ANTHONY QUINN
Produced by STEPHEN AMES • Directed by RICHARD WALLACE Screen play by Borden Chase and John Twist
RKO RADIO PICTURES

the unclean

A small green place in the lonely Pacific—this is Molokai, the island of the lepers; this is a village of forgotten men. "But if a few visits will help," Bergen said, "no gates can keep me out. . ."

By LAUREN TRACY

■ Originally, it was to be a vacation.

"Honolulu," Edgar said. "We'll leave Charlie home."

And Frances smiled unbelievingly, after which he had no choice but to leave Charlie home.

Thirteen days later, he wired his office frantically, and Charlie was shipped to Honolulu, via Clipper. It seemed there was a group of Japanese-American soldiers known as the Purple Heart Regiment. They'd fought in Italy and Africa, and they were trying to raise funds for a soldiers' clubhouse, and they'd asked Edgar to appear.

He appeared, the way he always does, once Charlie'd arrived, and then he heard of the leper colony on the island of Molokai.

"Vacation?" his wife said, grinning.

"But as long as I've got Charlie—" he said.

He contacted the proper authorities in the health department, to get permission for the trip. Bergen has more than average interest in the sick. As a kid, he'd had to quit school because there wasn't any money, and the yearning to be a doctor never really left him, so he's helped in small ways.

At least, they seem small to him. He sends nurses through school; he furnishes (Continued on page 68)

Busy Edgar Bergen takes time off to attend an Atwater Kent party with his wife Frances. Now, he's at work on Walt Disney's Fun and Fancy Free. Edgar and Charlie will appear as they are, but the rest of the cast will be animated cartoons.

"Philco Radio Time" with Bing Crosby

NOW BACK ON THE AIR!

America's favorite voice . . . back on the air for Philco with his sparkling radio show. Timed with the appearance everywhere of the great new Philco 1260, a new kind of radio-phonograph console with Philco's amazing new way to play records. A sensational value at only $129.95. See it at your Philco dealer now.*

PHILCO

Famous for Quality the World Over

Wednesday is Bingsday!

Listen to Philco Radio Time starring Bing Crosby. Wednesday, 10 P.M. in the East, 9 P.M. everywhere else. ABC and many additional stations.

For a Velvet Blend... use Carnation

JUST call it "luscious" . . . till they bring out a new word to describe this spectacular Peach Cream Pie. It's made with Carnation Milk . . . heat-refined and homogenized to super-creamy smoothness . . . for a typical Carnation velvet blend. It's easy to make, lovely to look at, and elegant to eat. Do try it!

PEACH CREAM PIE

Golden new-crop "clings" are in!

⅓ cup sugar
⅓ cup flour
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tall can Carnation Milk, undiluted, scalded
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla or almond extract
1 9-inch baked pastry shell
1½ cups sliced Canned Cling Peaches

Mix sugar, flour and salt; slowly add Carnation Milk. Cook in double boiler until thick, stirring constantly. Add small amount of hot mixture to slightly beaten eggs; stir into remaining mixture; cook 4 minutes. Add extract. Cool. Place layer of drained cling peach slices in bottom of pastry shell; pour filling over peaches. Arrange remaining peach slices on top. Chill. Garnish as desired. Serves 6 to 8.

WRITE for the "Velvet Blend Book" of exciting new recipes—to Carnation Company, Dept. R-11, Milwaukee 2, Wis.

FOR BABY, ask your doctor about a formula prepared with safe, nourishing, digestible Carnation Milk, now fortified with pure crystalline vitamin D_3—"the milk every doctor knows."

"From Contented Cows"

THE UNCLEAN

(Continued from page 66)

medical training films, he plays benefits. And he fights violently against public disinterest, and misconceptions.

For the record, leprosy is not painful; the affected areas are numb, and the patients have a normal life span. The first signs are lumps on arms and elbows, and the loss of eyebrows. There was a form of treatment—a cure made from the bark of trees—which was used for years and years, and has recently been proven no good at all. Results are hoped for now from sulfa and penicillin.

Victims of leprosy—or Hansen's Disease, the name Bergen prefers (a doctor named Hansen did research on it)—have always been branded, called The Unclean.

"A terrible thing," Bergen says. "It's very slightly contagious, and yet these people are completely isolated. If a few visits will help—"

Charlie and Edgar flew to Molokai. The leper colony is on a little peninsula that sticks out from the rest of the island, and it's also on a mountain. There's a sheer drop of 1,000 feet, which can only be climbed by burro. At the top, there's a high wall and a gate. There's no escape.

When the plane landed, Edgar realized that the whole village had turned out to greet him. There were two rows of cars; in the first, the doctors and staff workers, in the second, The Unclean.

Edgar was taken directly to the town auditorium, used for movies and dances.

There were 250 people there, some without fingers, some in bandages, all smiling, waiting. There was a five-piece leper orchestra, and when Edgar walked in, the people moved, and whispered among themselves, and then applauded wildly.

the undemanding . . .

He'd intended to do 15 minutes; he ended up working more than an hour. The audience's sense of humor was brilliant. "Maybe because of their philosophy," he told Frances later. "Maybe because they've learned to ask for so little—"

After the show, one of the nurses gave Edgar and Charlie beautiful leis.

Charlie's was of wood-roses, and he waxed indignant. "Wood-roses. Why, you—"

Edgar made him tone down his language, and he's still got the wood-roses. They're like our straw-flowers; they dry out and keep indefinitely.

Pictures were taken, and then Edgar and Charlie had lunch at the doctors' quarters.

"I want to make a trip to the leper colony in Carmel, Louisiana," Edgar said, over his tea, and one of the doctors nodded.

"The Carmel patients exchange newspapers and bulletins with our group. It gives them all a little less feeling of being out of the world."

Later, Edgar drove downtown. The doctor pointed things out: "The department store, the barber shop, the baseball field—"

And always there were the clean cottages, and the cattle, and the general cheerful air of the place. There were no children, because if children are born in the colony, they are taken away at once.

At the airport, the two rows of cars were there again to see Edgar and Charlie off.

The doctor took Edgar to each car in turn, and the people looked at him gratefully, and said, "God bless you," and he stood there, a grown man, wanting to cry.

He left the island, with the high wall, and the barred gate, but he hasn't forgotten.

ED SULLIVAN'S H'W'D DIARY

(Continued from page 58)

in a parking lot, where I ran into Bill Powell and his cute little wife. That was opposite the Beverly Hills Brown Derby. "Mousie's" sister, Maxine, used to be a good friend of mine when she sang at the old Parody Club, on West 48th Street, so this meeting with her kid sister brought back a lot of exciting memories.

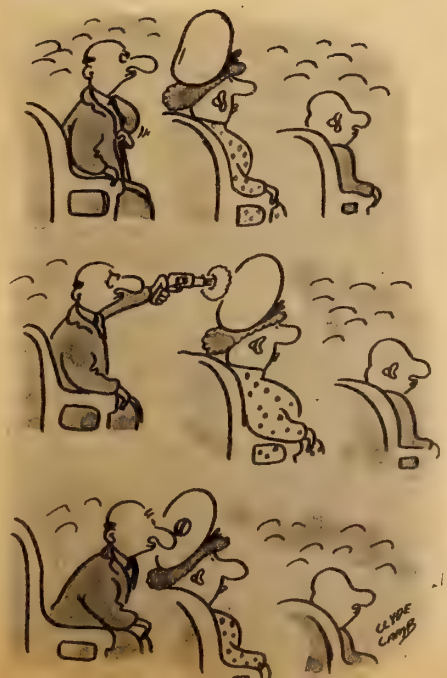
In five weeks in Hollywood, I went to the studios exactly twice. The most interesting thing in my brief studio visits was finding Director Richard Whorf, between scenes, modelling clay miniatures. The most interesting thing, away from the studios, would be Mary Benny's wonderful party celebrating the birthdays of Robert Taylor and Mary's sister, Babe Marx—it was really something. There were two huge birthday cakes. Only one was cut—the other was sent to the Orthopedic Hospital, Mary's favorite interest.

There was one other extremely interesting experience. The Bennys and young Scotty Beckett went along with us for dinner at the Frank Sinatra home, in the Toluca Lake area. Nancy greeted us, but no Frank. "He's inside working on his paintings," explained Nancy. On the outer porch, there was Sinatra, completing a painting of a circus clown. He has a lot of talent, always wanted to paint, dropped in suddenly one day at a shop and bought easels, brushes and oils.

It was a grand trip, one of the most enjoyable I've ever experienced, and once again, a columnist was impressed by the Hollywood homes which have been illumined by the adoption of little children.

You can jeer at some of the idiosyncrasies of Hollywood, but probably no city in the country proportionately can match the movie colony's adoption record. I think it is a wonderful thing, and certainly the movie colony must be showered with the blessings of the Deity: "Suffer little children to come unto me."

On pages 58-61 are some of the people I got to see. Each picture recalls a pleasant experience and as you regard them, I trust that you'll capture some of the pleasure of a wandering columnist.



It's Jergens new double-meaning color

"Pink Frosting"

nice-but-naughty Shade in Jergens Matchmates

He'll be intrigued by its innocent sweetness ...so don't ever tell about the temptress tendencies of PINK FROSTING... newest of seven Jergens shades.

Pink Frosting Powder... instant drama, glamour for your skin.

Pink Frosting Lipstick... sudden vivacity for your lips ...to bring out the vixen in you.

They're perfect shade-mates. New PINK FROSTING powder and lipstick—both velvetized to cling—but smoothly. Both yours at $1.00 (plus tax).

New Powder
New Lipstick
shade-mated
both for $1.00
(plus tax)

1. Large Jergens Powder
2. Large Jergens Lipstick

Choice of seven shade-pairs, including new Pink Frosting.

JERGENS FACE POWDER
also in 25c and 10c "Try-it" sizes.

FREE POWDER KIT. Try new "Pink Frosting" and Jergens 6 other heart-break powder shades! All free!

Mail Coupon to: Box 37, Cincinnati 14, Ohio
(In Canada: The Andrew Jergens Co., Ltd., Perth, Ontario.) 270

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Paste coupon on penny postcard, if you wish.)

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

(Continued from page 10)

and are up to their knees redecorating.

* * *

Most Hollywood hostesses plan one decorative motif when they give a party. It's either very formal—all the best silver and glassware trotted out, or Hawaiian, or Italian—whatever the party idea is.

So I was particularly amused at the variety of moods clever hostess Lilli Messinger and her husband, Alexis Thurn-Taxis, trotted out for their party in honor of Joan Fontaine and William Dozier.

Their house is very formal, done in vivid colors and mirrored walls. So imagine the effect of one patio looking like a Southern plantation all set up with tables covered with red and white check tablecloths and napkins; another patio, cool and inviting as a beach house at Honolulu, and beyond all this, a formal garden very Grecian in effect, with its lovely statues in the moonlight. Then, to add to the fun, the music was Mexican with guitarists strolling among the guests.

Joan caught a bad cold at the last minute and couldn't come—but Bill Dozier was there, shaking hands with everyone twice—once for Joan, once for himself.

Angela Lansbury, in wispy black lace, was having a lot of fun with Peter Shaw—these English imports are really a romance.

Helmut Dantine was with his love, Charlene Wrightsman, who looks like a plump little co-ed and not in the least the heartwrecker she is supposed to be. She might have been playing hookey from school in the simple white dinner gown she wore.

Tamara Toumanova, the ballerina, on the other hand, was très exotic with her long black hair and a scarlet dress—and I mean scarlet. I noticed she was wearing none of her beautiful jewels. She told me she never wore them except when her gown was a background—and a scarlet dress is always in the foreground! There's a fashion tip.

Evie Wynn Johnson (need I add that I mean Mrs. Van Johnson) is "expecting" and she wore a very clever outfit. Her peasant blouse was sheer and with it she wore a long, full, black peasant-type skirt. Van is a funny expectant father. He kept bringing her plate after plate piled high with food!—(which she didn't eat when his back was turned).

As usual, Mrs. Reginald Gardiner was an eyeful in a white gown with a red rose in her dark hair.

John Carroll—very good looking—may have come with some particular belle, but he seemed to be playing the field. And speaking of handsome men, there are very few in Hollywood better looking then grayhaired Clarence Brown, the director.

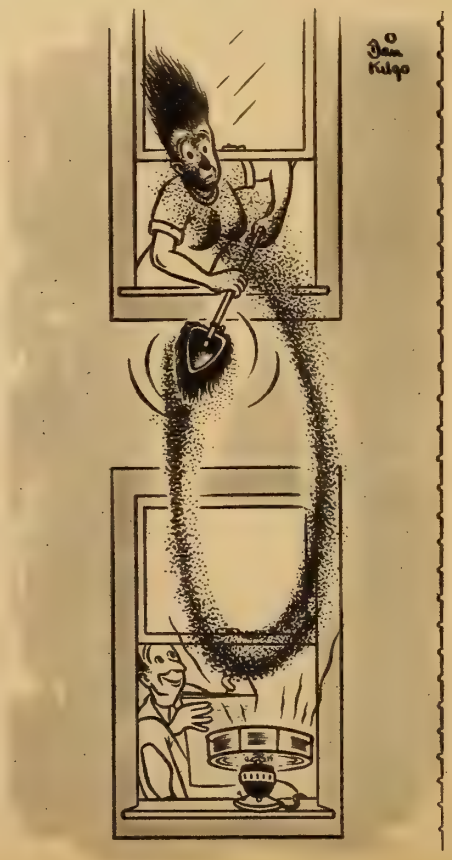
* * *

Socially, Hollywood has never been brighter or gayer. For a time there was a noticeable lull, but now with the cold weather approaching, everyone is back in town and things are beginning to hum again. One of the gayest parties to start the new season was the dinner-dance the Darryl Zanucks gave for General and Mrs. Mark Clark. Darryl served with the General overseas and the two are old friends.

Tyrone Power sat at the left of Mrs. Zanuck, and Lana Turner, looking unbelievably lovely, was at the same table with the fighting General and his vivacious wife. I stopped and chatted with Ty and commiserated with him over his painful wisdom tooth trouble. Then Ty also told me all about his plans to fly to Africa on a second goodwill flight, and Lana made no secret of the fact that she was going to be very lonely without him.

Dolly O'Brien Dorelius, who pops in and out of Hollywood with increasing regularity, was escorted by everybody's darling, Clark Gable. Dolly's jewels were the finest that have been seen in Hollywood, and I didn't blame the other girls for taking a good long peek at them. I must say that although Clark brought her, he circulated plenty among the other guests. Do I think they will marry? I doubt it, frankly. Dolly is essentially Palm Beach and New York while Clark loves his ranch and the outdoor life. Still—who can say?

Gary Cooper and I had a long chat, too, and I told him how much I liked him in The Unconquered, which he has just finished making. The old Coop with that same gentle charm. You can't beat it.



Olivia deHavilland was there with her Marcus Goodrich, dancing and having fun. Her sister, Joan Fontaine, with her William Dozier, sat on the opposite side of the room, and in that crowd there was no embarrassment or awkward contretemps because the sisters simply didn't meet. I must say for Virginia, her seating arrangement for the party was perfect; she deftly kept people who don't care for each other well apart, and that's really a feat in Hollywood.

It was nice, too, that the younger generation was so beautifully represented—Joan Bennett's young daughter, Diana; the Irving Berlin's lovely Mary Ellin; and six-foot-two Samuel Goldwyn, Jr. among them. The Zanucks' two attractive daughters, Darrylin and Susan, were so grown up, as they helped their parents receive.

Dolores and Bob Hope, who have been going out more lately, had a long confab with General Clark, who paid a glowing tribute to Bob and all the other Hollywood folk who did so much in entertaining the troops during the war.

Joan Crawford came with Cesar Romero, and how those two danced! Many more were there, but I haven't space to list them all. Just let me say all the elite of filmdom was present.

* * *

This is the kind of Hollywood story I like to write, because it's about a man all Hollywood can well be proud of—the gentle and fine Reverend Gareth Hughes. Impelled by a great spiritual urge, Gareth gave up his acting career some years ago when it was at its sucessful best, to retreat into the desert and there build a little church for the desolate community of Wadsworth. With almost no money to help him in his work, he has labored long and lovingly for his flock, many of them poor and ignorant Indians.

Recently, a touch of Hollywood came to Gareth when Hedy Lamarr and Mark Stevens journeyed to Wadsworth to visit him. In the afternoon, they spent some time making friends with all the children of the neighborhood who came to see them, and in the evening, they attended Gareth's Vesper service which was held in the community church.

Hedy and Mark reported it was almost a miracle what Gareth has done for the children in the way of clothing and food, as well as spiritual help. There is a limit, however, to what one man alone can do, and Gareth badly needs money to continue his work.

* * *

Before I sign off, let me say how I love getting all your letters, because that's the only way I can know what you want me to tell you about. Thanks to all of you, and keep them coming.

The Countess of Carnarvon goes to an after-theatre supper

"Before I go out— always a 1-Minute Mask!"

A prime favorite of busy young social leaders is the 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Unlike heavy, draggy old-style masks, the 1-Minute Mask feels cool, exhilarating on your skin—re-makes your complexion not in twenty minutes—but in one!

So easy— to go out looking your radiant loveliest!

Greatly sought after in both social and artistic circles, the Countess of Carnarvon has an exciting Continental beauty with a creamy silken skin. "Before I go out, I always save one important moment for a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream," the Countess says.

"Right away my complexion looks brighter . . . more colorful and wide-awake . . . so much softer! Little skin roughnesses seem to disappear completely, and I'm all ready for a velvet-smooth make-up!"

Send to Pond's, Dept. 9-L, Clinton, Connecticut for free sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream—enough for a full 1-Minute Mask. See your complexion re-styled to new loveliness!

1. Spend one minute on beauty—to make your whole evening more glamorous! Smooth a white Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream over your whole face, except eyes.
2. Right away, the cream's "keratolytic" action starts to loosen and dissolve off little roughnesses that make skin look coarser, duller. Tissue off after one full minute.
3. Your complexion looks lighter, clearer—feels so much smoother! Have a 1-Minute Mask whenever you want to look your best!

A LOVELY FOUNDATION CREAM, TOO

NEW! Color with COME-ON! Color with FLARE!

Woodbury Fiesta

...powder and lipstick!

Two parts feminine, one part fire—Fiesta, the most talked-about powder shade that ever came out of Hollywood! On your skin, it glows like an angel —yet Fiesta kindles that glint in his eye Add Woodbury color-freshness, lasting cling, heavenly fragrance...and say yes to Fiesta today!

That enchanting rose-sparkle? ..it's yours—with Woodbury Fiesta!

AVA GARDNER
appearing in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's
forthcoming production
"UPWARD TO THE STARS"

Woodbury FILM FINISH Powder

FIESTA POWDER
plus
FIESTA LIPSTICK
both for $1.00

Large-size Woodbury Powder and matching Lipstick came boxed together—a double value!—for only $1.00. "Purse" size Powder 25c and 10c. In Fiesta and 8 other exciting shades. (all prices plus tax)

FREE! try Fiesta... FREE!

Seeing's believing! See Fiesta's sparkle on your skin. Send for free Woodbury Powder Sampler; get Fiesta, eight other flattering shades, plus Hollywood Make-up Chart. Print name, address clearly. Mail* to Box 45, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. (In Canada: JohnH. Woodbury, Ltd., Perth, Ont.)
379

NAME.....

STREET.....

CITY.....STATE.....

*Paste coupon on penny postcard if you wish.

THEY WON'T FORGET

(Continued from page 37)

joke between them. It tickled her to hear Betty call Larry "my fella." If she loved the girl less than the boy, it couldn't have been much. While she was well enough, she'd go to the studio to watch rehearsals, then report to Betty in New York. "I wish you could see Larry do some of those songs. He gets that wonderful sparkle in his eyes that you have. I think he caught it from you."

When Larry flew East for the last time to see Betty, his mother made two requests. "Go to St. Patrick's and say a prayer for me." She wasn't a Catholic, but denominations meant nothing to her, and she loved the atmosphere of the great cathedral, set down in the midst of the roaring city like an island of peace. "Say a prayer for me. And bring me back a bottle of Tabu."

That story sums up as well as any her abiding faith in God, her love for life.

She was the kind of mother who could say to her son, "I was wrong and you were right." She said it long before The Jolson Story put him on top. But if you'd told her back there in Joliet how things would turn out, her eyes would have bugged open. "Oh my!" she'd have breathed—her raciest expletive.

Because when Larry delivered his haymaker, she was on Dad's side, and Dad wasn't on Larry's. They were all out in the garden that afternoon. Larry, a brand-new B.S., had a scholarship at the University of Illinois Medical School. It looked like the start of a beautiful summer till their young hopeful ruined it.

can't eat diplomas . . .

"I've got a job playing summer stock in Lake Whalom, Massachusetts." "All your pre-med work, Larry" they protested. And your scholarship! Would you throw that away to be a starving actor?"

"The idea," he grinned, "is to be an actor who eats. Anyway, I want to try it."

He went, without their blessing.

At the end of summer, Mother and Dad drove East on their vacation, nursing faint hopes that maybe Sonnyboy'd had enough. These hopes went glimmering when they found him playing the lead in Apron Strings, taking pats on the head from blasé professionals. They spent three pleasant weeks together, drove along the Mohawk Trail when the season closed. Next stop for Larry—New York. There were no more speeches. His elders had had their say, and Larry'd reached an age to make his own decisions. Maybe Mother's arms clung a little tighter than usual as she kissed him goodbye. Himself, he felt pretty cocky. Eighty bucks in his pocket, and a reputation as the whiteheaded kid of Lake Whalom.

Only trouble, New York was lousy with whiteheaded kids. They taught him the ropes. You got a job ushering at Carnegie Hall—six and a half a week. You rented yourself a room on West 58th, five flights up, no window. Coffee you cooked on a hotplate. Rolls you bought for a nickel a dozen where they sold day-old bread. Dinner was a cinch—twenty-five cents complete, including dessert, at any Chinese joint on Eighth Avenue. Saturday nights you had enough left over for a bottle of milk, a baby Gouda cheese and the Sunday Times. Sunday mornings you loafed around, reading about producers you never saw and shows you never tried out for, but did that prove you wouldn't hit it some day? Meantime, Broadway was Bagdad, and the stale air of 58th Street, headier than wine.

Mother's letters were long on questions; Larry's answers were short on detail. Stripped of the glamor, he felt day-old bread might sound a little bleak. But after a while there was real news to send. He'd been tried out and accepted by the Group Theater Studio. It meant working with a bunch of exciting people who talked your language—John Garfield, Joe Bromberg, Roman Bohnen, Bob Lewis—currently of Brigadoon—Elia Kazan, today's brilliant director of Boomerang and Gentleman's Agreement. Larry's no bubbler but, for him, he bubbled.

"They're a swell crowd, Mother; you'd like them; you'll meet them some day. No, I don't get much money, but the training's priceless. I'm right in the middle of everything I hoped for."

Then came the wire telling of his father's death. Larry went home. Through the first daze of grief, two things came clear. Dad's income as an advertising man had ended with his life. Apart from the house, there wasn't a great deal left. So Larry got a job. First, he sold advertising, and decided he'd rather dig ditches. Then he inspected dining cars for the New York Central. Twice his trains took him to Manhattan, but he never got beyond the station, which was just as well. The walls of his jail would have looked that much grayer.

hollywood calls . . .

His only contact with the world he loved was through letters. A couple of college pals, now working in Hollywood, kept urging him to come out. "We'll carry you till you land on your feet." Watching him sink deeper and deeper into misery, his mother almost wished he'd take them up on it. But the break came another way. By this time, some of the Group were doing fine in the movies, and keeping a weather eye out for Larry. One day an unbelievable wire arrived. "Part awaiting you in my next picture. Can you come out right away?—John Garfield."

He had to go; he couldn't wait to go, yet it wasn't easy. In Joliet, the white house with the green shutters that had once been so gay was quiet now, and pretty big for a woman to live in alone.

"I'll be fine, Larry, don't you worry about me, this town's chockful of my friends. Besides, I'll be glad to see the last of your mopey face."

He stood waving as long as he could see her, then went inside. Funny, how half your heart could be bounding ahead while the rest stayed heavily behind, with the plucky little woman in the white cottage.

John introduced him to the Warner people. The Mama Ravioli sets had been built, the wardrobe was ready. They were due to start on Monday. On Saturday came word that the picture had been cancelled.

Kazan and Bob Lewis took it from there, plucked casting directors by the ear, lied themselves blue. To hear them tell it, Larry'd been the Group's shining star, and any dope who left him lying around deserved not to have him. Max Arnow of Columbia listened, tested him, and offered Larry a contract. From the studio he sped to Western Union. A jubilant wire went winging its way to Joliet. Its cost would once have kept him in food for a week. But this time Mom was getting all the details, and who could count words at a time like that?

It was '41. She came out that winter and every winter, met Larry's pals, cooked for them, stayed up till all hours at Ann Lehr's Hollywood Canteen. Stole time now and then to go down to the studio, where she loved to watch Larry at work. In one Could YOU charm Larry Parks?

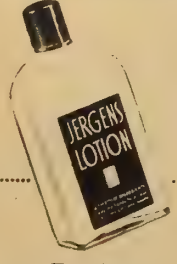
ELLEN DREW, CO-STARRING WITH LARRY PARKS IN COLUMBIA'S TECHNICOLOR PRODUCTION "THE SWORDSMAN"

ELLEN DREW SAYS: "No girl can charm Larry unless her hands are divinely soft and smooth." Ellen has that feminine appeal of smooth, soft hands.

"I use Jergens Lotion," she says. And the other feminine Stars? They, too, use Jergens Lotion . . . 7 to 1.

Will you learn charm from the glamorous Hollywood Stars?

Their hand care—Jergens Lotion—makes your hands even smoother, softer, now, thanks to product improvements resulting from recent skin-care research. And Jergens protects even longer. Two ingredients many doctors use for skin-beauty are included in today's Jergens Lotion. Still 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax). Leaves no oiliness; no stickiness.



For the Softest, Adorable Hands, use

JERGENS LOTION

FREE!
See for yourself why Hollywood Stars, 7 to 1, use Jergens Lotion

Mail coupon today for gift bottle. (Paste on penny postcard if you wish.)
Box 27, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. Please send my gift bottle.

238

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

(Please print name, address plainly . . . Sorry, offer good in U. S. A. only)

B after another, he was hardly setting the world afire, but seeing him happy was enough.

"Dad and I meant it for the best, but oh, Larry, I'm so glad you went your own way."

In the spring she'd go home. Soon after she left in the spring of '44, fella met girl at the Actors' Lab. A month later, when Betty had to leave for a singing date in Chicago, they could hardly bear it. She promised to go see his mother in Joliet.

"Better tell her we met six months ago," cautioned Larry. "She might think more highly of us."

And to Mom he wrote: "I want you to look this girl over very carefully."

He needn't have worried. The first time Betty went down, Mother fed her all day long, showed her Larry's baby pictures, and told her all the stories he wouldn't have let her tell if he'd been around. How they could never get him to eat. "I'm too deliker—" he'd inform them. How once she was incensed with him about something, really lacing into him, and all the while he stood there with his head kind of upside down, then right in the middle of it he threw her.

"Lemme see your toofers," he invited amiably.

"Not toofers!" moaned Betty. "How old was he then, six?"

"I hate to tell you, my dear, he was then a galoot of fifteen."

Before she left that day, Betty was calling Larry's mother Nenny—her own childhood version of Leona which had stuck through the years. And Nenny had asked her pointblank: "Are you two planning to marry?"

"Well—I guess so—"

"That's good," said Nenny.

Later, Larry arrived for ten days, and Betty's mother came from New York, and they sat down at the Camellia House to hear Betty sing. Nenny loved the songs. During her illness, she wore out record after record of South America, Take It Away.

the happy days . . .

But these were still the happy days. They'd have supper after the show. Larry's eyes would go severely from mother to mother. "Our Spanish engagement, huh? With the two duennas."

Then Betty had to go back to New York for Laughing Room Only. Larry was due in Hollywood. Silly to marry now, and put a continent between them. Once the continent came between them, they stopped being sensible.

"I can't stand it," said Larry at one end of the wire.

"I'll come out there. Rehearsals don't start till October. We'll have a month."

Mrs. Parks was in the middle of lunch when the phone rang. "Mom, can you come right out? We need you."

Months later he went back to pick up some of his mother's belongings. He found her luncheon dishes in the drain-rack, and her napkin on the table where she'd dropped it to answer the phone.

They were married Friday evening at St. Thomas Episcopal Church.

Larry'd rented a beach place for the honeymoon, and Mom stayed in the apartment. She'd meant to go home for a while, but he talked her into starting her winter visit early. She never went home. After Betty left, they went house-hunting and found a little place in Nichols Canyon. From their detailed descriptions, Betty thought it sounded just darling, so they took it. Mother fell happily to work on the garden. In November, Larry started The Jolson Story. Twenty numbers, and make 'em all different, and nobody can do it for you but you yourself. Day after day,

Sundays and holidays, and the pounds melted off him. Night after night, at home with the record-player, and he thought he'd lose his mind.

"I'm sorry about this horrible din every night, Mom."

"Doesn't bother me in the least. I must be phlegmatic."

He kissed the top of her head. "You must be an angel."

If he got edgy, that didn't bother her either. Her way with Larry's moods had long since proved an eye-opener to Betty. "When I'm hurt, I hold it inside. Your way's so much better. You bring it right out in the open."

"Honey, I've learned that sunlight's a great healer," said Larry's Mom. "Things fester in the dark."

If she'd been more of a complainer, they might have found out sooner. That spring she began looking tired and drawn.

"Mother, you've got to quit working so hard at the Canteen."

"Pooh," she said, till she couldn't pooh-pooh it any longer, and went to the doctor. He told Larry it was cancer. Betty arrived just before they operated in June.

At first it seemed like one of those miracles, she grew so much better. Before too long, she was out in the garden again, enchanted with Betty's gift of a stool that stood just high enough to be comfortable for digging. Before long, they were laughing together again.

The miracle still held when Betty went East again to see a man about Call Me Mister, which was to do for her what The Jolson Story did for her husband. While she was gone, Nenny made one of her periodic visits to the doctor. There the miracle collapsed. He told Larry they'd have to operate again.

breaking the news . . .

It was left to Larry to tell his mother. He stood at the kitchen door, listening to the pleasant, everyday sounds of Mom washing the dinner dishes. How do you make yourself do what you can't do? You stand there a minute longer, you push yourself through, you force the words past lips grown stiff.

For a matter of moments, she broke down against his shoulder. Then her head came up. "If I must, I must." She dabbed at her eyes. "There, now I've cried, I feel better."

This time the comeback was harder. Betty rushed home the minute details were settled, to stay a month before rehearsals started. She found Nenny cheerful as always, interested as always in what went on around her. It was a good month. Betty'd be up early, fixing breakfast for Larry. Unconsciously, she'd start singing over the dishes, then break off short for fear of disturbing Nenny.

"Don't stop, dear," Nenny would call out from the bedroom. "That sounds so pretty."

She loved going over Betty's collection of earrings. Those were her feminine weaknesses—perfume and earrings. Every night before Larry was due, they'd deck her out in a different pair of earrings and dab a different perfume back of her ears.

"She was the kind of person who'd make things happy even if they weren't," explained her daughter. (Never in-law, Nenny couldn't abide in-law.)

Later, there was still a third operation, from which she rallied again. The doctors couldn't quite believe what went on—that one so ill could live so long and so normally. Her courage amazed them and her spirit captured their hearts. She refused to let the worst of her pain wring from her more than a low moan of "Oh, my." On the table beside her lay the chief source of her strength and serenity, the Bible she

WALTER THORNTON, originator of the Pin-Up Girl says: "I recommend Flame-Glo Lipstick to all of my pin-up models for extra beauty, extra glamour . . . no blurry edges!"
HIT THE BULL'S EYE . . .
DOLORES DOYLE, one of the popular Thornton Pin-Up Beauties.

"Bull's 9" . . .

FLAME-GLO'S NEWEST SHADE

Other popular FLAME-GLO Shades:

Raspberry . . . an exciting shade for most types. Royal Wine...deep blood-red with purple.

Glamour Red . . . fiery, brilliant true red. Medium . . . scintillating, kiss-provoking beauty. Ruby Red . . . popular deep fiery ruby jewel tone.

Pink Fire . . . dramatic deep pink, good for evening. Dynamic Red . . . romantic dynamite bespeaking love itself. Pinwheel Red . . . true glowing red blood tint.

Cupid's arrow will hit your mark if you keep kissable with Flame-Glo's new wonder shade . . "BULL'S-I." Here's a vivid red, accented with a touch of violet, making it a flattering shade for all types of beauty. Flame-Glo lipstick assures magnetism and allure in an instant. Keeps your lips alive with the fire of youth hours longer, because of its water-repellent beauty film . . . never a blurry edge! And you'll like Flame-Glo's new all-metal case!

KEEP KISSABLE WITH Flame-Glo LIPSTICK

MATCHING ROUGE, FACE POWDER AND CAKE MAKE-UP AT ALL 10c & 25c COSMETIC COUNTERS

ANOTHER REMARKABLE florida fashions VALUE

Be Gay in . . .

florida FASHIONS

BAGPIPER PLAIDS

If you're a housewife, if you work, if you're at college or school—day time or date time —you'll love these lustrous, colorful Scotch plaids at this exciting low price.

$3.98 each
2 FOR $7.75

Highland Lass Looks like a two piecer but isn't—pert peplum and tie-back bow. Prim pique collar with gay ribbon. 6 bright buttons and front pleated skirt. Colorfast cotton—mercerized and washable—$3.98.

JUNIOR SIZES 9 TO 15

Bonnie Lass Tabbed to make you trim and pert for Fall. Dapper as its Johnny collar, bright as its shiny buttons. Twelve-row elastic midriff. Colorfast cotton — mercerized and washable—$3.98.

Kiltie Lass Beau-catching artist bow and tie-back belt, jaunty puff sleeves dramatize the tiny bodice. Diagonal plaid curves your hips, flares to wide hemline. Washable colorfast cotton—$3.98.

SEND NO MONEY • WE MAIL ON APPROVAL
Full satisfaction or money back

Write for FREE Style Folder

florida fashions
SANFORD 462 FLORIDA

Please send on approval the BAGPIPER PLAIDS indicated below at $3.98 each (2 for $7.75) plus postage. I may return purchase within ten days if not satisfied. (You save C.O.D. fee by enclosing purchase price plus 20c for postage; same refund privilege.)

How Many	Style	Circle Size				Circle Color
	Highland Lass	9	11	13	15	RED Plaid BLUE Plaid
	Bonnie Lass	9	11	13	15	RED Plaid BLUE Plaid
	Kiltie Lass	9	11	13	15	NAVY & Red ROYAL & Blue

Name
Address
City & State

picked up a hundred times a day and wore to shreds. When Larry was making Down to Earth and The Swordsman, she'd be in bed all day, getting hypos every three hours. When he got home, she'd be up and dressed for dinner. Letters continued to go to Betty. In one, she enclosed her recipe for watermelon pickles. "Larry's crazy about them, and I might forget to give it to you when you come."

Between her and Larry, cancer had never been mentioned. At the beginning, everyone said, "Don't tell her," and having started that way, it was difficult to stop. So each kept on pretending that the other didn't know, and the doctors went to elaborate lengths to cover up. She let them think they were fooling her. Only to Curry, the good nurse, did she give herself away.

"There's something I'd like you to do for me when I'm gone."

"Such talk!" said Curry briskly. "Don't be foolish."

Nenny patted her hand. "I'm not as foolish as some people think."

Larry's convinced that what kept her going was her will to hang on till Betty came back for good. Betty'd been signed to an M-G-M contract, but had to stay with Call Me Mister till the end of the year. All the burden of Nenny's last letters was, "When are you coming, honey? I want to see you and Larry settled together." When she came on the 4th of January, you could almost see the relief with which Nenny let go. The boy wouldn't be alone now. He'd be all right with Betty.

the real goodbye . . .

One evening he went in to say goodnight to her. "Stay a little, Larry. I'd like to talk to you." Quietly, she told him all that was on her heart to tell him before she went. How proud she was of him, how she wanted him to go on, how dearly she loved him and Betty, what a wonderful life she'd had.

"You know, Mother?"

"About the cancer. I've known all along."

It was their real goodbye. Larry came out and closed the door after him. It was the only time Betty saw him break down. A week later Nenny died.

On the mantel in Nichols Canyon stands an old-fashioned clock that chimes the quarter-hours. It used to stand on the mantel of a green-shuttered house outside Joliet. For Larry, it's a link between then and now. Like the tattered Bible, and a hundred tangible things. The strongest links are his memories. They'll keep his mother alive as long as he lives.

But the dear, warm, laughing presence that might have continued to bless those who loved her is gone. There are others who may still be saved. That's why Larry went out at the Runyon Memorial meeting, and said what he had to say.

WILL YOU TALK FOR $5?

Got an earful? We're listenin'—so make it good, and make it about a movie star, if you please. For instance, were you there when it happened? Don't ask us what—that's for you to say! (Take a look at our "I Saw It Happen" boxes.) Not only will we give you both ears, but we'll hand them to you on a crisp five dollar bill—if we use your anecdote. So dig down into your memory box and bring up something true and amusing that we've never heard before. Just say it in writing to the "I SAW IT HAPPEN" Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, New York. Do you want an audience? We're it!

OUT OF UNHAPPINESS

(Continued from page 24)

where she had gone with her seven-year-old son, Jamie, for a very much needed rest.

"We had a delightful time together," he told me at the studio the other day. "We both like to swim and go motorboating, and we love the long walks in the mountains. And we found out that we both also love to get away from the Hollywood hurlyburly."

And when I talked to Hedy at her Beverly Hills home, I found an entirely different girl from the one who, only a few months ago, was surveying the somewhat tattered and frayed ends of a marriage that had been just too tempestuous.

"I feel wonderful," she confided. "I have new ambitions and hopes and plans. All my unhappiness is gone. Now I have set my course and I can say I'm completely happy.

"Up at Lake Tahoe, Mark and I went dancing one night. It was the first time I had danced in five years. You can't imagine, Florabel, how it feels to be relaxed and carefree again. Up there at the lake we just lived for the day, from day to day. We made no plans. The time went by like a dream. Dances, plenty of laughs, long walks, and just quiet talk.

the quality of kindness . . .

"I learned something about Mark that I like and admire. He is at heart kind. You wouldn't believe what a rare quality simple kindness is. He is tolerant and understanding. He loves the children and they love him."

The friendship of these two gifted people goes back several years. She liked him and was impressed by him from the beginning. And he had seen and admired her in pictures, especially Algiers. Let's listen to Mark's own story of that perhaps fateful day when the two first really met.

"I was playing a bit part at Warners in Passage to Marseille with Michael Curtiz directing," he related. "Miss Lamarr came to our set as a visitor. Mr. Curtiz introduced us. We had lunch together, and she told me there was a part in her next picture that she would like to have

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I was working in Omaha, managing the record department for a local chain store. One day a teen-aged customer came in with another "kid" and asked to hear Perry Como's new recording of "Deep In The Heart Of Texas." We bickered for a while because I said there was no such recording and the customer said a recording had been made a week before in Kansas City. He added that it was even going to be featured in the theater across the street. I thought I was being ribbed, so I ribbed them back. That night I took in the Ted Weems' show across the street. The "kid" who had come in with my customer grinned at me in the audience, and sang his latest Decca recording. It was "Deep In The Heart Of Texas," and the "kid" was Perry Como.

Beatrice Westbrook
San Antonio, Texas

It's keen chewing gum

Most everybody loves the refreshingly different, clean taste of Dentyne —it's keen chewing gum!

And Dentyne owes its popularity to more than delightful, long-lasting flavor alone! Its firm chewy texture helps keep teeth sparkling, too.

Every time you enjoy Dentyne, you enjoy the quality result of 75 years of Adams manufacturing know-how. Try the other Adams quality gums, too. Always—buy gum by Adams

Reg. Trade Marks

me play. It went farther than the mere suggestion. She took the matter up with the studio people, actually attempted to borrow me. The picture was Experiment Perilous, the last one Hedy made at RKO before becoming a producer on her own hook.

"I should have liked very much at the time to have had the part, but Warners not only refused to lend me; they put me on layoff into the bargain."

Perhaps it would be dramatic at this point to proclaim that here was an instantaneous case of love at first sight, but that would be misleading. Hedy and Mark liked each other but it was only one of those casual Hollywood friendships, based on mutual esteem. "We used to meet accidentally from time to time," said Mark, "in drugstores, going and coming, but that's all."

The meteoric rise of Mark Stevens since those early days is film history. Always a stormy petrel, he has steadily resented any belittling move on the part of his employers. Feeling honestly that his years of struggle entitled him to better breaks than some that were offered, he has always taken a firm stand. He did well at Warners; made an excellent impression in all his roles. The break came when he objected to a "lineless bit" in a film, refused to show up for work, and got what he was hoping for—a cancellation of his contract.

a new start . . .

He went straight to 20th-Fox, and a succession of films that have placed him right up there on top. It appears in the bag, now that I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now has definitely established him as one of the top discoveries of the year.

I may observe right here that one of the factors that seems to bring Hedy and Mark together and give them something in common is that both found success the hard way, through struggle and disappointment. They're on top now but both can look back only a few brief years to a time when failure was predicted for them.

Mark battled hunger, privation, and stern family disapproval to find his place in films. Hedy came to the film capital heralded as a ravishing beauty, who had won a somewhat questionable fame by appearing in Ecstasy, a picture which stirred some qualms among the censors. But she never got much of a chance to act.

"Now we can laugh about the days that are behind us," Hedy says. "We find that we have a lot to talk about together, because our experiences getting a foothold were a good deal alike.

"It's true that I wanted Mark for a picture from the first time I met him. I felt that he had a great talent. I still feel it, more than ever. I wanted him so much for Experiment Perilous, feeling that the role of the young poet in that film was a great chance for him. I tried hard to get him for Dishonored Lady, but the 20th Century-Fox people would not let me have him. I still want to do a picture with him and perhaps the opportunity will come one day."

Hedy made a naive admission to me. The day we talked, she was busy getting ready to attend Tyrone Power's party, a farewell get-together of Ty and a lot of his friends before his departure for Africa. She was having a pretty new dress made.

"Imagine it," she said, "my first party in so long that I feel like a debutante. Really, you know, I've been in hiding. Why, it seems to me, I knew more about Hollywood the first day I saw it than I do now. The night clubs, the restaurants, the places where people go—I don't know them at all. Only the other night, Mark and I went to the Mocambo for dinner and dancing. And afterward, we went to the Chanteclair, a new place. New to me, anyway. I had never seen it. It was fun. We went to the Champagne Room, which is the new name for the Crillon, and I saw lots of my old friends. I felt like a girl getting out and around for the first time. That's why I say I'm really living again."

Hedy and Mark had proceeded pretty far along the road to a firm friendship before their friends or the curious professional gossips of the town had any inkling that they were interested in one another. Her marriage broke up before his did. In each instance, separation was the culmination of long-standing incompatibility, and in each case the break came with a complete lack of recriminations. About a month after Mark and his wife, the former Annelle Hayes, agreed to go their separate ways, a mutual friend of Stevens and Miss Lamarr suggested a dinner.

"I'm so busy," this friend said to Mark, "that I'm going to ask you to get Hedy on the phone and make the arrangements." Mark tells of the incident with boyish pleasure, constantly referring to Hedy as "Haidee." He said that he did phone Hedy and while they were chatting he said, "Why wait until next week? Why don't you and I have dinner together tomorrow night?"

dinner for two . . .

And that was their first date. He escorted her to the Swiss Chalet, an attractive little place on Wilshire Boulevard en route to Santa Monica, a sort of family dining place. They must have found a great deal to talk about and a powerful mutual attraction for they met often from that time on, always dining at some out-of-the-way spot. There's really no place in the world easier to hide in than Hollywood. The people who are seen in the swanky places often are courting publicity and hoping they'll be noticed, but it's very easy to keep a budding romance quiet merely by avoiding the fashionable crowd.

Eventually, of course, the whisper about Hedy and Mark did get around. Columnists and press agents "planted" them together in well-known spots which Hedy had never even seen. That amused her. "Now I'm really going to see all these bright spots where I'm supposed to have been," she told me.

Soon the divorce of Mark and Annelle will have passed through its legal stages, if all goes according to schedule. From the way Annelle talked to me, I'm quite sure that she planned to place no obstacle in the way of Mark's career or his "pursuit of happiness," no matter where this latter may lead. She is a girl with a great deal of poise and reserve, not at all given to discussing her private life, but she left no room for doubting that she and her husband had come to a definite parting of the ways.

Annelle has custody of their very young baby and will retain it. Mark has great affection for the child, a boy named after himself, Mark Richard, Richard being his own real given name and Mark, a handle, attached for professional reasons. "Annelle is a very charming girl," he told me, and I'm sure he meant it wholeheartedly.

all this and heaven . . .

Readers of MODERN SCREEN may recall how Hedy revealed to me some months ago that if she ever married again her choice would be a younger man. Although I make no predictions as to the eventual outcome of her friendship with Mark, one thing is undeniable—he does meet her specifications. The two of them really have everything, all the ingredients that would naturally go together to make a romance of the kind people love to hear about. Youth, talent, assured positions, spacious opportunities, common interests—all these and beauty too. Will they make the plunge, and will they make a go of it if they do? It's all in the lap of the Hollywood gods, who are sometimes fickle.

Look at your tickets again, Harold.

EVELYN KEYES

star of

Columbia Pictures'

"THE MATING OF MILLIE"

"Be Lovelier Tonight!"

"My Beauty Facials bring quick new Loveliness," says this famous star

"You'll be delighted with the way Lux Soap facials leave skin softer, smoother," says lovely Evelyn Keyes speaking to you at her dressing table.

"Smooth the fragrant Active lather well in," she tells you. "Then rinse with warm water, splash on cold. As you pat gently with a soft towel to dry, skin takes on fresh new beauty!"

Don't let neglect cheat you of Romance. The gentle beauty care Evelyn Keyes recommends will make you lovelier tonight!

In recent tests of Lux Toilet Soap facials by skin specialists, actually 3 out of 4 complexions improved in a short time.

Another fine LEVER product

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use Lux Toilet Soap— Lux Girls are Lovelier!

GENUINE REGISTERED
Keepsake
DIAMOND RINGS
Trade Mark Registered

Never a Love so True.....
Never a Ring so Cherished

For you . . . the finest, a genuine registered Keepsake Diamond Ring. Only one diamond in hundreds meets the exacting standards of quality which distinguish every Keepsake Diamond. Identify Keepsake by the name in the ring, and the words "guaranteed registered perfect gem" on the tag . . . as illustrated. Let comparison prove that a Keepsake gives you higher quality and greater value than an ordinary ring of the same price. Better jewelers are Keepsake Jewelers. Prices from $100 to $5,000.

A. SHIRLEY Set 129.75
Engagement Ring 100.00

B. CASTLE Set 262.50
Engagement Ring 175.00

C. LADY DIANA Set 350.00
Engagement Ring 225.00
Also $350 and 500

D. HEATHER Set 362.50
Engagement Ring 350.00
Also $100 to 2475 and in platinum $300 to 3450

E. WELLESLEY Set 550.00
Engagement Ring 450.00
Also $600 and 750

All rings illustrated available in white as well as natural gold
Rings enlarged to show details
Prices include Federal tax

Look for the name "Keepsake" in the ring, and require the Keepsake Certificate of Guarantee and Registration.

KEEPSAKE DIAMOND RINGS, A. H. Pond Co., Inc.
120 E. Washington, Syracuse 2, New York

Please send the useful 20-page book, "The Etiquette of the Engagement and Wedding" . . . a complete guide to social correctness in planning the betrothal and wedding events . . . with illustrations and prices of Keepsake Rings and the name of the nearest Keepsake Jeweler. I enclose 10c to cover mailing.

Name .....

Street and No.

City

MSC 11-47

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

It's pleasant to reflect, and it must be even pleasanter for them, that they leave no wounds to heal. Annelle, who was a talented actress before she met and married Mark, told me that she plans, as soon as current strains are in the past, to get into the Hollywood swim herself, and reconstruct her career. I think she has every chance to make a success. She'll have Mark rooting for her, and Hedy too, I'm sure. The clash between her and Mark was purely one of temperament. One of those situations that grow imperceptibly. When they decided to call it a day, the thing was done with no great fanfare.

A formal and precise announcement of their separation was prepared by the 20th Century-Fox publicity department, and handed simultaneously to reporters, columnists, and wire associations. No one got a scoop. It just happened that on that same day the news that June Haver and her husband, Jimmy Zito, had split up, also was revealed. Some gossips promptly leaped to the conclusion that there was a connection between the two events and that June and Mark, who had only recently completed co-starring in I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now, were romantically attracted. But such a guess was away off the beam.

As matters stand at this writing, neither Hedy nor Mark is free to discuss marriage and you may depend upon it, neither will do so until both are free. But Hedy is a very happy girl—the happiest I've seen her in all the years I've known her. I'll stop on an intimate little note that every woman will be certain to understand.

"I'm interested in clothes again," she told me. "I'm interested in my beauty—and I was so, so tired of it! For years I was content to go about in slacks. I wanted people not to notice me. Now—well, this is it!"

Elizabeth Taylor . . .

M-G-M star you're going to love in the title role of Cynthia, soon to be released. In it she plays a teenager, gets her first movie kiss—and it's her first starring role.

Elizabeth had exactly one day in New York before she sailed on the Queen Mary for her native England—so we were proud as anything to snag her during that hectic day to pose for us in this dreamy leopard-spotted coat.

Now listen carefully: This coat is reversible! It is fuzzy white all-wool on one side—stencilled leopard cloth on the other—and it has pockets on both the leopard side and the wooly side. We repeat! It's reversible—you can wear it leopard side out, or white side out. And the darling little head-band, which comes with it, is reversible too!

Can't you see yourself in this coat, leopard side out, at football games—then looking like a white angel, wool side out, at Christmas time—and switching merrily back and forth to suit your mood all winter?

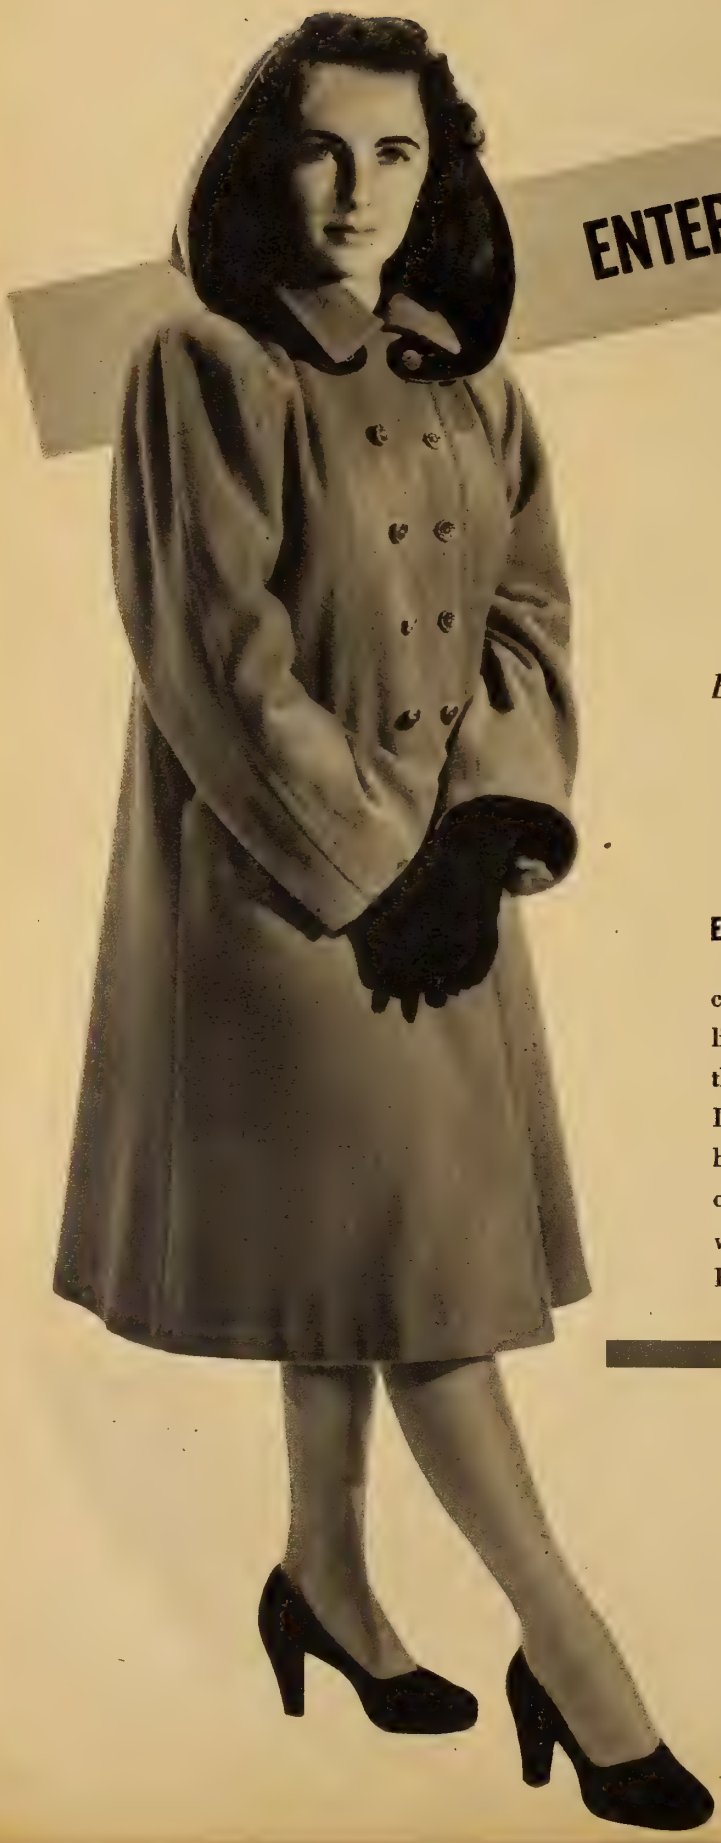
You can also buy it in brown fuzzy wool with leopard; or beige with leopard. Sizes 10 to 16.

A Becker Original About $35

To find out where to buy coat and shoes turn to page 94.

modern screen fashions

ENTER: THE HOODED COAT . . .



By Connie Bartel, Fashion Editor

ELIZABETH TAYLOR

covers her pretty head with a velvet-lined hood—and steps out in one of the prize young coats of the season. It's soft all-wool suede cloth—gold buttoned. The hood, bless it, buttons on and off. Black, brown, grey, green, wine, or blue. Sizes 10-16; 7-15.
By York Mode About $25

FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 94

..THE COAT
WITH THE LEOPARD LINING

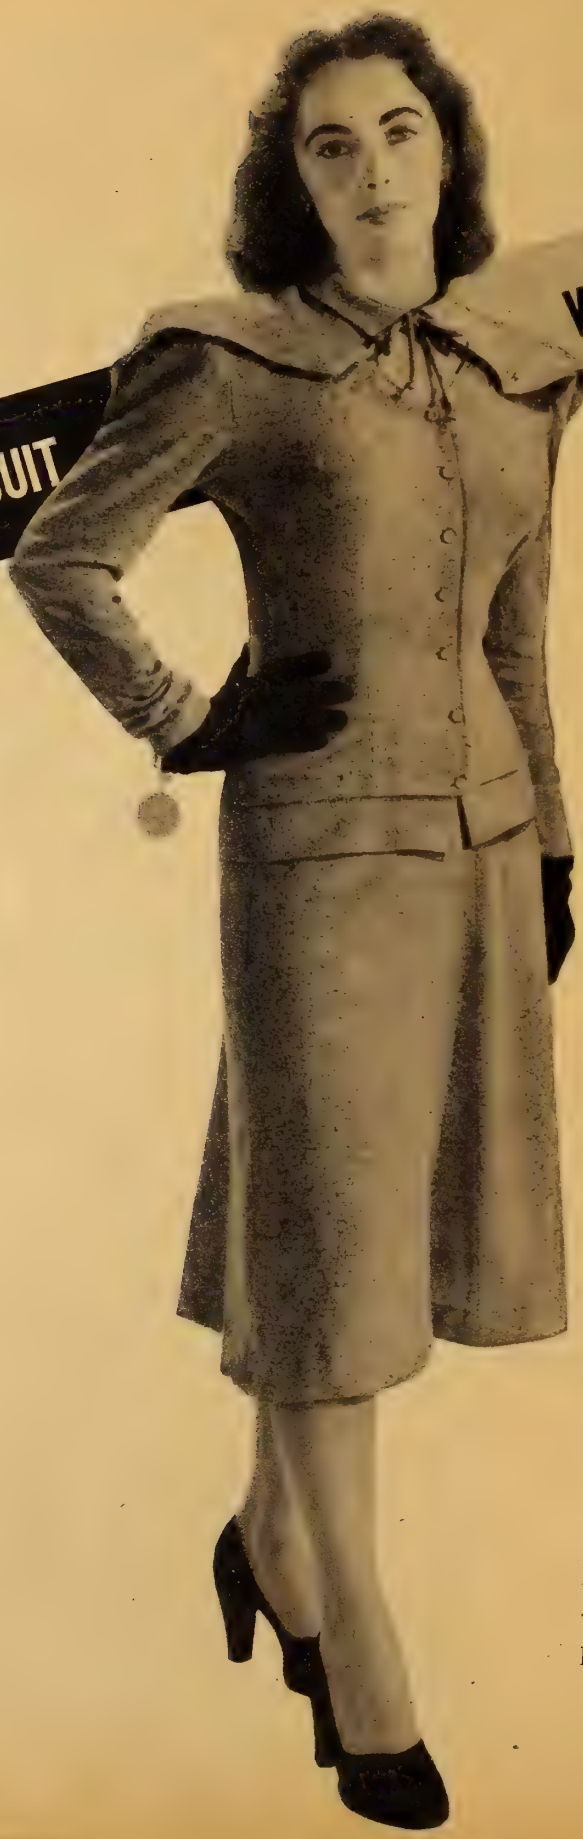
ELIZABETH TAYLOR

wraps up in a coat that's pure drama. It's lined and faced in lush, plush, thick-piled leopard cloth—and it's made of soft wooly "Cloudown" in kelly, wine, brown or black. If you want to stop the show, this does it. Misses' sizes 10-18; Juniors 9-17. By Judy Nell About $35

ENTER: THE SUIT WITH THE CAPELET SHOULDER



FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 94

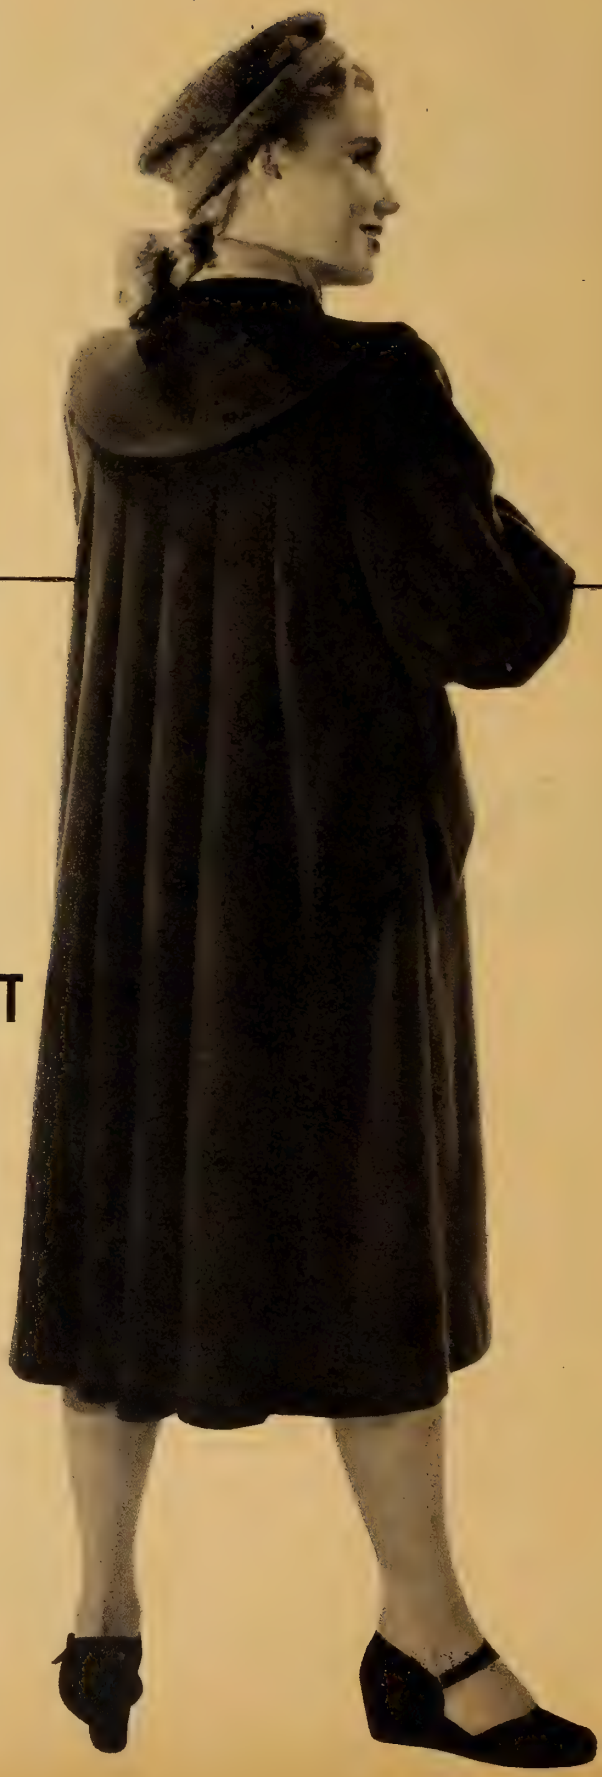
ELIZABETH TAYLOR

models a long torso suit with the trickiest neckline in town:—it makes like a cape; ties under a little collar; leaves a tiny bit of throat bare! Note fuller, longer skirt—and fit. In black and white, or brown and white wool and rayon mixture. Sizes 9-17. By Jonathan Logan About $14.95

. . . SUIT WITH HIP INTEREST

JACQUELINE WHITE

RKO's pretty, blonde, young up-and-comer—currently in Crossfire and soon in Memory of Love—strikes a hip-hip-hooray pose in a suit with hip interest—biggest fashion point in suits this fall. Note smart cuffed sleeves. Black and white, or brown and white. Rayon and wool. 9-15; 10-16.
R. & K. Original About $14.95



FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 94

ENTER: THE FULL BACK COAT

JACQUELINE WHITE

models the very, very highest fashion in coats—the longer coat with the very, very full back. This is New York's favorite—the fashion world's favorite—this is it. Graceful, big-collared, easy to wear over everything. Black, brown, green, wine, winter white. All wool suede by American Woolen Company. Misses sizes 10 to 18. Junior sizes 9 to 15. By Junior Prom About $35.

VACATION FROM MARRIAGE

(Continued from page 12)

There was only one difference, now; she was no longer living with him.

Although another "perfect" marriage seemed to be approaching the rocks, Cornel Wilde denied it. "We are just taking a vacation from each other," he insisted. "I have been working too hard, too long. I need a rest. My wife needs a rest."

Patricia Knight said nothing. She merely smiled and let Cornel talk.

All through dinner, Cornel chatted lightly, making eyes across the table at his wife who was not living with him, exactly as if he were twenty-two and she seventeen. Which they had been when they first met ten years before.

"It's just the same," he said, later. "I'm courting Patricia all over again just as I did then. It's fun."

It was fun ten years ago. New York, and cut-rate seafood dinners at the Cape Cod Oyster House on 43rd Street, and Pat finally blurting out that the reason she didn't eat much was not to hold the bill down, as he suspected, but because she couldn't stand seafood.

Days at Jones Beach, lying in the sun. They had no money, but they enjoyed being together.

They came back from being married in Elkton, Md., without so much as a dime between them for subway fare to the Victoria Hotel, in midtown Manhattan, where one tiny room was to be their bridal suite—at a cut-rate. Then they moved to the St. James Hotel, on 45th Street, and eventually owed the kindly manager, Perry Frank, hundreds of dollars in back rent.

dreaming out loud . . .

But always they had their plans, and they talked of them. They dreamed aloud of a day when they would be successes, have a spacious home, a flowering garden covering an acre of ground, fine clothes, good food, ample money to pay their bills on the first of the month, entertain their friends freely, and have enough left over to buy each other presents.

In Hollywood, the dreams began to come true.

"You've never seen such a couple," said Tony Martin, Cornel's close friend. "The moment Cory left the set he rushed straight home to Patricia. He wouldn't stop and talk for even five minutes. Now —well, I don't know why troubles have to come to such nice people. But they seem to, somehow. Story books are out-moded. All you have to do today is look around you to see real stories."

Hollywood has seen, before now, many happy marriages crack wide open under the pressure of double careers.

"There is nothing like that with us," said Cornel Wilde. "We are happy each has a career. We started to have double careers when we were first married. Even before that. We want double careers. Patricia's is interesting and exciting to me, and mine is to her."

They have both worked so hard that the background to their present story began to unfold when Patricia won the lead in Sol Wurtzel's production, Roses are Red. For two whole nights prior to the first day of shooting they stayed up rehearsing her in her part. She reported to the set highly nervous, wrought up, worried at what she would do with her first big break. But she worked like a Trojan.

During this time Cornel was shooting It Had To Be You (Continued on page 89)

Carole King DRESSES FOR JUNIORS

"SOUVENIR"..Color combined with black in Carole King's own gay manner to define the perfect dress for fall doin's. Of rayon Telecrepe in junior sizes 9 to 15. Under $11.00. Exclusively at one fine store in your city.

ENTER: WINTER BLONDE

JACQUELINE WHITE

proves that in the dark of winter—you can't do better than make your entrance in blonde, beautiful beige. It's terrific with black. Especially this suit with feed bag pockets to point up your hips. (We can't harp on hips too much—fashion is hipped on them!) Wool and mink hair. Sizes 10-18.

By Henry Rosenfeld About $17.95

FOR WHERE TO BUY
turn to page 74

(Continued from page 87) at Columbia. He worked day after day, yet found time to send presents to Patricia's cameraman and film cutter, two very important individuals in making a picture.

A national picture magazine asked to do a series of pictures of Cornel. He said, "Certainly," and then trotted them over to Patricia's studio on his first day off in weeks, when he could have been resting, so that they could be photographed together and she would get the benefit of his break in the magazine.

An evening at home was no rest. Patricia was spending more time at night studying her part than Cornel was spending on his. Their dream house had become a workshop.

Eventually, their two shooting schedules were finished, and they went to Catalina Island. Then came the startling report. It said Cornel Wilde had started to swim out into the Pacific, intending never to return, and that Patricia Knight had frantically sent a boat after him! The report said, too, that when the boat found Cornel far from shore, he had refused aid or interference and had continued swimming!

Friends of Patricia and Cornel shook their heads, puzzled and bothered. Others merely laughed at the report.

"Don't believe that tale," they said. "If she sent a boat after him, it was a gag of some kind. He's a trained athlete, who likes long workouts. When he was ready, he turned around and swam back, didn't he?"

cornel moves out . . .

The story continued to unfold when Patricia and Cornel returned from Catalina. She remained in their Benedict Canyon home while he moved into the swank Bel Air Hotel with Tony Martin.

Neither Wilde appeared in public. Cornel would simply sit and read, or talk. "Most of the time about Patricia," said Tony.

Years ago, the answer would have been that some nice people work too hard for success and do not know how to handle it when it comes.

Cornel and Patricia had no loneliness when he was tramping Broadway. She wouldn't let him quit the stage for a regular job. "I have confidence in you," she said. "You'll win, somehow. Meanwhile, let me dance."

She danced. In the chorus of DuBarry Was A Lady for thirty weeks at $35 a week. Then he got the break she knew would come to him, with Laurence Olivier in Romeo and Juliet, and Hollywood was only a step away.

Today, news comes that they've reconciled, that they're already back together again in their dream house, with its acre of garden flowers, in Beverly Hills.

Cornel Wilde says that their separation was a "vacation" because each was tired. It was understandable that they should be tired, after what their double career had demanded. Toward the end of It Had To Be You at Columbia, a professional technician who has seen Wilde in operation ever since he came to Hollywood exclaimed, "Cornel used to be quite a swashbuckler. But he looks right now like he's ready to buckle more than swash."

The "vacation" of Patricia and Cornel was the result.

However, in spite of their gaiety at La Rue's and the bounce he began to show as he started his second courting of Patricia, it would be risky to guess whether their reconciliation will take. Still, Cornel has won every fight he has ever had —against adversity, against Broadway, against rivals for the hand of Patricia Knight before she became Mrs. Wilde, against Hollywood itself, at first. Give odds that he will win this one against success.

Gay Ballerina

only $5.98

It's your gayest, your most romantic, your very loveliest dress! We've spared none of the precious fabric to give you the widest skirt you've ever seen, to swirl and swish like a ballerina's. Ruffles of gleaming, multicolored plaid taffeta ripple all around the skirt and across the bodice and cap sleeves. The peek-a-boo neckline ties with a perky bow. Long, 20" zipper down the back; step into your dress after your hair is done! Elegantly made, with self-covered belt and buckle. Finest rayon faille, in fetching colors:

Gala Black, Forest Green, Mink Brown

Sizes: 9-11-13-15-17.

COME IN OR MAIL COUPON

Preview Fashions

275 SEVENTH AVE., NEW YORK CITY
Retail Shop, 19th Floor

SENT ON APPROVAL

PREVIEW FASHIONS, Dept. D-411
275 Seventh Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.

Send this lovely dress on approval. I'll pay postman $5.98 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. If not delighted, I may return dress for refund within ten days. If prepaid, we pay postage. In New York City add 2% Sales Tax.

Size	First Color Choice	Second Color Choice	G B

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE ____ STATE _____

SEND NO MONEY

ALL I HEAR IS . . . The Gobby! The Gobby! The Gobby!

WIN FAME AND $500 IN TISH-U-KNIT'S SWEATER GIRL CONTEST

2 divisions — $500.00 1st prize each (50 other grand prizes)
1. Photo Contest: Send in your picture in any sweater.
2. Essay Contest: Write an essay about sweaters.
Movie, modeling, fashion writing career opportunities.

THE GOBBY*—LEADING ENTRY FOR ANY SWEATER GIRL'S WARDROBE. It's the newest smoothest sweater in years. Duffle-Bag pockets...New ribbed gob neckline...and a Presto-Torso* English Drape drawstring back so you can wear the Gobby casual or pulled into the new torso shape. 100% wool. Skipper blue, marine blue, gulf green, skivey white, signal red, shore tan or fog grey. 34 to 40. About $5.

DON'T SAY SWEATERS, SAY

Tish-u-Knit designed by Leon.

Ask for Free Contest Blank at stores everywhere. For Free Fashion Folder, write TISH-U-KNIT, 1372 Broadway, N. Y. 18. Canada: 303 St. Paul Street, W. Montreal.

*Reg. App. For. Patent Pending.

GAY! COLORFUL! ACCURATE MINIATURE REPRODUCTIONS OF FAMOUS BRANDS!

"LOOK-ZY Miniature BRACELETS"

8 MINIATURES
ON A FINE METAL LINK CHAIN...
$1 (plus 20% tax or $1.20 total)

Miniatures are shown actual size

A No. 1 favorite throughout the nation! Exact copies of popular brand foods, soaps, soft drinks . . . so brilliantly colored, so accurate you can read every word with a magnifying glass. Perfect for costume tricks, too. Order for yourself, for gifts.

Buy Look-Zy Miniature Bracelets at:

ABRAHAM & STRAUS..... BROOKLYN, N. Y.
SAKS-34TH ..... NEW YORK CITY
MARSHALL FIELD..... CHICAGO, ILL.
FAMOUS-BARR..... ST. LOUIS, MO.
HALE BROS..... SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

and other leading stores everywhere, or order direct from Precision Miniatures

PRECISION MINIATURES (MS)
5147 Brown Ave., St. Louis 15, Mo.
Enclosed is money order or check for____ bracelets at $1.20 ea. (includes tax).

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Please print clearly). Sorry, No C.O.D.'s

Letter from the Fashion Editor

Dear You:

Thank you so much for all the mail we've been getting. There's nothing we love so much as a nice, fat, bulging mailbag—and we're honor-bound to answer each and every letter just as fast as we can.

And how about a letter from all of you gals we haven't heard from yet? You know, the sole purpose of MODERN SCREEN Fashions is to make you the best dressed girl in town—at the very lowest possible prices. We are terribly eager to feature exactly the dress, or coat, or suit you're looking for—at exactly the moment you need it—at the price you want to pay. We try to run this Fashion Section as you tell us to—that's what we're here for.

So how about giving with some information? Do you like what we're doing? Prices low enough? Would you like more jackets—skirts—date dresses—or what? How do you stand on suits—do you wear them, or do you prefer a change of dresses under a winter coat? What do you think of the coats we're showing in this issue? What price do you like to pay for shoes?

See what we mean? We're teeming with questions about you. Every time we look at a hat—or dress—or whatever—we're thinking of you. Would you like it? Would it look wonderful on you? Would you consider it a good price?

To help us feature fashions as you want them, how about putting pen to paper and writing us all about yourself—your clothes problems, your pet fashion loves and pet fashion peeves?

And while you're at it—will you fill in the coupon below about sizes? (You know how important they are!) Don't even bother to run for the scissors—just rip it out and shoot it to us. And if you haven't time for a letter at the moment, be sure to fill in and mail the coupon—right now, while you're thinking of it—won't you?

We want so much to be sure we're showing fashions that fit you.

Waiting eagerly to hear from you.

Connie Bartel

What we want to know about you!

PLEASE FILL IN SIZE AND MAIL—THE QUICKER THE BETTER

I WEAR SIZE:

..... in Misses Sizes (10-20)

..... in Junior Sizes (9-15)

..... in Five-Foot-Four-and-Under Sizes (10-20 for petites)

..... in Teen Sizes (10-16, cut especially for teens)

..... in Half Sizes (14½ to 24½)

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

Mail to: Connie Bartel, Fashion Editor Modern Screen 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

The Most Revolutionary Undie Designed in a Decade!

You DON'T need a Girdle?

You DON'T like a Garter Belt?

THEN YOU'LL BE MAD ABOUT...

Suspants

Reg. App. for

by Blue Swan

The undie that can be worn with garters ... and never slips off the waist.

All you fashion-wise lassies can pass the good word along...SUSPANTS is the thrilling new star of the "undie" world. It's goodbye to girdles and garter belts! Just attach garters and you have an undie—with GARTER TABS—that suspends stockings wrinkle-free, and mysteriously hugs your waist whether you bend, twist or stand on your head. The secret is the new "pivot-point" bias pattern — which neutralizes, thus eliminating, all pull. Moreover, SUSPANTS exerts just enough figure control to make it the perfect accessory for evening and daytime wear — with or without garters. Featured at all leading stores... individually cellophane wrapped ... about $1.00, in all colors.

JUNIOR MISS SIZES: 9 TO 17

Blue Swan

MILLS

Division of McKay Products Corp.
Empire State Bldg., New York, N.Y.

A McKAY PRODUCT
Pat. App. for

He's helpless in your hands with the New HINDS!
Hands soothed with Hinds Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream are lovelier—instantly! Hinds is enriched with beautifying lanolin . . . protects longer . . . never feels "sticky." If you want him "helpless in your hands," try the New Hinds today—it's now in a handsome larger "Beauty Bottle" . . . giving you an average of ⅓ more lotion for your money. Four convenient sizes, 10¢ to $1.
FASTER!
SOOTHING! LANOLIN-ENRICHED!
Now in the new Beauty Bottle

INFORMATION DESK

by Beverly Linet

RICHARD BASEHART of Repeat Performance and Cry Wolf was born in Zanesville, Ohio, on Aug. 31, 1915. Is 5′ 9″ tall, weighs 148 lbs., and has blue eyes and sandy hair. Is married to Stephanie Klein. Write him at Eagle-Lion, Hollywood, California.

JEAN SIMMONS, who scored in Great Expectations and Black Narcissus, was born in England 18 years ago. She has blue eyes and brown hair and is unmarried. Write her at Gainsborough Films, Wardour Street, London, England. Next picture: Hamlet.

WENDELL COREY debuts in Desert Fury. He was born in Dracut, Mass., on Mar. 20, 1914. Is 6′ 2″ tall, weighs 192 lbs., and has blue eyes and brown hair. Write to him at Paramount, Hollywood.

Freddie Young, N.Y. Schumann's Traumerei, Dedication, Concerto in A Minor, Piano Quartette, Arabesque, Cantata from Faust; Liszt's E-Flat Piano Concerto; Brahms' Fourth Hungarian Dance, Cradle Song, Symphony No. 1, Rhapsody in G Minor were the pieces played in Song of Love.

J. A., Hollywood: Buddy Clark did the singing for Mark Stevens in I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now. Gene Nelson was the blond dancer in the pic. Write them at Fox, Beverly Hills. And that darlin' office boy on the newspaper in Dust Be My Destiny was Dick Clayton. He's just out of the Navy and expects to resume picture work shortly.

Dot McCall, Ill. Barbara McAvoy, Box 611, Quogue, N. Y., has the Elizabeth Taylor Club; Kathy Campbell, 3602 Rock Creek Church Rd., Wash., D. C., has one for Darryl Hickman; Jean Benson, 214 7th Avenue, San Mateo, Calif., has Scotty Beckett's.

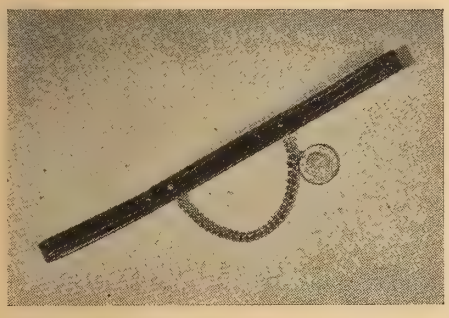
For answers to any questions on the movies or stars, or the ENTIRE ACADEMY AWARD LIST SINCE ORIGIN, or HOW TO START A FAN CLUB, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Beverly Linet, Information Desk, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

SPECIAL OFFER

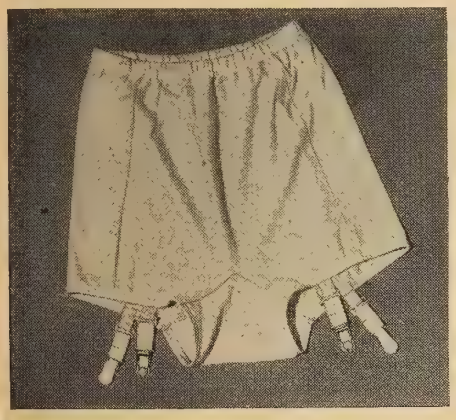
SUPER-STAR INFORMATION CHART—1946-'47 (10c)—A new edition of the chart that's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia of fascinating data on all your favorite stars. 100 additional names never before listed! Please send 10c in coin to Service Dept., MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

modern screen shops for you

BY MAXINE FIRESTONE



Neat 'n' nifty handmade cowhide belt. The coin chatelaine comes off to make a link bracelet with a twist of the wrist. Natural or black leather. $3.50. Mention belt size. Order from Ruth Gobel, 392 Neptune Ave., B'klyn, N. Y.

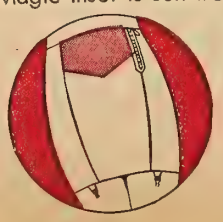


"Suspants" is a new type panty with four garter tabs to eliminate the need for a garter belt or a girdle on junior type figures. Made of run-proof rayon. White, black, tearose, blue, maize. By Blue Swan. $1. Stern's, N. Y.

Look at this—steel grey ombre pearls. Nothing beats the finished look pearls give a slick black dress. Just try this double strand necklace next time you want to come out of your shell. By Richelieu. $4, plus tax. McCreery's, N. Y.

Write for FREE BOOKLET on corset and brassiere fitting comfort. Address Ruth Stone—"Perma-lift" Stylist, 1143 W. Congress St., Chicago 7, Ill., Dept. 44

Miracle of miracles, a sleek new girdle that STAYS UP WITHOUT STAYS. No more wrinkling, rolling over, no more discomfort found in old-fashioned boned garments. Your beautifully styled, lightweight, comfortable "Perma-lift"* Girdle eliminates all that. A Magic Inset, soft yet firm, prevents your "Perma-lift" Girdle from wrinkling, rolling over . . . gives you smooth, comfortable support. Best of all, the "Perma-lift" Magic Inset is self-ironing, withstands countless washings and wear. For a comfort thrill beyond belief, wear a new, youthful, lightweight "Perma-lift" Girdle, Pantie, or Foundation. At fine corset departments everywhere—most styles 5.95 to 12.50. The perfect companion to your "Perma-lift" Brassiere — AMERICA'S FAVORITE BRA—with The Lift that never lets you down.*



*"Perma-lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Lovely JOAN MURRAY selected as Miss Stardust of 1947, now a Walter Thornton Pin-Up Girl.

Stardust Life-Insured Slips will not sag, twist or ride up, thanks to their clever 4 gore cut. In fine acetate rayon crepe, with double bra top, adjustable straps and extra-strong, double-stitched flat seams. Made by Stardust, Inc., Empire State Building, N. Y. 1.

In New Lengths

Don't reach for that cookie but do reach for a Real-form Girdle or Panty Girdle! Raschel-Knitted of fashioned to fit Lastex with removable crotch. Can't run! $5.00.

REAL-FORM GIRDLE CO., 358 Fifth Ave., New York 1

Write for Free Illustrated Booklet, Dept. 4D

The sox you'll be wearing this season!
New styles, new colors at your favorite shops now!
35¢ to $1
Trimfit SOX
They're Wear-Tested!
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
For nearest store, write:
Trimfit EMPIRE STATE BLDG., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices may vary throughout country)

Becker Original leopard cloth and wool reversible coat worn by Elizabeth Taylor in color photograph (page 81)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Baltimore, Md.—The May Co., Downstairs
Buffalo, N. Y.—Sattler's, Coat Dept., Main Floor
Chicago, Ill.—Goldblatt's State Street Store, Junior Deb Dept.
Detroit, Mich.—Sam's, Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, Subway Fashion Floor
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Downstairs Coat Dept.

Alligator calf pumps worn by Elizabeth Taylor in color photograph (page 81) In wine, green, red or brown, $4.99

At all Kitty Kelly stores in:
Chicago Philadelphia
New York City Washington, D. C.

York Mode hooded coat with gold buttons worn by Elizabeth Taylor (page 82)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Boston, Mass.—Jordan, Marsh Co., Teen Age and Junior Miss Depts., Downstairs
New York, N. Y.—Stern's, Teen Age Dept., Downstairs

Judy Nell leopard-cloth lined coat worn by Elizabeth Taylor (page 83)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's
Milwaukee, Wis.—Schuster's, Budget Shops, Fashion Floor
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, Downstairs Coats
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Downstairs Teen Town and Jive Way

Jonathan Logan suit with capelet neckline worn by Elizabeth Taylor ('page 84)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Boston, Mass.—E. T. Slattery Co., Junior Miss Shop, Second Floor
Dayton, Ohio—The Elder & Johnston Co., Collegiate Dept., Second Floor
Indianapolis, Ind.—H. P. Wasson Co., College Shop, Second Floor

R. & K. Original suit with hip interest worn by Jacqueline White (page 85)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Boston, Mass.—R. H. White's, Fashions, Second Floor
Chicago, Ill.—Chas. A. Stevens & Co., Junior Deb Dept., Fifth Floor
New York, N. Y.—McCreery's, Junior Celebrity Shop, Fourth Floor
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Thrift Shop and Little New Yorker Shop, Fourth Floor

Junior Prom big collared, full back coat worn by Jacqueline White (page 86)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Cedar Rapids, Iowa—Armstrong's, Downstairs Style Shop
New York, N. Y.—Hearn's, Economy Coats, Second Floor

Madcaps flannel hat (page 86) about $4

Kansas City, Mo.—Chasnoff, Inc.
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, Madcaps Bar, Main Floor

Henry Rosenfeld suit worn by Jacqueline White (page 88)

Altoona, Pa.—The Wm. F. Gable Co.
Baltimore, Md.—Stewart & Co.
Cincinnati, Ohio—The John Shillito Co., Casual Dress Dept., Third Floor
Detroit, Mich.—B. Siegel Co., College Shop, Second Floor
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, Budget Dresses, Third Floor
Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Co., Casual Dresses, Third Floor

If no store in your city is listed write: Fashion Editor, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

MOVIE REVIEWS

(Continued from page 22)

a few special performances. Bouchet is insulted, and retires to her dressing-room in tears.

Small Meg, understanding very little of all this, knows only that her beloved ballerina is unhappy. She decides that somehow she must manage to spoil La Darina's opening. It might, she thinks, be very funny if, in the middle of the dance, all the lights went off. So, just at the climax of the performance, Meg reaches up and pulls a switch. Then she runs as fast as she can out of the building. But it was the wrong switch, and as a result La Darina will never walk again . . .

The pieces of this highly sentimental plot are pulled together by a Mr. Paneros, better known as Danny Thomas, who is sad and funny by turns.—M-G-M

THE FOXES OF HARROW

Stephen Fox is a man to remember, and—played by Rex Harrison—a man to fascinate every woman who sets eyes on him. The illegitimate son of a well-born Irish girl, he comes to America with his mind on just one thing. He is going to establish a fortune and an estate that will be the pride of each succeeding generation of Foxes.

His start in New Orleans is hardly auspicious. He is branded a professional gambler, but there is an air about Stephen Fox which enables him to carry off any situation. Perhaps it's the cool humor in his hazel eyes, or perhaps it's the black pearl he wears in the silk stock at his throat.

Stephen makes one friend immediately—Andre LeBlanc (Richard Haydn), who is engaged to young Aurore D'Arceneaux (Vanessa Brown). And one enemy—Aurore's spirited, haughty sister, Odalie (Maureen O'Hara). The moment Stephen sees Odalie, the blood of his distinguished Irish ancestors starts doing nip-ups. Here is the girl for him to marry. The girl who will found with him a dynasty of Foxes. But Odalie will have nothing to do with him—yet.

It takes him years to win her, but in those years Stephen carves Harrow from the bank of the turbulent Mississippi. Harrow, an estate matched in magnificence by no other.

(Continued on page 132)

The Foxes Of Harrow: After years of wooing, Rex Harrison marries willful Maureen O'Hara.

THE Lovable GIRL-OF-
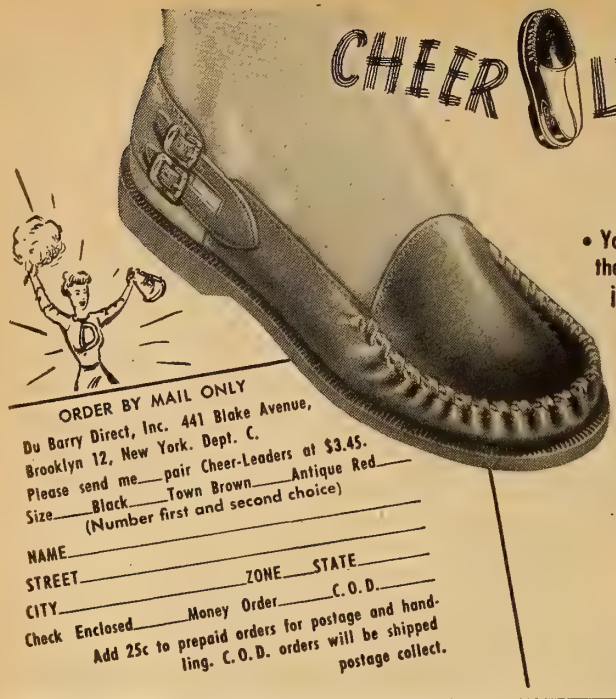
THE-MONTH
Miss LOVE LINDSEY
of Ocala, Florida
Chosen as "Queen of Queens" at Miami Beach from among 108 lovable contestants. Of course, she wears a Lovable Brassiere!
Miss Lindsey wears
Lovable Brassiere #840
in Satin and Lastex, at $2
You'll Look Lovely, too in a Lovable BRASSIERE
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
Lovable Brassiere Co., 358 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.



CHEER LEADERS!

$3.45

• You'll cheer too when you wear them! These CHEER-LEADERS are just the thing to wear back to school. Grand for after class capers and week end fun. They're hand laced for extra good looks, have comfortable sling backs with double straps and adjustable buckles. Of pliant Elk that's sturdy enough to take all kinds of wear. ALL PURPOSE ORTHOPEDIC RUBBER SOLE. They come in all over Town Brown, Black, or Antique Red. MEDIUM WIDTH ONLY. Sizes 3 to 10.

ORDER BY MAIL ONLY
Du Barry Direct, Inc. 441 Blake Avenue, Brooklyn 12, New York. Dept. C.
Please send me___pair Cheer-Leaders at $3.45.
Size___Black___Town Brown___Antique Red___
(Number first and second choice)
NAME_____
STREET_____
CITY_____ ZONE___STATE_____
Check Enclosed____Money Order____C. O. D._____
Add 25c to prepaid orders for postage and handling. C. O. D. orders will be shipped postage collect.

what size dress do you wear?

MISSES? TEENS? FIVE-FOOT-FIVE-AND-UNDER? JUNIORS? HALF SIZES?

modern screen fashions

FOR DECEMBER INCLUDE HOLIDAY CLOTHES. IN ALL OF THEM!

arrow captures young proportions* . . . in the contoured copa bra contour cups A, B, C, in varying lengths for every figure type.
AT BETTER STORES EVERYWHERE
ARROW BRASSIERE COMPANY
230 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

TEETH should show in your smile
NEVER in your HAIR-DO

Teeth never show with Goody*
KANT-SLIP* COMBS

Because only Kant-Slip Combs have CONCEALED Tight-Gripping Teeth

Only Goody Kant-Slip Combs have this overlapping patented construction making the teeth invisible in your hair

ONLY 10c

Available in a variety of popular sizes at leading 5 and 10c stores and notion counters.

*REG. TRADEMARK

FOR BETTER HAIR AIDS
BETTER REACH FOR GOODY

"HIMSELF"

(Continued from page 53)

I got to yer set," I says.

"Victuals ye would follow anywhere, O'Brien," he says. "You remember McBride?"

McBride that fed us when we were a pair of unemployed play-actors? I would be as lief to forget the Blarney Stone or the grand St. Patrick himself as the McBride.

"And 'twas you that made a blithering pig of yerself, that evening, O'Brien," says he.

He has a memory as tight as a Scotsman's fist, he has. And before the company and all he told it on me.

'Twas in those bleak days when we were flatter than Paddy's foot, and to town came the McBride, an old friend, with money in his pocket.

So one fine evening he takes us to a place on Lexington Avenue where the calories are plentiful and cheap, and we order up the sixty-five cent steak with trimmings. I am consuming the heavenly food like a furnace when I note that both Tracy and McBride are weaving, and growing a bright Irish green around their handsome gills.

"'Tis pizen," says Tracy. "'Twas the fish."

And McBride gulps and demands fresh air, and maybe an ambulance.

But, dear reader, after living the past seven days on pretzels and water, I could have enjoyed the sole of a Hungarian's boot, and I says, "Begone with yez, leave a man eat in peace."

'tis a quarrel between 'em . . .

"I will not walk with such a man," says Tracy, after watching me devour my steak, and he wouldn't. So uptown we stalked, him on one side of the street and me on the other, and to bed we went in our room without ever a word spoken, and Tracy glowering at me with the wrath of Brian Boru.

But before long I was disturbed in me fashionable dreams.

"Pat," he says, friendly like.

"Yeah?" says I, being cautious.

"Good night, Pat," he says.

'Twas as close to a quarrel as we ever came, and I have been knowing the man these thirty-two years, from the time he was a shaver in Milwaukee, six months younger than meself.

Seeing Tracy in his grand suit in this Cass McTimberlane drama, elegant and impressive, reminded me of our dress suit, and this is how that was:

Through some little miracle when the saints had smiled on me, I had work in a stock company, wearing a very fine soup and fish provided by the stage manager. But in spite of me fine acting, the play closed in the provinces, and without a farthing to pay the actors, either.

'Twas the dress suit I got instead of cash, and after a grand, loud dicker, Spence parted with five dollars for a half interest in the beautiful suit. It kept us in walk-on parts for months, that suit.

"'Tis about time for a dress suit party," I said to Mister Tracy.

"And so it is," says he.

For it is our habit, now that we have grown accustomed to eating three great meals every day most of the time, to set a time once a year and dine together on elegant food at some famous place, both wearing dress suits, newly pressed, with an extra piece of pie.

Seeing the Tracy in all his glory minded me, too, of his father, a grand man and bless his soul, and what he said when he first glimpsed his son acting on the stage. Mr. Tracy was the head of a trucking business, and it was his wish that his boy follow in his footsteps. He came backstage after the play and said:

"Son, I just sat there thinking about that nice new five-ton truck we got. It's a wonderful truck, and I couldn't help thinking that you'd look right at home up on the driver's seat."

But Spence kept on acting, as you know, and when he got to a play called The Last Mile, in which he played Killer Mears, the lid was off for sure, and Spence was started as a great star.

At the time of Spence's triumph in The Last Mile, I had returned from another disastrous road company tour, and I was broke, roaming the streets, when I heard about this grand opening of a new play.

I had enough to get into a fourth row seat in the balcony, and 'twas a lovely sight, the great spectacle of Tracy knocking the folks dead with his talent and his great, calm authority. He took seventeen curtain calls, and when that was over, I hurried around back stage, thinking maybe just to shake the hand of me old pal.

Ah me, the carriage trade was all back stage, looking at Spence through their lorgnettes.

But when the doorman told him Pat O'Brien was there to see him, the Tracy gave the back of his hand to all his fine new friends, and walked away from them as if they were a swarm of bill collectors, an old friend being the most important thing in the world to him even at the moment of his greatest triumph, with Broadway at his feet.

Did you know how Spence and I got started acting? I might as well tell you, now that this piece is getting rather long.

After we'd both served in the Navy, in World War I, that is, there was a great generous plan subscribed to by the State of Wisconsin for the education of veterans. Like the Veteran's Bill of Rights today.

So we approached the great State of Wisconsin, and we said, "Sir, 'tis actors we would be, and you have no acting school to send us to, us veterans who won the war for you at Great Lakes Training Station. Why not send us to school in New York?"

on thanksgiving day—when you count your blessings— don't forget tyrone power on the cover of modern screen's december issue on sale november 7

Striped Symphony

$6.95

You'll be the center of attraction in this alluringly striped Wool and Rayon, with the season's new hip emphasis. Has fashion's favorite diagonal closing and military flaps, highlighted by a flash of silvery buttons. Three-quarter length sleeves. Zipper placket. Sizes 9 to 15.

COLORS
Grey with Wine & Turquoise
Grey with Lime & Black
Natural with Brown & Blue

Dixie Shops
275 SEVENTH AVE., N. Y.

SEND NO MONEY!

DIXIE SHOPS . . . 275 Seventh Ave., New York 1, N. Y. . . . Dept. MS3

Send me the "Striped Symphony" Dress. On arrival I'll pay the postman $6.95 plus postage.

SIZE—9 ☐ 11 ☐ 13 ☐ 15 ☐

1st Color Choice_____

2nd Color Choice_____

NAME_____ (Print)

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

MONEY BACK GUARANTEED IF RETURNED IN 10 DAYS

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Yes, even finest soaps and soap shampoos hide the natural lustre of your hair with dulling soap film

● Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave dulling soap film! ● Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. ● Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! ● Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant! ● Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! ● Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! ● Buy Halo at any drug or cosmetic counter.

Reveals the Hidden Beauty of Your Hair!

And the great State of Wisconsin fell for the story, and that's the truth of the matter, and that's why Spencer Tracy and Pat O'Brien are actors today.

You would want to know about Mister Tracy today, if I had had a chance to interview him, instead of gabbing about the grand old times, and what Spence is doing today would surprise you.

He is painting. Yes, me darlin' readers, oil painting.

"It teaches you to see," he tells me, "to see wonderful things, new beauties in line and color, in street cars and gasoline stations, even.

"And it doesn't have to be good, mind you," he points out. "Not at all. Because you do this painting to please yourself, and hang the results in the basement."

Also, himself is raising horses on a ranch in the San Fernando Valley, and you will be interested, of course, in what kind of horses. Old horses.

This is because he is a grand sentimental man and cannot bear to get rid of a nag once he has clapped a leg over him, and he has ten of these senile steeds today!

When the members of the Club are in town, we see a lot of Tracy. The Club, which hasn't a name but might be called the Hollywood Hibernians, is composed of some fine fellows known to the public as Spencer Tracy, James Cagney, Jimmy McHugh, and Pat O'Brien—an elegant collection of fine gentlemen.

That brick-topped Irisher, Mister Cagney, is the one who told me at the Club one evening that Tracy is a superstitious man, a thing I never suspected before.

over the bounding main . . .

It turns out these adventures were in a 22-foot yawl, returning from Catalina at dusk, and the seas running higher than the dashboard of a 1920 Cadillac, and it got to be a ticklish question of whether they would turn back or go on.

Finally, they sighted land, a couple of knots to sta'board, and the skipper bellered:

"That's the time we beat Ole Debbil Sea!"

They tell me the Mister Tracy froze to a lanyard, or something.

"Don't say that, you fool!" he shouted. "You curse the sea and we're still two miles off shore!"

When the mood is on him, there is no telling what fabulous thing the man may do. 'Twas Cagney who went to New York with him one trip, and a grand time they had on the train, telling the old tales, and when they pulled into Pennsylvania Station, Cagney said:

"Spence, you'll be busy this morning and I'll be busy this morning, so late this afternoon I'll call your hotel and we'll talk about dinner some place."

And Spence naturally said that would be all right, and so Cagney called him.

"Mr. Tracy just left," said the clerk. "He checked in, then checked out immediately and took the next train back to California."

You might never suspect it, but Spence is the great-granddaddy of all worry-warts, and many's the time that he's told me that his acting was no good, his script was no good, and the whole screenplay was no good. These spells usually come on him when he's making something especially elegant, such as Captains Courageous, or Boys' Town, each of which won him an Academy Award.

When he works, as you probably know, he even abandons his fine home in the Valley and moves in town with his brother, Carol, who has an apartment over an office on South Beverly Drive.

He has done a couple of wonderful things which I would interview him about, except that you cannot get him to open his lip about them. It is a fact, for instance, that he took a likely kid, sent him through college and medical school, and that lad is now a full professor of medicine at a famous Canadian university.

And the John Tracy Clinic, named for his son John, is as wonderful a thing as you will want to hear about. This is the school for deaf children run by Mrs. Tracy, with Spence behind the scenes, helping out with the necessary. The only time I ever heard Spence talk about it—and it's close to his heart, too close for palaver—was not long ago when he was on a radio program for Louella Parsons, and he said it about like this:

"John, our son, who has never heard anything, is now in his third year in college easily holding his own with other boys. What has helped him is that his mother learned how to train him from childhood. Mrs. Tracy started the John Tracy Clinic. It's the only school of its kind in the country. They train not only the children, but more importantly, the parents. Our Clinic is a small thing in its way, but I hope it gives other people in other communities the idea to do work along these lines. . . . There is no such thing as a deaf and dumb person. The only reason a deaf child cannot speak is because he cannot hear."

So you are bound to see how it was I had a fine, wrangling, yarn-spinning time with Tracy on the set, but didn't get a thing out of him.

I don't know whether I could write the grand lyrical piece about him, anyway. I'm too close to the subject, too admiring, to tell you the confidential truth, and the guy's great warm talent for friendship, is too overwhelming a thing to get on paper.

Also, dear reader, you will understand that I couldn't be putting it down in writing for publication that I think maybe this Tracy is the greatest actor in the world. Tracy knows me too well. He would grab my shillalagh and beat my brains out, probably, if I wrote anything like that about him. Too bad—for my story might win the O'Pulitzer Prize!

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I'm a car-hop in a drive-in on Sunset Boulevard in Hollywood. One night a young man wearing dark glasses drove in, and after looking over the menu, asked with a British accent, "What would you suggest?" "The spaghetti and meatballs are very good, sir," I replied. "Oh, I say! Isn't that rather fattening?" he exclaimed, and then he added, "My studio says I must watch my calories." Thinking he was just another Hollywood wolf trying to make an impression, I said in my best la-de-dah manner, "I know just how you feel. It's the penalty we stars must pay for our success. For my last picture I simply stahved myself for months and months." Then we both laughed and he decided on iced tea and cottage cheese salad. When he had finished and I was handing him his change, he removed his glasses. I found myself gazing into the twinkling eyes of Peter Lawford. Handing me a liberal tip, he said, "Buy yourself some tea. It's very non-fattening. We stars have to keep our figures, you know."

Dona V. Stephens,
Los Angeles, California

Kiss-thrilling Skin

Excitingly soft, caressably smooth—your skin, like silk, with Jergens Face Cream! Jergens contains Vitone, a superlative new skin-smoother; finer than lanolin! Tests by skin specialists show: with Jergens, 8 out of 10 complexions improved..."Skins softer, fresher, smoother"!

All-Purpose...plus Vitone

Four beauty aids in one jar! Jergens Vitone-rich Face Cream cleanses... softens...helps smooth tiny dry-skin lines...: acts as clinging powder-base. Enriched with Vitone to satin-smooth your skin, yet costs no more than ordinary face creams. Used by lovely women everywhere. 10¢ to $1.25. (Plus tax)

VITONE: new skin-smoother...finer than lanolin itself in JERGENS FACE CREAM

A Cleanser.....
A Softener.....
A Dry-Skin Cream
A Powder Base....

Free! Prove to yourself at our expense what Vitone can do for your skin!

Please send me generous trial-size, free, of Jergens Vitone-enriched Face Cream.

MAIL TO: Box 57, Cincinnati 14, Ohio

436

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(Paste on penny postcard, if you wish. Sorry, sample offer good in U.S.A. only.)

Avoid underarm irritation...

...use YODORA

the deodorant that is ACTUALLY SOOTHING

Wonderful! Yodora stops perspiration odor safely, quickly . . . yet is positively soothing to normal skin. Made with a face cream base, with no acid salts to cause irritation, Yodora actually helps soften your skin, like a face cream. No other known deodorant gives this PLUS protection. Try Yodora, the soothingest deodorant. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

BRUSH AWAY GRAY HAIR ...AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE now, or

Write for FREE TEST BOTTLE

Mention natural color of your hair. Send a post card today—BROWNATONE, Dept. 29-N, COVINGTON, KY.

aim for a beautiful complexion!

■ Your prize is a petal-soft, radiant complexion. A few minutes every day are required. There's no profit from cream which sits untouched on the shelf all winter long. The use of soothing creams and lotions helps you to the prize. Wouldn't you like a complexion as pretty as Ingrid Bergman's?

Creams come in wide varieties. Wonderful is "cold cream," which cleanses, lubricates and protects the skin. There's also a wide array of "general purpose creams." The textures vary but the creams have much the same uses. For cleansing only, there are "melting" or "liquefying cleansing creams" made with a mineral oil base. To be good (that's how you want it) any cleansing cream must (1) become liquid at body temperature, (2) be light enough so that it does not destroy the elasticity of the skin.

Especially if your skin is dry, use a lusciously rich "night cream." And you needn't skid on the pillow with a greasy face! Apply the cream; your skin will absorb all it can possibly use in twenty minutes. Smooth off the excess with a convenient tissue . . . and sweet dreams!

For waking moments, there are makeup aids. Preliminary to powdering, cover your face with "vanishing cream" and let it remain on for a full minute. (Continued on page 113)

Want a complexion smooth and clear as the Hollywood stars have? Here's help! Learn the creams and lotions that will beautify.

BY CAROL CARTER, BEAUTY EDITOR

BREAKDOWN

(Continued from page 41)

healing she could no more fulfill her obligations at home or studio than a man with galloping pneumonia could swim the Irish Sea.

Vincente Minnelli, who had directed her last picture, The Pirate, knew it, too.

He was devotion itself when the decision was made that Judy should go away. He told her to think only of getting well. As for themselves—it was entirely up to her. He would stay if she liked. He would consent to go, or separate if she liked.

Judy was worn out. I knew that, time after time, Arthur Freed, the producer of The Pirate, had to send her home because she just wasn't up to her work.

The studio heads knew about Judy's condition when she left Hollywood. They made the arrangements. She traveled to northeastern Maine, and a private sanitarium. She placed herself completely under the best medical care, including the close supervision and constant attention of one of the finest psychoanalysts in the country. And that, according to a letter she has just written to a friend, seems to have done the trick.

"I feel like a new woman," she wrote. "I've discovered the outdoors, sports, sun! Imagine, I can eat, and I want to eat! I can sleep and never think of a sleeping pill. I've gained a little weight and I've never seen such lovely people, such peace!"

When a girl makes such a fuss about discovering these simple joys (even if they are the hardest in the world to capture!) she must not have had much chance to stumble across them before. And that's Judy's story. She didn't.

the spirit is willing . . .

People think of her as a slim, dark-eyed beauty who can act and sing like an angel. That's a tribute to her artistry. But she's not an angel! Judy Garland, even as you and I, is flesh and blood. And she was only three years old when she first broke into public life by toddling onto a stage before a large theater audience!

That was when her parents and two sisters were a family vaudeville act. Judy has been before the public one way or another, ever since. It affected her growing up, it still affects every phase of her life. When she began losing her first teeth as a five-year-old, it wasn't just in the presence of her family. Whole audiences were party to the coming of the awful gaps, and it seemed to Judy that eons passed before the gaps were finally filled in by her second teeth. Ask your child psychologist how that could affect a sensitive child!

When other girls were going through their "awkward age" blithely indifferent, Judy couldn't be. There were a thousand pairs of eyes on her nightly, and twice daily on Saturdays and Sundays!

And then came Hollywood and pictures.

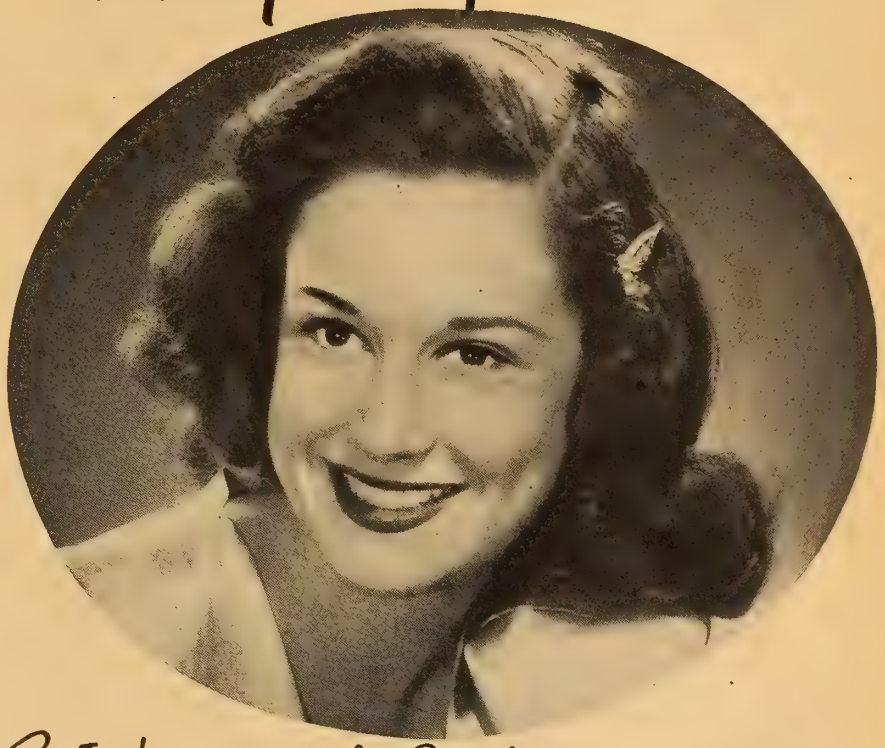
Judy was about fourteen and already she had experienced many a sleepless night. Judy was a professional actress, fighting for a place in the sun and saddled with all the tension and responsibilities of such a position. Other girls of her age were giggling at nothing in particular, but how could Judy giggle?

I remember when Deanna Durbin, who started out in pictures at the same time Judy did, scored such a hit in Three Smart Girls. Judy came to me. "Oh, Hedda!" she wailed. "I'll never get anywhere! Deanna's made a wonderful picture and I've done nothing! Just nothing! I'll never get anywhere!"

Pat's the darling of New York! The most wonderful men want to date her. For the breath-taking beauty of her SweetHeart complexion simply bowls them over!

Pat Marlowe, BEWITCHING COVER GIRL, Says:

Beauty's My Business—



So I changed to the Gentle FLOATING LIFT of SWEETHEART SOAP'S Extra Lather!

Discover SweetHeart's Floating Lift Beauty Care! Night and morning, massage your face one minute with SweetHeart's extra lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Skin is cleansed . . . stimulated . . . more radiant!

• "I'm thrilled to look in my mirror after this SweetHeart Beauty Care," says Pat. "My skin looks simply radiant! And it's silken soft to touch."

Try Pat's beauty care. See how pure, mild SweetHeart Soap gives you billows of luxurious extra lather. Heavenly soft, rich lather with a gentle floating lift. Pictures taken through the microscope prove this amazing action.

Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off—float away—dirt and dry skin flakes. It's wonderful beauty help to unveil deep-down loveliness. Your complexion's true beauty is revealed!

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

• For tub and shower, you can now also get the new, large bath size. SweetHeart's extra lather with its floating lift is marvelous.

Advertisement

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

At the first blush of Womanhood

by
VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm — There is nothing "wrong" with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome — Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike — Don't take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid's exclusive formula. That's why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses—more men and women everywhere—use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself — You'll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don't be half-safe — During this "age of courtship," don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

I knew differently. I tried to tell her; to laugh her worries away. But she wouldn't be consoled and turned from me—a fourteen-year-old girl with tragedy already plain in her eyes! She didn't know then how high she would go, or how hard she would work, or how much fun her success would take from her. Not that she would have stopped. She had to go on.

Remember when Judy was making the early Andy Hardys, Babes on Broadway, and those others with Mickey Rooney, some eight years ago? Everyone wondered how she could stand the grind. "But then, she's so young and fresh and plump," they all said.

What they didn't know was that Judy was paying a price. She was using up more energy than she had.

This was the "happy girlhood" of Judy Garland. And she was just a girl. It came through every once in a while despite everything. You know. You heard it in her voice when she sang "Over the Rainbow" in The Wizard of Oz. You heard it again in that wonderful, "You Made Me Love You, Mr. Gable!" I know it was the girl in her singing that song because, believe it or not, up to then she had never met Gable though they both worked on the same lot, and she had a crush on him just as devastating as any one of a million other girls of her age at the time!

This was Judy, then, living on excitement, applause, hard work and music. Check that last word. Judy was music crazy.

beautiful music together . . .

You can't live on music, but Judy tried to. She even married it! Enter David Rose. Here was a mating that was exactly like one of David's own compositions. It went rollicking along, up and down the scale, skittering, dancing, getting faster and faster until suddenly it ended with a cymbal-crashing finale.

It was sometime after the separation, that Judy and I were talking about the opening of her latest picture. She was to attend with Mickey Rooney. "Hedda, don't you think I ought to have an Adrian gown to wear to the opening?" she asked. She begged me to agree. I did, publicly, in my column. When Judy went to the opening she had on an Adrian gown—compliments of Mr. Louis B. Mayer, her studio boss.

I think Judy subconsciously hoped the gown would do something for her. It did. Neither I, nor Louis B. Mayer, nor probably even Judy had any idea what real effect it would have. Of course, first of all, it was a sheer delight. But after that, I think that gown made her see herself as a different person—a smart, more sophisticated person, and not the young, appealing girl she was.

She didn't wait to grow; she tried to leap into this new personality overnight, and didn't quite make it. She always fell a little short of the impression she was trying to create about herself. Now, she was neither fully girl nor woman, but shifted back and forth.

If ever a girl needed a steadying force, the girl was Judy, yet when she married her director, Vincente Minnelli, it was the surprise of the town. It is Minnelli who has brought Judy's real genius to the screen in the opinion of many people—again, including Judy. Just before I started to write this, Judy sent word to the studio that she wants Vincente to direct her in Easter Parade.

Vincente had told Metro he was perfectly willing to step out of the picture if Judy preferred, because he is sincere in his desire to have nothing prevent Judy's regaining her health. And, incidentally, if you have heard that someone else is to replace Judy in Easter Parade, you might as well forget it. Judy has told all her friends: "As long as I live, nobody will get that part away from me!"

Yes, the coming together of Judy Garland and Vincente Minnelli was considered a great artistic union at Metro. Judy found in Minnelli a sense of theater, born of his New York legitimate experience, that she had never encountered before. He recognized that Judy was a great screen potential, could go to any heights. He did wonders for her. She did wonders for him. But marriage? No one had given thought to the possibility. Which didn't in the least prevent the marriage, or best wishes from all who knew them both.

But wishes are one thing. Facts are another. Word would come that they were not getting on, that Judy had walked out. And then they'd be back together again. And, of course, they were always together at the studio. But it was when Judy was expecting her baby that I think life really began to catch up with her.

I remember three months before the baby was born, I had planned a shower for Judy—just for men! I had invited all the producers, all the directors, stars, musicians, cameramen; all the set technicians who had known her. They were phoning me like mad asking what they could bring. Among other things there was going to be a miniature baby grand piano for the nursery! And, in the midst of the preparations, Judy's mother phoned. The doctor had taken a stand against the shower! "Judy is just not well enough for all the excitement," said her mother. "A night like that will mean an emotional outpouring, and she just can't stand it."

Everyone in Hollywood had the idea that the birth of Judy's baby would have a wonderful effect on her. That was all she needed to settle her down, we said. But, the stamina she needed badly now, with motherhood coming on, was missing. It had been scattered back through the years.

The baby is lovely, of course. A dark, curly-haired dream child with great big eyes. But the birth left Judy nervous, exhausted, held to her bed for weeks. She tried to regain her strength. She thought she was well, when she started The Pirate. But working was a mistake. She would tire. And then she became perpetually tired. How far is it from this to brooding? To falling prey to any unhappy thoughts? To developing the complexes that assail anyone who is despondent and weary?

Not far. Dangerously near, as a matter of fact. But, thank goodness, these are questions we don't have to bother answering now, as far as Judy is concerned.

"I feel like a new woman," she has written, and the doctor has confirmed this.

it's up to judy . . .

Her baby is waiting for her.

Vincente Minnelli is waiting for her—willing to go on as her husband and director, or step out as one, the other, or both.

Her career is waiting for her, with Annie Get Your Gun all set to follow Easter Parade—and since these two pictures are a pair of Metro's most important properties, you get an idea how she stands with her studio.

And if she follows the advice of her doctors, a more rounded life awaits her; one in which her thinking won't be limited by the borders of Hollywood, but will go on to all the rest of the things that make up a well-balanced existence.

Because Judy really doesn't have to be a "new woman" to find what's "over the rainbow." She just has to drop some of the malignancies that always come with stardom—overwork, over-anxiety, over-self-concentration. Then she'll be Judy Garland, the girl who is a song and a bouquet rolled into one.

That's how simple Judy's story really is!

OF G-STRINGS AND APRON STRINGS

(Continued from page 55)

pretty wonderful."

When Dan hit New York, he had nothing but ideas, and a purse as empty as his stomach. He went to see a dancing teacher named Johnny Madison, and Johnny provided a roof and the grubstake.

Johnny charged $10 an hour for dancing lessons, but he hated to see a customer get away. He turned the poor prospects over to Dan.

At this point, Dan would say to the victim, "I am very busy, but I can see you are a deserving young person so I will make a special concession in your case." Now he admits, "Of course, it was stealing $4 an hour, but a man had to live."

And then, in 1931, there was a hit on Broadway. A show called Stars in Your Eyes, and people were talking as much about that sensational kid, Dailey, as they were about Jimmy Durante and Ethel Merman. That year, Mrs. Dailey not only sat in a packed house and watched her son bring it down, but she sat with her proud husband.

So Dan ended up in Hollywood, and discovered that the joint was full of experts. Their shadows were long enough to hide any young man who had just arrived with hope in his heart and enough in the kick for a one-room apartment and eating fee until the first pay check.

"I got a load of myself competing against Fred Astaire and Gene Kelly," Dan says. "Then I looked around for a place to drop dead."

He did, theatrically speaking, of course.

Dead as only an actor could be who began playing Nazis in such pictures as M-G-M's The Mortal Storm. The pictures were important, but in Hollywood, an actor who snarls keeps right on snarling unless a minor miracle occurs.

In Dan's case, the beginning of the miracle was a draft card pointing out that he was 1-A.

no seat-dusting for dan . . .

He started in the Signal Corps, found out that his career in the Army was going to consist largely of taking dust off a desk chair with the seat of his pants, and managed a transfer to the Cavalry.

Dan had become an expert rider and trainer of horses during his vacation days on Long Island. Only, when he was shipped to Italy, the horses were mules because of the mountainous action of the 80th Infantry Division. There was about a year of this business of rocks and mules, and mules and rocks, and a letter from home once a month.

Then a lot of the war folded up and people went home. Except for a good many thousand men who wound up in a northern province called Venezia Giulia.

Dailey used to get letters from Hollywood announcing the wholesale return of fighting actors. He thought about this while he was out on machine gun patrol, making sure that the guys who had forgotten which side they were fighting on stayed put.

One day, during this inspiring business, he was sent for by a Colonel Holland, who told him morale was getting pretty low, and could he stage a musical show just like a Broadway production in two and a half weeks?

"He didn't have to twist my arm, because that meant I could stay in a town for a while and sleep in a bed."

The musical was called The Low Point

Touch of magic for the hair men love!

Hair that thrills at the very sight or touch of it! Hair that gleams with natural highlights and shadows—sparkles with silken softness—delights with clean fragrance—how can any man help adoring such lovely hair? And today more and more women of all ages are discovering that the secret of this glamorous hair-appeal is Lustre-Creme Shampoo! Not a soap, not a liquid, Lustre-Creme Shampoo is an amazing new dainty cream that lathers luxuriously in hard or soft water, and sweeps dullness away . . . quickly (no special rinse) . . . easily . . . inexpensively. Out of her wealth of cosmetic lore, Kay Daumit blended gentle lanolin with special secret ingredients to achieve this almost-magic cream that introduces a new glowing softness, a wonderful obedience to your hair. Try it. Discover what a world of True Hair Loveliness one jar of Lustre-Creme Shampoo can bring. At all cosmetic counters.

The cream shampoo for true hair loveliness

Four ounces, $1.00
Family 1 Lb., $3.50
Also 30¢ and 55¢ Sizes

See how a fingertipful of Lustre-Creme Shampoo bursts into heaps of fragrant lather. See how tempting it leaves your hair! Not dried—not dulled—not unruly—but silken soft, responsive, sparkling as if you'd given it a hard brushing.

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor), 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Revue, because almost everybody in the 80th Infantry had enough points to have been home sitting at the corner drug store for six months.

Just a year ago, June, Dan Dailey arrived back in Hollywood. By this time, so many men were out that Dan felt a little freakish.

"Anyway, I had a suit of clothes and a sports jacket, with pants. I went back to Metro, ready to go. I was ready to go for a long time. The only film they had on me that amounted to anything showed me in a Nazi uniform looking like somebody had planted limburger in the pockets.

"'Look,' I said a few times, 'I dance.'

"When I got good and tired of that, along came the chance to be Betty Grable's leading man in Mother Wore Tights. I was offered a contract at 20th. I went in to see L. B. Mayer and said I needed to get that picture. Mr. Mayer said it was all right to leave provided I'd come back once a year.

"So here I am, not sore at anybody, and all I say is, 'You tell me what you want me to do, Mac, and I'll do it.'"

Dailey wasn't afraid of mules, but he was nervous about working with Betty Grable, queen of the Fox lot.

In his first scene, he showed how nervous he was. He didn't know how far to pull out the stops.

Betty looked at him and smiled.

"Look, Mac," she said, "I got mine. Go get yours."

And in his personal judgment, Betty Grable climbed onto a high pedestal.

Another thing he learned about Miss Grable: she doesn't talk in the morning.

Every morning, Dan walked into the scene and said, "Hi."

Betty said, "Hi."

Then they went to work.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

In Buffalo we have a teen-age club called, "Club 4:15." It's on the air every day after school. This certain afternoon was important because Lawrence (Dillinger) Tierney was going to appear in person to talk about his latest picture. The handsome Larry walked in and sighs filled the studio. Finally, everyone listened quietly as he described his "tough-guy" role as Dillinger. Suddenly the shrill sound of a siren was heard from outside. Larry laughed and said, "I guess the cops followed me here."

Jo Avigliano,
Buffalo, New York

The gangling Mr. Dailey hardly reflects genteel consideration for the opposite sex, though. He looks tough.

"Once when I needed a few bucks," he reports, "I figured to become a prize fighter. I danced around pretty good, and I could hit all right. There was only one trouble—too much of me and too little of the other guy. I had three fights, and got kicked around. I have a lot of respect for gents who are a foot shorter than I am."

Mrs. Dan Dailey was Elizabeth Hofert before their marriage, and their courtship was as casual and episodic as all Dan's life. It seems one of his friends began to rave about a girl he'd met; the most perfect girl a man could find.

The friend brought the girl to a party.

The girl was Elizabeth Hofert. 5'4" she was, and blonde, but that didn't say it all.

"I figured," Dan remembers, "that my chum would go right out of his mind, so I took her off his hands."

The friend is still raving.

Came Christmas time, 1942. Dan and an army buddy named Bob Eagen secured passes with matrimony in mind. They planed into Chicago and were tossed off by high priorities. They grabbed a cab for the Dearborn Street railroad station, bought tickets, and hoped for last minute cancellations on the Chief.

As it turned out, John Garfield and Spencer Tracy were on the Chief, and each had an upper bunk he wasn't using. The two prospective bridegrooms hit the coast the day before Christmas, faced the minister the next day.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Dailey, Jr., didn't get around to a honeymoon until last year. Then they went to Lake Arrowhead, and rented a cottage a mile high in the mountains. There Dan learned about water skiing. Now and then Mrs. Dailey would look out the window, see a speed boat gaining momentum, and behind it, Dan emerging on one foot.

"You have to learn to come up on one foot first before you can really water ski, honey," Dan kept telling her, "and there's positively no way that I can break my neck. The water cushions the fall."

Mrs. Dailey thought that was dandy.

Mrs. Dailey has confidence in her man.

So does Mr. Darryl Zanuck, because over at 20th, they've seen him in Give My Regards to Broadway and Mother Wore Tights.

Dan Dailey doesn't have to wait until the booker sees his act any more. He can send his laundry out any damn time he pleases.

ADVERTISEMENT OF PEPSI COLA COMPANY

"With a performance like that, he's a cinch for the academy award!"

SOUTH AMERICA, TAKE IT AWAY

(Continued from page 49)

crowd. Nearby, five or six microphones were warming up. Clearing his throat, Bob, accompanied by Fred Myron, who went along as interpreter and general right hand, walked over to say a few words to the assembled throng. But as he started to speak, somebody pushed him away. "Not you, Limberlips."

Abashed, Bob stood aside and the little man who had annoyed him on the plane was led to the speakers' platform. He said something in Portuguese and the crowd went crazy. He happened to be one of the most important citizens of South America, home from a visit to the U. S. A!

On his first night in Rio, Bob was taken down to a radio show m.c.'ed by Pedro Vargas, a very fine Brazilian comedian with whom Bob had once traded gags at President Roosevelt's birthday party in Washington.

"When I walked into the studio, Pedro spotted me and called me up to do a routine. There was a terrific crowd in the place. Finally, I stumbled up to Pedro and for nearly five minutes there was dead air. Nothing happened. No noise, no music. Nothing.

"Then we began. Pedro asked Freddie a question. Freddie repeated it to me. Then I gave him my reply and he fed it to Pedro in Portuguese.

"Pedro, in Portuguese, asked me how I liked Rio. Freddie interpreted. I replied that Rio is terrific, but where are the items on the beach, those lovely accessories? What happened? Somebody on strike?

straight man . . .

"Freddie gave my line in Portuguese. He got a tremendous 'yak' while I stood there big and stupid. Now I know how a straight man feels.

"For a half hour Fred got all the laughs and loved it. I was ready to punch the guy in the head. I told him I'd make the funnies around Rio if he didn't mind. But it was like dope to him. He couldn't stop. He ended up even mugging to get laughs.

"The next day we were invited to a soccer game. Between halves, I was asked in Portuguese, 'How do you like soccer?'

"I answered, through Freddie Myron, that I thought it was wonderful, and told them that next year I'd bring Sinatra down to get a pair of legs. Freddie got a big laugh. I could have stayed in the hotel."

After this disaster, Hope learned how to say, "I think your country, your people and your girls on bicycles are tremendous," in basic Portuguese and Spanish.

"I had to," he claims. "I'd traveled 9,000 miles without getting a laugh for myself."

In the radio stations and night spots of Rio, Hope found the humor of the Americas very similar. Brazilian comedians, for instance, can always get a laugh by merely mentioning the name of Rio's used car genius, an enterprising local boy who calls himself, "Madman Maderas."

South American government officials in bad public favor usually get a merciless going over from local comedians, too, according to Hope.

"When the needle is out for some goof in the South American government, the comics really give him rough treatment," Bob says. "I'd be afraid to walk home in the dark if I needled politicians with "This 'Scotch' Tape sure is handy for wrapping odd-shaped packages."

SLICK TRICKS
with "SCOTCH" TAPE

SEAL BIRTHDAY GIFTS and party prizes with "Scotch" Tape. It's quicker, easier and it makes a neater package.

MEND TEARS in window shades with "Scotch" Cellulose Tape. It's so transparent you'll scarcely see the patch.

JAM AND JELLY labels won't fall off jars or get dirty if they are fastened with "Scotch" Brand Tape.

FOR QUALITY, always insist on "Scotch" Brand Tape in the bright plaid dispenser. 25¢ complete at stores everywhere.

REG U.S. PAT OFF
SCOTCH Cellulose TAPE
BRAND

For sale at all drug, department, variety, stationery and hardware stores.

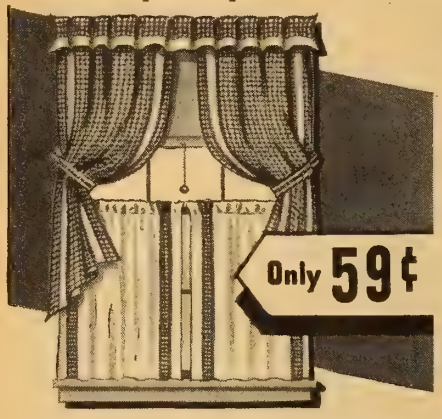
Made in U. S. A. by MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO. Saint Paul 6, Minn.
THE 3M COMPANY

© 1947 3M CO.

Also makers of "3M" Brand abrasives, adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry

My Clopay Windows are a JOY!

how wonderful! Colorful, look-like-cloth drapes for less than a dollar a pair. Graceful as fabric. Matching tie-backs. Full 2½ yards long. Exciting florals, stripes and plaids.



Clopay curtains for every window from attic to basement. Cottage Sets, 59c—Hollywoods, 39c.

and Window Shades, *Lintoned, to look like linen.

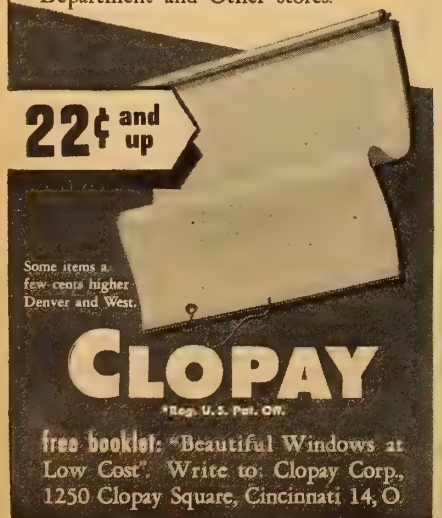
At 5 and 10c stores, Variety stores, Department and Other stores.



22¢ and up
Some items a few cents higher Denver and West.
CLOPAY
*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
free booklet: "Beautiful Windows at Low Cost". Write to: Clopay Corp., 1250 Clopay Square, Cincinnati 14, O.

the determination employed in South America."

While in Rio, Bob and Dolores played golf at the Gavea Country Club, a sprawling course running up to the edge of the jungle, which Hope claims to be one of the most beautiful in the world.

While playing golf there, Bob was bitten on the hand by a tropical bug, which laid its egg in him and buzzed away. A few days later, in Buenos Aires, Hope sat in a doctor's office and watched the doctor lance open the infected bite.

"The golf at Gavea was worth it, however. What a place," Bob sighs. "I sliced one into the jungle, and started in after it. But the caddy wouldn't follow. Only a few weeks before, a golfer and a caddy took off into the woods after a ball and they haven't been seen since."

While at Gavea, Bob hit a ball that landed near a tree on the edge of the fairway. At the top of his backswing to drive the ball back into civilization, he found he wasn't able to complete his stroke. He thought he was paralyzed.

Disturbed, he turned toward the heavy foliage of the tree. There, sitting on a branch, with the club head in his paws, was an evil-faced little monkey. Hope spent the next twenty minutes trying to lure the club out of the monkey's grasp.

On still another hole, Bob had a very difficult lie. It called for playing his golf ball from the coils of a dozing snake.

After satisfying himself that golfing at Gavea Country Club in Rio was not a sure-fire way to attain old age, Bob and his family departed by air for Montevideo, Uruguay.

There, Hope saw Road to Utopia—the Spanish version.

"It was really surprising to hear Bing and me talking Spanish. They made me the funny man in keeping with the Latin tradition, so I have a very high, squeaky voice. Crosby is the hero, so he talks with hair on his voice."

After completing a refresher course in rhumba and samba in Rio, the Hopes considered themselves highly adept in the art of tossing themselves around to the rattle of marachas and the beat of the bombas. One night in Montevideo they spent five hours dancing the two Latin-American dances.

"That was enough," claims Hope. "I dented a lot of fenders that evening. But those people were so wonderful, they never even complained.

"I did have a little trouble with the management of the joint about the bill. He wanted cash instead of toothpaste."

It was also in Uruguay that Bob got a long-distance call from Paramount announcing that the color commitment for Paleface had been obtained and that Bob would have Jane Russell for his

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

This is easier than eating pie—just tell us your favorite movie stars—and then feast your eyes on the next three issues of MODERN SCREEN, for free. December, January and February, that is, for the first 500 of you who return the questionnaire below. Is it worth taking pen in hand? You bet it is! But hurry and be among the lucky 500!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our November issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd and 3rd CHOICES.

Vacation From Marriage (Cornel Wilde-Pat Knight) ☐
If He Didn't Care . . . (Dane Clark) ☐
Out of Unhappiness . . . (Hedy Lamarr-Mark Stevens) ☐
Golden Girl (Lana Turner) ☐
Tee For Two (Clark Gable) by Ed Sullivan ☐
Ed Sullivan's Hollywood Diary ☐
Gentle Heel (Bob Ryan) ☐
They Won't Forget (Larry Parks, Betty Garrett) ☐
Love That Man! (Bing Crosby) by Eddie Condon ☐
Innocent Abroad (Linda Darnell) ☐
The Unclean (Bing Crosby) ☐
Holiday in Mexico (John (Hodiak-Anne Baxter) ☐
The Play's the Thing (Guy Madison-Diana Lynn-Gregory Peck-Dorothy McGuire) ☐
She Never Had It So Good (Diana Lynn) ☐
Breakdown (Judy Garland) by Hedda Hopper ☐
South America Take It Away! (Bob Hope) ☐
"Of G-Strings and Apron Strings" (Dan Dailey) ☐
Himself (Spencer Tracy) by Pat O'Brien ☐
Birth of a Baby (Barbara Hale-Bill Williams) ☐
Daddy (Walter Pidgeon) by Aitkens Pidgeon ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST?.....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

My name is .....

My address is .....

City.....Zone.....State.....I am.....years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN
149 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

leading lady in this new picture.

"That's like punishing a rabbit by putting him in a lettuce patch," Hope told him.

Before leaving Montevideo, the Hope family toured the city in typical tourist fashion, and stopped to be photographed in front of historical landmarks and other local points of interest.

To one group of natives, Bob made what he considered a very funny remark, but Dolores didn't appreciate it. Her suffering glance, however, was observed by young Tony.

Conscious of his daddy's delicate feelings, Tony came to his defense. "Oh, let him go, Mom. He has to milk all his gags dry before he leaves town."

In Buenos Aires, the Hopes were invited to stay at the Albert Dodero estate. Bob already had reservations at a hotel, but somebody recommended that he stay at Dodero's. "A nice little place; you'll love it."

"What a place! A cozy little cottage the size of Willow Run. All the buildings on the Dodero estate are made of marble. Like Forest Lawn with hot and cold running water."

Bob was not the first citizen from Hollywood to enjoy Señor Dodero's hospitality. As he walked in the front door at Dodero's, the first thing he saw was a very large, autographed picture of an actress Bob had met a few times. The inscription on the photograph read, "To Albert Dodero; A million thanks for your wonderful hospitality. Yours, Dorothy Lamour."

surprise for dotty . . .

Bob immediately sat down and wrote a letter to Dorothy, telling her that he had seen her picture on the wall of the Doderos' bathroom, which, of course, was not where he found it.

The Hope visit to Buenos Aires was a shot in the arm for Americans permanently residing in the city. They hadn't been able to find a speaker for their big Fourth of July dinner party, before.

"It was really a fine party," Bob says. "Thirty dollars per person. Of course, this included a ham sandwich and a handful of fireworks.

"I'll always remember that affair. It was a high point in our trip. There I met the only heckler on our entire junket. An American, too.

"What a lovable chap. Gay, witty, and ten-fourths loaded. I thought I'd been inoculated for everything before I left the States. That Crosby, he has relatives everywhere."

A couple of days later, the bug bite that he had received on the golf course in Rio began bothering him. And the next day, he woke up with a bad toothache.

"I thought I was disintegrating. Everything went wrong at once. Finally, somebody touted me off to a dentist to have my jowls examined.

"The dentist turned out to be an Irishman from Pottsville, Pa., named Michael Patrick Henry, who has lived in Buenos Aires for 35 years. What a brogue! He acted like a king-size Barry Fitzgerald.

"When I arrived at his office he was kicking all his patients out the door. I told him not to bother with me, that it was just another toothache. But he tells me that I have to be in good shape for my trip back to the States.

" 'If anything happened to you,' he says, 'who would Paramount get to play straight man for Bing?' "

Through the combined efforts of a doctor and a dentist, Bob and Dolores were able to resume the golfing, sightseeing and vacationing they missed during five days of Bob's illness.

A Word to the Wise...

romantic as a rose...

your hair... like your face...

needs daily make-up!

Ogilvie Sisters Hair Beauty Aids will lend an aura of enchantment to your hair... making the most of your own sweet self....

Special aids for dry, oily hair.

New! Creme Shampoo $1 & $3.50

Highlights Hairinse $1*

Creme-Set 75c & $1.25*

Ogilvie Sisters

HAIR PREPARATIONS

at Dept. and Drug Stores

604 Fifth Avenue • New York 19, N. Y.

Fed Tax.*

"My nail polish lasted 28 days without a single trace of chipping, cracking or peeling"

Says Lovely ADELE MARA starring in Republic Studios'

"THE TRESPASSER"

IMPORTANT! If your dealer hasn't received his shipment of Perma-Nail, send $1 plus 25¢ to cover tax and postage to Perma-Nail Co., Burbank, California. Include dealer's name, address.

THE BASE COAT THAT

REALLY STOPS NAIL POLISH

CHIPPING, CRACKING, PEELING!

Never before a base coat like this, for it adds days — even weeks — to the life of your manicures. Keeps any polish flawlessly lovely for as long as you like — without worry of chipping, cracking or peeling. Buy, try today! Perma-Nail really works — for you!

$1 plus tax, at cosmetic counters and beauty salons everywhere.

the Original PERMA-NAIL Professional Base Coat

THE PERMA-NAIL COMPANY • BURBANK, CALIFORNIA

"One night," says Bob, "we were invited to a party and somebody asked me to do something. I had barely opened my peep when the m.c. thanked me and said, 'Now we'll ask Dolores Hope for a few songs.'

"Dolores got a terrific hand. What a trip, everybody got laughs and encores but me!"

The cosmopolitan atmosphere of Buenos Aires amazed Hope.

"I now understand why they call Buenos Aires the 'Paris of South America.' I don't see how the people can keep up with the tempo of that town. I also don't see how they keep alive."

Following this interlude in Buenos Aires Bob, Dolores, the kids and Fred Myron flew to Lima, Peru.

After an afternoon of poking about in Inca ruins, the party returned to Lima where Dolores made a tourist's attempt to buy out all the town's native metal workers.

shut my big mouth! . . .

"They say that the Peruvians are just about the world's greatest gold and silver smiths. And they are fast. I opened my mouth to yawn and before I could close it, four guys were trying to carve a statue of Simon Bolivar on a molar inlay."

As it does to all tourists, something had to get fouled up before the Hopes' journey was ended. It did.

They were leaving Panama for Barranquilla, Colombia, where they were to catch the boat for the return trip to America, when they were informed by the steamship line that for the first time in 400 years the tide made it impossible for their boat to enter the River Cauca, the mouth of which serves as the harbor of Barranquilla.

To make it worse, they didn't have time to catch the plane for Cartagena, which was their only other alternative.

Hope had grisly visions of himself doing three shows a day in oil-lighted jungle theaters when the U. S. Navy came to the rescue in a fashion reminiscent of The Perils of Pauline (A Paramount Picture).

It just happened that the Admiral in charge of the Navy installation in Panama happened to have been in Pearl Harbor when Bob and his war-time troupe (Colonna, Langford, and Tony Romano) played there. Hope dropped by to see the Admiral, and started talking, "We're in a tough spot."

"What do you mean?" asked the Admiral.

"My wife, my two kids, my interpreter, Fred Myron, and, of course, me," answered Bob.

The Admiral nearly blew his epaulets, according to Bob, when he heard the size of the Hope party.

"Listen," the Admiral said, "I've been in the Navy for twenty-nine years and I couldn't get my own wife on a Navy plane."

With this statement he picked up his phone and called his chief of staff.

"What are the regulations about carrying Bob Hope and his family in a Navy plane?"

Bob sat nervously on the edge of his chair while the Admiral listened to the phone.

"I thought so," he barked, and hung up. "What a break you've got," he said turning to Hope. "There's nothing in Navy regulations against it. It's the least the Navy can do to repay you for all you've done for us."

That same afternoon, Bob, Dolores, the kids and Fred stepped off the Navy plane in time to catch their boat back home.

The first day out, the ocean was very rough. Dolores went to their cabin, and the kids immediately began thinking about seasickness.

"I told them not to," said Bob, "which of course helped a lot. But when we went down to the dining room for dinner, I ordered a pretty good-sized dinner for them. When dinner was over, I told them they wouldn't have anything to worry about the rest of the trip. The food would settle their stomachs. They both agreed, got up from the table, ran out on the deck and were violently ill."

Two days before their ship docked in New York, Bob took advantage of a quiet afternoon to get some sun. He went up to the top deck, and fell asleep. Thus was accomplished the sunburn infection which forced Bob to spend three days in Chicago on his return trip to Hollywood.

"But even with the sunburn, the toothache, the bug bite, and everything, the trip was great," he says. "It was especially good for the kids. They learned a lot. Now, for hours, they sit around playing question and answer about it. Linda will ask Tony, 'What place did you like best?' and he will reply, 'I rather enjoyed Lima.' The other day a friend of ours called and invited us out to his ranch for a few days. Linda answered the phone. 'Thanks,' she said. 'Any other time we'd love to, but we've had enough traveling for this year.'"

That goes for the whole Hope gang.

THE PLAY'S THE THING

(Continued from page 45)

Last year, Keenan Wynn appeared there for two weeks; Guy Madison made his stage debut, and the Gryphon's policy of a well-known Hollywood "guest-star" for each new lead was set.

This year, Ruth Hussey and Don De Fore did Dream Girl. Ruth was John Lucas' idea; Don was Ruth's idea.

Opening night was fascinating; Ruth's dressing-room was locked so she couldn't get in; a spotlight blew while she was in the middle of the first scene; Gina Janss, the singer, arrived in a helicopter which she landed on the front lawn; and Bette Davis sat in the balcony in formal evening clothes, and drank coffee during intermission.

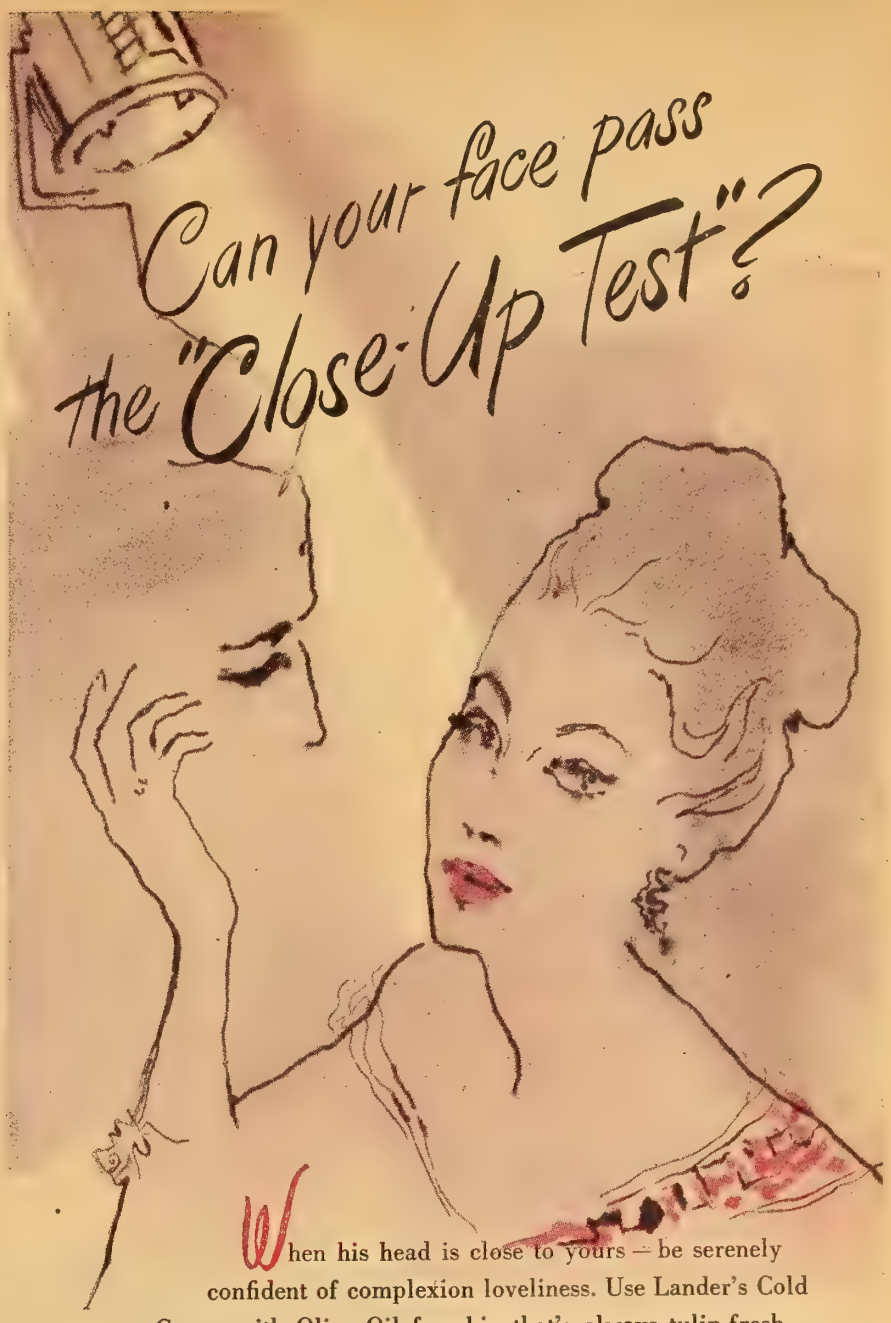
After Dream Girl, the Gryphon put on Pursuit of Happiness, with Janis Paige and Charles Korvin. Janis, who's been a clothes horse in movies, rehearsed in dirty denims, and felt like she was having a vacation.

Eighty miles beyond Laguna is La Jolla, and the acting company there is headed by Joe Cotten, Mel Ferrer, Jennifer Jones Dorothy McGuire and Gregory Peck, and called, simply, The Actors' Company. This year, they've had Dame May Whitty in Night Must Fall; Guy Madison and Diana Lynn in Dear Ruth, and Gregory Peck's planning to do The Rope, which Hitchcock will direct.

The Actors' Company believes a star's stature as an artist is increased "through performing in the living theater," and La Jolla is their solution for movie people.

Right in the heart of Hollywood, there's the Coronet Theater, which houses a permanent stock company with ambitious plans. Coronet recently put on Skin of Our Teeth, with Keenan Wynn, Jane Wyatt and Hurd Hatfield, and the next thing up its sleeve is Gallileo, a brand-new play with Charles Laughton.

Vaudeville is dead; grand opera may be dying, but Little Theater is going to town.



When his head is close to yours — be serenely confident of complexion loveliness. Use Lander's Cold Cream with Olive Oil for skin that's always tulip-fresh . . . even close-up! Only 10¢ for generous amounts of Lander's marvelously pure Cold Cream and Hand Cream — worth ten times the price in quality!

Available At Your Five-And-Dime And Variety Stores.

LANDER'S
FIFTH AVENUE BLDG., NEW YORK

10 and 25¢
Plus Tax
Imagine! A big 2-oz. jar for 10¢... a 6-oz. jar for 25¢

Dorothy Reed
Cosmetic Stylists

LARGE JUMBO SWIVEL STICK
25¢ Plus Tax
Available at chain and department stores.

Dorothy Reed • 200 Fifth Avenue • New York

Today's girls are choosing these

The two blocks of sterling inlaid at back of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks. They make this silverplate stay lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

Copyright 1947, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off

Infant and Toddler feet are S-A-F-E-R in these SENSIBLY-PRICED shoes

Why?

Wise mothers know that greatest harm to little feet comes from letting baby grow into and out of shoes. They know that WEE WALKERS are well-made, accurately shaped, flexible shoes, carefully designed to serve baby's footwear needs at moderate cost. The sensible price allows you to buy the correct size NOW and change to a larger size in TIME.

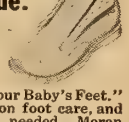
Ask your doctor about WEE WALKERS . . . see them . . compare them . . . try them . . . in Infants' or shoe department of stores listed. Birth to size 8.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE

W. T. Grant Co. S. S. Kresge Co. J. J. Newberry Co.
H. L. Green Co., Inc. I. Silver & Bros. Scott Stores
McCrory Stores Schulte-United Charles Stores Co.
Metropolitan Chain Stores, Inc. Kinney Shoe Stores
F. & W. Grand Grand Silver Co. McLellan Stores
Montgomery Ward & Co.

Smooth One-Piece Tongue:

Stops pressure on nerves, muscles, blood vessels caused by sewed-on tongue, still used on some shoes selling at top prices.



FREE: Pamphlet, "Look At Your Baby's Feet." Valuable information on foot care, and scale to measure size needed. Moran Shoe Co., Dept. M, Carlyle, Ill

WEE WALKER Shoes
FOR Wee WALKERS

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION • SHIRLEY FROHLICH, DIRECTOR

■ What do you say, clubbers—think you can stand just ONE more contest? This one's so good, we wish we could take credit for dreaming it up by ourselves, but we'll have to be honest and admit it was suggested by a slew of you fans.

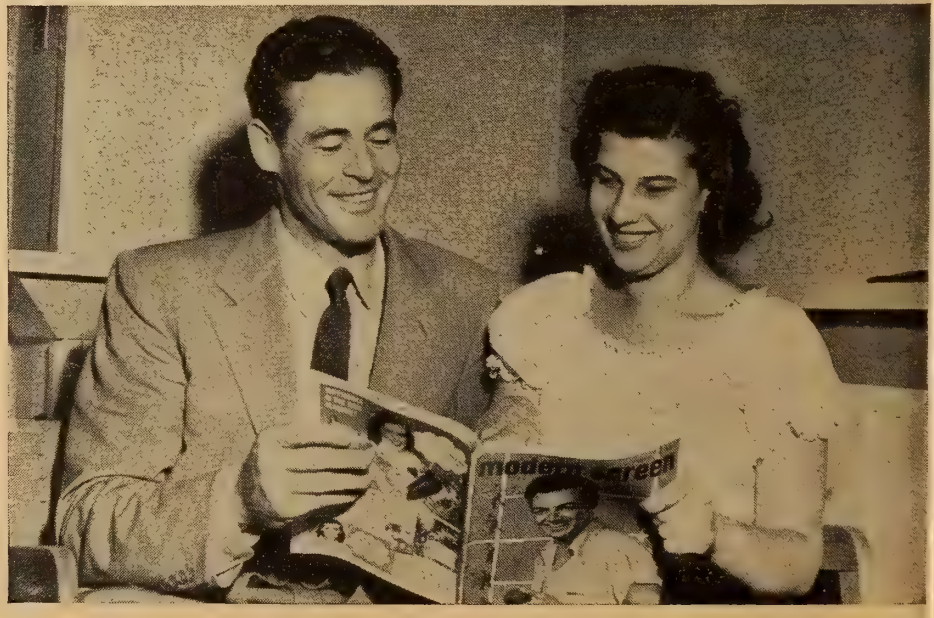
From moseying around clubs these past couple of years, we've sort of gathered that next to meeting your honorary star in person, the thing that gives you the biggest bang is seeing your own by-line in print. Well, we can't introduce you to your favorite—but we CAN give you an opportunity to see your article in MODERN SCREEN. And that's just what we're going to do!

Now, what should you write about your star? We'll start by telling you what NOT to write. All articles that begin: "Lancelot Prettyface is my favorite actor because . . ." will be filed promptly—in the wastebasket. Ditto, all pieces on why you joined Lancelot's fan club, or on that thrilling day when you stood in the snow for ten hours to see dear old Lance in person. What we're looking for is a (Continued on page 125)

6TH SEMI-ANNUAL TROPHY CUP CONTEST

Leading clubs so far: LEAGUE ONE. Ronald Reagan, 700; June (Allyson) Bugs, Richard Travis, 600. LEAGUE TWO. Jeanette MacDonald (Riley), 950; Bob Crosby, 850; Shirley Temple, 750. LEAGUE THREE. Joseph Cotten, 850; Charles Korvin, 750; Dan Duryea (Grant), 700.

"THIS IS MY BEST" CONTEST. (6 articles and/or poems selected from journals received between July 16 and August 15.) To each winner we are sending a free combination gift package of lovely FABERGE Aphrodisia Perfume and Cologne. In addition, each winner's club is credited with 100 pts. Winners: Glee Engel, "Engrossed in Chopin," (poem), Wild Over Wilde News. Kay McGowan, "Letters From Brittany," Des Nouvelles de Jean Pierre. Nancy Biebel, "Understand, Not Tolerate," Richard's Almanac (Haymes). Lee Garber, "An Open Letter to New Yorkers," The Velvet Fog (Mel Torme). Mary Fingello, "Working On a Journal," Kirbyville Express (Jay Kirby). Betty Petrie, "News and Views," Hi-Lites (Club Friendship). CANDID CAMERA CONTEST. (Any MSFCA member is eligible to submit amateur snapshots of any interesting subject; please write your name, address and club on back of each photo.) First prize: Year's subscription to SCREEN ROMANCES, year's sub to SCREEN ALBUM, and 4 DELL Mysteries. 100 pts. to club. Winner: Jacquelyn Shaw, Frank's Fan C. (Ling). Five other prizes: Package of 4 DELL Mysteries, each; 50 pts. to clubs. Winners: Phyllis Probaseo, Glenn Vernon C. (McCarthy). Geraldine Kee (Alan) Ladd's Legionnaires. Ronnie DeArmond, Four Stars C. Pat Maben, Dan Duryea C. Peggy Haig, Darryl Hickman C. BEST JOURNALS OF THE MONTH. (One journal selected from each league; 500 pts. to each winning club.) 1. Richard Travis Journal 2. (Diana) Lynn's Lingo. 3. (4 ties) (Don) DeFore Review (Margulies), Mr. Lucky (Rand Brooks C.), (Lloyd) Bridges Chronicle (Gockel), (Joseph) Cotten Chronicle. BEST EDITORS OF THE MONTH. (One editor selected from each league.) Prize: Each editor receives a special complete assortment of wonderful POND's cosmetics; appropriate gift substituted for male winners; winners' clubs bag 250 pts. Winners: 1. Alex and Richard Gordon, The (British) Westerner. 2. Irene DiMattia, Swoon Sheet (Sinatra C.). 3. Joan Coddington, (James) Mason Manuscript (Meyer). BEST ORIGINAL PIECE OF ART WORK. (One selection each month.) Prize: TANGEE's handsome Trip-Kit, fitted with Tangee Makeup products, ideal for travel; 150 pts. to club. Winner: Rita LaRossa, Danny's (Scholl) Doings. BEST COVERS OF THE MONTH. (One cover selected from each league; winning clubs net 250 pts.) Winners: 1. A Friend of Yours (British Sinatra C.). 2. Musical Echoes (Jeanette MacDonald C.; Riley). 3. (tie) Hey-Day (Sinatra C., Goehringer), Cotten Chronicle. MOST WORTHWHILE ACTIVITY OF THE MONTH. (One selection from each league; 250 pts. to each club. Winners: 1. Club Crosby (Bing; Ness), for Syd Gath (war hero, former member) Memorial Raffle to raise funds for veterans' hospital. 2. Risë Stevens C., for presenting $35 to Red Cross on Risë's birthday. 3. Jean Pierre Aumont C., for contributing 400 magazines to vets' hospitals, shipping CARE boxes to adopted orphan. BEST MSFCA CORRESPONDENTS OF THE MONTH. (One selection from each league; 50 pts. to club.) Winners: 1. Ruth Ness, Club Crosby. 2. Geraldine Kee, Ladd's Legionnaires. 3. Rosmarie Trojan, Bobby Beers C. GREATEST PERCENTAGE INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP FOR THE MONTH. (One selection from each league; 100 pts. to club.) Winners: Dennis Morgan C. 2. Bill Boyd C. 3. (tie) Vic Damone C. (Zulli), Richard Conti C. (Sterling).



"It's a cinch," Bob Ryan assured his prexy, Fayrita Sweet, when she told him she's entering our new Writing Contest. They met when Bob stopped off in New York, enroute to Europe for a film.

GENTLE HEEL

(Continued from page 43)

intellectual husband behaving like such a heel on the screen. Even though she knew he'd asked RKO to let him work in good brawling Westerns or in any off-beat part that would make his fans sit up and take notice.

Before Bob enlisted in the Marines he'd had two hundred fan clubs. Two years in service, and the clubs had dwindled to a fast three. In spite of Jessica's protests, Bob felt it was better to be hissed than ignored, and every time he heard of a good bad part he pestered the studio execs until they let him have it.

Jess and Bob had to reach a decision before he did the brutal race-prejudiced killer of Crossfire, one of the most unsympathetic parts an ambitious actor could undertake.

They sat in the den far into the quiet night in sober discussion.

"There are several ways of looking at this," Bob said. "It's a picture that needs to be done."

"Right," Jess agreed.

"People may forget I'm acting a part. They may get the idea I feel like this psycho character," Bob warned.

"You'll have to take that chance," she said. "Anyway, you can do something constructive about race prejudice, something you've always wanted to do."

That settled that. As it turned out, Bob and Jess were right. The picture did him a lot of good.

The Ryans met when they were going to the Max Reinhardt dramatic school, and Jess worked in the chorus at the Paramount Theatre in downtown Los Angeles to pay her tuition. After they were married—when studios had told Bob he "wasn't the type"—they'd both gone back east to do summer stock.

Then suddenly Bob "was the type" and she'd been happy enough to give up her career even though she'd always wanted to amount to something as an actress.

Bob hadn't particularly wanted to be an actor, himself. He'd wanted to write. But the plain fact was that he wasn't successful.

tell it to the marines . . .

It was strange, therefore, what happened to Jessica while Bob was in the Marines. He'd gone off to war with the average man's bravery and resignation and, boot training finished, had been assigned to the big Marine base at Camp Pendleton, California, with the rank of private, and the duty of training troops for maneuvers.

The camp wasn't far from Hollywood. Private Ryan could spend his infrequent leaves at home with Jess.

He'd walk in, unannounced, snap smartly to a salute, and say, "Private Robert Ryan reporting to Mrs. Private Robert Ryan."

Jess wouldn't be able to resist. "Still a private, Private?"

"Yes, but only because I have so much pull," he'd say, trying to look important.

On one leave she had news for him. "Bob, I've been, uh, sort of writing while you've been gone."

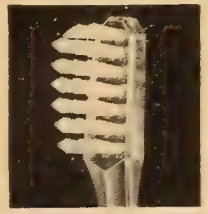
And a while later, there was quite a stir in mystery reading circles, when Jessica Ryan's "The Man Who Asked Why" was published. A special pal of theirs, Danny Mainwaring, who writes under the name of Geoffrey Holmes, saw the manuscript and hurried it off to his agent, who promptly sold it to a publisher. Before Jess could say, "Look at me, ma, I'm an

Just look at me

Soaking Wet

Yes, and that water-soaked, soppy-sloppy tooth brush is something to worry about, too. It not only looks bad. You're risking your good looks if you keep on using it!

Get rid of that wreck- Start fresh with a Tek



Dentists say: most decay is caused by "bacteria film" that sticks in tiny crevices of your teeth. To remove it you need a small tooth brush with brisk, springy bristles. That's the new Tek de Luxe! Tek's amazing Keton* bristles resist water—clean like new, long after inferior bristles are water-logged, useless.

Tek De Luxe

IN HANDY TRAVEL CASE!

Your Tek de Luxe is sealed in an unbreakable carrying case. Complete for only 50¢ . . . Tek Jr., scientifically designed for children, also in sealed carrying case, 25¢. At your favorite drug counter.

*EXCLUSIVE WITH TEK

NO DULL DRAB HAIR

When You Use This Amazing

4 Purpose Rinse

LOVALON, simple and quick to use after a shampoo, does these 4 things to give YOUR hair glamour and beauty:

1. Brings out lustrous highlights.
2. Adds a rich, natural tint to hair.
3. Rinses away shampoo or soap film.
4. Leaves hair soft, easy to manage.

LOVALON does not permanently dye or bleach — merely tints the hair as it rinses. Comes in 12 flattering shades. Try Lovalon.

At stores which sell toilet goods

25¢ and 10¢ sizes

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Amazing! POCKET OR PURSE SIZE
New RADIO
WORLD'S SMALLEST RADIO KNOWN!
Wt. only ¼ lb. Beautiful Silver Black plastic case. Has Inductive Slide Tuner—W4 Crystal Diode—NO TUBES, BATTERIES OR ELECTRIC "PLUG IN" NEEDED! Should last for years!
GUARANTEED TO PLAY
NEW 1948 MODEL
on local stations if complete instructions sent are followed. Use it at home, in bed, in many offices, hotels, cabins—most anywhere! HUNDREDS OF SATISFIED CUSTOMERS ALL OVER THE WORLD!
SEND ONLY $1.00 (Cash, M.O. Check) and pay postman $2.99 plus delivery fees on arrival or send $3.99 for Post Paid delivery. Complete as shown—ready to play with self contained personal phone. WONDERFUL GIFTS FOR CHILDREN! Order now at this low bargain price—Prompt shipment on orders sent now—today! Be the first to get YOUR Pakette Radio! (All foreign orders $5.00 U. S. cash with order).
Pa-Kette Radio Co., Inc. Dept. MM-11 Kearney, Nebr.

CORN NIP?

Here's a tip!

BLUE-JAY with Nupercaine* RELIEVES 3 WAYS:

Soft Dura-felt pad stops shoe pressure instantly! Blue-Jay's exclusive anesthetic Nupercaine curbs surface pain! Gentle medication loosens hard core—you just lift it out in a few days! Ask for Blue-Jay—"America's Largest Selling Corn Plaster."

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by Ciba

author," she was one.

When Bob came home from the Marines, after finally attaining the exalted rank of P.F.C., the small Ryan savings were still intact, Jessica was in the throes of another mystery called "Exit Harlequin," and RKO picked up Bob's options for three years.

Things were great—until the studio suggested that the Ryans break ranks and start moving around a little. The first move was an Atwater Kent party.

Bob went home. "We are," he told Jess, "supposed to go to an Atwater Kent party for Hollywood's younger set."

Jess blanched. Neither of the Ryans had been to a big Hollywood party. They wouldn't know a soul. The thought took all the starch out of their legs.

But they went. And sure enough, they didn't know a soul. Nobody introduced them to anybody else. They found a corner, and wondered why they'd come.

Suddenly Bob nudged Jess. She jumped. "Get ready," he said. "Here come the photographers."

But nobody took their pictures. "Never mind, dear," soothed Jessica. "Things will be different."

wanna fight, bub? . . .

And they were. Bob did a boxing layout for the studio. His sparring partner, a professional, took quite a beating. The pro's manager, excited over the possibility of signing a talented unknown, wanted to know where he'd been, bub.

The studio representative loftily informed the fight manager that Bob had been undefeated inter-collegiate boxing champ at Dartmouth. Unruffled by the fact that Bob was educated too, the f.m. made noises about a contract.

"I have a contract," Bob told him. "It says I'm an actor."

The fight manager shook his head regretfully. Why, he wondered, would such a good fighter want to waste his time acting!

Bob could have answered but he didn't bother. He wanted to get home. He was worried about Jess. The baby was due any day now.

The night the young man showed signs of arriving, Bob saw that Jess was tucked in comfortably before the nurse shooed him out of the room. He made for the hospital waiting room to start the traditional floor pacing, but a nurse with a kind heart stopped him.

"Why don't you go home, Mr. Ryan? Nothing can possibly happen before ten o'clock tomorrow morning."

So he left. He couldn't bear the thought of going home to an empty house. Suddenly he remembered a small party he'd been invited to. Maybe some human companionship might help.

He stayed until the party was over, and at precisely ten o'clock the next morning, Timothy arrived. He was fine, Jessica was fine. Even Bob was in pretty good shape, because he had spent only half the night pacing the floor.

When Tim was almost a year old, Bob began to worry about his running away.

"I think," he said to Jess, "I'd better put a wall around the backyard. It shouldn't be such a hard job for the son of a building contractor."

"You'll probably cement yourself in it," Jessica said, "but go ahead."

When the wall was finished, Bob smiled smugly.

"A miracle," said Jess laughing. "Let's hope it doesn't fall down before Tim is big enough to walk."

"Which reminds me," Bob said, "he's climbing all over everything. Should we hang the paintings higher on the walls?"

"Why don't you just sit down and read the sports page, dear," Jess suggested.

Instead of reading the sports page, Bob took a turn around the rooms to make sure the paintings were secure. He'd begun to collect French moderns ten years ago and had nine precious beautiful ones —Matisse, Picasso drawings (because he couldn't afford Picasso paintings), a couple of Witold Gordons.

He was interrupted by Tim, who had been playing quietly on the floor. "Boat," said young Tim. Bob grinned at him. "Car," Tim said, grinning back.

Bob called Jess. "I've discovered something about your son," he told her. "Your son is a ham."

"You mean your son," Jess retorted. "I quit acting."

"Okay," Bob said. "Anyhow, he droops around and looks unhappy unless people are watching him. When he gets attention, he starts acting."

"He'll get over it. He's uninhibited now. Wait until he gets to the shy stage. You'll wish he did like people," Jess allowed.

"Now that I gotta see," Tim's father hooted skeptically.

"Phone," Tim chimed in. Sure enough, the phone was ringing.

Bob picked up the receiver. One of his pals from the Marines was calling. He had a wife, a three-months-old baby, a two-year-old—and no home.

In a couple of hours the family was living temporarily at the Ryans'. Bob and Jess moved Tim's crib into the den. Their friends took over the spare bedroom, fitting their two cribs in with a shoe horn.

"It's only a temporary arrangement," Bob said. "When I leave for Europe, you and Tim will go to Laguna and they can have our house until they find another."

Sometimes the whole bunch ate together, sometimes Bob and Jess dined later. It wasn't any problem to feed the kids—they shared cans of liver soup and pineapple pudding. No one was addicted to taking hour-long, luxurious hot tubs. The maid came in and did the dishes.

But they just couldn't keep the house straight, not with three babies under two years old and four grownups.

And the noise! Pure bedlam. The kids cried in relays all night long. In the morning the four parents would get up and compare the bags under their eyes.

"Mine are the biggest," Bob bragged. "If they had handles I could use them for luggage."

"And by the way," Jess said. "If you'd get busy and pack maybe we could get through the house. All this stuff of yours stacked around—"

Bob sighed sleepily and made for the garage, where he thought his old Marine foot locker might be.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I was doing some shopping at one of the downtown stores in Los Angeles and was amazed to see the blonde and lovely movie star, Marilyn Maxwell, also making a few purchases. Her identity was soon discovered and the fans' mad scramble for autographs was on. As the thundering herd came towards us, I dove under a nearby counter. In a few seconds someone else was down beside me. "Mind if I join you?" asked Marilyn Maxwell. "It's getting a bit crowded out there."

Arthur Daniels
Dallas, Texas

AIM FOR A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

(Continued from page 100)

Remove the cream and your face has a velvety finish.

"Foundation cream" anchors rouge and powder in a natural finish that's utterly enchanting. Just dot the cream on forehead, cheeks, chin and nose; then blend gently. "Foundation creams" come in a wide range of tones; you can find the right one for you.

Few damsels are lucky enough never to have a skin blemish. "Medicated creams" help dry skin irritations and prevent their spreading. Formulas differ, so look at the jar label for directions.

Skin lotion, tinted creamy white or delicately pastel is a "must" for complexion beauty. You can also use it as a body rub after you bathe, you can soothe horny elbows with it, bring new allure to your hands, comfort chafed legs (lotion is particularly helpful after defuzzing).

Lotions are bottled in all sizes. In school lockers, office desk drawers or kitchen cabinets, extra bottles can be kept to supplement the one on your dressing table. Slip a slim bottle of lotion into your handbag. You do really have so many helps in aiming for beauty!

* * *

You have a particular beauty problem? Write me a letter about it, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I'll be glad to answer. Carol Carter, Beauty Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

GOLDEN GIRL

(Continued from page 31)

the same impact. That is Lana.

The saga of Lana Turner—that is, the part of it which matters—began ten years ago, when, wearing a long bob, a tight sweater, and a look of subdued innocence, she waggled across the screen in the opening moments of a film called They Won't Forget. She was 16 years old, and it was her first appearance in movies.

It was only a bit—a walk down a street, no dialogue, no heavy emoting. But it was necessary. The producers of the film were confronted with a situation in which they had to convey the idea of a sex murder, without once using the word sex. They solved it by using Lana, the curvaceous unknown, to portray the victim.

Everyone got the idea. Lana Turner was publicized around the world as a sweater girl and completely won over the public. Especially the male public.

During her first years in Hollywood, Lana was a giddy, exciting adolescent, and she had fun. She had romances and she had heartaches. She was photographed at parties with Greg Bautzer. She went to openings and previews with Don Barry. She had a long and public romance with Tony Martin. And she married Artie Shaw in 1940. A marriage that lasted less than a year.

It was from those frivolous days that many of Lana's admirers formed their ideas about her—a gay, good-natured girl, smiling across a cocktail table at the current man in her life, a slim sentimental girl, dancing like glue to a rhumba rhythm at the Troc. Merely by being out with her, innumerable young men have also received profitable publicity. The press is

(Continued on page 115)

IT'S LYNN FONTANNE . . . IN O MISTRESS MINE. You've noticed how an actress acts with her whole self—especially her hands. They are her second most important medium of expression. Naturally, she spares no trouble to keep them looking lovely. Nor should you. Lovely hands are important to every woman's "act."

"You cream your face to keep it smooth and lovely ...well, CREAM YOUR HANDS too!"

advises LYNN FONTANNE

PACQUINS is the hand cream she uses... this beautifully groomed aristocrat of the theatre.

"Doesn't it make sense that the skin of your hands needs cream just as the skin of your face? It does to me," says Lynn Fontanne; "that's why I choose wonderful Pacquins!"

Yes, "wonderful" is the word for Pacquins.

When you massage it onto your hands it feels wonderful, without being sticky or greasy.

Your hands look wonderful...and Pacquins scent is so well bred.

Try a 12-second massage with Pacquins every morning and again at night. And don't be surprised if women say, "Darling! What are you using on your hands?" And men say simply, "Darling!"

GLENYA WESTBROOK, REGISTERED NURSE, adds: "Pacquins action on the skin of the hands is wonderful. We nurses—and doctors—scrub our hands 30 to 40 times a day. Pacquins Hand Cream was made for us. I use it faithfully." (Pacquins Hand Cream was originally made for nurses and doctors.)

for "dream" hands - cream your hands with Pacquins HAND CREAM

Never Sticky or Greasy!

AT ANY DRUG, DEPARTMENT, OR TEN-CENT STORE.

Luxurious Satin, Style 195
A cup—32 to 36; B cup—32 to 38
White, Tearose and Black
C cup—32 to 38; White and Tearose $2.

Exquisite Form Brassiere, Inc.
373 4th Ave., N.Y. • 850 S. B'way, Los Angeles

Wilma's hair-do used to "Wilt"

SMOOTH START! with hair neat and shining. (Watch the boys admire!)

FROWZY FINISH. Look what a couple of hours did to her hair-do-poor Wilma

'til she discovered Nestle HAIRLAC
— the delicately perfumed hair lacquer

NOW, SHE KNOWS that Nestle Hairlac keeps her hair neat and shining all day long! Try Nestle Hairlac today! At drug and dept. stores. 50c.

Keeps every hair style well groomed

sweet and hot

By LEONARD FEATHER

 Highly Recommended
* Recommended
No Stars: Average

POPULAR

IT TAKES A LONG LONG TRAIN WITH A RED CABOOSE (TO CARRY MY BLUES AWAY)—Peggy Lee (Capitol); Dinah Shore (Columbia)

It takes a long, long title to take these songwriters' blues away; their first big hit was Mad About Him, Sad About Him, How Can I Be Glad Without Him Blues. This new train opus is just an old-timey blues at heart, and Peggy Lee takes it to heart with hubby Dave Barbour's usual fine band-aid.

KATE—*Starlighters (Mercury); *Tommy Dorsey (Victor); Four Chicks & Chuck (MGM); Eddy Howard (Majestic); Guy Lombardo (Decca)

FROM DATE (Album)—*Tex Beneke (Victor)

Just a natural gift package, this one, with everything from Alma Mater and The Eyes of Texas to Anchors Aweigh and On Wisconsin, all in dance tempo.

THEM DURN FOOL THINGS—*Reg Ingle & The Natural Seven (Capitol)

Ernest Ingle, from Toledo, once played with Hoagy Carmichael in a Kansas City band, later spent ten years with Ted Weems and three with Spike Jones. Now he's rivalling Spike; his Tim-Tayshun (featuring Cinderella Stump, alias Jo Stafford) was a sen-sayshun; now comes this foolish version of These Foolish Things, coupled with Song of Indians, on which he becomes Red Eagle. High class nonsense. (P.S. Could the mysterious "Mrs. James F. Paisley" be Marjorie Main?)

WHEN I WRITE MY SONG—Herbie Jeffries (Exclusive); John Laurenz (Mercury); Xavier Cugat (Columbia)

Ted Mossman, formerly Tschaikowsky's pen-pal, now teams with Saint-Saëns for some pleasant plagiarism from Samson and Delilah. The Jeffries version, with Buddy Baker's swell backgrounds, made this a hit.

HOT JAZZ

ALBUMS: *BENNY (GOODMAN) RIDES AGAIN (Capitol); ERSKINE HAWKINS (Victor); BILLIE HOLIDAY VOL. I (Columbia); *GENE KRUPA (Columbia); *SATURDAY NIGHT SWING SESSION (Vox)

The Goodman album has a cute gimmick, starting with a duo (just clarinet and piano), then a trio side, a quartet and all the -tets up to sep-, ending with two sides by the full band. Music from Bob Bach's WNEW impromptu jazz shows is packaged in the Vox album, featuring Roy Eldridge and Flip Phillips. Confidentially, that drummer listed as "Mel. O. Fogg" on the label is the Velvet Fog himself, Mel Torme—and he plays good drums!

VIVIEN GARRY QUINTET—*I'm In The Mood For Love (Victor)

This side, by five great girl musicians, proves once and for all that a woman's place is in the groove. Edna Williams' trumpet is great; Ginger Smock plays some solid electric violin, and the rhythm section, with Vivien on bass, Wini Beatty at the box and Dody Jeshke on drums, gets a real "gone" beat.

HOLLYWOOD HUCKSTERS—*Them There Eyes (Capitol)

Features Benny Goodman, Red Norvo, Benny Carter, Charlie Shavers, with Benny and Stan Kenton doing a tongue-in-cheek vocal on the reverse, Happy Blues.

STAN KENTON—*Minor Riff (Capitol)

FROM THE MOVIES

DARK PASSAGE—Too Marvelous For Words: *Harry James (Columbia); *Dick Farney (Majestic); Bing Crosby-Jimmy Dorsey (Decca); Jo Stafford (Capitol)

Look out for Dick Farney, born Farnesio Dutra e Silva, the 25-year-old thrill from Brazil. After singing in Rio night clubs, he paid Hollywood a visit, and before you could say "ten per cent" he'd signed for records and a big radio show.

FUN AND FANCY FREE—Lazy Country Side; Too Good To Be True: *Tony Martin (Victor)

Pleasing sounds deriving from Disney's latest. Choral backing helps Tony on the lazy country side.

IF YOU KNEW SUSIE—My How The Time Goes By: Vaughn Monroe (Victor)

I WONDER WHO'S KISSING HER NOW—Title Song: *Perry Como (Victor); *Ray Noble (Columbia); Danny Kaye (Decca); Dinning Sisters (Capitol)

My minority opinion: on the basis of Joe Howard's having written this, I don't think he was worth making a movie about.

MOTHER WORE TIGHTS—You Do: Helen Forrest (M-G-M); Kokomo, Indiana: *Mel Torme (Musicraft). See also last month's listings.

(Continued from page 113) always focused on Lana's good looks.

At present writing, Lana Turner makes $4,000 to $5,000 a week, owns 69 pairs of shoes, and improves as an actress with every picture.

On Louella Parsons' radio show, Clark Gable said, "To all her prerequisites of glamour, Lana has added education, and has become one of the screen's finest actresses."

Lana's making Homecoming, opposite Gable, now.

Lana began taking acting seriously in 1940, soon after Ziegfeld Girl, in which she played her first significant role. After that, she settled down to learning her work, and ever since she has ranked among the studio's five top box-office attractions.

She gets 1500 letters weekly, predominantly requesting pictures in a boudoir pose. She gets a daily load of mail from men which starts out, "You look like the kind of girl who would understand—" And she tries to.

Lana long since has reached the point at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer where she need not heed a call from any except the mightiest. She has not bothered to do a portrait sitting for nearly 1½ years, and has not allowed herself to be photographed by any magazine outside of the studio for over two years.

At the studio, Lana's retinue consists of a personal secretary, who plays jazz records while Lana rests between scenes, a hairdresser, who works only on her film coiffures, a makeup-man, and a stand-in. At home, Lana keeps a nurse for her daughter, Cheryl Christine, and a general maid. She has never had a personal maid, she hates anyone fussing around her while she's dressing.

With big money, and fantastic fame, Lana has acquired a definite dignity which although not comparable to the celestial variety maintained by Greer Garson after Mrs. Miniver, is still a long way from where she started.

Lana has never figured out any reason for being coy about her romances. She falls in love, and then follows her heart. When she decided to follow Tyrone Power to Mexico at the outset of their spectacular romance, Lana left her own picture to do so. She came back after a week's visit, and the studio greeted her with benevolent arms and no harsh words, in spite of their production losses.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

As I was saying goodbye to a friend who was on her way to Los Angeles, a commotion arose in the depot. One of Hollywood's greatest was about to board the Super Chief. My friend moaned her disappointment in not being able to see him, for she had her baby in her arms. Resigned to the fact that she couldn't she tried to forget the incident. Soon the porter came along and asked her to step into the aisle while he made up the compartment. As she waited with her baby, the door of the next compartment opened and she was asked if she needed any assistance. A moment later she was sitting in Walter Pidgeon's compartment, gazing mutely at her idol as he played with the baby.

Barbara Solovick,
Detroit, Michigan

"Cheers for RCA VICTOR'S LINE-UP OF HITS for October!"

NEW ALBUM BY ERSKINE HAWKINS!

NEW ALBUM BY TEX BENEKE!

In his "Prom Date" Album, Tex leads the Miller Orchestra in On Wisconsin, The Eyes of Texas, Rambling Wreck from Georgia Tech, Anchors Aweigh, Victory March of Notre Dame, others. P-183, $3.15.

The "20th Century Gabriel" and his band bring you Don't Cry, Baby; After Hours; Cherry; Sweet Georgia Brown; I've Got a Right to Cry; Tippin' In; Song of the Wanderer; Tuxedo Junction. Ask for "Tuxedo Junction," P-181, $3.15.

NEW RECORD BY BERYL DAVIS!

Beryl's the new English star who's stealing American hearts with her intimate, velvety voice. Let her sing to you . . . It All Came True and One Little Tear Is an Ocean. Record 20-2426, 60¢.

Tex Beneke with The Miller Orchestra: Body and Soul (from the Enterprise-United Artists film, "Body and Soul") and Stormy Weather. Record 20-2374, 60¢.

Perry Como: So Far and A Fellow Needs a Girl. With Russ Case and his Orch. 20-2402, 60¢.

Swing and Sway with Sammy Kaye: Zu-Bi (Everyone's Love Song) and Where is Sam? Record 20-2420, 60¢.

Tony Martin: Lazy Country Side and Too Good to be True (both from Walt Disney's "Fun and Fancy Free"). With Earl Hagen and his Orchestra and Chorus. Record 20-2396, 60¢.

Charlie Spivak and his Orchestra: (I'm Gonna Wait) A Little Bit Longer and What Are You Doing New Year's Eve? Record 20-2395, 60¢.

. . . plus RCA Victor quality! Two "exclusives"—Victor's billion-record skill and RCA's electronic wizardry — make music sound so true to life on RCA Victor Records!

What! No phonograph?—You're missing hours of fun! Hear the new Victrola radio-phonographs! "Victrola"—T.M.Reg.U.S.Pat.Off.

Hear Robert Merrill on the RCA Victor Program. Sundays, 2 p.m., EST, over NBC.

Prices are suggested list prices, exclusive of taxes.

THE STARS WHO MAKE THE HITS ARE ON RCA VICTOR RECORDS

RCA "HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

MAKE THIS EASY 7-DAY TEST

DO YOU WANT LONGER HAIR

★THEN TRY THIS PROVEN EASY SYSTEM ON YOUR HAIR ★★★★

Helps Prevent Brittle Ends Breaking Off!

● Hair May Get Longer

when scalp and hair conditions are normal and the dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded by supplementing the natural hair oils, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Just try the easy JUELENE System 7 days and let your mirror prove results. Your money back if not delighted. See if Juelene's tendency to help your hair to become softer, silkier, more lustrous than it has been before—in just one short week helps your hair gain its normal beauty.

● BRUNETTES, BLONDES, TITIANS!

Just try this System on your HAIR seven days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of LONGER HAIR that so often captures Love and Romance for you.

● Send No Money!

Just mail the convenient introductory coupon. Take advantage of this Fully Guaranteed Introductory Offer today, and know at last the happiness of possessing really lovelier hair and be envied by so many.

JUEL COMPANY, 4727 N. Damen, Chicago 25, Illinois

Mail This INTRODUCTORY COUPON!

JUEL COMPANY, Dept. M-603
4727 North Damen, Chicago 25, Ill.

Yes, I want easy-to-manage, longer hair. I will try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. If my mirror doesn't show satisfactory results, I will ask for my money back.

☐ I am enclosing $1.00.
☐ Send C. O. D. plus postage.

JUELENE Comes in 2 Forms
☐ POMADE ☐ LIQUID

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE ____ STATE _____

Our Customers Participate in Gifts

By this time, Lana would be white-haired, if she worried about what people said or thought of her varied colorful romances.

Lana still makes a gorgeous entrance at nightclubs. For her evening dates, she dresses exotically and flamboyantly. As soon as she is seated, usually against a quiet back wall, every male in the house starts mentally table-hopping.

If there has not been much mention of Lana's contacts with women, up to this point, it is because she does not have many. In social situations involving both the sexes, she invariably pays most of her attention to the men, and is as brief as it is possible to be without discourtesy with the women present. When she was about to leave on her South American trip, the guests at her going-away party were 80 percent male, a ratio she considers ideal.

She doesn't dislike women; she just isn't much interested in them, and she won't practice girlish small talk.

Since her divorce from Steve Crane in 1944, Lana has lived in a two-bedroom Brentwood home. Her furniture is modern, solid, and decorated in bold plain colors. Her bedroom is white, and the only gaudy item in it is her bed, an over-sized affair with a large yellow upholstered headboard.

Lana's home reflects the good taste she has been working to make the dominant force in her life these last three years. Her car, though still a Cadillac, is tan this year instead of fire-engine red. Her personal matches are in simple grey folders, initialed L.T. in cardinal red.

Lana showers every morning in the bathroom adjoining her bedroom, and sprays herself liberally with Tuberose cologne, the only scent she uses. At the studio, she is continually dabbing it behind her ears. At home she does her own hair, and is responsible for a good many of her film hairstyles, including the "feather bob" which swept the country after she wore it in Weekend at the Waldorf.

Her hair has run a gamut almost as varied and unpredictable as her love life. It's honey-blonde now, it was platinum-white not long ago, and once it was even black.

Wherever she goes, female envy and male appreciation are provoked by Lana's clothes, and Lana's figure.

In the dimly-lighted warehouse of M-G-M's wardrobe department, where, between productions, the dress forms of 100 or more leading ladies are stored, the smooth, cold contours of Lana Turner are a statistic in plaster which never lies. Even to glamor-saturated professionals like Irene, M-G-M's head designer, Lana's measurements—bust 35", waist 24½", hips 34½", thigh 21½", calf 13"—add up spectacularly.

Lana is shorter than the average American girl (5 feet 2 in her stocking feet) but her figure is perfect for any kind of clothes from evening gowns to bathing shorts.

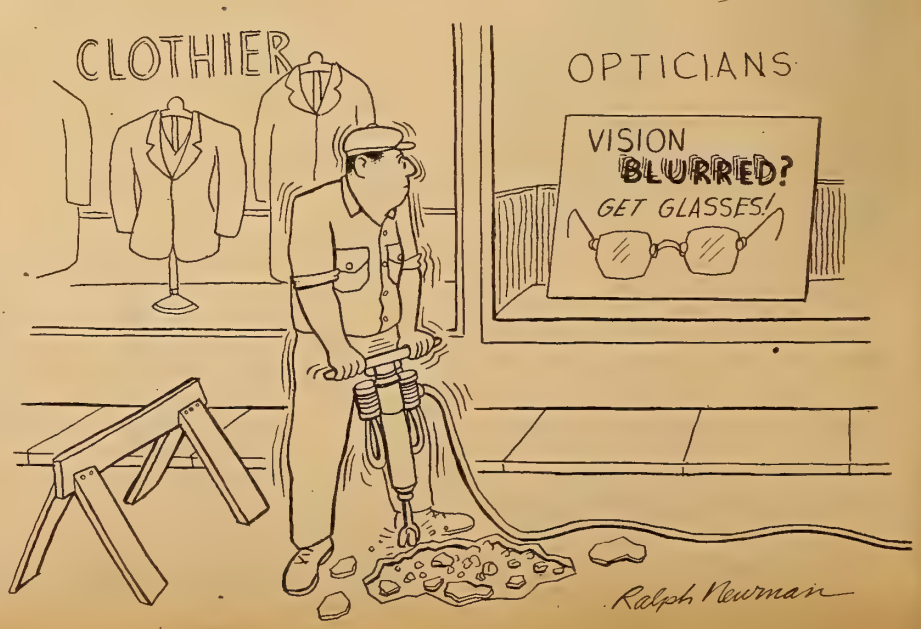
Lana is one of the few actresses in Hollywood who can walk into Saks or Magnin's and walk out with clothes that fit. She still buys most of her evening gowns (she currently owns 17) from Hattie Carnegie's and the tonier designers, but her suits and dresses come from the small Beverly Hills shops where she can duck in and out easily.

She wears jewelry sparingly, and prefers gold, plain and heavy. But for evening wear she does own ring-bracelet-earrings sets in diamonds, sapphires, and emeralds. Three years ago, in order to wear a gift set of diamond pendant earrings, Lana had her ears pierced.

Lana is no intellectual, but she is smart. She has added a great deal to her basic education—particularly in the last three years.

She has a great sense of humor, and a gusty wit, and the brains not to try to give the impression that she got to Hollywood by way of the Social Register, Newport, three finishing schools and a scholarship at Radcliffe. She has learned about music and children's literature with her 4-year-old daughter, Cheryl, with whom she has been seen frequently at the Hollywood Bowl. She reads most of the important new books, and they now decorate her conversation. She listens to symphonies in her dressing room at the studio and knows them well enough to distinguish Bach from Beethoven without looking at the album.

But while Lana is certainly more a beauty than a brain, one would be making a gigantic mistake to consider her dumb. Three years ago, while vacationing in Washington, she startled a Senate luncheon group by speaking spontaneously and intelligently about peace and international understanding for 10 minutes.



I SAW IT HAPPEN

Seated in a Pullman car, Aunt Lucie was approached by a tall, dark and handsome man who wished to share her seat. My aunt, who's a great talker, admired the gentleman's tie, and promptly told him so—much to his delight. The stranger soon dozed off and Auntie became engrossed in her book. Soon a small crowd had gathered around their seat. "Is something the matter?" Auntie asked, naively. "Don't you know who your companion is?" gasped an on-looker. "It's Cary Grant!" Auntie picked up her book and opened it to her place. "And who —pray," she asked, "is Cary Grant?"

Mary Ann Mann,
Grosse Pointe, Michigan

They, too, had expected a gorgeous but giddy performance from Hollywood's most glamorous girl.

When Lana is working on a picture, she is, excepting occasional moods, one of the gayest people in the movie industry. To George Sidney, who directed Cass Timberlane and who has known Lana all her life, she is no glamour gal but an exuberant, athletic, and energetic woman. While working with Sidney, Lana did surprise everyone on the set with her professional-looking performance in the baseball scenes. At the conclusion of the picture, the crew gave her a tiny baseball bat, engraved "Slugger", for her charm bracelet.

Others, contradictorily, have described Lana as "a monument to inertia." To be sure, she is a relaxed human being who takes advantage of every opportunity to rest. She is also such a late sleeper that she frequently has given some people cause to wonder how she ever got anything accomplished. Several years ago, Billy Grady, an old M-G-M talent scout, played golf on the course near Lana's home, and he used to amuse himself at the 19th hole by calling Lana to see if she was still in bed. When he found she was, he would snort into the phone, "Come on kid. Get up. You can't get to be queen that way."

She fooled him. She did.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Being newcomers to the state of California, our family decided to take in some radio broadcasts in Hollywood. On this particular night we saw the Joan Davis show. Ben Gage is the very capable and handsome announcer on that program. I noticed that during the show he kept glancing over to the left side of the studio where we were sitting. I didn't catch on until the end of the performance. But then, walking up the aisle beside me, was his very beautiful and talented wife, Esther Williams.

Dolores Braddock
Los Angeles, California

Now! 3 Sizes of Modess!

to meet every woman's needs

Modess Regular

in the familiar blue box

Ideal for average needs—it's the size most women use. A luxury napkin—so soft, so comfortable, 8 out of 10 women in a recent test reported: no chafing with Modess! And wonderfully absorbent!

Modess Junior

in the green box

A slightly narrower napkin. For women and girls of all ages who find a smaller napkin more comfortable and amply protective. Modess Junior size gives you the same luxury softness and so-safe protection as Regular size Modess.

Modess Super

in the orchid box

Extra absorbent, extra protective—yet soft and light as a cloud. Ideal for days when you need above-average protection. Every Modess Super (Regular and Junior sizes, too) has a triple, full-length safety shield.

Product of Personal Products Corporation

Makers of Modess, Meds, Co-ets, Yes Tissues, Sanitary Belts

All 3 sizes — Now on Sale at your favorite store

The Ideal Way to Reduce

LOSE FAT

Lose Pounds
Lose Inches

REDUCE

In the Privacy of Your Home

WONDER BATH

Helps you to relax while reducing, LOSE WEIGHT with this new, easy, pleasant, harmless method. No more tiring exercises, no more laxatives or drugs. No starvation diets. You just take a warm, soothing, comforting WONDER BATH, just rest and relax for 15 minutes this healthful, pleasant way. By following the WONDER BATH method, you will be amazed and delighted at the way your fat and bulges just seem to melt away. If you are normally overweight you can easily lose pounds and inches. The more you use the WONDER BATH method, the more weight you lose. This is the easy, pleasant, harmless way used by the most expensive and exclusive Reducing Salons. This is the way many New York and Hollywood stage, screen and radio people help to keep their figures slim, lovely and glamorous. You may now say goodbye to your heavy waistline and hips and those unnecessary, unsightly bulges at a trifling cost.

The WONDER BATH method is an amazing new way to reduce superfluous fatty tissues on most all parts of the body.

FREE A large size jar of Special Formula WONDER Body Cream and "FIGURE BEAUTY" will be included absolutely FREE with your order for WONDER BATH. To achieve best results, this Special Formula Body Cream should be used after each WONDER BATH.

10-DAY NO-RISK TRIAL

Use the WONDER BATH method for 10 days at our expense. If you are not truly delighted with your loss of weight, if you don't look and feel better—return the remaining contents and your money will be refunded in full.

ACADEMY VITA PRODUCTS CO., Dept. DM-11
Academy Building, Newark 2, N. J.
Please send me postpaid, 60-day supply of WONDER BATH and Free Special Formula WONDER Body Cream with "FIGURE BEAUTY." I enclose $5.00 cash, check or money order. If I am not 100% delighted, I may return the remaining contents within 10 days and my money will be promptly refunded.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

C.O.D. Orders. Send $1.00 deposit. Pay postman balance of $4.00 plus postage and C.O.D. charges. Same Money-Back Guarantee.

SHE NEVER HAD IT SO GOOD

(Continued from page 50)

it was at a formal party. He'd been home to Texas in between, but his business interests kept him flying around the country, and now here he was all white-tied and shining-faced, making for her with a determined look in his eye.

"Would you like to dance?" he said.

She got up languidly, and moved into his arms. "You know," she said, "I didn't think you were tall enough."

He stared down at her. "Indeed, Miss Lynn. As we used to say in the army, you never had it so good."

"Such modesty," she said. "Tsk, tsk."

After that, they dated a couple of times, and decided they hated each other.

He called her twice in four months, and she giggled with Eileen, her secretary. "I mustn't let all this attention go to my head."

But Christmas came, and with it, red roses. Loads of roses. She read the card: "Bob Neal," and looked back at the flowers.

"You know, Eileen, he has lovely taste."

"He's got more than taste," Eileen observed cynically. "Those roses must have cost a fortune in December—"

Some time in January, Diana got around to writing Bob a thank-you note. She was about to take off on a personal appearance tour, so she mentioned that, too. "I'll be in Chicago next week. If you're anywhere in the vicinity, get in touch with me."

the big sleep . . .

At six a.m., the Chicago-bound train hit Kansas City, and a great banging at the compartment door hit almost simultaneously. Eileen staggered out of bed, glaring at Diana's prone figure. "Sleep through anything," she growled.

She opened the door, and there was a man with a wire for Miss Lynn.

"She's gone for the day," Eileen said. "Will I do?"

She signed for the thing, and brought it in. Diana was sitting up fretfully. "Wha'sit?"

It was a message from Bob. He was going to meet her at the station in Chicago.

"Eileen," Diana cried, "I can't remember what he looks like!"

"Maybe he'll wear a cabbage," Eileen said, yawning. "On his hat."

He did nothing of the kind, but Diana recognized him anyway. He was standing on the platform with a man and a woman, and they were all beaming.

"Mr. and Mrs. Jack Manley," he explained later. "We were sitting in Texas, wanting to go someplace, when your letter came, so—"

So they ran around Chicago together, and when Bob went back to Texas, Diana discovered she missed him.

He flew in for closing night, and then they all went on to New York. He had sisters there, and Diana had radio commitments. By the time they arrived, something new had been added; Bob had influenza.

He was so sick he could hardly stand up, but he was admitting nothing, and nobody could make him go to bed, see?

Somehow they managed. His sisters and his brother-in-law, who's a doctor, and Diana. Their technique was the one you use with a suitcase. Sit on it till it gives.

His brother-in-law came in with a hypodermic. "To make you sleep, Bob—"

"No," Neal said.

"Yes," said his brother-in-law.

Bob howled like a beaten dog, and then submitted, tiredly. Before he fell asleep, he glared once more at Diana. "Don't let me hear about your going out with anyone else—"

She dimpled as only Diana can dimple, enjoying herself immensely. She could hear him bawling out the notes to "A Fine Romance," as she walked down the stairs.

Bob has broadened the field of Diana's interests considerably. When he's in Hollywood, she grimly prepares to visit every used car lot and airport in California.

He took her in hand, long ago. "Do you know the difference between a Talbot and a Bugatti?" he said, on one of their first dates.

She thought she detected a faint note of condescension. "Certainly," she replied.

"Well, then, why are we sitting in this stuffy club when we could be out looking at some?" he cried. "I didn't know you were interested in cars—"

She'd never been interested in cars except as a means of getting from one point to another, but she looked wise. "I like horses, too," she said. "Of course, they're not as fast—"

"Listen—" Neal was thinking. "I know where I can hire a little Singer."

He hired the Singer all right (it's an English car) and she stood and stared at it. "It's so small; suppose we run into a truck—"

"It's a little beauty," Bob said reverently.

After the ride, he turned to her. "How'd you enjoy it?"

"Forty-five minutes to get in and compose myself," she said. "And everybody on Hollywood Boulevard gaping at me so I couldn't be more uncomfortable—Neal, I never had it so good!"

Bob's a fool for planes, too. His idea of a gala evening is to drive out to some airport and argue with the mechanics about engines.

Diana stands around simpering to herself. "Do you prefer an Ercoupe or a Cessna, that's what I always say—" food, what's that? . . .

They practically never eat, because they hate to waste time in silly restaurants.

One of them occasionally reaches the point of death, and gasps, "Food," and then they hit the nearest drive-in. This can be anywhere from ten p.m. on.

Diana prefers when Bob forgets to eat, actually. His eating habits terrify her, ever since the time she watched him breakfast on a malted milk, and chili. "It's so—so—degenerate," she said. "Why can't you be nice and normal? What's the matter with toast and coffee?"

"Like chili," he said, as though that explained it all.

Bob plans to open a resort in California, if he can find the proper site, and Diana shudders when she thinks of the blue plates he'll serve. He has a real talent for designing, and he wants to work out his place himself. He veers toward modern.

Lately, he's been dragging Diana out into the desert near Palm Springs to search for sites. She ends up limping, and hot, and stringy-haired, but Bob just lopes along, with a spring in his step, and a smile on his lips. Sometimes she wants to slam him one.

And just to prove he's a miracle-worker, he recently found himself an apartment, right off the Sunset Strip. People in California get old, looking for apartments. Not Neal.

The place was charming, but the bedroom struck him wrong. It didn't seem masculine enough.

While the real-estate people were in another room, he pulled Diana aside. "Hey, doll, what about this bedroom?"

"I think it's darling," she said.

"Yeah," he said. "That's the trouble."

They finally decided that if a couple of minor items like the lampshades could be done over, the effect would be strong and silent as anything, so Bob signed the lease.

He was studying the ink on his fingers, when Diana told him about the stock company business.

"I'm doing Dear Ruth, out at the beach. The company has made reservations for Eileen and me at the Casa de Manana Hotel."

The more Bob thought about it, the better he liked it. "You'll be out in the sun, and the air, and I'll be able to see you a lot. I can stay at the Colonial."

As it turned out, she worked so hard he never saw her at all, and she got no sun or air whatever, and the day some of his friends gave a picnic lunch for her she couldn't even get there, and Bob had to eat eight sandwiches.

It isn't an easy thing to act on the stage, if your experience has been completely with the screen. Guy Madison co-starred with Diana, and they both found themselves playing single scenes, rather than sustaining the characterizations.

Dress rehearsal came, and in Diana's first scene, she had to drink a cup of coffee, and smoke a cigarette, and the coffee ended up in the saucer, and she could hardly light the cigarette, and she wondered if she was going to die right there.

Later, she was explaining the feeling to Eileen. "I've played the piano for ten years before audiences, but I've never been frightened that way—"

And then the man who'd been watching the rehearsal came up. "What are you doing on the stage?" he said. "I've liked you enormously in the movies, but what are you doing on the stage?"

She almost cried, she felt so incompetent, and Eileen had to step in and say, "She's been on the screen six years; she's been on a stage six days—"

But opening night, nobody needed to make excuses for Diana. The audience cheered, and when she came off, backstage, she was drunk with glory. Eileen was grinning broadly.

And over in the corner, Bob was standing patiently. "My nails," he said, "are chewed off to the point where I won't have to eat again for a week."

Diana kissed him lightly. "Bob," she said, "you never had it so good."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Several weeks ago, a very lovely looking girl came into the drugstore where I work and ordered a cup of coffee. She was so striking that everyone just stared at her. I thought to myself, "Oh, the poor girl must feel embarrassed, with everyone gazing at her like that." I felt so sorry for her, that I told some of the on-lookers to mind their own business. But, she just laughed at that and said, "Ah, you're scaring my public away." Then she left, leaving me to wonder what she meant by that remark. Later, a fellow worker came up to me and said, "Boy, do I envy you! You were waiting on Lena Horne!"

Jacqueline Fahey,
Boston, Mass.

Love-quiz... For Married Folks Only

WHY ARE HIS KISSES JUST "PECKS"... NOW?

A. This wife may be losing romance from her marriage because of faulty feminine hygiene habits.

Q. Faulty feminine hygiene? Can this affect married happiness?

A. Yes—because the charm of complete feminine daintiness is assured only by effective douching. For this, many doctors recommend efficient, dependable "Lysol" brand disinfectant.

Q. How does "Lysol" compare with other disinfectants for dependability?

A. Unlike some other, weaker antiseptics, "Lysol" is a proved germ and odor killer which remains effective in the presence of organic matter.

Q. What about salt, soda . . . other homemade douching solutions on which some women rely?

A. These weak cleansing makeshifts are neither antiseptic nor germicidal—can never compare with reliable "Lysol."

MAKE "LYSOL" your safeguard of intimate daintiness and charm—so important to married happiness. Always use "Lysol" in the douche.

Check these facts with your doctor

Many doctors recommend "Lysol" for Feminine Hygiene. Non-caustic, "Lysol" is gentle, non-injurious to delicate membrane. Its clean, antiseptic aroma quickly disappears. Highly concentrated, "Lysol" is economical in solution. Follow easy directions for correct douching solution.

For Feminine Hygiene—always use

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

FREE BOOKLET! Learn the truth about intimate hygiene and its important role in married happiness. Mail this coupon to Lehn & Fink, Dept. M.-4711 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N.J., for frankly informing FREE booklet.

NAME_____

STREET_____

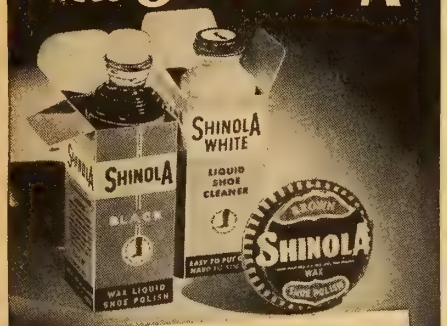
CITY_____ STATE_____

Product of Lehn & Fink Products Corp.

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA



1 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. For good grooming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1.

EXTRA LARGE SIZE
QUILT PIECES
FREE
• 500 yards Thread
• Pattern Book
With every package

4 POUNDS $1.49 plus postage

All new remnants cut from colorful bolts of expensive dress goods. No small scraps. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or we make full refund including postage. You must be satisfied; keep the free thread and colorful pattern book regardless. Shipped C.O.D. SEND NO MONEY.

THE QUILTING BEE, Dept. 114 P. O. Drawer 449 St. Louis 3, Mo.

HANDWRITING ANALYSIS $1

Win happiness and success by learning intimate facts revealed in your handwriting. Know your good points . . . correct the bad. Get expert analysis for only $1, including scientific self-analysis chart. And get your horoscope free, while they last. State birthdate. Send $1 today.

GRAEHAM OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. N,
444 N. Camden Dr., Beverly Hills, California

Guy Madison

FREE PHOTO
LARGE SIZE of your favorite
MOVIE STAR
Direct from Hollywood
INTRODUCTORY OFFER
Also FREE list decorated with all the latest stars and poses.
Send name of YOUR FAVORITE with ten cents to cover handling and mailing.
HOLLYWOOD SCREEN EXCHANGE
Box 1150—Dept. R-2
Hollywood 28, Calif., U. S. A.

INNOCENT ABROAD

(Continued from page 65)

little shabbier, and a little more wonderful.

She also got a show that Paris doesn't usually put on for the passing tourist. Railroad strikes, coal strikes, and steel workers' strikes, bank strikes, and a government workers' slow-down were all being staged simultaneously, and a few Communist demonstrations broke at the same time.

In addition to which, the city officials who weren't on strike eagerly sought her out for news of Hollywood. "I only wanted to rest," she said plaintively. "I only wanted to study some art."

Nevertheless, there were parties, and she went, obligingly. She's excellent at shaking hands and smiling; at French conversation, she's no star. She sticks pretty close to "Eh, bien," with an occasional "peut-être."

After a party, she'd crawl back to her hotel, and wonder what everybody'd been saying to her.

too many cooks . . .

She even changed her mind about painting, once she discovered Paris' attitude toward painters. They're public property. You see a guy set up an easel, and suddenly he's got thirteen other guys standing around pointing out that the green looks lousy, and the brush isn't quite fine enough.

She figured she wasn't half the man any of the other artists were, and left her easel in the suitcase.

After Paris came Belgium, and then Switzerland, and an international film festival at Locarno. There she met a lot of European movie stars, and they stared at her politely as she tried out her high school Spanish. High school Spanish is Linda's only foreign language accomplishment.

In Zurich, where I found her, she was resting. No parties, no interviews. Slacks, and sleeping, and eating.

"No interviews?" I said, pretending not to be an interviewer.

"Nope," she said. "It's too hot." She can go along with a gag. "You see those snow-capped Alps? Props. It's over a hundred degrees this minute. Every place I've been in Europe, it's hit 100. People keep saying, 'This is the hottest day in seventy-five years!' I wish they'd quit."

There aren't any air-cooled movies, or ice-cold water so the heat really smashes you. In Europe, the lowliest thing they waste ice on is champagne.

Linda was struggling along with champagne all right, though. And she was certainly the Grand Dolder's most popular guest.

The Swiss, who are restrained, hardly ever knock you down with enthusiasm. Hotel attendants, who wanted autographs, watched Linda wistfully for ten days, until she got the idea.

There was one waiter, though, who was a little too kind and thoughtful. She'd pick up her fork, and he'd be standing so close to her elbow she'd almost stab him to death.

Then they'd both smile, and she'd go back to work. She put salt on her grapefruit one morning, and he rushed to indicate the sugar.

"I like salt on my grapefruit," she kept saying.

She said it in English, so he went right on steering her clear of what he considered to be a pitfall.

She finally called the headwaiter, and had the poor fellow transferred. "It'll be easier on him, and it'll give me some peace."

Part of the reason Linda was a little lonely on this European jaunt, a little hungry for familiarity, was the fact that she stagged it. She had practically no dates. And while there's been a lot of talk about a divorce between her and Pev Marley, as of August 1, it wasn't in the cards.

All Linda'd bought in Europe were shirts and ties for Pev, from Paris. All she wanted was to be in California by August 12th, Pev's birthday.

All she'd say to me was, "There's no place like home."

MODERN SCREEN

LOVE THAT MAN

(Continued from page 35)

Eventually, to quiet my nerves, I left the apartment to take a walk. When I got to the front door, there stood this guy with a big black suitcase. There too, in a rough-shod greenish suit and odd tie, stood Crosby. Jim Hannon, the superintendent, was hovering over them in high excitement.

"Absolutely no," Jim was saying. "The exterminators were here on Wednesday, and we don't need any additional service." Bing was in there fighting.

"Look," he jerked a thumb at the man with the suitcase. "I never saw this guy before in my life. I'm just trying to go to a christening." Jim was ready to let them have it again.

"Absolutely no," he was beginning. I went over and explained that the man with the suitcase was a photographer here to take pictures of the christening, and the man with the suit was Bing Crosby.

"Remind me never to be a godfather again," Bing said, going up in the elevator. "The stuff you gotta take in this racket . . ."

But just try to keep that boy from being a godfather—at least where musicians are concerned. It's as much a part of him as that beat-up hat he wears to recordings. I'd like to have a nickel for every little guy he's helped set up in business. The routine is something like this:

Bing'll be listening to a good small band in some out-of-the-way spot, his head on one side, his fingers tapping. When the act is over, he'll say, "That kid with the clarinet is okay," and he'll buy him a drink. The kid turns out to have a pocketful of dreams and no cash. Maybe he wants his own band. Maybe he'd like to open his own club. If Crosby believes in him, he'll lend him the dough. Lend, I say. Lots of times it's a gift.

don't tell him I said so . . .

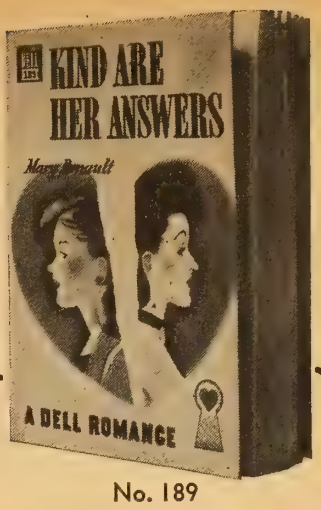
Boy, Crosby won't like me for this. He's one guy who doesn't want his good deeds known. You know, there are some fellows who—the minute they give a nickel to some charity or other—have their press agents flash the word to every columnist in the business. Not Bing. Every time that bird does anyone a good turn, he covers it up. You'd think he was going to be sent up if anyone got the goods on him. The only way anyone ever finds out about Bing's kindness is from the musician involved.

Sure, he's got a pile of dough now. He can afford to be generous. But this godfather business is nothing new. I remember a night in Chicago, back in the early days. I was in and out of jobs, in and out of funds. A few of my pals and I shared a single room in some crummy hotel, the rent for which we rarely paid, and one of us always had to be in it so that they couldn't lock us out. I had just done my stretch minding the room, and this was my night to howl. Paul Whiteman was at the Ambassador and Paul Whiteman was tops. I went over and heard him. Heard these three kids with him, too. "The Rhythm Boys" they were called, and they were tremendous. I found out that half the band hung out at some joint over toward Cicero after they finished work, and I hitched a ride out there.

It wasn't a flashy place. There were blue layers of smoke left over from a thousand nights, and the smell of bootleg booze was as strong as disinfectant. But there was music in that place. There was Bix and that magnificent horn of his; there were the Dorseys and Frankie Trumbauer and Jack

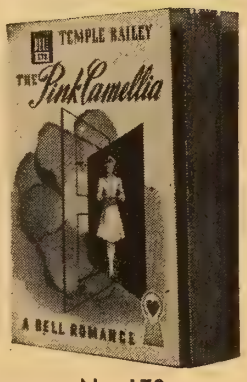
These Best-Selling Romantic Novels

now published by DELL BOOKS for only 25¢



Kind Are Her Answers
By Mary Renault
No. 189

Kit Anderson, a coming young doctor, is resolved never to be emotionally bound by a woman again. His marriage to cold, selfish Janet has just ended in his heart, and he is exulting in a new sense of release. Then . . . he meets Christie Heath, warm-hearted and unconventional, and is strangely attracted by her. They are scarcely acquainted when Christie, without seeming to move, is in his arms. This is madness, thinks Kit, but he only clasps her more tightly. Here is a beautifully written, voluptuous and provocative romance that is as real as yesterday and tomorrow. It is the work of the brilliant English author whose "Return to Night" won the M. G. M. $150,000 prize.



No. 178

Temple Bailey's
The Pink Camellia

"Two men wanting her—two men fighting for her—what more could a woman wish?" old Inez sighs in a kind of ecstasy. But lovely young Cecily Merryman isn't so sure. For when Cecily leaves her beloved Arizona to escape from one man, she finds herself involved in a tangle of dark shadows and suspicions. How she finds peace and happiness make a warm and appealing love story in Temple Bailey's best vein.

No. 173

AMERICAN ACRES
by Louise Redfield Peattie
A romantic, modern novel of a girl with two worlds—her father's steadfast American heritage and her mother's brilliant but rootless Continental life.

RELUCTANT MILLIONAIRE
by Maysie Greig
The lovely Roenna couldn't imagine a millionaire not wanting his money. An engaging and exciting romance with a surprise ending.

No. 170

DELL PUBLISHING CO., INC., 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

If you cannot obtain the titles listed, mail this coupon. Send 25c for each book ordered. This offer good in the U. S. A. only.

Please send me the DELL BOOKS checked below. I enclose $.....
( ) No. 189 ( ) No. 178 ( ) No. 173 ( ) No. 170

Name.....

Address.....

City, Zone & State.....

M.S.-117

When the Children are Constipated—

Give them the Laxative they love to take!

Forcing a child to take a strong, nasty-tasting medicine upsets the parents as well as the child. Next time your youngster needs a laxative, give him Ex-Lax! He'll love its delicious chocolate taste—not a bit like medicine!

Ex-Lax gets results easily, comfortably. It isn't violent or upsetting like some laxatives are. When you give the children Ex-Lax, they'll hardly know they have taken a laxative, except for the satisfying relief they get.

Yet, gentle as it is, you can depend on Ex-Lax to give the youngsters thorough relief. It is biologically tested for effective action. Many doctors use it in their practice.

And don't forget—Ex-Lax is just as good for grown-ups as it is for children. It's America's most widely used laxative—over 40 million boxes sold annually! Take Ex-Lax yourself and as a precaution use only as directed. Still only 10¢. Economy size, 25¢.

When Nature "forgets"... remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

ASTHMADOR

If chill autumn winds and fall colds aggravate your bronchial asthma, if congestion makes every breath a painful effort—then it's time you knew about Dr. R. Schiffmann's ASTHMADOR, favorite inhalant treatment of asthma sufferers everywhere. ASTHMADOR'S pleasant, penetrating fumes help you breathe easier, aid in reducing the agony of the attack, give you relief when you most need it. No costly sprays to buy—nothing to take internally—just light ASTHMADOR powder or an ASTHMADOR cigarette and breathe in those soothing, aromatic fumes that make life seem worthwhile again. Sold under money-back guarantee Teagarden. Listening to them I felt the way Hoagy Carmichael must have felt when—after he'd heard something special in the way of music—he'd drawl, "I sure hope God was listening to that." Anyway, I was standing at the bar seeing how far I could stretch a beer, when this vaguely familiar-looking character sauntered over to me.

"Hi, bud," he said, and his voice was like a bassoon.

"Hi," I said.

"Crosby's my name," he intoned.

"Condon's mine," I said, and then I pinned the name on the face. He was one of the Rhythm Boys.

"Have a drink on me," he said. "Purely medicinal, you know. I've got laryngitis. What've you got?"

I said, "Just a good thirst." We shook hands, and that was the beginning of a long hard friendship. We talked music for a while, and then I noticed him looking me over like one of those guess-your-weight guys.

"You don't look too good," he said finally. "What's the matter, bud?" I knew what he meant. Seedy suit, rundown shoes—

"No job," I told him briefly.

"Well, look," he said. "I'm in the dough right now—" He started to dig into his pocket. I told him to go to hell, and after a few more drinks we shook hands again, and I went home. The next morning I found the twenty dollar bill in my pocket, and it was a king-size tug at the heart. I mean, shucks, Crosby wasn't that dough-heavy in those days.

that stardust melody . . .

Late in the 1920's, when "Stardust" was a song nobody wanted to buy, Bing took Hoagy Carmichael under his wing. But literally. Hoagy had gone West to peddle his songs to the movie moguls. "Washboard Blues," "Old Rockin' Chair," a few little things like that. And the dopes didn't want them. Eventually McCorkle (that's what the boys called Carmichael) ran out of money. He didn't even have the price of a ticket home. Paul Whiteman's special train was leaving for the East just about that time, and when it pulled out, who was sharing Bing's berth but little old McCorkle. It was a tight squeeze, but it was a way home, which was all that mattered Looking back on it, Hoagy remembers that the nights weren't too bad, because Bing snored in perfect pitch to the train whistle.

His loyalty to his old friends is something pretty wonderful. When they needed a band for Birth of the Blues, Bing didn't let them foist any old outfit on him. He screamed for his pal Jackson Teagarden—and got him. Jack T. ran into union trouble not long ago, and couldn't play anywhere in this country. When you don't play, you don't eat. Bing heard about it and called Jack up.

"I know a guy in England," he said. "You can get all the bookings you want. I'll look into sailings and stuff . . ." The trouble was cleared up and Jack is still in this country, but he won't forget Crosby for that.

If you know anything about jazz musicians, you know a guy called Joe Sullivan. He's been around a long while, and he plays more piano than pretty nearly anybody. About five years ago, Joe developed tb., and the doctor ordered complete rest in a sanitarium. The weeks stretched into months, and then into a whole year, and Joe's wife was frantic trying to get enough money together to pay the bills. Joe's pals rallied round and passed the hat, but they weren't too prosperous a gang, and there came a day at last when there were just no more funds. Mrs. Sullivan went up to see Joe, wondering how to tell him. He was waiting for her, all smiles.

"I'm in a new room," he told her. "Bigger and sunnier, and they've starfed some different treatments. I'll be out of here in no time, baby—" She hadn't the heart to give him her bad news, but after the visit she went to the office to talk over her plight.

"Mrs. Sullivan," she was told. "We have a letter here saying that no expense is to be spared in getting your husband well, and we're to forward all future bills to this address." The girl at the desk read out a street in Los Angeles. It was years later, after Joe was cured, that they discovered from someone at the sanitarium who had paid those bills. That's right, chums. It was Crosby.

And with Bing, it isn't only dough. He's lavish with the kind words, too, and just as reluctant to have that fact known. Which is why the musician in this story is anonymous. One night, a few years back, Bing ambled into a little joint up in Harlem for a nightcap. The band was mediocre, but there was a kid at the piano who was out of this world. There was a sort of suppressed excitement in his playing that was beautiful to hear. Crosby thought, maybe he's had a fight with his girl, or maybe he's just fallen in love. He couldn't play like that just any old night. So Bing went back again. And again. And the kid was always the same, and the kid was good. So Bing spoke to him.

"You're bigger than this joint," he told him. "You've got the stuff." The boy at the piano looked up at the maestro and grinned.

"If you say so," he said—and there was awe in his voice—"It's gotta be true." When Bing went back to the Coast, he kept in touch with the youngster, encouraging him, advising him. And inevitably, the kid made the big time. Right now his name is a household word. Bing says it would have happened anyway, but the lad from Harlem says he'd still be beating it out in a Lenox Avenue honky-tonk if a guy named Crosby hadn't had faith in him.

I could go on and on. During the war, who started a foundation to help struggling young inventors patent their ideas? Why, Crosby. Who hands over the royalties on his Christmas carol records to charity? Crosby. And who's the only singer in the business who insists that his sidemen be cut in on record royalties? Again! that's Crosby. No wonder guys like Teagarden and Dorsey and Condon love that man. No wonder people like Nat Cole and the Ink Spots, people like Paul Whiteman and Frank Sinatra say there's no one on earth like him.

Liza, my love, with a godfather like Bing, you'll grow up to be president!

MODERN SCREEN

He's sinking fast, Doctor!

TEE FOR TWO

(Continued from page 32)

We were sitting in the grill of the Bel Air Country Club, after finishing a round of golf with Major Clark Hardwicke, World War II veteran of the Air Corps, and Bert Allenberg, Gable's manager. Allenberg and I had just been beaten 4 and 3 by the two Clarks, and I had just paid off my $45 to Hardwicke.

At a nearby table sat Bing Crosby, another fabulous Air Corps golfer, Ken Rogers, Frank Ross, Reginald Owen and the Bel Air pro, Joe Novak. Workmen, perched on platforms near the ceiling of the grill, gave it a real Hollywood studio effect. All that was missing was Cecil B. DeMille, perched on a boom, calling out: "Quiet, please!"

The workmen were soundproofing the ceiling.

"Bert is one of my closest friends," said Clark, indicating Allenberg, who was absorbed in rolling dice for the drinks with Hardwicke. "Then there's Al Menasco, who designs airplane engines. We kicked around together for years, but Al got married and you know how it is. A married man just naturally acquires responsibilities, no longer is available for impromptu trips—"

The MODERN SCREEN photographer, Don Ornitz, came into the grill and said that he had gotten his color film equipment out of his jeep and had set it up on the 10th tee, for one last shot of Gable. "I'd like to get one shot of you at the finish of your swing." We went to the 10th tee, still carrying our glasses.

a major assist . . .

I took along Major Hardwicke, as technical adviser, figuring that I might just as well have him work out the dough he had lifted from me. So the major sighted through the camera finder, okayed the top of Gable's swing, and then exploded the flash bulb as the picture was taken. Gable, as a result of his coaching by Hillcrest professional, George Fazio, has one of the smoothest-looking swings of any Coast amateur.

"When they see that picture," warned Hardwicke, "they'll cut you down to a 5 handicap." Gable grinned. "I'd love it. I'd rather play this game well than almost anything else I can think of."

Throughout the afternoon, Gable had been extraordinarily cooperative, posing for any shots which Don suggested, even though we were playing a tight match. When we were alone, I commented about it.

"Hell, that's not being nice," said Clark. "The way I figure it, Ed, is that when somebody is assigned to a job, only a stinker would make it difficult for him to do it. On top of that, the pictures will do me good. Beyond all of that, Don is a former Air Corps guy."

Gable chuckled. "You know, if you are nice to people, it's amazing how much you can learn from them."

I asked Gable if, as the public generally believed, he was a desperately lonely figure.

"I'd say definitely no." he answered, after thinking it over. "For a time, I was at loose ends, but, luckily, I never sold our house. So when I came back from war, that fact sort of gave me roots The place had run down while I was away, and the work of fixing it up again occupied me, and then, as it started looking attractive, I got a terrific thrill of pride in it. Had I come back here and gone to live in a hotel, I am convinced now that it would have demoralized me."

Exquisite JEWELRY BARGAINS!

10 KT. GOLD BRIDAL PAIR 8 Sparkling chip DIAMONDS Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c per ring extra. No. D-17 Each $5.95 Both $9.95

10 KT. GOLD DINNER RING 5 Fancy chip DIAMONDS Sizes 4 to 8, Larger, 65c extra. No. D-29.... Price $9.95

SEND NO MONEY!
Get the latest! Get the finest! Choose from these Exquisite Bargains and wear for romance and beauty! Just pay postman C.O.D. on delivery amount plus 20% Government tax and postage. Write Name, Address and Number. On Ring order, state finger size or send string or strip of paper. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. Send all orders to:
WORLD WIDE DIAMOND CO., Dept. HA-907
2451 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Illinois

"Lovers' Choice" Cocktail Bracelet and Earrings Lustrous GOLD color. Latest style. With imitation DIAMONDS and RUBIES. Very Expensive-Looking. No. A-886—All 3 ..... Special $2.95

SWISS WATCHES

BIRTH-MONTH RING Dazzling Individual Birth-Month Ring in STERLING SILVER. Send Month. No. R-425.....Only 98c

MEN'S TUXEDO RING On Brite STERLING SILVER. Looks so Very Expensive! No. 2R-426...Price $1.98

SILVER SIGNET RING Brilliantly flanked Initial on Onyx-like Base in STERLING SILVER. No. R-448....Price $2.98

Ladies' Delite Wrist Watch As lovely as a first kiss! Rich-looking GENUINE SWISS-made. Designed for any costume. You'll love it the very first moment you wear it. No. W-905A. Price $9.45

THE PRESIDENT Classy Accurate Guaranteed Genuine SWISS movement. Sweep second Hand. Luminous Dial. Attractive SILVER color case. Matching Stainless Steel Expansion Band. No. 2W-918 Special $6.95

Honorable Discharge Ring Bright STERLING SILVER. Inscribed World War Veteran. Fine Quality No. R-535 ....Only $1.98

LOVE BRIDAL PAIR 25 Gorgeous Brilliants in Brite STERLING SILVER Filigree Pattern. No. R-405 Each $2.95 Both $3.95

DIAMOND BRIDAL SET 10 chip DIAMONDS on 10 KT. GOLD. Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c per ring extra. No. D-38 Ea. $6.95 Both $11.95

DIAMOND BRIDAL PAIR 4 chip DIAMONDS, 10 KT. GOLD. Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c per ring extra. No. D-11 Each $4.95 Both $8.95

Sterling Silver Bridal Set 11 Gorgeous Flashing Brilliants on Exquisite STERLING SILVER. No. R-442 Ea. $1.95 Both $2.95

Genuine Diamond Bridal Set 10 KT. GOLD set with GENUINE chip DIAMOND. Sizes 4 to 8. Larger, 65c per ring extra. No. D-46C.....Both $5.45

IDENTIFICATION BRACELET Name Engraved FREE on Gleaming Bright SILVER color Name Plate. Very fine quality and Expensive-Looking. Give Name. No. 2N-504.....Bargain 98c

Men's Double Sparkling Ring STERLING SILVER with Twin Flashing White Brilliants. Extra Heavy Handsome Design. No. R-530 ....Price $2.95

ENGAGEMENT RING 12 imitation DIAMONDS with Brilliant on STERLING SILVER. Stunning! No. 2R-417 ..Only $1.98

Lucky Sweetheart Personalized Bracelet Name Engraved FREE. Yellow GOLD color. Large Romantic Heart to glisten on your wrist in sheer beauty. Exquisite Expansion Band. Give Name. No. N-516.....Price $1.95

FULL SIZE BOLT CUT REMNANTS

4 lbs. approx. 20 yds.

EVERY PIECE A FULL 30 INCH WIDTH IN ONE-QUARTER TO 4 YARD LENGTHS cut from new bolts of dress goods; fast colors. Prints, percales, ginghams. Do not confuse this offer with other so-called "remnant" bundles which include small scraps, odds-and-ends pieces. MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE: if you are not satisfied, return your bundle and we shall immediately refund your money plus postage. ORDER WITH CONFIDENCE from the largest supplier of remnants and quilt pieces in America. Join our tens of thousands of satisfied customers. We ship C. O. D. SEND NO MONEY.

only 2.98 plus postage

LARGE SIZE QUILT PIECE REMNANTS

Fine quality pieces that are a little too small to fit in our full-size Remnant bundle . . . hundreds of uses. 4 lbs., approx. 20 yds. $1.69 PLUS POSTAGE

THE SEWING CIRCLE
Dept. 204, BOX 505, ST. LOUIS 3, MO.

AMAZING! MAKE $25
selling 50 boxes 21 for $1 Xmas Cards. Also 50 and 25 for $1 embossed with name on. Samples on approval. Experience not necessary.
MERIT CARD CO.
70 WILLIAM ST., DEPT. A, NEWARK 2, N. J.

CORNS
also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
removed by MOSCO

Here's One Of The Greatest
BLOOD-IRON TONICS YOU CAN BUY
If you have SIMPLE ANEMIA!
You girls and women who suffer so from simple anemia that you're pale, weak, "dragged out"—this may be due to lack of blood-iron. So try Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS—one of the best home ways to build up red blood to get more strength—in such cases. Pinkham's Tablets are one of the greatest blood-iron tonics you can buy!
Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS

RAILWAY POSTAL CLERK · GOVERNMENT CLERK · MAIL CARRIER · POSTOFFICE CLERK

$1,756 TO $3,021 A YEAR
U.S. GOVERNMENT JOBS
Veterans Get Preference
Men—Women
Prepare NOW for 1948 examinations.
Mail Coupon today sure.

COUPON
Franklin Institute, Dept. N108, Rochester 4, N. Y.
Sirs: Rush to me without charge (1) 32-page book with list of U. S. Government jobs. (2) Tell me immediately how to prepare for one of these jobs.
NAME.....
ADDRESS.....VET?.....

Develop a Glamorous Bust Line!

For irresistible figure-beauty, follow BONOMO RITUAL for Beautiful Bust Contour—Complete, improved and revised 6-week Course shows how to develop alluring bust contour so important to romance. Features exclusive home techniques created by Joe Bonomo, famous beauty authority, publisher BEAUTY FAIR magazine. 8½" x 11", 124 diagrams, charts, and illustrations of special exercises, bust control methods; diet, food analysis; tables of weight and correct proportions, etc. Money back if not delighted. Sent C.O.D. for 98c plus postage or send 98c and we pay postage.

BONOMO CULTURE INSTITUTE
Dept. B1711
1841 Broadway, New York 23, N.Y.

Quack! Quack!

THE NEW ORIGINAL DRINKING DUCK

WITH THE BIG EYES AND REAL FEATHER TAIL AND STAND

only $2.49 This amazing new duck will fascinate young and old with his antics. No motor, no electricity, no springs. He just guzzles.

ELECTRIC LIGHT BOW TIE, WITH BATTERY, BULBS..... $1.95

2 wonderful Xmas Gifts.
Rush Your Order Today
BERNARD FINE CO., INC.
501 Sixth Avenue, Dept. DM2, New York 11, N. Y.

ITCHY
Checked in a JIFFY

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, scabies, pimples and other itching conditions. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Soothes, comforts and checks itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Don't suffer. Ask your druggist today for D.D.D. Prescription.

High School Course at Home Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. H814, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

INVENTORS

Patent laws encourage the development of inventions. Our firm is registered to practice before the U. S. Patent Office. Write for further particulars as to patent protection and procedure and "Invention Record" form at once. No obligation.

McMORROW, BERMAN & DAVIDSON
Registered Patent Attorneys
290-C Victor Building, Washington 1, D. C.

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS

Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.

EASY TO LEARN

NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan. Dept. 2368. Chicago 5

Marvel
WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women
At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Free Booklet. Marvel Co., 60 East St., New Haven, Ct.

WANT TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE?
EASY TO TRAIN AT HOME

ACT NOW—HELP FILL THE NEED

Now you can prepare for practical experience as a Trained Practical Nurse in spare time. Many earn while learning. Ages 18 to 55. High school not necessary. Easy payments. Write for free information and sample lesson pages.

WAYNE SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL NURSING, INC.
2301 N. Wayne Ave., Desk K26. CHICAGO 14, ILL.

The conversation turned to pictures. I asked Gable what quality he looked for in a script such as Sidney Kingsley's Homecoming, which he was making with Lana Turner for Mervyn LeRoy.

"All I want in a script," he said, "is entertainment. If it will entertain people or amuse them, that's for me. I am vitally concerned with the condition of the world and our country, but when I am acting, I won't be a propagandist. People go to the theater to be entertained and to escape from their own problems. I only want to send them out feeling that they have spent a couple of enjoyable hours. Sometimes," added Gable, ruefully, "your judgment of a script is sour. But that is one of the occupational hazards of the business."

How long, I asked, had Gable been making pictures.

"I started out here in 1930," he answered, "and I've been at it ever since. The first good part I ever had drifted to me quite by accident. The role had been offered to Edmund Lowe and a lot of other ranking heavies, and they all turned it down because it was to be a characterization of Al Capone, in Joan Crawford's Dance, Fools, Dance.

a ham at heart . . .

"When I read the script, the ham in me responded to one scene in particular. As the gang chieftain, I dispatched my mobsters to wipe out a group of rival hoodlums. The script then outlined a wonderful scene. When my 'hoods' returned to report to me that they had machine-gunned not less than 10% of Chicago's population, the camera revealed me sitting moodily at the keyboard of a piano, playing Beethoven!"

A gleam came to Gable's eye: "I almost broke my leg getting to the telephone in the corner drugstore to tell the producer that he didn't have to look for another boy."

Under Gable's new contract, covering the next eight years, he'll make three pictures every two years, or a total of 12 flickers. "By that time, 1955," he grinned, "I'll be ready for character parts, I guess. While I am not rich in any sense of the word, I am comfortably situated and I guess by then, I'll go traveling and fishing. Say, by that time I'll be getting ready to play in the United States Seniors' Golf Championship!"

During my month's stay in Hollywood this past summer, I played a lot of golf with Clark Gable, and golf is an X-ray that shows up the most minute flaws in a person. Arrogance, cheating, temper, selfishness, ruthlessness, all come to the surface during the heat of a golf match, no matter how insignificant the financial stakes.

Gable and I played about 12 rounds together, stood on the same practice tee and went through the same exasperating experiences, played at different courses with different companions; so, just as he could give you a very accurate analysis of me, I got to know him.

Adolphe Menjou, one of our golfing pals in Hollywood, fears neither the Devil nor Daniel Webster. His frankness in exploding some of the legends of Hollywood curls the hair on your head. He is engaged in a 24-hour-a-day attack on smugness of any kind. I asked him once what sort of a person Rudolph Valentino had been. "Completely impossible," said Menjou with typical frankness. I am outlining this character sketch of Menjou so that you will appreciate the opinion he gave me of Clark Gable, one day, while we were playing at the California Country Club.

"Gable is the finest gentleman this industry ever has seen," Menjou said. "I have known him for a good many years, and I have worked with him in many pictures, and there is no actor out here who even approaches his stature as a human being."

Gable is not above "putting the horns" on you, though. In golf, this means that as your opponent putts, you extend the forefinger and the little finger of your hand to put the curse on him. Now and then it works. Gable tries it.

He showed up one day for a match, and at the first tee he told us: "Protect yourselves in the clinches. Today, I am really ugly. I was so burned up at my bad shots yesterday that I didn't get more than four hours' sleep. Twice, during the night, I got up, took my driver and practiced my swing in my bedroom in front of the mirror, to find out what the hell I was doing wrong yesterday. Then I went back to bed, and two hours later I woke up again. I had suddenly dreamed out the solution to that bad hook. So for the next 20 minutes, I again practiced in front of the mirror. Brethren, you'd better be on your sticks today, because I haven't had much sleep and I feel evil."

nobody's chump . . .

Gable's conscientiousness in golf indicates the capacity for concentration which lifted him to movie stardom. He is nobody's chump and once he makes up his mind, he doesn't yield easily.

Girls like him, naturally. When he is with them, Gable really turns on the charm. He is very boyish, despite his maturity, and the girls love the combination. He has two cars, a stunning Cadillac Convertible, royal blue in color, and a steel-gray Chrysler with a rigid top. He never puts the top up on the Cadillac and when he drives through Beverly Hills, the girls can be pardoned a double-take as they find him next to them in traffic.

"My God, it's Gable," exclaimed a startled femme, when I was with him one afternoon. Her car had come to a halt next to his at a stop sign, and I have never seen such a series of expressions race so quickly across a face. "H'ya, hon," smiled Gable, and she waved weakly back.

He got the rigid-topped car for longer trips as a safety precaution. In a convertible, he was barreling along at 70 miles an hour and suddenly, as he rounded a corner, an oil truck, its sides busted through in an accident, deluged the highway with gallons of the sticky, slippery black gold. Afraid to jam on his brakes, Gable's car whipped into the oil-covered surface and went into a series of loops and spins. Fortunately, it didn't turn over but from then on, he decided that on long trips he preferred the Chrysler.

Gable still carries on correspondence with some of the men with whom he served in the Air Corps. His greatest friend was his Commanding Officer, Colonel Willie Hatcher. From what Gable tells me, Hatcher was a phenomenal person, both as an executive and as a warrior. That correspondence and friendship ended when the Army flier, not many months ago, was killed in the crash of his B-29 at Albuquerque, N. M. Gable still writes to the widow and two youngsters of his friend.

I would not be at all surprised if Gable, at some time, married again. I know he feels that a man living alone is a sort of a stray. I think he feels this keenly because all of his friends are married, and when he visits them, the fact of his aloneness is driven home to him. If he does remarry, I trust that the girl measures up to him because, in my book, he is an exceptionally fine guy. The right kind of girl could do a great deal for him and I'm certain that Carole Lombard would be deeply grateful to her.

THE FANS

(Continued from page 110)

short (350-400 words), amusing (or heart-warming, as the case may be) character sketch about your star. You may tell your story through a series of anecdotes, or it may be a thumb-nail type of article. But it must have a definite theme, or "angle" —dramatic, amusing, poignant, light-hearted, sarcastic, ironic, reminiscent, etc. Also, it must be written objectively, in the third person (unless you've had a very unusual interview with your star). It need not be based on original material. You may select any information about your star that you've read about in magazines or club journals, or that you've heard first-hand from friends, and treat that material in your own original way. Entry in this contest does not give anyone the right to seek a personal interview with a star, as a representative of MODERN SCREEN. Stars are hereby instructed NOT to grant interviews to anyone for the purpose of entering this contest.

About the best hint we can give you is to suggest that, before you go ahead with your piece, you read the little biographical sketches in our sister magazine, SCREEN ALBUM. They'll give you a very clear idea of what we mean by "slant" and "objectivity." Also you'll learn how to illustrate your "theme" by the clever use of anecdotes.

Naturally, we've got some rules for you —but they're designed to make it EASIER for you to enter the contest, not more difficult. So read 'em carefully, please:

1. Any bona fide member of an MSFCA club is eligible.
2. You do not have to write about your own honorary, but your subject must be a star who has an official MSFCA club, or is an honorary member of an MSFCA club.
3. Typewrite or write your article legibly on one side of the sheet, double-spaced. Be sure your name, address and club appears plainly on the first page.
4. Your article must be between 300 and 400 words.
5. You may submit as many articles as you wish.
6. This contest closes December 31, 1947.
7. Address your entries to: Writing Contest Editor, MSFCA, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York 16.
8. Entries will be judged on the basis of writing ability, intelligent selection and use of material, and legibility.
9. The staff of MODERN SCREEN will serve as judges in this contest. Their decisions will be final.
10. Entries become the property of MODERN SCREEN. No entries will be returned.
11. Winning articles will be published on THE FANS page of MODERN SCREEN.
12. Because we cannot anticipate at this time how many professional-quality entries we will receive, we are leaving the number of winners to the discretion of our staff.
13. Articles that have been published previously in a club journal, or that are being offered for publication elsewhere will not be accepted for this contest.

NOTE: It's been called to our attention that you fans are confused about the official starting dates and final deadlines of our semi-annual Trophy Cup contests. The contest for the Winter Cups starts with material received in our offices on May 16, each year, and ends with material received on November 15. Winners are formally announced in the March issue of MODERN SCREEN, which means that we have to have the final tallies ready by early December. The contest for the Summer Cups runs from November 16 to May 15, each year, and final winners are announced in the September issue. This means we must know the results by the first week in June. That's why we were able to make the official Cup presentations at the Hollywood Convention on June 28. For the sake of convenience, though, we say the contests run from January to June, and from July to December.

BIRTH OF A BABY

(Continued from page 57)

right?" Bill said.

"Fine, honey. The doctor said we could have a cigarette together."

He drew up a chair and lit two cigarettes.

"This is quite a procedure," he said. "Maybe my idea of a double room together wasn't so bad after all."

Four months ago, Bill had fallen and twisted his leg, the injury resulting in a knee infection. He had ended up with his entire leg in a cast and was ordered to bed. He fretted constantly. "How'll you get to the hospital if this cast isn't off my leg?"

When he was well enough to walk with crutches, Barbara drove him to the hospital for a treatment. They walked in the front door together, Bill leaning heavily on his crutches, and Barbara obviously well on her way toward motherhood. The nurse at the desk coughed discreetly.

"Uh—which one is the patient, please?"

That had amused them. "What a pair we are!" Bill had said. "Do you think they'd give a man a bed in the maternity ward?"

But the cast had been removed a few weeks before Barbara's confinement, and the first time Bill drove the car, he mapped the route to the hospital.

Now Dr. Thompson came into the room and pointed to the door. Bill gave Barbara one last concerned look over his shoulder as he left. And they had said they wanted half a dozen kids. Brother! This was pretty strenuous. Back in the waiting-room, he walked up and down, filling the place with smoke from innumerable cigarettes.

This had been a year, all right. The wedding in Barbara's home town in Illinois, and the honeymoon trip down to Florida and up the Mississippi back to Rockford, and the days in the Wisconsin woods with Barbara's family, and the trip back toward Hollywood.

Then there'd been the brief months at home when he had built the wall in front of the house, and Barbara had pored over the cookbooks and decorating magazines. In between domestic activities they both did retakes for A Likely Story. Also, there was an RKO publicity trip that lasted three months, and one day in New York they read in a newspaper column that Barbara was expecting a baby.

"Interesting," Bill noted.

The most famous name in make-up is Westmore. The Westmores originated the whole idea of foundation make-up for the Hollywood stars...for you!

3 not 1...so that all complexions can be lovelier, the Westmores offer three different types of foundation make-up...the famous Overglo lotion...a cream...a cake! One of these is ideal for your skin texture and tone...gives you a really fresh, smoothly-flawless complexion. Never drying.

In 7 authentic Westmore Shades.

Overglo Lotion Make-up	$1.50
Cake Make-Up	$1.00
Foundation Powder	$1.00
Foundation Cream	25¢, 50¢, $1.00
Cold Cream Cleansing	25¢, 50¢, $1.00
Lipstick	25¢, 50¢, $1.00
Rouge	25¢, 50¢

Westmore Make-Up

On sale at leading toilet goods counters everywhere.

Get Well QUICKER

From Your Cough Due to a Cold

FOLEY'S Honey & Tar Cough Compound

Choice of These Luscious Colors: Black, Blue, Pink, or White

Enticing! This dream nightie is made especially for figure flattery. Wear it when you yearn to look your most alluring. It's your feminine bedtimer of soft rayon sheer, lavishly trimmed with expensive lace and ribbon. You're a picture of loveliness when you slip on this enchanting gown, with its wealth of lace and gorgeous design. You'll be delighted!

SEND NO MONEY!

Wear this beautiful gown at OUR RISK. If not completely satisfied, your money refunded. In all sizes: Misses 10 to 14, Women's 32 to 42. Extra large sizes 44 to 52 price $6.98. Better order now! Send size and color wanted. Pay postman C.O.D. plus postage.

INTERNATIONAL DIAMOND CO.
Garment Dept. 660
2435 So. Indiana Avenue
Chicago 16, Ill.

Stop CORNS!

Instant Relief

NEVER wait! At first sign of sore toes from tight shoes, protect them with Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. You'll have instant relief and stop corns before they can develop. But—if you have corns, callouses or bunions—Zino-pads will relieve the pain almost like magic.

Remove Corns, Callouses

You'll marvel, too, how the separate Medications included speedily remove corns and callouses. Sold at all Drug, Shoe, Dept. Stores, Toiletry Counters.

CORNS, SORE TOES

CALLOUSES

BUNIONS

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

A CAREER IN MOTION PICTURES?
READ "CRASHING HOLLYWOOD"

$1.00 POSTPAID

A FACT-FILLED BOOK ON MAKING YOUR OWN BREAKS IN THE PICTURE INDUSTRY—Written by Professional Hollywood Writers!

Not a dramatic course nor a glamour guide—but a clearly written, easy to understand, helpful handbook written expressly for those who have already decided upon motion pictures as a lifelong career. Gets right down to the actual business of how to make your own breaks—from your own home town, or in Hollywood—knowing and meeting the right people, making your own screen test—every angle from A to Z, including "inside information" seldom revealed to outsiders. Hundreds of helpful hints and suggestions.

ONLY $1 POSTPAID—MAILED IN PLAIN WRAPPER

Write your name and address and enclose $1 cash, check or money order, and mail to: SNYDER-AHERN CO., Dept. D1, 5548½ MELROSE AVENUE, HOLLYWOOD 38, CALIFORNIA

FREE CATALOG Pins and Rings

Finest quality. Over 300 artistic designs. Write for our attractive free catalog and select a beautiful pin or ring for your class or club. Dept. Z, Metal Arts Co., Rochester, N. Y.

GOODBYE TO PIMPLES BLACKHEADS

Why suffer the embarrassment and agony of ugly acne, pimples, blackheads and other externally caused skin blemishes? For quick relief and soothing comfort try the marvelous new KLEERSKIN cream, successfully used for years on doctor's prescription. Write for FREE booklet or enclose $2 plus 35c postage for liberal size jar. Money Back Guarantee.

RICH PHARMACAL CO., 10544 FENKELL AVE. DETROIT 21, MICH. DEPT. X

Back in Hollywood, Barbara had an appointment with her doctor about vitamin shots.

And that afternoon, Barbara had returned, beaming.

"What do you know! I am!"

In those days, she had eyed her maternity clothes with suspicion. "I certainly won't be that big!" she said.

"Are you reading any books about babies?" he asked her one day.

"Not yet. Right now I'm concerned with the care and feeding of one Bill Williams. I will, though, I will. I've bought six."

About the time the cast was removed from Bill's leg, Barbara's mother and father arrived from Rockford and that, of course, was a help. Things settled down to normalcy until the scheduled date for the baby's arrival.

At 3 o'clock on the morning of July 23rd, Barbara had a hunch. She didn't feel quite right, and she hadn't been able to sleep. She arose early, being careful not to disturb Bill, and went into the kitchen. Her father was there, making coffee.

"Dad," she said, "I think it's going to be today."

"Do you want to go to the hospital?" he said.

"No, I think I'd better get the marketing done so there'll be something in the house for you all."

He exploded. "But you can't go to the market now!"

Barbara smiled. "It's all right, dad. Please drive me over."

All day the four of them sat around. The evening dragged on, and then the night. Just before midnight, Bill phoned the doctor to report.

"You'd better get her down here right away," the doctor said.

Barbara insisted on some hot chocolate before they left, and Bill gulped his nervously, wondering on the strange ways of females. Now he was here, and waiting, and Mr. and Mrs. Hale were outside in the car. Because of the hospital ruling of "husbands only," he couldn't even have the comfort of commiseration.

At nine o'clock they brought the baby to him. He glanced briefly at the bundle and shouted, "How's my wife?"

It wasn't until he went back to his chair that he thought about the baby. Then he ran after the doctor and asked if the baby was healthy.

"She's fine," said the doctor.

"Oh, it's a girl, then." He'd forgotten to ask and they hadn't told him.

Barbara, meantime, was back in her room and waiting to see Bill. They had brought her coffee and she remembered dimly that Bill had wanted some, too, and she was doing her best to keep the brew hot so that he could have a sip. But Bill didn't appear, nor anyone else. Completely exasperated within ten minutes, she put down the coffee and picked up the phone.

"This is Mrs. Bill Williams and I want to see my husband," she said in clipped tones.

They steered him in right away.

"Girl," she announced. "Seven pounds, six ounces. Nineteen and three-quarter inches long. Eight-fifty this morning. Brilliant. Looked at me and said, 'Mama'."

"Gee," said Bill, completely gone.

The baby was nameless until the day Barbara left the hospital for home. She was finally named Barbara Willa Johanna, and nicknamed Jody.

With her mother, Jody Williams left the hospital six days after her birth. Two attendants managed the production just outside the hospital. One held Jody in his arms until the second attendant, who was sliding Barbara on a stretcher into the ambulance, needed help.

The first attendant looked around. "Where's the father?"

"Here," said Bill meekly.

"Take it," said the man, and shoved the baby into the uncertain arms of Bill, who stood there quaking. On her stretcher, Barbara giggled. Bill glared.

"Ye gods!" he said. "I never held a baby in my life!"

"You'll get used to it, bub," said one of the internes.

He has, too. The first few weeks of Jody's life included California's warmest spell in years, and being quite young, Jody put in her share of vocal complaints. When Bill isn't carrying her, he sits and watches her feet, which hold considerable fascination for him. Or he takes a batch of pictures to the studio and shows them around.

"Quite unusual for such a young one, huh?" he says.

Then he comes home and steals into the room where Barbara and Jody are.

"Gee, Barbi," he says. "Just look at those feet!"

MODERN SCREEN

Freddy, stop—you know I'm vulnerable!

HOLIDAY IN MEXICO

(Continued from page 39)

and Anne and John.

They chartered a plane, and it was a lovely plane. The only trouble was that it got a flat tire, as soon as it left Nogales.

Anne grumbled all the way to Hermosillo. "Silliest thing I ever heard of. A plane with a flat tire."

When they got to Hermosillo, they noticed the pilot was landing very fast. A flat can make a plane swerve, and nose over, and they had a few bad minutes, until they hit the ground.

"Well," John said purposefully to the pilot. Then, "let's get the flat fixed."

The pilot gave him a look. It said "you poor chump" in eleven languages. After which he pointed out that 1) nobody in the vicinity knew anything about speaking English, and 2) nobody, English-speaking or not, knew anything about plane tires.

Number 2 was the depressing one. "Let us," Charles said, "have a cool drink, and look at the situation. Mull it over."

"Mullet," John said dreamily. "Mullet's what you use for bait to catch marlin. You can use frozen mullet—"

By that time, they were at a cafe, and they ordered some white wine.

"Vino," Anne said with assurance. "Blanco."

"Charming," Keough said. "So fluent."

They were lounging around, sipping, when the little Mayan approached. Somehow he communicated the idea that he had a brand-new Ford in which he was willing to taxi them to Guaymas.

Charles took Pat's arm. "Like the ads say, 'There's a Ford in Your Future'."

The five of them established themselves in the Ford, and sank back wearily, as it started. They were ninety miles from Guaymas, and the sun was plummeting into the mountains. In Mexico, the sun never sinks slowly, it goes whoosh! like a falling star.

Three minutes later, there was a terrible report.

Anne clutched at John. "The engine fell out!"

"Darling," he said, "you're such a woman. That was just a blow-out."

Charles picked up a suitcase. "Just a blow-out. I'll hit you over the head!"

lucky we had a spare! . . .

But the worst was yet to come. The driver took off the bad tire, and put on the spare tire, and once it was on, they could plainly see it was the flattest spare tire in the whole wide world.

"Well, who shall we eat first?" Keough said cheerfully. "Or whom? Let's draw lots." He paused for a dramatic moment. "Do I hear the faint hum of a motor in the distance? Hark!"

Everybody harked, and sure enough, there was a motor. It wasn't very distant, and it banged more than it hummed, but it was a motor, and it belonged to a fruit truck.

The driver was Mexican, and spoke no English, but once again, the situation was self-evident. The way-worn travelers dumped themselves into the truck, and the truck lumbered off.

"A whole fruit truck," Anne said bitterly. "For five old lemons."

When they got to Guaymas, the driver let them off at the back of the hotel, and they found themselves standing in the kitchen with their luggage.

Once the management was convinced the entire seedy bunch wasn't looking for a hand-out, it became cordial, and produced various rooms.

Left alone, Anne and John closed their door, and looked around at their accomodations.

"Pretty tired little place," Anne said, touching the frayed curtains, and observing a stain in the rug.

"Appropriate," John said. "Lord, do I want to wash my face."

He disappeared into the bathroom. Dead silence. Then: "Honey—"

"What?"

"Company."

She went to the door. "What do you mean?"

He pointed. "In the tub. Cutest little cockroach you ever saw. 'At's local color for you."

"Mexico is never like this in Technicolor movies," Anne complained. "Let's go to bed."

She should have known, the minute she saw the Flit sprayer on the night-table, but she was tired, and beyond constructive thought.

bloody bargain . . .

Besides, the way she felt, mosquitoes weren't so bad. She'd have been willing to make a bargain with them. They could have a pint of blood if they'd wait till she fell asleep before they took it.

But John's an insect-fiend. If he sees a fly, he gets a maniacal gleam in his eye, and he stalks it.

This Guaymas night, a mosquito started humming around John's nose, as soon as he got into bed.

"Relax," Anne said. "He'll go away."

He went away for a couple of seconds, and John had started to breathe normally, when there was the unmistakable whine again, only louder and more upsetting.

John rose. "By God, he went and told all his friends we were here!"

He picked up the Flit gun and started spraying. In his fine frenzy, he drenched not only the windows and doors and floor and ceiling and bed; he also turned the gun on Anne and himself.

Anne was dubious about the project. "I'm not sure I wouldn't rather be bitten than poisoned."

"You don't know what's good for you," John said, giving her an extra splash.

The next day, he dragged her down to the botica, and accosted the druggist. "I want some citronella."

The druggist grinned, went in the back, and came out with two horrible-smelling bottles. All the rest of their stay in Guaymas, Anne had to go to bed holding her nose.

By the time they'd been there six days, everyone was hating everyone else. They'd had a boat out almost constantly, and nobody caught a single fish.

The way you catch marlin is tricky. You look for fins. When a marlin surfaces, his dorsal fin, which is shaped like a scimitar, cuts through the water.

Six days of looking for fins, with the sun beating down on you, and you begin to feel like the ancient mariner.

Once our heroes saw a marlin, and almost broke their necks to toss it a mackerel, and the marlin studied the mackerel for a little, and then went away. He just wasn't hungry.

"Let's go back in and have a swim," Charles said desperately. "Before we start throwing each other overboard. It's three o'clock already."

They went back to the hotel, put on their bathing suits, and dived into the pool.

AT LAST HORMONE CREAM
only $1.00 plus tax
NU-YOUTH
NU-YOUTH HORMONE
DAY OR NIGHT
CREME
NOW, every woman can afford to learn the answer to "What will hormones do for my skin?" A rich, pure lanolin cream—no wax, no soap—wonderful for day or night use with 7,500 International Units of natural estrogenic substance (female hormones) is available at cosmetic counters for only $1, plus tax. Directions on the jar, which holds a normal 30-day supply. A Kathryn product, from 540 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago.
*Reg. App. U.S.P.O.
TRADE-MARK*
NU-YOUTH
Day or Night
HORMONE CREME

STAMMER? GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 46 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 7701, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

TEETHING PAINS
RELIEVED
QUICKLY
WHEN your baby suffers from teething pains, just rub a few drops of Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion on the sore, tender little gums and the pain will be relieved promptly.
Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion is the prescription of a famous baby specialist and has been used by mothers for over fifty years. One bottle is usually enough for one baby for the entire teething period.
Buy it from your druggist today
DR. HAND'S
TEETHING LOTION
Just rub it on the gums

FAST RELIEF FROM ITCHING OF SIMPLE PILES

●Here's a single soothing medicine to speed relief from tortures of simple piles. It's amazing Pazo*. Acts at once to relieve pain and itching—soothes inflamed tissues—lubricates dry, hardened parts—helps prevent cracking and soreness—reduce swelling and check minor bleeding. The help you get is wonderful!

So, to speed relief from itching and pain of simple piles, get Pazo*. Your doctor can tell you about it. At all druggists' in tubes with perforated pile pipe for simple, thorough application—also tins and suppositories.

Pile Ointment and Suppositories.*

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS
(SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Use DERMOIL

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 547, Northwestern Station, Dept. 9709, Detroit 4, Mich.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1935 LAKE LAB

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box. ©I. P. INC.

KLUTCH CO. Box 4787-K ELMIRA, N. Y.

LEARN AT HOME
TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates.

HIGH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED

48th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women, 18 to 60. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 2311, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name
City State Age

Ten minutes of glorious sport, and Anne felt the water melting around her. "So help me," she said in awe. "So help me, they're draining the pool."

She looked up, and there was a happy man standing at the edge. "Can't help," he said. "It's the day to clean the pool."

That night they had a cocktail party, and the crummy little three-piece hotel band that played Latin-American music every night played the same Latin-American music even louder and worse.

"It's really fun here," Anne said, over the twang of an exhausted guitar. "I've convinced myself."

"Perhaps you could convince a fish or two," Keough suggested.

The very next day, their luck changed. John landed a marlin so huge the boatman had to hit it over the head forty times with a baseball bat to kill it.

"You sort of go insane," Anne was saying later, "when you've got one hooked. You turn into a gibbering idiot—"

They were in Guaymas nine days—the end of May, and the beginning of June—and then they came home in a plane that didn't break down, and they felt almost cheated.

"Be sure and let us know when you're going again," Charles said to John. "So we can stay the heck out of your way."

"Well, we're off to Del Monte right now—" John began, but Charles and Pat and Keough made it down to the end of the block in thirty seconds flat.

Del Monte was beautful. John lost all his golf balls in the Pacific Ocean, and he and Anne ate prodigiously, and on July seventh, they celebrated their first wedding anniversary.

"How shall it be?" he said. "You choose."

"Quiet," she'd said. "The second anniversary nobody cares about, and we'll have a big party. The first one's just for us."

They had dinner in their room, and champagne, and the broad window almost let in the stars, and the shining ocean.

John reached for Anne's hand. "You know, I'm a little lonely—"

"Why?" she said. "Darling, why?"

He sighed. "No cockroach in this bathroom—"

They came home from Del Monte, and sat down in two easy chairs, and shook their heads. "Still on vacation, and we still have more time to spend together? It isn't possible," John said. "How about going down to La Jolla. They're doing The Hasty Heart and Richard Baseheart's got the lead again—"

They went to La Jolla, enjoyed themselves enormously, and returned full of satisfaction.

"Now let's go up to Burlingame," Anne said. "We haven't seen Mother or Dad in a long time—"

They went to Burlingame, where Anne's mother and father live, and they discussed business with her father, who's her manager, and they had some clothes made for her, and returned full of satisfaction.

"Now let's knock the dining-room apart," they said together.

They have a dining-room where, if you've got more than four people, you serve buffet. And they're tired of egg in their laps.

There's a window, and beyond that a little walk, and their plan is to push the window out; make a bay of it.

Anne's uncle, who's an architect, goes mad. "It's no use," he shouts. "You'll never make this house look like anything. This is a monstrous house. There ought to be a law against houses like this—"

Anne tries to soothe him. "It's such an ugly house we can't hurt it. It hasn't any good lines to spoil—"

It isn't really all that ugly. But Anne's family is so full of architects, she was trained to pure line, and since she's aching to build her own place, she's impatient with this one.

"Sure," John says. "All we gotta do is push out the window. It'll only cost a million dollars and take six months."

"And you never eat inside, anyway," Anne's uncle complains.

They've got a portable barbecue that gets rough use all through the summer, because they're not very formal people. Their idea of a time is to have a lot of friends over, and let everybody sit around the barbecue arguing and burning up hot dogs.

Anne almost went East to do Joan of Lorraine in summer stock, this year, but in the end, she decided on Guaymas, Del Monte, and the hot dogs.

With Guaymas, Del Monte and the hot dogs goes John.

And that's good.

DADDY

(Continued from page 63)

up and down in the back yard of our home for a full half-hour. I was nine at the time and had wrong ideas about certain things, which Daddy had just discovered. I had a wrong idea of my importance, for instance, resulting in my being very rude that afternoon to a woman he had hired to cook for us. Daddy didn't spank me, or raise his voice; he just talked.

"Now what service have you performed for your fellowmen, Pidge?" he asked.

My long silence told him I had nothing to report.

"Let me tell you about the cook, then," he said, and listed the services furnished by her; not only for us, but as the wage-earner for her own family. There was a husband getting medical care, a child properly clothed and fed. There wasn't much room for argument. I was most terribly ashamed. I have never consciously been rude to anyone else.

But there were happy moments, as well as instructive ones; like the time, when I was seven, and abed for two weeks with a suspected mastoid disorder. I wanted a puppy for company ever so badly, but the doctor advised against it as a disturbing distraction. I begged and begged. Daddy wouldn't commit himself. But something significant used to happen every evening when he came home from the studio. I would hear the door bang downstairs, and then Daddy, barking like a dog. One night, when I was definitely improving, I heard him come in—but no bark! I wondered.

His overcoat still on, he came into my room, kissed me and then started pacing.

"You didn't bark tonight when you came in, Daddy," I said.

"By George, you're right!" he said. "I didn't, did I?"

"Why not?" I wanted to know.

He came over and sat beside me on the bed. "There's a reason, Pidge," he said. "But I can't think of it. Can you?"

I shook my head. "Well, let's just sit quietly and maybe it will come to us," he said.

We sat for a long time looking at each other, and then—a funny little whine sounded suddenly. My heart did a jump and I searched his eyes, but he seemed just as surprised as I. My gaze was pulled down to one of his coat pockets. The wrong end of something was sticking out of it—and this wrong end was a wriggling stub of a tail. Daddy reached in and out came a Scotty with a pink tongue! I screamed and . . . well, that's how I got "Puffer Belly," one of the dearest possessions of my life.

But you could never put your finger on Daddy. Just when you thought you had him figured, he would take the most surprising of positions on things. I was probably the only girl in California who, possessing a perfectly lovely pair of slacks, could wear them only in her room! Daddy hates slacks on women. If he has a special preference in women's clothes, it's toward tailored fashions.

But he's clever and a good bargainer. Once, when I was older, we went shopping together and I expressed a desire for a type of evening gown that I knew he thought was a bit extreme.

"Okay," he said.

"You mean I can have it?"

"Sure. Provided you can wear it."

"Oh, I can wear it," I assured him eagerly. "It will just need a little—" daddy knows best . . .

"No," he said. "That sort of gown was designed for a slim girl. You've been getting a little past the slim side lately, don't you think? Now, if you think you can, uh, come back to a narrower silhouette, the dress is yours."

What can you do with a man like that? For me there was only one course; join him in his favorite dish—salads.

Of all his shows and pictures, I liked him best in Mrs. Miniver. When I asked Daddy why he liked the part, he replied that it was because both he and the screen Mrs. Miniver loved flowers! Daddy has dozens of varieties around the two-patio Spanish house in Beverly Hills he bought 21 years ago and still lives in.

Daddy is quite puzzled by my failure to share his great love for geraniums. I got to wondering the other day whether Deborah Kerr, with whom Daddy is now making If Winter Comes, ever talks flowers to him. I know the English are crazy about their gardens.

It's six months now since I have been married, and Johnny and I live some seven miles away from Dad, out in the San Fernando Valley. But he's always around the house anyway, tearing up things. If it isn't the garden, then it's a little furniture moving. Our place is small, only five rooms, but Dad can kick it around just the same. Right now the wall of the playroom is being torn out. It's going to be replaced by sliding glass panel doors—a Walter Pidgeon alteration. There was also a sort of built-in bed in the playroom which is no more. There is now an open fireplace—same man's idea.

We bought the house already standing, and, so help me, it wasn't until after we moved in that I happened to look up at the chimney while Dad was at my side. There, against the very top, was a china pigeon pressed into the brick! We both accused each other of having it put up there, but when we investigated, we learned it was just the result of a whim of the man who had built the place.

Getting married has partly shielded me from two habits of Daddy's that used to bounce back at me regularly: that odd memory of his and his habit of suddenly deciding to go out for the evening on the spur of the moment. Just when you looked and felt your most bedraggled, you could almost depend upon him to say, "Come on! Let's go to the Hollywood Bowl tonight and hear the music!" Or, if we were in New York, it would be the Stork Club or some other place where you wouldn't be caught dead unless you had spent a whole afternoon in preparatory primping! But (and I'll tell this even if he is my father, because I understand it's typical of men) if you were at your best and bursting to flap your wings somewhere in public, he would have an awful time trying to think of where to go or what to do!

And then, his dancing! We had one thing in common—we both sang as we danced . . . but it wasn't dancing! He was so tall, took such awfully long steps, that you had no choice but either to break rhythm to keep up with him or else get left behind! It was like that for years and then, one night, while at a party, he asked me to dance and he danced beautifully . . .

I looked up at him in surprise. He was singing, of course. "You've been taking a course!" I accused. He sang on. To this day he won't admit it and I still don't know whether he took ten easy lessons or suddenly decided to pay attention to his dancing . . . With him it could be either.

Daddy's eccentric memory used to catch up with me when we took walks. He would see someone coming whose face he recalled, but not the name. If I stayed with him he would have to introduce his friend to me and risk getting badly stuck. So we developed a system. He would whisper fiercely, "Duck!" and I would curve away from him to the nearest shop window, while he yelled a hearty "Hello" to the man and exchanged notes. Then, when they had parted, I would be free to steam alongside him again.

Once he brought home from a Canadian trip some daintily carved and painted wooden birds that I was crazy about. A few months later he was in Toronto and accepted a chance to fly to Montreal because he remembered that the store where he got the birds was just around the corner from the Montreal hotel where he would stay—or so he told Mr. Perry Charles of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who was with him.

tale of two cities . . .

But when they walked around said corner in Montreal, there was no such place. So they returned to Toronto empty-handed and were just coming around the corner of the hotel there, from where they had started the flying trip, when Dad's eyes fell on a souvenir shop and his mouth fell open. "Good Lord, Perry!" he exclaimed. "That's the place I meant all the time. What do you suppose happened?"

Perry, who knows Dad pretty well, smiled grimly. "They're trying to trip you, Walter," he said. "They switched cities on you!"

We always follow a regular procedure when he has to make trips. Every bit of his wardrobe is checked and re-checked when he packs. Then he gets into the studio car and starts off while I sit down by the telephone and wait. Soon, with unfailing regularity, it rings. It is Daddy calling from the airport. "My glasses!" he yells. "Left them on the fireplace mantel!" Or, "My script! Must be upstairs on my desk!" Or, "I've only got one suitcase with me. Didn't we pack two?" And whatever it is, we have to retrieve it and speed out to the airport, usually catching the plane as it is snorting to take off and with Daddy fighting off the stewardess so he can lean out the door and wave at us frantically.

But for this I am now repaying him. When I drive over to Beverly Hills to see him, it's generally about mid-day and quite warm, so I come unencumbered—just a dress. When I leave towards evening, however, it's sometimes quite cold so I just reach into the clothes closet and take one of his coats . . . which I never seem to remember to return. Every once in a while I accumulate all his coats at my place and a whole general reshuffle has to take place during which he makes VETO Colgate's Antiseptic Deodorant, Checks Underarm Perspiration, Stops Odor—Yet is Doubly Safe!

Only VETO Contains DURATEX, exclusive new safety ingredient! Veto is different from any other deodorant . . . Does not rot clothes. Safe for any normal skin. Stays moist in jar, never gritty, rubs in easily. Use doubly safe Veto regularly to guard daintiness and to check underarm perspiration, stop odor safely.

OFFICIAL TESTED RETAIL LABORATORIES

DOUBLY PREFERRED! Registered Nurses who have tried Veto prefer it almost 2 to 1 over any other deodorant, according to a nation-wide survey.

APPROVED SAFE FOR FABRICS—Better Fabrics Bureau

Show DONALD DUCK

Cartoon Home Movie Films

Packed with laughs, thrills, action. Ideal clean Home Entertainment.

GET THESE FEATURES
100 Ft. 8 MM $3.00
200 Ft. 16 MM 6.00

Super Service.....1451-B
Fast and Furious.....1452-B
The Fireman.....1453-B
Flying Trapeze.....1455-B

Show also the Walter Lantz features, Oswald Rabbit and 3 Monkeys. Include a Mickey Mouse Cartoon. Get at your photo dealer or order direct. Lists and prices sent on request.

HOLLYWOOD FILM ENTERPRISES, INC.
6060 Sunset Blvd. Dept. 131 Hollywood 28, Calif.

YOU MAKE $25 FOR SELLING FIFTY $1.00 BOXES

50 beautiful assorted Christmas cards sell for only $1.00 your profit 50c. Write today for free samples 50 and 25 for $1.00 and other boxes on approval. It costs nothing to try CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-7, White Plains, N. Y.

WRITE FOR SAMPLES ON APPROVAL

You can be gay, even during "difficult days". Unless your trouble is organic, requiring professional care, Chi-Ches-Ters Pills, which relax muscular contraction, tend to give relief from on-edge nerves, headache, cramps, and "let-down" feelings. For best results start taking them as directed two or three days before your period.

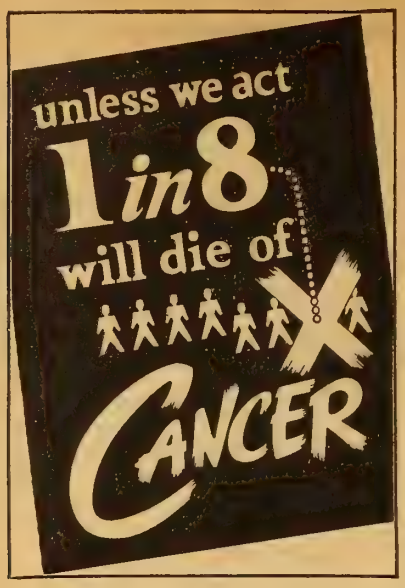
MOST LEADING DRUGGISTS CARRY

CHI-CHES-TERS PILLS

DIAMOND BRAND

For relief from "periodic functional distress"
50 CENTS, AND LARGER ECONOMY BOXES.

FREE — Illustrated booklet of intimate facts every woman should know. Mailed in plain wrapper. Write: CHICHESTER CHEMICAL COMPANY, Dept. E-11, Philadelphia 46, Pa.



NO ONE IS SAFE FROM CANCER

This year, 184,300 Americans will die of Cancer . . . one every three minutes.

YET . . . one in three could be saved thru early detection and prompt treatment.

PROTECT YOURSELF!
CANCER'S DANGER SIGNALS

1. Any sore that does not heal, particularly about the tongue, mouth or lips.
2. A painless lump or thickening, especially in the breast, lip or tongue.
3. Progressive change in the color or size of a wart or mole.
4. Persistent indigestion.
5. Persistent hoarseness, unexplained cough, or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Bloody discharges from the nipple or irregular bleeding from any of the natural body openings.
7. Any radical change in normal bowel habits.

GIVE to help win mankind's great war — the fight against cancer.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
47 Beaver Street
New York City

pointed remarks about my memory—absolutely forgetting that he is one of the world's prime offenders in this direction!

It's a funny thing! He forgets in his real life, but when he is at the studio playing a part, they say he's a bug on knowing his lines!

But his top feat in the way of poor memory was no accident. Before I met Johnny, oh, several years before, Daddy and I were in New York. There was a boy from Boston whom I knew and we went out together a lot. Daddy didn't seem to like him. He didn't say anything but I could tell.

At that time I was terribly thick with a girl cousin of mine in Santa Barbara and we would write or phone each other regularly. But suddenly she stopped answering my letters, never called, and I couldn't seem to reach her in any way. About a month later Daddy finished his work in New York and we returned to California. I went right out to Santa Barbara to give my cousin Marylin a piece of my mind, and when I walked into the house I learned she was married . . . had been married for weeks!

"But why didn't you tell me?" I almost shrieked. "Of all the awful, lowdown tricks . . ."

"Stop!" she said. She went to a drawer and pulled out a letter written to her by Dad. It acknowledged a wire about the impending marriage and begged her not to say anything further about it until he had brought me back to California.

I couldn't get to Daddy fast enough. "Why?" I demanded, showing him the fateful letter.

He looked at me over his glasses and then back at a script he was reading. "Good story, this," he said, tapping at it.

"Why?" I repeated.

He read on for a few lines before putting down the script. Then he pulled at his nose several times and it put me in mind of photographs I had seen of his grandfather, an old St. John, New Brunswick, sailing skipper.

"You miss that fellow from Boston you were running around with in New York?" he asked.

"No," I said. "There was nothing to that. We were just friends."

"Oh," he said. "Well, I wasn't sure. And when I got this wire about Marylin getting married, I was afraid it might be catching. So-o-o . . . I guess I remembered it would be easy to forget to tell you . . ."

Yes, that's Mr. Miniver, or Mr. Parkington, or M. Curie; when he isn't any of them—but just Walter Pidgeon, my Daddy.

IF HE DIDN'T CARE

(Continued from page 14)

don't use phrases like that," he begged. "You remind me of my career as a lawyer. I hung out my shingle; the sun shone on it, the rain rained on it, and the kids in the neighborhood threw rotten tomatoes at it. I took the shingle down, wiped it off, and that was my law career."

"Quicklike, eh?"

"That's my specialty," he said. "Do you know anybody who wants to buy a nice set of unopened law books? Never lost a case with them."

He talked fast. He's always in a rush. Then it was a rush to finish his picture, do three summer stock plays and scoot east to meet Margot.

Margot's being East while he is working is the latest development of a rumored separation. Then again, some have called it their own plan of married life; a plan that makes sense, they are supposed to have decided, when Dane is actually making a picture and is under the duress of the day-to-day shooting grind.

I thought I'd check it with Dane. He fiddled with a bit more salad before answering.

"I don't think there is any answer for that," he said finally. "You know, life is always coming up with something new. That's what it's handing Margot and me right now. If it's a good thing, okay. If not, we'll work it out. But it's strictly up to us."

Out in the Riviera Rancho section of Los Angeles is a house that was a stable before Margot bought it. Dane couldn't imagine what Margot saw in the place. But later, when she began to demonstrate its possibilities, he fell in love with it. It's still their home and, for the Dane Clarks, it has a lot of memories. Which include the afternoon Dane painted all the doors in the place so that for three days thereafter Margot and he had to enter via the windows.

"It was only two days," he claims. "Besides, the only mistake I made was painting the doorknobs."

And then there was the time the rains came, and Margot climbed onto a table to show the roof the builder's guarantee that it couldn't leak—as it leaked and leaked and leaked.

From that stable Margot had gradually built up a home that was a marvel to Dane.

"You see how she ad libbed with the furniture?" he asked me.

"Yes."

He smiled. "She came home with a hand pump one day, and the next time I saw it, it was a lamp. Then an old bucket turned into a snappy magazine rack. And from a butter-churn she worked out an end table. At first it gave me a sort of funny feeling, like watching reincarnation."

A faraway look had come into Dane's eyes at this point and, as he started to talk, I realized he was harking back to other days and other scenes in that same house. How Margot had brought certain improvements in his technique of entertaining guests. From being the type of host who lies flat on the living-room floor, while his guests flounder around for themselves, Dane had learned to keep an eye open for the probable wants of those who were enjoying his hospitality.

How neatly she had solved the problem when he started to suffer from temperament (a pernicious, local affliction) and came home swinging his weight around too freely. Pointing to their dog, a Great Dane (commonly known as "Clark's Dane"), she had ordered him to go out and wash it.

Margot worked on his curious fetish for buying new clothes when he couldn't bear to go out without his old ones, too. One day she gave three of his brand new suits away. Dane howled and asked why she hadn't at least given old clothes. "I would have, if I could have gotten them off your back!" she said.

And there was the day he came home all enthused about a list of exercises Mushy Callahan, in the studio gym, had given him to keep in trim. They did wonders for a person's figure—but it turned out to be Margot's figure, not his. He did the exercises one morning. Margot hasn't missed a morning since!

The story of how Dane got his contract with Warner Brothers involves Margot.

She asked him one morning if he was going to drop into Warners and see if there was anything doing. Dane said no, he had been there the day before and really had no excuse for going back. For some reason, she had insisted that he go anyway. Dane argued, lost, and left for Warners half-angry about the whole thing. Just as he entered the casting office, he heard Producer Jerry Wald bemoaning the fact that John Garfield wasn't available for a role in Action in the North Atlantic.

Still in an argumentative mood, and not even knowing Wald, Dane had spoken up. "How about me?"

Jerry Wald promptly said "No," and Dane was glum when he got back home. But the next morning there was a phone call. Dane was the thirty-first person to test for the role, and he got it.

Now, he turned to me. "Brother, we celebrated that night," he said. "We toasted our strategy, Margot and I."

"Our strategy?" I questioned. "What did you have to do with it? It was Margot's exclusive idea that you go to Warners that morning, wasn't it?"

"Yeah," agreed Dane. "But you have to give me some credit as well. I did what I was told!"

Just then, an elderly gentleman walked up to our table, holding a slip of paper.

"I beg your pardon," he said to Dane, "but I am having lunch with my daughter at another table and she said she would love to have an autograph from Lloyd Nolan."

"Certainly," said Dane, and signed the slip immediately.

incognito . . .

The man took the paper, still staring at Dane. "Say!" he burst out suddenly. "You're not Lloyd Nolan. Why, no! You're—"

Dane helped him out. "John Hodiak?" he suggested.

The man's face cleared and he laughed out loud. "Of course!" he said, and went away happy.

"Look, if you told him your name was John Hodiak," I said, "what name did you sign on his slip of paper?"

"That's simple," Dane replied. "Robert Walker."

"Wait a minute," I protested. "Now I'm liable to be confused. The fellow I am interviewing is Dane Clark? The Clark who is studying Spanish and Italian because he thinks international exchange of players is the coming thing?"

"Yeah, that's me, and then the waiter brings ravioli. You told me that one."

"The Clark who trained for movies by playing stock and soap opera?"

"The same Clark."

I heaved a sigh of relief. "I guess everything is okay then," I told him. "For a minute I was worried about my story."

He leaned very close. "You're worried. What about me if a certain someone reads this story and doesn't like it?"

"You know," I said, "I'm not sure who you mean. But—Margot must be quite a person."

He just looked at me and put out his hand. It was time to go. We shook, and he said, "I'm not only late at the studio—I've got to get off a long letter this afternoon and make sure it catches the early air mail tonight."

"Writing anyone special?" I asked.

He waved a farewell. "What do you think?"

As I watched Dane Clark go, I thought to myself it would be Margot. I've heard he writes her every day. I've heard they have great plans.

TIRED EYES THRILL TO SAFE EYE-GENE

Relieved in SECONDS!

Wonderful EYE-GENE! Just two drops in your eyes that are tired or irritated from wind, glare, overwork, lack of sleep or smoke—will relieve, rest, refresh, clear them in seconds. Use it every day. EYE-GENE is positively harmless. 25¢, 60¢, and $1 in handy eye-dropper bottles at Druggists everywhere. Insist on EYE-GENE!

Weary, irritated one minute . . .

Relieved, rested, cleared the next!

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PLAY PIANO without NOTES or TEACHER— PLAY SONGS RIGHT FROM THE START!

If you are one of the thousands who wish to play Piano for YOUR OWN PLEASURE in the QUICKEST AND EASIEST way possible and amaze your friends . . . the LATOM SYSTEM OF PIANO PLAYING is intended for YOU! This System is so simple that any child who can read can play. There are no notes to learn, no scales and exercises to practice. No knowledge of music is required.

The LATOM SYSTEM is so designed that you can actually play songs . . . Melody and Chords . . . with both hands . . . RIGHT FROM THE START. The Latom System contains your Ever-Popular Favorites including Waltzes, Cowboy Songs, Hymns and even Boogie Woogie!

You can now entertain your friends and enjoy their admiration. Think what it will mean to be able to sit at the Piano and Play! Why suppress this desire any longer? Many persons who have suppressed their desire since childhood reach middle age still wishing they could play. Don't let this happen to you—get started now!

SEND NO MONEY! MAKE THIS FREE TEST!

Just send your name and address today. We will send you the LATOM SYSTEM OF PIANO PLAYING. On arrival deposit $1.98 plus C.O.D. charges with your postman, or if you prefer send $1.98 (we pay postage). Without extra cost you will receive our Chord Book "108 CHORDS—How To Apply Them To Popular Music" PLUS The No. 1 Hit Song of the Year (which you will be able to play in an amazingly short time). Keep the course 14 days. You must agree this is the quickest and easiest system of piano playing ever devised, you must be completely satisfied and delighted, or return the course and we'll refund your $1.98. Get in on this 3-for-1 offer—Order NOW!

LATOM MUSIC PUB. CO., Studio LB
2147-86TH STREET, BROOKLYN 14, N. Y.

A NEW FACE —A NEW FUTURE!

How Plastic Surgery easily takes years off the prematurely aged face, quickly reshapes an ugly nose and corrects other facial blemishes is told and illustrated with 88 before-and-after pictures in fascinating book, YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, written by famous Plastic Surgeon. Yours, postpaid in plain wrapper—only 25c

FRANKLIN HOUSE Publishers
629 Drexel Bldg. Philadelphia, Pa. Dept. 17-R

GLOWING CROSS GIVEN AWAY

Just Send Your Name and Address

We will mail you this beautiful GLOWING CROSS. Also FREE CATALOG showing many VALUABLE GIFTS that are GIVEN with FULL INFORMATION on HOW TO RECEIVE THEM. Enclose stamp or coin for mailing GLOWING CROSS.

THE RELIGIOUS HOUSE, Dept. DMG
7002 N. Clark St. Chicago, 26, Ill.

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your Favorite Photo

FROM FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS

Just to get acquainted we will make a beautiful 5 x 7 enlargement of any picture or negative. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing and get our bargain offer for having your enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil and mounted in your choice of handsome frames. Limit 2 to a customer. Please enclose 10c to cover cost of handling and mailing each enlargement. Your original picture or negative will be returned with the FREE 5 x 7 enlargement postpaid. Act now! Offer limited to U. S. A.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. 367, Hollywood, Calif.

Prices Smashed! BUY NOW WHILE SUPPLY Lasts

Guaranteed SWISS JEWELED WATCHES

Complete with Beautiful
MATCHING EXPANSION BAND
LOOK AT THESE FEATURES!

- Genuine Imported Swiss Watches
- Accurate timekeeper
- Jeweled Movement
- Modern, smart style
- Written Guarantee with every watch
- Chrome plated case

HERE'S A REAL BARGAIN! Men's Handsome Five Jewel Watch has radiant dial that shines in the dark, unbreakable crystal, sweep-hand. The ladies' dainty, exquisite One Jewel Watch comes with your choice of silk cord Band or Matching Expansion Band.

SEND NO MONEY—Wear on FREE TRIAL At Our Risk!

Yes! We mean it. Prove to your own satisfaction the fine quality of our Watches. WRITE TODAY, telling us which watch you want. If you are not pleased in every way, we will refund your money. Pay postman C. O. D. plus postage and 10% Government Tax. Join thousands of satisfied customers.

INTERNATIONAL DIAMOND CO., 2435 S. Indiana Ave., Dept. 662, Chicago 16, Ill.

WHEN GRAY HAIR STARTS

DO THIS: Take just 3 easy steps to recapture youthful-looking hair. 1. Try Mary T. Goldman's hair-coloring cosmetic on a single lock of hair. 2. Simply comb clear liquid through your hair. 3. Let dry, then arrange your hair. It's that simple! You'll see a change that delights you. Hair looks young, vital! So easy! So effective millions of women have used Mary T. Goldman's. Accept no substitutes. Get a bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Gray Hair Coloring Preparation at your drug or department store. Use it today on Money Back Guarantee. Or send coupon today for FREE TRIAL kit!

MARY T. GOLDMAN'S, L-1 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul 2, Minn. Send FREE sample. My hair is color checked.

☐ Black ☐ Medium Brown
☐ Blonde ☐ Light Brown
☐ Auburn ☐ Dark Brown

*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

MOVIE REVIEWS

(Continued from page 95)

And at last Odalie consents to marry him. It seems as if Stephen has finally won happiness.

Instead, his marriage becomes a mockery. Odalie, hating and loving him at the same time, soon becomes a sort of guest in the great house, certainly not a wife. She does, reluctantly, bear him a child, but the boy on whom Stephen has pinned all his dreams is a cripple.

Everything which happens at Harrow is in the heroic mold. There are no simple little everyday things to add conviction to the narrative. But there is vigor and romance and a panorama of beauty and tragedy which will keep you completely enthralled. —20th-Fox

RIDE THE PINK HORSE

A pink horse on a merry-go-round in a little Mexican town. A bus from Chicago, and a man named Blackie Gagin (Robert Montgomery) swinging off it, into the heat and the darkness and hidden laughter of Fiesta in the little town. Tequilla-loud voices and Death—Death walking up the street and walking down again.

Blackie knows where he's going and what he's here for. He's here to shake down his one time gang boss, Frank Hugo (Fred Clark), and collect thirty thousand dollars. Because Hugo owed Shorty fifteen grand and had Shorty killed. Somehow, in Blackie's twisted mind, getting thirty grand out of Hugo will avenge Shorty's death.

Finding Hugo's room is fairly simple but he's out, and getting a room for Blackie, himself, proves impossible. "Fiesta!" everyone says, and shrugs. A shy, pretty little Indian girl, Pila (Wanda Hendrix), has been following him around all day. He's tried everything from bribery to saying "Boo!" to get rid of her. Now, however, she is helpful. Through her he meets Pancho (Thomas Gomez), who runs the merry-go-round. They get drunk on tequilla and Blackie sleeps with Pancho in the old piano crate he uses for a shelter.

Pila stays on guard. She wakes Blackie when a stranger wants to see him. The stranger is a government man, Retz (Art Smith). He warns Blackie that Hugo is powerful and that only the law has the right to judge a man like that.

But Blackie doesn't trust anybody. Certainly not beautiful Marjorie Lundeen (Andrea King), Hugo's girl, who offers to go halves with him, and in the same breath sets Hugo's knife men on him. He is badly wounded, but Pila saves his life. However, there is still the matter of a check that should, Blackie thinks, be worth a lot to Hugo to have out of circulation.—Univ.-Int.

GOLDEN EARRINGS

A handsome British Intelligence officer and a wild but alluring gypsy are a sultry combination in anybody's league. Make the officer Ray Milland and the gypsy Marlene Dietrich, and the smoke starts curling up around the edges.

The story begins with Quentin Reynolds (played by himself—who else could do it?) trying to get English General Ralph Denistoun (Ray Milland) to tell him the secret of the golden earrings. They arrived in a box not an hour before Denistoun took off in a plane for Paris. Their story, Denistoun admits, goes back six years to the days just before England entered the war.

At that time, Denistoun and another Englishman, Byrd (Bruce Lester), are being held by the Nazis who are desperately trying to find out what the boys know about a certain poison gas formula. Fortunately, or unfortunately, the boys don't know anything about it, and they're lucky to escape, as they do, disguised in Nazi uniforms. They decide to try and find the man who has the secret formula, but they separate to do it.

Denistoun takes to the woods. Maybe it's the deep glades, patterned in moonlight. Or maybe it's Fate. But there he finds Lydia (Marlene Dietrich) and with her a new life. One he could never have known in England. Before long he is covered with walnut stain, wears golden earrings in his pierced ears, and can tell fortunes with as dirty a pack of cards as any Romany born.

He has a rival for the seductive Lydia—Matthias (Murvyn Vye). But Ralph just gives him a sound English thrashing, then turns his mind back to getting the poison gas formula. After the war, there will be much more time for Lydia and rivals and love . . . —Par.

DESIRE ME

Desire Me is a triangle built from the war. It's an unusual picture, with Greer Garson, Robert Mitchum and Richard Hart. The triangle is the result of the intimate things men tell each other when they are only serial numbers in a concentration camp. When the only way to bring home and wife close is to talk about them to a buddy . . .

On the coast of Brittany, a beautiful woman has at last given up waiting for her husband to come home from the war. Marisse (Greer Garson) has been notified once and for all that Paul (Robert Mitchum) was killed while trying desperately to escape from a prison camp.

As she walks home from the fishing village to her little cottage, she feels completely alone. It isn't a good feeling for a woman. She loves the cottage where she and Paul were so happy together, but today she opens the door wearily and for the first time, without hope.

Unexpectedly, shockingly, a man is there. He isn't Paul—she knows that at once, in spite of the things he says. But he calls her the pet names only Paul knew, and he knows his way around the place as if he had been born there.

He tells her the truth, eventually. His name is Jean (Richard Hart) and he was with Paul in the camp. They worked together, slept together, and talked together of the most intimate things in their lives. Always, Paul spoke of Marisse, and more and more avidly Jean listened. He fell in love with her from hearing about her. It was as if by some mad alchemy he, too, was her husband.

So persuasive is he that Marisse, who has always been both discreet and good, lets him stay there at the cottage. She knows the whole village is seething with gossip, but she doesn't care. At last, she is living and laughing again.

But Paul is not dead. Paul—at last—comes home.—M-G-M

Golden Earrings: Escaping from the Nazis with a poison gas formula, British officer Ray Milland gains the aid and love of gypsy Marlene Dietrich. New-comer Murvyn Vye is Ray's gypsy rival.

Are you neglecting your most important feature?

Of course you use flattering face powder and just the right lipstick. But do you neglect your most important feature—your eyes? Here's something smart modern girls are realizing; when make-up stops with just a nice complexion and brilliant red lips, neglected eyes appear dull and drab by contrast.

It's so easy to give your eyes their full share of beauty-magic—with MAYBELLINE! A few simple brush strokes of this famous Mascara will make your lashes look naturally dark, long, sweeping. And it's so easy to shape your brows gracefully with the soft, smooth Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Then behold the difference! Your eyes are so much lovelier! Your entire face is more attractive, for your make-up is perfectly balanced—completely flattering.

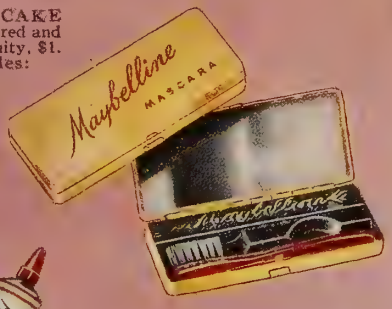
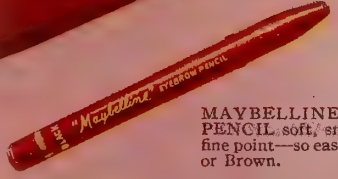
So never, never forget to accent your eyes, daytime or evening. Only be sure you use MAYBELLINE, the eye make-up in good taste — preferred by smart women everywhere.

MAYBELLINE CAKE MASCARA in new red and gold-tone metal vanity, $1. Refills, 50c. Shades: Black, Brown, Blue. Also in 25c and 10c sizes.)



MAYBELLINE CREAM MASCARA (applied without water) comes in handy leatherette case, $1. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.) Shades: Black and Brown.



MAYBELLINE EYEBROW PENCIL, soft, smooth quality, fine point—so easy to use! Black or Brown.

MAYBELLINE EYE SHADOW in subtle shades of Blue, Brown, Blue-gray, Green, Violet, Gray.

Natural color photographs by Carlyle Blackwell, Jr., Hollywood

Maybelline

WORLD'S FAVORITE EYE MAKE-UP

Copyright 1947, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS THE

THE BOUND TO PLEASE
Heckman Bindery INC.
APR 68
N. MANCHESTER, INDIANA

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
0 005 869 333 9